So, where a street is out of repair from an unusual rain storm or any other sudden or unforeseen violence, the city cannot be held responsible for accidents occasioned thereby until the authorities have had a reasonable time to make the necessary repairs. Market v. St. Louis, 56 Mo. 189.

And, where a sidewalk is obstructed by ice, and, by reason of its recent formation and the condition of the weather, the city has not had reasonable time to remove the same, it will not be held liable for an injury resulting therefrom. Lynchburg v. Wallace, supra.

Nor is a period of less than forty-eight hours between the time of a snowfall and an accident due to a slippery street sufficient to charge the city with negligence in not causing the street to be cleared. O'Connor v. New York, 16 Daly, 58, 8 N. Y. Supp. 530, 9 N. Y. Supp. 492; Blakeley v. Troy, 18 Hun, 167; Duncan v. Buffalo, 18 N. Y. S. R. 841, 2 N. Y. Supp. 503.

And a city is not liable for an injury occurring on an icy sidewalk at 8.30 A. M., where ice and snow had accumulated on a cobblestone pavement in front of an alley within the sidewalk lines of a public street in the city, and the snowstorm which produced the alleged dangerous condition of the walk began at about 8 o'clock A. M. of the previous day and ended after 7 P. M. of that day, and was followed by sleet which lasted until about midnight when it began to rain and sleet, which continued at intervals until about 7.40 A. M. of the day of the accident, and was followed later by a snow fall of about 2 inches, which had been tramped down over the cobblestones so that the walk presented an uneven surface. Moran v. New York, 98 App. Div. 301, 90 N. Y. Supp. 596.

So, evidence that snow fell almost continuously from the 24th to the 30th of November; and that there were 19 inches of snow; and a person was injured upon a city sidewalk on the 1st day of December; and during this period the temperature rose but little above freezing; and at no time, considering the amount of snow, was it possible for the city to clean the sidewalks where the owners of the abutting property had neglected to perform the duty,—does not justify a finding that the city was negligent in failing to clean walks in front of vacant lots upon which the accident happened. Crawford v. New York, 68 App. Div. 107, 74 N. Y. Supp. 261.

And a municipal corporation is not guilty of negligence, rendering it liable for an injury to a person who stepped into a hole which had been made on the side of a sewer in a sidewalk by a recent rain, where it had been raining in that vicinity for about three weeks, and, on the afternoon before the injury, was the hardest rain of the season, and, before this rain and afterwards, the marshal of the town went to the place of the injury and examined it carefully, and could detect no defect in the sidewalk, the injury having been caused by the dirt and sand becoming very wet from the rains and caving in on the side of the sewer. Montezuma v. Wilson, 82 Ga. 206, 14 Am. St. Rep. 150, 9 S. E. 17.

So, where a disastrous fire destroyed a number of buildings, and the sidewalk, which was of wood in front of the buildings consumed, was much damaged and rendered almost impassable by the fire, and, not more than eight or ten days after the fire, a person passed over the damaged walk and received injuries, the city will not be deemed negligent in not repairing the walk in the intervening period, where it had erected temporary guards, and it does not appear that there was any suitable weather in which the authorities could have made repairs to the walk. Centralia v. Krouse, 64 Ill. 19.

And notice of a defect in a sidewalk, given to the superintendent of repairs four days before a pedestrian sustained personal injury in consequence of the defect, is not sufficient to charge the city with liability under a charter provision by which the city authorities had no power to make repairs until they had given five days' notice to the abutting owner to make the repairs. Touhey v. Rochester, 64 App. Div. 53, 71 N. Y. Supp. 661.

Omission from the plaintiff's instructions upon the doctrine of constructive notice, of the requirement that a reasonable length of time to remove an obstruction from a sidewalk must have elapsed before the city would be charged with constructive notice of its presence, however, is not reversible error where the instructions of the city on the same subject also omitted that requirement. Ottawa v. Hayne, 214 Ill. 45, 73 N. E. 386; Hitchings v. Maryville (Mo. App.) 115 S. W. 473.

And failure of the court, in an action 20 L.R.A. (N.S.).

against a city for an injury caused by a defect in a street, to instruct that, after notice of the defective condition of the street had been brought home to the city, it should have had a reasonable time within which to repair the same before liability would attach for a resulting injury, is not error where the evidence shows that the street in question, for a considerable distance on each side of the place of accident, was in bad condition, and this had been known to the city for two or three months, though there is no testimony showing that the officials knew of the existence of the particular hole which caused the accident. Frankfort v. Downey (Ky.) 118 S. W. 284.

So, it is the duty of a city to know within a reasonable time of obstructions placed in the streets by others, and to cause the same to be removed. Whitfield v. Meridian, 66 Miss. 570, 4 L.R.A. 834, 14 Am. St. Rep. 596, 6 So. 244; McCarroll v. Kansas City, 64 Mo. App. 283; Cleveland v. St. Paul, 18 Minn. 279, Gil. 255.

And, where the approach to a bridge had been undermined by recent rains, the city would be charged with the duty of repairing the defective condition within a reasonable time after it had knowledge thereof, or within a reasonable time after it could and should have acquired knowledge that the washout had occurred. Dallas v. Moore, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 230, 74 S. W. 95.

And where a policeman discovered a hole in a bridge some time during the day before a person was injured by it at night, and immediately telephoned to the officer whose duty it was to have it repaired, the question whether or not the city had reasonable time in which to repair it after this notice, before the accident, is one for the jury, to be submitted under proper instructions. Covington v. Gates (Ky.) 117 S. W. 342.

So, a municipal corporation is liable to persons injured by its defective sidewalks, where the city, through its proper officers, knew, or might by the exercise of ordinary diligence be presumed to have known, that the walk was out of repair and in a dangerous condition, and a reasonably sufficient time had elapsed after such knowledge and before the injury within which to make the necessary repairs. Reid v. Chicago, 83 Ill. App. 554.

And the presence of an obstruction upon a sidewalk for twenty or thirty days, in violation of a city ordinance and known to the city authorities, is sufficient to render the city guilty of negligence, and liable to one injured by such obstruction. Palestine v. Hassell, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 519, 40 S. W. 147.

And the existence of a depression in a sidewalk, occasioned by the sinking of the earth following the setting of a telephone pole for a month or more prior to an injury therefrom, charges the city with negligence in failing to discover and remedy the defect. Merritt v. Kinloch Teleph. Co. (Mo.) 115 S. W. 19.

And, where the only sidewalk on one side of a street consisted of a platform erected by the owner of an abutting store building; and in this was a hole through which a child fell and was injured; and the city took charge of the street in June, and the accident happened in the following September,—it is a question for the jury, in an action for the injury, whether or not this would have been time enough for the city officers to discover the dangerous place, and to have remedied it. Bradford v. Downs, 126 Pa. 622, 17 Atl. 884.

And the same rule applies where knowledge of a city touching a defect in a sidewalk was acquired not less than one or two weeks prior to an accident resulting therefrom. Denver v. Magivney (Colo.) 90 Pac. 1002; Hitt v. Kansas City, 110 Mo. App. 713, 85 S. W. 669.

So, where a horse died in a public street of a city about 2 o'clock P. M.; and the fact that the dead body was left in the street was known to a policeman of the city that night; and a horse was frightened about 3 o'clock P. M. of the next day without negligence upon the part of the driver, who was injured in consequence thereof,—the city is liable for the injury. Chicago v. Hoy, 75 Ill. 530.

And, where a complaint in an action for an injury caused by a large ditch washed out on the side of a highway avers that the highway was carelessly and negligently permitted to be out of repair, and that the city had knowledge that it was so out of repair, this implies that the city had notice of the bad condition of the street when the injury occurred; and, after verdict, it will be inferred that the notice was in time to have enabled the city to repair the street if it had desired to do so. Madison v. Baker, 103 Ind. 41, 2 N. E. 236.

The burden of proof rests with a person injured by an obstruction in a street to show that the city had reasonable time and opportunity after the street became unsafe and unfit for travel to put it in proper condition for use, and that it had not used reasonable diligence to do so. McCool v. Grand Rapids, 58 Mich. 41, 55 Am. Rep. 655, 24 N. W. 631.

d. Question for the jury.

The question of the actual knowledge or notice to a city of a defect or obstruction in a street or sidewalk must be left to the jury in all cases. Klein v. Dallas, 71 Tex. 280, 8 S. W. 90; Joliet v. Walker, 7 Ill. App. 267.

And it is for the jury, in an action against a city for an injury caused by a defective or obstructed street, to say, under all the circumstances of the case, what length of time a defect or obstruction must have existed to charge the city with constructive notice of its existence and render it liable to respond in damages for injuries caused thereby. Sheel v. Appleton, 49 Wis. 125, 5 N. W. 27; Boulder v. Niles, 9 Colo. 415, 12 Pac. 632; Harrell v. Macon, 1 Ga. App. 413, 58 S. E. 124; Enright v. Atlanta, 78 Ga. 288; Decatur v. Besten, 169 Ill. 340, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

48 N. E. 186; McLeansboro v. Trammel, 109 Ill. App. 524; Savanna v. Trusty, 98 Ill. App. 277; Powers v. Chicago, 20 Ill. App. 178; Huntington v. Lusch, 33 Ind. App. 476, 70 N. E. 402; Evansville v. Senhenn, 26 Ind. App. 362, 59 N. E. 863; Ft. Wayne v. Patterson, 3 Ind. App. 34, 29 N. E. 167; Aurora v. Bitner, 100 Ind. 396; Washington v. Small, 86 Ind. 462; Cutter v. Des Moines, 137 Iowa, 643, 113 N. W. 1081; Garnetz v. Carroll, 136 Iowa, 569, 114 N. W. 57; Holitz v. Kansas City, 68 Kan. 157, 74 Pac. 594; Bromley v. Bodkin, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1245, 77 S. W. 696; Madisonville v. Penberton, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 347, 75 S. W. 229; Covington v. Whitney, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 659, 99 S. W. 337; Welsh v. Amesbury, 170 Mass. 437, 49 N. E. 735; Gerber v. Kansas City, 105 Mo. App. 191, 79 S. W. 717; Shook v. Cohoes, 23 N. Y. Week. Dig. 4; Turner v. Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 301, 4 Am. St. Rep. 453, 16 N. E. 344; Rehberg v. New York, 91 N. Y. 137, 43 Am. Rep. 657; Avery v. Syracuse, 29 Hun. 537; Fitzgerald v. Concord, 140 N. C. 110, 52 S. E. 309; Norman v. Teel, 12 Okla. 69, 69 Pac. 791; Klein v. Dallas, supra.

And it is for them to consider and decide in view of all the circumstances disclosed by the proof. Turner v. Newburgh, supra; Duncan v. Buffalo, 18 N. Y. S. R. 841, 2 N. Y. Supp. 503; Boulder v. Niles; Aurora v. Bitner; Fitzgerald v. Concord; and Norman v. Teel, supra.

And this is so though the obstruction was not in itself a nuisance. Garnetz v. Carroll, supra.

If conflicting evidence is given in a case, that there was a defective walk and the defect had existed for several weeks, it is for the jury to determine whether such conflicting evidence discloses knowledge of a defect upon the part of the city; and it is not a matter for instruction by the court. Fleming v. Wilmerding (Pa.) 72 Atl. 624.

So, whether a sidewalk has been so notoriously defective and out of repair for such a length of time as to put the city upon inquiry is a question depending upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case, and is usually one for the jury. Fritz v. Watertown (S. D.) 111 N. W. 630; Smith v. Sioux City, 119 Iowa, 50, 93 N. W. 81.

And the question whether municipal officers would have known of dangerous places in a sidewalk if they had exercised proper vigilance is one of fact for the determination of a jury. Coffeen v. Lang, 67 Ill. App. 359.

And refusal to instruct, in an action for injuries caused by falling over planks piled up in a street gutter, that, if the planks had not been in the gutter more than one day before the accident the verdict shall be for the defendant, is not error. Covington v. Whitney, supra.

It is not for the court, in such an action, to prescribe the length of time which will raise a presumption of negligence upon the part of the city in not taking notice of the defect. Enright v. Atlanta, supra.

And, in submitting the question whether a defect in a sidewalk had existed long enough to enable the city, by the exercise of ordinary care, to discover and remedy it before the accident in question, the law applicable to the fact should not be embodied therein, as by asking whether the defect had existed long enough to make it the duty of the city to discover and repair it. Lyon v. Grand Rapids, 121 Wis. 609, 99 N. W. 311.

And an instruction in an action against a municipal corporation, that, if the obstruction or defect in question had existed only one day prior to the accident, and the municipal corporation had no actual knowledge of its existence, and the verdict should be for the defendant, is properly refused. Sheel v. Appleton, supra.

So, an instruction that, if an obstruction was made on Friday and Saturday before the accident, which was on Sunday, the defendant was not guilty of negligence, is properly refused. Shook v. Cohoes, supra.

And one that, if the jury shall find a legal defect, and that it was open and visible during the whole of a certain month, such fact would constitute sufficient notice, is erroneous. Colley v. Westbrook, 57 Me. 181, 2 Am. Rep. 30.

So, whether a reasonable time has elapsed between the origin of a dangerous condition in a street and an injury to a traveler resulting therefrom to have enabled the city to remedy such condition is a question for the jury in an action for the injury. Revis v. Raleigh (N. C.) 63 S. E. 1049.

And the question whether a hole in a sidewalk had existed long enough to enable the city, by the exercise of ordinary care, to discover and remedy it before the accident in question, is a single question, proper to be submitted for special verdict without division. Lyon v. Grand Rapids, supra.

And, where the evidence in an action against a city is conflicting with respect to the existence of a hole in a sidewalk at the time of the accident, as well as to the length of time that it existed prior thereto, if at all, the weight of it is for the consideration of the jury; and the court cannot assume that there was no hole there until a horse stepped on the walk, the day before the accident; and it cannot base an instruction on such assumption to the effect that, as the city had no notice, it cannot be presumed to have had knowledge of its existence by the exercise of proper care. Young v. Webb City, 150 Mo. 333, 51 S. W. 709.

So, whether a defective and dangerous condition of a bridge had existed for a sufficient length of time for the city, by its agents, to have discovered the same by the exercise of ordinary care in time to have made it reasonably safe before the accident in question, is a question for a jury to determine from the testimony. Covington v. Gates (Ky.) 117 S. W. 342.

And, while a person, while passing over a bridge in a sidewalk made by the placing of stones over a sluiceway, stepped into a hole between the separated stones, and his foot was caught, and he was injured; and there was evidence that the bridge had been repaired and left in good condition a few days before; and also evidence that it had remained in precisely the same condition for a year or so previous,—it is a question for the jury, under all the circumstances, to determine how long the bridge had been in a defective and dangerous condition, and to determine whether it had been left in an improper condition for such a length of time as properly to challenge the notice of the municipal authorities. Kirk v. Homer, 77 Hun, 459, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1009.

So, whether, in view of the distribution of municipal powers, or methods of municipal business, and the time which would be required by a city, after notice, to cause an obstruction in a street to be removed if the city acted with reasonable diligence after notice to a policeman of the existence of an obstruction; and whether there was time after such notice to have removed the obstruction before the happening of an injury therefrom, are questions of fact for the jury, to be determined upon all the circumstances of the case. Rehberg v. New York, 91 N. Y. 137, 43 Am. Rep. 657.

But, while generally it is a question for the jury, in an action for damages, whether a city has notice of a hole or other obstruction in a street, where the facts are undisputed and but one reasonable inference can be drawn from them it becomes a question for the court to decide. Bell v. Henderson, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2434, 74 S. W. 206.

And the question whether officers of a municipal corporation had notice that a street light near a defect in the street was out of repair is a mixed question of law and fact, which it is not proper to submit to the jury directly by interrogatories. Newcastle v. Grubbs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757.

And an instruction that a very short time may be sufficient to constitute constructive notice considering the location of the defect in the street, the character of it, the extent to which the street is used, to what extent the defect or obstruction is permanent and prominent, and such other things as throw light on the question, is not objectionable as inviting the jury to consider everything they may think proper, where it also states that what the facts are and the reasonable inference therefrom are for the jury to determine under all the evidence and circumstances, considered in accord with the court's instructions. Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Ballard, 22 Ind. App. 151, 52 N. E. 729.

And an instruction that a municipal corporation will be presumed to have had notice of a hole in a walk if it rendered it out of reasonable repair, and it had existed from one to six months before the injury, and was of such a character as would naturally arrest the attention of persons passing by, if objectionable as determining as a matter of law what would be reasonable notice, is cured by a subsequent charge that, before plaintiff can recover, the jury must find that it, after constructive notice of such hole, had sufficient time to put it in repair, and neglected to do so. Mulliken v. Corunna, 110 Mich. 212, 68 N. W. 141.

XIII. Injury as result of obstruction or defect.

a. Generally.

A recovery can be had against a municipal corporation on account of an obstruction in a street, only for an injury resulting directly and immediately from the obstruction. Edwards v. Cedar Rapids, 138 Iowa, 421, 116 N. W. 323; Raymond v. Haverhill, 168 Mass. 382, 47 N. E. 101.

And an instruction justifying a verdict for the plaintiff if there was a defect in the sidewalk, not confining it to the defect alleged in the petition, sufficient to have caused the injury complained of, and which did cause it, is erroneous. Edwards v. Cedar Rapids, supra.

To render a city liable in damages for injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, it must have been guilty of negligence through want of ordinary care, either in not ascertaining the defect and repairing it, or in not repairing after acquiring knowledge thereof, actual or constructive. Cincinnati v. Frazer, 18 Ohio C. C. 50.

A municipal corporation is not liable for personal injuries sustained from falling over an alleged obstruction, unless it appears that there was an unlawful obstruction, and that this caused the injury, and that the city had notice of the obstruction and was negligent in not removing it. Davis v. Corry City, 154 Pa. 598, 26 Atl. 621.

And the injury must have been a natural and probable result of the defect, as distinguished from the direct and natural result of it. Collins v. Janesville, 107 Wis. 436, 83 N. W. 695.

And, if a sidewalk had a ridge in it at or near the center of the walk, caused by the bulging of two planks where they met, which was from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 inches in height; and a traveler slipped upon the walk near the ridge on a sound, safe part of the walk and fell on the ridge and thereby hurt himself, the ridge causing the physical injuries but not causing him to fall, the city is not liable for the injury. Bloomington v. Read, 2 Ill. App. 542.

So, a person who is injured by his carriage being upset by running against a pile of sand left on the highway cannot recover of the municipality for the injury in the absence of evidence to show how the obstruction came to be placed in the highway, and that it was done by somebody for whose acts the municipal corporation was responsible. McGregor v. Harwich Twp. 29 Can. S. C. 443.

And where, by the statute entitling a person to recover against a municipal corporation for an injury in a street, he is required to prove that he was injured by a defect which had existed for twenty-four hours, or was known to the town, it is not enough that a former defect had existed which had been sufficiently repaired, and 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that, by reason of natural causes, a new defect was produced in the same place, unless the new defect, which was the immediate cause of the injury, had existed twenty-four hours, or was known to the town. Hutchins v. Littleton, 124 Mass. 289.

Nor can a recovery be had against a city for personal injuries caused by a fall on an icy sidewalk, where the evidence of the person injured leaves the cause of the fall open to mere conjecture. Dapper v. Milwaukee, 107 Wis. 88, 82 N. W. 725.

But evidence that a boy who was crossing a bridge was seen near a hole therein; and that, a few seconds later, he had disappeared; and that his body was found in the water below, a short distance from the hole in the direction of the current,—is sufficient to justify a finding that he fell through the hole. Strong v. Stevens Point, 62 Wis. 255, 22 N. W. 425.

And, where a person was walking upon a dangerous sidewalk when he slipped and fell, and the precise cause of his falling was unknown, it would be attributed to the danger known to be present, and not to a possible danger not known to exist. Higgins v. Glens Falls, 33 N. Y. S. R. 111, 11 N. Y. Supp. 289, affirmed in 124 N. Y. 666, 27 N. E. 855.

b. Proximate cause.

1. General rules.

A city is not liable for an injury resulting from an obstruction placed in the street, unless the injury directly or proximately resulted therefrom. Ringelstein v. San Antonio (Tex. Civ. App.) 21 S. W. 634; Taylor v. Manson (Cal.) 99 Pac. 410; Vincennes v. Thuis, 28 Ind. App. 523, 63 N. E. 315; Parmenter v. Marion, 113 Iowa, 297, 85 N. W. 90; Raymond v. Haverhill, 168 Mass. 382, 47 N. E. 101; Vicksburg v. Hennessy, 54 Miss. 391, 28 Am. Rep. 354.

And the rule has been asserted that a defect or obstruction in a highway cannot be held to have occasioned an injury when some other cause combined with it to produce the injury. Anderson v. Bath, 42 Me. 346; Cleveland v. Bangor, 87 Me. 259, 47 Am. St. Rep. 326, 32 Atl. 892; Aldrich v. Gorham, 77 Me. 287; Swart v. District of Columbia, 17 App. D. C. 407; Alger v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 402; Shepherd v. Chelsea, 4 Allen, 113; Rowell v. Lowell, 7 Gray, 100, 66 Am. Dec. 466; Merrill v. Portland, 4 Cliff. 138, Fed. Cas. No. 9,470.

But it has been held that a city may be liable for injuries resulting from its negligence in failing to keep a street in proper condition, even though the defective street is not the sole cause of the injury, provided the injured party is not in fault. Belleville v. Hoffman, 74 Ill. App. 503; Templin v. Boone, 127 Iowa, 91, 102 N. W. 789; Gonzales v. Galveston, 84 Tex. 3, 31 Am. St. Rep. 17, 19 S. W. 284; Vogelgesang v. St. Louis, 139 Mo. 127, 40 S. W. 653.

And that the municipality is not exonerated from liability for a defect or obstruction in a highway because other causes co-operated with the defect in causing the injury. Hayes v. Hyde Park, 153 Mass. 514, 12 L.R.A. 249, 27 N. E. 522; Crawfordsville v. Smith, 79 Ind. 308, 41 Am. Rep. 612; Dillon v. Raleigh, 124 N. C. 184, 32 S. E. 548.

Or because some other incidental cause also contributed to the injury. Hull v. Kansas City, 54 Mo. 598, 14 Am. Rep. 487; Brennan v. St. Louis, 92 Mo. 482, 2 S. W. 481; Fowler v. Linquist, 138 Ind. 566, 37 N. E. 133.

And the prevailing rule would appear to be that, where several concurring acts or conditions of things, one of them a wrongful act or omission, such as permitting an obstruction in a street, produced an injury, such wrongful act or omission is to be regarded as the proximate cause of the injury, if the person injured was without fault, and if the injury was one which might reasonably be anticipated from the act or omission, and which would not have occurred without it. Campbell v. Stillwater, 32 Minn. 308, 50 Am. Rep. 567, 20 N. W. 320; Denver v. Johnson, 8 Colo. App. 384, 46 Pac. 621; Janes v. Tampa, 52 Fla. 292, 120 Am. St. Rep. 203, 42 So. 729, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 510; Lacon v. Page, 48 Ill. 499; Rock Falls v. Wells, 169 Ill. 224, 48 N. E. 440; Templin v. Boone, 127 Iowa. 91, 102 N. W. 789; Union Street R. Co. v. Stone, 54 Kan. 83, 37 Pac. 1012; Vogel v. West Plains, 73 Mo. App. 588; Vogelgesang v. St. Louis, 139 Mo. 127, 40 S. W. 653; Wells v. Brooklyn, 9 App. Div. 61, 41 N. Y. Supp. 143; Harrington v. Buffalo, 18 N. Y. S. R. 425, 2 N. Y. Supp. 333; Hawley v. Gloversville, 4 App. Div. 343, 38 N. Y. Supp. 674; Storey v. New York, 29 App. Div. 316, 51 N. Y. Supp. 580; Halstead v. Warsaw, 43 App. Div. 39, 59 N. Y. Supp. 518; Dillon v. Raleigh, 124 N. C. 184, 32 S. E. 548; Ouverson v. Grafton, 5 N. D. 281, 65 N. W. 676; Chacey v. Fargo, 5 N. D. 173, 64 N. W. 932; Hampson v. Taylor, 15 R. I. 83, 8 Atl. 331, 23 Atl. 732; Sherwood v. Hamilton, 37 U. C. Q. B. 410.

And this is the rule, although the accident was the primary cause of the injury, if the consequences could, with common prudence and sagacity, have been foreseen and provided against by the city or village. Rock Falls v. Wells, 169 Ill. 224, 48 N. E. 440, affirming 65 Ill. App. 557; Forney v. Melvin, 130 Ill. App. 203; Joliet v. Shufeldt, 144 Ill. 403, 18 L.R.A. 750, 36 Am. St. Rep. 453, 32 N. E. 969; Joliet v. Verley, 35 Ill. 58, 85 Am. Dec. 342; Danville v. Makemson, 32 Ill. App. 112.

And a municipal corporation cannot excuse its culpability in omitting to keep its streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe state of repair for public use, upon the ground that the injury possibly, or even probably, would not have happened but for the intervention of a concurring cause, such as a horse becoming unmanageable through fright, for which neither party was responsible. McLemore v. West End (Ala.) 48 So 663.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Within this rule, if a defect in a street is a direct proximate cause of an accident, other concurring conditions which do not involve negligence or culpability, even though they come into a casual relation to the accident, do not relieve the city or town from liability. Block v. Worcester, 186 Mass. 526, 72 N. E. 77; Hawley v. Gloversville, 4 App. Div. 343, 38 N. Y. Supp. 647.

And a person injured by an obstruction in a street is entitled to recover against the city therefor, where it was of such a character and so situated and so left unprotected that he could not escape injury by the use of ordinary care, notwithstanding the fact that there may have been a want of prudence on his part. Herfurth v. Washington, 6 D. C. 289.

And if, by a reason of the want of ordinary care and prudence, the curbing and guttering of a street became defective and out of repair, and this defective condition of the curbing and guttering became an active agency of an unprecedented storm in producing the damage, the city would be liable therefor; but the commingling negligence of the city must have amounted to a want of ordinary care. Haney v. Kansas City, 94 Mo. 334, 7 S. W. 417.

So, while, to entitle a person to recover against a city under the Massachusetts statute for an injury caused by falling into an excavation in the street, it must appear that the excavation was the sole cause of the accident, this does not mean that there must be no other innocent or incidental contributing cause; it means that there must be no other culpable cause. Block v. Worcester, supra.

And, where an injury is the combined result of the negligence of a municipal corporation in creating a defect or obstruction in a street, and an accident for which neither the city nor the person injured is responsible, the city must pay damages, unless the injury would have happened had it not been negligent. Twist v. Rochester, 37 App. Div. 307, 55 N. Y. Supp. 850, affirmed in 165 N. Y. 619, 59 N. E. 1131.

And a municipality is liable where it permits the existence of an obstruction in a highway, amounting to a nuisance, which, by reason of the act of another person lawfully using the highway, is rendered dangerous, and which inflicts injuries. Wells v. Brooklyn, 9 App. Div. 61, 41 N. Y. Supp. 143.

So, a municipality is liable for damage from an imperfect highway if the immediate cause of the damage is the effect of a precedent cause arising from a neglect of duty by the municipality. Hey v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 44; 22 Am. Rep. 733.

And notice to a municipality of an unlawful obstruction in a public street, which it is in duty bound to remove therefrom, is notice that the safety of public travel is endangered or liable to be endangered; and, if the municipality takes the risk, and injury ensues, the presence of the obstruction is to be deemed the proximate cause thereof, since the injury could not have happened if the municipal authorities had performed their duty to remove the obstruction. Wells v. Brooklyn, supra.

But a person receiving an injury alleged to have been caused by an obstruction in a street is not entitled to recover against the city therefor if the evidence discloses that the defect was the remote, and not the proximate, cause of the injury. Childrey v. Huntington, 34 W. Va. 457, 11 L.R.A. 313, 12 S. E. 536; Phillips v. Ritchie County, 31 W. Va. 447, 7 S. E. 427.

And, to render a city liable for an injury resulting from an obstruction in a street, it is not enough that the supposed defect or obstruction may have contributed indirectly to the injury; the injury must have been produced directly by the alleged obstruction or defect. Swart v. District of Columbia, 17 App. D. C. 407.

So, a defect in a street, when a concurring cause of an injury, to render the municipal corporation liable, must have been such that without its operation the accident would not have happened. Taylor v. Yonkers, 105 N. Y. 202, 59 Am. Rep. 492, 11 N. E. 642; Marble v. Worcester, 4 Gray, 395.

And a municipality is not liable for an injury to a traveler on a highway by a defect or obstruction therein to which two causes contributed, for one of which it was responsible and for the other not, unless the injury would not have been sustained but for the defect for which it was responsible. Langhammer v. Manchester, 99 Iowa, 295, 68 N. W. 688; Swart v. District of Columbia, 17 App. D. C. 407; Anderson v. Bath, 42 Me. 346; Pratt v. Weymouth, 147 Mass. 245, 9 Am. St. Rep. 691, 17 N. E. 538.

And, where an injury results from a defect in a street and from some other concurring cause, no recovery can be had therefor against the city if it is just as probable that the injury came from one cause as the other, since the person seeking to recover is bound to make out his case by a preponderance of evidence, and the jury must not be left to a mere conjecture, or to act upon a bare possibility. Taylor v. Yonkers, 105 N. Y. 202, 59 Am. Rep. 492, 11 N. E. 642; Hawley v. Gloversville, 4 App. Div. 343, 38 N. Y. Supp. 647; Ring v. Cohoes, 77 N. Y. 83, 33 Am. Rep. 574; Safford v. Green Island, 74 Hun. 306, 26 N. Y. Supp. 669; Rowell v. Lowell, 7 Gray, 100, 66 Am. Dec. 466.

Unless the concurring cause is pure accident. Pratt v. Weymouth, 147 Mass. 245, 9 Am. St. Rep. 691, 17 N. E. 538; Marble v. Worcester, 4 Gray, 395; Phillips v. Ritchie County, 31 W. Va. 477, 7 S. E. 427.

The only exception to the rule that a person injured upon a highway or street cannot recover unless the defect in the highway or street was the sole cause of the injury exists where the contributing cause was a pure accident, and one which common prudence and sagacity could not have foreseen and provided against. Rowell v. Lowell, supra.

So, where several proximate causes contribute to an accident in a street, causing an injury, and each is an efficient cause without the operation of which the accident would not have happened, it may be attributed to any or all of the causes; but it cannot be attributed to a cause unless, without its operation, the accident would not have happened. Ring v. Cohoes, supra.

And, in a statutory action against a city for injuries sustained by reason of an obstruction in a street, if the negligence of the plaintiff, or if any other efficient cause for which neither the plaintiff nor the municipality is responsible, contributes to produce the injury, the action against the city cannot be maintained. Whitman v. Lewiston, 97 Me. 519, 55 Atl. 414.

But a contributory fault which would bar a recovery against the town for an injury caused by an obstruction in a highway must be one of the efficient and proximate causes of the accident, and not a mere condition or occasion of it. Cleveland v. Bangor, 87 Me. 259, 47 Am. St. Rep. 326, 32 Atl. 892.

And, though a person who fell over an unprotected supporting wall on the side of a street, in the night, which was unlighted, and was injured, was guilty of contributory negligence, yet, if the intervening negligence of the city was the sole promoting and proximate cause of the injury, then, at most, the negligence of the person injured can be looked to only in mitigation of damage. Knoxville v. Cox, 103 Tenn. 368, 53 S. W. 734.

And the question of contributory negligence in such case goes to the jury, in an action against the city for the injury, upon all the facts; and they are to determine whether, granting such negligence, it in whole or in part proximately occasioned the injury. Ibid.

The negligence of a city in failing to remove an obstruction from a street, to be the proximate cause of an injury, however, need not be the last act or cause, or nearest act, to the injury; but it must be such an act, wanting in ordinary care, as actively aided in producing the injury as a direct and existing cause; and it must be a concurring cause, such as might reasonably have been contemplated as involving the result under the attending circumstances. Gonzales v. Galveston, 84 Tex. 3, 31 Am. St. Rep. 17, 19 S. W. 284.

The test of proximate cause, where several causes unite resulting in an injury in a street, is whether the facts constitute a continuous succession of events so linked together that they become a natural whole, or whether the chain of events is so broken that they may become independent, and the final result cannot be said to be the natural and probable consequence of the primary cause. Quinlan v. Philadelphia, 205 Pa. 309, 54 Atl. 1026.

And the injury must be the natural and probable consequence of the negligence,—such a consequence as, under the surrounding circumstances of the case, might and ought to have been foreseen by the wrongdoer as likely to flow from his act. West Mahanoy Twp. v. Watson, 112 Pa. 574, 56 Am. Rep. 336, 3 Atl. 866.

And, where the independent act of a responsible person intervenes between the negligence of a city in permitting an obstruction in a highway and the injury sustained therefrom, such acts breaks the causal connection between the negligence of the city and the damage; and the city guilty of the original negligence is not chargeable, but redress must be sought from him who directly caused the injury, unless the intervening act is such as might reasonably have been anticipated as the natural or probable result of the original negligence, in which case the original negligence will be regarded as the proximate cause of the injury, and will render the city chargeable therewith. Mahogany v. Ward, 16 R. I. 479, 27 Am. St. Rep. 753, 17 Atl. 860; Yocum v. Trenton, 20 Mo. App. 489.

And a complaint in an action against a city for an injury caused by a defective street, which charges that the accident was not due to contributory negligence, and that the injuries were caused solely by the negligence of the defendant, sufficiently charges that the injuries were not caused by the negligence of any third person. Newcastle v. Gruggs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757.

Where the negligence of the third party is such that the roadmaking power ought to provide against it as a natural and usual occurrence, however, the liability for neglect in repairing is not suspended. Yocum v. Trenton, supra.

But if, between the cause of an injury from a defective highway and the effect, the negligence of the injured person intervenes so that the injury is the direct consequence of this negligence as well as of the defect in the way; and it is not possible to determine what portion of the injury is caused by either, or that any substantial injury would have been received except for the negligence of the person injured, no action can be maintained by him against the municipal corporation for such injury. Horrigan v. Clarksburg, 150 Mass. 218, 5 L.R.A. 609, 22 N. E. 897.

And questions of a special verdict, in an action against a city for negligence, as to whether a sidewalk at the time and place of the injury were insufficient and in want of repair, and, if so, whether such insufficiency or want of repair was the proximate cause of the injury, cover the question whether or not the injury was the result of a mere accident. Byington v. Merrill, 112 Wis. 211, 88 N. W. 26.

What was the proximate cause of an injury on a street must be determined from the particular facts of each particular case, and is a question of fact for the jury. Flora v. Pruett, 81 Ill. App. 161; Newcastle v. Grubbs, supra.

2. Immediate contact with obstruction.

The liability of municipalities for defects in a highway is not limited to injuries suffered by reason of a traveler or his horse or carriage coming into immediate contact with the defect or obstruction, but extends to injuries to the horse while under the immediate impulse or impetus received from the obstruction, or during reasonable efforts to relieve him from the position into which he has been thrown by coming into contact with the defect or obstruction, or to the traveler by voluntarily leaping from the carriage, in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, to avoid apparently imminent danger from being brought into contact with the defect or obstruction, or from the impending consequences immediately resulting therefrom. Sears v. Dennis, 105 Mass. 310.

So, a person using a public street, who is prevented by an obstruction therein from getting out of the way of a runaway horse, and who is injured thereby, when she could have avoided the injury had the street been in a reasonably safe condition, is entitled to recover therefor against the city. Rock Falls v. Wells, 169 Ill. 224, 48 N. E. 440, affirming 65 Ill. App. 557.

And, where a person falls, and is run over by a train of cars before he can arise; and his fall is occasioned by a hole in a sidewalk of a city; and the city is guilty of negligence in not repairing it,—the city is liable for the immediate and proximate injuries following. Schmidt v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 83 Ill. 405; Chicago v. Schmidt, 107 Ill. 186.

Nor is a city which left a steam roller in a public street, which was calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, relieved from liability for an injury to a person whose horse was frightened by it, on the theory that the injury was produced, not by reason of any defect in the roadbed itself, or in consequence of the injured person's carriage coming in collision with the roller, but in consequence of her horse becoming frightened at it. Young v. New Haven, 39 Conn. 435.

And, where a horse was frightened by a steam roller in a street, and the bit was broken and control of the horse was lost, and a woman riding in the carriage attempted to jump out and was injured, the presence of the steam roller in the street, at which the horse was frightened, was the proximate cause of the injury, rendering the city liable therefor. Halstead v. Warsaw, 43 App. Div. 39, 59 N. Y. Supp. 518.

And, where a person was injured by his horse which he was attempting to assist after it had fallen or became entangled by an obstruction in a street, the obstruction was the proximate cause of the injury; and the driver is entitled to recover therefor. Page v. Bucksport, 64 Me. 51, 18 Am. Rep. 239; Stickney v. Maidstone, 30 Vt. 738; McKelvin v. London, 22 Ont. Rep. 70; Contra, Crowley v. West End, 149 Ala. 613, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 801, 43 So. 359.

So, rules of law and statutory provisions that sidewalks must be kept in a reasonably safe condition for travel, and which give damages for a violation thereof, do not cover alone cases in which the traveler has stepped directly into a hole or defect, but also cover cases in which, in the exercise of ordinary diligence, he has stepped near the hole, and, without fault on his part, has slipped into it. Burrell v. Greenville, 133 Mich. 235, 94 N. W. 732; Hamilton v. Buffalo, 55 App. Div. 423, 66 N. Y. Supp. 990, affirmed in 173 N. Y. 72, 65 N. E. 944.

And, where a traveler on a sidewalk was attempting to step around a hole in the walk which was occasioned by a piece being broken out of one of the planks of which it was constructed, and his foot slipped into the hole, and he was thus caused to fall, causing an injury, it is for the jury to say whether his slipping and falling was the proximate result of the defect. Brown v. Chillicothe, 122 Iowa, 640, 98 N. W. 502.

So, where the horses of a traveler, being frightened by the overturning of their load, caused by a defect in the highway, escaped from him, ran 90 rods, and collided with another traveler, the injury of the latter may have been a natural and probable consequence, of the defect, for which the town was liable. Merrill v. Claremont, 58 N. H. 468.

But, if the horse of a traveler became frightened at an object in the highway which was an obstruction and defect therein, and with which but for his fright he would have come in contact; and, by reason of such fright, without coming in contact with it, it ran away and overturned the carriage at a place where there was no defect,—the municipal corporation is not liable for an injury sustained by the traveler, since the injury was not directly produced by the defect, or by an attempt to avoid it. Cook v. Charlestown, 98 Mass. 80.

And, where a horse became frightened at a railway train, and commenced to run, and the driver lost control, and the horse ran against a telegraph pole standing in the street, and the driver was thrown out, and the horse broke loose from the wagon and ran about 60 rods, where she ran over a pedestrian crossing the street, the telegraph pole standing in the street cannot be said to have been the proximate cause of the injury to the pedestrian, so as to render the city liable to him therefor. Gaudin v. Carthage, 36 N. Y. S. R. 308, 12 N. Y. Supp. 796.

And where horses took fright because of the overturning of the sleigh to which they were hitched by an ash heap in the highway, and they ran away, the accident occurring in the evening; and the horses were not found until the next morning, and then at a point from 5 to 6 miles from the place where they started and about a mile from the highway, where they had been killed by a locomotive on a railway track, the negligence of the municipal corporation, if any, was not the proximate, but the remote, cause of the killing of the horses; and the owner is not entitled to recover of the municipal corporation therefor. West Mahanoy Twp. v. Watson, 112 Pa. 574, 56 Am. Rep. 336, 3 Atl. 866.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So, where a horse drawing a sleigh along a street was frightened and ran away, because the sleigh ran into a hole in the ice on the street, and, after running a distance of 50 rods, struck and injured a footman, there was no such connection between the defect consisting of an accumulation of ice and a hole in it, and the damage sustained by the injured person by the accidental movements of the runaway horse, that the one must be considered as the necessary natural or direct result of the other; and the city is not responsible for the injury. Marble v. Worcester, 4 Gray, 395.

And, where a person driving a team at a railroad crossing found it necessary, to preserve his own life and the lives of his team, and save his wagon from destruction, to make a circuit and drive near to and upon a side track, and in so doing the wheels of the wagon struck a pedestrian, throwing him under the wheels of a moving train, the proximate cause of the injury was the intervening agency, and not the negligence of the railroad company and city in failing to provide suitable safeguards at the intersection of the street and railway. Kistner v. Indianapolis, 100 Ind. 210.

Nor can a person struck and injured by a trolley car recover of the city therefor on the ground that it failed to keep the street upon which the line was situated free from obstructions, so that the person injured was compelled, in passing around a post, to walk so close to the street-car track that she was struck by a passing car, where it appears that the collision with the car occurred during the daytime, and that the motorman in charge of the car could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered her peril in time to have avoided striking her; since in such case her action should have been against the trolley car company, and not against the city. Setter v. Maysville, 114 Ky. 60, 69 S. W. 1074.

And, where a heap of earth was left in a street in front of an excavation in the adjoining lot and under the sidewalk, forming a mound 6 or 7 feet high, and reaching from the curb to the car track, and running through the street; and a boy traveling along the street started to go around the mound, and was knocked down and run over by a traveler's wagon, which, by reason of the mound, he was unable to see, and, by reason thereof, the driver was unable to see him, the city cannot be held liable for the injury on the ground that the existence of the mound so obstructed the view of the child and the driver of the cart that they could not see each other, since the mere presence of the mound, and the fact that it compelled the boy to pass around it, without the intervention of some other cause, would not have produced the injury. Storey v. New York, 29 App. Div. 316, 51 N. Y. Supp. 580.

And, where a city left in a street an object calculated to frighten horses; and travelers came to it without knowledge of the defect, when their horse was at rest, and manageable; and they got out of the wagon apprehending difficulty in driving the horse by the obstruction; and the horse started up as one of them was dismounting, and an injury thereby happened to her,—the defect or obstruction in the street cannot be considered as the proximate cause of the injury, for which the city can be held liable. Card v. Ellsworth, 65 Me. 547, 20 Am. Rep. 722.

So, where a construction company, with the permission of the city, dug a ditch in a street and piled the granite pavement which it had dug up in a large pile too close to a car track in the street; and a boy, in attempting to cross the street, was unable to escape, and, by the negligence of the railroad company, was run upon and knocked down by horses drawing one of the cars,—no recovery can be had for the injury, since the acts of the street car company or of the boy were the proximate cause of the injury, and that of the construction company, if at all, a most remote cause. Stanley v. Union Depot R. Co. 114 Mo. 606, 21 S. W. 832.

And, where a person driving a vehicle with due care ran into a deep hole by the side of a railroad track laid in the street, and was violently thrown from the vehicle against a loose rail and against a spike protruding therefrom, resulting in the fracture of his skull and his consequent death; and an action was brought against the city for damages suffered not in consequence of the bruise inflicted by the fall but for damage suffered in consequence of his death,—the railroad company, and not the city, is liable therefor, where, but for the loose rail and protruding spikes, the traveler would not have met with death, and this condition of things had not existed at the time of previous accidents to others; since in such case the proximate cause of the death was the violent coming in contact of the skull of the deceased with the loose rail and the protruding spikes. Cline v. Crescent City R. Co. 43 La. Ann. 327, 26 Am. St. Rep. 187, 9 So. 122.

3. The primary or original cause as the proximate one.

There is a general rule that, where several acts or causes concur to cause the injury, the original act, if wrongful and causing injury in the ordinary course of events, though by the intervention of other causes, not wrongful, is taken as the proximate cause. Dallas v. Jones, 93 Tex. 38, 49 S. W. 577, 53 S. W. 377; Therien v. Montreal, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 15 C. S. 380.

Within the theory of this rule, the proximate cause of an injury which results to a traveler on a highway from the presence of an unlawful obstruction therein is such obstruction, and not the failure of one maintaining it to use due care in guarding against accident which may result therefrom, although such care might have rendered the injury impossible. Cohen v. New York, 113 N. Y. 532, 4 L.R.A. 406, 10 Am. St. Rep. 506, 21 N. E. 700.

And, where a city negligently constructed and graded a sewer so that a hole washed out along the sidewalk, and failed to place guards along the same, and negligently bridged such hole with planks which became warped and insecurely fastened, recovery can be had for the original negligence in the construction and maintenance of the walk as a proximate cause of an injury, though the injury was immediately occasioned by defects in the plank of which the city had no notice. Dallas v. Jones, supra.

And a city is not relieved from liability for injuries received by a traveler who falls into an open hatchway in a sidewalk which a house owner had been allowed to locate and maintain in a dangerous position, by the fact that the immediate cause of the accident was the negligence of such house owner in not guarding the opening. McClure v. Sparta, 84 Wis. 269, 36 Am. St. Rep. 924, 54 N. W. 337.

So, the liability of a municipal corporation to a person injured while using a street, by a telephone wire which had become broken during a storm and negligently allowed to remain for four months suspended from a tree overhanging a street, is not affected by the act of a third person, a few minutes before the injury, in fastening the wire to an adjacent tree so as to form a loop in which the injured person was caught; this not being an independent sufficient cause which would preclude a recovery, but, at most, the addition of a further concurrent cause. District of Columbia v. Dempsey, 13 App. D. C. 533.

And, where a telephone wire maintained by a city broke and fell across a trolley wire, but did not reach the street, and an employee of the trolley company drew the wire down in an effort to remove it, but, while this effort was in progress, a person came in contact with the wire and was killed, though the act of the employees of the trolley company was a concurrent cause of the accident the negligence of the city was the proximate cause, rendering it liable, since, had not the line fallen upon the trolley wire, having been disconnected from the pole for want of proper construction or want of due care on the part of the city, the accident would not have occurred. Twist v. Rochester, 37 App. Div. 307, 55 N. Y. Supp. 850, affirmed in 165 N. Y. 619, 59 N. E. 1131.

And, where a city granted a license to an individual to place his business wagon, when not in use, in the street in front of his store; and he kept it there while not in use with the thills turned up and fastened with a string; and, while it was thus standing, it was struck by a wagon and thrown against the sidewalk, when the thills dropped and injured a traveler on the sidewalk,—the mere granting of the license by the city was not the immediate cause of the injury, rendering the city liable, where the injury resulted from the negligent driving of the one who collided with the wagon, and the insufficient manner in which the thills were fastened; to make the city responsible in such case it must appear that it had notice in some form of the insecure fastening of the thills. Cohen v. New York, 33 Hun, 404.

So, where a city maintained a culvert in a condition which caused a large and dangerous pool of water to form in close proximity to a street and sidewalk, and a child, attracted by this pool of water, fell into it and was drowned, the maintenance of the insufficient culvert was the proximate cause of the death; and the city is liable therefor. Elwood v. Addison, 26 Ind. App. 28, 59 N. E. 47.

And, where a person was injured by falling into a neglected drain bordering one of the sidewalks of a city, which was out of repair and uncovered and unguarded, if there were broken bottles or other pieces of glass or sharp instruments in the ditch, without which the injury, notwithstanding the fall, would not have resulted, then, though these things could not have proved harmful without the fall, if the fall was caused by the defective condition of the sidewalk, it must be deemed to have been the proximate cause of the injury, for which the city is liable. Galveston v. Posnainsky, 62 Tex. 118, 50 Am. Rep. 517.

Likewise, where an open ditch or drain existed upon the side of a street, which was unprotected; and the opening was 2 feet 3 inches in depth, and the ditch 13 feet wide on the surface; and a railway track was in the street, and from the ditch to the track upon that side of the driveway it was 9 feet; and a traveler on the street, to avoid an approaching car, pulled his team toward the ditch, and one horse went over the bank, was frightened, and plunged to get out, and in so doing placed the wagon in such a position that the car struck it, and the wagon and team were thrown into the ditch and the driver injured,—the open ditch left by the negligence of the city must be deemed the proximate cause or responsible cause of the injury, since, although, except for the collision, the accident could not have occurred, still, except for the ditch and obstruction, the collision would not have occurred. Denver v. Johnson, 8 Colo. App. 384, 46 Pac. 621.

And, where a brewery wagon, before reaching a depression in a street, which tipped it over, slid several feet over the snowy surface of the street, the injury resulted from the slippery surface formed by the snow combined with the hole in the highway; and the municipality is liable, inasmuch as the accident would not have occurred in the absence of the hole, no matter how far the wagon might have slid over the snow. Lehmann v. Brooklyn, 30 App. Div. 305, 51 N. Y. Supp. 524.

And, where, on a principal street in a town of about 10,000 inhabitants, a railroad ran parallel with the street and about 12 feet below its level; and there was no railing at the side of the street; and a team of horses became frightened at a passing engine and ran over the unguarded side of the street injuring the driver,—the direct cause of the injury was the want of a proper barrier at the side of the street; and the question of the negligence of the municipal authorities is one for the jury. Pittston v. Hart, 89 Pa. 389.

Nor is a city relieved from liability for an injury to a horse which stepped into a hole in the surface of a street by the fact that the horse had temporarily and momentarily escaped from the barn or inclosure of its owner, and was free from control, where it would have been liable had the accident happened while the horse was being driven. Nocks v. Whiting, 126 Iowa, 405, 106 Am. St. Rep. 371, 102 N. W. 109.

And a person passing with due care along a street, who, in attempting to avoid the kick of a mule, fell or jumped into an excavation upon the border of the street, which, to the knowledge of the city, rendered the street dangerous, is entitled to recover of the city for the injury received. Bassett v. St. Joseph, 53 Mo. 293, 14 Am. Rep. 446.

So, negligence of a city in suffering a dangerous place in a railroad track in a street, in which a child caught his foot, and, while so caught, was run over by a train, was the proximate cause of the injury, rendering the city liable, notwithstanding the negligence of the railroad company in the construction and of the child's parents in sending him to the place. Eskildsen v. Seattle, 29 Wash. 583, 70 Pac. 64.

Nor can a city escape liability for an injury caused by a hole in a sidewalk resulting from a missing plank, where the plank was in fact loose, though it was thrown out by a bicycle just as the person injured was about to step upon it. Chacey v. Fargo, 5 N. D. 173, 64 N. W. 932.

And, where a woman stepped into the vacant place made by the absence of boards in a street crossing, and was injured, the city cannot excuse itself from liability for its negligence on the ground that the ground was covered with snow, and, if it had not been for the snow, the defect would have been seen and avoided. Waters v. Kansas City, 94 Mo. App. 413, 68 S. W. 366.

So, where a captain of a truck failed to notify the driver of the existence of an obstruction in a street, and the driver drove against it and was injured, though the captain was guilty of negligence in not so notifying him, and his failure to give the notice contributed to the injury, yet the negligence of the city in permitting the obstruction was the primary and proximate cause of the injury, without which the accident would not have occurred, and the negligence of the captain was the remote cause. Kansas City v. McDonald, 60 Kan. 481, 45 L.R.A. 429, 57 Pac. 123.

And, where a lumber pile was unlawfully placed in a street and allowed to remain there, and a drayman drove his dray against it, and a child playing upon it was thrown off and injured, if it was negligence upon the part of the city to have failed to remove the lumber pile from the street, and this failure and the act of the drayman both concurring caused the injury, the city is liable whether the act of the drayman was negligent or not. Gonzales v. Galveston, 84 Tex. 3, 31 Am. St. Rep. 17, 19 S.W. 284.

Nor is a city relieved from liability for an injury caused by a hole in a sidewalk by the fact that the starting of the fall of the person injured was due to snow and ice making the sidewalk slippery, where the injury would not have been sustained but for the hole. Covington v. Billiter, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 650, 99 S. W. 318.

And, where a highway had been washed away in gulleys, and was slippery with frozen sleet, and a person was injured thereon, if the place where the accident happened was so defective as to render the municipality liable in case an accident had happened by reason of the defect in the absence of the obstruction caused by ice, and the accident happened by reason of such defect and would not have happened but for it, then the municipality is liable though the ice was one of the proximate causes of the accident. Hampson v. Taylor, 15 R. I. 83, 8 Atl. 331, 23 Atl. 732.

So, where a person injured by stepping through a hole in a sidewalk was using ordinary care and diligence, the city, which constructed the walk and invited people to walk upon it and permitted it to remain in an unsafe and dangerous condition, is liable for the injury, although the slippery state thereof, for which no one was responsible, may have combined with the defect to produce the accident. Atchison v. King, 9 Kan. 560.

And, where an icy ridge was formed over the bricks of a sidewalk which had been upheaved by the roots of a large tree standing near, and the elevation and depression in the brick walk thus caused were of long standing and were covered with ice 2 or 3 inches thick, formed of the melted and trodden snow; and this was covered by snow which had fallen on the previous evening, upon which a person fell and was injured,—the proximate cause of the injury was the bad sidewalk, which, as should have been foreseen, had become dangerous by its covering of ice, and still more dangerous by the light snow hiding the ice. Conklin v. Elmira, 11 App. Div. 402, 42 N. Y. Supp. 518.

Nor can it be said, as matter of law, that the giving of a performance upon a wire stretched across a street under permission of the municipality was not the proximate cause of the injury of a pedestrian by the falling upon him of the performer, although the immediate cause of the fall was the weakness of an appliance used to support the performer's weight. Wheeler v. Ft. Dodge, 131 Iowa, 566, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 146, 108 N. W. 1057.

And, where the driver of a carriage drove into an obstruction, and a passenger was injured; and at that instant a street car collided with the carriage,—it is a question of fact for the jury, in an action against the city for the injury, as to what was the proximate cause of the injury; and, if it was by reason of the obstruction in the street, and by reason of that the driver drove into it just as the car came along, and it all occurred by reason of the obstruction being there, the city would be liable if it was guilty of negligence. Koch v. Williamsport, 195 Pa. 488, 46 Atl. 67.

A hole or depression in a street, however, is not the proximate cause of an injury from slipping on smooth and level ice, which has formed therein, making the surface even with that of the remainder of the street. Chamberlain v. Oshkosh, 84 Wis. 289, 19 L.R.A. 513, 36 Am. St. Rep. 928, 54 N. W. 618.

And, where a sidewalk was entirely covered with ice for a considerable distance; and at the place of the accident in question the ice was between 2 and 3 feet deep; and there was a hole in it large enough to admit a person's foot; and a person was injured by stepping into it; and the person injured had passed over the place daily and had not observed the hole before; and the authorities had no actual notice of the existence of the hole; and the weather had been very severe, and so continuous that the ice on the pavement was constantly accumulating,—the hole, and not the accumulation of ice, was the proximate cause of the injury; and the person injured is not entitled to recover therefor. McCabe v. Philadelphia, 217 Pa. 140, 66 Atl. 247.

And where for many days ice and snow accumulated upon a sidewalk and was suffered to remain there, and had become rounded and ridgy along the center of the walk, and snow and sleet then fell to the depth of from 2 to 4 inches, and froze, covering this street and all others in the village with a hard crust of ice, and a person fell on the fresh ice, as to which the village was not chargeable with negligence, the jury, in an action against the village for the injury, will not be permitted to speculate whether the old snow and ice, as to which the village might have been charged with negligence, contributed to his fall. Johnson v. Glens Falls, 41 N. Y. S. R. 820, 16 N. Y. Supp. 585.

4. Active as distinguished from passive agency of obstruction.

Where two or more causes of an injury exist, and one of them is active in producing the injury and the others are passive and inactive, the active cause will be deemed to be the proximate cause. Pinnix v. Durham, 130 N. C. 360, 41 S. E. 932.

Thus, where a city piles bricks along the side of a street for the purpose of repairing the street, and is negligent in not having a light or danger signal on the pile at night, and a person riding a bicycle negligently runs against it and is injured, the negligence of the city is passive and inactive, while that of the person injured is the moving active agency in producing the injury; and no recovery can be had therefor, the contributory negligence of the person injured being regarded as the proximate cause. Ibid.

And, where a pedestrian, while it was dark, kept the middle of a street to avoid the danger of falling into an excavation; and, when she reached a point in the street opposite the lot where the excavation was located, she mistook the lot for a road, and turned, and in doing so she fell on the sidewalk opposite the excavation, and then, supposing that she was coming to the road, fell into the excavation, which was about 2 feet from the sidewalk,—the absence of a rail guarding the excavation was not the proximate cause of the injury, and the municipality was not liable therefor; the proximate cause of her injury was her own mistake, and not the negligence of the municipality. Lyons v. Watt, 43 Colo. 238, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1135, 95 Pac. 949.

And, where a street-car track was situated in a street; and the city omitted to keep the north side of the street free from obstruction; and a traveler was compelled by the obstruction to walk so close to the street car track that she was run over by a street-car,—the person injured is not entitled to recover of the city; her cause of action is against the street railroad company, if the motorman in charge of the car could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered her peril in time to avoid striking her. Setter v. Maysville, 114 Ky. 60, 69 S. W. 1074.

And a person injured while climbing a fence across a highway cannot recover of the city for the injury received, though it was the duty of the city to cause the obstruction to be removed, where it was an ordinary board fence, and not a dangerous obstruction to anyone passing on foot, and not dangerous to undertake to get over either, in the daytime or night. Aurora v. Pulfer, 56 Ill. 270.

Nor can a person injured by a defect or obstruction in a highway recover against the municipal corporation therefor if there was a defect in the harness of the horse which he was driving, which did in fact contribute to produce the injury. Anderson v. Bath, 42 Me. 346.

And this is so whether or not he knew of the defect in the harness, or by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence would have discovered it. Ibid.

And, where a woman fell and received injuries in consequence of a defect in a sidewalk, and her ankle was weakened thereby so that at times it was likely to turn, and subsequently, because of such weakness, she fell and fractured her leg, the injury received in the second fall was not a direct and immediate result of the accident caused by the defect in the street; and the municipal corporation is not liable therefor. Raymond v. Haverhill, 168 Mass. 382, 47 N. E. 101.

And, where a traveler was injured by a fall on an alleged defective sidewalk; and he subsequently sustained other injuries from a fall on another street due to snow and ice upon the sidewalk, for which the city was not responsible, through the second fall and the injuries caused thereby were occasioned by dizziness, which was the result of the previous fall,—the negligence of the city causing the first injury cannot be considered as the proximate cause of the second injury, so as to render the city liable therefor. Watters v. Waterloo, 126 Iowa, 199, 101 N. W. 871.

So, a city which permitted an owner of property abutting on a street to maintain a platform extending out from the second story of his building over the sidewalk is not liable to a person passing by under the platform, who was struck by a bale of hay which was being thrown out of the second story of the building by the occupant, where the injury was the result of carelessness and negligence of the occupant in throwing the bale of hay from the second story to the sidewalk, and the accident would have been just as likely to happen in the absence of a platform as in its presence, the platform being a condition, and not the cause of the accident. Parmenter v. Marion, 113 Iowa, 297, 85 N. W. 90.

And, where a wooden awning well and strongly built projected from a shop or building over a sidewalk, and at one end a signboard was attached to the awning in a safe manner; and, as a traveler was passing under the signboard, the awning was struck by the carriage of a teamster who was driving in the street, and the board fell and injured the traveler, the town cannot be held liable for the injury, since the court cannot determine whether it was caused by a defect or want of repair of the way, or not. Merrill v. Portland, 4 Cliff. 138, Fed. Cas. No. 9,470.

So, where a city builds a sidewalk elevated from the ground upon posts, and a person is injured by breaking through it, the question of the negligence of the city is in respect to the sidewalk, and not in respect to the existence of an area under the sidewalk, the existence of the area not being the proximate and direct cause of the injury though it may have enhanced it; and the city is not liable therefor. Atchison v. Jansen, 21 Kan. 560.

And, where a sidewalk was defective in that stringers were decayed, and, just before the time of the injury in question, a horse had been tied to one of the planks, and, just as the person injured came along, the horse jerked the plank out of place, and the person injured stepped into the aperture and fell, the defect in the walk cannot be said to have been the primary cause of the injury; and the person injured is not entitled to recover of the city. Hembling v. Grand Rapids, 99 Mich. 292, 58 N. W. 310.

So, where a wagon of a traveler collided with another wagon being driven at great speed, and the driver of the former wagon was injured, the city cannot be held liable therefor because it permitted the street car tracks which were in the street to become out of repair to such an extent that the rails were so much above the surface of the street that, as the vehicles approached each other, the drivers could not turn them so as to avoid the collision, since, though the city was negligent in regard to the care of its streets, and this contributed to the injury, yet the reckless driving of the driver of the second vehicle was the proximate cause of the injury. DeCamp v. Sioux City, 74 Iowa, 394, 37 N. W. 971.

And, where it is not possible to distinguish the damage received in being thrown from a sleigh in consequence of a defective way from that received in falling upon a broken brace of the sleigh, which the person injured was negligent in using in that condition; or where it does not appear that any substantial damage would have been received if the brace had not been broken,—no recovery can be had against the municipal corporation for the injury. Horrigan v. Clarksburg, 150 Mass. 218, 5 L.R.A. 609, 22 N. E. 897.

And, where a person driving in a highway meets another also driving, and fails to turn out as required by statute; and the former is compelled to drive upon the side of the road to avoid collision, and is injured by colliding with a post in the highway standing outside of, but near to, the traveled track,—the town is not liable for the injury; but the person whose independent act was the proximate cause of the injury is liable therefor. Mahogany v. Ward, 16 R. I. 479, 27 Am. St. Rep. 753, 17 Atl. 860.

So, where a team became frightened by persons behind it making a noise, and ran away, whereupon the driver jumped out and the horses ran some distance along the street and into a hole or gully on the side of the street, causing an injury to a passenger, the injury was not the result of the defect in the street, but of the driver's losing or abandoning control of the horses, where the street at the point of the accident was of sufficient width for all the usual travel thereon. Brown v. Glasgow, 57 Mo. 156.

And the fright of a horse from a sound produced by the scraping of a carriage wheel against the sides of a stone in a road will not create a liability against a city for injuries caused by the freight, on the ground that the stone was a defect in the way. Bowes v. Boston, 155 Mass. 344, 15 L.R.A. 365, 29 N. E. 633.

Nor does negligence of a city in excavating a street at a particular point create a liability against it for injury to a passenger on a street-railway car, where the negligence proximately causing the injury consisted in the carrier stopping the car at the point of excavation, and omitting to assist the passenger to alight. Yecker v. San Antonio Traction Co. 33 Tex. Civ. App. 239, 76 S. W. 780.

And, where a traveler attempted to cross a public street in a city after dark, and the gas lamps had not been lighted, and a street car approached, and its noise prevented his hearing the approach of a horse and wagon 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

without a driver, and the failure to light the street lamps prevented him from seeing them, and he was run over and injured. the proximate cause of the injury was the runaway horse and the noise of the street car, and the city is not liable for the injury. Gaskins v. Atlanta, 73 Ga. 746.

And permitting a road to remain obstructed or out of repair so that fire apparatus is hindered in responding to an alarm is not the proximate cause of the destruction of property by fire; and the city is not liable to the property owner for his loss caused by such defect. Hazel v. Owensboro, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 627, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 235, 99 S. W. 315.

So, where a special constable was proceeding to take a prisoner to jail, and, passing along a street with him, he was seized by the latter in an attempt to escape, and thrown into a pit negligently permitted by the town authorities to remain in the street, and injured, the town is not liable for the injury, its negligence not being the proximate cause thereof. Alexander v. New Castle, 115 Ind. 51, 17 N. E. 200.

And, where a swing was suspended in one of the streets of a village a few feet from the curb line, and, as a person was driving past in a covered buggy, a little girl gave the swing a push into the street, and the loop of the swing fell over the top of the buggy, which caused an injury to a passenger, the city is not liable for the injury, since it was not caused by the impropriety or illegality of leaving the swing in the street, but by the act of the child, which was not of such a nature that a person of reasonable prudence would have anticipated it. Shotwell v. Reading, 5 Ohio N. P. 241.

So, if a liberty pole erected in a street was sound, and so secured and protected that careful, prudent, and sagacious persons considered it safe, and it was broken by a wind of unusual violence, and a person was injured thereby, the injury was a result too remote from the erection of the pole to make the city liable in damages therefor. Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 287, 40 Am. Rep. 649.

But, where a long ladder, the lower end resting in a village street outside a sidewalk inclined over and crossing the walk, the upper end resting upon a building, was blown down in an unusual wind, and injured a passer-by, the negligence of the owner and occupants of the building in allowing the ladder to remain there, and of the village authorities after having knowledge of the facts, was the proximate cause of the injury, and not the unusual wind. Moore v. Townsend, 76 Minn. 64, 78 N. W. 880.

Nor does a statute providing that a city shall be liable for injuries caused by its failure to keep its streets reasonably safe give a cause of action to a person who sustains injuries by descending into an uncovered catch-basin to rescue her child, who had fallen in, the absence of the cover of the catch-basin from its place not being the proximate cause of the injury sustained from voluntarily descending into it. Kelley v. Boston, 180 Mass. 233, 62 N. E. 259.

A village is liable, however, for personal injuries to a pedestrian who, without fault on his part, falls from an unguarded sidewalk, although the direct cause of the fall is the negligence of a third person in pushing him off the sidewalk. Carterville v. Cook, 129 Ill. 152, 4 L.R.A. 721, 16 Am. St. Rep. 248, 22 N. E. 14.

And the intervening act of a third person cannot excuse a city for its negligence in failing to erect barriers along a street next to a river bank; and an instruction in an action against a city for such an injury, to find for the defendant if the accident was occasioned by bystanders endeavoring to assist the plaintiff by taking hold of the bridle, thereby causing the horse to back over the bank, is properly refused. San Antonio v. Porter, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 444, 59 S. W. 922.

And, where a person, in the exercise of reasonable care, was struck and injured by a car of an electric railroad, the tracks of which were located under the supervision of the municipality, while walking on a sidewalk negligently laid after the road was in operation, in such close proximity to the track that cars running thereon projected 1 or 2 feet over and upon the sidewalk at the point where the accident occurred, the negligence of the municipality cannot properly be said to be a remote, and not a proximate, cause of the injury; and the municipality is primarily liable. District of Columbia v. Sullivan, 11 App. D. C. 533.

Nor can a city escape liability for injuries sustained by a person by falling into an unguarded excavation in a street at night while attempting to board a street car, upon the ground that the street car company's negligence in stopping the car so near the excavation was the proximate cause of the injury. Monje v. Grand Rapids, 122 Mich. 645, 81 N. W. 574.

And a city which made a dangerous excavation in a public thoroughfare close to a much-used walk, without guards, barriers, or danger signals, cannot escape liability for an injury resulting therefrom because the person injured stepped from the cross walk beside the excavation to avoid a collision with persons who were approaching her on the walk from the opposite direction, thus causing her to fall into the excavation, and such a state of facts does not require a statement of the rule with reference to the proximate and remote causes of the injury. Olathe v. Mizee, 48 Kan. 435, 30 Am. St. Rep. 308, 29 Pac. 754.

So, where a pedestrian on a sidewalk near the entrance to a bridge was suddenly confronted by a bicycle coming with great speed, and jumped aside to avoid a collision, and fell down the embankment and was injured, the failure of the city to maintain guards at the place was the proximate cause of the injury for which the city is answerable, although a concurring cause of the injury was the unlawful act of the bicyclist in riding on a sidewalk of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

bridge. Knouff v. Logansport, 26 Ind. App. 202, 84 Am. St. Rep. 292, 59 N. E. 347.

And that a wagon and car passing abreast in the same direction in which a bicycle rider was traveling narrowed the space, rendering his passage more hazardous, does not relieve the municipality of liability for injury to the bicycle rider, caused by a depression or excavation in the street, where the wagon and car were lawfully in the street. Clinton v. Revere, 195 Mass. 151, 80 N. E. 813.

5. Fright of horses as affecting.

Where an obstruction or defect in a street causes a horse to run away and collide with a wagon in the street, causing an injury to the driver, the obstruction or defect in the street which causes the fright of the horse is the proximate cause of the injury. Quinlan v. Philadelphia, 205 Pa. 309, 54 Atl. 1026; Crawfordsville v. Smith, 79 Ind. 408, 41 Am. Rep. 612; Topeka v. Tuttle, 5 Kan. 311; Card v. Ellsworth, 65 Me. 547, 20 Am. Rep. 722; Shearer v. Buckley, 31 Wash. 370, 72 Pac. 76.

And the rule is the same where, from fright, the horse becomes momentarily unmanageable, and, by reason thereof, an accident occurs resulting in injury, provided the injury is one that might reasonably be anticipated as a natural result of such negligent and wrongful act or omission. Ouverson v. Grafton, 5 N. D. 281, 65 N. W. 676; Aldrich v. Gorham, 77 Me. 287.

And, where bags of cement covered with white canvas, which were well calculated to frighten horses, were placed near a bridge by a highway commissioner, and the plank of the bridge had been removed, and no barrier or warning signs were erected to prevent people using the road across the culvert; and the horse of a person attempting to use the road was frightened at the bags of cement, and the driver could not stop him until he ran upon and was injured by the defective bridge,—it cannot be said, as matter of law, that the horse's fright was the proximate cause of the injury, because it was momentarily beyond the driver's control so far as stopping it was concerned. Judd v. Caledonia Twp., 150 Mich. 480, 114 N. W. 346.

So, when a horse of ordinary gentleness merely swerved to one side so that the driver did not lose control over him, and he did not become temporarily unmanageable, and an injury to the driver was caused without his fault, in coming in contact with an obstacle or defect in the street, the city is liable for the injury. Burnes v. St. Joseph, 91 Mo. App. 489; Janes v. Tampa, 52 Fla. 292, 120 Am. St. Rep. 203, 42 So. 729, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 510; Spaulding v. Winslow, 74 Me. 528; Cleveland v. Bangor, 87 Me. 259, 47 Am. St. Rep. 326, 32 Atl. 892; Stone v. Hubbardston, 100 Mass. 49; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Prescott, 23 L.R.A. 654, 8 C. C. A. 109, 19 U. S. App. 291, 59 Fed. 239.

If the object which caused the horse to step out of the traveled path was within the limits of the highway, and would have caused an ordinarily gentle and well-broken horse to do so. Stone v. Hubbardston, supra.

Nor is a person whose horse became frightened and ran away, and ran against an obstruction in the street, and caused an injury, deprived of the right of recovery because the fright of his horse was not caused by the defective condition of the street. Belleville v. Hoffman, 74 Ill. App. 503.

And a town is not liable, under a statute requiring towns to keep their ways in repair, to one whose horse, frightened by an object within the limits of the highway, sprang aside and was injured by collision with a passing carriage driven upon the proper side of the road, although upon the other side of the carriage, so that it could not be driven at a greater distance off, was a ridge which was a defect in the highway. Bemis v. Arlington, 114 Mass. 507.

So, where the sudden blowing off of steam by an engine while a team of mules was on a bridge over the engine slightly frightened the mules so that they got partly beyond the control of the driver and ran with the wagon they were drawing into a 10-inch excavation at the edge of the bridge, negligently permitted to be and remain there by the city, by reason of which the driver was thrown from the wagon and injured, the city is liable in damages for the injury. Vogelgesang v. St. Louis, 139 Mo. 127, 40 S. W. 653.

And, where a person passing along a highway met a wagon loaded with lime casks; and her horse took fright at them and immediately backed over a bank precipitating the horse, carriage, and driver into a pond, inflicting the injuries complained of; and there was no railing on the side of the highway; and the distance from the rut nearest the bank to the edge of the bank was about 18 inches; and the bank was nearly perpendicular and about 4½ feet above the water; and the fright of the horse was sudden, and the loss of control but momentarily, the accident immediately following,—the efficient and proximate cause of the injury must be deemed to have been a want of a sufficient railing at the place of the accident; and the fright of the horse was merely an agency which induced or influenced the accident. Morsman v. Rockland, 91 Me. 264, 39 Atl. 995.

But when a horse, by reason of fright, disease, or viciousness, becomes actually unmanageable so that his driver cannot stop him, or direct his course, or exercise or gain control over his movements; and in this condition comes upon an obstruction in a highway by which an injury is occasioned,—the municipality is not liable for the injury unless it appears that it would have occurred if the horse had not become so uncontrollable. Ritger v. Milwaukee, 99 Wis. 190, 74 N. W. 815; Spaulding v. Winslow, 74 Me. 528; Cleveland v. Bangor, 87 Me. 259, 47 Am. St. Rep. 326, 32 Atl. 892; Titus 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Northbridge, 97 Mass. 258, 93 Am. Dec. 91; Horton v. Taunton, 97 Mass. 266, note; Scannal v. Cambridge, 163 Mass. 91, 39 N. E. 790; Johnson v. Marquette (Mich.) 15 Det. L. N. 655, 117 N. W. 658; Schillinger v. Verona, 96 Wis. 456, 71 N. W. 888; Bell Teleph. Co. v. Chatham, 31 Can. S. C. 61.

If, in such case, the thing which occasioned the horse's fright was the proximate cause of the injury, the person injured cannot recover; but if it, by chance, became merely an agency through which another defect operated to produce the injury, then he can recover. Spaulding v. Winslow, supra.

A road need not be kept in such a state of repair as to guard against injury caused by runaway horses whose riders or drivers have entirely lost control of them either in spite of ordinary care, or by reason of want of it. Foley v. East Flamborough Twp. 29 Ont. Rep. 139.

And one who leaves a horse attached to a wagon standing unhitched in a public highway, and without having the lines within reach, cannot recover for injuries caused by a collision with an obstruction in the highway in case the horse runs away. Denver v. Utzler, 38 Colo. 300, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 77, 120 Am. St. Rep. 108, 88 Pac. 143.

And, when a person securely fastens his horse to a post in a street, and the horse breaks the fastening and runs away and is killed because the city had failed to erect barriers along a declivity in the street, there can be no recovery against the city for the injury, since, if one was permitted, it would be based on the fact that the horse ran away. Moss v. Burlington, 60 Iowa, 438, 46 Am. Rep. 82, 15 N. W. 267.

And, where a person hitched his horse to a weight in an alley and left him to deliver goods in an adjoining house, and on his return he found the horse had fallen over an unguarded declivity on the opposite side of the alley, it is a question for the jury, in an action for the injury, whether the injury was the sole result of the backing of the horse, in which event the city would not be liable, or whether the injury was the result of the city's negligence in not guarding the alley, contributed to by the accidental action of the horse, in which event the city would be liable. Ballentine v. Kansas City, 126 Mo. App. 130, 103 S. W. 564.

So, the fact that a runaway team of horses while under full headway dashed over the side of a bridge at a point where the city had provided no guard rail does not render the city liable for the injury if the bridge was in a reasonably safe condition, and the fright of the horses was not caused by any negligence chargeable to the city. Teater v. Seattle, 10 Wash. 327, 38 Pac. 1006.

And, where the driver of a vehicle lost control of his horses, which ran away and caused the injury in question by their running the vehicle against an obstruction in the highway, the person injured cannot recover against the municipality, where notwithstanding the obstruction, the road was in a reasonable state of repair for ordinary travel. Foley v. East Flamborough Twp. supra; Butler v. Oxford, 69 Miss. 618, 13 So. 626.

And, where a horse, being driven along a private way towards a city street from which it led at right angles, became uncontrollable at a distance of about 100 feet from the street; and, when the street was reached, the driver had not regained control sufficiently to enable him safely to turn and drive along it; and he drove across it and down a bank on the other side, which was unprotected by a railing; and a person with him was injured,—the uncontrollable condition of the horse contributed directly to the injury, and the city cannot be held responsible therefor. Higgins v. Boston, 148 Mass. 484, 20 N. E. 105.

So, the proximate cause of an injury to a horse frightened by the falling of an object from an upper window in a building in front of which he was hitched, when he broke away and ran into an obstruction in the street, was the frightened and runaway horse, and not the obstruction. Bleil v. Detroit Street R. Co. 98 Mich. 228, 57 N. W. 117.

And a pile of stones on the roadside leaving space enough for travel will not render the municipal corporation liable for an injury to a person thrown upon the stones by the fall of the horse he was riding, where the fall was occasioned by the struggles of another horse in his team, which was frightened by the shooting of guns near the road. Kieffer v. Hummelstown, 151 Pa. 304, 17 L.R.A. 217, 24 Atl. 1060.

Nor are the narrowness of a bridge and the insufficiency of its railings the proximate cause of an injury to an occupant of a cutter dragged off the bridge by a horse which fell and broke the railings in consequence of disease or choking by the harness. McClain v. Garden Grove, 83 Iowa, 235, 12 L.R.A. 482, 48 N. W. 1031.

And, although a city may be negligent in failing to maintain a barrier on the edge of a street, yet, when a horse drawing an omnibus in the middle of the street, which is 20 feet wide and in good condition, falls from choking or inability to draw the vehicle, and, in his struggles to regain his feet, plunges over the edge of the street, dragging the omnibus with him and injuring a person therein, a recovery against the city for the injury cannot be had, since the absence of the barrier is only the remote cause of the accident, the fall of the horse being the proximate cause thereof. Herr v. Lebanon, 149 Pa. 222, 16 L.R.A. 106, 34 Am. St. Rep. 603, 24 Atl. 207.

And, where a person was driving a horse along a street, which horse had contracted the vicious habit of backing, and which became frightened at escaping steam from a locomotive, and stopped, and, on being struck with the whip, commenced backing, and, in spite of the whip, continued to do so some 25 feet on the surface of the street and then down a steep bank by reason of which an occupant of the carriage was injured, if sufficient time elapsed between the fright of the horse and the accident to permit a man of ordinary prudence, acting as driver, to make proper effort to regain control of the frightened animal, even though he should fail, the city would not be liable for its negligence in failing to maintain a rail or barrier along the embankment, since the injury must be attributed to the viciousness of the horse rather than to the defect in the street. Hungerman v. Wheeling, 46 W. Va. 761, 34 S. E. 778.

Where, however, a horse takes fright, without fault of the driver, at something for which the municipality is not responsible, and gets beyond the control of the driver, runs away, and comes in contact with some obstruction or defect in the street, which is there by the negligence of the municipality, the municipality is liable for the resulting injury if it would not have been sustained except for such negligence. McDowell v. Preston, 104 Minn. 263, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 190, 116 N. W. 470; Janes v. Tampa, 52 Fla. 292, 120 Am. St. Rep. 203, 42 So. 729; 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 510; Wilson v. Atlanta, 60 Ga. 473; Chicago v. McCabe, 93 Ill. App. 288; Joliet v. Shufeldt, 144 Ill. 403, 18 L.R.A. 750, 36 Am. St. Rep. 453, 32 N. E. 969; Mt. Vernon v. Hoehn, 22 Ind. App. 282, 53 N. E. 654; Manderschid v. Dubuque, 25 Iowa, 108; Union Street R. Co. v. Stone, 54 Kan. 83, 37 Pac. 1012; Emporia v. White, 74 Kan. 864, 86 Pac. 295; Meisner v. Dillon, 29 Mont. 116, 74 Pac. 130; Sherwood v. Hamilton, 37 U. C. Q. B. 410.

This rule is based upon the principle that, where several concurring acts or conditions of things, one of them a wrongful act or omission, produce an injury, such wrongful act or omission is to be regarded as the proximate cause of the injury if it is one which might reasonably have been anticipated from such act or omission, and which would not have occurred without it. McDowell v. Preston, 104 Minn. 263, 18 L.R.A. (N. S.) 190, 116 N. W. 470.

And, where a person was driving an ordinarily gentle horse along a street exposed to a river front, and the horse became suddenly frightened and backed the buggy into the river, injuring the driver, if the injury would not have occurred had there been a suitable barrier erected between the street and the river, the failure of the city to provide such barrier was the proximate cause of the injury, rendering it liable therefor. San Antonio v. Porter, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 444, 59 S. W. 922.

So, a person whose horses ran away without fault on his part, who sustained injury while endeavoring to recover control of them because of an obstruction in the highway close to the edge of the traveled track, is entitled to recover damages of the city for his injuries. Foley v. East Flamborough Twp. 26 Ont. App. Rep. 43.

Nor is the fact that the horse driven by the person injured became frightened, if without fault of the driver, a bar to a recovery by the person injured, against the city, where the injury resulted from an obstruction or defect in a street. Peoria v. Gerber, 68 Ill. App. 255, affirmed in 168 Ill. 318, 48 N. E. 152; Manderschid v. Dubuque, supra.

And, where a horse driven along a street ran away in consequence of a broken bit, without fault on the part of the driver; and the driver was thrown from the vehicle and injured by reason of an obstruction in the street,—the relation was direct between the obstruction in the street, occasioned by the negligence or omission of duty by the city, and the injury, without any intervening efficient cause; and the city is liable for the injury. Joliet v. Shufeldt, 144 Ill. 403, 18 L.R.A. 750, 36 Am. St. Rep. 453, 32 N. E. 969.

And, where a city is negligent in maintaining too narrow an embankment used as an approach to a railway crossing having banks of a precipitate character and no railings, such negligence is not prevented from being the proximate cause of an accident and rendering the city liable therefor by the fact that in producing the accident the fright of the horse of the person injured operated with the negligence of the city. Harvey v. Clarinda, 111 Iowa, 528, 82 N. W. 994.

So, where a person injured was driving a horse upon a narrow driveway between a car track and a ditch, the fact that the horse became frightened and participated in the injury in no way modifies the liability of the city. Denver v. Johnson, 8 Colo. App. 384, 46 Pac. 621.

And, where a team of horses ran away, and, coming to an opening in a fence or railing along a declivity, they bolted through it and down the precipice, the mere fact that the horses were running away and had become unmanageable will not prevent a recovery against the municipality for the injury, unless the driver was guilty of want of reasonable care or skill, the existence of which is a question for the jury. Sherwood v. Hamilton, 37 U. C. Q. B. 410.

And, where a city permitted a street railroad company so to construct its railroad along and upon one of its streets that a carriage driven over it would be in great danger of being overturned and broken; and the horse of a person driving along a street was frightened by a car moving along the track, and ran upon the tracks of the railroad company; and the carriage was overturned and the driver injured,—the city is not relieved from liability on the theory that the injury was sustained from the frightening of the horse by the moving car, and not from the neglect of the city properly to guard its street. Campbell v. Stillwater, 32 Minn. 308, 50 Am. Rep. 567, 20 N. W. 320.

So, a person whose horse took fright and overturned his buggy throwing it down an embankment in a street upon which he was driving, is entitled to recover for his injury against the city, if the city was negligent in constructing the embankment, and in not 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) providing it with necessary railings, or other means of protection, and in not keeping the street in a safe condition, such negligence being the real cause of the injury. Atlanta v. Wilson, 59 Ga. 544, 27 Am. Rep. 396; Augusta v. Hudson, 94 Ga. 135, 21 S. E. 289; Byerly v. Anamosa, 79 Iowa, 204, 44 N. W. 359; Olson v. Chippewa Falls, 71 Wis. 558, 37 N. W. 575.

Whether the fright or misconduct of a horse is such as to be regarded as the direct, proximate cause of an injury in a defective highway is to be determined by the extent of such misconduct; it may in a remote degree bear upon, or even influence, the injury, though not in a legal sense be the cause of it. Morsman v. Rockland, 91 Me. 264, 39 Atl. 995; Cleveland v. Bangor, 87 Me. 259, 47 Am. St. Rep. 326, 32 Atl. 892.

And whether an obstruction in a highway, and not an object near the highway, which had caused a team to shy, was the proximate cause of an injury resulting from their running away, is a question of fact for the jury, in an action against the city for the injury. Johnson v. Marquette (Mich.) 15 Det. L. N. 655, 117 N. W. 658.

A horse is not to be considered uncontrollable, so that no recovery can be had for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction in a street, if he merely shies or starts, or is momentarily not controlled by his driver. Titus v. Northbridge, 97 Mass. 258, 93 Am. Dec. 91; Horton v. Taunton, 97 Mass. 266, note; Aldrich v. Gorham, 77 Me. 287; Morsman v. Rockland and Johnson v. Marquette, supra; Macauley v. New York, 67 N. Y. 602.

And the facts that a person's horse was so frightened at the time of an accident from a defect in a street as to be beyond the control of the driver; and that the accident happened after the driver had lost control,—do not prevent a recovery for a resulting injury, unless the loss of control over the horse was not momentarily but continued, or unless he was so frightened by something for which the city was not negligently responsible. Macauley v. New York, supra.

But, where a horse shied at an object in a road, and brought the carriage into contact with an obstruction, and the traveler was injured, if the shying of the horse was occasioned by a vicious habit, and was not at an object which would have startled a gentle and well-broken horse, the traveler cannot recover against the municipality for his injury. Stone v. Hubbardston, 100 Mass. 49.

And, where a horse had made several attempts to run away, and, after being driven to a road cart in which two men were riding for 26 miles on an August day, became wholly unmanageable and ran away, when the wheels of the cart came in contact with the rails of a railway in the street projecting above the surface thereof, making a scraping noise, the fright of the horse, rather than the negligence of the city in permitting the projecting rails, will be deemed to have been the proximate cause of the injury suffered, where the cart came into collision with a wagon in consequence of the running away of the horse. Macon v. Dykes, 103 Ga. 847, 31 S. E. 443.

A general averment in a complaint in an action for an injury resulting from the frightening of a horse by an object in a street, that the injury was not caused by any negligence or carelessness on the part of the plaintiff, but was caused wholly by the negligence of the town in permitting a person to maintain and carry on a business on the street, makes the complaint good as against a demurrer for want of facts. Rushville v. Adams, 107 Ind. 475, 57 Am. Rep. 124, 8 N. E. 292.

And a complaint in an action against a city for an injury to a girl sixteen years of age, caused by the running away of a team of horses she was driving, and colliding with an obstruction in the street, is not bad for failure to allege that the team was an ordinarily gentle one, such as could be entrusted to the management of a girl sixteen years of age, where it was alleged that the injured person was without fault, and exercised care and skill. Mt. Vernon v. Hoehn, 22 Ind. App. 282, 53 N. E. 654.

And the amendment of a complaint alleging that the defendant, a city, negligently allowed a wire fence to be maintained in a street, and that the plaintiff was injured while riding along the street by his horse becoming unmanageable and running into the fence, by substituting the word "frightened" for the word "unmanageable" is not objectionable, as substituting a new cause of action. McLemore v. West End (Ala.) 48 So. 663.

The question of the liability of a municipality for injuries caused by a horse becoming frightened at an object in a highway is treated in a note to Boves v. Boston, 15 L.R.A. 365; and the effect upon the right of recovery, of fact that horse was frightened when the accident occurred on a defective highway, is considered in a note to Schaeffer v. Jackson Twp. 18 L.R.A. 100.

XIV. Right to redress of the person injured.

a. With reference to the person.

1. Nature of the injury.

A person cannot recover of a municipal corporation because of the obstruction of a public highway, in the absence of any showing of damage special and peculiar to him, and not suffered by the rest of the public. Fisher v. Vaughan Twp. 12 U. C. Q. B. 55; Beaudéan v. Cape Girardeau, 71 Mo. 392; Stricker v. Hillis (Idaho) 99 Pac. 831.

In such case he must resort to indictment. Beaudéan v. Cape Girardeau, supra.

A person living and doing business upon a street is not entitled to recover damages from the city for the obstruction of the street, where the injury which he suffers is common to the public generally. Hobson v. Philadelphia, 155 Pa. 131, 25 Atl. 1046. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Before a private person can sustain an action on account of a public nuisance in a street, he must show that the damage suffered by him differs from that suffered by the public in kind as well as in degree. Zettel v. West Bend, 79 Wis. 316, 24 Am. St. Rep. 715, 48 N. W. 379; Gold v. Philadelphia, 115 Pa. 184, 8 Atl. 386.

And a municipal corporation charged with the duty of keeping the highways in repair is not liable to the owner or occupant of property fronting thereon for the loss of his business resulting from the neglect of such duty. Gold v. Philadelphia, supra; Hale v. Weston, 40 W. Va. 313, 21 S. E. 742.

Nor can a person maintain an action against a city for obstructing a public street when his only special damage is that in driving to and from his garden he is compelled to take a more inconvenient and circuitous route. Zettel v. West Bend, supra.

And a traveler who is forced to abandon his nearest route by reason of defects and obstructions in it, and seek his destination by a longer and more circuitous route, whereby he suffers injury in his business, does not sustain such a special damage as to entitle him to an action against the party charged with the duty of keeping the way in proper condition. Farrelly v. Cincinnati, 2 Disney (Ohio) 516.

Nor does a person sustain a special injury not common to the public, which will give him a right of action against the city, on account of defects in that part of a street leading to his warehouse, by reason of the fact that his business suffers from the bad condition of the pavement, and his horses become strained and broken down, and his trucks racked and worn out in consequence thereof. Megargee v. Philadelphia, 153 Pa. 340, 19 L.R.A. 221, 25 Atl. 1130.

And where, for the protection of pedestrians on a street 30 feet wide and so steep that it was dangerous for vehicles to use it, the city erected platforms and steps occupying 14 feet in the width of the street on one side, a property owner on that side is not entitled to recover damages from the city for the obstruction of the street so that it could not be used by wagons. Hobson v. Philadelphia, supra.

So, a city placing a sewer in a street is not liable to an abutting owner because in doing the work it drained a spring on his land. Elster v. Springfield, 49 Ohio St. 82, 30 N. E. 274.

And the use of a street by an abutting owner for water pipes is not adverse to the right of the city to use the street for a sewer or other legitimate purpose; and no right by prescription to maintain the pipes vests in such owner, although he has enjoyed the use for more than twenty-one years and he is not entitled to recover damages accruing to him from the removal of the pipes. Ibid.

So, while the exercise by a city of a power to open and vacate its streets may tend to divert the public travel and direct it into new channels, it cannot subject the city to damages at the suit of a person outside of the city, whose interests are affected thereby. Prosser v. Ottumwa, 42 Iowa, 509.

And a person who owns a ferry outside of a city, from which public travel is diverted by the failure of the city to keep a street in repair, suffers no injury other than that shared by the general public, and is not entitled to recover damages therefor. Ibid.

So, an owner of a lot abutting on a street has the right of ingress to and egress from his lot, subject to the right of the municipality to grade and repair the street, provided it is done in a careful manner. Jones v. Henderson, 147 N. C. 120, 60 S. E. 894.

And, where a city authorized to grade a street so managed the work as to prevent any caving in of the lot of an abutting owner while the work was in progress, so that damage to the abutting owner resulted, not from a want of ordinary skill and caution, but from the fact that, by reason of the grading, the lot was left higher above the level of the street so as to be more difficult of access and therefore less valuable, no right of recovery for the injury exists against the municipal corporation. Meares v. Wilmington, 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 73, 49 Am. Dec. 412.

If an injury to a person resulting from the obstruction of a street is special and peculiar to him, however, he is entitled to redress by private action. Beaudean v. Cape Girardeau, 71 Mo. 392; Stricker v. Hillis (Idaho) 99 Pac. 831; Megargee v. Philadelphia, 153 Pa. 340, 19 L.R.A. 221, 25 Atl. 1130.

If he sustains a direct injury to his person or property, for instance, having a limb broken or a horse disabled, by reason of a street being out of repair, he may recover damages of the municipal corporation for such injury by an appropriate action. Hale v. Weston, 40 W. Va. 313, 21 S. E. 742; Brown v. Southbury, 53 Conn. 212, 1 Atl. 819.

Where the injury sustained is not shared by the general public, and is different in kind from that inflicted upon the general public, and is direct and substantial, an action may be maintained. Stricker v. Hillis, supra.

And, where the flooding of land caused by a change of grade of streets by a city and insufficient drains did not cause any damage to the community at large, the right of the person whose land was flooded, to recover for his injury, is not affected by the fact that three or four neighboring property holders had their lots flooded at the same time. Mayrant v. Columbia (S. C.) 64 S. E. 416.

So, the owner of land abutting upon a street or alley, one end of which is obstructed so that he cannot cross from his property to other streets in that direction, suffers a peculiar injury to himself by reason of the public nuisance, which entitles him to injunctive relief. Kalteyer v. Sullivan, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 488, 46 S. W. 288.

And, where a road is the only one which a person can use in getting out and into the place where he lives; and his buildings are so located that there is no other way of using them except through using the highway; and the obstruction of the highway would require him to move his buildings and would damage his orchard; and he would be compelled to build new ditches,—he suffers special injuries which entitle him to sue for the obstruction of the road. Stricker v. Hillis, supra.

And, where a city built a sewer in a street under legislative authority, and so obstructed the street in front of the premises of a grocer situated thereon as to interfere with his business, and to put him to extra trouble and expense in receiving and delivering goods, the injury to him is special and peculiar, and not one which he suffers in common with the rest of the public; and is one for which he may maintain an action for damages against the city. Williams v. Tripp 11 R. I. 447.

So, a municipal corporation may be held liable for negligently allowing a street gutter to fill up so that the water overflows and causes damage to an abutting property holder. Beach v. Scranton, 5 Lack. Leg. News, 25.

And if, by reason of the negligent and unskilful construction of a gutter by a municipality, or its negligent failure to keep the same in repair and free from obstructions, surface water is caused to flood a lot upon which it would not otherwise have flowed, the municipality is liable for the consequent damages, although the lot is below the grade of the street. Gilluly v. Madison, 63 Wis. 518, 24 N. W. 137.

And, where a city, in grading a street, did not use ordinary skill and caution in doing the work, so that the owner of an abutting lot was compelled to erect walls to prevent his lot from caving, which, with proper skill and caution it was the duty of the city to have erected, the lot owner is entitled to recover of the city therefor. Meares v. Wilmington, 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 73, 49 Am. Dec. 412.

Likewise, where a stone crusher owned by a city and operated under the direction of its superintendent of streets for the purpose of crushing rocks and stones to be used in keeping the streets of the city in proper condition for travel upon land belonging to the city, which land for a period of nearly three months was used exclusively in the preparation of materials for repairing the streets of the city, damages adjoining land by depositing dust thereon, the owner of such land may maintain an action therefor against the city. Waldron v. Haverhill, 143 Mass. 582, 10 N. E. 481.

And an adjacent house owner who is seriously annoyed by loud noises and offensive odors from hucksters selling their produce from wagons on the sidewalk in front of and near his house may enjoin the city from using or authorizing the use of the streets in question as a market-place or stand for the selling of goods, although the nuisance may be also a public one, to be remedied by indictment, and although the city did not create the nuisance. McDonald v. Newark, 42 N. J. Eq. 136, 7 Atl. 855.

So, several persons who are affected in the same manner by way of damage to their property by a public nuisance in a street may join as plaintiffs in an action to have the nuisance abated. Herrick v. Cleveland, 7 Ohio C. C. 470.

And, where the statute enjoins upon a city, and likewise upon the city council, and also upon the director of public works, the duty of keeping the streets free from public nuisances; and, an action is brought to enjoin a nuisance in certain streets of the city and to enforce a trust which the statute places in the city alone as to such streets,—the city is the proper defendant in such action. Ibid.

So, persons who have been damaged in their property rights by the failure of a city to perform its legal duty, or to carry out a trust as to streets, may sue the city to enjoin such continuing injury to them, and to enforce such trust, without first requesting the city solicitor to bring the action, provided the injury to them is different from that done to the public generally; but such persons cannot bring their action on behalf of the public generally without first applying to the solicitor to bring the action in compliance with statutory provisions therefor. Ibid.

And, where an obstruction is unlawful; and it has been specially injurious to an individual as an occupant of property abutting upon the street; and no legal authority for the creation or the continuance of the obstruction exists; and it is the duty of the municipal officers to remove it and in that manner restore the street to the state of usefulness and convenience which it was designed to afford; and they have refused to perform that duty,—he is entitled to a writ of mandamus for the purpose of setting these officers in motion and securing the redress which he is legally entitled to receive. People ex rel. O'Reilly v. New York, 59 How. Pr. 277.

2. Character, capacity, and condition.

The doctrine that an employee must take the risk of his employment, and the risk of the negligence of his fellow servants, does not apply to the case of a policeman or other employee of a city, injured by its negligence in failing, after ample notice, to remove an obstruction in a street, which causes the injury complained of. Klopper v. District of Columbia, 25 App. D. C. 41.

Policemen do not assume risks incident to defective sidewalks and highways in the city in which they are employed, and do not stand in the same relation to the city that employees of private corporations do to their employers, and are not subjected to the restricted rights of such relation. Galveston v. Hemmis, 72 Tex. 558, 13 Am. St. Rep. 823, 11 S. W. 29.

And a person who was injured by stepping into a hole in a sidewalk is not precluded from recovering against the city for his injury by the fact that he was a policeman, on the theory that he was required to keep in repair the streets within the district to which his employment was restricted, where he was a policeman for the special purpose of guarding from depredation the property of persons who paid him for his services, and it was not his duty to observe the condition of the sidewalk. Klopper v. District of Columbia, supra.

So, a fireman, in assuming the duties of his place, takes upon himself no risk arising out of negligence on the part of persons in charge of the streets in permitting defects or obstructions therein. Turner v. Indianapolis, 96 Ind. 51; Palmer v. Portsmouth, 43 N. H. 265.

And, where a hose cart ran against a stump in a street, and one of the firemen was injured, if the injury was caused by the combined negligence of both the driver and the city neither can plead the negligence of the other to avoid liability, the driver and the fireman not being fellow servants in such case. Brabon v. Seattle, 29 Wash. 6, 69 Pac. 365.

Cities are held to as great a degree of care in keeping and maintaining their streets in reasonably safe condition for public travel for the benefit of a fireman driving over them in the discharge of his duties as they are for that of any other traveler. Kansas City v. McDonald, 60 Kan. 481, 45 L.R.A. 429, 57 Pac. 123.

And a statutory duty imposed upon a city to keep its streets in repair and reasonably safe and fit for public travel extends to the members of the fire department the same as to others of the traveling public. Coots v. Detroit, 75 Mich. 628, 5 L.R.A. 315, 43 N. W. 17.

They take the usual risks of an employment of a dangerous character, but they do not assume the risks of the insecurity of streets resulting from the culpable negligence of the city. Farley v. New York, 152 N. Y. 222, 57 Am. St. Rep. 511, 46 N. E. 506.

So, the fact that a city having a paid fire department procured an accident policy for one of its firemen under a statutory provision authorizing it, and that the amount of the policy was paid to the widow of the fireman after his death, is no defense to an action brought by her against the city for its negligence in permitting the obstruction of a street, which caused the fireman's death. Kansas City v. McDonald, supra.

Nor does the fact that a person injured by an obstruction in a street was the servant of the city, driving a patrol wagon, impose upon him the duty to negative contributory negligence by averring in his petition, in an action against the city for the injury, that he did not know of the obstruction, since it was no part of his duty to examine streets and report upon their condition. Louisville v. Michels, 114 Ky. 551, 71 S. W. 511.

And a person employed and paid by one who has contracted with a town to light and take care of its street lamps is not a servant or agent of the town, so as to be deprived of a right to recover of the town where he fell over an obstruction across a sidewalk and was injured, on the theory that the injury which he sustained was caused by the neglect of some fellow servant in omitting to remove the obstruction. Eaton v. Woburn, 127 Mass. 270.

And, where coal was being delivered to a city through a coal hole in a sidewalk, covered by a grating which hung on hinges, which was thrown back against the building when coal was being delivered, and which was dangerous when not securely fastened; and it was left insecurely fastened by a person delivering a load of coal, and fell upon a person delivering another load of coal immediately afterwards,—the rule that a master is not liable to his servant for damages occasioned to him through the negligence or unskillfulness of his coservant has no application, and cannot be invoked to shield the city from the consequences of its negligence in maintaining the dangerous grating without a secure fastening. Galvin v. New York, 112 N. Y. 223, 19 N. E. 675, reversing 22 Jones & S. 295.

So, that a person injured by a defect or obstruction in a street was a member of the city council will not prevent him from recovering damages for the injury if he was not a member of the committee having supervision of highways, and was not charged with the duty or given the power to make repairs. Danville v. Robinson, 99 Va. 448, 55 L.R.A. 162, 39 S. E. 122.

And a provision of a city charter forbidding members of the common council to contract with the city is of no effect on the right of a member of the council to recover against the city in case he is injured by a defect or obstruction in a street. Ibid.

Nor does the fact that it may have been the duty of a railroad company having tracks in a public street, under its contract with the city, to construct and keep its tracks in a suitable and safe condition for those who have occasion to pass over the streets, discharge the city from its duty to the public, including employees of the railway company, to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition, or relieve it from liability for the consequences of its negligence in that respect. Kansas City v. Orr, 62 Kan. 61, 50 L.R.A. 783, 61 Pac. 397.

And, where a railroad is built upon a street by authority of the city, and an employee of the railway company, in the performance of his ordinary duty, walks over the street and is injured by a hole or defect in it, of which the city has or should have knowledge, the city is liable for the injury sustained. Ibid.

And a city the charter of which confers upon it the power to make and repair sidewalks, and imposes a duty upon every owner of real estate in front of whose premises a sidewalk or gutter has been heretofore made to keep the same at all times in suitable and proper repair, cannot escape liability for injuries sustained by a person who fell while passing along a defective sidewalk, by the fact that he was a lessee of the premises abutting upon the street at the place where he fell, in the absence of anything to show that he had, by the terms of his lease, agreed to keep the sidewalk in repair, or that he had erected a nuisance or obstruction which caused the injury. Avery v. Syracuse, 29 Hun, 537.

So, streets and sidewalks are made for persons in ill health as well as good health; and the fact that a person injured on an alleged defective sidewalk had many physical ailments before the injury is of no effect as to her right of recovery. Fulton v. Green, 103 Ill. App. 96.

And the liability of a city for an injury to a woman by an obstruction or defect in a street, and its duty to keep its streets in such repair that they will be reasonably safe to travel over, are not affected by the fact that her physical condition was such as to render her more susceptible to injury than people generally. Lewis v. Independence, 54 Mo. App. 183.

And a person who is crippled and necessarily uses crutches has the same right to use a street or walk as one not in that condition; but he should use a higher degree of care consequent to his greater liability to danger in passing thereon. Mt. Vernon v. Brooks, 39 Ill. App. 426.

Nor do the facts that a person is old, and that his sight is defective, deprive him of the right to travel in the streets and upon the walks, or prevent him from recovering for an injury caused by a hole or obstruction therein, provided he uses such reasonable care and caution as a person laboring under such infirmities would ordinarily exercise. Peach v. Utica, 10 Hun. 477.

A person of impaired vision, who still has sufficient power of sight to go with reasonable confidence of safety through the streets if kept in such condition as it is the duty of the municipal corporation to keep them, may recover for injuries sustained by reason of an excavation which a person of good sight might have seen and avoided. Davenport v. Ruckman, 10 Bosw. 20.

But a municipal corporation owes no greater duty to a blind person to keep its sidewalks in a safe condition, than to others who can see. Carter v. Nunda, 55 App. Div. 501, 66 N. Y. Supp. 1059.

And evidence of the color or race of a person injured by a hole in a sidewalk, and of specified acts derogatory of his character, are irrelevant and inadmissible in an action by him against the city for damages for the injury. Lord v. Mobile, 113 Ala. 360, 21 So. 366.

So, the duty of a city so to construct its streets as to make the same safe for the traveling public includes keeping them in such condition that children may be upon them with safety. Omaha v. Richards, 49 Neb. 244, 68 N. W. 528; Waverly v. Reesor, 93 Ill. App. 649.

Children are not restricted in passing and repassing upon the streets any more than adults; and the same rules are to be applied equally to all regulating the use of the highways for objects for which they are designed. Stinson v. Gardiner, 42 Me. 248, 66 Am. Dec. 281; Waverly v. Reesor, supra; Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355, 5 Am. St. Rep. 281, 5 S. E. 369; Reed v. Madison, 83 Wis. 171, 17 L.R.A. 733, 53 N. W. 547.

And a child seven years old, going along a street with its father, is a traveler for whose benefit it is the duty of the city to keep its streets free from defects and obstructions. Gulline v. Lowell, 144 Mass. 491, 59 Am. Rep. 102, 11 N. E. 723.

Wherever an adult may be without incurring the imputation of being an intruder a child may also go free from the like imputation; and the same circumstances which will justify a recovery by one who had reached years of discretion, and had sustained an injury from a defect or obstruction in a street while free from fault, would justify a recovery by an infant of such years as to be incapable of fault, provided its parents or guardians are also guilty of no neglect which can be imputed to the child. Indianapolis v. Emmelman, 108 Ind. 530, 58 Am. Rep. 65, 9 N. E. 155.

And negligence cannot be imputed to parents who permit a child of tender years to go to a place where it has a right to be, like a street, and at which there is no reason to suspect danger, and which is safe, unless another is guilty of a breach of duty. Ibid.

Reasonable safety of village or city streets, however, is what the law requires, and no more; and an instruction laying down the rule that anything that is not safe for children is unlawful, is improper. Shippey v. Au Sable, 65 Mich. 495, 32 N. W. 741.

But, if a city failed to use reasonable care in keeping a bridge and sidewalk over which a child, between eleven and twelve years of age, was passing when injured in proper repair; and the accident resulted from that cause; and the child was exercising such a degree of care and caution as, under the circumstances, might reasonably be expected from one of her age and intelligence,—the city is liable for the injury. Roanoke v. Shull, 97 Va. 419, 75 Am. St. Rep. 791, 34 S. E. 34.

And a city is not relieved, as a matter of law, from liability for negligently leaving a water tank in such a condition as to endanger the lives of children in the streets, by the fact that the person injured thereby was a child four years of age; in such case it must be left to the jury to determine whether the parents of the child have been guilty of negligence in suffering the child to be in the street. Chicago v. Major, 18 Ill. 349, 68 Am. Dec. 553.

The question of the rights of children to protection against dangerous conditions of a highway is considered in a note to Gibson v. Huntington, 22 L.R.A. 561, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

b. With reference to the use of the street.

1. General rules.

The general rule is that the duty of municipal corporations to keep their streets in repair is not limited to repair for travelers; they are to be kept in repair as streets for all the purposes to which streets may be lawfully devoted. Chicago v. Keefe, 114 Ill. 222, 55 Am. Rep. 860, 2 N. E. 267.

The duty of a city to keep its streets reasonably safe and convenient applies with reference to all those who rightfully use them, or who have occasion to pass over them for purposes of business, convenience, or pleasure. Kansas City v. Orr, 62 Kan. 61, 50 L.R.A. 783, 61 Pac. 397; Bath v. Blake, 97 Ill. App. 35; Waverly v. Reesor, 93 Ill. App. 649; Stinson v. Gardiner, 42 Me. 248, 66 Am. Dec. 281.

Or to gratify idle curiosity. Bath v. Blake and Waverly v. Reesor, supra.

And whether they pass with carriages or in other modes. Stinson v. Gardiner, supra.

A city is bound to keep its streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for the use of the public, and an instruction to this effect, in an action against the city for an injury from a defective sidewalk, is not rendered improper by the use of the words "all persons" instead of the words "the public" the two expressions being synonymous. Roanoke v. Shull, 97 Va. 419, 75 Am. St. Rep. 791, 34 S. E. 34.

And in keeping its sidewalks reasonably safe is a duty of a municipal corporation relative not only to travelers but to any person lawfully upon a sidewalk using it for purposes for which sidewalks are designed. Columbus v. Anglin, 120 Ga. 785, 48 S. E. 318.

So, under a statute providing that every public road or street shall be kept in repair by the corporation, and, on default the corporation shall be civilly responsible for all damages sustained by any person by reason of such default, while the primary purpose of the highway is for travel and passage, there are many other modes of use which are recognized as permissible and legitimate so long as public convenience is not interfered with; and a recovery thereunder is not barred by the fact that the highway was not being used for public travel and passage. Ricketts v. Markdale, 31 Ont. Rep. 610.

And, while a traveler's right to travel on the streets is a superior right, it is the duty of the traveler to take into consideration the rights not only of his fellow travelers but of others to use the highway for purposes other than those of travel, and to conform to those usages and customs which have grown up with the civilization or commerce of the city or country through which the road is constructed. Rome v. Sudeth, 116 Ga. 649, 42 S. E. 1032.

A municipal corporation cannot be held liable, however, for damages which are sustained by persons in consequence of improv-er or unauthorized usage of the highway, which occasions or contributes to accidents. Stickney v. Salem, 3 Allen, 374.

And the rule, probably based largely on the language of particular statutory provisions, has been frequently asserted and acted upon, that only persons using a sidewalk or highway for purposes of traveling thereon, when injured by defects or obstructions therein, are entitled to recover against the city. Reed v. Madison, 83 Wis. 171, 17 L.R.A. 733, 53 N. W. 547; Monmouth v. Sullivan, 8 Ill. App. 50; Blodgett v. Boston, 8 Allen, 237.

And a statutory provision making towns liable in damages to persons or property, caused by the insufficiency or want of repairs of a highway, relates only to damages sustained by a traveler using the highway as such, and not to damages caused to adjoining property by the overflowing of water caused by an obstruction of the highway. Harper v. Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365.

The term "traveler," as used to designate persons for whose use and benefit highways must be kept in proper condition, has no technical, legal signification; and, under proper instructions, it is for the jury to say whether a person receiving an injury was traveling upon the highway within the meaning of the statute. Hardy v. Keene, 52 N. H. 370.

And a person is traveling upon a highway, within the meaning of a statute with reference to keeping highways in proper condition for travel, when he is making a reasonable use of the highway as a way. Varney v. Manchester, 58 N. H. 430, 42 Am. Rep. 592.

Thus, a carpenter engaged in repairing a house with lumber deposited in the gutter in front of the house to be repaired, who is injured by stepping into a coal hole in the sidewalk while walking backwards in order to swing a long piece of timber around the trees to get it in position where he wishes to work with it, is a traveler upon the sidewalk, to whom the city owes the duty of keeping the sidewalk in a proper condition. Stege v. Milwaukee, 110 Wis. 484, 86 N. W. 161.

And, where a person, without fault or negligence on his part, is forced against a rail along the highway, or takes hold of it to aid his passage, or falls against it by accident, or has occasion to use it in any way in furtherance of the lawful and reasonable exercise of his right as a traveler; and, by reason of any defect or insufficiency, it gives way and causes an injury,—the municipality is liable to make compensation for the damages. Stickney v. Salem, supra.

But a person, who used a highway wholly for the purpose of horse racing, and in the same manner he would have used it if it had been a race course fitted and designed for the purpose, and met with disaster, cannot recover of the municipality merely because it had not afforded him and his horse a safe and more perfect track; but if he had been on his way to his business or home, or had been out riding for pleasure and recreation, and, while so doing, had speeded his horse to keep up with or pass other teams, he might still have been a traveler within the protection of the statute, in case of accident from a defective way. McCarthy v. Portland, 67 Me. 167, 24 Am. Rep. 23.

And, while a city must keep its streets in a reasonably passable condition for travelers, it is not bound to keep them safe and passable for horses which have escaped from the control of their owners or drivers. Moss v. Burlington, 60 Iowa, 438, 46 Am. Rep. 82, 15 N. W. 267.

And a municipal corporation is not bound so to construct an avenue that a runaway horse can come upon it at right angles and leave it with safety. Higgins v. Boston, 148 Mass. 484, 20 N. E. 105.

So, the act of a person of putting his head between the rail of a drawbridge and that of the permanent structure constituting the stationary part of the bridge, where the gate was opened before the draw was fully in place, so that his head would be squeezed by moving the draw a few inches to its proper position, was not making an ordinary use of the bridge for the purpose of travel; and where, in so doing, he received an injury, the accident was one of such an extraordinary character that the municipal corporation was under no obligation to guard against it, and cannot be held liable therefor. Nicholls v. New York, 128 App. Div. 532, 112 N. Y. Supp. 795.

2. Lotterting, deviation.

The use of a highway as a way, which constitutes traveling upon a highway, includes motion from one place to another more or less distant; but continuous movement is not necessary; such use does not cease with every cessation of locomotion. Varney v. Manchester, 58 N. H. 430, 42 Am. Rep. 502.

And travelers on a street have not only the right to pass, but also to stop and rest, on necessary and reasonable occasions, so that they do not obstruct the street or doorways, or wantonly injure them; and they are entitled to recover if injured by a defect in the street while so doing. Murray v. McShane, 52 Md. 217, 36 Am. Rep. 367.

And, where an excavation was made along the margin of a public sidewalk, and this was protected by a railing of which a gate formed a part, and a person leaned upon the gate and it gave way and he fell into the excavation, the fact that he intentionally leaned on the gate does not prevent a recovery on his part against the city for the injury; it is a question for the jury whether or not, under all the circumstances, he was making a proper and legitimate use of the gate in question. Jackson v. Boone, 93 Ga. 662, 20 S. E. 46.

In the above case the court refused to follow the holding in Stickney v. Salem, infra.

But, while it is the duty of a city to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition for persons traveling thereon; and this obligation extends to an unsafe wall standing by the side of the street, after notice of such fact,—a person injured by the falling of such wall cannot recover from the city for the injury where he was not using the street at the time for any purpose. Kiley v. Kansas City, 87 Mo. 103, 56 Am. Rep. 443.

And a person passing along a street already in use as a highway, but which is being graded, who, instead of taking the carriage way, heedlessly uses as a path an embankment of 2 or 3 feet in width raised by contractors to sustain water pipes in the center of the street, never intended, or used, or authorized to be used, as a footpath, upon which he falls and is injured, cannot recover of the municipal corporation for the injury. Carolus v. New York, 6 Bosw. 15.

Nor is a municipal corporation liable in damages to one who, while stopping in the highway for the purpose of conversation, leans against a defective railing and is injured by reason of its insufficiency. Stickney v. Salem, 3 Allen, 374.

And the fact that a railing along a highway was defective, and would have proved an insufficient barrier in case it became necessary for a traveler to use it for a legitimate object does not give a person who stopped in the highway for the purpose of conversation, and leaned against the railing, and was injured by reason of its insufficiency, a right of recovery against the city. Ibid.

But the act of a person passing along a public street, of stopping to converse with another, and leaning against the railing of a bridge that forms a part of the highway, thus bringing about a fall because of a defect in the railing, does not per se and on the ground that he was not using the bridge for its proper purpose, forfeit the protection from injury that is enjoined upon cities properly to construct and keep in repair their streets. Whitewright v. Taylor, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 486, 57 S. W. 311.

Nor can a person who, on Decoration Day, went into a street to see a procession form, and stood there from three to five minutes near a pile of lumber, which fell on him and injured him, be said, as matter of law, to have been traveling upon the highway, within the meaning of the statute. Varney v. Manchester, supra.

So, a temporary or momentary withdrawal by a traveler from and a stoppage outside of the limits of a highway with intent to return to it and pursue his journey does not prevent him from being a traveler, entitled to recover for an injury caused by a defect in a highway. Ward v. North Haven, 43 Conn. 148.

And the mere fact that an obstructed or defective street was out of the way of the point at which the traveler was arriving, or that he might have taken a nearer way, does not affect his right to recover for an injury received, since it is the duty of the municipality to repair all its sidewalks. Clayton v. Brooks, 150 Ill. 97, 37 N. E. 574.

And, where a tenant of a building upon the corner of two intersecting streets found the entrance of his dwelling on one street locked, and returned and went around the corner to an entrance on the other side, and on his way stepped into a hole in the sidewalk and was injured, he was a traveler upon the street, within the meaning of a statute giving travelers the right to recover damages for injuries sustained by reason of any insufficiency or want of repair in a street. Strack v. Milwaukee, 121 Wis. 91, 98 N. W. 947.

Nor can the ulterior purpose of a traveler in crossing a bridge affect his right to have it in a reasonably safe condition for such use. Strong v. Stevens Point, 62 Wis. 255, 22 N. W. 425.

And a man whose team was injured while running away, by reason of the failure of the municipality to provide a sufficient railing to a bridge, is not deprived of the right to recover for the injury by the fact that at the time the horses were frightened they were not upon the highway, but were hitched upon the owner's premises, a short distance from it. Ward v. North Haven, supra.

And, where sections of the roofing of a building were piled upon a sidewalk leaning against a tree, and a person went to a hydrant near the sidewalk for the purpose of drawing a drink of water, and while in the act of doing so, standing with one foot on the ground and the other on the sidewalk, the section of the roof was blown over by the wind, and he was injured thereby, he is entitled to recover of the city for his injury, since he had the right to go to the hydrant for the purpose for which he went there. Duffy v. Dubuque, 63 Iowa. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 743, 18 N. W. 900.

But one who had voluntarily departed from the traveled way and turned aside from his journey for a purpose in no way connected with his passage over the highway was not a traveler thereon entitled to recover against the city for an injury alleged to have been caused by a defect, notwithstanding the fact that he had but shortly before been using the street for travel, and intended soon to resume his passage over it. O'Neil v. New Haven, 80 Conn. 154, 67 Atl. 487.

And a person who departs from the used part of a highway, and is injured while attempting to regain the highway, by reason of his horse balking and backing into a ditch or falling over a bank, cannot recover against the city for the injury. Hannibal v. Campbell, 30 C. C. A. 63, 57 U. S. App. 484, 86 Fed. 297.

And a person whose horse backed into a gulf some 20 feet from the traveled track of a highway cannot recover of the municipality for the injury received, where the backing into the gulf was not the result of an accident that occurred in using the highway for travel, but resulted from using a shed by the side of the highway in an interval of cessation from travel, and attempting to get back into the road after a voluntary departure from it. Sykes v. Pawlet, 43 Vt. 446, 5 Am. Rep. 295.

3. Play.

A person who, while using a highway simply for the purpose of play, meets with a personal injury by reason of a defect or obstruction therein, cannot maintain an action to recover damages therefor, against the municipality bound by law to keep the same in repair for the use of travelers. Blodgett v. Boston, 8 Allen, 237; Tighe v. Lowell, 119 Mass. 472.

And a child between three and four years old, permitted by her parents to go out into a public highway, who sat down upon the sidewalk near some stone which had been placed there to be used as curbstones, which were overturned by the act of other children playing there, causing her injury, was not a traveler upon the highway entitled to recover of the city for the injury. Lyon v. Brookline, 119 Mass. 491.

Nor can a child using a sidewalk in going from one place to another, who was diverted from her purpose and stopped to play with other children, and was injured by an obstruction or defect on the sidewalk while engaged in play, recover of the city for the injury. Collins v. Janesville, 111 Wis. 348, 87 N. W. 241, 1087.

So, where the statute provides that highways are to be opened and kept in repair and amended from time to time for the use of travelers and their horses, carts, and carriages, when children appropriate a part of a road for their sport and cease to use it as a way for travel, the town or city through which the way passes is not responsible for injuries which may be received by any of the children so engaged, although the injuries may take place through a defect in the road. Stinson v. Gardiner, 42 Me. 248, 66 Am. Dec. 281.

But a child while using a sidewalk in going from one place to another is a traveler in the eye of the law, for whose benefit a city must keep its streets in a safe condition, though she is accompanied by children who are playing and incidentally indulges in some play or pastime, but is not thereby diverted from going straight to her destination. Collins v. Janesville, supra.

And a boy may be a traveler within the protection of the statute while running upon a street if going to or returning from school, but not if participating at the time in a game of ball being carried on in the highway. McCarthy v. Portland, 67 Me. 167, 24 Am. Rep. 23.

And, where several boys had been playing on their way home in a public street, and had stopped to rest; and one of them, while continuing on before the others, came in contact with an electric wire which had been allowed to hang within a few feet of the street, and received a severe shock,—the fact that, just before the injury, he had been using the street for the purpose of play did not divest him of the character of a traveler, for whose benefit streets are required to be kept reasonably safe. Graham v. Boston, 156 Mass. 75, 30 N. E. 170.

Nor does the act of rolling a hoop on a sidewalk while going to meet playmates prevent a child from being a traveler, entitled to recover for injuries from defects or obstructions in the walk, where the playing with the hoop does not divert the child from going straight on toward her destination. Reed v. Madison, 83 Wis. 171, 17 L.R.A. 733, 53 N. W. 547.

And a boy seven years of age, going along the street with his father, does not cease to be a traveler for whose benefit it is the duty of the city to keep the street free from defects and obstructions, when he steps aside for an instant to clasp in play a post in the highway and almost in his path. Gulline v. Lowell, 144 Mass. 491, 59 Am. Rep. 102, 11 N. E. 723.

The prevailing rule, independent of statutory provisions, however, would seem to be that persons using streets for recreation and pleasure or through mere idle curiosity, when they do not impinge upon the rights of others to use them, are within the protection of the law while using them, and entitled to have them in a reasonably safe condition, to the same extent as those who are passing along them as travelers in the pursuit of their daily avocations. Chicago v. Keefe, 114 Ill. 222, 55 Am. Rep. 860, 2 N. E. 267; Birmingham v. Dorer, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 69.

And that it is not unlawful, wrong, or negligent for children to play upon a sidewalk; and, where a child was injured in consequence of an unlawful obstruction on a sidewalk, it is not a defense that the child was playing upon the street instead of using it for ordinary purposes of travel. McGuire v. Spence, 91 N. Y. 303, 43 Am. Rep. 668; Augusta v. Tharpe, 113 Ga. 152, 38 S. E. 389; Chicago v. Keefe, supra; Caskey v. La Belle, 101 Mo. App. 596, 74 S. W. 113; Straub v. St. Louis, 175 Mo. 413, 75 S. W. 100; Birmingham v. Dorer, supra; Ricketts v. Markdale, 31 Ont. Rep. 610.

And this is so though the playing was not merely incidental to the use of the way as a traveler. Augusta v. Tharpe, supra.

A child may be lawfully on a sidewalk for play; and the municipality owes the same duty to have it in a reasonably safe state of repair in respect to such use by a child, that it does in respect to the use of persons passing over it in going to and from their places of business and abode. Bath v. Blake, 97 Ill. App. 35; Waverly v. Reesor, 93 Ill. App. 649; Chicago v. Keefe and Caskey v. La Belle, supra.

Within this rule, a city guilty of negligence in leaving for some time a precipitous bluff in a street, which caved in and killed a child who was playing in the street, cannot avoid liability in a suit by the parents on the ground that the child was a trespasser. Vicksburg v. McLain, 67 Miss. 4, 6 So. 774; Donoho v. Vulcan Iron Works, 75 Mo. 401, affirming 7 Mo. App. 447.

And, where an embankment on the side of a road was adopted by the city and maintained as a barrier to prevent travelers from driving into a creek, and the bank became dangerous, and a person was killed by falling off of it, the liability of the city therefor is not affected by the fact that the person killed, who was a child four years and five months old, was out of the beaten path, and there for play only. Gibson v. Huntington, 38 W. Va. 177, 22 L.R.A. 561, 45 Am. St. Rep. 853, 18 S. E. 447.

So, the act of a boy in running along a sidewalk to escape from snowballs thrown by others is not contributory negligence which will prevent him from recovering from the city for an injury received by falling, while so running, into an excavation in a street, made by the city. Penrose v. Fehr, 113 Mich. 517, 67 Am. St. Rep. 479, 71 N. W. 862.

And a city which, while constructing a bridge, made an excavation in the bed of a shallow stream where it was crossed by a street, and constructed a levee from the bank of the pit, and, knowing that children of persons residing near were accustomed to play in the vicinity, left it in the absence of workmen without safeguard of any kind, by reason of which a child five years old, while at play, without fault on the part of its parents, fell in and was drowned, is liable in an action for damages therefor. Indianapolis v. Emmelman, 108 Ind. 530, 58 Am. Rep. 65, 9 N. E. 155.

Nor does the fact that a child receiving a serious and permanent injury from stumbling and falling over a gas box located in a sidewalk was engaged in innocent play upon the sidewalk adjacent to its home constitute contributory negligence which will bar a recovery for the injury. District of Columbia v. Boswell, 6 App. D. C. 402.

A man of full age, playing with a dog on a sidewalk, and not going anywhere, however, is not so using the walk as to entitle him to recover for injuries caused by defects or obstructions therein. Jackson v. Greenville, 72 Miss. 220, 27 L.R.A. 527, 48 Am. St. Rep. 553, 16 So. 382.

And, where the obstructed part of a street was closed against travel and guarded against accident to persons in the ordinary use of the street, and a child was attracted by machinery employed in the construction or operation of a work thereon, and thereby induced to climb upon or over the barriers or guards into the excavation, no recovery can be had for an injury received by him. Hamilton v. Detroit, 105 Mich. 514, 63 N. W. 511.

Nor is a boy ten years of age, who, while running along by the side of a slowly moving train of cars with his hand on one of the cars, stumbled over blocks of stone which had been placed in the middle of a street crossing by the railroad company, for the purpose of holding the safety gates in place when open, and was injured thereby, entitled to recover damages from the city therefor. Shannon v. Philadelphia, 185 Pa. 347, 39 Atl. 1117.

And, where a heavy counter belonging to a private individual was tilted up against a house and allowed to remain upon a sidewalk for several days, when it fell over and injured a child, and there was evidence showing that the child was playing upon it at the time, no recovery can be had against the city for the injury. King v. Troy, 21 N. Y. Week. Dig. 558.

4. Relative use of footways and carriage ways.

While ordinarily a municipal corporation would be liable to foot passengers only for holes or defects in its sidewalks, when such a sidewalk is devoted to the common use of vehicles and foot passengers it is under obligations to make the passage safe for both classes of travelers. Lacon v. Page, 48 Ill. 499.

And a traveler may use any part of the highway, and use it in such direction as may suit his convenience or taste, provided he therein conforms to all laws and well-settled rules connected with such use of the street. Stinson v. Gardiner, 42 Me. 248, 66 Am. Dec. 281; Dallas v. Webb, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 48, 54 S. W. 398.

And the liability of a municipal corporation for an injury caused by a hole in a street is not affected by the fact that the defect which caused the injury by frightening the horses of the person injured and causing them to run away was in that portion of the street set apart and intended as a sidewalk, when such portion, instead of being used for a footway alone, was devoted to the common use of both teams and foot passengers. Lacon v. Page, supra.

But municipal corporations are only required to keep their sidewalks reasonably safe for use in the usual manner. Chicago v. Kohlhof, 64 Ill. App. 349, affirmed in 192 Ill. 249, 85 Am. St. Rep. 335; 61 N. E. 446.

A city has power to designate portions of its streets to be used by horsemen and vehicles, and to reserve other portions thereof for the use of pedestrians, where horsemen and vehicles may not go, and prepare such portions of the street for such uses respectively; but no greater duty is cast upon the city than that it shall maintain the respective portions of streets in a reasonably safe condition for the purposes for which such portions thereof are respectively devoted. Kohlhof v. Chicago, 192 Ill. 249, 85 Am. St. Rep. 335, 61 N. E. 446.

And one who chooses to use the portion of a street designed for vehicles, instead of the portion designed for pedestrians, is under the duty to exercise sufficient care to avoid an obstacle which does not make the street dangerous for horsemen and vehicles, such as a 2 by 4 scantling lying flat on the surface of the driveway. Brown v. Chicago, 135 Ill. App. 126.

And a person using as a carriage way land dedicated for a foot way cannot recover against the city for an injury to his horse by an obstruction therein, though he uses ordinary care and skill in driving along the way, whether the dedication has been accepted or not. Hemphill v. Boston, 8 Cush. 195, 54 Am. Dec. 749.

But the designation of a portion of a street as a sidewalk for the use of footmen, and the preparation of the same for such use, do not deprive those who may desire to move goods or articles of personal property from buildings abutting on the street to or from vehicles in the roadway of the street at the edge of the sidewalk of that right. Kohlhof v. Chicago, supra.

And a person has the right to go upon the driveway of a street for the purpose of carrying a package to put it in the carriage of a friend who has stopped in the street a short distance from the curb stone; and where, in so doing, he steps in a hole in the driveway and is injured, the city is liable for the injury if it is caused by a defect that renders the driveway unsafe for usage as such. Finnegan v. Sioux City, 112 Iowa, 232, 83 N. W. 907.

But the use often made of sidewalks in loading or unloading goods or articles is not an ordinary use, to accommodate which the city is charged with the duty of constructing and maintaining a walk; and the right of footmen to use the sidewalk is superior to the right of such use. Kohlhof v. Chicago, supra.

And the moving of a safe weighing 1,400 pounds over a wooden sidewalk raised several feet above the ground is an extraordinary use, and not such as is contemplated by law. Chicago v. Kohlhof, 64 Ill. App. 349, affirmed in 192 Ill. 249, 85 Am. St. Rep. 335, 61 N. E. 446.

Nor is a pedestrian injured by stepping into a negligently constructed grating in a street deprived of his right of recovery against the city by the fact that it was away from the usual street crossings provided there. Dallas v. Webb, supra.

A pedestrian is not confined to the foot-way crossing, but, if ignorant of any danger, may cross a street at any point that suits his convenience, without imputation of negligence. Louisville v. Johnson, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 685, 69 S. W. 803.

And a person going from a sidewalk toward a street car for the purpose of boarding the car, and following a ditch dug for the purpose of laying water pipes to supply the inhabitants with water, is not using the street for an illegitimate purpose, or in a way which would deprive her of the ordinary rights of travelers. Fox v. Chelsea, 171 Mass. 297, 50 N. E. 622.

So, a traveler has the right to cross a street in the night at a place other than at a crossing; and if, in so doing, she steps into a hole made by the removal of an electric-light pole near the pathway used for foot passengers, which has been permitted to remain with notice for some time, she is entitled to recover of the city for the damages sustained. Pana v. Taylor, 56 Ill. App. 60.

But a person crossing a street at night at a point other than at a crossing, who is injured by stepping into a hole or depression in the pavement, cannot recover against the city for the injury if the street is not sufficiently out of repair to be dangerous to horses or vehicles. Belling v. Hamilton, 3 Ont. L. Rep. 318.

A municipal corporation is not liable, however, where an injury was sustained by a party using the road for the purpose of passing to and from his private way or path, or his own land, although it was caused by a defect within the limits of the highway as located by law, but outside of the part of the road used for public travel. Lynch v. Boston, 186 Mass. 148, 71 N. E. 301.

And one who, in approaching a public street over private property, which he has no right to use as a traveled way, and over which the city has no control, is precipitated over an embankment into an excavation in the street and injured, cannot recover therefor from the city on the ground that the city failed to provide proper danger signals along such excavated street. Mulvane v. South Topeka, 45 Kan. 45, 23 Am. St. Rep. 706, 25 Pac. 217; Chicago v. McKenna, 114 Ill. App. 270.

Nor is a person who receives an injury while crossing planking placed over a gutter within the located limits of a public street, but outside of the wrought portion thereof, put there to facilitate access to and from the street and a private way or court, a traveler upon the street, who is entitled to maintain an action against the town liable to keep it in repair. Philbrick v. Pittston, 63 Me. 479.

But the duty of cities and towns to keep their streets and highways safe and convenient extends to that part wrought for travel of both the street and sidewalk, and protects alike travelers who pass along it and those who have occasion to pass across it in order to reach adjoining premises. Street v. Holyoke, 105 Mass. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 500.

And the liability of a city to a person who fell into a trapdoor left open in an area way not wholly within the street is not affected by the fact that the person injured by falling did not approach it from the street, but from abutting property, where the opening was such as to constitute a menace to all who used the street. Earl v. Cedar Rapids, 126 Iowa. 361, 106 Am. St. Rep. 361, 102 N. W. 140.

So, where a person drove into a city after dark, following a way that had been used by the public for years, although it had never been laid out as a road, and turned from that way into a street which the city was at the time grading and had excavated the same perpendicularly to a depth of 3 feet at the intersection of this road, placing no barriers or lights at or near the same, the city was guilty of negligence rendering it liable to the person injured. Omaha v. Randolph, 30 Neb. 699, 46 N. W. 1013.

And, where a person traveling upon a sidewalk stepped from the sidewalk bed over the curb into the gutter about 10 or 15 feet from the cross walk, with the intention of going diagonally to the cross walk, and fell over a board that was placed in the gutter by the agents of the city, it is a question for the jury, in an action against the city for the injury, whether it was reasonable or negligent for the city so to dispose of the material of an old sidewalk; and whether plaintiff was negligent in crossing the street at the place and in the manner adopted under the circumstances. Finch v. Bangor, 133 Mich. 149, 94 N. W. 738.

But, while a municipal corporation is not required to erect barriers or place danger signals to prevent persons from receiving injury in entering its streets by private ways, it is bound to provide such guards or signal lights in the streets at dangerous places to prevent travelers from receiving injuries in entering such streets by a usually traveled public road, although such road was never laid out as a highway or street. Omaha v. Randolph, supra.

In the above case, Goodwin v. Des Moines, 55 Iowa, 67, 7 N. W. 411, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the person injured entered the street by a private way.

5. Use of bicycles and automobiles.

The use of a bicycle as a conveyance does not prevent the maintenance of an action by the user against the city for an injury resulting from a defect or obstruction in the street, if at the time of the accident he was using ordinary care. Clinton v. Revere, 195 Mass. 151, 80 N. E. 813; Spring v. Williamstown, 186 Mass. 479, 71 N. E. 949; Fox v. Clarke, 25 R. I. 515, 65 L.R.A. 234, 57 Atl. 305, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 548.

If the highway was unsafe for ordinary purposes of travel. Fox v. Clarke, supra.

Or where the defect or obstruction was one for which the town or city would be liable in damages to a traveler passing over the way on foot, or on horseback, or in any vehicle of the usual kinds. Spring v. Williamstown, supra.

And a city is liable to a person injured while riding a tandem bicycle at night with a lady in front of him, by striking a dangerous obstruction in the street, where he had no knowledge of it, and could not, by ordinary care, have discovered it in time to avoid the injury. Louisville v. Keher, 117 Ky. 841, 79 S. W. 270.

But reasonable care in the construction and maintenance of highways for ordinary vehicles, such as wagons and carriages, is the measure of the duty resting upon municipalities; and, while a bicycle is a vehicle, municipal corporations are not required to keep their streets in a reasonably safe condition for bicycles. Leslie v. Grand Rapids, 120 Mich. 28, 78 N. W. 885.

And a bicycle is not a carriage, within the meaning of a statute requiring towns and cities to keep highways in repair so that the same may be reasonably safe and convenient for travelers with their horses, teams, and carriages; and the rider of a bicycle cannot recover for injuries received by him, caused by a depression in a road. Richardson v. Danvers, 176 Mass. 413, 50 L.R.A. 127, 79 Am. St. Rep. 320, 57 N. W. 688; Fox v. Clarke, supra.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The measure of the responsibility of a city to a person who avails himself of a privilege granted by ordinance to ride a bicycle upon the sidewalks of certain streets is precisely the same as it is to pedestrians, the city being required to keep its sidewalks in such a condition as to make them reasonably safe for pedestrians, and being under no obligation to go further and make them reasonably safe for bicyclists. Morrison v. Syracuse, 53 App. Div. 490, 65 N. Y. Supp. 939, affirmed in 175 N. Y. 523, 67 N. E. 1085; Gagnier v. Fargo, 11 N. D. 73, 95 Am. St. Rep. 705, 88 N. W. 1030.

A city bound by law to use reasonable diligence to keep its sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition, which gives permission to ride bicycles thereon, does not thereby assume toward a rider of a bicycle on a sidewalk any other or different obligation than that already existing. Morrison v. Syracuse, 45 App. Div. 421, 61 N. Y. Supp. 313.

It performs its duty toward persons using the sidewalks for bicycle riding when it keeps such sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for travel thereon by pedestrians. Gagnier v. Fargo, supra.

And, where a woman was riding a bicycle upon a sidewalk under permission from the city, and, in an effort to pass pedestrians upon the sidewalk, she ran into a depression in the street about 4 inches in depth and was thrown and injured, the depression constituting a defective condition of the walk of such a character that a person unfamiliar with it would probably have met with an accident while attempting to walk over it on a dark night, but could have passed it with safety by daylight, she cannot recover of the city for the injury where she met with the accident in the daytime, since, under the circumstances, she would probably have escaped injury had she been on foot. Morrison v. Syracuse, 53 App. Div. 490, 65 N. Y. Supp. 939, affirmed in 175 N. Y. 523, 67 N. E. 1085.

Nor is a tricycle within the scope of an ordinance prohibiting the use of all vehicles known by the general name of bicycles on sidewalks; and the duty of a city to keep a sidewalk in suitable condition to walk over extends to a person rightfully riding on the walk on a tricycle; the test of the city's liability to him is the same as if he had been walking. Wheeler v. Boone, 108 Iowa, 235, 44 L.R.A. 821, 78 N. W. 909.

So, a traveler is not precluded from recovery for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction in a highway by the fact that the accident occurred while he was riding in an automobile, if the defect was one dangerous to ordinary travel. Baker v. Fall River, 187 Mass. 53, 72 N. E. 336.

But a municipal corporation owes no special duty with reference to its streets to those who ride in automobiles; the streets of a city may be as freely used by them as by pedestrians or travelers, but it is at all times bound to exercise due care to keep them safe and free from dangerous defects. Corcoran v. New York, 188 N. Y. 131, 80 N. E. 660.

An automobile is not a carriage, within the meaning of a statute requiring towns and cities to keep their highways reasonably safe and convenient for travelers with their horses, teams, and carriages; and a town is not liable for failure to make special provisions required for the safety of automobiles if its ways are reasonably safe and convenient for travel generally. Doherty v. Ayer, 197 Mass. 241, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 816, 83 N. E. 677.

And a town is not liable for an accident to an automobile beyond the limits of a highway on a surface of sand level with the road, although the marks of travel have been obliterated by the alteration of the road, since the town is not required to keep the adjoining land in repair, no such dangerous condition existing as requires the erection of a barrier to mark the limits of the way. Ibid.

The question of the right of cyclists to recover for injuries caused by defective highways is considered in a note to Jones v. Williamsburg, 47 L.R.A. 298.

XV. Notice of claim and cause of injury.

Rules of law with reference to notice of claim and cause of injury, given or required to be given, by a person injured by an obstruction in a street, to the municipal corporation, are general, applying to other torts of municipal corporations and injuries inflicted by them, as well as to injuries caused by obstructions in streets, and are more properly a part of the subject of notice or presentment of claim against municipal corporations for injury than that of liability of municipal corporations for defects and obstructions in streets; and cases involving or depending upon these rules have therefore been omitted from this note, including only such as are specially affected by the fact that they pertain to defects or obstruction in streets.

The legislative body of a state may constitutionally provide in a city charter, as a condition of the right to recover damages for injuries caused by a defective or obstructed street, that a claim therefor shall be presented to the council, and, in case of its disallowance, an appeal taken with bond for costs. Morrison v. Eau Claire, 115 Wis. 538, 95 Am. St. Rep. 955, 92 N. W. 280; Schigley v. Waseca (Minn.) 19 L.R.A. (N. S.) 689, 118 N. W. 259.

And a statute providing that cities of specified classes shall not be liable for injuries from defects or obstructions upon streets, unless notice in writing of the defect causing the injury shall have been given in a prescribed manner, is not in contravention of a bill of rights guaranteeing to every person a remedy for any injury done him in his lands, goods, person, or reputation. This constitutional guaranty is not a guaranty of a remedy for every species of injury in respect to such matters, but only for such as result from an invasion or infringement of a legal right, or a failure to discharge a legal duty or obligation. Goddard v. Lincoln, 69 Neb. 594, 96 N. W. 273.

Nor is such a provision in violation of a constitutional inhibition against special legislation. Cunningham v. Denver, 23 Colo. 18, 58 Am. St. Rep. 212, 45 Pac. 256.

And such a provision is not repealed by implication by the enactment of a statute permitting joinder in such case of the city and others primarily liable for an obstruction in a street causing an injury, but remain applicable at least to proceedings against the city, where no other liability is asserted and no joinder attempted. Morrison v. Eau Claire, supra.

So, the conditions upon which a municipality shall be liable for damages to individuals caused by the defective condition of a street or sidewalk is a matter which belongs properly to the government of municipalities, and may be determined and regulated by a home-rule charter. Schigley v. Waseca, supra.

And a charter provision that no suit of any nature whatever shall be maintained against the city, unless the plaintiff therein shall aver and prove that, previous to the filing of his petition, he applied to the city council in writing for redress, satisfaction, compensation, or relief as the case may be, and that the same was, by the city council, refused, is applicable to a claim against a city for injuries received by colliding with an obstruction in a street; and such application is a condition precedent to recovery. Luke v. El Paso (Tex. Civ. App.) 60 S. W. 363.

So, failure of a city to remove from an otherwise sufficient sidewalk a pile of rubbish not originally placed there by its act or consent is a failure to perform its statutory duty to keep the highway reasonably safe for travel, and does not give rise to any common-law liability as for the maintenance of a nuisance for injuries resulting therefrom to a traveler on the walk; and requirements of the city charter of filing a claim and taking an appeal from its disallowance are conditions of the right to damages, and of the city's liability in an action for injuries so resulting, and must be alleged in the complaint. Morrison v. Eau Claire, supra.

And the intent of a charter provision of a city that, if any claim for unliquidated damage is made against the city for injuries to person or property from any defects in the sidewalks and streets, the claimant shall present the same to the common council within sixty days after the injury; and, if said claim arises from injury received by reason of any defect in sidewalks, streets, highways, etc., the claimant shall give notice to the city by written statement filed with the city clerk within ten days, specifying certain named things, was to provide for two notices in all cases of injuries from defects in sidewalks, streets, etc.: The one designed as a preliminary notice to state briefly the location of the defect and its general character, and the other designed as a specific notice to specify in detail the plaintiff's claim. Moulter v. Grand Rapids (Mich.) 15 Det. L. N. 970, 118 N. W. 919.

But the demands spoken of in a statutory provision that all demands against a city shall be presented to and audited by the city council in accordance with such regulations as they may by law prescribe; and upon the allowance of any demand, the mayor shall draw a warrant upon the treasurer for the same,—are those arising out of the ordinary transactions of the city, and which may be examined and compared with the vouchers and audited, and not those resulting from a violation of municipal duties by failure to keep streets and sidewalks in a proper condition for travel. Sutton v. Snohomish, 11 Wash. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 847, 39 Pac. 273; Snyder v. Albion, 113 Mich. 275, 71 N. W. 475; Cropper v. Mexico, 62 Mo. App. 385.

And a charter provision of a city that all accounts or demands shall be verified by an affidavit by the comptroller before the same shall be acted upon or paid does not apply to a claim for damages resulting from a defect in a street or sidewalk, damage claimed for tort not being an account or demand within the meaning of such a provision. Hill v. Fond du lac, 56 Wis. 242, 14 N. W. 25.

Nor does a statutory provision requiring demands against a city to be presented for audit and allowance before suit brought thereon include actions or claims for personal torts, such as actions and claims for injuries by defective sidewalks. Barrett v. Hammond, 87 Wis. 654, 58 N. W. 1053.

And a claim against a village for damages for an injury caused by a defect in a street is not required to be audited under an act requiring the auditing of claims for expenditures made on behalf of the village, or for services rendered or goods or materials furnished to the village. Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43.

Nor does a charter provision of a city that the common council has exclusive power to appropriate for any item of a city expenditure and provide for the payment of debts and expenses of the city; and no claim shall be paid until it is presented and allowed by the common council,—apply to a claim of damages for injuries received in consequence of a defective sidewalk. Sheridan v. Salem, 14 Or. 328, 12 Pac. 925.

And a claim of damages for injuries caused by an excavation in a street made by direction of the water department of the city is not a claim against the city growing out of the water department, within the meaning of a charter provision that all claims against the city growing out of the water department shall be presented to the water board for examination before they shall be presented to the common council for audit. Brusso v. Buffalo, 90 N. Y. 679.

Where the statute requires that a notice of injury received from an obstruction in a street shall be given describing the time, place, cause, and extent of the damage or injury, however, the notice should point as directly and plainly to the place of injury as is reasonably practicable, having regard to its character and surroundings. Johnson v. Fargo, 15 N. D. 525, 108 N. W. 243.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But a notice to a city of an injury received from a defective or obstructed street need not point out the precise location of the mound, or stone, or hole, or depression that caused the injury; it is sufficient to specify the street where it occurred and the particular part of it, and to specify that the defective portion extended from one named place to another. McDowell v. Auburn, 126 App. Div. 173, 110 N. Y. Supp. 941.

And a notice to a city that a person was injured by falling on a cross walk at the intersection of two streets named sufficiently locates the place of injury, where it appears that there was but one cross walk at the intersection: Buchmeier v. Davenport, 138 Iowa, 623, 116 N. W. 695.

And a notice of claim for an injury by a defect in a street, describing the place as a defective sluice across the highway between two named points, is sufficient though there were three sluiceways between those points, of which the middle one only was defective. Brown v. Southbury, 53 Conn. 212, 1 Atl. 819.

So, a notice given to a city of injuries received at a designated time while walking along the sidewalk on a designated street, by falling into an open gully or trench running across the sidewalk, sufficiently states the place of the accident, though the designated street is over a mile in length, where it appears that there was only one place where there was a gully or trench running across the sidewalk. Purdy v. New York, 126 App. Div. 320, 110 N. Y. Supp. 822.

And a notice stating that the plaintiff was passing over the sidewalk of a street between two other named streets, and stepped in a hole in the sidewalk which was in a bad state of repair, is sufficient, although a space of two city blocks is described, there being no proof that a hole existed at more than one spot in the space described. Lincoln v. O'Brien, 56 Neb. 761, 77 N. W. 76.

And a notice of injury by falling into an open trench dug by workmen employed by the city for the purpose of laying water pipes, which does not specify the place of injury, except by stating that the plaintiff fell into this trench, where it appears that the trench was so long as to make the specification indefinite, is not defective as calculated to mislead the city, where it appears that, on the day following the accident, the superintendent of waterworks was notified of it, and the place where the plaintiff fell was pointed out to him. Norwood v. Somerville, 159 Mass. 105, 33 N. E. 1108.

Nor is a notice of an injury from a defect or obstruction in a highway, containing a variance of a few feet in describing the place of the accident, thereby rendered void where there was no intention to mislead, and the city was not in fact misled, and, through other statements and notices, attention was directly called to the exact place of injury. Hughes v. Lawrence, 160 Mass. 481, 36 N. E. 485; Johnson v. Fargo, supra.

And evidence that the mayor's attention was called to the exact place of an accident three days after it happened is admissible in an action against the city for the injury, to show that the city was not misled by a defective description of the place in the notice of injury. Owen v. Ft. Dodge, 98 Iowa, 281, 67 N. W. 281.

And, where a notice of a defect in a cross walk located the same and the place of the injury about 25 feet north of a named store, and the complaint located the same at a point about 10 feet north of the northwest corner of that store, the variance is not fatal; and the notice is not so defective or uncertain as to defeat the action for want of a proper notice. Barrett v. Hammond, supra.

So, a notice of an injury caused by a defect in a street, describing the location of the defect as a hole in the sidewalk situated between two named buildings shown to be about 315 feet apart, states the location with sufficient certainty to warrant the admission of the paper in evidence to prove statutory notice. Hutchings v. Sullivan, 90 Me. 131, 37 Atl. 883.

And, where the statute provides that notice to a municipality of injury happening on a highway that is out of repair shall not be deemed insufficient solely by reason of any inaccuracy or failure to describe the place and the insufficiency or want of repair, in the absence of any showing that the defendant was misled in fact, of an intention to mislead on the part of the plaintiff, a notice is sufficiently particular where it describes the defect as consisting of missing planks from the sidewalk on the easterly side of the named street in front of premises, giving the street number and the name of the owner, even though such premises were 60 feet in length. Collins v. Janesville, 107 Wis. 436, 83 N. W. 695.

And a notice of injury, given to a city, stating that the person injured received her injuries while walking along the sidewalk on the west side of a named street, and attempting to cross an intersecting street at the southeast corner of the intersection, by reason of a defect in the crossing at said point, sufficiently describes the place of the injury, though it intended to refer to the corner bounded on the east by one street and on the south by the other, there being no evidence that there was any other crossing over the other street at or near that point. Owen v. Ft. Dodge, supra.

So, a notice of injury from a defect in a street, required by a charter provision to state the place where the injury or damage occurred, is not rendered invalid by a slight variation of the name of the street, and by giving the place as being a short distance away from the actual place, where, within all reasonable probability, the ordinary use of the eye would readily have led to the discovery of the defect or obstruction causing the injury. Kolb v. Fon du Lac, 118 Wis. 311, 95 S. W. 149.

And a notice of claim against a city, reciting that the person injured fell through a sidewalk owing to its defective condition, into a hole thereunder about 7 or 8 feet deep, is not subject to the objection that it describes the hole under the sidewalk only, and not the defect in the walk. Falldin v. Seattle, 50 Wash. 561, 97 Pac. 658.

A notice given to a city that the cause of an injury on a highway was a pile of stones extending into the traveled part in such grotesque and unusual shape that they constituted a nuisance by their liability to frighten horses, however, is not sufficient to sustain a claim that the injury was caused by collision with the pile of stones. Bowes v. Boston, 155 Mass. 344, 15 L.R.A. 365, 29 N. E. 633.

And, under a statute providing that cities of a certain class shall not be liable for injuries unless notice of the time and place at which the injuries were received is served on the corporation council, notice that a person was injured while walking along the sidewalk on a named street in a named place, by falling into an opening, gulley, or trench running across said sidewalk does not sufficiently designate the place of the accident, where it appears that the designated street is at least a mile long. Purdy v. New York, 193 N. Y. 521, 86 N. E. 560, reversing 126 App. Div. 320, 110 N. Y. Supp. 122.

But a notice of a defect in a highway upon which a traveler was injured, in conformity to a statute requiring such notice, which is sufficient to describe the place in other respects, is not invalid because it states that the injury was caused by loose stones, when it was in fact caused by a stone partly embedded in the road. Salladay v. Dodgeville, 85 Wis. 318, 20 L.R.A. 541, 55 N. W. 696.

And, where a person steps into a drain running across the sidewalk of a street in a city, and stumbles and falls over an embankment by the side of the street, which is unprotected by a railing, into an adjacent sewer, and is injured, notice to the city, naming the lack of a railing as the cause of his injury, is a sufficient compliance with the statutory requirement of notice of the cause of the injury. Grogan v. Worcester, 140 Mass. 227, 4 N. E. 230.

So, a charter provision requiring a person claiming damages for injury on a sidewalk to give notice to the city, stating fully how the injury occurred, is sufficiently complied with by a notice stating the injury to have been caused by the torn-up and impassable condition of the sidewalk, and the absence of any lights or warning of impending danger. Denver v. Bacon (Colo.) 96 Pac. 974.

And a written notice to the mayor and city council of a city, given more than five days before an injury caused by a defective sidewalk, that said walk for a designated space of two blocks, including the point where the injury occurred is in bad shape, and that people are tripping up and falling occasionally, and requesting an acknowledgment of the receipt of the communication in order that proper damages may be secured should accidents occur thereon, is sufficient under a statute requiring actual notice in writing describing fully the accident and the nature and extent of the injury complained of and the defects causing the injury, where the proof clearly shows that the sidewalk over the entire space referred to in the notice was at the time in a defective and generally dangerous condition. Ruth v. Omaha (Neb.) 118 N. W. 1084.

Nor does a substitute petition in an action against a city, alleging the general dangerous condition of the walk, when the original petition complained of specific defects, plead a new cause of action, for which no notice had been given to the city, under a statute requiring notice. Woods v. Lisbon, 138 Iowa, 402, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 886, 116 N. W. 143.

And, where there was a depression in a sidewalk an inch deep at the deepest place; and water collected in this depression and froze there and remained while the rest of the walk was clear; and a person fell on the ice and was injured; and the ice was smooth and did not of itself constitute a defect, but the depression as it naturally collected water and caused ice to remain in it constituted the defect,—a notice stating as the cause of the injury that the walk was out of repair and was coated with ice and very slippery and unsafe, by reason of which the traveler fell, is sufficient. Spellman v. Chicopee, 131 Mass. 443.

A statutory provision that no city shall be liable for damages arising from defective streets and sidewalks, etc., within such city, unless actual notice in writing of the accident or injury complained of, with a statement of the nature and extent thereof, and the time and place where the same occurred, shall have been given to designated officers within a named period, however, does not require an injured person to include within his notice a statement of the nature and extent of both the accident and the injury; but reference to either with full particulars as to the nature or extent thereof satisfies the statute. Bemis v. Omaha (Neb.) 116 N. W. 31.

So, where a city charter provides that, where any action is brought against the city to recover damages for death or personal injuries caused by defective streets or sidewalks, the plaintiff must show that notice in writing of the place where the accident occurred out of which the claim arises was given to a designated officer within forty-eight hours after the happening thereof in order to maintain such action, the service of a notice by a person who was disabled from doing business by the accident, at the earliest moment she was able to do so, substantially complies with the statute; and a delay of about twenty-four hours in serving a notice will not defeat an action where, during the whole time between the accident and the notice, the claimant was incapable, by reason of her injuries, of transacting any business whatever with reference to the notice. Walden v. Jamestown, 79 App. Div. 433, 12 N. Y. Ann. Cas. 313, 80 N. Y. Supp. 65.

And a notice under a city charter absolving it from liability for injuries caused by a defective sidewalk unless notice of its unsafe condition shall have been given to the executive board a reasonable time before the accident, given two months before the accident, to a clerk, who made a note of the complaint, and who was at the only office of the executive board open to the public, and where the board was in the habit of receiving such notices by any clerk who happened to be behind the counter, sufficiently complies with the charter provision. Elias v. Rochester, 49 App. Div. 597, 63 N. Y. Supp. 712, affirmed in 169 N. Y. 614, 62 N. E. 1095.

XVI. Effect of concurrent liability of third person.

Municipal corporations are primarily liable for injuries occasioned by obstructions or defects in their streets or sidewalks, though such obstructions or defects were placed there or created without their agency. Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427; Rowell v. Williams, 29 Iowa, 210; Durant v. Palmer, 29 N. J. L. 544; Wilson v. Watertown, 3 Hun, 508, 5 Thomp. & C. 579; Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 65, affirming 9 Hun, 394; Kittredge v. Milwaukee, 26 Wis. 46.

And this is so though the party placing or creating the obstruction or defect might be liable over to the city. Kittredge v. Milwaukee; Rowell v. Williams; Wilson v. Watertown; and Robbins v. Chicago,—supra.

Or might be liable to the person injured by the obstruction or defect. Wilson v. Watertown and Durant v. Palmer, supra.

And, where a temporary sidewalk is placed upon a sidewalk area of a street while the street is being regraded by a contractor, and a person is injured on such sidewalk, the city being primarily liable for the injury, the direction of a verdict for the contractor in an action therefor is not prejudicial to the city. Jones v. Seattle (Wash.) 98 Pac. 743.

The obligation of a lot owner to the city, and also to individuals, to keep the sidewalk in front of his lot free from obstruction and in a passable condition, and the consequent liability for injuries sustained, does not relieve the city of the duty to keep its sidewalks and streets in passable condition and free from obstruction, and to place the requisite guards around places of danger, the city having by its officers or agents, notice of such danger. Rowell v. Williams, supra.

And, where a person was injured by an opening in a sidewalk adjoining and for the benefit of an abutting owner, the question, in an action against the town for the injury, whether the owner of the adjoining premises is liable over to the town in case of a recovery against the town, is immaterial. Purple v. Greenfield, 138 Mass. 1; Peoria v. Simpson, 110 Ill. 294, 51 Am. Rep. 683.

So, a party injured by a defect in a street, caused by a railroad company maintaining its tracks in the street by permission of the municipality, has a double action against both the city and the railroad company, regardless of the contract between them holding each as primarily responsible; and when the city is compelled to pay damages, it has the right to recover against the railroad company in the same action if both are defendants, or if the city has properly brought in the railroad company by a call in warranty or a distinct suit. Cline v. Crescent City R. Co. 43 La. Ann. 327, 26 Am. St. Rep. 187, 9 So. 122.

And, where a contractor cut the roots of trees standing in a street, and left them without support, and they fell against the building of an abutting owner, injuring it, the abutting owner may sue the city and the contractor jointly, or may pursue them both or either of them so long as his claim for damages remains unsatisfied. Morris v. Salt Lake City (Utah) 101 Pac. 373.

And, where a town was sued for damages occasioned by the obstruction, insufficiency, and want of repairs in a road, and, by statute, the surveyor of a district where the injury occurred was liable over to the town for such damages as might be recovered against the town, the selectmen cannot, by their general power, release the surveyor so as to make him a competent witness in the case. Carlton v. Bath, 22 N. H. 559.

And a complaint in an action against a city and an independent contractor for a sidewalk, alleging that in constructing the walk the roots of plaintiff's trees standing in the street in front of his premises were unnecessarily cut, and the trees were left without support, in consequence of which they fell against the dwelling, damaging it, states a good cause of action as against a general demurrer. Morris v. Salt Lake City, supra.

But a legislative body has power to impose liability upon a lot owner for defects or obstructions in sidewalks abutting on his property, and to relieve the city from such liability until the injured party exhausts his remedy against the lot owner, the liability of the lot owner for damages, resulting from his failure to perform the statutory duty of keeping the sidewalk in front of his lot in repair, being in the nature of a penalty to enforce such duty. Henker v. Fond du Lac, 71 Wis. 616, 38 N. W. 187.

And, under a charter provision of a city making it the duty of lot owners to keep the sidewalk in front of their lots in a safe condition, and making them liable for all injuries resulting to any person from their neglect to perform that duty, and providing that the city shall not be liable for any such injury until after the injured party has exhausted his remedy against the lot owner, a 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

person injured by a defect in a sidewalk cannot maintain an action against the city therefor, where no judgment has been obtained by him against the lot owner for the injury. Ibid.

And, under such a provision making the obligation of lot owners to keep the sidewalk in repair an absolute one not dependent on any notice from the city authorities, the burden is upon the plaintiff, in an action against the city, who had proved the facts which show the primary liability of a lot owner, to show further that he had exhausted his legal remedies against such owner. Hiner v. Fond du Lac, 71 Wis. 74, 36 N. W. 632.

And a finding that an abutting owner did not use ordinary care and prudence to prevent injury to travelers on the highway, without any finding that the injury to the traveler resulted from such failure, will not justify a judgment against such owner, where another special finding is that the injury was caused by negligence of the city alone, even though it is apparent that the negligence of the city must have been that of the abutting owner also. Raymond v. Keseberg, 84 Wis. 302, 19 L.R.A. 643, 54 N. W. 612.

Nor will inconsistent and contradictory findings to the effect that a city was negligent in not keeping a highway in a safe condition, and that an abutting owner was not negligent, where it is clear that the latter must have been negligent if the city was not, sustain a judgment against the city. Ibid.

And the liability, for an injury caused by falling into a sewer trench, of third persons, who, under license from the city, dug the trench, and who, by virtue of an ordinance and bond, were required by the city to take certain specified precautions and to reimburse the city for any damages which might fall upon it by reason of their default therein, is at best secondary, and a liability on contract to the city; and their presence or absence in an action by a person injured against the city can have no effect upon the rights of the plaintiff or the liability of the city to him; and refusal to join them as parties defendant in the action is not ground for the reversal. McGowan v. Watertown, 130 Wis. 555, 110 N. W. 402.

So, under a charter provision that no action shall be maintained against the city for damages caused by any obstruction or excavation in any street, placed there by any person or by his negligence in the management thereof or his failure to maintain guards or lights thereat, unless such person is joined as a defendant; and, in case of judgment against the defendant, execution shall first issue against such person; and, if the city pays the judgment, it shall be the owner of and may enforce it against the other defendant, under a complaint charging the individual defendant with having caused an obstruction, and the city with having permitted it to remain rendering the street dangerous,—if the evidence justifies it, a verdict may be had against both defendants, or against one and in favor of the other; and the jury may find the individual defendant liable for having caused the obstruction, although the evidence is insufficient to charge the city with negligence in permitting it; or it may find the city liable for negligence in permitting the obstruction to endanger the street, although the evidence might fall short of proving that the other defendant created or caused it. Clark v. Austin, 38 Minn. 487, 38 N. W. 615.

And such a provision gives to the city the right to insist, when it is sued, that the party by whose act or negligence the injury was caused shall be joined with it as a defendant; and this may be done by demurrer to the complaint, if the facts giving it the right sufficiently appear from its allegations; and, if they do not, then it must set forth the facts and object to the nonjoinder by answer, and the name of the person whom the defendant claims should be joined must be given. Jones v. Minneapolis, 31 Minn. 230, 17 N. W. 377.

And where suit is brought against a city for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street, and also against the person who placed the obstruction in the street; and a verdict is rendered therein against the city,—the city cannot move for a new trial on the ground that the verdict ought to have been against the codefendant also, unless it makes the codefendant a party to the motion. Clark v. Austin, supra.

So, under provisions of a city charter that, in actions against the city for injuries caused by the negligence of any person primarily responsible to the plaintiff for his injuries, such person shall be made a party defendant, and the execution shall be first levied on his property, a judgment in favor of such person so primarily liable would, as between himself and the city, be conclusive as to his primary liability, and the city may, on appeal, assail a judgment so far as it affects such person's lack of liability; but a reversal of such judgment against the codefendant primarily liable on behalf of the city would not affect the plaintiff's judgment against the latter, but would have the effect only of relieving the city of the bar of the judgment, and of restoring its right to an action against its codefendant as being primarily liable for the plaintiff's injuries. Wiggin v. St. Louis, 135 Mo. 558, 37 S. W. 528.

And an owner of property abutting on a city street may be charged with negligence in constructing and maintaining an unsafe cellar way in the sidewalk; and the city may be charged with negligence in permitting the cellar way to be so maintained, in the same petition. Perrigo v. St. Louis, 185 Mo. 274, 84 S. W. 30.

And, when a city and an individual are sued jointly for damages occasioned by the negligence of the individual in obstructing a street, and the suit is dismissed as to the individual, the record not showing that he is dead, a judgment taken thereafter against the city will be enforced. Schweickhardt v. St. Louis, 2 Mo. App. 571.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So, if a person is joined as defendant with the city who is found upon the trial not to be liable, this will not prevent a recovery against the city if the case is one in which an action could have been maintained against the city before the adoption of the charter provision. Donoho v. Vulcan Iron Works, 75 Mo. 401, affirming 7 Mo. App. 447.

And, where a third party is liable with a city for negligence in obstructing a street; and the person injured sues the city and third party jointly,—the city is not compelled to give the notice required by the freeholders' charter in cases where the city alone is sued and the plaintiff has waived such notice. Waltmeyer v. Kansas City, 71 Mo. App. 354.

Liability of a city for failure to discharge its duty to the traveling public on its streets of keeping its sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for travelers thereon, however, cannot be made contingent upon the liability of the citizen to the city for a failure to discharge his duty to the city in the matter of removing the snow from his sidewalk as required by ordinance. Norton v. St. Louis, 97 Mo. 537, 11 S. W. 242.

And, where a street railroad company occupying the streets of a city by permission erects a trolley pole in a street which constitutes an obstruction, and an injury is caused thereby, the mere recovery of a judgment against the railroad company, without satisfaction, is not a bar to a suit against the city for the injury. Cleveland v. Bangor, 87 Me. 259, 47 Am. St. Rep. 326, 32 Atl. 892.

So, where a person received an injury from an excavation in a sidewalk, made by an individual under a permit from the city; and he elected to proceed against the city and the individual jointly, and recovered a judgment against them jointly, the fact that the judgment is reversed as to the city and a new trial ordered does not, because the plaintiff saw fit to reduce the judgment as to the individual instead of taking a new trial, destroy his cause of action against the city. Parks v. New York, 111 App. Div. 836, 98 N. Y. Supp. 94, affirmed in 187 N. Y. 555, 80 N. E. 1115.

And, where a city was compelled to pay damages for an injury to a person, caused by a pile of sand negligently left unguarded in a street by a person who was constructing a house upon a lot contiguous thereto, the city and the person engaged in constructing the house were not joint wrongdoers so as to prevent the city from maintaining an action against the person constructing the house for the recovery of the amount it was compelled to pay. Rochester v. Montgomery, 9 Hun. 394.

So, where a third person left an object in a street which was calculated to frighten horses; and it was negligently permitted to remain there; and the horse of a traveler was frightened and ran away, and an injury ensued; and the person injured brought an action against the person who placed the object in the street, and recovered judgment against him,—a discharge in bankruptcy of the judgment debtor is not a bar to an action by the person injured against the municipal corporation for the injury, since the person who placed the obstruction in the street and the municipal corporation are not joint tortfeasors, the act of the individual being a common law tort, while the municipality is charged with the neglect of a statutory duty. Bennett v. Fifield, 13 R. I. 139, 43 Am. Rep. 17.

And, where a telephone company dug a hole in a street for a pole under an agreement with the city's electric-lighting superintendent to place a pole therein to carry the city's electric-light wires over the telephone company's telephone wires at an intersection; and the city neglected to put up the pole for three months, during which time the lighting superintendent made temporary provision for the wires, and several times, finding the hole uncovered, covered it; and a pedestrian thereafter fell into the uncovered hole, and was injured,—the city had notice of the defect through its lighting superintendent, and was solely negligent in permitting the hole to remain in the street unprotected, and therefore could not recover over against the telephone company any part of the damages recovered by the pedestrian. Central Union Teleph. Co. v. Conneaut, 167 Fed. 274.

XVII. Contributory negligence.

This is made the subject of an independent subject note in this series.

XVIII. Damages.

a. Generally.

The liability of municipal corporations for permitting obstructions to be placed in streets is based upon negligence; and generally rules of law with reference to damages in ordinary negligence actions are applicable to actions against municipal corporations for damages for injuries caused by obstructions in streets, except as modified by statute in some jurisdictions and as affected by the peculiar circumstances of cases of this class.

The damages in an action against a city for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street ought to be assessed with a view of compensating the plaintiff for the loss and suffering which resulted to him in consequence of the injury, which loss and suffering shall be determined from the evidence. Stafford v. Oskaloosa, 64 Iowa, 261, 20 N. W. 174.

The rule for the measurement of damages in actions against a city for injuries occasioned by its streets being out of repair is substantially that the damages must be measured by the loss of time during the cure, and expenses incurred in respect to it, the pain and suffering undergone by the person injured, and any permanent injury, especially when it causes a disability for further exertion in whole or in part, and 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) consequent pecuniary loss. Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Anderson v. Wilmington (Del.) 70 Atl. 204.

The damages recoverable are those arising from pain, suffering, distress, anxiety of mind, and the immediate medical and other expenses growing out of the sickness and confinement of the party injured, and the permanent pecuniary loss or injury growing out of total or partial disability to attend to or engage in business. Goodno v. Oshkosh, 28 Wis. 300.

And including also loss of time and expenses in endeavoring to obtain a cure. Anderson v. Wilmington, supra.

And loss of health resulting from such injuries. Chicago v. Davies, 110 Ill. App. 427.

And a man whose wife was injured by a defect in a street, consisting of a washout in the approach to a bridge, can state the facts, in an action for the injury, relating to his services in attending his wife and the value of such services and the time lost; and he may testify as to the value of his time and services devoted to his wife, and the reasonable amount of drug bills, nurse hire, and hospital bills; but evidence of the general trouble that he was put to by reason of her injuries is not admissible. Dallas v. Moore, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 230, 74 S. W. 95.

So, bodily and mental suffering caused by an injury from a defective or obstructed highway may be considered in awarding damages, in an action against the city for the injury. Sheel v. Appleton, 49 Wis. 125, 5 N. W. 27; Anderson v. Wilmington and Chicago v. Davies, supra.

And, where an injury from an obstruction or defect in a street is permanent, the person injured can recover prospective as well as past damages. Weisenberg v. Appleton, 26 Wis. 56, 7 Am. Rep. 39.

And the jury, in an action for injuries caused by an uncovered excavation in a street, may take into consideration as an item of damage the probable consequences, so far as proved, of the personal injuries received by the plaintiff. Snook v. Anacosta, 26 Mont. 128, 66 Pac. 756.

Such consequences of an injury from an obstruction in a street as it is reasonably certain will result in the future, to the person injured, from the injury, should be considered in an action against the municipality for the injury, and damages awarded therefor. Stafford v. Oskaloosa, supra.

And, where a person injured by a defect or obstruction in a street is permanently injured; and he alleges, in an action for the injury, the actual nature and extent of the injury and the amount of damages,—it is not necessary to state that a part of such damages will accrue in the future, in order to entitle him to recover them. Weisenberg v. Appleton, supra.

And, while it is the duty of a person injured by an obstruction in a street to use reasonable care to promote a recovery, yet, if she was guilty of no negligence in this respect, and an accident subsequently happens to her in which the result is more serious because of her then condition than it would have been if she had not already been afflicted, such more serious result in reality is the result of the first accident; and the city is liable therefor. Conner v. Nevada, 188 Mo. 148, 107 Am. St. Rep. 314, 86 S. W. 256.

But an instruction, in an action against a city for damages for injuries caused by an obstruction in a street, that the plaintiff can recover the damages caused by the injury, impliedly excludes those caused by her own negligence and imprudence after the injury in failing or neglecting to obey the directions of the physician. Weisenberg v. Appleton, supra.

If a person tripped upon a stone or hole in a sidewalk constituting an obstruction, and was inadvertently thrown upon a nuisance therein created by himself, however, if he was in the exercise of ordinary care he may recover such damages as were the direct and natural result of the obstruction, but not for any increase of damage occasioned by the nuisance which he himself maintained. Lavery v. Manchester, 58 N. H. 444.

And an instruction in an action against a city for injuries caused by stepping into a hole in a sidewalk, limiting the right of recovery of the person injured to such injury as she might have received from stepping into a hole while walking along the sidewalk, and making the city responsible for the consequences of such injury only in the event of its failure to use ordinary diligence in maintaining the sidewalk reasonably safe for the persons using the same, sufficiently limits the plaintiff's right to recover to the injury sustained by stepping into a hole, and does not permit a recovery on account of any other defect. San Antonio v. Wildenstein (Tex. Civ. App.) 109 S. W. 231.

So, where a person is forced by defects or obstructions in a highway to take a more circuitous road, whereby he suffers injury in his business, the damages are not the immediate consequences of the wrong, but are remote; and, the street being intended primarily for travel and not trade, the recovery, if any is permitted, must be limited to the injury sustained in its use for travel, consisting of delay and loss of time, and cannot include a loss of the profits of trade. Farrelly v. Cincinnati, 2 Disney (Ohio) 516.

And, while a municipal corporation is liable for injuries received from obstructions placed in a street by a railroad company occupying the street under agreement with the city, though the statute provides that the railroad corporation shall be answerable for obstructions maintained by it in the street, the municipal corporation is not answerable to a property holder for damages arising from the use of the street by a railroad corporation, which are in the nature of compensation for additional burdens in the street arising from the proper construction and operation of the railway 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) therein; such as adjacent property owners would be entitled to in an appropriation proceeding instituted by the railroad company to compel appropriation. Zanesville v. Fannan, 53 Ohio St. 605, 53 Am. St. Rep. 664, 42 N. E. 703.

So, the loss by a husband of his wife's services, comfort, and conjugal society, and the expenses incurred by him for her medical care and treatment, caused by personal injuries received by her by reason of a defective or obstructed highway, is not an injury to his person or property, within the meaning of a statute giving a right of action against the city in such case for injury to person or property; and consequently he has no right of action therefor. Lounsbury v. Bridgeport, 66 Conn. 360, 34 Atl. 93; Roberts v. Detroit, 102 Mich. 64, 27 L.R.A. 572, 60 N. W. 450.

Nor can recovery for the loss of the services of a wife and expenses incurred by her personal injury on a defective sidewalk be had against a city under a statute authorizing recovery only by a person sustaining bodily injury, or by the owner of a horse or vehicle or other property injured by defective or obstructed highways or sidewalks. Roberts v. Detroit, supra.

But, where the statute makes municipal corporations liable to all persons who may in any wise suffer injury to their persons or property by reason of any neglect to keep the streets in a safe and convenient condition for travelers, it covers a consequent injury to property, and makes the municipal corporations liable, not only for injuries to persons and property suffered by persons using the highway, but also for damages suffered by persons in consequence of not being able to use it, or in consequence of not being able to use it without additional trouble and expense. Williams v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 447.

A city sued for flooding a lot by raising the grade of streets and by insufficient drains cannot offset against any liability for negligence in that respect the increase of the market value of the property due to the general advance in real-estate values in the city. Mayrant v. Columbia (S. C.) 64 S. E. 416.

In actions for injuries resulting from obstructions and defects in streets, the assessment of damages is a matter within the sound discretion of the jury; and courts should not interfere to revise their findings, unless they are so clearly and manifestly excessive as to give evidence of passion and prejudice on the part of the jury. Chicago v. Crooker, 2 Ill. App. 279; Mayrant v. Columbia, supra.

b. Exemplary damages.

Compensatory damages only should be given in an action against a city to recover damages for injuries occasioned by its streets being obstructed or out of repair; vindictive, exemplary, or punitive damages cannot be recovered in such cases. Wilson v. Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep.

780; Wilson v. Granby, 47 Conn. 59, 36 Am. Rep. 51; Chicago v. Martin, 49 Ill. 241, 95 Am. Dec. 590; Decatur v. Fisher, 53 Ill. 407; Galveston v. Barbour, 62 Tex. 172, 50 Am. Rep. 519.

Except in cases of malice or wilful negligence. Chicago v. Martin and Decatur v. Fisher, supra.

Or unless the jury should find gross negligence on the part of the municipal corporation, in which case it may increase the amount, considering the expenses of the plaintiff's suit, not including taxable costs. Wilson v. Granby, supra.

A recovery of punitive or vindictive damages is allowed only when the act causing the injury for which the recovery is sought has been wilfully done, and there was a deliberate, preconceived, or positive intention to injure, or a reckless disregard of the safety of the person or property, which is equally culpable; and a person injured by falling into a hole in a sidewalk cannot recover punitive or vindictive damages against the city where the hole in the sidewalk may have been the work or act of a private individual, not connected with the corporation, and there is nothing to show that the corporate authorities were notified of it, or had any knowledge of its existence. Wallace v. New York, 18 How. Pr. 169.

And municipal corporations may exercise a discretion as to the time of making repairs in streets which are little used by the public and are not in the business portion of the city; and they cannot be held guilty of gross negligence which will subject them to liability for exemplary damages because of their mere failure to make the necessary repairs in such case. Chicago v. Martin, supra.

So, while it is the duty of a municipal corporation to know of the condition of a street, and to see that it is safe for pedestrians, yet in the absence of proof of any knowledge of its unsafe condition, its non-attention to it cannot be charged as wilful negligence, for which compensatory damages may be imposed. Decatur v. Fisher, supra.

And, where an injury was caused by a defective sidewalk, and the case was one in which punitive damages could not be awarded, evidence is not admissible on behalf of the plaintiff in an action for an injury to show the value of the property owned by the municipal corporation, or the assessed value of property situate in the city, or the amount of salary paid the mayor of the city. Jackson v. Pool, 91 Tenn. 448, 19 S. W. 324.

XIX. Conclusion.

At common law municipal corporations, such as cities, villages, etc., like quasi municipal corporations, such as counties, towns etc., were not liable to individuals for injuries from defects or obstructions in highways or streets, unless they amounted to a nuisance. Such liability has been expressly imposed, however, in many of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

American states, either by a general statute or by charter provision. And the prevailing rule, though no such statutory imposition has been made, is that a grant to a municipal corporation of control over streets and of means of maintenance charges it with the duty of using ordinary and reasonable care in their proper construction and repair and in keeping them free from obstruction so as to be reasonably safe for use in the ordinary methods; and that a failure to perform this duty will subject it to liability for resulting damages. The theory of this rule is that the acceptance of the grant of power implies an agreement to perform for the benefit of all who may have occasion to use the streets, the agreement inuring to the benefit of individuals interested in the performance of the duty. This liability has been elsewhere imposed, and municipal corporations have been exempted therefrom by statute in specific instances, and such exemption is not in contravention of constitutional principles but to be effectual the intent to exempt must be clear and specific.

Power to perform, however, is a prerequisite to liability for failure to act; and the absence of funds and legal means to procure them has been held to be an excuse for failure to remove a defect or obstruction. But this has been denied and it seems to be settled that absence of funds is no excuse if there is power in any legal way to procure them. Nor will difficulties attending the removal of a defect or obstruction, or an overpressure of other duties, excuse the failure to remove it.

So, a municipal corporation is not liable for injuries caused by defects or obstructions in streets where their creation or continuance results from the exercise by it of the functions of the general government in which its acts are quasi judicial or discretionary, in making an erroneous estimate of the public needs, such as errors in determining the necessity of an improvement or in establishing the grade of a street. When the estimate as to the public needs has been made, however, and questions of necessity, requisite capacity, location, etc., have been determined, and the street or other improvement has been made, the duty of the municipal corporation of keeping it from being or becoming dangerous to the public from obstructions or otherwise is a ministerial one, for a negligent omission to perform which the municipal corporation is liable. The line of distinction seems to be that a municipal corporation acts judicially when it selects and adopts a plan for the construction of a public improvement; but in carrying out such plan and in maintaining the structure after it is furnished it acts ministerially, and is liable for negligent performance. And the position is well supported and seems to be growing in favor that the whole duty of a municipality to keep its streets in a reasonably safe condition for travel in the ordinary modes is ministerial, and not governmental, in its nature; and that it requires the removal of obstructions irrespective of the cause from which they arose; it being just as unlawful to plan and create a dangerous condition as to permit the existence of one otherwise created.

Nor can a municipal corporation, by any act of its own, devolve the duty of keeping its streets in a reasonably safe condition upon another, so as to relieve itself from liability resulting from its failure to perform it, unless authorized by statute. And the imposition of the duty to keep a street or sidewalk in repair and in a safe condition, either by the municipal corporation or by statute, upon a railway company occupying the street or an abutting owner, does not relieve the municipal corporation from liability for nonperformance of this duty, unless it is so provided by statute.

A municipal corporation is not responsible for every accident that may occur on its streets, however, and it is not an insurer against all injury which may result from obstructions or defects in its streets; what is required and all that is required is reasonable and ordinary care and diligence to keep the streets in a reasonably safe condition. And what constitutes reasonable and ordinary care and diligence depends upon the facts of each case. It is care and diligence proportioned to the danger likely to ensue from its omission, and such as persons of ordinary prudence would be likely to use under the same or similar circumstances. And whether, under the facts, such care and diligence was used, is a question of fact for a jury. The absence of such care and diligence constitutes negligence, and the liability of a municipal corporation to persons injured by reason of obstructions in streets is based on negligence.

Nor is the cause or creation of a defect or obstruction in a street of any effect upon the liability of the municipal corporation for an injury caused by it. If it was created by the city itself or by the act of an agent or servant, the city is, of course, liable for its consequences; and the same rule applies to things done by permission or license of the city, though when the license was for a lawful and proper purpose it is not liable for the results of an abuse of the license by the licensee or a contractor. Nor is the rule changed by the fact that the obstruction was created, by a trespasser or wrongdoer. But, when the unsafe condition occurs through some other agency or instrumentality than that of the city, negligence cannot be imputed to the city, unless it is chargeable with knowledge or notice of the unsafe condition. Nor is the fact that the work which creates the obstruction was done by an independent contractor of any effect upon the liability of the municipal corporation for injuries caused thereby, where the work contracted for was necessarily or inherently dangerous. But, where there is no danger involved in the work itself, the municipal corporation is not responsible for an injury caused by an obstruction in a street placed there by the negligence of the contractor in the execution of his contract, though, where the municipal corporation retains control over the conduct or the work contracted for, it is liable as a principle for the act of his agent. So, where the law requires a municipality to enter into a particular kind of contract, it is under no responsibility for the acts of the person taking the contract. These rules apply to all existing streets and highways legally established, whether by proceedings in court, or by municipal authorities, or by dedication, or by improvement and use; and they apply alike to bridges, sidewalks by whomsoever made, walks outside of a highway, and crossings, the only escape from liability being by abandonment, which must be made effectual and proved.

Absolute perfection in a street and entire absence of defect or obstruction, however, is not required; a reasonably safe condition for public use in the ordinary modes of travel is the rule of perfection required. The street must be safe and convenient in view of such casualties as might reasonably be expected to happen to travelers; and, in determining what obstructions will render a highway defective, its locality and uses and all the surrounding circumstances must be considered. A municipal corporation is under no duty with reference to a use of a street which reasonable care and prudence would never have anticipated. But the condition must be such that it may be safely traveled by night as well as by day; and, where a street is opened for travel its whole width, ordinary care must be exercised to maintain the whole width of it reasonably free from obstruction. But, where the amount of travel is small, a municipal corporation need improve and make passable only such portions of a street as is reasonably necessary for the needs of the public. This doctrine, however, is not applicable to sidewalks considered apart from the street; there is no traveled way of a sidewalk outside of which a city would not be liable for obstructions. So, a municipal corporation has the right to devote the sides of a street to other useful purposes provided it leaves an unobstructed way of ample width for travelers. And, while grass plots and shade trees on the sides of streets may be obstructions, where ample width is left to answer the demands of travel they may properly be maintained. But an obstruction outside the traveled track does not differ from one inside of it on the question of municipal liability, if it is so close to the margin of such track as to make the use of it dangerous, though a city is not bound to fence a highway merely to prevent travelers from straying out of it where there is no unsafe place immediately contiguous to it.

Ordinarily the obstructions in streets constituting a defect for an injury resulting from which the municipal corporation is liable include any object upon or near the traveled path which would necessarily obstruct or hinder one in the use thereof for the purpose of travel, or which, from its nature and position, would be likely to produce that result. But they must be more than mere trifling defects; they must be such as to justify a careful and prudent man in anticipating danger from their existence. And that a structure in a highway, rendering it unsafe or inconvenient for travelers, was properly authorized by the legislature, is a sufficient defense in an action for an injury resulting therefrom. So, an obstruction in a street, constituting a necessary incident to the use of the street for purposes authorized by law, or which is intended for the protection of the general traveling public, is permissible and creates no municipal liability; and so of slight obstructions for the sake of general convenience and business. This rule includes obstructions for the purpose of the construction of sewers, drains, or waterworks, and by telegraph, telephone, electric-light and trolley poles, and by hydrants, hitching posts, awning posts, and horse blocks; and it even extends to include the right temporarily to entirely close a street on occasions of public interest. But such obstructions can be permitted to exist only while the need continues; and all reasonable precautions must be taken to prevent injury by them.

Nor is the temporary obstruction of a street for the purpose of improvement thereof unlawful, when a reasonable necessity exists therefor; and municipal corporations are not answerable in damages for permitting it. But the duty of a municipal corporation to improve and repair its streets and keep them free from obstruction is coupled with a duty to protect the traveling public while the obstruction exists, so far as is compatible with the temporary interference of those intrusted with their care. And obstructions of this class can be made only when a matter of necessity, and can be continued only for a reasonable time commensurate with the reasonable prosecution of the work; and the municipal corporation is bound so to guard and light the obstructions as to render the street reasonably safe for use, or to entirely close the street against the public if necessary to prevent accidents. Nor is municipal liability affected by the fact that the improvement is made by an abutting owner; in such case the municipal corporation must supervise the work and see that it is properly guarded and lighted; and, if due care in the performance of this duty is omitted, it is responsible for resulting injuries.

Within the rules, restrictions, and qualifications above mentioned, whenever an injury has been occasioned by an object in a street alleged to be a defect or an unlawful obstruction, whether the street was in a reasonably safe condition for the convenience of travel is a question to be determined by a jury in each case by the particular circumstances; and the rule is the same with reference to the question whether an obstruction was such that it was negligence upon the part of the municipality to permit it to exist; and this applies to all classes of alleged defect, and obstructions in streets or on sidewalks, or so closely contiguous to streets or sidewalks as to be dangerous to travel, including unevenness, inequalities, slopes, and grades, as well as physical obstructions and holes and excavations, and anything that might interfere with or obstruct traffic. Where the existence of a particular thing in a street is admitted, however, or conclusively proven, whether or not it is such a defect or obstruction as to render the street unsafe and to subject the municipal corporation to liability is a question of law for the court. But, where different minds might honestly draw different conclusions as to the liability of a defect or obstruction to cause an accident and as to the danger that might be reasonably anticipated from its existence, the question should be submitted to the jury; and, where the fact is determined by a jury, its finding will not be disturbed unless absolutely unsupported by evidence.

Nor are these rules confined to defects or obstructions in or upon the streets and sidewalks; they apply, also, to structures or things hanging over them that might make travel unsafe, such as awnings, sheds, signs, billboards, electric wires and appliances, and trees, poles, etc. But an object suspended over a street and in no way attached to it, though dangerous because of its liability to fall, is not a defect or want of repair within the meaning of statutes imposing liability only for defects or want of repair. So, objects calculated to frighten animals may render a road or street unsafe, and impose liability for resulting injuries on the municipality, as well as obstructions or defective construction; and this is so though there was no actual contact or danger of it. To establish liability on this ground, however, it must appear that the horse which was frightened was one of ordinary gentleness, and the municipal corporation must have known of the obstruction or been under duty to remove it; and an object which might frighten horses, but not otherwise an obstruction, is not a defect within the meaning of statutes requiring municipal corporations to keep their ways free from defects, and in repair.

So, if a dangerous defect or obstruction in a street is not immediately removable, the municipality, having knowledge of the danger, is bound to exercise ordinary care for the protection of the traveling public by giving warning of the danger, and is liable for the consequences of its failure to do so; and this is the rule without reference to the question by whom the obstruction was created. And the warning must be such as would reasonably notify all persons having occasion to use the street that the danger is there. Knowledge that there is a probability of danger, however, is enough, and it is sufficient that the traveler has notice or knowledge enough of the facts to put him on inquiry; and if there is a sufficient guard or barrier it relieves the municipality from liability, no matter who erected it. And the removal of a barrier or guard by a wrongdoer without the knowledge of the municipality imposes no liability upon it until the lapse of such a period of time that it should have known of and remedied it; and no guard or barrier at all is necessary unless one is needed to make the street reasonably safe and convenient for travelers who are themselves in the exercise of due care. Nor is the mere failure of a municipal corporation to light its streets, unless the duty is imposed by statute, usually regarded as negligence, though injury from an obstruction might have been avoided had they been lighted. But, if it assumes to light them, and fails to do so in such a manner as will afford proper security from danger incident to their use, it is liable for a resulting injury. And, where a street is partially obstructed, and might be reasonably safe if lighted, but dangerous if unlighted, the fact that it was not lighted may be material on the question of the negligence of the municipal corporation in failing to keep it in a proper condition; and it may be important on the question of the contributory negligence of the person injured.

So, the duty of a municipal corporation to remove defects and obstructions from its streets, the neglect of which will render it liable to a person injured thereby, must arise from knowledge of their existence and dangerous character. This knowledge or notice may be either express or constructive. But, when the obstruction was not occasioned by any act of the municipal corporation, its officers or agents, proof of actual notice, or of facts from which notice may reasonably be inferred, or proof of circumstances from which it appears that the defect ought to have been known or remedied, is essential to municipal liability, though where, by statute, an absolute liability is imposed for defects and obstructions, the question of notice to the municipality is immaterial; and, where express or actual notice is required, it is not sufficient that the municipality was negligent in not discovering the defect. Actual knowledge or notice to officers of the municipality clothed with general powers and duties with reference to supervision and control of corporate affairs, or with specific duties as to the care of streets, is notice to and binding upon the city; and it may be proved by evidence either direct or circumstantial; and its existence is a question of fact for the jury. Constructive notice is an inference of notice or knowledge of the obstruction in question, drawn from official opportunity to obtain it, or from official obligation to be reasonably vigilant in keeping the streets in a safe condition. A municipal corporation is bound to take notice of the character of its own work, and, if an obstruction is created by its own act, or by that of an agent or servant, notice will be inferred; and the same rule applies where the work was done by a contractor, or under permit or license of the municipality; and constructive notice may be inferred from the long existence of the obstruction and from its conspicuousness and notoriety.

So, causes naturally calculated to produce defects or obstructions may be considered on the question of constructive notice, and so may actual knowledge of general defectiveness or obstruction on the question of notice of a particular defect or obstruction causing the injury complained of. And the place, circumstances, and surroundings of the accident may also be considered; and, in this connection, the corporation cannot close its eyes to existing conditions, but must inspect its streets, and, if its ignorance is due to an omission of the duty of inspection with the degree of diligence which might reasonably be expected under the circumstances, the opportunity of knowledge stands as actual knowledge. To fix the liability of the municipal corporation, however, not only actual or constructive notice of the defect or obstruction must appear; if it was not caused by the city itself or someone in privity with it there must also have been, after the notice, a sufficient lapse of time to enable it by the exercise of reasonable diligence to abate, remove, or protect it. Constructive notice, like actual, is a question for the jury, to be determined on a consideration of all the facts and circumstances of the case.

So, to hold a municipal corporation liable for an injury because of a defect or obstruction in a street, the injury must have resulted from the defect or obstruction. There are four elements necessary to sustain a recovery, an unlawful defect or obstruction, notice thereof, failure to remove, and injury caused by it; and the obstruction must have been the proximate cause of the injury, though it need not have been the sole cause. The general rule would seem to be that, where several concurring acts or conditions of things, one of them a wrongful act or omission such as permitting an obstruction in a street, produce an injury, the wrongful act or omission is to be regarded as the proximate cause of the injury if the person injured was without fault and the injury was one which might reasonably be anticipated from the act of omission, and which would not have occurred without it. The negligence of the municipality, to be the proximate cause of the injury, need not be the last act or cause or nearest act to the injury. Nor is the liability limited to injuries received from actual contact with the obstruction, but includes those received while under the immediate impulse or impetus received from it, or during reasonable efforts to escape from the position which it has occasioned. Where there are several acts concurring to cause the injury, the original act, if wrongful and calculated to cause the injury, is usually taken as the proximate cause though other causes intervene; and, where the obstruction was a cause active in producing the injury, it will be deemed the proximate cause, rather than another passive and inactive cause. The test would seem to be whether the facts constitute a continuous succession of events so linked together that they become a natural whole, or whether the chain of events is so broken that they may become independent and the final result cannot be said to be the natural and probable consequence of the primary cause. This is well illustrated by the cases of frightened horses; if a horse is frightened by an obstruction, and runs away, doing damage, the obstruction is the proximate cause; if he shies against an obstruction while under control or only temporarily out from under control, the obstruction is the proximate cause of the injury. But where, through fright or otherwise, the horse becomes wholly unmanageable, and in this condition comes in contact with an obstruction in the street from which an injury results, the fright of the horse, and not the obstruction, is the proximate cause of the injury, and the municipality is not liable.

There are restrictions upon the right to redress of the person injured both with reference to the person and with reference to the manner of his use of the street. A special and peculiar damage to him, not suffered by the rest of the public, is necessary to a recovery by a person injured by an obstruction in a street. But the doctrine that an employee must take the risk of his employment and of the negligence of his fellow servants does not apply to an employee of a city injured by an obstruction, so as to relieve the city from liability to him for its negligence. This theory has been applied with reference to policemen, firemen, a patrol-wagon driver, a lamp lighter, and to members of the city council, and to employees of a railway company occupying the street which had contracted to keep it in a safe condition. Nor is the liability of a municipal corporation for an injury by an obstruction in a street affected by the fact that the physical condition of the person injured was such as to render him more susceptible to injury than people generally; and children have the same rights on streets as adults; and negligence cannot be imputed to parents for permitting a small child to go upon a street where there was no reason to expect danger.

With reference to the use of the street, streets are designed for purposes of travel, and of course a person using a street for the purpose of travel, who is injured by an obstruction on it, is entitled, in a proper case, to recover; and the general rule would seem to be that streets must be kept in a reasonably safe condition for all the purposes to which they may be lawfully devoted, it having been held that the duty attaches in favor of all persons having occasion to pass over the streets for the purpose of business, convenience, or pleasure, or to gratify idle curiosity. Some of the cases, however, have confined the right of recovery to persons using the street for the purpose of traveling thereon. But the word "traveler" has no technical legal signification, and a person is traveling on a street when he is making a reasonable use of it as a way, which reasonable use is a question of fact 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for the jury. Mere loitering or a slight deviation from a direct course does not prevent one from being a traveler, within these rules. But the rule is different with reference to a total cessation of travel and engaging in some other purpose or undertaking. Nor is being on a street merely for the purpose of play traveling,—at least within the meaning of many of the statutes. But, if the person is going from place to place, incidental play on the way does not affect his rights against the municipal corporation; and the general rule would seem to be that persons using streets for pleasure and recreation, or through mere idle curiosity, when they do not infringe upon the rights of others to use them, are within the protection of the law and entitled to have them in a reasonably safe condition; and that it is no defense to the municipal corporation that the person injured by an obstruction in a street was a child playing upon the street, instead of using it for ordinary purposes of travel. So, a traveler is entitled to use a street in such direction as may suit his convenience or taste, provided he conforms to the law and rules of the road. He may cross where he pleases and use the driveway for a footway; but, if he uses the street in an unusual way, he is entitled to only such protection as he would be entitled to if using it in the usual way.

Damages in actions of this class seem to be governed by general rules applicable to ordinary actions for negligence; but vindictive, exemplary, or punitive damages cannot be recovered except in cases of malice or gross or wilful negligence. F. H. B.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

ABE SIEGEL, Resp't.,

v.

CASSEL MARCUS, Appt.

(— N. D. —, 119 N. W. 358.)

Partnership — dissolution — contract — restraint of trade.

1. Upon the dissolution of a copartnership between S. and M., it was mutually agreed that the latter's interest in the partnership assets, including cash and merchandise, was of the value of $1,100, and, in consideration of S. paying to M. said sum in cash for his said interest, M. agreed

Headnotes by FISK, J.

Case Note. — Entering another's employment as breach of covenant not to engage in rival business.

While the decisions upon the question under discussion proceed primarily upon the construction of the language of the particular covenants involved, they appear to warrant the observation that such covenants are to be interpreted, so far as may be done, in the light of the purpose of the parties to with S. "not to engage for the next two years" in the same business theretofore conducted by such firm, in the same city, "in the manner aforesaid, or with any partner, partners, firm, company, or corporation for the period aforesaid." Held, that such contract is based upon a sufficient consideration, and is in all respects legal and enforceable.

Same — breach.

2. After the dissolution of such copartnership and the entering into such contract, M. entered the employ as a clerk of one E., whom he was instrumental in procuring to open a rival business adjacent to that of S., and M. attended to the purchase of stock for such rival business, and to a large extent was the active managing agent for E. in the conduct thereof. Held, that M. thereby violated the terms of his said provide against competition by the promisor. Accordingly, the mere engagement as an employee in a rival business is not determinative of a breach of such a covenant, but the inquiry must be as to the effect of such employment upon the business sought to be protected; and this effect will depend in part upon the nature of the business, and in part upon the participation of the employee in its control.

The test to be applied to the question whether an agreement not to engage in a certain business is violated by accepting employment in that business is stated in Wilson v. Delaney, 137 Iowa, 636, 113 N. W. 842, to be whether the scope and character of the employment is such as to result in all likelihood in substantial interference with the business which was the subject of the contract.

The nature of the business which the party abandons, and the natural and reasonable effect of the new employment upon it, are to be considered. Nelson v. Johnson, 38 Minn. 255, 36 N. W. 868.

Employment as a breach of covenant.

In Jefferson v. Markert, 112 Ga. 498, 37 S. E. 758, it was held that one who, in selling out his meat business and the good will thereof, contracted with the purchaser not to engage for a designated period in such a business in a named city, could not, without violating his contract, carry on in that city, during the period covered by the agreement, a similar business for another or in another name, of which he was the exclusive manager, and the success of which depended entirely upon his skill, efficiency, personal reputation and popularity,—especially if such arrangement was a mere pretext to cover a violation of his agreement.

In Merica v. Burget, 36 Ind. App. 453, 75 N. E. 1083, it was held that an agreement, upon sale of a banking business, "to quit the banking business, . . . and not to start another bank" in town so long as the vendee should own the bank purchased, was violated by one of the vendors taking stock in and becoming assistant cashier of 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) agreement and in equity and good conscience ought to be enjoined from so doing.

(January 7, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Cass County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to enjoin defendant from engaging in the pawnbroker, secondhand clothing, or jewelry business within the limits of Fargo County for a certain period, in violation of his contract not to do so. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. W. Tilly, for appellant:

A contract whereby one sells the good will of a business and enters into a contract not to engage therein for a limited a bank thereafter organized, where the evidence showed that the management of the new bank was largely dependent upon his acquaintance with the local situation.

In Wilson v. Delaney, supra, it was held that an agreement not to deal in stock, cattle, or horses for speculative purposes in a certain locality, was violated by purchases of horses and cattle, some of which were conducted by the promisor in his own name, and others in the name of his son-in-law, a member of a rival firm of dealers in cattle and horses, although the promisor had no financial interest in most of these transactions, but was acting solely on behalf of his son-in-law; the court saying: "But it does not matter that he had no expectations of making money for himself. In the interest of plaintiff he had agreed to go out of the business, and the effect of his disregard of that agreement by going about the country buying stock—sometimes giving his personal check in payment therefor, and sometimes the check of Hogan, as he says he was authorized to do—was equally potent, as far as plaintiff was concerned, whether he was doing this for pleasure, as a favor merely to Hogan, or for the purposes of personal gain."

In Pohlman v. Dawson, 63 Kan. 471, 54 L.R.A. 913, 88 Am. St. Rep. 249, 65 Pac. 689, it was held that a contract not to engage in the barber business in any manner in a certain town so long as another person should continue in business, made by the owner of a barber shop upon the sale of some of his furniture, tools, and fixtures to such person, was violated by working at the barber trade as an employee; the personal relation which a barber sustains to his customers making his employment in a rival shop resultant in greater harm to the promisee than if the parties had been carrying on a purely commercial business.

In Meyer v. Labau, 51 La. Ann. 1726, 26 So. 463, it was held that an agreement not to engage in mercantile business in a certain place for a stated period was violated by a promisor's taking part in the opening and conducting of a rival business establishment immediately adjacent, giving his aid and en-period of time in a certain locality does not include an agreement on the part of the seller not to work as a clerk or an employee for a person engaged in a similar business.

Battershell v. Bauer, 91 Ill. App. 181; Haley Grocery Co. v. Haley, 8 Wash. 75, 35 Pac. 595; Bishop, Contr. p. 521.

Mr. T. H. McEnroe, for respondent:

By selling the good will of a business, the party selling warrants that he will not endeavor to draw off any of the customers.

Mapes v. Metcalf, 10 N. D. 601, 88 N. W. 713; Kramer v. Old, 119 N. C. 1, 34 L.R.A. 389, 56 Am. St. Rep. 650, 25 S. E. 813; Morse Twist Drill & Mach. Co. v. Morse, 103 Mass. 73, 4 Am. Rep. 513.

The sale of a business is sufficient consideration for a contract restraining the vendor from the future exercise of his trade or profession.

24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 853; Mapes v. Metcalf, supra.

One selling the good will of a business must live within the spirit as well as the letter of the agreement of sale.

Emery v. Bradley, 88 Me. 357, 34 Atl. 167; Kramer v. Old, supra.

Defendant should be enjoined from acting as clerk or agent.

Emery v. Bradley, supra; Whitney v. Slayton, 40 Me. 224; Dwight v. Hamilton, 113 Mass. 175; Boutelle v. Smith, 116 Mass. 111; Jefferson v. Markert, 112 Ga. 498, 37 S. E. 758; 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1280 and note 34, p. 1281; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 859; Meyer v. Labau, 51 La. Ann. 1726, couragement to it, lending to it the advantage of his presence, his experience, his knowledge of the business, and his acquaintanceship with prospective patrons in that neighborhood, even though he might have no interest as owner in the rival establishment.

In Emery v. Bradley, 88 Me. 357, 34 Atl. 167, an extensive excerpt from which may be found in the opinion in SIEGEL v. MARCUS, it was held that a covenant by the vendor of a photographic business that he would "never go into or carry on said business of photography in future" in said place would be violated by his going into and carrying on said business in said place as clerk or agent of any person, as he would be in direct competition with the business he had sold, as much as if he were doing the same acts in his own name.

In Boutelle v. Smith, 116 Mass. 111, an agreement, the grammatical construction and obvious intent of which was that the promisors, both and each, would neither engage in the business of bakers in a certain town, nor directly nor indirectly engage in any business, or do any act, that should interfere with the business purchased of them, was held to be violated by the driving of a bread cart by one of them on his former route, as a hired servant of a baker in another town.

In Geiger v. Cawley, 146 Mich. 550, 109 N. W. 1064, it was held that an agreement "not to engage" in certain mercantile business was sufficiently broad to prevent all engagements voluntarily undertaken, and was violated by carrying on business as trustee.

In Nelson v. Johnson, supra, it was held that to engage his services to or in assisting a rival dealer in the same business, to solicit and make sales, and to influence buyers in that market, including his old customers, would be fairly within the terms of an agreement by the vendor of a business not to engage therein directly or indirectly in a stated locality; but that such agreement does not extend merely to isolated acts which might tend to interfere with the purchaser of the business, or to occasional services voluntarily rendered for the convenience or accommodation of another in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) good faith; nor does it include subordinate employment, not affecting the management or control of the business, or directly influencing custom.

The case of Angelica Jacket Co. v. Angelica, 121 Mo. App. 226, 98 S. W. 805, is not strictly in point, as it there appeared that the defendant, who had covenanted not to engage in business of the character of that sold, for a certain period, was doing more than following her trade as a jacket maker for wages, but had made an attempt to produce an impression that the old concern was continuing its business.

In Finger v. Hahn, 42 N. J. Eq. 606, 8 Atl. 654, a quotation from which setting forth the grounds of decision may be found in the opinion in the SIEGEL CASE, it was held that the vendor of a retail butcher business, who covenanted "that he will not carry on the retail butcher business on his own account, or operate any butcher business, except a wholesale butcher business, within the corporate limits" of a certain city; and who thereafter entered the employment of one carrying on a grocery and retail butcher business, at a salary, assisting in both branches of the business, and doing all the buying for the establishment,—thereby violated his covenant.

In Corwin v. Hawkins, 42 App. Div. 571, 59 N. Y. Supp. 603, it was held that, where a retiring partner covenanted not to engage in a like business for a certain period in a certain village, the language of the covenant was broad enough to include business or trade, of the kind agreed upon, no matter for whom or who should be the owner of it; so that the purpose and object of the contract should be considered in determining its meaning; and that it therefore might be applicable to the solicitation of business for a relative in whose business he had no pecuniary interest.

In American Ice Co. v. Meckel, 109 App. Div. 93, 95 N. Y. Supp. 1060, it was held that an agreement by the vendors of an ice business "that we will not at any time or times within the period of ten years from the date hereof engage directly or indirectly, or concern ourselves, in carrying on or con-

26 So. 463; Angier v. Webber, 92 Am. Dec. 765, note; Nelson v. Johnson, 38 Minn. 255, 36 N. W. 868.

Flisk, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This litigation arose in the district court of Cass county, and comes here for trial de novo. The action was brought to obtain a perpetual injunction restraining defendant from engaging in any manner in the pawnbroker, secondhand clothing, and jewelry business in the city of Fargo for the period of two years from and after February 13, ducting the business of selling ice at retail or wholesale, either as principals, agents, servants, or otherwise," was violated by one of them in entering the employ of a competitor and soliciting the patronage of the customers of the buyer of the business.

In Peterson v. Schmidt, 13 Ohio C. C. 205, it was held that, where a vendor of a bakery business agreed not to engage in the same business in a certain locality, such agreement was violated by his re-engaging in such business in the name of his wife, by whom he claimed to be employed.

In Anderson v. Ross, 14 Ont. L. Rep. 685, it was held that an agreement not to carry on or engage or be interested, directly or indirectly, in any business in a certain town, which should compete or interfere with the business of the other party, was violated by entering into the employment of another as manager, at a salary, of a competing business.

When not a breach of covenant.

In Battershell v. Bauer, 91 Ill. App. 181, it was held that an agreement never to start in the dry-goods, clothing, boot or shoe business in a certain place, directly or indirectly, as long as the other party continued in business in said place, was not violated by the promisor's acceptance of employment as clerk by another person engaged in a similar business, assisting and advising both in purchases and sales, but not being himself directly or indirectly interested in the business. The court said: "The contract did not prohibit appellant from accepting employment as assistant or clerk to others engaged in the like business mentioned in the contract, and we do not understand it is contended by appellees that it did; and in this view we think appellees failed to prove the case." This case is distinguished in SIEGEL v. MARCUS as being based on the particular wording of the contract there under consideration and the tacit admission of appellees that the contract did not prohibit appellant from accepting his employment as assistant or clerk to others.

In Grimm v. Warner, 45 Iowa, 106, it was held that the covenant of the vendor of an ice business, not to engage in the ice business in the city, was not violated by the personal service rendered by him to others, if he acted in good faith and was not interested in the business further than as an employee; the court saying: "He does not engage in the ice business by working for those who were so engaged. The covenant is intended to bind him not to carry on the business." In commenting upon this decision in the case of Wilson v. Delaney, 137 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Iowa, 636, 113 N. W. 842, as stopping short of the true rule, it was said: "We may concede that, where one has contracted to remain out of a certain business, the prohibition is not to be taken as absolute in the sense that it extends of necessity to every branch of employment. Thus, it might be held that assisting in the manual labor of putting up ice should not be construed into a contract violation. So, also, where one enters the service of a rival concern as book-keeper, stock keeper, watchman, to have charge of machinery, or other like employment. And this is so because it is not likely that out of these there could come any substantial mischief."

In Eastern Exp. Co. v. Meserve, 60 N. H. 198, it was held that a promisor, by entering into the service of another for wages, did not violate his agreement "to do no express business, or in any way be connected with or interested in any express," which might run over certain railroads; the court saying: "The intention of the parties, as gathered from the written instrument, seems to have been that the defendants should no longer carry on the express business on their own account over the plaintiffs' route, or over other roads to competing points on their line. It excludes them from interest or profit in the business, but there is no stipulation excluding them from personal employment in it in the service of another; and hence we think that entering the service of another as employee merely is not engaging in or carrying on the business of expressmen within the meaning of the agreement."

In Tabor v. Blake, 61 N. H. 83, an agreement by one not to open, or cause to be opened, for himself, a billiard or eating saloon in a certain place, was held not violated by opening and managing such a saloon as the agent and servant of another. This decision proceeds upon the ground that, if engaging in the business for any other person had been intended, it would have been added.

In Haley Grocery Co. v. Haley, 8 Wash. 75, 35 Pac. 595, it was held that an agreement of the vendor of a grocery business not to engage in such business either in his own name or in that of another, or conduct or engage in any such business for any other firm, person, or corporation, with any share of the profits, or with any interest in the property, and with no secret or actual accounting or division of either property or profits, for his benefit, or for compensation regulated on the basis of profits or sales of property or stock, was not violated by engaging in such business as a salesman at a monthly salary.

1907; it being plaintiff's contention that defendant entered into a lawful and binding contract to abstain during such period from engaging in such business in said city.

The facts are not seriously in dispute, and may be summarized as follows: Prior to February 18, 1907, respondent and appellant were copartners engaged in the secondhand clothing, jewelry, and pawnbroker business at 218 Front street in Fargo. On that date, by mutual consent, such copartnership was dissolved, and a full settlement was effected between them, whereby it was agreed that appellant's interest in the copartnership property, which consisted partially of cash and partially of merchandise, was of the value of $1,100, which sum respondent agreed to pay, and did pay, appellant in cash as consideration for the execution and delivery by appellant to respondent of the following agreement:

For and in consideration of the sum of eleven hundred dollars ($1,100), to me in hand paid by Abe Siegel, I hereby specifically agree as a part of the consideration for said money, not to engage for the next two (2) years in the pawnbroker, secondhand clothing, and jewelry business within the city of Fargo, Cass county, North Dakota; and I also hereby sell, assign, set over, and deliver all my right, title, interest, and lien in, to, and upon the secondhand clothing, jewelry, and pawnbroker business now owned and conducted by Abe Siegel & Company, at No. 218 Front street, Fargo, North Dakota, and every claim thereto and thereunder, and waive all right to the use of the said name or any part thereof in any business whatsoever. And I further agree, as a part of the consideration herein, not to engage in the said business aforesaid, in the manner aforesaid, or with any partner, partners, firm, company, or corporation for the period aforesaid. The receipt of said eleven hundred dollars ($1,100) is hereby specifically acknowledged. Said sale and purchase being made at my request and all of said goods being delivered unto said Abe Siegel free and clear of any and all encumbrance and indebtedness on my account or through me. And in execution hereof, and in agreement hereto, I have hereunto set my hand and seal the day and year first above written, that is to say, this 18th day of February, A. D. 1907, in the presence of the witnesses whose names are hereunto attached.

Cassel Marcus.

Witnesses:

Matt Siegel
E. Siegel.

In September, following, one Sam Epstein embarked in a similar pawnbroker business 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

two doors east of respondent's place of business on Front street in said city, where he has continued said business ever since. Appellant, at or prior to the opening of said store by Epstein, entered into a contract of employment as clerk to work for and manage said store for said Epstein at a salary of $60 per month, and appellant at the time of the commencement of this action was thus engaged in conducting said business as aforesaid, he being experienced in the business, while Epstein was inexperienced. There was considerable testimony tending to show that appellant was a partner with Epstein in such business; and, while it was admitted by said parties that they had certain preliminary negotiations looking towards the consummation of a copartnership arrangement between them, such negotiations were never consummated. Appellant and the said Epstein both testified, and the trial court found, that such negotiations were never completed. At the conclusion of the trial, the district court made findings of fact and conclusions of law favorable to plaintiff, and judgment was rendered perpetually enjoining appellant from engaging in said business in the city of Fargo in any manner whatever "as hireling, clerk, agent, or with a partner, partners, firm, or corporation," until after February 18, 1909, and for costs and disbursements, to reverse which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The only controversy between the parties arises on account of a disagreement between them regarding their legal rights under the agreement above stated; it being appellant's contention that his employment as a clerk in the store of Epstein did not and does not violate the terms of said agreement, while respondent contends to the contrary. Minor questions are raised which we will consider later. It is conceded at the outset by appellant's counsel, and in this respect the law is well settled, that where a person, on the sale of a business or his interest in a business, contracts with the purchaser that he will not engage in that particular line of business in a certain locality for a certain period of time, he is bound by such contract; and a court of equity, on a proper showing, will restrain him from violating such agreement. This court, in Mapes v. Metcalf, 10 N. D. 601, 88 N. W. 713, in effect so held. Among other things, the court there said: "It has always been held lawful for the vendor of the good will of a business to bind himself to refrain from conducting a like business within a limited territory and for a limited period, provided, only, that his agreement to refrain shall be no more extensive than is necessary to secure to the vendee the fruits of his purchase." Section 5374, Rev. Codes 1905, provides:

"Partners may, upon or in anticipation of a dissolution of the partnership, agree that none of them will carry on a similar business within the same city or town where the partnership business has been transacted, or within a specified part thereof."

It seems also to be reasonably well settled, and we think correctly so, that parties to such contracts must not only comply with the letter, but with the spirit, thereof as well. It was so held in the late case of Kramer v. Old, 119 N. C. 1, 34 L.R.A. 389, 56 Am. St. Rep. 650; 25 S. E. 813, where the court, among other things, said: "Where injunctive relief is asked, it is the duty of the court to restrain the contracting parties from violating the spirit as well as the letter of the agreement." In Emery v. Bradley, 88 Me. 357, 34 Atl. 167, we find the following language: "It must be evident that for the defendant to get into and carry on the business . . . as clerk or agent of any person would violate the spirit and purpose of his agreement with the plaintiff. He would be carrying on the business, though as clerk or agent. It does not matter how or in what manner and what name he acts, if he in fact carries on the business he agreed not to carry on, he is acting, he is breaking his promise, whether he acts as principal or agent. Located at Bar Harbor and carrying on the photograph business there as clerk or agent, he would be in direct competition with the business he had sold to the plaintiff,—as much so as if he were doing the same acts in his own name. The spirit of his agreement requires that he should not compete in this business with the plaintiff, either directly, in his own name, or indirectly, as clerk or agent of someone else. In equity and good conscience he should abstain from both modes of competition. Under the allegations in the bill, he can and should be enjoined from both,"—citing Whitney v. Slayton, 40 Me. 224; Dwight v. Hamilton, 113 Mass. 175; Boutelle v. Smith, 116 Mass. 111. In Finger v. Hahn, 42 N. J. Eq. 606, 8 Atl. 654, we find this language: "I cannot perceive that the mere fact of his being employed at the salary protects him against this covenant. In my judgment, the letter and spirit of the covenant are just as certainly violated as though he were in partnership with Horst, or had the entire ownership and control of the business himself. In common sense or reason, the object of every such covenant is to get rid of the competition which endangers the business of the purchasing party, to remove beyond reach the influence of the vendor's popularity, business integrity, knowledge, or skill, and to make it impossible for personal influences and friendly considerations, arising from long-continued business acquaintance, exerting themselves to the prejudice of such purchaser. Without these considerations, such contracts are quite meaningless. But not one of these influences is there which will not be felt or brought to bear, to a greater or less extent, if the vendor engage in business even as a clerk." To the same effect, see Jefferson v. Markert, 112 Ga. 498, 37 S. E. 758; Meyer v. Labou, 51 La. Ann. 1726, 26 So. 463; Nelson v. Johnson, 38 Minn. 255, 36 N. W. 868; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 859; 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1280, and cases cited.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Appellant's counsel rely upon Grimm v. Warner, 45 Iowa, 107, Battershell v. Bauer, 91 Ill. App. 181, Haley Grocery Co. v. Haley, 8 Wash. 75, 35 Pac. 595, and Bishop on Contracts, p. 521, as supporting the contrary rule. We have examined these authorities, and, with the possible exception of the Illinois case, we do not consider them at all in point. In the latter case the agreement was, "To never start in the dry-goods, clothing, boot or shoe business in Milton, Pike county, Illinois, directly or indirectly," as long as appellees continued in business in said place. It was said: "The contract did not prohibit appellant from accepting employment as assistant or clerk to others engaged in the like business mentioned in the contract, and we do not understand it is contended by appellees that it did; and in this view we think appellees failed to prove the case." This case, when considered in the light of the particular wording of the contract there under consideration and the tacit admission of appellees that the contract did not prohibit appellant from accepting employment as an assistant or clerk to others, cannot be deemed an authority in support of appellant's contention in the case at bar.

In the light of the above well-established rule, it is entirely clear to our minds that, under the facts, the trial court very properly held that appellant was violating his said contract with plaintiff. The facts in the case at bar disclose a clear violation by appellant of the spirit, if not the letter, of the contract, and render it a plain case for equitable relief. The record fairly discloses that appellant was instrumental in causing such rival business to be established; that he went to Minneapolis, where he purchased stock with which to start the business; and that he was the active agent in the conduct and management thereof after it was started. The testimony further shows that appellant at times stood on the sidewalk in front of respondent's store soliciting his prospective patrons away from him and urging them to become patrons of Epstein's place of business.

But appellant contends that, if the contract be given the construction herein given to it, it would violate paragraph 23 of article 1 of our state Constitution, which provides: "Every citizen of this state shall be free to obtain employment wherever possible, and any person, corporation, or agent thereof, maliciously interfering or hindering in any way any citizen from obtaining or enjoying employment already obtained, from any other corporation or person, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor." We think such contention devoid of merit. Such constitutional provision is not applicable to the facts in this case, and was not intended to abolish the long and well-established rule recognized by the foregoing authorities and others too numerous to mention.

Appellant also contends that there was no adequate consideration for the contract in question. This contention is supported by the argument that, inasmuch as appellant's interest in the cash and stock of the copartnership existing between plaintiff and himself was of the value of $1,100, he was entitled to such sum as a matter of law without executing and delivering to plaintiff the agreement aforesaid. But the fallacy of such argument is apparent for the reason that there was no legal duty resting on plaintiff to purchase appellant's interest in the merchandise. By the voluntary agreement of the parties plaintiff purchased such interest paying cash therefor, and, as a part of the consideration for such contract of purchase, the execution and delivery of the contract in question was made a condition thereof. This was perfectly legitimate, and there was ample consideration therefor. Rev. Codes 1905, § 5374; Kramer v. Old, supra; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 853.

Judgment affirmed.

All concur.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

ARKANSAS INSURANCE COMPANY,

Appt.,

v.

J. M. COX.

(— Okla. —, 98 Pac. 552.)

Fire insurance — separable contract — breach of condition — recovery.

1. Where an insurance policy is issued, and different classes of property insured, each class being separated from the others and insured for a specific amount; and there is a breach of the condition of the contract as to one class of the property insured, the contract should be considered, not as one entire in itself, but as one which is separable, and in which the separate amounts specified may be distinguished, and a recovery had for one or more without regard to the other items, provided the contract is not affected by any question of fraud, act condemned by public policy, or any increase in the risk of the property insured.

Same — insurable interest — ownership.

2. A vendee of land, occupying the same under an executory contract of purchase, on which he has paid a portion of the purchase price, is an "unconditional and sole owner" in fee simple of the equitable title, within the condition of a policy providing that it shall be void if the interest of the insured is other than unconditional and sole ownership of the fee simple title.

Same — contract conditions — estoppel.

3. Where it is shown that the insured truthfully and correctly stated the nature and condition of his title in making the application for insurance, he will not be precluded from recovering in case of loss, on account of a contrary title stated in the policy of the underwriter.

Same — proofs of loss — waiver.

4. Where an insurance company did not object, within a reasonable time, that proofs of loss furnished it by the insured were defective (as that the notary public before whom the same was sworn to did not designate his official title nor attach his seal), it must be held that the company waived all defects therein.

Same — premium note — nonpayment — effect.

5. Where two notes are given in payment of the premium on a fire-insurance policy, and no reference is made to them in the policy, nor the validity of the policy is in any way made contingent upon the payment of the notes, the policy is not invalidated by nonpayment of the notes at their maturity.

(September 10, 1908.)

Case Note. — Insurance; vendee under executory contract as owner, where vendor holds legal title.

The proposition that the vendee under a contract for the purchase of land, or under a bond for the conveyance of title, is a sole and unconditional owner within the meaning of a policy of insurance, is supported by well-nigh all the authorities, only a few cases being found to dispute it.

Thus, in Baker v. State Ins. Co. 31 Or. 41, 65 Am. St. Rep. 807, 48 Pac. 699, it was held that a warranty that the assured was the sole and unconditional owner of the insured property, and that the title to the land was in her name, was not broken by the fact that the legal title had not been conveyed to the assured, where she had gone into possession under a contract of purchase.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the United States Court for the Central District of the Indian Territory in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover on a fire insurance policy. Affirmed.

Statement by Hayes, J.:

Appellee, who was plaintiff below, sued appellant, who was defendant below, on a policy of insurance issued by defendant to plaintiff in the sum of $600; dated December 1, 1905, and expiring December 1, 1906. This suit was originally brought in the United States court for the central district of the Indian territory at McAlester. Plaintiff recovered judgment for the sum of $486.86, from which judgment appeal was taken to the United States court of appeals of the Indian territory, and it is before this court for final disposition under the provisions of the enabling act.

Plaintiff, in his complaint, alleges the issuance of the policy, and attaches a copy of same to his complaint as an exhibit, and alleges that a portion of the property insured by said policy was, on the 8th day of December, 1905, destroyed by fire. Defendant, in its answer, admitted the execution of the policy for the amount and on the date stated in the complaint, but sought to avoid the policy upon the ground that misrepresentations were made in the application of plaintiff therefor, which application was made by the terms thereof and by the terms of the policy made a part of the policy.

and had performed on her part all the conditions thereof to the date of the application.

And in Phenix Ins. Co. v. Kerr, 66 L.R.A. 569, 64 C. C. A. 251, 129 Fed. 723, it was held that the vendee of property, who was in possession of it under a contract whereby the former owner had absolutely agreed to sell, and the buyer absolutely to buy, on definite terms, was the sole and unconditional owner, within the true meaning of the clause upon this subject in insurance policies, because the vendor could compel the purchaser to pay for the property notwithstanding its injury or destruction.

And in Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Erickson, 50 Fla. 419, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 512, 111 Am. St. Rep. 121, 39 So. 495, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 495, it was held that the interest of a purchaser of property which he unqualifiedly agreed to buy, and which the former owner had absolutely contracted to sell to him upon definite terms, was the sole and unconditional ownership within the true meaning of such a clause in an insurance policy, though the vendor retained possession of the property sold.

So, in Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Rhea, 66 C. C. A. 103, 123 Fed. 9, it was said that it was "hardly the subject of debate" that the vendee in possession under a written agreement for the sale and purchase of property was the equitable owner thereof, and authorized to represent himself in a contract of insurance as the sole and unconditional owner.

And in Evans v. Crawford County Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 130 Wis. 189, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 485, 118 Am. St. Rep. 1009, 109 N. W. 552, it was said that the fact that one was in possession of land under a land contract, and was not in default, made him to all intents and purposes the owner of the premises, so that his interest was of sufficient dignity to satisfy a stipulation in a policy of insurance as to his interest being the entire, unconditional, and sole ownership.

This rule finds support, also in the following cases: Rumsey v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 17 Blatchf. 527, 1 Fed. 396, same case and opinion 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

ion sub nom. Ramsey v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 2 Fed. 429; Arkansas Ins. Co. v. McManus. 86 Ark. 115, 110 S. W. 797; Bonham v. Iowa Cent. Ins. Co. 25 Iowa, 328; Clay F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Mfg. Co. 31 Mich. 346; Hamilton v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 98 Mich. 535, 22 L.R.A. 527, 57 N. W. 735; Knop v. National F. Ins. Co. 101 Mich. 359, 59 N. W. 653; Martin v. State Ins. Co. 44 N. J. L. 485, 43 Am. Rep. 397; Millville Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Wilgus, 88 Pa. 107; Chandler v. Commerce F. Ins. Co. 88 Pa. 223; Carey v. Allemania F. Ins. Co. 171 Pa. 204, 33 Atl. 185; Ambrose v. First National F. Ins. Co. 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 117; Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Crockett, 7 Lea, 725; Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Ricker, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 264, 31 S. W. 248, Hamburg-Bremen F. Ins. Co. v. Ruddell, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 30, 82 S. W. 826; Johannes v. Standard Fire Office, 70 Wis. 196, 5 Am. St. Rep. 159, 35 N. W. 298; Davis v. Pioneer Furniture Co. 102 Wis. 394, 78 N. W. 596; Matthews v. Capital F. Ins. Co. 115 Wis. 272, 91 N. W. 675; Wolf v. Theresa Village Mut. F. Ins. Co. 115 Wis. 402, 91 N. W. 1014.

Policies of insurance generally contain, in addition to the clause in regard to the sole and unconditional ownership of the assured, the further stipulation that the latter owns the ground upon which the insured buildings are situated in fee simple; and it has been almost universally held that the fact that the assured has not the legal title, but holds the land under a contract of purchase, will not render such stipulation untrue.

Thus, in Dooly v. Hanover F. Ins. Co. 16 Wash. 155, 58 Am. St. Rep. 26, 47 Pac. 507, it was held that breach of the condition in a policy of fire insurance that the policy should be void if the interest of the assured was other than unconditional or sole ownership, or if the subject of insurance was a building on ground not held by the assured in fee simple, would not prevent a recovery by the assured for loss, where the application for the policy was an oral one, and no questions were asked concerning the title, and no intentional misrepresentation in regard thereto was made by the assured.

And such was the conclusion reached in

Mr. H. F. George, for appellant:

The insured misrepresented his interest in the property and cannot recover.

2 Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, p. 1129; 2 Clement, Ins. p. 35, rule 3; Rohrbach v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451; Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Weaver, 70 Md. 536, 5 L.R.A. 478, 17 Atl. 401, 18 Atl. 1034; Citizens' Fire Ins. Secur. & Land Co. v. Dall, 35 Md. 89, 6 Am. Rep. 360; Pelican Ins. Co. v. Smith, 107 Ala. 313, 18 So. 105; Deming Invest. Co. v. Shawnee F. Ins. Co. 16 Okla. 1, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 607, 83 Pac. 918.

Messrs. Campbell & Wright, for appellee:

Where different classes of property are insured, and each class is separated from the following cases: Lewis v. New England F. Ins. Co. 24 Blatchf. 181, 29 Fed. 496; Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Hughes, 47 C. C. A. 459, 108 Fed. 497; Loventhal v. Home Ins. Co. 112 Ala. 108, 33 L.R.A. 258, 57 Am. St. Rep. 17, 20 So. 419; Boulden v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 112 Ala. 422, 20 So. 587; Dupreau v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 76 Mich. 615, 5 L.R.A. 671, 43 N. W. 585; Hoose v. Prescott Ins. Co. 84 Mich. 309, 11 L.R.A. 340, 47 N. W. 587; Hall v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 93 Mich. 184, 18 L.R.A. 135, 32 Am. St. Rep. 497, 53 N. W. 727; Barnard v. National F. Ins. Co. 27 Mo. App. 26; Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 117 Pa. 460, 2 Am. St. Rep. 686, 12 Atl. 668; East Texas F. Ins. Co. v. Dyches, 56 Tex. 565; Queen Ins. Co. v. May (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 829.

Upon the same principle, it was held in the following cases that, though, in the contract of insurance, the assured stipulated that the property was "his," or that he was the owner thereof, such contract was not avoided by the fact that he was only a vendee under a contract for the purchase of land, and did not hold the legal title thereto: Southern Ins. & T. Co. v. Lewis, 42 Ga. 587; Gilman v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 81 Me. 488, 17 Atl. 544; Wainer v. Milford Mut. F. Ins. Co. 153 Mass. 335, 11 L.R.A. 598, 26 N. E. 877; Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Fogelman, 35 Mich. 481; Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Martin, 40 N. J. L. 568, 29 Am. Rep. 271; Martin v. Jersey City Ins. Co. 44 N. J. L. 273; Ætna F. Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. 385, 30 Am. Dec. 90, affirming 12 Wend. 507; McCulloch v. Norwood, 58 N. Y. 562; Chase v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. 22 Barb. 527, reversed on other grounds in 20 N. Y. 52; Acer v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 57 Barb. 68; Dohn v. Farmers' Joint Stock Ins. Co. 5 Lans. 275; Pelton v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 13 Hun. 23, affirmed in 77 N. Y. 605; Lorillard F. Ins. Co. v. McCulloch, 21 Ohio St. 176, 8 Am. Rep. 52; Brogan v. Manufacturers' & M. Mut. F. Ins. Co. 29 U. C. C. P. 414.

The same result was reached in Hough v. City F. Ins. Co. 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 581, where the assured, a vendee under a contract of purchase, stipulated that he was 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the others, and insured for a specific amount, the contract is separable.

Miller v. Delaware Ins. Co. 14 Okla. 81, 65 L.R.A. 173, 75 Pac. 1121, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 17.

An insured who makes a true statement as to title is not bound by a contrary statement in the policy.

German-American Ins. Co. v. Paul, 5 Ind. Terr. 703, 83 S. W. 60; Allen v. Phoenix Assur. Co. 12 Idaho, 653, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 903, 88 Pac. 245, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 328.

The insurer waived all defects in the proof of loss by not objecting thereto within a reasonable time.

Robinson v. Palatine Ins. Co. 11 N. M. 162, 66 Pac. 535; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 959; Killips v. Putnam F.

the absolute owner of the property; in Bonham v. Iowa Cent. Ins. Co. 25 Iowa, 329, where the ownership of the assured was described as absolute as well as unconditional and sole; and in Elliott v. Ashland Mut. F. Ins. Co. 117 Pa. 548, 2 Am. St. Rep. 703, 12 Atl. 676, where the policy was to be void if the assured's interest in the property was not fee simple absolute.

The rule here under discussion was carried still further in Williams v. Buffalo German Ins. Co. 17 Fed. 63, in which it was held that the sole and unconditional ownership clause was not breached by the fact that the assured did not have the legal title, but was a vendee under a bond for title, even though his vendor had only a life estate in the property and six-sevenths of the remainder.

Whether or not the fact that the assured is in default in the payments stipulated in the contract of purchase under which he is in possession of the insured property would affect the rule here under discussion would seem to be questioned, though in the following cases in which such was the fact the rule was applied: Loventhal v. Home Ins. Co.; Boulden v. Phoenix Ins. Co.; Chase v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co.; and Pelton v. Westchester F. Ins. Co.,—supra.

This conclusion, however, would seem to be opposed by the following Wisconsin cases, in which the fact that the assured was not in default in his payments was one of the circumstances to which the court drew attention in holding that he was an unconditional and sole owner. Johannes v. Standard Fire Office, 70 Wis. 196, 5 Am. St. Rep. 159, 35 N. W. 298; Davis v. Pioneer Furniture Co. 102 Wis. 394, 78 N. W. 596; Evans v. Crawford County Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 130 Wis. 189, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 485, 118 Am. St. Rep. 1009, 169 N. W. 952. See also Baker v. State Ins. Co. 31 Or. 41, 65 Am. St. Rep. 807, 48 Pac. 699.

And in Roberts v. State Ins. Co. 26 Mo. App. 92, the fact that the assured was in default in his payments seems to have been a material circumstance in arriving at the conclusion that he was not the "sole and undisputed" owner of the insured property, Ins. Co. 28 Wis. 472, 9 Am. Rep. 506; 4 Joyce, Ins. §§ 3360, 3362; Eagle Fire Co. v. Globe Loan & T. Co. 44 Neb. 380, 62 N. W. 895.

In the absence of a stipulation in the contract for forfeiture or suspension of the risk in case of nonpayment of a note given for the cash premium when due, payment is not a condition precedent to the validity of the policy.

2 Joyce, Ins. § 1212, p. 1290; Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. Wallace, 93 Ind. 7; McAllister v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. 101 Mass. 558, 3 Am. Rep. 404; Trade Ins. Co. v. Barraciff, 45 N. J. L. 543, 46 Am. Rep. 792; Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bowes, 42 Mich. 19, 51 N. W. 962; Shaw v. Republic L. Ins. Co. 69 N. Y. 286.

though it must be admitted that the court's language is broad enough to sustain the inference that in any event it would have arrived at the same conclusion.

And there are three cases decided by the Missouri court of appeals, in which it appeared that the assured, who had no legal title, but was a vendee under an executory contract of purchase of the insured premises, owed a small portion of the purchase price, though it is not shown whether or not his payments were past due; and in which it was held that he was not the unconditional and sole owner within the meaning of an insurance policy; though in the first case the court also held that, if a purchaser had a title bond which provided for an absolute and unconditional deed upon payment of the purchase price, this would constitute him an owner in fee simple within the meaning of a clause in a policy avoiding the same if the subject of insurance is a building on ground not owned by the assured in fee simple. The cases referred to are Hubbard v. North British & M. Ins. Co. 57 Mo. App. 1; Harness v. National F. Ins. Co. 62 Mo. App. 245; Cole v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 126 Mo. App. 134, 103 S. W. 569.

But in Barnard v. National F. Ins. Co. 27 Mo. App. 26, in which it was held that the vendor, under an executory land contract, was not the sole, entire, and unconditional owner in fee simple, the court said that the vendee might have properly described the property as his in a policy of insurance, unless the policy required the true state of the title to be disclosed.

There are some other cases which deny that a vendee under an executory contract for the purchase of land is the unconditional and sole owner within the meaning of a policy of fire insurance; but these have either been overruled by later cases, or are opposed to all the other decisions in the same jurisdiction. The cases referred to are: Liberty Ins. Co. v. Boulden, 96 Ala. 508, 11 So. 771 (specifically modified upon this question in Loventhal v. Home Ins. Co. 112 Ala. 108, 33 L.R.A. 258, 57 Am. St. Rep. 17, 20 So. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.))

Heyes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Numerous assignments of error were made by appellant, but its counsel in his brief states that all propositions raised by the various assignments of error, in so far as this appeal is concerned, are abandoned except three. It is contended that the policy was void, and plaintiff was not entitled to recover: First, because of misrepresentations made by him in the application; second, for failure to furnish proper proof of loss; third, for failure on the part of plaintiff to pay the premium notes given by him in settlement of the premium for the policy. These propositions are raised by appellant by different assignments of error, some of which go to instructions given by the court and excepted to, some to instructions re-419); Mott v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 69 Hun, 501, 23 N. Y. Supp. 400 (unnecessary to the decision, and undoubtedly opposed to the other New York cases hereinbefore cited); Reynolds v. State Mut. Ins. Co. 2 Grant, Cas. 326 (disapproved in Millville Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Wilgus, 88 Pa. 107, and Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, supra, in which it was said that the Reynolds Case was correctly decided on other grounds).

The following cases would seem at first sight to be also opposed to the prevailing rule; but, upon closer investigation, it will be noticed that the peculiar circumstances of each case prevented the application of the rule.

In Brown v. Commercial F. Ins. Co. 86 Ala. 189, 5 So. 500, it was held that, where a policy was issued to the assured on property of which he was said to be the sole and unconditional owner, and it appeared that he in fact had only a leasehold estate in the land on which the building stood, though he had an executory contract of purchase by which, upon the payment of a certain sum, the vendor was to convey to him the property, the contract was avoided. It is true that the language of the opinion is broad enough to warrant the deduction that a vendee under a contract, who did not have the legal title, could not be the sole and unconditional owner; but the fact was that the assured never paid any part of the purchase money, and held the property as lessee rather than a vendee, and there was nothing to show that he ever exercised the option of purchase.

A similar conclusion was reached in Walroth v. St. Lawrence County Mut. Ins. Co. 10 U. C. Q. B. 525, in which it also appeared that the assured had leased the property, with a covenant from the lessor that he would convey the same to the lessee on the payment of a certain sum, which contract and lease were assigned to the plaintiff, neither the assignor nor assignee being shown to have exercised the option of purchase.

So, in Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. Cal-

quested by the appellant and refused by the court, and others to the admission of testimony; but we shall not discuss in detail the various assignments of error by which these three different propositions are presented, for all the assignments or error not waived by appellant, taken collectively, present these three propositions of law. If appellant is correct in his contention as to any of them, then the case should be reversed; otherwise, the case should be affirmed.

The policy sued upon was issued by defendant at the office of its general agent at South McAlester, upon a written application of plaintiff which was procured by Foster & Dalton, agents of defendant residing at Stigler, Indian territory. The application was made upon a printed form furnished by the agents of the company. The property to be insured, the valuation and amount of insurance on each item thereof, is stated and described in the application as follows:

	Valuation.	Sum to be insured
On dwelling house	$450 00	$300 00
On household furniture therein...	150 00	100 00
On bed and bedding therein...	150 00	100 00
On wagons, buggies and harness in barn and shed	150 00	100 00

The policy issued upon the application was for an amount not exceeding $600 on property described in the policy as follows:

$300.00 on one story frame building with shingle roof and communicating additions, houn, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 409, 67 S. W. 153, it was held that, under a policy in which the assured warranted himself to be the sole owner of the insured building, there was a breach of such warranty, where it appeared that the assured owned only an undivided one-half interest therein, and had verbally agreed with his co-owner to buy the other half, but no part of the price was ever paid, and the situation of the parties never changed, upon the ground that the assured had no enforceable contract for the purchase of the interest of his co-owner.

And in Hinman v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 36 Wis. 159, in which the assured not only warranted that he was the sole and undisputed owner of the insured property, but further stated that he held the land under a contract of purchase, and that no one other than himself had any substantial interest in the property, the court held that this was equivalent to the statement that he had fully paid for the land, and was the sole owner thereof by an equitable title in fee, with a right to enforce the transfer to himself of the naked legal title outstanding in the former owner; and the fact that he was in default made the statement untrue, and was fatal to the validity of the policy. The case was so distinguished in Johannes v. Standard Fire Office, supra.

So, in the following cases, in which policies of insurance were issued by mutual companies, which were by law entitled to a lien for the premium upon the insured property, and in which the policies provided that they should be void unless the true title of the assured should be expressed in the application, it was held that the assured could not recover if he had no legal title, and was in possession of the premises under a contract of purchase, and failed to disclose the same to the insurer. Smith v. Bowditch Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Cush. 448 (in which the court said that the general rule was well established so far as "common insurance companies" were concerned); Brown v. Williams & T. Mut. L. Ins. Co. 28 Me. 252; Merrill v. Farmers' & M. Mut. F. Ins. Co. 48 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Me. 285; Falis v. Conway Mut. F. Ins. Co. 7 Allen, 46; Marshall v. Columbian Mut. F. Ins. Co. 27 N. H. 157.

As to personal property, the great majority of the cases hold that where, by a sale, the seller retains title in himself until the full amount of the purchase price is paid, the purchaser is not a sole and unconditional owner within the meaning of a policy of fire insurance, though the decisions are not put upon the ground that the insured property consists of chattels. Such was the conclusion reached in the following cases: Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Public Park Amusement Co. 63 Ark. 187, 38 S. W. 959; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Enoch, 72 Ark. 47, 77 S. W. 899; Dumas v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 12 App. D. C. 245, 40 L.R.A. 358; Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Weaver, 70 Md. 536, 5 L.R.A. 478, 17 Atl. 401, 18 Atl. 1034; Lasher v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. 86 N. Y. 423; Lasher v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 57 How. Pr. 222, reversing 55 How. Pr. 324; Cuthbertson v. North Carolina Home Ins. Co. 96 N. C. 480, 2 S. E. 258; Dow v. National Assur. Co. 26 R. I. 379, 67 L.R.A. 479, 106 Am. St. Rep. 728, 58 Atl. 999; McWilliams v. Cascade F. & M. Ins. Co. 7 Wash. 48, 34 Pac. 140.

On the other hand, an opposite conclusion was reached in the following cases, and the purchaser of chattels under a contract by which the seller retained the title was held to be the sole and unconditional owner within the meaning of a fire-insurance policy. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Hughes, 47 C. C. A. 459, 108 Fed. 497; Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. v. Strain, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 958, 70 S. W. 274; Light v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 105 Tenn. 480, 58 S. W. 851.

The question whether the existence of a vendor's lien upon the insured property would be a breach of a clause requiring the insured to have the entire, unconditional, and sole ownership, is discussed in Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Pitts, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 627, and the case note thereto.

including foundations, on water, gas, and steam pipes and fixtures, on electric wires and annunciators, while occupied as a dwelling house or ———, and situated town of Garland, I. T.

$100.00 on household and kitchen furniture, useful and not ornamental, beds, bedding, linen, stoves, provisions, and family wearing apparel in good condition.

None on sewing machine, all while contained in the above described building. None on piano or organ all while contained in the above described building.

Barn and Contents.

$100.00 on one story frame barn with shingle roof building including foundations and stalls, situated in the rear of the above described building.

Miscellaneous.

$100.00 on wagons, buggies, and harness in barn or shed.

$600.00 total concurrent insurance permitted, including this policy.

The first alleged misrepresentation in the application for which defendant seeks to avoid the policy is that the policy covers one buggy which was not owned by plaintiff at the time of the issuance of the policy, but that plaintiff, by the terms of the application and policy, represented that he owned same. By the terms of the application plaintiff's answers therein were made his warranties, and the policy contained the following clause: "This entire policy shall be void if the insured has concealed or misrepresented, in writing or otherwise, any material fact, or circumstance concerning this insurance or the subject thereof; or if the interest of the insured in the property be not truly stated herein; or in case of any fraud or false swearing by the insured touching any matter relating to this insurance or the subject thereof, whether before or after a loss."

By virtue of this clause of the policy, it is contended by defendant that the policy is void and of no effect because of plaintiff's misrepresentations as to his interest in the buggy. There is no specific reference in the application or in the policy as to any buggy or buggies, except as has been set out hereinbefore in the clauses quoted from the application and from the policy. Upon receipt of the policy by plaintiff, he read the clause "$100.00 on wagons, buggies, and harness in barn or shed," and thereupon called the attention of defendant's agents, through whom the application for insurance was made, to the fact that he owned no buggy. It appears that plaintiff inferred from the language of said clause in the policy that it was intended to insure a buggy,—and he had owned, prior to the giving of the application for insurance, a buggy, but he had sold the same some sixty days before that time. There is no explanation of how the clause in the application and in the policy came to include the word "buggies." The agents were unable to remember that any request for insurance upon buggies was made, or any representation by plaintiff that he owned any buggy at the time the application was given; and there is nothing in the policy or in the application that indicates that any such representation was made other than the clause quoted. Plaintiff owned a wagon which, however, was not destroyed by fire. He also owned some harness which was still in the barn and shed covered by the policy. There is no evidence whatever that the policy was made to cover buggies through any fraudulent act or procurement of plaintiff; nor was it shown that the risk of the company was increased by reason of the policy having included buggies when the insured owned no buggy. In order to forfeit this policy, the insurance company insists that these clauses in the application and policy should be construed to insure a buggy which plaintiff had at one time owned, but which he did not own at the time he made his application or at the time of the issuance of the policy, and that he represented that he owned the same. There was no evidence that plaintiff owned or represented that he owned any buggy, or that there were any buggies at the time of the issuance of the policy, kept by him in said barn and shed. There was no insurance on any buggy thus located, for none existed. The construction which the insurance company insists upon in this case is for the purpose of incurring a forfeiture of this policy. Forfeitures are not favored by the law. The reasoning that would support the construction that, by virtue of said clauses plaintiff represented he had one buggy and that one buggy was insured would also support the construction that he had more than one buggy, for the language of the clause is "buggies," not "buggy." This application and the policy were written upon printed forms of the company, and no doubt for the purpose of convenience to itself and agents. A mere failure of the company or of the applicant to strike from the application and from the policy the word "buggies," in the absence of any other showing by the terms of the application or of the policy, or of representations made by the insured that the insured owned a buggy, that the same was to be included in the policy and was included in the policy, should not be construed as a representation that he did own a buggy. Plaintiff owned a wagon and harness, and it is not shown that the value of the same was not sufficient to entitle him to all the insurance he obtained thereon by virtue of this clause in the policy; but, if the policy and application were construed, as contended for by the insurance company, as including representations of plaintiff that he owned a buggy and that the policy insured the same, still this would not be sufficient to avoid the entire policy. Items of property insured by the policy were separately valued and insured in separate amounts, and, under the rule adopted by the supreme court of the territory of Oklahoma in Miller v. Delaware Ins. Co. 14 Okla. 81, 65 L.R.A. 173, 75 Pac. 1121, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 17, a breach of the policy as to one item insured therein would not avoid the policy if the same was not affected by any question of fraud, act condemned by public policy, or any increase in the property insured; and this is true notwithstanding the policy contained a provision that "this entire policy shall be void if the insured has concealed. . . ." There is not an absence of authorities holding to the contrary, and this court, in Sullivan v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co. (Okla.) 94 Pac. 676, had occasion to cite some of the authorities holding on both sides of this proposition; but we were not called upon in that case to decide which rule this court would adopt, and did not do so. The authorities supporting the doctrine announced by the court in Miller v. Delaware Ins. Co. supra, are well collected by the court in that opinion; and we think that the rule adopted by the court in that case is the rule supported by the greater weight of authorities, and should not be overturned by this court, but should be adopted and followed.

Herzog v. Palatine Ins. Co. 36 Wash. 611, 79 Pac. 287, presents a state of facts similar to those in the case at bar. The policy in that case in one item insured a piano for the sum of $200, but the insured did not, at the time of the fire or at the time the policy was issued, own any piano whatever. The record did not disclose how the piano came to be included in the policy of insurance. The court held that, where a policy of insurance is issued covering different classes of property, and each class is insured for a specific sum, a breach of the contract of insurance as to one or more of the items does not avoid the policy as to the other items not affected by the breach, in the absence of fraud, act condemned by public policy, or increase of risk to the property insured by reason of the breach as to the part. Plaintiff in the case at bar waives any claim for loss of property included in the clause of the policy covering wagons, buggies, etc.

The second alleged misrepresentation for which it is sought to avoid the policy is that in the application the following questions and answers were made: "Q. Is your ownership of property to be insured absolute, unqualified, and undivided? A. Yes. Q. In whose name is the land on which property to be insured is located? A. R. L. Folsom. I have a contract for the land these buildings are on with a Choctaw Indian and have paid him for it." It was agreed that, at the time of the application and of the loss, plaintiff occupied the land upon which said improvements were located under a contract with R. L. Folsom to give him, the plaintiff, a deed to said land when said Folsom received his patent; that the entire consideration to be paid for the land was $500; that, at the time the application was made by plaintiff, plaintiff had paid $425 on the consideration, and the remaining $75 was, by the terms of the contract, not to be paid until Folsom should deliver to plaintiff a deed to the land. The policy contained the following clause: "This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed herein or added hereto, shall be void . . . if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership, both legal and equitable; or if the subject of insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple; or if the subject of insurance be personal property and be or become encumbered by a chattel mortgage. . . ." Defendant insists that the answers of plaintiff in his application as to his interest in the dwelling house and barn insured and the land on which the same was situated were false, and that he did not have the unconditional and sole ownership, both legal and equitable, of the property, and that he was not the owner of the fee-simple title to the land on which said buildings were situated, and that, by reason of such facts, the policy, under the provision thereof quoted supra, was void. There was no misrepresentation by plaintiff in his application as to who owned the legal title to the land on which the property was situated. His answers to the questions in the application disclose that the same was held in the name of R. L. Folsom. This fact was known to the insurance company by the written application of plaintiff, containing such answer, being before the company at the time it issued the policy sued on; and the company, having with full knowledge issued the policy to plaintiff, cannot now insist upon the clause in the policy requiring the insured to be the unconditional and sole owner of the legal title, but will be held to have waived such condition. The law will not permit it, with full knowledge of the condition of the legal title to the land on which the insured's property was located, to accept the application and the premium note given by the insured in payment of the premium on the policy, and to insert in the policy a provision contrary to the conditions of the title as represented by the application by which it may defeat the right of recovery in case of loss. German-American Ins. Co. v. Paul, 5 Ind. Terr. 703, 83 S. W. 60; Allen v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 12 Idaho, 653, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 903, 88 Pac. 245, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 328.

Was plaintiff the unconditional and sole owner of the equitable title to the land on which the property insured was located? There is no denial that Folsom held the legal title to the land in controversy, or that the contract of sale between him and the plaintiff is valid; and, since the burden of proof is upon defendant to establish such facts as were necessary to avoid the policy, in the absence of any attack upon the validity of the contract between Folsom and plaintiff, it will be assumed that it was valid, and passed the interest in the land in controversy purported to have been passed by such contract. As to what interest in property answers the requirement of the provision of a standard fire insurance policy to the effect that "the entire policy shall be void if the interest of the insured be other than the sole and unconditional ownership, or if the subject of insurance be located on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple," has often received the consideration of and been determined by the courts. The authorities hold, almost without exception, that a vendee of land who occupies the same under an executory contract of purchase is the unconditional and sole owner of the same and of the fee-simple title thereto within the provision of policies of insurance above quoted, and that this is true although the entire purchase price has not been paid. This question was ably discussed in Loventhal v. Home Ins. Co. 112 Ala. 108, 33 L.R.A. 258, 57 Am. St. Rep. 17, 20 So. 419, in which case the court holds the rule herein announced, and supports the same with citations from numerous authorities. Other cases in which the same doctrine is announced are: Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Crockett, 7 Lea. 725; Matthews v. Capital F. Ins. Co. 115 Wis. 272, 91 N. W. 675; Tuck v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 56 N. H. 326; Knop v. National F. Ins. Co. 101 Mich. 359, 59 N. W. 653; Baker v. State Ins. Co. 31 Or. 41, 65 Am. St. Rep. 807, 48 Pa. 699; Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 117 Pa. 460, 2 Am. St. Rep. 686, 12 Atl. 668.

In Phenix Ins. Co. v. Kerr, 66 L.R.A. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

569, 64 C. C. A. 251, 129 Fed. 723, it was held that the interest of a purchaser of property, which the purchaser has unqualifiedly agreed to buy, and which the former owner has absolutely contracted to sell to him upon definite terms, is a sole and unconditional ownership within the true meaning of the ordinary clause on that subject in insurance policies, because the vendor may compel the vendee to pay for the property and suffer any loss that may occur.

Plaintiff, at the time of the issuance of the policy, occupied the lands upon which the property insured was located, and he had placed thereon the buildings insured under the policy, and he had occupied the land under the contract of purchase, on which he had paid all the purchase price except $75. He was the unconditional and sole owner in fee simple of the equitable title to said land, and had such an interest therein as was required by the conditions of the policy relied upon for a forfeiture, except that he did not own the legal title, but that portion of the condition of the policy was waived by defendant. Nor did the assured make any misrepresentations as to his interest in the property, although he stated that he had paid the person from whom he had contracted the land therefor. The fact that he owed a balance of $75 to Folsom on the contract of purchase in no way affected his title to the land, or his unconditional and sole ownership thereof within the meaning of the condition in the policy; and this was true although the vendor had a lien upon plaintiff's interest in the land for the balance of the purchase price. A lien created or a mortgage executed by the insured upon his property does not affect his title to the property, or his insurable interest thereon, and, unless required to do so by the application for insurance or the conditions of the policy, the insured need not disclose the existence of such lien or mortgage. 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 168-170, and authorities there cited; Loventhal v. Home Ins. Co. supra.

One of the provisions of the policy required the insured, in case of loss by fire, to render proof of loss to the company, signed and sworn to by him, within sixty days after the fire. Plaintiff, within eight or ten days after the fire, made out a statement of his loss, subscribed and swore to the same, and forwarded it to the company, but the notary public before whom plaintiff swore to the proof of loss omitted to indicate his official title and to attach his seal. The company made no response to plaintiff's proofs of loss. Plaintiff after a time, and before the expiration of sixty days, wrote the company inquiring why they gave no attention to his claim. To this letter he received no response. Shortly after the expiration of sixty days after the fire the company, through its agents, began an investigation of the loss, but no objection was ever made to the proofs of loss submitted until this action was brought, and defendant cannot avail itself of the defect therein now. If the proofs of loss given by plaintiff were defective, and not in compliance with the policy, and not satisfactory to defendant, defendant should have notified plaintiff of such facts within a reasonable time, and pointed out to him the specific defects in order that plaintiff might remedy the same, and, having failed to do so, the defendant waived its right to have the proofs of loss submitted in the exact form and manner prescribed by the policy. 4 Joyce, Ins. § 3362; Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 28 Fla. 209, 10 So. 297; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 959.

Plaintiff executed two promissory notes in payment of the premium on the policy. These notes were past due and unpaid at the time of the institution of this suit, and defendant contends for forfeiture of the policy for the nonpayment of said notes, but neither the notes nor the policy make the validity of the policy contingent upon the payment of the notes. These notes were given by plaintiff and accepted by defendant in payment of the premium just as so much cash, and plaintiff is liable thereon for the amount of the same. Plaintiff in fact has tendered payment of the same to the company, which was refused. In the absence of stipulation in the note or in the policy of insurance that failure to pay the notes given in payment of the premium should operate as a forfeiture of the policy or a suspension of the risk, the policy will continue in force after the maturity of the notes although the same are not paid. 2 Joyce, Ins. § 1212.

Finding no error in the matters complained of by appellant in its assignments of error relied upon, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

Williams, Ch. J., and Dunn, Turner, and Kane, JJ., concur.

TEXAS COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS.

B. S. MUCKENFUSS, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF TEXAS.

(— Tex. Crim. App. —, 116 S. W. 51.)

Sunday — theater — single offense.

Only one conviction can be secured for 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

giving several performances in the theater on Sunday, under a statute providing that any proprietor of any place of amusement who shall permit it to be open on that day shall be fined.

(February 3, 1909.)

Case Note. — Violation of Sunday law as a continuing offense.

This note is limited strictly to cases similar to MUCKENFUSS v. STATE, that is passing on the question whether two or more performances, sales, or other violations of the Sunday law constitute one offense, for which only one conviction can be had or fine imposed, or whether such performances, sales, etc., constitute different offenses, for which a conviction can be had or fine imposed for every violation of the law. It therefore excludes cases where the violations were committed on different Sundays, or which turn on the question whether the violations belonged to distinct and different classes of offenses, as, for instance, the selling and giving away of intoxicating liquors. Those cases also have been expressly excluded where the violations complained of were not of the Sunday law, but of laws governing the conduct of persons on election days or other legal holidays.

The question whether a person who gives two or more performances in a theater, or makes several sales during the day, in violation of the Sunday law, is guilty of more than one offense, seems to depend to a great extent upon the wording of the statute violated. If the statute contemplates the prevention of the opening for business of a place of amusement, saloon, or other place generally connected with the violation of the Sunday law, or a prevention of exercising one's ordinary trade on that day, it is held, in accordance with MUCKENFUSS v. STATE that a repetition of the same violation at another part of the day will not make the guilty party subject to two or more convictions; but such party is guilty of only one offense for which only one conviction can be had or only one fine imposed.

Thus, in State v. James, 81 S. C. 197, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 617, 62 S. E. 214, it was held that several sales by a merchant on the Lord's Day constitute but one offense, under a statute providing a penalty for exercising one's ordinary trade on that day.

To the same effect is Crepps v. Durden, 2 Cowp. 640, where a baker was convicted for selling loaves of bread at various times on the same Sunday. The court said: "On the construction of the act of Parliament, the offense is, 'exercising his ordinary trade upon the Lord's Day,' and that without any fractions of a day, hours, or minutes. It is but one entire offense, whether longer or shorter in point of duration. So, whether it consists of one or of a number of particular acts. The penalty incurred by this offense is 5 shillings. There is no idea conveyed by the act itself that, if a tailor sews

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Dallas County Court convicting him of violating the Sunday law. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Walker & Williams for appellant.

Messrs. Dwight L. Lewelling and F. J. McCord for the State.

Davidson, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There are several very interesting questions in the case presented for revision, but, on the Lord's Day, every stitch he takes is a separate offense; or, if a shoemaker or carpenter work for different customers at different times on the same Sunday, that those are so many separate and distinct offenses. There can be but one entire offense on one and the same day."

In Friedeborn v. Com. 113 Pa. 242, 57 Am. Rep. 464, 6 Atl. 160, it was held that, under a statute forbidding the performing of any worldly employment or business on Sunday, there can be but one violation by the same person on the same day; and consequently a tobacconist who makes several sales of his wares during that day can have but one fine imposed upon him.

A similar case, holding to the same effect, is Com. v. Moses, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 224.

And see People v. Cox, 70 Mich. 247, 38 N. W. 235, sufficiently set out in MUCKENFUSS v. STATE.

Where, however, the statute aims at the particular offense, a conviction of one will not bar a conviction for another similar offense committed on the same day.

In State v. Heard, 107 La. 60, 31 So. 384, it was held that, under a statute requiring all stores, etc., to be closed on Sunday, and forbidding all selling, etc., a conviction for selling a drink of beer to one person on that day is not a bar to a prosecution for selling on the same day a flask of whisky to another. The court said: "The acts charged in the two informations, though both charged as of the same day, are not necessarily one and the same; the act of selling one drink of beer to Ben Barnes, for which the first conviction was had, is not the same as the act of selling a flask of whisky to Austin Montgomery, which is the act charged in the second information: proof of the one act could not support a conviction for the other, and this is the recognized test for determining whether the first conviction is a bar to the second prosecution. We do not say that the two acts might not, in fact, constitute one and the same transaction, out of which the prosecution might carve but one crime, but we say that on the face of the papers they constitute two distinct transactions. It would have been admissible for defendant to prove their identity; but the proof in the case, far from proving their identity, proves their severalty: there is in the record an admission to the effect that the two sales were 'to different parties at different times on the same day.' Hence they were, in fact, separate transactions. But defendant contends that what is made a crime by the statute is the opening of a saloon on Sunday, and not the making of sale on that day. We cannot agree with that view. Whether the opening and the selling are not both and each made a separate crime, and might not 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) both and each furnish matter for separate prosecution and punishment, might be a question; but certainly the selling is made a separate crime. All that part of the statute relative to opening might be stricken out and a complete statute be left denouncing the making of sales; and, on the other hand, all that part of the statute forbidding the making of sales might be stricken out and a complete statute be left making it a crime to open. The statute, in its title, is stated to be one 'requiring all stores, etc., to be closed on Sunday, and forbidding all selling, etc.,' that is to say, the statute is stated to have a twofold object, first, to require stores to be closed; and, second, to forbid sales. It is very questionable whether stores may be kept open, even although sales are not made; but it is very certain that the business of selling cannot be carried on on Sunday, even behind closed doors."

In Com. ex rel. Barth v. McCann, 123 Ky. 247, 94 S. W. 645, it was held that a violation of the Sunday law by keeping open a barroom is not necessarily a continuous offense; and that, where one is arrested for keeping his barroom open on Sunday, and, after giving bail, he returns and opens it a second time, he has committed two offenses.

So, in Albrecht v. State, 8 Tex. App. 313, under a statute intended to prevent barter and sale of merchandise on Sunday, each act of barter and sale made on that day is an offense for which an independent prosecution will lie.

In Com. v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1400, 108 S. W. 851, it was held that, under a statute providing in certain cases a penalty for each offense in employing persons to labor on Sunday, and that the employment of every person shall be deemed a separate offense, a fine may be recovered for each person employed on that day.

In Westfall v. State, 4 Ga. App. 834, 62 S. E. 558, it was held that an indictment which charges in one count a violation of a statute relating to the running of freight trains on Sunday, in running six freight trains on a railroad in the county on Sunday, is not demurrable on the ground that it charges six distinct and separate offenses. The court said: "While, strictly speaking, the running of each train may have been a violation of the law, yet we think the running on the same day of six trains might well have been treated as but one offense. Certainly this did not embarrass the defendant in making his defense or deprive him of any right. In fact, this method of pleading could not be otherwise than beneficial to the defendant."

under the view entertained of the record, it is only necessary to consider one question.

It is disclosed by the transcript that appellant was charged with two violations of the Sunday law (article 199, Penal Code 1895) on the same day, to wit, Sunday, the 19th day of the month. A conviction resulted on the first trial, and proper judgment was entered. When the second case was tried, a plea of former conviction was filed. A second conviction resulted. The facts show there were two performances given at the theater, one at 2:30 and the other about 8:30 o'clock the same evening. There is evidence to the effect that the performance might be considered a continuing one, and parties who bought tickets for the matinee at 2:30 could remain to the one that occurred at night; but this phase of the testimony is not considered important.

The question, concisely stated, is: The state contends, under the statute, a conviction could be had for each performance; and appellant, that only one conviction could be obtained, no matter how many exhibitions were given on the particular Sunday. The statute reads as follows: "Any merchant, grocer, or dealer in wares or merchandise, or trader in any business whatsoever, or the proprietor of any place of public amusement, or the agent or employee of any such person, who shall sell, barter, or permit his place of business or place of public amusement to be open for the purpose of traffic or public amusement on Sunday, shall be fined," etc. The term "place of public amusement" shall be construed to mean circuses, theaters, variety theaters, and such other amusements as are exhibited and for which an admission fee is charged. The issue is tersely presented, whether or not a theater giving more than one exhibition on Sunday can be punished for each performance.

We answer this in the negative. "Sunday," as used in this statute, means the entire day; that is, from midnight Saturday night until midnight Sunday. It includes twenty-four hours. Such has been the construction of "day" in all the decisions of this state where simply a "day" is mentioned. This statute is totally unlike those which make each particular act a violation of the law. Had the statute provided that each exhibition should constitute a violation of the law, appellant's position would not have been well taken. It is unnecessary to cite authorities, we think, in Texas to sustain these positions. One conviction for opening places of business on Sunday is a bar to prosecutions for opening at other times on the same day. It has been the subject of discussion, and has been so decided, in other states. See, especially, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

People v. Cox, 70 Mich. 247, 38 N. W. 235. This was a decision by the supreme court of Michigan. The court, among other things, said: "We are all of the opinion that the law contemplates but a single offense upon Sunday. The saloon is to be closed all day, and the opening of the same once or a dozen times is the same in the eye of the law. If it is not closed all day, the law is infringed; and if it is open all day, the law is broken. The statute is violated by its not being closed, and the law does not ordinarily divide a day unless the intent of the legislature is clear." To the same effect is Altenburg v. Com. 126 Pa. 602, 4 L.R.A. 543, 17 Atl. 799.

Applying any test to this character of case under the statute and facts as disclosed by this record, appellant's contention is correct that the state can only carve one offense of opening a theater on Sunday. In order for the state to carve prosecutions in cases of this character, the statute must prescribe, or the legislative intent must be clear, that it was the purpose to make each act or performance punishable. This cannot be done under the general inhibition of the exhibition confined to one day. It is manifest that the legislative intent was not to carve offenses on this day, or permit prosecutions for each separate exhibition; and it is equally patent that it was intended to punish such exhibitions only when they occurred on Sunday, treating the day as an entirety. We are therefore, of opinion that appellant's plea of former conviction was well taken, and sustained by the law and the facts.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIFTH CIRCUIT.

JAMES MALLORY HARDIE, Appt.,

v.

SWOFFORD BROTHERS DRY GOODS
COMPANY.

(— C. C. A. —, 165 Fed. 588.)

Bankruptcy — fraud — partnership — discharge.

1. That goods were procured by a partnership on credit through false representations in writing of one partner as to the Case Note. — Right of bankrupt to discharge as affected by act of partner or agent.

Although the causes enumerated by the bankruptcy act for the refusal of a discharge vary, in that in some cases intent is made an element by the express language of the statute, an inquiry common to such condition of the concern will not prevent the discharge in bankruptcy of his copartner, who had no knowledge of the wrongdoing.

Same — discharge of bankrupt — policy.

2. The release of the honest, unfortunate, and insolvent debtor from the burden of his debts, and his restoration to business activity in the interest of his family and the general public, is one of the main objects of the bankruptcy law of 1898.

(Shelby, Circuit Judge, dissents.)

(December 1, 1908.)

APPPEAL by applicant from a judgment of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Texas of them as are not wholly personal in character is whether such statutory provisions are to be construed strictly, with reference solely to the phraseology employed, or liberally, in the light of an assumed purpose to relieve honest, but insolvent, debtors. As it is sometimes otherwise put, Is the discharge of the debtor to be regarded as incidental, or is its refusal to be regarded as in the nature of a penalty for dishonest conduct? So, where intent, by the provisions of the statute, must accompany the act, the question arises whether the intent of an agent or partner of the bankrupt will preclude the granting of a discharge. And, where intent is not expressly made an element, the question arises, Is it by implication such, so as to relieve the bankrupt from the consequences, so far as his discharge is concerned, of the act of his partner or agent?

Commission of punishable offense (§ 14b. [1]).

In Re Meyers, 105 Fed. 353, it was held that a discharge should not be refused to a wife, notwithstanding a concealment of assets by her husband in managing her business; since, in order to make any concealment a bar to a discharge, the facts must constitute under § 14b, (1), "an offense punishable by imprisonment," i. e., a crime, to which the personal guilt is indispensable.

Failure to keep, or concealment of, books (§ 14b, [2]).

In Re Hyman, 97 Fed. 195, it was held that a discharge would not be refused to a married woman because her husband, to whom she had confided the entire management of her business, had, without her knowledge, failed to indicate in the books kept by the concern certain losses incurred through his speculation; and had concealed some of the assets. The court said: "The present act requires that the court shall discharge the applicant unless he has (1) committed an offense punishable by imprisonment as herein provided; or (2) with fraudulent intent to conceal his true financial condition, and, in contemplation of bank-refusing a discharge in bankruptcy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Pardee, McCormick, and Shelby, Circuit Judges:

Messrs. Gordan Bullitt and Mason Williams, for appellant:

A false written statement made by one member of the firm without knowledge or consent of the other member will not preclude the innocent member from obtaining his discharge in bankruptcy.

Re Blalock, 118 Fed. 679; Re Hyman, 97 Fed. 195; Re Schultz, 109 Fed. 264; Re Meyers, 105 Fed. 353; Re Dresser, 13 Am. Bankr. Rep. 637; Re Hixon, 93 Fed. 440. Mr. M. L. Crawford for appellee.

ruptcy, destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep books of account or records from which his true condition might be ascertained."

. . . It will be seen that fraudulent intent is a necessary element of either offense. But fraudulent intent is a personal quality, and, although it existed in the mind of the husband, it may not, for that reason, be imputed to the wife. Constructive fraud does not exist for the purpose of punishment, and the statute in question is penal in its nature, as it involves the forfeiture, for misconduct, of a right of discharge. The wife confided the entire business to her husband, and, it may be assumed, not only gave affairs no personal attention, but blindly allowed him to conduct the same. She cannot be deemed either to have anticipated bankruptcy, or to have been guilty of fraud in keeping her books, for the single and only reason that her husband and agent was guilty in such direction. Negligence—at least negligence of the degree here involved—is not equivalent to fraud, within the meaning of the statute."

In Re Meyers, supra, it was held that a bankrupt who had no personal knowledge of any concealment or destruction of the books of account by her husband, who managed her business, should not be refused a discharge. The author of the opinion, however, although feeling himself constrained to follow Re Hyman, supra, expressed the opinion that, if the question were a new one, he should be inclined to consider, as no "offense" or penal element exists in the requirements of subdivision b, (2), § 14, that the principal is responsible, as respects a discharge in bankruptcy, for the fraudulent conduct of the agent to whom the whole business has been committed, as in civil cases generally, where the fraud has been committed for the principal's benefit.

In Re Schultz, 109 Fed. 264, it was held that a discharge would not be refused to a bankrupt because of the fraudulent acts of his partner in keeping the firm books of account so as to conceal his withdrawals of money. The court said: "If in any case fraud can be similarly imputed to an innocent partner on account of the fraud of his

Pardee, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment in bankruptcy refusing a discharge. The facts of the case are undisputed and as follows:

On May 15, 1905, the firm of A. F. Hardie & Company, and the individual members thereof, to wit, Alva Finley Hardie, his son, James Mallory Hardie, and Max Kaliski, were, upon the petition of creditors, adjudged bankrupt. An application of discharge was filed by the members of the firm on the 27th of October following. Opposition to the discharge having been filed by the Swafford Brothers Dry Goods Company, two of the partners, A. F. Hardie and Kaliski, withdrew their prayer for discharge, leaving the application to stand in behalf of J. M. Hardie alone. The principal ground of opposition urged by the Swafford Brothers Dry Goods Company was the following: "That on, to wit, the 13th day of February, 1905, the said firm made and delivered to the said Swafford Brothers Dry Goods Company a statement in writing, materially false, respecting the condition of the business of the said firm. By the said statement it appears that the said firm had assets of the value of $115,116. Said statement further shows that the said A. F. Hardie had, in real estate and real-estate notes, $60,000. The said Swafford Brothers Dry Goods Company shows that the said statement was absolutely false, in this: That the said A. F. Hardie did not have real estate or real-estate notes of the value copartner or other agent as respects the false or improper keeping of books of account (see Re Meyers (D. C.) 105 Fed. 354). it can only be in cases where the fraudulent entries or omissions have reference to partnership transactions so as to fall within the general scope of the partner's or agent's authority. The frauds in the bookkeeping in this case related to transactions of a wholly different character, in which the partner was defrauding his copartner, as well as his creditors, in reference to transactions wholly outside of the partnership authority. As the bankrupt cannot be held to be charged with any wilful misconduct in regard to the books, either in fact or in law, and the other charges not being sustained, his discharge should be granted."

In Re Garrison, 79 C. C. A. 126, 149 Fed. 178, it was held that a discharge should not be denied for failure to keep proper books of account where the bankrupt, who resided in New York, intrusted the management of the business, which was in Port Huron, Michigan, to his partner. Considering separately the ingredients of the statutory cause for refusing a discharge,—the first being that the bankrupt failed to keep books of account, the second, that his omission to do so was with intent to conceal his financial condition,—the court said of the first-mentioned: "Granting that his conduct in not keeping a closer watch upon the business at Port Huron was careless and even reprehensible, we fail to see how it can be said that he failed to keep proper books showing the condition of a firm whose business was conducted by one of the partners in a distant state, and whose books were never under his control during the short life of the partnership. It would seem a sufficient answer to the charge against him to show that he never saw the books, did not keep them or direct their keeping, and, having confidence in his partner, supposed that the business was being properly conducted."

Making false statement (§ 14b, [3]).

The decisions considered under this head present an aspect of the broader question whether actual fraudulent intent is a necessity (I.R.A. (N.S.)

sary ingredient of this cause for refusing a discharge, which question, however, is of greatest practical importance in connection with the subject under discussion.

For the case of Re Dresser, 144 Fed. 318, 13 Am. Bankr. Rep. 637, reference may be made to the opinion in the case reported.

In Re Collins, 157 Fed. 120, it was held that a statement in writing, for the purpose of obtaining property on credit, made by the bankrupt upon examination of his books, and considered by him to be correct, would not prevent him from obtaining a discharge, although such statement was in fact erroneous through the failure of the books to show certain liabilities which had not been entered because of the absence of the bookkeeper on account of illness. The court said: "The bankrupt act was intended partly to relieve embarrassed, but honest, debtors from certain of their liabilities, unless they have been guilty of certain acts enumerated in § 14b of the act. The refusal of a discharge is clearly in the nature of a punishment for doing this act, and certainly must be construed as penal. The acts enumerated, which will debar a bankrupt from a discharge, are in most of the states violations of the Criminal Code, and all of them of a nature that every state might with propriety make them criminal offenses. The court is not prepared to say that, in order to prevent a discharge, the proofs must be sufficient to warrant a conviction in a criminal case; but it does hold that to justify such action it must appear that he was guilty of such acts as would sustain a civil action for fraud or deceit, and that the statements were either knowingly false or fraudulent, or made so recklessly as to warrant a finding that he acted fraudulently.

Any other conclusion would result in many instances in preventing a discharge of a worthy bankrupt, whose business was too large to permit him to attend to all the details thereof, including the keeping of the books. A man conducting a large mercantile business, employing a bookkeeper for the purpose of attending to the books, he attending to other branches of the business, has the right to rely on a statement of $60,000, or anything approximating that amount; that the value of the assets of the firm did not exceed $60,000, and that the liabilities of the said firm were approximately $100,000; that, while the said statement shows the firm to be worth, over and above all liabilities, the sum of $90,000, still, in truth and in fact, the said firm was then insolvent. The said statement was made by the said firm to the Swafford Brothers Dry Goods Company for the purpose of inducing the said Swafford Brothers to sell to the said A. F. Hardie & Company goods, wares, and merchandise on credit, and that they relied upon the truth of the said statement and did sell to the said A. F. Hardie & Company goods, wares, and merchandise, aggregating the sum of $1,500 and upward, which said goods, wares, and merchandise have never been paid for."

After taking proofs, the referee found the facts substantially as set forth in the specification of opposition referred to, and made this additional finding: "I find that said statement was made by Alva Finley Hardie, and without the knowledge of said James Mallory Hardie; but at that time James Mallory Hardie was a member of the aforesaid partnership, and bound by its statements issued as aforesaid."

prepared from the books; and if, relying upon such a statement, he acts upon it in good faith, he is not guilty of such recklessness as amounts to fraud in the eyes of the law, or as should prevent his discharge.' Of this discussion it is said in Re Gilpin, infra, that it seems rather to be rested upon the assumption that it would be a hardship to deny a discharge unless the bankrupt has been guilty of false pretense or of deceit, than upon a preliminary application of the rules of statutory construction to the language of the clause in question.

The contrary view, that the statute puts the refusal of a discharge for the cause under consideration upon a civil liability, is maintained in Re Gilpin, 160 Fed. 171. It was there held that an intent to defraud is not either expressly or by implication, an ingredient of such cause; and that therefore a discharge should be refused to a bankrupt who had obtained credit at a bank upon the strength of a written statement made upon a blank furnished by the bank, which, after signing he gave to his bookkeeper to fill out and send to the bank, although the bankrupt either did not know what the statement contained, or did not know that it was materially false, and had no conscious intention to deceive the bank. The elaborate argument upon which this construction of the statute is based is too lengthy to be herein quoted, but may be summarized as follows: That, before the amendments of 1903, the causes specified by the statute as the only grounds for refusing a discharge already involved the element of conscious fraud, showing that, where the statute as originally drawn intended to make fraudulent intent the necessary element, it knew how to use appropriate and unmistakable language, as was also done in adding § 14b. (4); that there is no need to imply in clause (3) an intent to defraud, as § 17 deals effectively and completely with the matter of obtaining property by false pretenses by declaring that debts thus fraudulently created are not to be discharged at all; that the mischief at which clause (3) is evidently aimed is the obtaining of property by means of a written statement that is not true, whether fraudulent or innocent, two penalties being already provided—by § 17 a, (2) and by § b, (3)—for a false statement that is also fraudulent; that it is fair to require the bankrupt, in the interest of a high standard of commercial integrity and of scrupulously fair dealing between debtor and creditor, to know the important facts about his business, so as to be able to state them with substantial accuracy; and that there is obvious danger in permitting the bankrupt to take shelter behind a subordinate's act, while he profits by the error or fraud which his duly authorized agent has committed in his name.

Transfer or concealment of assets (14b. [4]).

In Re Berry, 146 Fed. 623, it was said, obiter, that, if employees of the bankrupts, who had complete control of the business of borrowing money for the firm on securities, had in fact transferred the bankrupts' property with intent to defraud the bankrupts' creditors, the bankrupts' discharge would have been barred.

But in the case of Re Leavitt, 1 Hask. 194, Fed. Cas. No. 8,169, under the act of 1867, it was held that a fraudulent preference given by one partner without the knowledge, authority, or consent of his copartner will not deprive the latter of his discharge in bankruptcy; the court saying: "Whilst one partner is ordinarily bound by, and responsible for, the doings of his copartner in behalf of the firm, this principle should not be extended to the fraudulent misconduct of a partner, and render a partner criminally amenable for his copartner's wrongful conduct, in which he was not personally a participant. A preference or payment, in violation of the provisions of the bankrupt act, . . . is, by the act, constituted and declared to be a fraud, and the most serious consequences result from its commission. Each partner ought to be held personally accountable and amenable to its provisions for his own fraudulent misconduct; but I do not think that it was ever the purpose of the farmers of this act to punish an innocent partner, by a refusal of his discharge, for a fraudulent preference given by his copartner without his knowledge, authority, or consent. It is a personal penalty, to which each party is to be made subject only for his own acts and deeds."

It is clearly shown by the record that, after A. F. Hardie made the statement, the Swafford Brothers Dry Goods Company shipped merchandise to the firm of A. F. Hardie & Company at San Antonio, amounting in value to about $1,300, and that the merchandise was received by the firm and commingled with the stock on hand.

The matter to be decided upon this appeal is correctly stated by the trial judge as follows: "The only question of law to be determined is whether the fraud thus committed by A. F. Hardie may be interposed as a bar to the discharge of J. M. Hardie, who, it is conceded, did not participate in the wrongful act and had no knowledge of its perpetration."

The trial judge, in his opinion, found in the record, cites Parsons, Partn. 3d ed. 163; Story, Partn. 166; Collier, Partn. §§ 445, 447; and Strang v. Bradner, 114 U. S. 561, 562, 29 L. ed. 248, 250, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1038, and cases there cited, all to the effect, as summed up in Strang v. Bradner, that each partner is the agent and representative of the firm with reference to all business within the scope of the partnership. And if, in the course of the partnership business and with reference thereto, one partner makes false or fraudulent misrepresentations of fact to the injury of innocent persons who deal with him as representing the firm, without notice of any limitations upon his general authority, his partners cannot escape pecuniary responsibility upon the ground that such misrepresentations were without their knowledge. The trial judge then proceeds to say as follows: "While the cases cited do not decide the very question involved in the present controversy, they nevertheless distinctly hold that a fraud committed by one partner in the course of the partnership business renders the firm pecuniarily liable to the aggrieved party for the wrongful act of the offending member. In the case before the court is shown by the record that A. F. Hardie was the financial agent of the firm and one of its buyers; that the false statement was made by him in the course of the partnership business, and for the benefit of the firm, and that the firm actually received and appropriated the fruits of the fraudulent transaction. If, under the facts stated, the law would impute the fraud of the delinquent partner to innocent members of the partnership to the extent of imposing upon the firm a pecuniary liability, no sound reason is perceived why the principle should not be applied to the present proceeding by refusing a discharge to a member not assenting to the fraud. The court is of the opinion that the principle is applicable to both cases. and, hence, that the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) prayer of J. M. Hardie for a discharge should be denied." [143 Fed. 609.]

The authorities cited above are indisputably correct as to the propositions declared, but we doubt if they should be permitted to control the case. So far as they go, the liability of the innocent partner for the torts of the wicked partner, committed within the scope of the partnership, is based on the application of the principles of agency, and is restricted to pecuniary liability alone. In this country, since the abolition of imprisonment for debt, the punishment of the innocent principal or the innocent partner for the wrong committed by the agent or partner has not been pushed further than to affect business reputation and to impose pecuniary liability. It is said that the discharge of a bankrupt under the present bankruptcy law is an act of grace, merely incidental to the general purpose, and in fact could be refused entirely; and it is argued from this that the provisions of the law relating to the discharge of bankrupts should be construed against the bankrupt, and all implications and doubts should be resolved against him.

Since the days of Queen Anne (4 & 5 Anne, chap. 17, § 19), the discharge of the prima facie honest bankrupt and his future estate and effects has been provided for in every bankruptcy law,—at first with many restrictions, even requiring the consent of creditors; and it is provided in our last act that the bankrupt, whether voluntary or involuntary, applying for a discharge, shall receive it, unless "he has (1) committed an offense punishable by imprisonment as herein provided; or (2), with intent to conceal his financial condition, destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep books of account or records from which such condition might be ascertained; or (3) obtained property on credit from any person upon a materially false statement in writing made to such person for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit; or (4), at any time subsequent to the first day of the four months immediately preceding the filing of the petition, transferred, removed, destroyed, or concealed, or permitted to be removed, destroyed, or concealed, any of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors; or (5), in voluntary proceedings, been granted a discharge in bankruptcy within six years; or (6), in the course of the proceedings in bankruptcy, refused to obey any lawful order, or to answer any material question approved by the court." [32 Stat. at L. 797, chap. 487, § 4, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1907, p. 1026.]

All of these exceptions, except the fifth, are based on criminal conduct, or actual dishonesty quasi criminal in nature; and this great advance from the early days when insolvency was treated as a crime goes to show that the discharge of the honest bankrupt is favored, and the opposition to a discharge under the present law is burdened with the necessity of bringing the inculpatory facts alleged strictly within the exceptions enumerated in the law.

Originally, in bankrupt laws, the discharge of the bankrupt may have been incidental, and the main purpose the equal distribution of his goods among creditors; but to say it now, and of the present law, we must shut our eyes to the actual practice in our courts. In nearly all and every voluntary bankruptcy brought under the present law the administration or distribution of the bankrupt's property has been practically concluded before filing petition, and the sole object of the petitioner is to be relieved of his debts; and in number the voluntary cases are about four to one of the involuntary. See Report, Dept. of Justice, 1907. And the same may be said of the voluntary cases under the act of March 2, 1867, chap. 176, 14 Stat. at L. 517, which was passed mainly to relieve the unfortunate debtors ruined by and through the vicissitudes of the Great Civil War.

For these considerations, we are disposed to deny that in the present bankruptcy law the discharge of the honest debtor is a mere incident which could have been omitted without impairing its symmetry and efficiency; and, on the contrary, to assert that the release of the honest, unfortunate, and insolvent debtor from the burden of his debts, and restore him to business activity, in the interest of his family and the general public, is one of the main, if not the most important, objects of the law.

The adjudged cases called to our attention and bearing on the question herein favor a liberal construction of § 14 of the bankruptcy law in the matter of the discharge of honest bankrupts. Act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, 30 Stat. at L. 550, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3427. In Boyd v. Arnold, 79 C. C. A. 135, 149 Fed. 187, this court ordered a discharge under circumstances as follows: "The referee specifies the four grounds of objection that were made by the creditors to the application for discharge, and distinctly finds that the mistake, if any, that was made in the verified schedules, was not made wilfully and fraudulently, nor with the intention of concealing any interests from his creditors; that the 1,579 acres of land was not transferred to his wife, nor procured to be transferred to her, for the purpose of defrauding, hindering, or delaying his creditors; that the indefinite interest which the bankrupt (in the opinion of the referee) had in the 1,579 acres of land was not wilfully and fraudulently concealed from his trustee; that the $85 referred to in the fourth objection, which the bankrupt drew from the Boyd Mercantile Company, another bankrupt, and had same charged to his personal account, was not done by him for the purpose of defeating the bankruptcy act; that the bankrupt has fully complied with the requirements of Congress and the orders of the court touching his bankruptcy; and that all notices, wherever required, have been given in the manner and length of time required by the bankruptcy act and the rules of court. These findings of the referee, so far as they are disputed by the appellees, are, in our opinion, amply supported by the testimony."

And see Re Blalock (D. C.) 118 Fed. 679.

In Re Hyman (D. C.) 97 Fed. 195, the wife was held not to be liable for the fault of her agent (her husband) in not keeping true books of account; and, to the same effect, see Re Meyers (D. C.) 105 Fed. 353.

In Re Schultz (D. C.) 109 Fed. 264, the innocent partner was held not to be liable for the neglect of his copartner in not keeping true books of account.

Re Dresser (D. C.) 144 Fed. 318, 13 Am. Bankr. Rep. 637, is well reasoned, and is directly in point. The referee reported: "The bankrupt Riess seems to have had no share in making the later 'short statement' relied upon by the objecting creditors; and they do not claim that he was personally concerned in the alleged fraud other than as a partner of Dresser. It is true that, on principles of agency, Riess is liable civilliter for the fraudulent acts of Dresser which were clearly within the scope of the partnership business and for the firm's benefit. Schroeder v. Frey, 60 Hun. 58, 14 N. Y. Supp. 71; Bradner v. Strang, 89 N. Y. 299, affirmed in Strang v. Bradner, 114 U. S. 555, 29 L. ed. 248, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1038. The discharge in bankruptcy would not, therefore, affect a debt so created. The present act specifies, among nondischargeable debts, 'liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations.' Act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, § 17a, cl. 2, 30 Stat. at L. 550, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3428. But these considerations do not affect the right of an innocent partner to a discharge under § 14b, cl. 3, of the amended bankruptcy act of February 5, 1903, chap. 487, § 4, 32 Stat. at L. 797, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1907, p. 1026. The right to a discharge is distinct from the effect of a discharge. Re McCarty (D. C.) 111 Fed. 151, 7 Am. Bankr. Rep. 40; Re Marshall Paper Co. 43 C. C. A. 38, 102 Fed. 872, 4 Am. Bankr. Rep. 468. It was held, under the act of 1867, which in § 33 provided that 'no debt created by fraud or embezzlement of the bankrupt shall be discharged,' that 'fraud' as used in that section meant 'positive fraud in fact involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong, as does embezzlement, and not implied fraud, or fraud in law, which may exist without the imputations of bad faith or immorality. Such a construction of the statute is consonant with equity, and consistent with the object and intention of Congress in enacting a general law by which the honest citizen may be relieved from the burden of hopeless insolvency. A different construction would be inconsistent with the liberal spirit which pervades the entire bankruptcy system.' Neal v. Clark (Neal v. Scruggs), 95 U. S. 704, 24 L. ed. 586 (by Mr. Justice Harlan). Therefore, although, on principles of agency and partnership, a discharge may not relieve Riess from 'liabilities for obtaining property by false representations' (a question not to be decided here), it is considered that, not having himself participated in the making of the 'short statement' relied on by the banks, the fraud of his partner cannot, under these circumstances, be imputed to him, and his discharge cannot, therefore, be refused. Re Hyman (D. C.) 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 169, 97 Fed. 195; Re Meyers (D. C.) 105 Fed. 353, 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 4."

This report and recommendation were confirmed by the court.

As we find no reason in the law (and, certainly, none in business or morals) why an honest bankrupt should not be discharged, we answer the question, stated by the trial judge in this case, in the negative.

It is therefore ordered that the decree of the District Court be reversed, and the decree now rendered here that the petition of James Mallory Hardie for a discharge in bankruptcy be, and the same is hereby, granted.

Shelby, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

After the bankruptcy act of 1898 (Act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, 30 Stat. at L. 550, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3427) had been in force nearly five years, Congress discovered that § 14 was too liberal in permitting discharges. It was found that the bankrupt could obtain a discharge when it seemed inequitable and unjust for him to have it. There were in the act only two grounds named on which the granting of the discharge could be opposed: When he has (1) committed an offense punishable by imprisonment as herein provided; or (2) when he has, with intent to conceal his true financial condition, destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep books of account or records from which such condition might be ascertained. Section 14b. Clause 1 relates only to criminal offenses, and clause 2 involves intentional wrong. On February 5, 1903, the act was amended by adding four additional grounds upon which the right to a discharge might be contested. This case involves the construction of the third ground added by the amendment, which provides that the court must discharge the applicant, unless he has (3) "obtained property on credit from any person upon a materially false statement in writing, made to such person for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit." Section 14b, as amended (chapter 487, § 4, 32 Stat. at L. 797, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1907, p. 1026). This clause involves no specific intent, nor offense punishable under the act. The court below held that it was applicable to a partnership and to the members thereof, and refused a discharge to a member because the firm, without the knowledge of the applicant, acting by another member, had obtained property on a false written statement, contrary to the terms of the clause. The question, when the principle involved is considered, is whether a person is barred of his discharge by clause 3 when he obtains the property by a materially false statement made by an agent acting within the scope of his authority.

Section 14 is applicable to "any person" who may be adjudged a bankrupt, including corporations and partnerships. Section 1 (19), and §§ 4 and 5. Clause 3 of the amendment is therefore, by the words of the act, made applicable to partnerships and corporations. A partnership, by the terms of the act, "during the continuation of the partnership business, or after its dissolution and before final settlement thereof, may be adjudged a bankrupt." § 5. The partnership is made a separate entity, and, as such, subject to the terms of the act. Under the act before its amendment, a discharge did not release the bankrupt from a debt for property "obtained by false pretenses or false representations." § 17. The amendment, therefore, was not to prevent a discharge from the liability for property obtained by the materially false statement, and the discharge, neither before nor since the amendment, releases the bankrupt from such liability. But it releases him from his general debts, and it was to prevent this release in the cases covered by the amendment that the several grounds of opposition to the discharge were enacted. The evil and wrong to be corrected by clause 3 was the obtaining property on credit by false written statements. Before its enactment, the bankrupt might add largely to his estate by making false written statements, and yet obtain a discharge as to all of his debts (with the few statutory exceptions), except the debt to the person to whom he made the false representations. The purpose of the amendment was to prevent this, and to deprive the bankrupt who made such statement of his discharge. The evil is the same whether the bankrupt acts himself or by an agent. The creditor loses his property because of his reliance upon a materially false written statement. And it appears to me wrong to permit the bankrupt to take shelter behind his agent's act while he profits by the fraud committed in his name.

The construction placed on the statute by the opinion just read tends, I think, to defeat the purpose of the amendment. Mercantile business is to a large extent conducted by firms and corporations, and, if the doctrine of agency is to have no application in the enforcement of clause 3, the false written statement made to obtain credit can be made without risk as to obtaining the discharge. A firm may be composed of ten members, and only one, as managing partner, may make the false statement and obtain property for the firm, and nine members may be discharged, although the firm has reaped the benefit of the fraud. And every member can secure his discharge if the firm has an agent, who is not a member thereof, to make a false statement. The assets of the firm being distributed, and it dissolved and out of business, its failure to obtain a discharge as a partnership would not matter to the discharged members. Firm debts are provable debts also against each member as an individual bankrupt, and the partnership debts are discharged, so far as they are individual liabilities, by the discharge of the partner in individual proceedings. 2 Remington, Bankruptcy, § 2796. While a partnership is a separate entity, the substantial thing that makes it is the individual members, and to discharge them is to emasculate clause 3 so far as it is applicable to partnerships. A single person engaged in business may make a materially false statement in writing through his managing clerk or agent, and thereby obtain credit and property. Yet, on the principle announced, he would be entitled to his discharge on his denial of guilty knowledge of the false statement, although he had received the fruits of the fraud, unless his knowledge of his clerk's action could be affirmatively proved,—which, in practice, would usually be impossible.

And is clause 3 not to be applied to bankrupt corporations? If so, it can only be done by holding the principal, when he or it applies for a discharge, bound by the materially false written statement made by the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

agent within the scope of his authority. If the idea is to prevail that the discharge is not to be barred by the false written statement made by an agent acting within the scope of his authority, clause 3 of the amendment cannot be applied to partnerships at all, nor to corporations, for both must act by agents. And that view is in conflict with several provisions of the act. It seems to me that the only way to give effect to the intention of Congress, as shown by clause 3, is to hold that it is applicable to partnerships and corporations (Re Marshall Paper Co. 43 C. C. A. 38, 102 Fed. 872) which become bankrupts, and that when the former, or the individual partners, seek a discharge from the partnership debts, neither can be discharged if the partnership, acting by a duly authorized agent, has obtained property on credit from any person upon a materially false statement in writing, made to such person for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit.

The cases cited in the opinion of the court, with one exception, relate to instances where the discharge of the bankrupt was opposed on a ground involving an "offense punishable by imprisonment" (clause 1), or where a forbidden act was done with a wrongful or fraudulent "intent." Such cases are distinguishable from a case arising under clause 3, where no question of punishable offense is involved, and where Congress has not used the word "intent," nor its equivalent, but has made a described act, done for the purpose of obtaining property, a bar to a discharge.

The only case cited that relates to the amendment in question is Re Dresser (D. C.) 144 Fed. 318, 13 Am. Bankr. Rep. 637. The excerpt from that case, quoted in the opinion of the majority, appears in the report of the referee. No exception was taken to this conclusion of the referee, and the court, in deciding the case, makes no allusion to that part of the referee's report (144 Fed. 318), nor was that part of the report mentioned when the same case reached the appellate court (74 C. C. A. 680, 145 Fed. 1021). The fact that this report of the referee was acquiesced in by the parties, and not sustained by the opinion of either court, is mentioned in Re Gilpin (D. C.) 160 Fed. 171, 182, a well-considered and learned opinion which clearly shows that the referee's report is not sound in principle.

I have found no case directly in point construing clause 3, but the general principle that each partner is the agent of the firm as to all business within the scope of the partnership, and that, if one partner makes false or fraudulent representations of fact, the other partners are bound by such statements, although made without their knowledge, is recognized in the construction of the bankruptcy acts both in this country and in England. Strang v. Bradner, 114 U. S. 561, 29 L. ed. 250, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1038; Cooper v. Prichard, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 351.

With all my deference for the opinion of my brethren, I cannot concur in their view that there is no reason in "law, business, or morals" for the construction the learned district court placed on the statute. Re Hardie (D. C.) 143 Fed. 607. The construction, I think, is good in law, because it is based on the apparent intention of Congress; in business, because it will tend to prevent false written statements to secure credit; and in morals, because it makes for fair dealing and righteousness.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

CHARLES VICKERS, by Next Friend, Plff. in Err.,

v.

KANAWHA & WEST VIRGINIA RAILROAD COMPANY.

(— W. Va. —, 63 S. E. 367.)

Master — independent contractor — liability.

1. The general rule, subject to exceptions, is that, where one has contracted with a competent and fit person exercising an independent employment to do a piece of work, not in itself unlawful, or of such a nature that it is likely to become a nuisance, or to subject third persons to unusual danger, according to the contractor's own methods, and without being subject to control, except as to results of his work, will not be answerable for the wrongs of Headnotes by MILLER, J.

Case Note. — Effect on master's liability to servant of delegation of personal duty to independent contractor.

The earlier cases upon the effect of delegation of personal duties to an independent contractor are collected in a note to Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Olsen, 54 L.R.A. 52, where they are said to be so conflicting as to render it impossible to formulate any definite doctrine upon the subject.

As supporting, or tending to support, the rule that a master cannot relieve himself from the performance of a positive duty by the employment of an independent contractor, are cited Macdonald v. Wyllie, 1 Sc. Sess. Cas. 5th series, 339; Toledo Brewing & Malting Co. v. Bosch, 41 C. C. A. 482; 101 Fed. 530; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Passmore, 90 Ga. 203, 15 S. E. 760; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

such contractor, his subcontractors, or his servants, committed in the prosecution of such work.

Same — railroad company — place of work — nonassignable duty.

2. But, with respect to railroads, the nonassignable duty of the master to provide its servant a reasonably safe place to work extends to the entire track over which the servant is required to pass in the discharge of his duties; and this is a positive duty, which, although intrusted to an independent contractor, will not absolve it from liability for the nonperformance thereof.

Same — independent contractor — negligence — liability.

3. Where one is employed by a railroad company as an independent contractor, to do certain work in the construction of its roadbed, in all matters incident to the use of its tracks permitted by such company the contractor and his workmen represent the will of the company, and its responsibility remains.

Same — place of work — nonassignable duty.

4. Although a railroad company employs a competent independent contractor to do certain work, and, in the execution of his contract, permits him to suspend over its tracks guy ropes, the effect of such contract, with respect to such ropes, is simply to delegate to such independent contractor performance of a nonassignable duty of such company to maintain a reasonably safe place for its servants to work, rendering it liable for his negligent performance thereof.

Same — negligence of independent contractor — construction of railroad.

5. Where a railroad company has permitted the erection of guy ropes over its tracks, by an independent contractor employed to perform a part of the work of constructing its roadbed, it will nevertheless be rendered liable for any negligence on the part of such independent contractor in relation to such guy ropes, whether competent or not, although it may not

Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 18 L.R.A. 215, 32 N. E. 285; Herdler v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. 136 Mo. 3, 37 S. W. 115; Burnes v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 129 Mo. 41, 31 S. W. 347; Bartley v. Trorlicht, 49 Mo. App. 214; Sackewitz v. American Biscuit Mfg. Co. 78 Mo. App. 144; Leslie v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. 110 Mo. 31, 19 S. W. 308; Trainor v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 137 Pa. 148, 20 Atl. 632; Moran v. Corliss Steam Engine Co. 21 R. I. 386, 45 L.R.A. 267, 43 Atl. 874; Conlin v. Charleston, 15 Rich. L. 201; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shearer, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 343, 21 S. W. 133; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Delaney, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 427, 55 S. W. 538; and Meier v. Morgan, 82 Wis. 289, 33 Am. St. Rep. 39, 52 N. W. 174.

And, as supporting, or tending to support, have had actual notice of such negligence in time to have avoided injury to its servant resulting therefrom. In such cases the law requires inspection and tests adequate to avoid dangers.

Same — Independent contractor — vice principal — liability.

6. Where a railroad company intrusts performance of any of its positive duties to its servants to an independent contractor, his relationship to the defendant becomes that of vice principal, and his negligent performance of those duties becomes notice to his principal, rendering it liable for injuries to its servants, resulting therefrom.

(December 9, 1908.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Kanawha County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to the view that the master is not liable for the negligence of an independent contractor with respect to a duty generally regarded as nondelegable, are cited Kiddle v. Lovett, L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 605; Devlin v. Smith, 25 Hun, 206, affirmed in 89 N. Y. 470, 42 Am. Rep. 311; Wittenberg v. Friederich, 8 App. Div. 433, 40 N. Y. Supp. 895; Ardesco Oil Co. v. Gilson, 63 Pa. 146; and Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Stevens, 97 Va. 631, 46 L.R.A. 367, 34 S. E. 525,—of which it is said: "The cases absolving the master from responsibility for the negligence of an independent contractor in this connection clearly seem to have been decided upon a false theory of the circumstances involved. It is a contradiction in terms to speak of an absolute duty as being susceptible of delegation if it can be delegated in any particular instance, it ceases, ex hypothesi, to be absolute."

The cases decided since the compilation of such note disclose a trend of opinion toward the adoption of the doctrine applied in the case reported.

Thus, in Shea v. Pacific Power Co. 145 Cal. 680, 79 Pac. 373, where the accident causing the death in question was caused by the giving way of a nipple, which had recently been repaired, connecting a mud drum with the boiler, it is stated that the owner of a boiler is not absolved from all liability on account of the bursting of the boiler while in use, simply by procuring an independent contractor to repair it; but that, in addition to this, he must use reasonable diligence to see that it is kept in repair.

In McBeath v. Rawle, 93 Ill. App. 212, affirmed in 192 Ill. 626, 69 L.R.A. 697, 61 N. E. 847, where plaintiff's intestate, who was in the employ of a stone-setting contractor, was injured by the giving way of a scaffold constructed by the brick-mason contractor, which, in pursuance of an established custom was used in setting the stones, it was held that, by whatever means the decedent's employers acquired it, they have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wertz & Van Fleet, for plaintiff in error:

It was the master's duty to inspect and warn the employees of unusual danger.

Newhouse v. Kanawha & W. V. R. Co. 62 W. Va. 562, 59 S. E. 1071; Bailey, Personal Injuries relating to Master & Servant, § 2571; Madden v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 28 W. Va. 610, 57 Am. Rep. 695; Felice v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 14 App. Div. 345, 43 N. Y. Supp. 922; Cooper v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 24 W. Va. 37; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Burnett, 88 Va. 539, 14 S. E. 372; Johnson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 38 W. Va. 206, 18 S. E. 573; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Delaney, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 427, 55 S. W. 538; Erslew v. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. 49 La. Ann. 86, were in any event bound to the duty imposed upon them by the law to exercise a reasonable degree of care in the furnishing of it as a place for their employees to work; and that the doctrine of independent contractor did not apply.

In Bernheimer Bros. v. Bager (Md.) 70 Atl. 91, where the employee of a concern engaged in the construction of a building was injured while at work, by the falling of a prop placed by his employers to support the wall of an adjoining building, it was held that the employers could not escape liability upon the theory that the fall of the prop was due to the act of an employee of independent contractors engaged in tearing down the old buildings on the lot and excavating the cellar; the court saying: "It would be carrying the doctrine of independent contractor beyond what the law authorizes to permit an owner of property to thus insecurely erect a dangerous instrument over where his employees were to work, and then escape the result of his negligence, by letting the work to be done to a contractor. The appellants were under obligation to use reasonable care in protecting their servants while they were engaged in the work, and could not thus shift the responsibility."

In Morton v. William Barr Dry Goods Co. 126 Mo. App. 377, 103 S. W. 588, where a fireman was killed by the explosion of a blow-off tank, which had been installed by an independent contractor, it was contended that his death could not be attributed to defendant's negligence, for the reason, being neither a manufacturer nor mechanical engineer, it did its full duty to furnish its fireman a reasonably safe place to work, by contracting with experienced and reputable people in the business, to furnish and install its machinery and appliances under the supervision of competent mechanical engineers employed by it, and by having installed blow-off tanks of approved patterns and in common use. In ruling adversely to this contention, the court said: "What-21 So. 153; Stoltenberg v. Pittsburg & L. E. R. Co. 165 Pa. 377, 30 Atl. 980; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. O'Leary, 35 C. C. A. 562, 93 Fed. 737; Cadigan v. Glens Falls Gas & Electric Light Co. 112 App. Div. 751, 98 N. Y. Supp. 954; Missouri P. R. Co. v. McEllyea, 71 Tex. 386, 1 L.R.A. 411, 10 Am. St. Rep. 749, 9 S. W. 313.

Messrs. Chilton, MacCorkle, & Chilton for defendant in error.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is a companion of Newhouse v. Kanawha & W. V. R. Co. 62 W. Va. 562, 59 S. E. 1071. In that case, as in this, the court below sustained the motion of the defendant to strike out the plaintiff's evidence and direct a verdict for the defendant. We reversed the judgment below in the Newhouse Case, being of opinion that the ever may be the rule in other jurisdictions, the law is well settled in this state that the master cannot delegate his duty to use reasonable care to furnish his servants with a reasonably safe place to work to an independent contractor. This duty is a personal one, which he cannot shift to the shoulders of someone else by contract, or otherwise."

In Walton, Witten & Graham v. Miller (Va.) 63 S. E. 458, an action for the death of a trainman caused by the running of a train into an obstruction on the track created by independent contractors in excavating along the right of way for a double track, it was held that an instruction that, if the persons creating the obstruction were independent contractors, and if they were well-known railroad contractors of good reputation and standing, and the work to be done was lawful and not inherently dangerous, and was constructed by the firm under the contract, then the railway company would not be liable, though the death of the plaintiff's intestate was caused by the negligent failure of the contractors to give proper notice of the obstruction, was erroneous; the court saying: "If it were competent for a railroad company, under such circumstances, to delegate to a contractor the duty of supervising and maintaining part of its track, it could relieve itself of all liability simply by deputizing its nonassignable functions to an independent contractor." The case of Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Stevens, 97 Va. 631, 46 L.R.A. 367, 34 S. E. 525, which has generally been regarded as supporting the doctrine that an employee may be absolved from liability for a breach of duty which would ordinarily be considered absolute by the employment of an independent contractor, is explained and limited as follows: "In the latter case it was held not to be an essentially hazardous undertaking to substitute a new railroad bridge for an old one without the interruption of traffic; that it was the general custom of railroads to let such contracts to evidence made such a prima facie case of negligence as entitled the plaintiff to have the same submitted to the jury. Since that decision, but pending a petition here for a rehearing, this case was tried and determined in favor of the defendant, as stated.

The plaintiff, an infant, was employed by defendant, along with Newhouse and others, as a day laborer in building a railroad from Charleston by the way of Elk river and Blue creek to a point on said creek. The road was not completed, but some trains were being run while the work of construction was still going on. The plaintiff, by arrangement with the company, was, with the other laborers, carried to and from his places of employment along the road, and to and from his boarding place, on the work train of the defendant, consisting of an engine and a flat car. At a point near the defendant's track on Blue independent contractors, and, if the company used due care in the selection of a reliable contractor, it would not be liable for the negligence of such independent contractor in the faulty construction of the bridge. It is sufficient to observe that the Stevens Case rests upon its own particular facts, which are essentially different from the facts in this case, and was not intended to impair the established principle that a railroad company cannot escape liability for the neglect of duties imposed upon it by law, in the interest of the safety of its servants and the public, by delegation to an independent contractor or otherwise. It is the settled doctrine in this state that such duties are nonassignable."

The case of McMillan v. North Star Min. Co. 32 Wash. 579, 98 Am. St. Rep. 908, 73 Pac. 685, may also be noticed as bearing upon the subject under discussion. In holding a mining corporation, which had previously let a contract to certain persons to do specified work in its mine, liable to its employee for injuries received from an unexploded blast left by the contractor, it was said: "If appellant chose for the time being to turn over the work in its mine to others, knowing, as it must have known, that such hidden dangers, by oversight and lack of skillfulness, might be left by them to be encountered by other employees who should follow them, we think it should not be heard to say that it is in no way responsible for the conditions. Such persons must be held to have stood in the place of the appellant itself, since to them had been delegated the authority to conduct the operations in the mine for the time being."

And in Brady v. Chicago & G. W. R. Co. 57 L.R.A. 712, 52 C. C. A. 48, 114 Fed. 100, the proposition is laid down that a railway company running its trains over another road by permission is liable to its employees for the negligence of the servants of the licensing corporation in the discharge of the absolute duties of the master.

creek was a stone quarry, and where, by permission of the company, a derrick used in loading stone had been erected by one Tully, an independent contractor. The derrick was supported by four guy ropes, two of which were stretched across and made fast on the opposite side of defendant's track. May 23, 1906, the day of the accident, about 3 o'clock P. M., the work train on which plaintiff was a passenger, on its outward trip, passed safely under these guy ropes, as it had been doing daily for two or three months, being delayed at that point, not, as shown in the Newhouse Case, by the sagging of the guy ropes over the track, but by the act of some workmen employed there in dragging a rope across the track. On the return trip that day, however, between 5 and 6 o'clock in the evening, in attempting to pass under the ropes the cab of the engine caught the first of the ropes, dragging the other down and causing it to sweep across the flat car being pushed by the engine, and to drag the plaintiff off between the car and the engine, the engine passing over both his legs, mashing them, and resulting in their amputation, one at the knee joint, the other between the knee and ankle. It was proven at the trial that on the day of the injury the derrick was being dismantled; that a car for removing it had been set there for that purpose, and that, some thirty minutes before the work train reached that point on its return trip, these guy ropes across the track had been loosened by some men employed by Tully, the contractor, causing them to sag, resulting in the injury to plaintiff, and for which this action is brought.

It did not appear in the Newhouse Case that the derrick in question belonged to Tully, and had been employed by him as an independent contractor, and, as now appears in this case, that the accident resulting in the injuries to plaintiff was directly traceable to the negligence of Tully, or his employees, in loosening the guy ropes and allowing them to sag and to remain in that condition, as stated, when encountered by the work train. The general rule relating to master and servant, requiring evidence of some affirmative acts of negligence of the master, either of omission or commission, pertaining to his duties to his servant in order to render him liable to the servant for injuries sustained, was thought, in the Newhouse Case, to be satisfied by the evidence tending to show the sagging of the guy ropes, and notice thereof to the defendant on the outward trip, which, until explained by defendant consistent with the exercise of due care, entitled the plaintiff to a submission of his case to the jury. In the Newhouse Case the defendant relied on the want of evidence to show negligence of the defendant. In the present case negligence is not only shown, but admitted. But the defendant relies on the proposition that, the negligence being primarily that of Tully, an independent contractor, or his employees, its whole duty to the plaintiff to provide him with a reasonable safe place to work was discharged when it employed Tully, a competent person, and permitted him to suspend the guy ropes in question over its track; and, as counsel for defendant say in their brief, we are brought face to face with the question, What is the duty of a railroad company under the circumstances of this case?

The general rule with respect to the liability of the owner for the acts of an independent contractor, as stated in 1 Thompson on Negligence, § 621, is "that one who has contracted with a competent and fit person exercising an independent employment to do a piece of work not in itself unlawful or of such a nature that it is likely to become a nuisance, or to subject third persons to unusual danger, according to the contractor's own methods, and without being subject to control except as to the results of his work, and subject to other qualifications hereafter stated, will not be answerable for the wrongs of such contractor, his subcontractors, or his servants, committed in the prosecution of such work." The general rule, stated in the Newhouse Case, is that one of the nonassignable duties of a master is to provide his servants a reasonably safe place to work, this rule, with respect to railroads, extending to the entire track over which the servant is required to pass in the discharge of his duties. And with respect to railroads this is a positive duty, which, although intrusted to an independent contractor, will not absolve it from liability for nonperformance. 1 Thompson, Neg. §§ 646-665; McCafferty v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. 61 N. Y. 178, 19 Am. Rep. 267; Ryder v. Thomas, 13 Hun, 296. But let us inquire whether Tully, the contractor, stood in the relation of independent contractor with respect to the operation of the railroad and furnishing the plaintiff a reasonably safe place to work. Assume that he had an independent employment to build abutments, etc., and permission of the railroad company to stretch his guy ropes across the track of the company, can it be said he thereby extended his position to that of an independent contractor with reference to the operation of the railroad of the defendants? We think not. He was employed for no such purpose. The permission to stretch his guy ropes across the track undoubtedly implied a contract on his part to securely fasten them, and to protect the defendant and its servants from all dangers resulting from the breach of such implied contract; but this implied agreement would certainly not absolve the defendant from liability for injuries to its servants. In Ortlip v. Philadelphia & W. C. Traction Co. 198 Pa. 586, 48 Atl. 497, it was held that, since the contract there involved was independent only as to the work of constructing the roadbed, in all matters incident to the use of the track the contractors and their workmen represented the will of the company, and its responsibility remained. 4 Thomp. Neg. § 4513. But, if we concede the independence of the Tully contract, and that by its terms, or by implication, it covered the discharge by the defendant of its duty to plaintiff to maintain a reasonably safe place to work, the effect of such contract was simply to delegate to Tully performance of the nonassignable duty of the defendant, rendering it liable for the negligent performance thereof by him. 4 Thomp. Neg. § 4931, citing, among other cases, North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Dudgeon, 83 Ill. App. 528, affirmed in 184 Ill. 477, 56 N. E. 796; Woodman v. Metropolitan R. Co. 149 Mass. 335, 4 L.R.A. 213, 14 Am. St. Rep. 427, 21 N. E. 482; Moran v. Corliss Steam-Engine Co. 21 R. I. 386, 45 L.R.A. 267, 43 Atl. 874, and Toledo Brewing & Malting Co. v. Bosch, 41 C. C. A. 482, 101 Fed. 530. See also 2 Bailey, Personal Injuries relating to Master and Servant, §§ 2561, 2572, citing Burnes v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 129 Mo. 41, 31 S. W. 347; Trainor v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 137 Pa. 148, 20 Atl. 632, Titus v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co. 136 Pa. 618, 626, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944, 20 Atl. 517, Carrico v. West Virginia C. & P. R. Co. 39 W. Va. 86, 93, 24 L.R.A. 50, 19 S. E. 571, Jackson v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 43 W. Va. 382, 383, 46 L.R.A. 337, 27 S. E. 278, 31 S. E. 258, and McCreery v. Ohio River R. Co. 43 W. Va. 112, 27 S. E. 327.

In the North Chicago Street R. Co. Case this rule was applied in an action for damages by a railway conductor for injuries sustained from granite blocks piled up along the tracks by an independent contractor engaged in repairing the tracks. The decision in this case is based in part, at least, on the exception to the general rule respecting the liability of employer for the negligence of an independent contractor, that, when a corporation is exercising some chartered privilege or power which could not be exercised independently of its charter, it cannot delegate such chartered privilege to anyone. But the case did not turn solely on this exception to the general rule; for besides this the court says: "It should not be forgotten, in addition to the foregoing rule, that the law 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) requires that the master shall provide a reasonably safe place for the servants to work, and, failing so to do, is answerable for resulting injuries, unless the dangers are such as are reasonably incident to his employment, or of which the servant has equal knowledge, or means of knowledge, with the master, or where the danger is imminent."

In Toledo Brewing & Malting Co. v. Bosch the brewing company was held liable for injuries sustained by its servant from the negligence of an independent contractor, employed to repair a roof, in displacing and removing weights from an overhead beam resting on the roof, while engaged in repairing the roof. The decision is predicated upon the principle that "a positive personal duty cannot be delegated to an agent or contractor, and that the obligation in such cases is to do the thing required, and not merely to employ another to do it; and, to bring a case within the rule, it is sufficient if the duty is one to the public or a third person, and imposed by law or by statute." This is a well-considered case, and reviews many cases,—some of the same cases cited by us,—and among them Burnes v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 129 Mo. 41, 56, 31 S. W. 347, 350. In that case the court says: "The duty of keeping its road, track, and yards in a reasonably safe condition is a personal duty, which the master owes the servant; and it cannot delegate this duty to any servant, high or low; nor can it avoid liability by letting out a part of its duties as a common carrier to independent contractors. While, for many purposes, this relation of independent contractor will be recognized, it cannot be sustained to shield the master from those positive personal obligations cast upon him by his relation to his servant." This is the same doctrine applied in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Delaney, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 427, 55 S. W. 538; Jacobson v. Johnson, 87 Minn. 185, 91 N. W. 465; Scandell v. Columbia Constr. Co. 50 App. Div. 512, 64 N. Y. Supp. 232, and Hustis v. James A. Bannister Co. 63 N. J. L. 465, 43 Atl. 651,—all derrick cases.

Two other propositions are argued by way of defense: First, that, having employed a competent independent contractor to perform a part of the work of constructing its roadbed, and permitted the erection of the derrick ropes over its tracks, the defendant is not liable for his negligence without actual notice in time to avoid the injuries; and, second, that it is not shown that defendant had notice of the condition in which the guy ropes were left by the contractor shortly before the accident, and in time to have averted the danger; and consequently that the risk must be regarded as one assumed by the plaintiff, and for which defendant cannot be rendered liable. To support the first proposition, defendant's counsel rely mainly on the case of Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Stevens, 97 Va. 632, 46 L.R.A. 367, 34 S. E. 525, where it is held, agreeably to the general rule, but without any reference to the exceptions thereto, that "the negligence of a bridge company, as an independent contractor, in removing too soon the false work on a new railroad bridge which it had contracted to substitute for the old one without the interruption of traffic, in consequence of which the new bridge falls with a train, causing the death of a fireman, does not render the railroad company liable, if it had made a proper contract with the bridge company, and that was an established and reputable concern, largely engaged in such work, and having the confidence of the business public." In the opinion the court says: "Absolute safety is unattainable, and employers are not insurers. They are liable for the consequences, not of danger, but of negligence, and the unbending test of negligence in methods, machinery, and appliances is the ordinary usage of the business. No man is held by law to a higher degree of skill than the fair average of his profession or trade, and the standard of due care is the conduct of the average prudent man."

We do not think this case takes into consideration the well-recognized exceptions to the general rule we have referred to. The positive duties of a railroad company to its employees, already noted, in connection with citations of other cases, cannot be discharged by the delegation of those duties to others, whether competent or not. The Virginia case is reported in 46 L.R.A. 367, with an editorial note referring to a note to Hawver v. Whalen (Ohio) 14 L.R.A. 832, citing the cases with which it is in conflict. It is certainly in conflict, also, with our own cases, and the cases cited from other courts. Mr. Labatt says (1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 153, pp. 327, 328): "There are at least two very weighty reasons why the theory that a master is entitled, as a matter of law, to rely on the quality of appliances obtained from a reputable manufacturer, should be rejected. One of these is that such a theory is essentially inconsistent with the doctrine of nondelegable duties;" and the other reason given is that, "according to the rule adopted by most of the authorities, the servant has ordinarily no right of action against the manufacturer, and if he cannot recover from his master, he cannot recover at all. Assuming the defect which caused the injury to have been discoverable by the exercise of proper care, someone ought, in fairness, to be held responsible for its existence, and it is a mere mockery of justice to absolve the master simply on the ground that he was justified in trusting to the skill and diligence of a person who, if that skill and diligence were, as a matter of fact, not exercised, is not liable to the servant because there is no privity of contract between them." See also the discussion of the subject of delegation of personal duties to an independent contractor. 2 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 558, p. 1634. This writer criticizing the doctrine of Ardesco Oil Co. v. Gilson, 63 Pa. 146, as being in conflict with the later case of Trainor v. Philadelphia R. R. Co. 137 Pa. 148, 20 Atl. 632, already referred to, says: "It is worth observing that, as the doctrine of nondelegable duties had not yet been formulated with much distinctness at the time the earlier case was decided, it is extremely probable that the effect of such a conception as qualifying the rule with regard to independent contractors was not considered at all by the court. Indeed, the opinion delivered gives no indication that this aspect of the relations of the parties was taken into account." And at page 1635 Mr. Labatt also states, in the text, the doctrine in Virginia, announced in the case referred to, but in a note says, in reference to it: "The court does not refer to any of the authorities opposed to its own conclusion, and contents itself with applying the general rule as to independent contractors, without noticing the possibility of an exception to that rule in the case of absolute duties." In the Virginia case the accident was due to the act of the bridge company in removing the false work under the incompleting span, the other having been completed, on the supposition that it was safe to do so, the train on which plaintiff was at work passing safely over the completed span, but crashing through the other. We think the great weight of the modern authorities require inspection and tests adequate to avoid such imminent dangers. We must therefore negate the first proposition.

Did the defendant have notice sufficient to charge it with the negligence of the contractor? This is the difficult question in the case. It is true, as argued by defendant's counsel, that the master is not an insurer of his servant's safety, and is not "answerable at law for a failure to avert or avoid peril that could not have been foreseen by one in like circumstances, and in the exercise of such care as would be characteristic of a prudent person so situated." 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 142. Knowledge, actual or obtainable by reasonable tests and inspections, is required to charge the master. 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. chaps. 10 and 11. In notes 2 and 3 to § 156, chap. 9, Mr. Labatt has collated a large number of cases where the servant, under varying facts and circumstances, was not allowed a recovery, and in note 5 to the same section a great many other cases, more or less difficult of reconciliation with the former, where the servant was allowed to recover, and it would serve no good purpose here to attempt to harmonize these conflicting decisions. Many of them relate to defects in machines or instrumentalities actually in use by the servant, and not to the safety of the place of work, many to hidden defects. Assuming that the guy ropes over the track were and had been securely fastened during the operation of the derrick, and up to within a half hour before the accident, and did not, when thus used, render the track at that point unsafe,—as to which there is no evidence to the contrary,—was the defendant chargeable with notice of the dangerous condition in which they had been left by the servants of Tully, the contractor, a half hour before the accident occurred, so as to render it liable to plaintiff? No amount of inspection prior to the time when the ropes were loosened would have discovered the dangerous condition of the guy ropes a half hour later. Had sufficient time elapsed after the ropes were loosened to impute notice? Notice to a mere coservant, “not chargeable with the performance of the duties which supervened as a result of the acquisition of that knowledge,” will not do (1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 149), but notice to a vice principal is notice to the master. (1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 150.) If Tully be treated as vice principal, under an express or an implied contract with defendant to keep the railroad track at that point, as regards the derrick and guy ropes, in safe condition, then notice to him, or his servants in charge, would be imputable to the defendant. 4 Thomp. Neg. § 4961; 2 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 558. Another duty of the master, respecting proper inspection imposed by some cases, is “to keep a reasonably careful watch upon the various parts of his plant, to the end that they might not unduly imperil the safety of his servants by any of the temporary conditions which the progress of the work might create in their local relations to each other or to the servants.” 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 164, and cases cited in note 2. Now, the evidence of Jarrett, the brakeman, and of Morris, an employee of Tully, on cross-examination, though not quite so clearly as might be desired, tends to show that Tully was personally present himself during the dismantling and removal of the derrick. Jarrett says Tully was working his men there at the derrick; Morris that Tully and his men were dragging this block and tackle across the track at the same time the train went up in the afternoon. Morris also says he did not know the guy ropes were sagging until about two minutes before the train ran into them.

We are disposed to hold, on these authorities and this evidence in this case, that, as to the maintenance of the track in a reasonably safe condition, at the point opposite this derrick, Tully's relation to defendant was that of vice principal, and that notice to him of the condition in which he had left the guy ropes must be imputed to the defendant. Besides the defendant evidently had notice, from the progress of the work of the contractor to completion, and by setting the car there to remove the derrick, that it was about to be taken down, and of the dangers incident thereto, calling for greater care and superintendence on its part. This rule was applied in Rhode Island, in Moran v. Corliss Steam Engine Co. The plaintiff sustained his injuries by coming in contact with an electric wire supplying a motor crane, installed on defendant's premises by an independent contract, but not yet turned over to defendant, the result either of defective connection between the hauling chain and motor, insufficient insulation, or by the wire on defendant's premises, by the action of a high wind, coming in contact with wires outside its premises more heavily charged. The court says: “The accidental crossing or contact of wires caused by their sagging or breaking, or by high winds and other causes, and the consequent charging of a wire carrying a light current with a dangerous current from a more heavily charged wire, is, in our opinion, a sufficiently frequent occurrence to have suggested to the defendant the liability of accident from that cause, and to have required it to take precautions against injury to its employees thereby.” The application of the same principle is further illustrated in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Delaney, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 427, 55 S. W. 528; Woodman v. Metropolitan R. Co. 149 Mass. 335, 4 L.R.A. 213, 14 Am. St. Rep. 427, 21 N. E. 482, and other cases cited. In our opinion, therefore, the defendant, having permitted the erection of this derrick so near to its tracks, supported as it was by these overhanging guy ropes, was bound, in the discharge of its nondelegable duty to its servants, to keep a watchful supervision over it, and that, by the progress of the work, and by setting the car there for the removal of the derrick, it was thereby chargeable with sufficient notice to require vigilant supervision and inspection necessary to avert the dangers incident to the work. Otherwise it could not have discharged its duty to its servants. These views require a reversal of the judgment and awarding the plaintiff a new trial.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, the following note was appended to the opinion:

In his petition for a rehearing defendant's counsel challenge the correctness of the opinion filed. They say it is in conflict with Sanderson v. Panther Lumber Co. 50 W. Va. 42, 55 L.R.A. 908, 88 Am. St. Rep. 841, 40 S. E. 368, and that, if it is intended to overrule that case, we should say so. That was a fellow-servant case. In reference to the facts recited, and the basis of the decision, it is said, at page 45 of 50 W. Va.: "So, the condition of the track cannot and should not have anything to do with the determination of this case,—especially as the plaintiff admits that it was the negligence of the engineer in reckless management of the train and engine, owing to bad temper, that caused the accident. Knowledge of the defect in the engineer's power to properly control his temper was not brought home to the defendant, nor the defect in the sand pipe or want of sand. Hence, the defendant could not be held liable by reason of these things, for it was not shown that it was guilty of negligence with regard thereto." It is apparent, therefore, that the act of negligence relied on in that case, and on which the decision turned, was purely an act of negligence of a fellow servant in the operation of the road, having no reference to the question of a safe place to work. In Jackson v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 43 W. Va. 380, 46 L.R.A. 337, 27 S. E. 278, 31 S. E. 258, cited in the opinion, Judge Brannon, referring to the nonassignable duties of the master, at page 383 of 43 W. Va., says: "These duties are sometimes spoken of as duties in construction, preparation, and preservation, as contrasted with mere work of operation. For instance, the construction of the railroad or other work, the preparation of machinery and implements to be used in the business, the preservation of the track or working place, or machinery and appliances, in proper, safe condition, and the selection of proper servants to work." And at page 384 of 43 W. Va., he says: "You cannot make the master liable for an act of mere operation, no matter by what servant done. You cannot exempt him for an act not one of mere operation, but of his personal duty, though done by any servant." The first point of the syllabus in that case is: "The test whether a master is liable to one servant for the negligence of another servant is the character of a negligent act. If it be in the doing of an act incumbent on the master as a duty of the master to the servant, the master is liable; otherwise not."

On the question of what is sufficient notice to the master in the case of defective machinery, applicable also to a safe place to work, this court said, in Riley v. West Vir. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ginia C. & P. R. Co. 27 W. Va. 160: "It may also be observed that, according to the rules and principles hereinbefore stated and discussed, the knowledge of the unsafe or defective condition of the machinery, etc., mentioned in said third proposition, if brought home to the servant or middleman, to whom the duty of remedying or repairing such machinery, etc., has been delegated, or if he, by the use of due care and diligence, ought to have discovered it, will be considered notice to or knowledge by the company. What is notice to such servant will be treated as notice to the company, and what he ought to know, and might know by due care and diligence, will be regarded as known by the company; and it will be held accountable in such case to the same extent that it would if it had the knowledge, or means of knowledge, possessed by such servant."

The doctrine of the case of Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Stevens, 97 Va. 632, 46 L.R.A. 367, 34 S. E. 525, is again urged for consideration, and as propounding the correct rule of law applicable to this case. As we pointed out in the opinion, that case failed to recognize the exceptions to the general rule stated governing this case, and which in our opinion should have controlled that case also, and for which it has been criticized. No court, so far as we have found, has approved it, and it is opposed not only by our own cases, but by many other decisions.

Out of respect for the able counsel for defendant and on account of the vigor with which he has pressed the subject upon us, as well as our great desire to reach proper conclusions, we have carefully reconsidered the opinion, and re-examined the many textbooks and court decisions on the subject; and, after having done so, we have come again to the deliberate judgment that we have announced no new principle, nor departed from the well-beaten path marked out by the authorities cited and many others that might be cited in support thereof.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF WISCONSIN EX REL. FIRE & RUST PROOF CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

JOHN F. ICKE, City Engineer of Madison, Respnt.

(136 Wis. 583, 118 N. W. 196.)

Mandamus — discretionary duty.

1. Mandamus will not lie to compel performance of a duty under a statute giving public officers discretion to grant contractors for public work estimates of work completed from time to time, which shall entitle them to payment therefor.

Same—contractual duty.

2. Mandamus will not lie to compel a city engineer to furnish monthly estimates of the completion of work under a public contract in accordance with a provision in that contract that they shall be furnished.

(Siebecker, Timlin, and Barnes, JJ., dissent from proposition 2.)

(November 10, 1908.)

A PPEAL by relator from a judgment of the Municipal Court of Madison denying a writ of mandamus to compel the furnishing of estimates of the completion of portions of a contract for public work. Affirmed.

Statement by Dodge, J.:

The petitioner, a Wisconsin corporation, contracted with the city of Madison to furnish all the labor and materials to lay gutters, to grade, macadamize, and otherwise improve Blount street of the city, and to build a concrete drain under this street from Dayton street to Lake Monona. The contract provided that during the first week of each month the defendant John Icke, the city engineer, should make an approximate estimate of the value of the work completed and the materials delivered; that, on or before the 16th of each month the contractor should be paid the balance due as shown by such esti-

Case Note.—Mandamus to compel municipal or other public officer or board to perform duty resting in contract alone.

This note includes cases in which the duty sought to be enforced rests solely in contract, and does not include cases in which the remedy of mandamus is sought to enforce duties imposed by law, although similar duties may be embraced within the terms of the contract. Decisions which are merely referred to the general rules that mandamus will not issue where the duty is not clear or is one of judgment and discretion are not within the scope of this note.

As to right to enforce by mandamus duty of public service corporation, arising wholly from contract, see case note to Chicago v. Chicago Teleph. Co. 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1084.

Most of the few reported cases which pass directly upon the question presented in the foregoing case hold with it that mandamus will not lie to enforce a duty on the part of a municipal or other public officer or board which rests wholly in contract.

Thus, in Parrott v. Bridgeport, 44 Conn. 180, 26 Am. Rep. 439, it was held that mandamus would not lie to compel a city to perform its contract to build approaches to a bridge so as to protect plaintiff's ice pond.

And in People ex rel. National Cigar Co. v. Dulaney, 96 Ill. 503, in an action to compel the commissioners of a state prison to turn over certain convicts in accordance with the terms of a contract for the hiring of convict labor, the court said: "But there is another and equally conclusive reason why the peremptory writ should be denied in this case, and that is, this court has no jurisdiction by mandamus to compel the performance of executory contracts. It is an appropriate remedy to compel public officers to perform specific duties imposed by law; but that is not the case here. The duties which relator asks to have the commissioners compelled to discharge arise out of the alleged contract with them. But for the alleged contract it is not claimed the commissioners owe relator any duties to be performed."

So, also, in State ex rel. Bohannon v. County Ct. 39 Mo. 375, the relator prayed for the writ to compel the respondents to pay him a portion of his bounty as a volunteer, but the petition was denied. The court saying that it would not "undertake by writ of mandamus to enforce simple common-law rights between individuals, such as the payment of money, or where there is another adequate legal remedy."

And in State ex rel. Ross County v. Zanesville & M. Turnp. Road Co. 16 Ohio St. 308, the relators prayed for a writ compelling the respondents to contribute three-fourths of the expense of repairing a bridge upon the ground that they had contracted so to do; but the court denied the writ for the reason that it was not its office to enforce obligations arising upon contracts.

So, in State ex rel. Little v. Union Twp. 37 N. J. L. 84, it was held that mandamus is not the proper remedy to enforce the payment of money due from a municipal corporation for work and labor; but the court said that, if the statute should direct a certain sum of money to be paid to an ascertained person by the authorities of a township or other municipal precinct, mandamus might be used to coerce such payment in case of default. And to the same general effect were the decisions in State ex rel. Cleveland v. Board of Finance & Taxn. 38 N. J. L. 259; State ex rel. Elmendorf v. Jersey City, 41 N. J. L. 135.

So, too, in State ex rel. Davis v. Mortensen, 69 Neb. 376, 95 N. W. 831, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 291, it was held that the courts will not, by means of mandamus, compel municipal or public corporations to perform specifically their ordinary business contracts.

And to the same general effect as the foregoing cases were the decisions in Ingerman v. State, 128 Ind. 225, 27 N. E. 499; State ex rel. Mabon v. Halsted, 39 N. J. L. 640; Mt. Vernon v. State, 71 Ohio St. 428, 104 Am. St. Rep. 783, 73 N. E. 515, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 399; Miller v. State Bd. of Agriculture, 46 W. Va. 192, 76 Am.

mate, after 25 per cent had been deducted (any partial payment so made not to be construed as a final or partial acceptance of the work performed); and that final payment should be made within sixty days after acceptance of the work by the city. The petitioner alleges that on July 1, 1907, he had partly completed the cement curb and gutter and the grading, had partly excavated and put in the bottom and sides of the drain, and had delivered a large portion of the materials necessary for its construction. At or about July 8, 1907, the engineer made an estimate of the value of a portion of the work so claimed by the petitioner to have been completed, but included nothing therein for a concrete drain between Railroad street and Washington avenue and nothing for materials delivered for such drain. Petitioner alleges that such part of the drain had been completed and the materials were delivered as called for by the contract. Demand has been made on the engineer that he make an estimate for such work and materials, but he has refused so to do. Petitioner prays that peremptory mandamus may issue commanding the engineer to make an estimate of the value of the part of the drain so completed and the materials so delivered. The return asserts that, by reason of non-compliance with specifications and injury from floods, such work and material are of no value to the city. There was no traverse to the return, yet the case seems to have been tried as if at issue on the facts. The court found certain failures of relator to comply with the contract, and impossibility of estimating the value of his work to the city, which findings are assailed as not supported by the evidence. Judgment denying the peremptory writ and dismissing the action, from which relator appeals.

Messrs. Kronshage, McGovern, & Fritz, with Messrs. Sanborn & Blake, for appellant.

Mr. R. M. Bashford, with Mr. John A. Aylward, for respondent:

No estimate for work completed was due. 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1276; Kelley v. Syracuse, 10 Misc. 306, 31 N. Y. Supp. 283.

Dodge, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the very threshold of this case the court is confronted with the question whether mandamus is either a possible or a proper remedy, conceding that all the facts are as relator claims them. This question is at least akin to jurisdictional, for it must be resolved in the affirmative before the court can properly proceed to consider the controversy between the parties. Neither was this question considered by the court below, apparently, nor is any aid thereon given to this court by the briefs. Mandamus is an extraordinary remedy, and one of the most absolute conditions to it is that the duty sought to be compelled shall be a clear and absolute one imposed by law. State ex rel. Pfister v. Manitowoc, 52 Wis. 427, 9 N. W. 607; State ex rel. O'Donnell v. Benzenberg, 108 Wis. 435, 438, 84 N. W. 858; State ex rel. Board of Education v. Hunter, 111 Wis. 582, 588, 87 N. W. 485; State ex rel. Wisconsin Metropolis Teleph. Co. v. Milwaukee, 132 Wis. 615, 619, 113 N.

St. Rep. 811, 32 S. E. 1007; State ex rel. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. v. Whitesides, 30 S. C. 579, 3 L.R.A. 777, 9 S. E. 661; State ex rel. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. v. Harper, 30 S. C. 586, 9 S. E. 664.

A few cases, however, are to the contrary.

Thus, in R. v. York Justices, 6 N. B. 273, it was held that a person to whom money was due on a contract with public officers was entitled to mandamus where the money was clearly due and plaintiff had no adequate legal remedy. And to the same effect was the decision in Quaintance v. Howard Twp. 18 Ont. Rep. 95.

And in State v. New Orleans, 29 La. Ann. 863, it was held that mandamus would lie to compel a municipality to assess and levy a sum sufficient to satisfy the requirements of a contract for improvements which had been fully executed.

In Comer v. Bankhead, 70 Ala. 136, it was held that mandamus would not lie to compel a warden of a prison to deliver convicts under a contract of hiring after the time of the contract had expired. There is an implication in this case that the court would have issued the writ had the time of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

contract not expired; but the exact question did not come before the court.

In the following cases mandamus was issued to enforce duties which apparently arose from contract, in part at least; but there is no discussion of the question whether mandamus is the proper remedy to enforce purely contractual duties. Board of Public Works v. Hayden, 13 Colo. App. 36, 56 Pac. 201; People ex rel. Ready v. Syracuse, 144 N. Y. 63, 38 N. E. 1006, affirming 65 Hun, 321, 20 N. Y. Supp. 236; People ex rel. Rodgers v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 1, 52 L.R.A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605, 59 N. E. 716, affirming 56 App. Div. 98, 67 N. Y. Supp. 701; People ex rel. Treat v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 144, 59 N. E. 776, affirming 56 App. Div. 459, 68 N. Y. Supp. 767; People ex rel. Cossey v. Grout, 179 N. Y. 417, 72 N. E. 464, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 39, reversing 96 App. Div. 607, 89 N. Y. Supp. 1113; People ex rel. Peck v. Buffalo State Asylum, 28 N. Y. S. R. 886, 8 N. Y. Supp. 395; Chapin v. Osborn, 29 Ind. 99; Wren v. Indianapolis, 96 Ind. 206; Greenfield v. State 113 Ind. 597, 15 N. E. 241.

W. 40; Fox v. Workman, 6 Cal. App. 633, 92 Pac. 742; Eberle v. King (Okla.) 93 Pac. 748. A careful examination of all laws and ordinances relating to the city engineer or city surveyor of the city of Madison fails wholly to disclose any provision of law requiring him, as an absolute duty, to make certificates of partial performance of contract work. Indeed, the only provision we find with reference to estimates at all is contained in § 925-94, Stat. 1898—a portion of the general charter apparently adopted by the city of Madison—to the effect that, as the work progresses, “the board of public works, or such officers as shall be designated to discharge its duties, may, from time to time, at their discretion, grant to the contractor an estimate of the amount and proportionate value of the work done, which shall entitle the holder to receive the amount thereof,” etc. This is not a command to the city engineer or surveyor, but to a board of which he is only one member. Besides, it does not impose an imperative duty, but a discretionary one. But presumably the relator would contend that a duty to issue intermediate certificates arises by virtue of the contract provision that the city engineer will make an estimate during the first week of each month as the work progresses, and that payments will be made thereon. We shall not deem it necessary to decide whether a contract was competent to the city providing absolutely for such certificates and payment, thus in advance forestalling the discretion which § 925-94 vests in the board of public works, but shall proceed on the hypothesis of the existence of such power. Even in that case, however, the duty resting on the engineer is only a contractual one, and not one imposed by law; and as to such duties and obligations, which depend wholly upon a contract, the authorities hold with practical unanimity that courts will not exercise their power by the extraordinary writ of mandamus to compel performance, even by a municipal or other public corporation or its officers. State ex rel. Burg v. Milwaukee Medical College, 128 Wis. 7, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1115, 116 Am. St. Rep. 21, 106 N. W. 116, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 407; Chicago v. Chicago Telegraph Co. 230 Ill. 157, 161, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1084, 82 N. E. 607, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 109; Mt. Vernon v. State, 71 Ohio St. 428, 453, 104 Am. St. Rep. 783, 73 N. E. 515, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 399; Putnam Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Barrington, 28 R. I. 422, 67 Atl. 733; United States ex rel. Greenbrier Coal & Coke Co. v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 74 C. C. A. 404, 143 Fed. 266, 268. It is not an absolute duty imposed by law.

The result is that the court should have dismissed the writ and the proceedings without considering and deciding upon the facts 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) in controversy. The present judgment correctly disposes of the action and proceeding and should not be reversed in that respect; but it should not stand as a conclusive adjudication of the facts or other controverted questions which should not have been considered.

With that qualification, therefore, judgment affirmed.

Siebeck, J., concurring:

I concur in the affirmance of the judgment, but I cannot accede to the grounds upon which it is placed. I understand the grounds of decision expressed in the opinion of Mr. Justice Dodge are, in substance, that mandamus will not be granted in this case for the reasons (1) that the duty imposed on the engineer of the city is not a statutory one; and (2) the duty sought to be enforced, though assumed to be an absolute one, is a contractual obligation, and the courts will not exercise their power by the extraordinary writ of mandamus to compel performance of an obligation arising out of contract. I am of opinion that this extraordinary power of the court should be exercised to enforce contract obligations wherein this remedy is appropriate, and when there is no adequate and efficient remedy, either at law or in equity, to prevent failure of justice. As to whether or not the duty imposed and sought to be enforced is a statutory duty, it seems to me that, under the portion of § 925-94, quoted by the court, the duty is one imposed by law. The city has no power or authority to make such payments, except as it is granted by this statute. The contract with plaintiff does not create such a duty, but is the medium by which the engineer is designated by the board of public works and the plaintiff to exercise the power authorized by this statute. The duty thus imposed, under which the board of public works or an officer designated by it “may, from time to time, at their discretion” grant estimates of the amount and the value of work done, is a discretionary one. Since it is a discretionary duty, mandamus will not lie, because this remedy is never employed to enforce duties resting in discretion. The judgment should therefore be affirmed.

Timlin, J.: I concur in the foregoing.

Barnes, J., concurring:

I assent to the correctness of the conclusion reached by the court, but do not concur in the reasons given for such conclusion. I see no reason why an action at law might not be maintained to recover the amount of the partial payment to which plaintiff may be entitled, upon showing an arbitrary refusal on the part of the engineer to make the estimate provided for in the contract. In the event of such refusal, I think the facts which the engineer was called upon to determine could be proved by other competent testimony. In no event would mandamus lie unless the right sought to be enforced was clear, and, if it was clear, the action of the engineer was necessarily arbitrary. Hence the plaintiff had an adequate remedy by action at law, and mandamus would not lie. I base my concurrence solely on the ground above stated.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

DORA L. SPEAR

v.

CITY OF WESTBROOK.

(— Me. —, 72 Atl. 311.)

Municipal corporation — negligence — notice of injury.

A notice to a municipal corporation of an injury through its alleged negligence, stating that the injured person sustained an injury to his person, badly bruising himself, and sustaining other bodily injury of a serious nature, does not comply with a statute requiring the notice to specify the nature of the injuries.

(December 4, 1908.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Supreme Court for Cumberland County made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence which resulted in a verdict for plaintiff. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William Lyons, for defendant:

The notice was insufficient as it did not specify the nature of the injuries as required by statute.

Ham v. Lewiston, 94 Me. 269, 47 Atl. 548; Low v. Windham, 75 Me. 113; Lord v. Saco, 87 Me. 231, 32 Atl. 887; Joy v. York, 99 Me. 237, 58 Atl. 1059; Jackman v. Garland, 64 Me. 133; Sawyer v. Naples, 66 Me. 453; Perkins v. Oxford, 66 Me. 547; Veazie v. Rockland, 68 Me. 511; Bradbury v. Benton, 69 Me. 194; Hubbard v. Fayette, 70 Me. 121; Wagner v. Camden, 73 Me. 485; Rogers v. Shirley, 74 Me. 144.

Mr. Frank P. Pride, for plaintiff:

The notice was sufficient, as the real injury was not specific and apparent, but was uncertain at the time.

Wadleigh v. Mt. Vernon, 75 Me. 79; Joy v. York, 99 Me. 237, 58 Atl. 1059; Blackington v. Rockland, 68 Me. 332; Low v. Windham, 75 Me. 113; Goodwin v. Gardiner, 84 Me. 278, 24 Atl. 846.

Whitehouse, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on the case to recover damages for personal injuries received by the plaintiff on the 5th day of August, 1907, by reason of an alleged defect or want of repair in the sidewalk on the easterly side of Seavey street in the defendant city.

The liability of the town in this class of cases is created solely by statute, and, among the conditions precedent to the plaintiff's right of recovery prescribed by § 76, chap. 23, Rev. Stat., is, the following requirement respecting notice to the town after the injury, namely: "Any person who sustains injury or damage as aforesaid, or some person in his behalf, shall, within fourteen days thereafter, notify one of the . . . municipal officers of such town by letter or otherwise, in writing, setting forth his claim for damages and specifying the nature of his injuries and the nature and location of the defect which caused such injury."

Case Note. — Sufficiency of description of injury in notice given thereof as a condition of municipal liability.

This note is confined to the sufficiency of the description of the nature, character, and extent of the injury, and is not concerned with the sufficiency of the description in respect to the cause, time, place, or other circumstances attending the injury.

A provision of a municipal charter requiring notice as to nature of an injury is not satisfied by a statement that compensation is claimed for "damages sustained by me by reason of personal injuries received . . . by my falling on a defective sidewalk." Tattan v. Detroit, 128 Mich. 650, 87 N. W. 894.

But such charter provision is satisfied by a statement that "the injury suffered was a severe wrench, sprain, and bruise of the hip and back, together with other internal injuries." Oesterreich v. Detroit, 137 Mich. 415, 100 N. W. 593.

A requirement that the notice of injury shall set forth substantially the extent of the injury sustained, so far as the same has become known, is complied with by an itemized statement specifically claiming designated amounts for loss of time, for medical attendance and medicines, bodily and mental pain and suffering, together with permanent injuries, but without designating the amount of damage sustained by reason of the latter; as such notice sufficiently indicates a possibility of permanent injuries for which it was intended to hold the municipality liable. Henry v. Pinckney (Mich.) 119 N. W. 1099.

So, in Hawley v. Suranac (Mich.) 121

In attempting to comply with this requirement of the statute, the plaintiff in this case seasonably gave to the mayor and aldermen of the defendant city the following written notice signed by her: "You are hereby notified that on Monday, the 5th day of August, 1907, while walking along Seavey street in said city, on the sidewalk on the easterly side of the street, and myself being in the exercise of due care, I sustained an injury to my person by falling into a hole in the sidewalk nearly opposite the premises of Albion Senter, badly bruising myself and sustaining other bodily injury of a serious nature. I hereby give notice that it is my intention to hold the city of Westbrook responsible for the injury I have sustained, in damages."

The defendant's counsel seasonably objected to this notice on the ground of insufficiency, and requested the presiding justice to give the following instruction, to wit: "That the statute notice given by the plaintiff to the defendant as required by chapter 23, § 76, of the Revised Statutes was and is wholly insufficient, in that it wholly fails to specify the nature or kind of her bodily injuries alleged by her to be sustained, that it wholly fails to specify whether the injuries, or any of them, were upon her head or back, or upon her arms or legs, and that no part of her head, body, or limbs are specified as having been injured, and therefore she cannot recover in this action."

The defendant's counsel further requested the court to direct the jury to return a ver-

N. W. 393, a similar notice was held sufficient where also a designated sum was claimed for "future damages, pain, and suffering."

A notice that one's injuries consisted of a dislocated and broken right shoulder blade will not, under a statute requiring that the extent of such injury shall be set forth as far as the same has become known, permit evidence to prove a broken and dislocated left collar bone. Ridgeway v. Escanaba, 154 Mich. 68, 117 N. W. 550.

The requirement of notice of injuries sustained by reason of a defective sidewalk, as required by § 9, p. 233, Colo. Sess. Laws 1893, limits the right to recover to the injuries growing out of those set forth in such notice; and, where the only claim is for a broken leg, it is improper to permit testimony as to other injuries. Diamond Rubber Co. v. Harryman, 41 Colo. 415, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 775, 92 Pac. 922.

A charter provision requiring notice as to the extent of an injury will not permit evidence of a miscarriage suffered by a married woman under notice stating that she "was severely injured internally, was in bed for a period of ten days, and is now in the care of a physician, and will probably never entirely recover from the effects of her fright and injury." Denver v. Barron, 6 Colo. App. 72, 39 Pac. 989. The court said: "It is only insisted that, with reference to plain injuries and those which the layman can easily locate, determine, and describe, he must set them down in his notice. Internal injuries which he can neither diagnose nor describe otherwise than by his sensations would probably be sufficiently stated if the sensations were given. In the case of a broken bone it would be enough to state that his leg, his arm, or his limb were fractured, without stating the kind and description of the fracture he had sustained; but, wherever the trouble is readily appreciable and easily described, it must be stated in the notice, or else there can be no recovery for that particular injury." 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A requirement that notice be given of the accident or injury complained of, with the nature and extent thereof, is satisfied by a full statement of the particulars as to either the nature and extent of the accident or injury, such requirement being in the disjunctive. Bemis v. Omaha (Neb.) 116 N. W. 31.

And such statutory requirement is sufficiently complied with by a statement that a falling billboard broke "both bones of my left leg between the knee and the ankle and greatly lacerating my leg at the said place, the bones of my leg being splintered and badly broken by reason of the force of said billboard or sign striking me in the manner it did, causing what is known and usually termed a 'compound comminuted fracture;' which said injury is serious and permanent, and has caused a great shock to my nervous and physical system." Ibid.

A requirement that the notice shall contain "a general description of the injury" is complied with by a statement that one was "greatly injured in that the back of his head was badly cut and bruised and he was internally injured." Wood v. Stafford Springs, 74 Conn. 437, 51 Atl. 129.

And a notice that one was thrown from a sleigh, and that her "back, hips, head, spine, and body were greatly and permanently bruised, strained, injured, and wrenched, her left hip dislocated, and she was otherwise greatly and permanently injured internally and externally in and upon her back, head, hips, spine, and body," is sufficient. Dean v. Sharon, 72 Conn. 667, 45 Atl. 983.

A statement: "I slipped and fell and was permanently injured, . . . said injuries consisting of wounds and bruises of the sciatic nerve of my left hip and thigh," is a sufficient statement of the injury to admit evidence under an allegation of the declaration that, by reason of the injuries the plaintiff "is and was thereby greatly bruised and injured about and upon her body and limbs, injuring and bruising the sciatic dict in favor of the defendant. The presiding justice declined, pro forma, to give either of the requested instructions, and the case was thereupon submitted to the jury, who returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $900. The case comes to the law court on exceptions.

It is the opinion of the court that, upon the authority of the previous decisions in this state upon similar notices, the exceptions must be sustained and the notice held insufficient.

In Goodwin v. Gardiner, 84 Me. 278, 24 Atl. 846, the plaintiff's injuries were described in his notice to the town as "severe bodily injuries;" and it was held that this was not a sufficient specification of the "nature of his injuries." In the opinion of the court it is said: "The statute requires more than a bare statement that a bodily injury was received. The nature of the injury must be stated. . . . It would have been more natural for the plaintiff, if really injured severely, to state how and to what extent the injury affected him—whether upon the head or back, upon his arms or legs, and whether general or particular. The assertion is that he met with injuries, and not one of them is named. No kind of inquiry is either included or excluded by the notice. One object of the statute requiring notice within fourteen days after an injury is alleged to have been received is that the injured person shall thus early commit himself to a statement of his condition, when he would be more likely to describe it frankly nerve along the left hip and thigh, and bruising and causing an enlargement of the bones of the left hip by reason whereof." Reno v. St. Joseph, 169 Mo. 642, 70 S. W. 123. The court observed that such notice is required only to state the character and circumstances of the injury, and that it is not necessary that the injury to its fullest extent, scope, and effect be set forth in the notice; but a substantial compliance with the statute is all that is necessary.

So, such statutory requirement is sufficiently complied with by a statement that one's "left limb [was] severely and permanently injured at the knee and hip; at the same time her side and abdomen were severely bruised and wounded, causing severe, painful, and permanent injuries to her stomach and digestive organs." Burnette v. St. Joseph, 112 Mo. App. 668, 87 S. W. 589.

A notice that one's injury was to the "right leg at and about the knee, [and that] a severe shock" was sustained so as to disable her and compel her to lie in bed and incapacitate her from attending to ordinary duties is, in the absence of any intention to mislead, a sufficient compliance with a requirement that "a verified statement of the cause of action" shall be given, to permit evidence of injuries other than those specified, and especially of a serious injury to the hip. Eggleston v. Chautauqua, 90 App. Div. 314, 86 N. Y. Supp. 279, affirmed without opinion in 183 N. Y. 514, 76 N. E. 1094.

A requirement that such notice shall describe the extent of an injury so far as practicable is satisfied by a statement that, by reason of a fall, the claimant "broke her left arm, and was, in consequence thereof, made to suffer great pain, and was disabled and prevented from performing her usual avocations for some time, and will be so prevented for an indefinite period in the future." Stedman v. Rome, 88 Hun, 279, 34 N. Y. Supp. 737.

And a claim for "severe and permanent injury to my head and body" is a sufficient description as to the extent of an injury to permit evidence of an injury to an eye. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Place v. Yonkers, 43 App. Div. 380, 60 N. Y. Supp. 171.

As the Vermont statute requiring the notice to state "the part of the body injured, . . . together with the extent and effect of the injuries upon the health of the person injured," does not require an accurate diagnosis of one's injury to be given, but is satisfied by a description of its character as one understands it, the following descriptions have been held to be sufficient:

"A severe cut and bruise on the back of my head, and my head was otherwise injured. My left hip was bruised and made sore and lame. I was hurt and made lame through my chest and bowels; and I was badly jarred and shaken up and bruised, so that my whole body was badly affected and my nervous system was injured." Graves v. Waitsfield, 81 Vt. 84, 69 Atl. 137.

And a statement that "the back of my head was injured by striking thereon, with resultant shock, and, in consequence of said injuries have been unable to labor," is a sufficient compliance with such statute to admit evidence that the plaintiff's head was bloody and had a bruise and bump on the back, and that, from the time of the accident to the time of the trial, she had been subject to headaches. Lynds v. Plymouth, 73 Vt. 216, 50 Atl. 1083.

So such statute is complied with by a notice that "my back and spine were injured and made lame for the whole length thereof, including neck, and my back was badly strained and made stiff,—so much so that I have not been able to raise or move my head since the injury; . . . and I have suffered . . . great pain in my head, brain, jaw, spine, neck, etc.;" so that evidence as to an injury to the neck may be introduced thereunder. Willard v. Sherburne, 59 Vt. 361, 8 Atl. 735.

And, as the Vermont statute above mentioned is satisfied with a statement of one's injuries with reasonable certainty, a notice that I was "severely injured in my spine near my shoulders, so that I have had no use of my arms since that time, but have been, and am now, confined to my bed, entirely helpless; and I was otherwise injured and fairly than at a later period. There is a great temptation to magnify and exaggerate such personal injuries, and the town is entitled to as particular a notice as can reasonably be given."

In Low v. Windham, 75 Me. 113, the plaintiff's notice was "of injuries I received in going through the bridge at Great Falls," and it was rejected by the court as insufficient because the nature of the bodily injuries was not stated.

In Lord v. Saco, 87 Me. 231, 32 Atl. 887, the plaintiff's notice stating that his horse was "greatly injured by reason of the defect" was declared to be defective, because it "fails utterly to state the nature of his injuries;" thus in effect overruling Blackington v. Rockland, 66 Me. 332.

in and about my back and spine, and internally," is sufficient to admit evidence of an injury to the spine between the shoulder blades, and for damaging consequences resulting therefrom, including partial paralysis of the hands and arms. Fassett v. Roxbury, 55 Vt. 552.

So, under such statute, a description of one's injuries as the fracture of four ribs and an injury to the lungs is sufficient to admit evidence of a permanent injury consisting of a thickening of the pleura or lining membrane of the chest and lung, and an adhesion thereof to the lungs and walls of the chest, the result of inflammation caused by the injury to the lungs, although the lungs were not permanently injured. Reynolds v. Burlington, 52 Vt. 300. The court said that "the resulting consequences to other occult and unknown organs may not have been within the knowledge and skill of the plaintiff, or of his counsel, at the time the injury was inflicted and the notice drawn;" and whatever damaging consequences resulted from the breaking of the ribs may be properly proved, although the pathological process by which that damage comes to pass is not specified in the notice.

But a statement that "four of my ribs upon my right side were fractured, my right hip was badly bruised, and I was also badly injured about the back and kidneys, and my whole body was shaken, bruised and injured, and my health greatly impaired" will not permit evidence to be given to the effect that, after the expiration of about six months, an enlargement appeared on the abdomen, and that one afterwards suffered from general nervous prostration, due to the nervous shock to the system. Perry v. Putney, 52 Vt. 533. The court said that the statute contemplates that the party should state in his notice the condition, disability, and parts of the body more especially affected, so far as he may be able to do so, from sensation, feeling, or otherwise, and must give his condition a character so far as practically he may be able to; and, in the case of internal injury, he must give the location so far as he can, from the nature of the case, from pain, sensation, and 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Wadleigh v. Mt. Vernon, 75 Me. 79, the plaintiff stated in his notice that he was "thrown violently from his wagon and seriously injured in the thigh, and internally injured in his right lung, and otherwise injured by being violently shaken up and jarred in his fall to the ground." The court says in the opinion: "The declaration is comprehensive enough to warrant the introduction of proof of any bodily injury resulting from his 'being violently shaken up and jarred in his fall to the ground.' It is not necessary to detail all the results thus accruing in the declaration nor in the notice." See also Joy v. York, 99 Me. 237, 58 Atl. 1059, in which the recent decisions of the court upon this question are critically analyzed and compared.

feeling, and the effect of such injury by his consciousness, of his condition of the parts affected, and his general condition as to prostration and health; and, having done this, if ultimate serious results become manifest which are traceable to such injury, that are developed by latent causes and hidden processes which are both invisible and intangible, the party shall not be barred from recovery for all he has suffered as the consequence of his injuries.

Nor is such statute satisfied by a statement that "my back is badly injured, also my head and other parts of my body, so that I am unable to sit up but very little at this time;" and no recovery may be had thereunder. Pratt v. Sherburne, 53 Vt. 370.

So, a notice describing one's injuries as being "greatly injured in her head, neck, back, hips, limbs, so that her life was greatly dispaired of," is not a sufficient compliance with the Vermont statute. Bartlett v. Cabot, 54 Vt. 242.

The case of Nourse v. Victory, 51 Vt. 275, is sufficiently stated in the opinion to SPEAR v. WESTBROOK.

It was held in Robin v. Bartlett, 64 N. H. 426, 13 Atl. 645, that the trial court is to determine, as a matter of fact, whether an injury is sufficiently described in a notice, and its finding will not ordinarily be reversed by the law term if there is evidence upon which it could properly be made; and the court accordingly declined to review the finding of the trial court, that a notice stating that one received injury "in the small of the back, and upon the side and hip, and received internal and other injuries which I cannot describe," sufficiently satisfied a statutory requirement that a dull description of the injuries, and the extent thereof, be given, to admit proof of rectocele and womb difficulties. The court said: "A personal injury need not be described with scientific precision. Selectmen are not ordinarily skilled in surgery. A description of an injury, in the accurate language of that science, might convey to them little or no information. The full description required by the statute, of a personal injury, is such a reasonably complete and comprehensive account of its na-

In the case at bar the language of the plaintiff's notice is: "I sustained an injury to my person, . . . badly bruising myself and sustaining other bodily injury of a serious nature." As in Goodwin v. Gardiner, 84 Me. 278, 24 Atl. 846, and Low v. Windham, 75 Me. 113, this notice fails to give a sufficient specification of the nature of the plaintiff's injuries. This statutory requirement of the fourteen days' notice has never been construed to impose upon the sufferer any unreasonable or burdensome duty. He is only required to give the defendant town the benefit of all the information he possesses relating to the bodily injuries for which he claims damages. He is not compelled to specify or predict the effects and consequences which may or may not flow from such injuries. The results may be neither known nor anticipated at the time of preparing the notice. But he may reasonably be required to describe the physical conditions caused by his injuries fully and frankly according to the best of his knowledge and information. The plaintiff, it is true, states that she was badly bruised, but a bruise is only a bodily injury without laceration, and, like other bodily injuries, has the attribute of locality. The notice fails to specify upon what part of the body the bruises were received, whether upon the head or back, the arms or legs, or to state in what manner or to what extent the bruises affected her. The severity and critical nature of the injury obviously depend largely upon its locality, and it is important for the municipal officers to be informed whether the bruises are upon a vital or other less vulnerable part of the body. She could not be expected to anticipate nor reasonably be required to specify in her notice that she would suffer from "traumatic neurasthenia" or nervous prostration, as the result of her bruises and injuries, but it would not have been difficult for her to state upon what part of her body the bruises and injuries were received. The sufferer can recover damages arising from such injuries as are thus specified in his notice and for the results actually flowing from such injuries, although those results may not be anticipated or described in the notice. A sufficient specification of the nature of the injuries themselves is a sufficient notice of the results which actually flow from them. The fatal defect from the plaintiff's notice is its failure to specify the nature of her injuries.

Exceptions sustained.

ture and extent as a person of common intelligence is capable of giving and naturally would give to his neighbor, whom he desired fully to inform in what part of his person and how badly he was hurt. The statute does not expressly require the effect of the injury to be stated,—differing in this particular from the similar statute of Vermont. . . . Consequences or results of the injury need be stated so far only as may be necessary to describe its extent. The statement must be filed within ten days after the damage is received, may be filed the same day, and is sufficient if it describes the injury as it then exists. Although apparently slight, it may prove to be serious. A supposed trifling bruise may result in paralysis, or render necessary the amputation of a limb. The plaintiff may recover damages not only for the injury described, but also for all the directly resultant injurious consequences, though they may not appear until long afterwards. . . . He can bring but one suit, and hence may recover not only for what he has suffered, but also for all that he will suffer in the future as a direct result of the injury."

A statement in a notice that "said injury consists of a fracture of both wrists" will not permit evidence showing an injury to the shoulder as well, under a statutory requirement that the notice shall specify the nature of the injury. Joy v. York, 99 Me. 237, 58 Atl. 1059.

But a declaration alleging one's injuries to be "a dangerous contusion of the muscles of said leg; and the bones of said leg were then and there . . . badly injured and displaced, and his back strained, and a general shock to his nervous system . . . received," is not too broad where the notice described the injury as "inflammation of the periosteum (periostitis) of the tibia at and about the junction of the middle and lower thirds of the right leg." Bradbury v. Benton, 69 Me. 194. The court said that it was not necessary that the injuries should be specified in the notice as they were alleged in the declaration, the plaintiff not being confined and limited to the precise statement of his injuries contained therein, as the true nature and extent thereof may not be developed so as to be known until after the time in which the notice is required to be given; and the notice is sufficient if it will enable the municipal officers to investigate the case and acquire a full knowledge of the facts.

And such notice is not rendered insufficient because not expressed in the English language as the words "periosteum and tibia" have become anglicized, and are now used as English words and found in English dictionaries in use. Ibid.

And in Sawyer v. Naples, 66 Me. 453, a recovery was sustained under a verbal notice of "injuries received in the back."

So, "the nature" of one's injuries is sufficiently stated by a notice that he was hurt "on the back, shoulder and head very bad." White v. Vassalborough, 82 Me. 67, 19 Atl. 99.

The cases of Wadleigh v. Mt. Vernon, 75 Me. 79, and Goodwin v. Gardiner, 84 Me. 728, 24 Atl. 846, which pass upon the sufficiency of a description of one's injuries in such a notice as required by the Maine statute, are sufficiently set out in the opinion to SPEAR v. WESTBROOK.

A charter requirement that a notice shall state the cause and extent of an injury is satisfied by a statement that an injury was received, "causing a partial dislocation of the joint between the coccyx and the sacrum, and rupturing the ligaments, causing a displacement of the right ovary, producing great pain and inflammation, causing more or less concussion of the spine, together with internal injuries," so as to admit proof of a prolapse of the womb. Dallas v. Moore, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 230, 74 S. W. 95. The court said: "It is almost impossible in every case of this nature to accurately designate all of the injuries that may arise, for some, which might be the proximate result of the accident, might not be developed until long after the time that the law requires notice to be given. There can be no technical or fixed rule in determining when a notice is sufficient. All that should be required is that it is sufficient if it in a general way apprises the defendant of the nature and general extent of the injuries suffered."

So, a requirement that the nature and extent of the injuries received shall be set forth is complied with by a statement that the injuries received by falling on a defective sidewalk consisted of "dislocation and fracture of the right ankle, fracture of one bone in her right leg, dislocation of her hip, strain and shock through the pelvis and back, strain and shock to the spine" causing a miscarriage, so as to admit evidence concerning resulting urinal and bowel troubles, and that they were caused by her injury. Durham v. Spokane, 27 Wash. 615, 68 Pac. 383. The court said that, while it is manifestly just that all known effects of an injury upon which a claimant intends to rely should be stated, yet such requirement will not be construed with technical strictness, or that a general statement of injuries received will preclude at the trial evidence of the nature and proximate results of the injuries described. And, where proximate injuries not described in the notice develop after the expiration of the time in which the notice may be presented to the municipality, evidence thereof is admissible at the trial.

A notice stating one's injuries as "the bruising, wounding, and laming of my person" satisfies a requirement that such notice shall describe the nature of one's injury; and a demurrer to a complaint alleging the giving of such notice will not be sustained. Lilly v. Woodstock, 59 Conn. 219, 22 Atl. 40. The court observed that such specification may have been as specific and accurate a notice of the nature of the injury as it would be reasonably possible to give, and such as may turn out upon the trial to be the only practical description; and, unless it appears upon the face of the notice that the statement of the injury is so loose, general, and indefinite as to be of necessity unreasonably inaccurate, a demurrer on that point ought not to be sustained. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Lilly v. Woodstock, was followed and applied in Manning v. Woodstock, 59 Conn. 224, 22 Atl. 42, where the injury was described as "the breaking of my collar bone, . . . being a continuing and lasting injury."

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

EVA ROSENTHAL

v.

CITY OF GOLDSBORO, Appt.

(149 N. C. 128, 62 S. E. 905.)

Highway — trees — removal.

A municipal corporation acting in good faith may, under its charter authority to repair the streets and remove nuisances, remove without compensation or notice the trees of an abutting owner which are within the limits of the highway, the roots of which interfere with the operation of a municipal sewer.

(November 19, 1908.)

Case Note. — Right of municipal corporation to cut or trim trees within limits of highway.

Municipal authorities have the entire control over their highways, streets, and sidewalks, and may remove shade trees whenever they are an obstruction to the use of the highway for public travel, although the fee to the street is in the abutting owner and such trees are his private property. Atlanta v. Holliday, 96 Ga. 546, 23 S. E. 509; Miller v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co. 125 Mich. 171, 51 L.R.A. 955, 84 Am. St. Rep. 569, 84 N. W. 49.

A city, in grading its streets and sidewalks, may remove shade trees if necessary to the grading. Castleberry v. Atlanta, 74 Ga. 164. In this case it was held that such trees belong to the city.

If a growing tree is an obstruction to the free use of the street, it is a nuisance, and the city authorities have the right to remove it. Hildrup v. Windfall City, 29 Ind. App. 592, 64 N. E. 942.

For earlier cases upon the question of the right of municipal corporations to remove or trim trees within the highway upon the ground that they are nuisances, see subject note to Hagerstown v. Witmer, 39 L.R.A. 670.

A city is not liable in damages for removing shade trees where their removal is ordered not oppressively nor unreasonably, but because they would be an obstruction to the proper and uniform construction of a sidewalk according to a general plan. Scott v. Marshall, 110 Mo. App. 178, 85 S. W. 98.

Municipal authorities will not be enjoined from cutting down shade trees 2 feet in thickness, standing within the line of a sidewalk ordered to be constructed, where they would constitute permanent obstruc-

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Wayne County in plaintiff's favor in a suit to enjoin interference with trees belonging to plaintiff. Reversed.

Statement by Hoke, J.:

It appeared that the city authorities in charge and control of the matter, having concluded that the roots from certain shade trees along the streets of the city obstructed and threatened the safety of the city sewerage, ordered removal of the trees, and thereupon the plaintiff, owning and occupying a residence abutting on the streets, and which would be injuriously affected by the execution of the order, instituted the present suit to restrain the contemplated removal.

From the facts stated in the pleadings, and admitted by the parties in open court, it appeared:

"This cause coming on to be heard, and the pleadings being read, the defendant thereupon admits that the elm trees described in the complaint are no more obstruction to the free use of the streets and sidewalks for travel than any other trees located on the streets of the city, but reiterates its allegation that the said elms and all other elms of the city are nuisances, in that they obstruct the sewerage of the said city. The court thereupon, from the pleadings in the case and the admissions in open court, finds the following facts:

"(1) That the defendant is a municipal corporation, duly chartered and organized.

"(2) That the plaintiff is and has been for many years a resident of the said city, and owns and occupies a dwelling house situated on the eastern side of James street, in said city, and fronting about 105 feet on said street; that in front of said residence, and on the western side thereof, extending along the whole front thereof, and just inside the curb line of the sidewalk of said city, there have been for the last twenty years, and now are, seven or eight large, handsome elm trees, planted by the plaintiff and those through whom she claims title to the said lot, which said trees add greatly to the appearance and enjoyment of her said premises, and said trees make no more obstruction to the free use of the said sidewalk and street by the public for passage over it than is made by all other trees in said city.

"(3) That the plaintiff has a property right in said trees.

"(4) That, about twelve years ago, the defendant constructed in said city a general system of sewerage, a portion of which tions if left standing, and the proposed cutting is not wanton or unreasonable and oppressive. Mt. Carmel v. Shaw, 155 Ill. 37, 27 L.R.A. 580, 46 Am. St. Rep. 311, 39 N. E. 584 (upon the ground that shade trees in the public streets are the property of the municipality); Hildrup v. Windfall City, supra.

In Embler v. Wallkill, 57 Hun. 384, 10 N. Y. Supp. 797 (affirmed without discussing this question in 132 N. Y. 222, 30 N. E. 404), it was held to be inexcusable negligence for the highway commissioners to allow for more than ten years the branches of a tree standing upon the side of the highway to overhang the traveled portion of the road so low as to leave insufficient space for the passage of a load of hay.

In Murray v. Norfolk County, 149 Mass. 328, 21 N. E. 757, it was held that, if trees become an obstruction in the street in the opinion of the proper officers of the town, it is for them so to determine and to order their removal; and their decision is conclusive.

But, from most of the following authorities, it appears that such decision is not conclusive, and is subject to review in equity.

In Paola v. Wentz (Kan.) 98 Pac. 775, it was held that the determination of the city authorities to remove shade trees from a street must be the result of a fair and reasonable consideration, since the abutting owner has a property interest in such trees, subject only to the superior claims of the public. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Kemp v. Des Moines, 125 Iowa, 640, 101 N. W. 474, it was held that, if a city duly adopts a plan for the improvement of a street by grading or otherwise, and the execution of such plan necessarily requires the destruction of shade trees standing in the street, their removal in the prosecution of such work affords no cause of action to the abutting lot owner; but that the court, recognizing the interest which the abutting owner has in such trees, will require that the city take reasonable care to do the work so ordered, in a manner to avoid unnecessary injury to such trees.

If a municipality arbitrarily, capriciously, or unnecessarily determines and undertakes to remove shade trees which are not a nuisance, it may be enjoined at the instance of the abutting owner, such trees being private property. Paola v. Wentz, supra; Frostburg v. Wineland, 98 Md. 239, 64 L.R.A. 627, 103 Am. St. Rep. 399, 56 Atl. 811, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 783; Ellison v. Allen, 62 N. Y. S. R. 274, 30 N. Y. Supp. 441.

In Paola v. Wentz, supra, it was held that the removal, by officers of a city, of shade trees growing in the street, may be enjoined where the only reason offered to justify such removal is insufficient as a matter of law, and no other purpose is disclosed.

In Kemp v. Des Moines, supra, it was held that, if shade trees are so located as not to be an obstruction to the proper use of a roadway or sidewalk, the city may not arbitrarily destroy or remove them.

In Atlanta v. Holliday, supra, it was held that, where it palpably appeared that no passed through the middle of the street in front of the premises of the plaintiff, and which is now in use, that roots from some of the elm trees in the said city have penetrated in some portions of said city into the said sewer, and have thereby rendered the same less useful.

"(5) That the said city is the owner of a system of waterworks, supplying water to residents of said city for compensation, and furnishing water to the city for public use, which system of waterworks is used in connection with the said system of sewerage, by both said city and the citizens thereof, both constituting one system for the purpose of furnishing water, and after its use for the purpose of carrying off same.

"(6) That, on the 7th day of January, 1907, the defendant took action to cause the trees of the plaintiff and all other citizens of the town to be cut down and removed from the streets of the city, as appears from the minutes of the meeting of the board of aldermen of said city held on January 7, 1907, which is as follows: 'The street committee was empowered to have all the elm trees along the line of the city sewers removed, and chief of police was instructed to employ a force of hands for that purpose, and to sell wood from said trees to help in defraying the expense of the removal of the same, having been condemned as injurious to sewers.' That, pursuant to said order, the authorities of the said city have cut and removed from the streets of said city a number of elm trees, and were, at the beginning of this action, threatening to cut down and remove the trees of the plaintiff. That the plaintiff had no other notice of the purpose to cut down her trees than arises from the knowledge of the existence of the said order, and afterwards an appearance by her agent before the board to effect a compromise, which was refused.

"(7) That no proceedings were had or begun to condemn plaintiff's trees, and no compensation was tendered or offered to her for their destruction.

"(8) That § 27 of the charter of the city of Goldsboro provides that, among the powers herein conferred on the board of aldermen, they shall provide water, provide for repairing and draining the streets, . . . regulate, suppress, and remove nuisances.

"(9) That § 38 of the charter provides that the board of aldermen shall have power to lay open the new streets within the corporate limits of the city whenever by them deemed necessary, and have power at necessity existed for the removal of shade trees growing upon the margin of a sidewalk, the fee to the street being in the abutting owner, and that public convenience would not thereby be subserved, injunction would lie to prevent the city from removing them.

In Frostburg v. Wineland, supra, it was held that shade trees which had stood for forty years at the curb between the sidewalk and the street without impeding travel on the highway were not shown to be nuisances because they extended a few inches outside the curb; and equity would review the action of the city in declaring them to be such and ordering their removal.

In Crismon v. Deck, 84 Iowa, 344, 51 N. W. 55, it was held that so long as shade trees planted in the highway by an abutting owner and there allowed to remain for over ten years did not obstruct the road nor prevent its necessary improvement, the road supervisor would not be permitted to remove them against the wish of such owner.

In Sproul v. Stockton, 73 N. J. L. 158, 62 Atl. 275, it was held that statutory power given a city council to regulate the planting and protection of shade trees in the streets did not authorize the cutting down and removal of such trees.

In Wheatfield v. Shasley, 23 Misc. 100, 51 N. Y. Supp. 835, it was held that shade trees planted in a highway by the owner of the fee, under a statute which made it lawful for abutting owners to plant such trees, and which did not actually encroach upon that part of the highway which had been in use for thirty years, did not constitute an encroachment or obstruction within the meaning of a statute authorizing highway commissioners to remove obstructions or encroachments.

Statutory power to remove all obstructions, encroachments, encumbrances, and nuisances in and upon any street or sidewalk has reference only to such obstructions as are apparent or readily ascertainable without the necessity of any adjudication, and does not authorize the summary removal of growing trees without notice to the owner, since such trees are not necessarily an unlawful encumbrance or encroachment. Sproul v. Stockton, supra; Hitchner v. Richman, 74 N. J. L. 234, 65 Atl. 856.

And in Michigan it is held that municipal authorities may not remove shade trees within the limits of the public highway without notice to the owner and an opportunity given to him to remove them as he may see fit. Stretch v. Cassapolis, 125 Mich. 167, 51 L.R.A. 345, 84 Am. St. Rep. 567, 84 N. W. 51; Miller v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co. 125 Mich. 171, 51 L.R.A. 955, 84 Am. St. Rep. 569, 84 N. W. 49.

As to authority of municipal officers to cut or trim tree on private property to facilitate use of street, see case note to Com. v. Byard, post, 814.

As to liability of abutting owner for mutilating trees in highway by erecting poles or stringing wires, see case note to Cartwright v. Liberty Teleph. Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1125.

any time to widen, enlarge, change, or extend or discontinue any street or streets, or any part thereof, within the corporate limits of the city, and shall have full power and authority to condemn, appropriate to use any land or lands necessary for any of the provisions named in this section.

"(10) That section 46 of the charter provides that the board of aldermen shall cause to be kept clean and in good repair the streets, sidewalks, and alleys. They may establish the width, ascertain the location of those already provided, and lay out and open up others, and may reduce or increase the width of all of them."

And it was thereupon considered and adjudged by the court: "That it is not within the power of the defendant to destroy the trees in which the plaintiff has a property right without just compensation to be ascertained upon due notice; and it is further considered and adjudged that the defendant be perpetually enjoined from proceeding to cut down said trees until and unless a proper proceeding is instituted to condemn the same. It is further adjudged that the plaintiff recover the costs of the defendant, to be taxed by the clerk."

Defendant excepted and appealed.

Mr. J. Langhorn Barham, for appellant:

The city had the right to remove the roots without notice or compensation.

Brown v. Asheville Electric Co. 138 N. C. 537, 69 L.R.A. 631, 107 Am. St. Rep. 554, 51 S. E. 62; Tate v. Greensboro, 114 N. C. 392, 24 L.R.A. 671, 19 S. E. 767; 2 Lewis, Em. Dom. § 66; State v. Jones, 139 N. C. 616, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 313, 52 S. E. 240; 2 Smith, Mun. Corp. § 1311; Mt. Carmel v. Shaw, 155 Ill. 37, 27 L.R.A. 580, 46 Am. St. Rep. 311, 39 N. E. 584; Chase v. Oshkosh, 81 Wis. 313, 15 L.R.A. 553, 29 Am. St. Rep. 898, 51 N. W. 560; Bunch v. Edenton, 90 N. C. 431; White v. Chowan, 90 N. C. 437, 47 Am. Rep. 534; Kelley v. Milwaukee, 18 Wis. 83; State v. Leaver, 62 Wis. 387, 22 N. W. 576; Wright v. Forrestal, 65 Wis. 341, 27 N. W. 52; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 987; Goodrich v. Chicago, 20 Ill. 445; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. East St. Louis, 134 Ill. 656, 25 N. E. 962; Cherry v. Keyport, 52 N. J. L. 544, 20 Atl. 970; Benson v. Waukesha, 74 Wis. 31, 41 N. W. 1017; Elliott. Roads & Streets, p. 375; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1046.

Messrs. I. F. Dortch and Aycock & Daniels, for appellee:

The trees are the property of the plaintiff, and they cannot arbitrarily be removed for the purpose of relieving the sewers.

Tate v. Greensboro, 114 N. C. 392, 24 L.R.A. 671, 19 S. E. 767; Brown v. Asheville Electric Co. 138 N. C. 537, 69 L.R.A. 631, 107 Am. St. Rep. 554, 51 S. E. 62; Frostburg v. Wineland, 98 Md. 239, 64 L.R.A. 627, 103 Am. St. Rep. 399, 56 Atl. 811, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 783.

Hoke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The decisions of this state are against the plaintiff's position, and the ruling of the court below upholding it, notably the case of Tate v. Greensboro, 114 N. C. 392, 24 L.R.A. 671, 19 S. E. 767. That was a case involving the right of a city to remove shade trees from the streets and sidewalks, and the court held as follows:

"(1) A city has exactly the same rights in, and is under the same responsibilities for, a street which it controls by dedication only, as in and for one which has been granted or condemned; and the rights of the abutting proprietor are no greater in such street than if it had been granted or condemned.

"(2) The law gives to municipal corporations an almost absolute discretion in the maintenance of their streets, since wide discretion as to the manner of performance should be conferred where responsibility for improper performance is so heavily laid.

"(3) The charter of the city of Greensboro and the general law of the state (2 Code 1883, chap. 62) give to the municipal authorities of that city wide discretion in the control and improvement of its streets; and, if damage result to an abutting property owner by reason of acts done by it neither negligently nor maliciously and wantonly, but in good faith in the careful exercise of that discretion, it is damnum absque injuria.

"(4) The courts will not interfere with the exercise of a discretion reposed in the municipal authorities of a city as to when and to what extent its streets shall be improved, except in cases of fraud and oppression constituting manifest abuse of such discretion."

In order to show how far the principle was applied in that decision, it appeared that the city authorities, having concluded that the trees, from their shade and placing tended to prevent the proper maintenance of the streets in reference to the public benefit and convenience, ordered their removal, and, on the hearing, the judge found: "That the trees did not obstruct the passage of persons on the sidewalks; that the public convenience did not require their destruction; that the mudhole in the street, for the removing of which this act seems to have been done, could have been remedied without cutting down the trees." And on the facts, Burwell, J., in his well-considered opinion, thus stated the question presented: "This phase of the case presents for our consideration this question: Can the courts review the exercise by the city of Greensboro of its power to repair and improve its streets and remove what it considers obstructions therein, and find and declare that certain trees in the streets of that city which the municipal authorities honestly believe were injurious and obstructive to the public were in fact not so, and upon such findings, there being no allegation of negligence or of any want of good faith on the part of the city, award damages to an abutting proprietor, the comfort of whose home has been lessened by the removal of the trees?" And in reference thereto, among other things, said: "Hence it is that the law gives to all such corporations an almost absolute discretion in the maintenance of their streets, considering, it seems, as is most reasonable, that wide discretion as to the manner of performance should be conferred where responsibility of improper performance is so heavily laid. Illustrative of this is the provision of Code 1883, § 3803, that the commissioners of towns 'shall provide for keeping in proper repair the streets and bridges of the town in the manner and to the extent they may deem best.' We think that, under its charter and under the general law of the state (2 Code 1883, chap. 62), the city of Greensboro was clothed with such discretion in the control and improvement of its streets, and, if damage comes to the plaintiff by reason of acts done by it, neither negligently nor maliciously and wantonly, but in good faith in the careful exercise of that discretion, it is damnum absque injuria. Smith v. Washington, 20 How. 135, 15 L. ed. 858; Brush v. Carbondale, 78 Ill. 74; Pontiac v. Carter, 32 Mich. 164." The opinion further quotes with approval from the case of Chase v. Oshkosh, 81 Wis. 313, 15 L.R.A. 553, 29 Am. St. Rep. 898, 51 N. W. 560, as follows: "The right of the public to the use of the street for the purposes of travel extends to the portion set apart and used for sidewalks, as well as to the way for carriages, wagons, etc., and, in short, to the entire width of the street upon which the land of the lot owner abuts. As against the lot owner, the city, as trustee of the public use, has an undoubted right, whenever its authorities see fit, to open and fit for use and travel the street over which the public easement extends to the entire width; and whether it will so open and improve it, or whether it should be opened or improved, is a matter of discretion, to be determined by the public authorities to whom the charge and control of the public interests in and over such easements are committed. With this discretion of the authorities courts cannot ordinarily interfere upon the complaint of the lot owner so long as the easement continues to exist. . . . The public use is the dominant interest, and the public authorities are the exclusive judges when and to what extent the streets shall be improved. Courts can interfere only in cases of fraud and oppression, constituting manifest abuse of discretion. It necessarily follows that for the performance of this discretionary duty by the city officers in a reasonable and prudent manner no action can be maintained against the city." This doctrine, so clearly and forcibly stated by the learned justice, was apparently qualified to some extent in State v. Higgs, 126 N. C. 1014, 48 L.R.A. 446, 35 S. E. 473, but this last decision was itself overruled in the recent case of Small v. Edenton, 146 N. C. 527, 60 S. E. 413; and it may now be considered as established with us that our courts will always be most reluctant to interfere with these municipal governments in the exercise of discretionary powers conferred upon them for the public weal, and will never do so unless their action should be so clearly unreasonable as to amount to an oppressive and manifest abuse of their discretion. This position is, we think, supported by the better reason, and is in accord with the decided weight of authority. Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244; Chase v. Oshkosh, supra; Mt. Carmel v. Shaw, 155 Ill. 37, 27 L.R.A. 580, 46 Am. St. Rep. 311, 39 N. E. 584; Smith, Modern Law of Mun. Corp. § 1311. True, the doctrine announced in Tate v. Greensboro was in reference to the removal of shade trees when considered as an obstruction to travel, but the dominant principle discussed and applied was in reference to the general power of a municipal government over its streets when exercised for the benefit and convenience of the public; and this principle is none the less potent, and its application none the less necessary, because the motive and purpose of exercising the power was for the preservation of the city sewerage. It is well established that the right of user for the last purpose arises to the public by reason of the dedication (Elliott, Roads & Streets, § 17); and, in a matter of such supreme and controlling importance, it would lead to most deplorable results if municipal governments could be stopped or hindered in their efforts taken in good faith to preserve the public health, unless their action should come clearly under condemnation within the principle announced as law in that decision.

Nor could any valid objection be made because no notice was given plaintiff. It is true that, when condemnation is required, notice must be provided for or given at some stage of the proceedings, though we have held in State v. Jones, 139 N. C. 613, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 313, 52 S. E. 240, that such notice is not required when the order of appropriation is made, but is sufficient if provided for when the appraisement is made or the amount of compensation is to be fixed; but that is where some right of the injured party is wrongfully invaded, making condemnation proceedings necessary. In the present case, as we have endeavored to show, the authorities of the city, being in the exercise of discretionary powers, conferred upon them by the law for the welfare of the public, and, there being no evidence tending to show a want of good faith or oppressive abuse of their discretion, there is no legal right of plaintiff infringed upon. The injury, if any, suffered by her, is damnum absque injuria. We again refer to Tate v. Greensboro, 114 N. C. 392, 24 L.R.A. 671, 19 S. E. 767, as authority for the position that no notice was required.

There is nothing here said which conflicts, or is intended to conflict, with the decision of this court in Brown v. Asheville Electric Co. 138 N. C. 533, 69 L.R.A. 631, 107 Am. St. Rep. 554, 51 S. E. 62, cited, and to a great extent relied upon, by plaintiff. In that valuable opinion, delivered in protection of the just rights of the individual citizen, it was held that a municipal government had no power to confer upon a corporation exercising its privileges for purposes of private gain the right to construct and operate a street railway along the public streets of a city or town, so as to deprive abutting owners of their right to compensation by reason of the additional burden thus placed upon the streets. A perusal of the opinion will show that the decision was placed distinctly on the ground that such action of the city government was clearly not taken for the benefit of the public, or in the exercise of powers conferred for its benefit, and which were contemplated and included in the original act of dedication, but in promotion of a private enterprise. Accordingly it was held in that case: "(3) An abutting owner has property in shade trees standing along the sidewalk which the law will protect, and they may not be removed except where their removal is necessary for the use of the street as a public highway."

There was error in the judgment entered below, and, on the facts stated and admitted, there should be judgment entered that defendant go without day, and it is so ordered.

Reversed.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

v.
WILLIAM H. BYARD.

(200 Mass. 175, 86 N. E. 285.)

Highways — moving building — permit.

1. A permit to move a building along a 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

street will not justify the moving of a building larger than the one described therein.

Trees — removal — public official.

2. A tree warden has no authority to cut from a tree standing on private property branches extending over the street to aid the moving of a house along the street, under a statute permitting the surveyors and road commissioners to cause parts of trees standing on private property to be removed if they obstruct the way, or endanger, hinder, or incommode persons traveling therein, and providing for the cutting of trees standing in ways.

Same — mutilation — statutory penalty.

3. One is within the operation of a statute providing punishment for wantonly injuring a tree if he does a manifestly injurious act thereto wilfully in reckless disregard to the right of the owner.

Same — liability of tree warden.

4. A tree warden is subject to punishment under a statute prohibiting wanton injury to trees, where he proceeds irreparably to injure trees standing upon private property, which he has no authority to do, without trying to ascertain what his rights and duties are in regard to them.

(November 24, 1908.)

Case Note. — Authority of municipal officers to cut or trim tree on private property to facilitate use of street.

In Wilson v. Simmons, 89 Me. 242, 36 Atl. 380, it appeared that the tree cut down stood upon the line, partly within the street and partly within plaintiff's lot. It was held that the principle of law which would control the liability of the owner of a private lot for cutting a tree standing on the line between him and an adjoining proprietor was not applicable to a street commissioner, who is required by a reasonable necessity to hew to the line in the construction of a sidewalk and invested by statute with authority "to remove any obstacle which obstructs, or is likely to obstruct, a way, or render its passage dangerous;" that the commissioner was not liable in trespass for cutting the whole of the tree, if, after removing that portion within the street, the remaining portion would be a constant menace to public travel.

In Gallaher v. Jefferson, 125 Iowa, 324, 101 N. W. 124, it appeared that the city, under an ordinance which was not inherently unreasonable or otherwise improper, was about to lower the grade of the street 4 or 5 feet in front of plaintiff's property, and that the same would result in the destruction of two rows of shade trees,—one in the street 5 or 6 feet from the lot line, and the other 2 feet inside the lot line; and plaintiff sought to enjoin the same. The court, in denying the relief demanded, said that, when "such trees become a nuisance or an obstruction to public travel, or interfere with proper street improvements, then the power to remove the same cannot be ques-

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Bristol County made during the trial of a prosecution against him for wantonly injuring a tree, which resulted in his conviction. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Benjamin Cook, Jr., for defendant.

Messrs. James M. Swift and Frank B. Fox, for plaintiff:

The building was being moved for the private purposes of one individual, and not in any public interest, and did not give the tree warden a right wantonly to injure the complainant for the benefit of the owner of the building.

Lynn v. Essex County, 153 Mass. 41, 26 N. E. 409; National Folding Box & Paper Co. v. Robertson, 125 Fed. 525; Werner v. State, 93 Wis. 266, 67 N. W. 417; 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 2-4.

Knowlton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was found guilty upon an indictment framed under Rev. Laws, chap. 208, § 100, as amended by Stat. 1902, chap. 544, p. 485, § 30, alleging that he "wilfully and maliciously and wantonly did injure a tree standing for a useful purpose, of the property of Minnie M. Glendon." This was a large cherry tree standing near the line of the street, within its owner's inclosure, and it had large branches extending over the street. One part of the trunk, about 14 inches in diameter, extended over the line of the street about 9 feet above the ground. One Nickerson obtained from the proper authorities a permit to move a building through the street, around the corner, into another street. Mrs. Glendon's lot at and tioned." But, from all that can be gathered from the opinion, the court considered only the mutual rights of the city and the lot owner with respect to the trees "set out in the street," and made no allusion to the trees just inside the lot line.

In Colston v. St. Joseph, 106 Mo. App. 714, 80 S. W. 590, it was held not error to give the following instruction: "The jury are instructed that plaintiff cannot in this case recover any damages for the trees mentioned in evidence if the trees were wholly or partially in the street, and were not at the curb line, but were so located as to obstruct the travel or use of the street unless they were removed." It appeared in evidence, however, that, although the roots of the trees penetrated plaintiff's land, the trunks of the trees were wholly within the street.

In Bradley v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. 66 Conn. 559, 32 L.R.A. 280, 34 Atl. 499, it was held that the selectmen of a town had no power, without the consent of the owner, to cut and trim trees near the corner abutted on both streets. The building was 5 feet longer and about a foot and a half wider than that described in the permit, and therefore the authority given did not justify the removal of this larger building through the street. Under Rev. Laws, chap. 52, § 13, which applies to cities as well as towns (Rev. Laws, chap. 26, § 2), its removal in that place was unlawful.

Its length and width were such that it was necessary to carry it over a part of Mrs. Glendon's land near the corner of the street, and to cut down a small tree in her yard, and Mrs. Glendon agreed with Nickerson that this might be done. Its width was so great, and houses upon the other side were so located, that it could not be taken through the street without cutting off branches and a part of the trunk of the cherry tree. The owner of the tree refused to permit this to be done, and the defendant, assuming to act under his authority as a tree warden, did it against her protest.

The first question that arises is: What is the authority of a tree warden under Rev. Laws, chap. 51, § 10? Does it include a right to cut down trees, or to cut off parts of trees, standing on private land outside of the boundary lines of the street? We are of opinion that it does not. The surveyors and road commissioners, under the last clause of this section, should cause parts of such trees to be removed if they obstruct the way, or endanger, hinder, or incommode persons traveling thereon. In the early part of the section an exception is made of "public shade trees in towns;" but trees and bushes standing in ways may be trimmed or lopped off, or, in pursuance of a vote of the mayor and aldermen, selectmen, or road commissioners, passed after public notice and a growing on private property, but overhanging a highway, for the purpose of enabling a telephone company to relocate its line, since whatever power the selectmen possessed to direct where poles and wires of a telephone company should be placed was subject to a general statute which prohibited such companies from injuring trees without the consent of the owner.

In Unwin v. Hanson [1891] 2 Q. B. 115, it was held that the term "lop," as used in an act of Parliament authorizing justices of the peace to order "lopped or pruned" trees growing near the highway to its prejudice by excluding the sun and wind therefrom, meant to cut off the branches laterally; and neither under such an order nor at common law had the surveyor of highways any power to cut off the tops of trees growing on private land near the highway.

As to the right of a municipal corporation to cut or trim trees within the limits of the highway, see case note to Rosenthal v. Goldsboro, ante, 809.

hearing, may be cut down and removed by the officer who has the care of trees belonging to a city or town. But this part of the section has reference only to trees and bushes "standing in ways." The defendant had no legal right to cut off the branches of the tree, and the ruling on this part of the case was correct.

The defendant's counsel presented seventeen requests for rulings, some of which are covered by what we have said, and many of which relate to the meaning of the word "wantonly," used in the indictment. Under this indictment, it was not necessary to prove that the defendant acted maliciously. Indeed, the commonwealth did not contend that the charge of malicious action was sustained, and the judge instructed the jury that it was not sustained. The case was left to stand upon the allegation that the defendant acted wantonly.

The judge instructed the jury that "an act done heedlessly, without regard to the propriety demanded by the circumstances of the case, and in reckless disregard of the rights of others, with a total absence of care, amounting in this case to gross negligence by the defendant in the discharge of his duties as tree warden, would be an act done wantonly." We are of opinion that a manifestly injurious act, done wilfully in reckless disregard of the rights of others, is done wantonly within the meaning of this statute. National Folding Box & Paper Co. v. Robertson, (C. C.) 125 Fed. 525; Werner v. State, 93 Wis. 266, 67 N. W. 417; 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed, pp. 2-4. The jury were further instructed that, if the defendant, acting as a reasonable man, was justified in believing and honestly believed that he had the authority that he exercised, he was not guilty; but, if they found that if he had taken any proper precaution to learn of his rights and duties as tree warden he would not have acted as he did, and found that he was grossly negligent in the performance of his duties as tree warden, they might find that he acted wantonly. Wilfully to do an irreparably injurious act without trying to ascertain what his rights and duties were, and to go on in gross negligence of his duties, indicated a spirit of wantonness and reckless disregard of right and wrong in his conduct affecting others. We are of opinion that the instructions on this branch of the case were substantially correct, and that the defendant's requests were rightly refused.

We are also of opinion that there was evidence to which the instructions were properly applicable, and which well warranted the finding of the jury. There were a variety of circumstances tending to sustain the contention of the commonwealth. The defendant admitted in cross-examination that he had not at any time taken any steps to inform himself as to his powers, duties, and authority as tree warden, except that he asked the mayor what he should do and was told to lop off trees in the highway which would obstruct carriages or the apparatus of the fire department; that he had never read any of the statutes or other sources of information concerning it, except that he looked once or twice in a book sent him by the state forester; that he had not seen anything in that concerning his duties in such a case as this; that he took no steps to inform himself as to his powers, duties, or authority after Mr. Nickerson made complaint about this cherry tree; that he did not attempt to ascertain what the permit was, or whether the building was of the dimensions given in the permit; that he made no inquiry of the mayor or the city clerk, and did not consult the city solicitor, although he knew he had a right to ask the city solicitor about it. It also appeared that he began the cutting without saying anything to the owner of the tree, and that, although he saw her husband and talked with him the evening before the cutting after he had viewed the premises and made up his mind to cut the tree, he said nothing to the husband about it. There was also testimony for the consideration of the jury as to the way in which the tree was cut and as to the defendant's having said that he was doing Mr. Nickerson a favor. The bill of exceptions shows no error of law at the trial.

Exceptions overruled.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

MINNEAPOLIS GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

MINNIE CRONON, Admr., etc., of James Edward Cronon, Deceased.

(— C. C. A. —, 166 Fed. 651.)

Electric wiring — control — fire — licensee — injury — liability of company.

1. Where the inside wiring for lighting by electricity of a private house, such as a shop, is done under an independent contract with the owner of the building, and is Headnotes by PHILIPS, District Judge.

Note. — The duty of an electric light company with respect to wiring or fixtures installed in private property is discussed in a case note to Fish v. Waverly Electric Light & P. Co. 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 226, to the decisions in which may be added the sub-accepted by him and approved by the city inspector as sufficient, such inside wires become the private property of the proprietor of the building, and are subject to his exclusive control. A third party voluntarily and uninvited entering such shop to ascertain the cause of and to extinguish a fire therein is a mere licensee, to whom the company furnishing the electric current to the house owes no obligation other than not to wantonly or knowingly injure him. And, where such inside wiring becomes imperfectly insulated by the act of the owner of the building without notice thereof to the electric company, resulting in injury to such licensee,—Held, not to give a cause of action for such injury against the company in favor of the legal representative of the deceased licensee.

Trial — instructions — inferences — error.

2. It devolves upon the plaintiff in an action for damages based upon the negligence of the defendant not only to present in his petition a definite theory upon which the negligence is predicated, but to support it by tangible evidence as distinguished from mere conjecture and possibility. Where the evidence leaves the matter uncertain as to which one of several things immediately brought about the injury, for some of which the defendant is answerable and for others he is not, it is error for the court to single out a responsible act, and suggest to the jury that they may infer it, without directing their attention to other inferences, more or equally reasonable, exculpatory of the defendant.

Electricity — defective wiring — injury — liability of company — res ipsa loquitur.

3. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is at best uncertain, and should not be applied except where it not only supports the conclusion contended for, but also reasonably excludes all others. It is limited to cases of absolute duty, or an obligation practically amounting to that of an insurer. Held, that it cannot be invoked to hold liable an electric company furnishing a current of electricity to a private house, connecting with inside wiring owned by and under the exclusive control of the proprietor of the building, for an injury resulting directly from the imperfect insulation and condition of such inside wiring, merely because the electric company is producing and furnishing the dangerous and subtle element of electricity under a contract with the owner of the building.

(December 14, 1908.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of her intestate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Sanborn and Hook, Circuit Judges, and Philips, District Judge.

Messrs. M. B. Koon, Ralph Whelan, and William H. Bennett, for plaintiff in error:

The electric company owed no duty to the deceased, who was upon the premises as a trespasser or bare licensee, to inspect the inside wiring, or to keep it in repair and in a safe condition.

Memphis Consol. Gas & Electric Co. v. Speers, 113 Tenn. 83, 81 S. W. 595; National F. Ins. Co. v. Denver Consol. Electric Co. 16 Colo. App. 86, 63 Pac. 949; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ballentine, 28 C. C. A. 572, 56 U. S. App. 266, 84 Fed. 935; Woodruff v. Bowen, 136 Ind. 431, 22 L.R.A. 198, 34 N. E. 1113; Gibson v. Leonard, 143 Ill. 182, 17 L.R.A. 588, 36 Am. St. Rep. 376, 32 N. E. 182; Hamilton v. Minneapolis Desk Mfg. Co. 78 Minn. 3, 79 Am. St. Rep. 350, 80 N. W. 693; New Omaha Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. v. Anderson, 73 Neb. 84, 102 N. W. 89; Trouton v. New Omaha Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. 77 Neb. 821, 110 N. W. 569; Hector v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 558, 25 L.R.A. 554, 37 N. E. 773; Sullivan v. Boston & A. R. Co. 156 Mass. 378, 31 N. E. 128; Keefe v. Narragansett Electric Lighting Co. 21 R. I. 575, 43 Atl. 542; McCaughna v. Owosso & C. Electric Co. 129 Mich. 407, 95 Am. St. Rep. 441, 89 N. W. 73; Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1.

Where an injury has been received from grasping a live electric wire after notice has been brought home to the injured person before injury, his contributory negligence will bar recovery for such injury.

Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L.R.A. 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 786, 19

sequently reported case of Union Light, Heat & P. Co. v. Arntson, 157 Fed. 540, which holds that an electric light company owes a duty to prevent a dangerous current of electricity from entering a dwelling, not only to its patron, but to his family, servants, employees, and others who may be rightfully upon his premises; and that such patron's ownership and control of the building presents no such intervening human agency between the negligence of the electric light company and the injury thereby occasioned as to preclude recovery, it being the current of electricity generated by defendant's dynamo, under its exclusive control and operation, and not the wires and lamps disconnected from the live current, which caused the injury.

See also, as holding in effect that an electric light company is not responsible for an injury, by electric shock, resulting from the condition of a fixture belonging to the person injured. Peters v. Lynchburg Traction Co. 108 Va. 333, 61 S. E. 745.

S. E. 344; Texarkana Gas & Electric Light Co. v. Orr, 59 Ark. 215, 43 Am. St. Rep. 30, 27 S. W. 66; Henning v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 41 Fed. 864; Cumberland v. Lotting, 95 Md. 42, 51 Atl. 841; Wood v. Diamond Electric Co. 185 Pa. 529, 39 Atl. 1111; Danville Street Car Co. v. Watkins, 97 Va. 713, 34 S. E. 884; Frauenthal v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 67 Mo. App. 7.

There is no liability when there is no control over the wires and no knowledge of the defect which occasioned the injury, by the person charged with negligence.

Memphis Consol. Gas & Electric Co. v. Speers and National F. Ins. Co. v. Denver Consol. Electric Co. supra.

Mr. Clark Hempstead also for plaintiff in error.

Mr. E. L. Sutton, with Mr. Arthur H. Noyes, for defendant in error.

Phillips, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The writ of error is to have reviewed the judgment of the circuit court in awarding defendant in error $3,500 damages, resulting from the death of her husband, James E. Cronon.

About 6 o'clock A. M. on May 24, 1906, the deceased discovered smoke coming from the blacksmith shop of one Victor Nordloff, on Central avenue, in the city of Minneapolis, Minnesota. This shop was a small frame building of one room, one story in height, standing about 37 feet from the residence of the deceased. Finding the shop locked, Cronon thrust his hand through a broken pane of glass in the window, and, unfastening the window, entered the shop. He discovered that the wall near the window was afire, against which hung, suspended on a nail, an electric wire. This suspended wire was about 12 feet in length, with an incandescent electric bulb at the end, and was used by the blacksmith in shoeing horses and doing other work at nighttime, or when the day was dark. When not so in use the blacksmith hung this wire on a nail driven into the side wall of the shop. After entering the building through the window the deceased called to his wife to bring a pail of water, which she did and passed to him through said open window. He dashed the water on the fire, but failing to extinguish it called for another vessel of water, which his wife brought and passed to him in the same way, and which he threw on the fire with a like result. He then directed her to bring a larger vessel of water. As she turned to go, she testified, she heard him fall, and looking through the window discovered him lying on his back about 3 feet from said wall, with the end of the electric wire, broken off, grasped in his right hand, his hand resting on his chest. The man she called to the scene passed in through the window and found Cronon dead. The palm of his hand holding the wire was badly burned, indicating that death thus resulted from the electric current, as there was no other mark upon his body indicating contact with the wire.

The evidence of the wife was that when she returned to the window the last time, again placing her hands on the sill, she felt perceptibly an electric shock. This was confirmed by the man who entered through the window. His testimony was that he was working in the railroad yards hard by, and, as it had been raining during the night he had on a rubber coat, and with him rubber gloves, which gave sufficient insulation to enable him to pass through the window without feeling any electric shock. As no such appearance of electricity was manifested at the window when the deceased passed and when the wife handed the first two buckets of water through the window, it is evident that the presence of sufficient electricity to be felt at the window did not manifest itself until after the suspended wire was separated from the nail on the wall and its broken end was left unprotected.

The inside wiring of the blacksmith shop was done under an independent contract by the plaintiff in error with the owner of the shop some three years prior to the accident in question, and it was inspected by the city authorities when completed, and accepted as sufficient. This inside wiring then became the private property of the owner of the building. The use of the suspended wire was for his own convenience, and the manner of hanging it against the wooden wall on the nail was of his own selection. From long use the insulating covering of this wire became much worn where it rested on said nail. There was no notice given to the electric company of this condition of the wire. When the blacksmith concluded his work the evening preceding the accident, he left the wire suspended on this nail. He closed and locked the shop and went to his home, and had not returned to his work at the time of the accident. The evidence further shows that the deceased frequented said shop, and had at times assisted the blacksmith in his work, and had knowledge of the use and position of said suspended wire.

The actionable negligence imputed by the petition to the company is as follows: "That, on the 24th day of May, A. D. 1906, and for a long time prior thereto, the above-named defendant had maintained said system or set of wires running into said blacksmith shop, a one-story frame building, known as 930 Central avenue, in the city of Minneapolis, Hennepin county, state of Minnesota, as above described, for lighting purposes, and that such wires had, through the carelessness and negligence of the above-named defendant, become old, defective, and dangerous, the insulation having worn off to a large extent. That the insulation and support of said wires had become, through the carelessness and negligence of the defendant, defective and insufficient, so that they had become crossed and in contact with other wires belonging to said defendant company, or to some other company to this plaintiff unknown, in such a way as to become on the day above set forth highly and dangerously charged with a high and dangerous voltage of electricity, so that early on the morning of the day above set forth, and before the above-named blacksmith, Victor Nordloff, had come to his shop known as 930 Central avenue, said blacksmith shop was set on fire by the defective and improperly insulated wires of said defendant company."

A correct analysis of the foregoing specifications enforces the conclusion that the gravamen of the complaint is that the negligence of the company refers alone to the imperfect condition of the wires inside the building and the resultant injury therefrom. The predicate of the charge is that the company had maintained said system or set of wires running into said blacksmith shop; that such wires, through the carelessness and negligence of the defendant, had become old, defective, and dangerous, the insulation having worn off to a large extent. It further avers "that the insulation and support of said wires had become, through the carelessness and negligence of the defendant, defective and insufficient;" and that, by reason of this fact, they had become crossed and in contact with other wires of the defendant company or some other company, in such a manner as at the time in question to become highly dangerous and charged with a high voltage of electricity. And, to put this construction beyond tolerant debate, it concludes with the statement that "said blacksmith shop was set on fire by the defective and improperly insulated wires of said defendant company." So, throughout the trial, and as indicated by the charge of the court, the company was sought to be held responsible for the condition of the wires inside of the shop, as not being in condition to receive the charge of the current at that time sent into the building. The court refused to admit proof offered by the company that the shop was wired under an independent contract, paid for by the shop owner, and it became his property, and under the agreement was by him to be kept inspected and repaired; the assertion of the court being that it was the responsible duty of the company furnishing the electricity to see to it that the inside wiring of the building was in safe condition for transmission into it of the electricity.

As if the issue tendered by the petition warranted it, the plaintiff below was indulged to introduce a lot of expert testimony for the purpose of showing that the charge of voltage passing over such wire was too great, and that it might be inferred that the company was guilty of some negligence in not seeing that its transmitters, at some undisclosed point on its system of wires, were out of order, without any other fact or circumstance from which such inference might be drawn, or that the cause thereof, occurring at that time of the morning, could have been known to or discovered by the defendant.

It is true the wiring done in this shop, some three years prior to the accident, was under contract with the company. But there was no pretense, and no foundation for any, that the work as done by the company was improper or imperfect, or that the fire resulted from any such cause. The suspended wire was for the convenience of the blacksmith, to be used in his own way. When not in use, as is frequently and safely done, he could have looped up the suspended wire out of the way, thus leaving it perfectly insulated. Or he could have hung it to one side free from contact with the wall. Instead thereof, or other safe method, he saw fit to hang it on a nail driven into the wall, so that the wire was thus placed in contact with the wall. Not only that, but he hung it over the nail for so long a time that the insulating covering of the wire became so broken and worn as to expose the live wire to the inflammable wooden wall, but for which the fire would not have occurred. This is a demonstrated, indisputable conclusion from the fact that there was another suspended insulated wire in the back part of the building and no danger came therefrom. So there is no reasonable escape from the conclusion that the immediate cause of the fire was the exposed condition of the live wire against the wooden wall of the building. That was the direct fault of the blacksmith, over whose action the company had no right of control.

The only answer made to this is that, as the company was manufacturing and furnishing for the building a highly dangerous and subtle force, under its immediate control in the transmission, it fell short of its duty to the owner and to the public who might chance to enter the building in not seeing that the inside wires were, at the instant, in such condition of repair and insulation as to prevent the impartation of electricity from the exposed live wire to the building.

The only pertinent case cited in support of this extreme doctrine is that of Maysville Gas Co. v. Thomas, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 403, 75 S. W. 1129, and the antecedent case by the same court, cited in the opinion. The gas company furnished electricity to the Maysville Railroad & Transfer Company, a street railroad. The injury resulted from the electric current escaping through the negligence of the railway company. The court held that, on account of the dangerous character of the forces produced by the gas company, the duty was imposed both upon it and the railway company to see that the wires into which the electricity was sent by the gas company were properly insulated; that the danger was the same whether the wires were owned by one or both corporations; that the gas company was compelled to know that the means of its distribution were in such condition that those whose business or pleasure brought them in contact with it might do so with safety; and that both companies were liable. No considerate authority supports this proposition. Its recognition and enforcement by the courts would impose upon the company furnishing electricity under contract with the owner of a building, who had wired it and owned and controlled the wires inside, an intolerable burden. Take such a city as Minneapolis, with perhaps 20,000 dwelling and business houses wired inside, under an independent contract. The contract of the electrical company is to furnish the required amount of electricity to light these buildings. Can the company, unbidden, enter at will the private house of the citizen and pass into its various rooms to inspect these wires every day to see that they are in proper condition for the reception of the electricity it has contracted to sell? If so, it must employ a large retinue of competent men to do this work; and, as absolute insurers under the rule contended for, the necessities of the situation would demand that they should have free access to these buildings at all hours and under all conditions. Such a rule of law would tend to put concerns furnishing electricity to private houses out of business.

This question was passed upon by the court of appeals of Colorado, in National F. Ins. Co. v. Denver Consol. Electric Co. 16 Colo. App. 86, 63 Pac. 949. The insurance company undertook to hold the electric company responsible for the destruction of a part of the railroad station in Denver, on the theory that the fire was imparted to the building from the electric wires therein, attributable, as the insurance company claimed, to the negligent and imperfect construction of this wiring. Although the electric company did not do this work, it was sought to hold it responsible on the grounds (1) that it had notice of the dangerous condition of the wires, which the evidence failed to sustain; and (2) that, under its contract to furnish so subtle and dangerous an element for lighting the building, it was its duty to have seen to it that the inside wires were at all times in a safe condition. That eminent jurist, Bissell, P. J., rejected this contention, and said, in effect, that to charge the electric company with responsibility for the imperfect and un-insulated condition of the wires in the building, of which it had no notice, would impose a burden beyond its contract and undertaking. He further said: "We do not assent to the position . . . that the electric light company had no business to deliver the current without informing the depot company of the danger attending its use, and particularly of the danger attending its use where the wiring was defective or its construction unskilful and negligent. Where parties undertake to wire their own property, and then apply to a light company to deliver a current to light the building, they must be assumed to take all risks resulting from the character of the wire which is put in the building and the method of construction which is adopted in putting it in. We do not believe that the principle contained in some cases to which our attention has been called . . . is at all applicable. . . . It is a matter of common knowledge, and in fact of universal knowledge, that an electric current is dangerous, and must be discreetly and prudently handled in order to avoid danger either to life or to property. We are quite ready to concede that, when an electric light company undertakes to supply a dangerous current to a dwelling house or to a building, they are bound to see that the wires they put in and the connections they make are properly insulated and protected, so that no harm will come to the property. Where, however, they are only employed to deliver the current by connection with wiring already made by the individual who owns the property, it seems to us that their responsibility ends when the connection is properly made under proper conditions, and they deliver the current in a manner which will protect both life and property. We do not believe any such responsibility rests on the company as to require them to advise the persons who apply for the connection that they must see to it that the wiring is of a certain class or description, that it is insulated in a particular manner, and that there is no connection between it and the woodwork, and failing in this, that they will be liable for any damages which may happen because of the negligent or unskilful nature of the construction. When parties wire houses they are supposed to have done it intelligently, and to have hired competent persons for the purpose, to whom alone they must look in case the work is improperly and unskilfully done."

The only difference between that case and this is that here there is no charge that the wiring in this shop was imperfectly or badly done, or that the injury resulted from original bad construction. But the injury is alleged to have resulted from the wires in the building being suffered to become worn and out of order, whereby the current or voltage sent into them escaped and did the injury.

In Memphis Consol. Gas & Electric Co. v. Speers, 113 Tenn. 83, 81 S. W. 595, Speers sued the company for the value of a horse, killed by electricity communicated from an illuminated sign on a post to which the horse was hitched. In hitching the horse the owner threw a small steel chain around the post, and fastened the two ends of the chain to the bit in the horse's mouth. The chain came in contact with a metal clamp containing the electric wire, improperly insulated, and the electric current was thus conducted to the horse's mouth and killed him. The wiring about the premises of the owner of the sign was done under his order, and was his property under his exclusive control. It was inspected and accepted by the city, just as in the case of the blacksmith shop in question. The only relation the gas and electric company sustained to this matter was that it furnished the electricity therefor, for which the owner paid. This testimony was excluded by the trial court, just as in the case at bar. The court said that, although electricity is a subtle and dangerous agent unless properly controlled, that fact did not place responsibility on the company when it simply furnished the electric current for the wires of the owner of the illuminated sign and post, and that there was no duty of inspection on the part of the company. By way of illustration, the court said that, although the gas used for illuminating purposes, uncontrolled, is also a dangerous agency, it could not be maintained that a company which made and furnished it to the pipes of the customer on his own premises would be liable for his asphyxiation, or one of his guests, or a stranger, caused by a leakage from the pipes. "Or, changing the illustration, should there be so violent an explosion of the gas accumulated from the leak that the house of his neighbor, who has no interest in or control over them, was injured; could it be said the company furnishing the gas was liable to either for his loss?" The court maintained that the liability of the company for such a defect is dependent upon the interest in or control over the appliance in which the defect exists. It then said: "The Circuit Judge, in excluding the testimony as to the ownership and control of the defective wires by another than the plaintiff in error, as well as in his charge, was controlled by the case of Maysville Gas Co. v. Thomas, supra. While the opinions of that court are entitled to the highest respect, yet we are not able to coincide with its reasoning in that case. The sounder view, we think, is that of the court of appeals of Colorado, as expressed in National F. Ins. Co. v. Denver Consol. Gas & Electric Co. supra." Then, speaking of the conclusion reached in the Kentucky case, the court said: "Pressed to its legitimate conclusion, we think this argument would make an electric or a gas company an insurer against defects in appliances over which they had no control, and, to avoid liability, would impose upon them the duty of continued inspection of the wires and pipes of every customer supplied with their products. This would be a burden which no such company could bear and live; and it also would be a source of annoyance to its customers, which they would not long submit to."

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The circumstances persuasively indicate that the most rational inference to be drawn by the impartial mind is that the deceased voluntarily undertook to disconnect the wire from the wall with his hand. The wire was on the nail when he entered the building; it was there until after the second bucket of water was thrown on the fire. Immediately after his wife turned to go for the third bucket of water she heard him fall, and looking into the window discovered him lying on his back, grasping the end of the wire in his hand. How did the wire get into his hand? Is not the more reasonable answer: Discovering that the water had not extinguished the blaze, he conceived the idea of detaching the wire from contact with the wood, to end the impartation of the electric current, so that when the third bucket of water arrived he could the more certainly extinguish the fire? But the court, to parry the force of this inference, gave license to the jury in its charge to enter the wide field of possible conjecture, by suggesting to them that they might consider the fact that the instinct of self-preservation would dictate to a man of common sense not to take such an obvious live wire in his naked hand; and, therefore, the jury were at liberty to assume that he grabbed the wire in his hand as it fell, to protect himself from contact with it. If his body had shown evidence of the wire having struck it first, there might be some reasonable basis for the jury to indulge such presumption. But there was no such evidence. Where he stood and fell was about 3 feet from where the wire hung on the wall. If it fell from the nail, would it have struck him where he stood? If so, where is the proof? "It is not permissible to guess at the cause of an injury, and assume it is something for which the defendant is responsible." Reese v. Clark, 146 Pa. 465, 23 Atl. 246. The rule, and a sane one, laid down by the Supreme Court, in Patton v. Texas & P. R. Co. 179 U. S. 658, 45 L. ed. 361, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275, is that it is not sufficient to show that an accident happened and an injury ensued. The evidence must point out that the negligence of the defendant was the direct cause.

"Where the testimony leaves the matter uncertain, and shows that any one of half a dozen things may have brought about the injury, for some of which the employer is responsible and for some of which he is not, it is not for the jury to guess between these half a dozen causes and find that the negligence of the employer was the real cause, when there is no satisfactory foundation in the testimony for that conclusion." This rule was recognized by this court in Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 67 C. C. A. 421, 425, 132 Fed. 593-597.

When an alleged injury may have been due to one or the other of two causes, either one of which may have been the sole proximate cause, there can be no recovery unless it is shown that, as between the two causes in question, it was the negligence of the defendant which caused the injuries. Searles v. Manhattan R. Co. 101 N. Y. 661, 5 N. E. 66; The Nellie Flagg (D. C.) 23 Fed. 671; Hartford County v. Wise, 75 Md. 38, 23 Atl. 65.

If the deceased took hold of the live wire to disengage it from the wall, it was both a voluntary and reckless act, and the maxim Volenti non fit injuria would apply.

A plaintiff is required to develop a theory upon which the actionable negligence of the defendant is claimed, and such theory must be supported by tangible evidence. The jury may not be indulged, against visible facts contradicting it, to guess that it was otherwise. The burden of proof ought not to be shifted after such fashion, to enable the plaintiff to recover. The palpable, undisputed evidence is that, when the deceased voluntarily entered the building, the wire was in its place on the wall. Shortly thereafter he was found dead grasping the wire in his hand; and the indisputable further fact appears that it was the electrical current through this hand that caused his death. Against this obviously reasonable conclusion, it devolved upon the plaintiff to show that the deceased did not voluntarily so grasp it. It was certainly unequal for the court, in its charge, to throw into the scale the said suggestion to the jury, without also directing their special attention to the counter obvious inference, inculpatory of the action of the deceased.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, invoked in argument, has no place under the facts of this case. At best it is uncertain, if not dangerous, in practice, and should not be applied, "except when it not only supports the conclusion contended for, but also reasonably excludes all others." Peirce v. Kile, 26 C. C. A. 201, 53 U. S. App. 291, 80 Fed. 865; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 67 C. C. A. 421, 132 Fed. 593; Northern P. R. Co. v. Dixon, 71 C. C. A. 555, 139 Fed. 737.

The qualification of the doctrine is aptly expressed by the court in Zahniser v. Pennsylvania Torpedo Co. 190 Pa. 353, 42 Atl. 708, as follows: "The maxim res ipsa loquitur is itself the expression of an exception to the general rule that negligence is not to be inferred but to be affirmatively proved. The ordinary application of the maxim is limited to cases of an absolute duty, or an obligation practically amounting to that of an insurer. Cases not coming under one or both of these heads must be those in which the circumstances are free from dispute, and show not only that they were under the exclusive control of the defendant, but that in the ordinary course of experience no such result follows as that complained of. It is sometimes said that the mere happening of an accident in this class of cases raises a presumption of negligence, but this is hardly accurate. Negligence is never presumed. If it were, it would be the duty of the court, in the absence of exculpatory evidence by the defendant, to direct a verdict for the plaintiff, whereas in these cases the question is for the jury. The accurate statement of the law is not that negligence is presumed, but that the circumstances amount to evidence from which it may be inferred by the jury."

Sufficient answer to its application to this case is that the place where the injury occurred was in the exclusive control of another, and the defect in the wire that occasioned the injury was not the fault of the electric company.

We need have no contention with the line of authorities cited by counsel for defendant in error, holding that where, in consequence of the defective construction of an electric wire or its imperfect insulation, attributable to the electric company, or when a live wire without insulation is suffered by the company to lie in a position to injure a person rightfully coming in contact with it, responsibility may attach to the company. The following cases illustrate this rule:

Jones v. Union R. Co. 18 App. Div. 267, 46 N. Y. Supp. 321, where the plaintiff was standing at night upon the streets of the city, and a span wire used to support a trolley wire carrying a current of 500 volts broke a few feet beyond the insulator which carried the trolley, and, falling, burned through the plaintiff's hat and destroyed one of his eyes. It was held that the defendant company owed the duty of constructing its plant and maintaining it reasonably safe and secure for the public who might use the street. The liability there ensued from the want of care in construction and repair of wires owned by the company over and above the public highway.

The case of Griffin v. United Electric Light Co. 164 Mass. 492, 32 L.R.A. 400, 49 Am. St. Rep. 477, 41 N. E. 675, was where a tinsmith was engaged in placing an iron conductor on a building, upon the side of which an electric wire ran. He received a shock from the wire by reason of a pipe coming in contact with a wire where the insulating material was worn off. The court said: "The plaintiff was not a trespasser or a mere licensee who must take the premises of another as he finds them. He was rightfully on the premises for purposes of business. . . . These were a source of danger unless properly insulated. . . . It [the defendant] was negligent if it failed to use reasonable diligence in seeing that its wires were kept in a state of repair. This duty it owed at least to every person who, for purposes of business, was rightfully upon the premises."

In Thomas v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 54 W. Va. 305, 46 S. E. 217, the electric company left its wires with the ends detached, not properly wrapped or covered, and it was worn and dangerous. They remained in such condition for a long time, without inspection. An opera company which leased the building for a time tacked advertising banners on the balcony. At the expiration of the lease a man twenty-one years of age was sent up to gather the banners. He went upon the balcony to untack them, and while engaged in this work in the nighttime came in contact with one of the electric wires, which he grasped with his left hand, and was transfixed by the shock. It was held that the company was guilty of negligence in not properly insulating or protecting the wire, as against a party who had business there to perform.

In Trenton Pass. R. Co. v. Cooper, 60 N. J. L. 219, 38 L.R.A. 637, 64 Am. St. Rep. 592, 37 Atl. 730, electricity escaped from a 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

street railway and injured a horse driven on a public street. It was held that this was presumptive proof of negligence in the operation of the railway. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applied to the situation.

In Devlin v. Beacon Light Co. 192 Pa. 188, 43 Atl. 962, the electric light company, in making some alterations in its line, allowed an arc light wire to lie upon the pavement in a much-traveled part of the city, without guard or warning to passers-by. The plaintiff stepped upon it and received a shock. It was held that that was sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant to require it to explain.

On the other hand, the more pertinent cases are as follows: Sullivan v. Boston & A. R. Co. 156 Mass. 378, 379, 31 N. E. 128, presents the case of a boy who went upon the roof of a shed of a railroad company to recover a ball, and he was killed by coming in contact with two naked copper wires attached to the shed, used in the business of the company for conducting electricity. The court said: "If the plaintiff's intestate was not a trespasser, which we do not decide, he was at most a mere licensee, and, so far as he was concerned, the defendant had a right to arrange and use its property in any lawful manner, and owed him no duty with respect to it, except to refrain from setting a trap for him, and from doing him intentional or wanton harm. . . . The live electric wire with which the deceased came in contact was a lawful apparatus, used in the ordinary business of the defendant, and was not designed as a trap."

In Woodruff v. Bowen, 136 Ind. 431, 22 L.R.A. 198, 34 N. E. 1113, the defendant had erected a building which, under ordinary circumstances, was reasonably safe. It became unsafe by reason of the storage of a large quantity of goods by a tenant, and by reason of the additional fact that, in an extraordinary emergency by fire, large quantities of water were thrown into the building, causing it to collapse. Firemen, in the discharge of their duty, were killed. It was held that the owner of the building was not responsible in damages for the death of the firemen, who were on the premises under a mere license conferred by law. "The licensor owes to a mere licensee no duty except that of abstaining from any positive wrongful act which may result in injury to the licensee, and the licensee takes all risks."

In Hamilton v. Minneapolis Desk Mfg. Co. 78 Minn. 3, 79 Am. St. Rep. 350, 80 N. W. 693, it is held that at common law the owner of a building owed no duty to keep it in a reasonably safe condition for members of the public fire department, who, in the exercise of their duty, have occasion to enter the building.

In Hector v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 558, 25 L.R.A. 554, 37 N. E. 773, a lineman employed by a telephone company, for the purpose of affixing wires of the company to a standard erected on the roof of a building by the electric lighting company, had an implied license to reach the roof by going up through the building. But he used a different way, and, while unnecessarily upon the roof of an adjoining building, was injured by coming in contact with an uninsulated wire charged with electricity belonging to the electric lighting company. It was held that he was not entitled to recover. Field, Ch. J., observed that: "Whatever duty . . . the defendant owed to the plaintiff as servant of the telegraph and telephone company, under its license to that company to use the standard for the support of telegraph or telephone wires, this duty cannot be held to extend over the whole circuit of the defendant's wires; and the defendant was not required, for the protection of the servants of the telegraph and telephone company, to maintain an effectual insulation of its wires over other buildings than that on which the standard was placed, at places where the defendant had no reason to expect that the servants of that company would go in the performance of their duties in using its standard, and where the defendant had neither invited nor licensed them to go."

In Keefe v. Narragansett Electric Light Co. 21 R. I. 575, 43 Atl. 542, the testimony showed that the plaintiff, a girl about eleven years of age, climbed out of the window of a house in which she lived onto the jet of the adjoining house. While so walking she came in contact with electric wires owned by the tenant of that building, which were connected with the defendant's wires for transmitting electricity at the houses. The court said: "We do not think that the action can be maintained: First, because the wires by which the plaintiff was injured were not the wires of the defendant; and, secondly, even if they had been, we fail to see that the defendant would have owed any duty to the plaintiff, since it could have had no reason to anticipate the act of the plaintiff in walking along the jet."

In Augusta R. Co. v. Andrews, 89 Ga. 653, 16 S. E. 203, a lineman for a telephone company, in working for his company, placed a telephone wire above and across a fire-alarm wire, ascending the pole of the fire-alarm system for that purpose. In passing the telephone wire over the fire-alarm wire he received an electric shock. The claim made was that the street railway company was negligent in constructing the feed wire so that it came in contact with the fire-alarm wire and charged it with a dangerous current, and that this negligence caused the injury. The claim was disallowed, on the ground that the street railway company owed him no duty and was not liable for injury that happened to him while, without permission, he was upon the pole of the fire-alarm system.

The authorities bearing upon this feature of the case are collected and reviewed in a very thorough manner in New Omaha Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. v. Anderson, 73 Neb. 84, 102 N. W. 89, and in Trouton v. New Omaha Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. 77 Neb. 821, 110 N. W. 539, in which it was held that a fireman who enters upon private premises for the purpose of extinguishing a fire, without the special authority or invitation of the owner, is a bare licensee, made such by public necessity, and takes the risk of the premises as he finds them. The evidence showed that for some unexplained cause a severe shock of electricity came from one of the low-pressure wires which the fireman supposed was harmless. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was invoked. The court said: "It is only when the defendant is under an absolute duty to prevent the results that their appearance shows negligence." There, as here, although the wire may not have been at the instant properly insulated, the party coming in contact with it did so voluntarily and unnecessarily.

In Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ballentine, 28 C. C. A. 572, 56 U. S. App. 266, 84 Fed. 935, a train of tank cars, filled with petroleum, took fire, and a boy seventeen and a half years old, out of curiosity, went upon the premises and perhaps rendered some service there. Jenkins, J., quoted the rule that "it is not everyone who suffers loss from another's negligence who may recover therefor. Negligence, to be actionable, must occur in breach of a legal duty arising out of contract or otherwise, owing to the person sustaining the loss;" citing National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. ed. 621; Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. L. 5. Although the setting fire to the oil tanks resulted from the negligent act or omission of the servant of the railroad company in misplacing the switch, he said: "That negligent act or omission, however, was not in breach of any duty owing to Ballentine, and as to him was innocuous, he being 2 miles away at the time, and unaffected thereby. . . . He went upon the grounds of the railroad company, where he had no right to be, and going there, at best, as a mere licensee, he was bound to take things as he found them, and he assumed the risk of the situation. Crane Elevator Co. v. Lippert, 11 C. C. A. 521, 24 U. S. App. 182, 63 Fed. 942. So it is held that firemen entering upon premises to extinguish a conflagration and to save property do so, not by permission or invitation of the owner, but under license of the law, and they also must take the risks as they find them. . . . The railway company owed to him no active duty,—only the duty to abstain during his presence on the premises from positive wrongful act which might result in injury to him. It was not bound to remove the burning cars to another part of its yards, either in the discharge of any duty towards him, or, so far as the record discloses, in discharge of duty towards anyone."

The case was tried by the learned trial judge upon a false theory of law, and the request of the defendant below for a directed verdict should have been granted.

It results that the judgment of the Circuit Court must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.
(Division No. 2.)

WILLIAM H. DONOVAN et al.

v.

JAMES R. GRIFFITH.

(215 Mo. 149, 114 S. W. 621.)

Curtsey — trust estate.

1. The conveyance to a man of land purchased with funds from the separate estate of his wife, and his holding the legal title at the time of her death, will not prevent his having curtesy in the property.

Same — prior death of child.

2. That the wife's title to real estate is not acquired until after the death of the only child of the marriage will not deprive the husband of curtesy in the property.

Same — entreties.

3. That an estate purchased by funds from the wife's separate estate is conveyed to husband and wife jointly does not deprive him of his curtesy in the property.

Entreties — trust funds.

4. A conveyance to a man and wife jointly of real estate purchased by him with funds partly his own and partly belonging to his wife's separate estate, without her written authority to do so, does not create an estate by entreties, but equity will protect her interest in favor of her heirs.

Wife — heirs — curtesy — rents.

5. In a proceeding by heirs of a wife for partition of real estate purchased wholly or partly with funds from her separate estate and standing in the name of her husband or in their joint names at the time of her death, he is not chargeable for rents accruing on the property before her death, whether it was occupied by him or rented to others, where the parties were living together and there is nothing to show that both did not enjoy the benefits and products of the land.

(December 15, 1908.)

CROSS APPEALS from a decree of the Circuit Court for Pike County partitioning certain real estate; plaintiffs appealing from so much of the decree as recognized an estate by curtesy in the property, and defendant appealing from so much as granted partition. Modified.

Statement by Fox, P. J.:

This is a proceeding by which it is sought to declare that certain undivided portions of certain lands are held in trust by de-

Case Note. — Effect upon curtesy of death of issue before seisin by wife.

From the days of Littleton till the present time all the authorities, with but a single exception, as will be seen hereafter, have held that, as to the husband's right of curtesy in the lands of his wife, it is immaterial whether the issue was living or dead at the time of the seisin by the wife. Such was the conclusion reached with little or no discussion of the question, in the following authorities: Co. Litt. 29b; 2 Bl. Com. 128; 4 Kent, Com. 28; 1 Greenleaf's Cruise, Real Prop. title 5, chap. 1, §§ 7, 18; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 515; Hunter v. Whitworth, 9 Ala. 965; McDaniel v. Grace, 15 Ark. 465; Heath v. White, 5 Conn. 228; Zeust v. Staffan, 16 App. D. C. 141; Jackson ex dem. Swartwout v. Johnson, 5 Cow. 102, 15 Am. Dec. 433; Templeton v. Twitty, 88 Tenn. 595, 14 S. W. 435; Paine's Case, 8 Coke, 34a; Menvil's Case, 13 Coke. 19.

The only case opposed to this rule of law is Haywood v. Moore, 2 Humph. 584, in which the court used the following language: 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"One requisite to constitute a tenancy by the curtesy is that the wife have issue capable of inheriting her estate. Therefore, if a woman be tenant in tail male, and hath only a daughter born, the husband is not thereby entitled to be tenant by the curtesy; because such issue female cannot inherit the estate in tail male." 2 Bl. Com. 127, 128. Here . . . [the wife] never had issue capable of inheriting this estate, because she became seized of the fee after the death of her son, and after being thus vested with the estate she had no child born."

But in Templeton v. Twitty, supra, the foregoing case was said not to be in conflict with the other authorities upon this question, and to have well decided that the husband had no curtesy. The court distinguished it in that the wife and her only child both took the land as purchasers under the same deed, she a life estate, and the child the remainder, and in that the child could never by any possibility inherit the estate from his mother, for the reason that he must die before she could take it.

defendant for the plaintiffs, and, after the ascertainment of the interests of the parties in this land, to partition the same in accordance with the laws of this state. There are two 40-acre tracts of land, situated in Pike county, Missouri, which are involved in this proceeding, one is known as the "Pritchett 40" and the other as the "Thornton 40," so called from the respective names of the grantors. Leona Griffith was the wife of the defendant James R. Griffith. They were married on January 30, 1895, and on January 4, 1900, a child was born of this marriage. This child died on October 15, 1903. Leona Griffith, the wife of the defendant, and the mother of the deceased child, died April 9, 1904. She died intestate, and left no debts. The only heirs at law surviving Leona Griffith were her husband, James R. Griffith, the defendant herein, William H. Donovan, her brother, and Carrie I. Boyd, her half-sister, both of whom are plaintiffs in this cause. The petition described the land in controversy, and averred that the wife, Leona Griffith, furnished the entire purchase price of each 40 acres out of her own separate money and means. Upon this state of facts the chancellor was asked to declare that the defendant, James R. Griffith, held the legal title to said lands as trustee for the wife, and since her death as trustee for her heirs at law, the plaintiffs in this cause. The interests of the parties in said real estate were alleged in the petition to be as follows; that is to say: William H. Donovan, one third, Carrie I. Boyd, one sixth, and James R. Griffith, one half. From the allegations in the petition it was further sought to charge the interests of James R. Griffith with certain rents arising from said lands which he had received from the date of the acquisition of title, which it is averred belonged to his wife, and was converted by him to his own use. The answer of the defendant, James R. Griffith, admitted that Leona Griffith, the wife of the defendant, died intestate in Pike county, Missouri, on the 9th day of April, 1904. He also admitted that, by and through his deceased wife, Leona Griffith, he received and invested in the lands described in plaintiff's petition the sum of $925, and no more. Further answering, the defendant says: "That there was born during the marriage of himself and deceased wife, Leona Griffith, one child, named ——— Griffith, and that said child died on the ——— day of ———, 1904; therefore, defendant says that he has a curtesy interest or life estate, in the remaining one half of the land so purchased as aforesaid with the money of his deceased wife, Leona Griffith, and therefore denies the right of plaintiff to partition the lands in question. Further answering, he says that he invested the money of his wife as her agent and as she directed. Defendant, further answering, denies each and every allegation, statement, and charge made by plaintiffs' petition, not hereinbefore admitted to be true, and, now having fully answered, asks to be discharged with his costs." Plaintiffs' reply was a general denial of the new matter contained in defendant's answer.

Testimony was introduced by both plaintiffs and defendant upon the issues presented, and the court, at the close of the testimony, took the case under advisement, and subsequently made a special finding of facts and entered its decree, which finding of facts and decree were as follows: "Now, at this day, again come the parties to the above-entitled cause, plaintiffs appearing by Hoster & Jones, their attorneys, and the defendant appearing by Ball & Sparrow, his attorneys, and the court having had this cause under advisement since the hearing of the testimony and the submission of the same on a former day of this term of court and after the argument of counsel, and being fully advised in the premises, makes the following written finding of facts and conclusions of law, which are as follows, to wit: Finding in reference to Pritchett 40: Defendant owns $\frac{1}{2}$ in his own right. Defendant owns $\frac{1}{4}$ by inheritance from his wife. Defendant owns curtesy in $\frac{1}{4}$. Defendant owes estate of deceased wife $\frac{1}{2}$ rental value of $\frac{1}{2}$ of wife's share for five years; i. e., $\frac{1}{2}$ of \$276.90, to wit, \$138.45. That, on the date of the death of the Mrs. Griffith, defendant was indebted to her on account of said rental value in the sum of \$276.90. That one half thereof, viz., \$138.45, became the property of defendant by inheritance from his deceased wife. This leaves the sum of \$138.45, for which, as trustee of his wife's interest in said land, the defendant should account, and his marital interest acquired from his wife in said lands should be and is charged with the repayment of said sum of \$138.45. That the plaintiffs William H. Donovan and Carrie I. Boyd, as the sole surviving (collateral) heirs of said Leona Griffith, are entitled to have and receive from defendant before he receives any part of the sum that may be realized from the sale of said Pritchett lands belonging to said Leona Griffith said sum of \$138.45, said Donovan being entitled to two thirds thereof, i. e., \$92.30, and Carrie Boyd to one third thereof, i. e., \$46.15. That the interest of the respective parties in said Pritchett lands is as follows: Defendant is owner in his own right of a $\frac{1}{2}$ interest in said lands. Defendant is the owner, by inheritance from his wife, of a $\frac{1}{4}$ interest in said lands subject to said charge of \$138.45. Said defendant is the owner of a curtesy estate in $\frac{12}{100}$ interest in said lands. Said Donovan is the owner, subject to defendant's said curtesy estate, of a $\frac{12}{100}$ interest in said lands. Said Carrie Boyd is the owner, subject to said curtesy estate, of a $\frac{12}{100}$ interest in said land. That, in purchasing the Thornton 40-acre tract for \$1,100 defendant invested \$275 of his wife's money in said purchase, and defendant, by reason thereof, held the legal title to one fourth thereof in trust for his wife, Leona. Defendant is the owner in his own right of an undivided three fourths interest in the Thornton 40 acres. Defendant is the owner by inheritance from his wife of an undivided one eighth interest in said land. Decree of partition, order of sale of said land by sheriff at public sale to highest bidder for cash in hand at regular October term, 1904, of this court. Said tracts to be sold separately. In case the full amount of said charge of \$138.45 shall not be realized from the sale of defendant's interest in the Pritchett 40, the remaining balance shall be deducted from the proceeds of defendant's interest inherited from his wife in the Thornton 40 and paid to said Donovan to Carrie Boyd's guardian in the respective proportion aforesaid. The court doth further find that Leona Griffith was the wife of James R. Griffith, and that she died intestate at the county of Pike and state of Missouri on the _____ day of April, 1904, without issue and without any father or mother surviving her and leaving as her sole heirs at law her husband James R. Griffith, defendant herein, and her brother, William H. Donovan, plaintiff herein, and her sister of the half blood, Carrie I. Boyd, also a plaintiff herein.

"The court further finds that during the coverture there was born to said Leona Griffith and her husband, James R. Griffith, a child which lived for some months, but died prior to the death of said Leona Griffith. The court further finds that during the coverture Mary E. Pritchett and S. A. Pritchett, her husband, conveyed to the said James R. Griffith and Leona Griffith, his wife, by proper and suitable deed of conveyance, the title to the following described real estate, situated in Pike county, Missouri, to wit: Beginning at a cornerstone from which a pin oak 20 inches in diameter bears north 36 degrees east, 3.35 chains, the same being the southwest corner of S. A. Pritchett's land; thence south, 13.04 chains, to Mrs. Sallie Porter's land; thence east, with Mrs. Porter's north line, 33.50 chains, to Salt river; thence north, with the meanderings of Salt river, to the southeast corner of S. A. Pritchett's land; thence west, with Pritchett's south line, 27.90 chains, to place of beginning, containing in all 40 acres, more or less, and all being in section 14, township 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

55 N., range 3 W., said deed of conveyance being recorded in Book 113, at page 567, of the deed records of Pike county, Missouri. The court finds that during said coverture the defendant, James R. Griffith, acquired by a proper deed of conveyance from Ella Thornton and others the legal title to the following described real estate, also situated in Pike county, Missouri, to wit: The N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 14, in township 55, range 3 W., containing 40 acres, more or less.

"The court further finds that in the purchase of the first-named 40 acres, which was acquired from Mary E. Pritchett and husband, the defendant contributed $\frac{12}{100}$ of the purchase money and that $\frac{12}{100}$ was the separate money and means of his wife, Leona Griffith, and that in the purchase of the last-named 40 acres which was acquired from Ella Thornton et al. defendant contributed $\frac{3}{4}$ of the purchase money and the remaining $\frac{1}{4}$ was the separate money and means of his wife, Leona Griffith.

"The court further finds that, upon the acquisition of the title to said Thornton 40 acres, the defendant, James R. Griffith, held the legal title to an undivided one fourth interest therein in trust for his said wife, Leona Griffith, and that, upon the death of said Leona Griffith, he holds the legal title to that portion of the Pritchett 40 acres which was paid for by her separate money and means in trust for the heirs of his said wife subject to his own right of inheritance and the marital interests therein, and that he now holds the legal title to one-fourth interest in the Thornton 40 acres in trust for the heirs of said deceased wife subject to his own interest by inheritance and to his marital interests therein; and it is ordered and decreed by the court that that portion of the title to each of the 40-acre tracts above mentioned now be held in trust by the defendant, James R. Griffith, for the plaintiffs William H. Donovan and Carrie I. Boyd be and the same is hereby vested out of the defendant and vested in the plaintiffs. In accordance with the written findings made by the court and filed in this cause and set out hereinbefore in this decree, it is considered and adjudged by the court that the said lands are not susceptible of division in kind, and the same is hereby ordered sold by the sheriff of Pike county, at public sale, to the highest bidder for cash in hand at the next regular October term, 1904, of this court, in accordance with the statute governing sales of real estate in partition. It is further considered and adjudged by the court that said tract be sold separately, and that, in case the full amount of the said charge $138.45 shall not be realized from the proceeds of the sale of the said James R. Griffifth's interest in the 4¹/₂ acres acquired from Mary E. Pritchett et al., the remaining balance of such charge shall be deducted from the proceeds of the sale of the defendant's, James R. Griffith's, interest inherited from his wife in the said Thornton 40 acres, and shall be paid to the plaintiffs in the respective portions as hereinbefore found and adjudicated; and it is further ordered by the court that the sheriff make report of his proceedings under this order as soon as the sale had thereunder shall be consummated, and that no distribution be made by said sheriff until further order of this court; and it is further ordered that this cause be and the same is hereby continued." To which action of the court plaintiffs and defendant excepted at the time and saved their exceptions.

There is little or no dispute as to the facts developed upon the trial of this cause, and it is sufficient to say that the testimony introduced furnished ample support to the finding of the trial court, with the exception of that portion of its finding concerning the charge sought to be made upon the interests of the defendant in the land involved as to rents. We do not deem it necessary to set out in detail the testimony of the witnesses in this cause, but will further refer to the general tendency of the testimony during the course of the opinion.

Both plaintiffs and defendant preserved their exceptions to the action of the court in its findings of facts and the decree rendered, and on October 20, 1904, both plaintiffs and defendant filed their motions for a new trial, which were, by the court, overruled, and this appeal was prosecuted by both sides from the finding and decree rendered by the trial court to the supreme court, and the record is now before us for consideration.

Messrs. Hostetter & Jones, for plaintiffs:

Where the separate means of the wife are invested in land by the husband without her written assent, the title is held by him in trust for the wife, and at her death for her legal heirs, to the extent which her separate means contributed to the purchase price.

McLeod v. Venable, 163 Mo. 536, 63 S. W. 847; Jones v. Elkins, 143 Mo. 647, 45 S. W. 261; Winn v. Riley, 151 Mo. 61, 74 Am. St. Rep. 517, 52 S. W. 27; Hurt v. Cook, 151 Mo. 431, 52 S. W. 396; Scrutche-field v. Sauter, 119 Mo. 615, 24 S. W. 137; Seay v. Hesse, 123 Mo. 450, 24 S. W. 1017, 27 S. W. 633; McGregor-Noe Hardware Co. v. Horn, 146 Mo. 129, 47 S. W. 957; Johnston v. Johnston, 173 Mo. 115, 61 L.R.A. 166, 96 Am. St. Rep. 486, 73 S. W. 202.

The wife, and her heirs when she is dead, can hold the husband liable for conversion 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of her rents, issues, and products arising from her real estate.

Gordon v. Gordon, 183 Mo. 294, 82 S. W. 11; Miller v. Slupsky, 158 Mo. 643, 59 S. W. 990; Woodward v. Woodward, 148 Mo. 241, 49 S. W. 1001.

Messrs. Ball & Sparrow, for defendant:

The lands are not subject to partition since the defendant inherited one half of his wife's interest in the money invested, and the other he owns as tenant by the curtesy.

Woodward v. Woodward, 148 Mo. 241, 49 S. W. 1001; Tremmel v. Kleiboldt, 75 Mo. 255; McBreen v. McBreen, 154 Mo. 323, 77 Am. St. Rep. 758, 55 S. W. 463; Soltan v. Soltan, 93 Mo. 307, 6 S. W. 95; Alexander v. Warrance, 17 Mo. 228; O'Brien v. Ash, 169 Mo. 283, 69 S. W. 8; Hayes v. McReynolds, 144 Mo. 348, 46 S. W. 161; Myers v. Hansbrough, 202 Mo. 495, 100 S. W. 1137.

The deed was made to Griffith and wife, and therefore was a deed by entirety, and upon the death of the wife the defendant became the absolute owner in fee.

Garner v. Jones, 52 Mo. 68; Hall v. Steph-ens, 65 Mo. 670, 27 Am. Rep. 302.

Fox, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The record discloses that the complaint of the plaintiffs is solely directed to the recognition by the trial court of an estate by the curtesy in the defendant, James R. Griffith, in the aliquot parts of the respective tracts designated in the special findings of the court. The errors complained of on the part of the defendant appellant challenge the correctness of practically all the findings of the court and its decree ordering a partition of the land involved in this proceeding. We will first direct our attention to the complaint of the plaintiffs, who are appellants also in this case, respecting the recognition given by the court to the estate of curtesy claimed by the defendant. The testimony as disclosed by the record applicable to this proposition shows that the Thornton 40-acre tract of land was conveyed to James R. Griffith alone on February 20, 1904, which was shortly after the death of their only child.

1. It is insisted that the entire legal title to the Thornton 40 having been conveyed to the husband, James R. Griffith, the defendant in this cause, that the wife, Leona Griffith, was never seised of that 40, and that seisin was always essential to establish curtesy. It is sufficient to say upon that proposition that learned counsel for the plaintiffs overlook the question that the wife was seised of an equitable estate. Certainly that will not be disputed by the plaintiffs, for the reason that the very foundation of this action, in which it is sought to have the chancellor declare that the legal title to this 40 acres should be held in trust for the wife, and, she being dead, in trust for the plaintiffs to this action, fully recognizes that the wife did have in this 40 acres at the time of her death an equitable estate, otherwise the plaintiffs would have no standing in this court. Their right to successfully maintain this action is predicated upon the theory that the wife at the time of her death was in equity entitled to certain interests in the lands involved in this controversy. The facts developed upon the trial of this cause and the finding of the trial court indicate very clearly that the wife was entitled in equity to certain portions of the lands involved in this controversy, and that it was the equitable separate estate of the wife, and that she died seised of that equitable estate.

In Woodward v. Woodward, 148 Mo. loc. cit. 247, 49 S. W. 1001, speaking through Judge Gantt, it was there said: "It is also well-settled law in Missouri that a husband is entitled to curtesy in the equitable separate estate of the wife of which she died seised, although limited to her separate use,"—citing in support of the doctrine Alexander v. Warrance, 17 Mo. 228; Tremmel v. Kleiboldt, 75 Mo. 255; Soltan v. Soltan, 93 Mo. 307, 6 S. W. 95. In Myers v. Hansbrough, 202 Mo. 495, 100 S. W. 1137, it was expressly ruled that the married woman's statute (§ 4340, Rev. Stat. 1899 [Anno. Stat. 1906, p. 2382]), which is the same as § 6869, Rev. Stat. 1889, did not further impair the rights of the husband's estate by the curtesy in land held by the wife as her separate equitable estate than to take away from the husband his common-law right to the possession and usufruct of the land during the life of the wife. Applying the doctrine as announced in the cases above indicated, it is clear that the law is well settled in this state that a husband is entitled to curtesy in the equitable separate estate of the wife; and the provisions of § 4340, which is denominated the married woman's statute, has in no way changed the rights of the husband other than to the extent as heretofore indicated.

It is also suggested by counsel for plaintiffs that curtesy at common law could only exist in real estate which lawful issue of the wife born alive was or might be capable of inheriting. If this suggestion is to be taken as a contention on the part of the plaintiffs that the Thornton 40-acre tract was not acquired until after the death of the child of the wife of the defendant, James R. Griffith, therefore there was no issue of the wife born alive after the acquiring of this Thornton

40 acres, and, as to that there could be no estate by the curtesy in the husband, we have no hesitation in saying that we are unwilling to give our assent to such contention. "Curtesy" is defined by the leading authors as "the estate to which by common law a man is entitled on the death of his wife in the lands or tenements of which she was seised in possession in fee simple or in tail during their coverture, provided they had lawful issue born alive which might have been capable of inheriting the estate." "It is a freehold estate in the husband for his natural life, cast upon him by operation of law immediately upon the happening of the necessary incidents." 12 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1002. Lord Coke says of this subject the four essential things necessary to constitute an estate of tenancy by the curtesy are, first, marriage; second, seisin of the wife; third, issue born alive; fourth, death of the wife. He said, however: "But it is not requisite that these should occur together all at one time. And, therefore, if a man taketh a woman seised of lands in fee, and is disseised, and then have issue, and the wife die, he shall enter and hold by the curtesy. So, if he hath issue which dieth before the descent, as is aforesaid." [1 Co. Litt. 30a.] Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries, stated the doctrine as applicable to the tenancy by the curtesy in this language. He said: "Tenancy by the curtesy is an estate for life created by the act of the law. When a man marries a woman seised at any time during the coverture of an estate of inheritance in severalty, in coparcenary, or in common, and hath issue by her born alive, and which might by possibility inherit the same estate as heir to the wife, and the wife dies in the lifetime of the husband, he holds the land during his life by the curtesy of England; and it is immaterial whether the issue be living at the time of the seisin, or at the death of the wife, or whether it was born before or after the seisin." 4 Kent, Com. 11th ed. 26. In Templeton v. Twitty, 88 Tenn. 595, 14 S. W. 435, the precise question under discussion in the case at bar was passed upon and thoroughly discussed, and all the authorities reviewed. The facts as applicable to that case from which the legal propositions arose were as follows: "During the coverture P. L. and Eveline A. Twitty had two children born unto them,—a boy and a girl,—the former dying July 17, 1857, at the age of about four years, and the latter dying August 4, 1857, at the age of about three years. Both children were born and died before their mother acquired any land; and, for this reason, it is said that their father could not have taken an estate as tenant by the curtesy. In other words, the contention in behalf of defendants is that, because the wife's seisin did not commence until after the death of her children, there was no right of curtesy in her husband." The Tennessee supreme court, in responding to the contention of the defendant in that case, speaking through Caldwell, J., said: "All the authorities of which we have any knowledge are contrary to this contention. Whether seisin arose before or after the death of the child is an unimportant circumstance. If there was a child which by possibility might have inherited the land from the mother,—a child to whom the land would have descended had it survived the mother,—that is all that is required as to issue, and the father takes an estate for life as tenant by the curtesy." In 1 Greenleaf's Cruise, Real Prop. 147, § 7, the rule applicable to this subject was thus stated: "The time when the seisin commences, whether before or after issue had, is immaterial; for, if a man marries a woman seised in fee is disseised, and then has issue, and the wife dies, he shall enter and hold by the curtesy. So if he has issue which dies before the descent of the lands on the wife." The distinguished American author, Mr. Washburn, on Real Property, 4th ed. pp. 178, 179, § 45, very clearly states the rule as applicable to this proposition: "It is immaterial whether the child is born before or after the wife acquires her estate, if, had it lived, it would have inherited that estate; and it matters not though it die before she acquires the estate, so far as the husband's right to curtesy is concerned." Judge Caldwell, in the Tennessee case, directs attention to the celebrated case of Jackson ex dem. Swartwout v. Johnson, 5 Cow. 102, 15 Am. Dec. 433, in which Chief Justice Savage, in treating of this question, says: "It is immaterial at what period during coverture the wife became seised,—whether before issue or after. Nor is it material whether the issue be living at the time of the seisin." In Heath v. White, 5 Conn. 228, the subject of tenancy by the curtesy was thoroughly considered and all the authorities exhaustively reviewed, and it was expressly ruled in that case that whether the issue were born before or after the wife's seisin of the lands, or whether it be living or dead at the time of the seisin, or at the time of the wife's decease, the husband would be tenant by the curtesy, citing 2 Bl. Com. 128; Co. Litt. 29b; Bush v. Bradley, 4 Day, 298. We see no necessity for pursuing this subject further. Applying the authorities as heretofore indicated to the proposition now under discussion, there is no escape from the conclusion that the defendant James R. Griffith had a curtesy interest in the Thornton 40-acre tract.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Learned counsel for plaintiffs-appellants insist that as to the Pritchett 40, that being the 40 in which the conveyance was taken to the husband and wife jointly, that as the deed was made to the husband and wife, which ordinarily was an estate by the entirety at common law, it was no such a title as that the husband's curtesy estate would attach, and it is argued at common law such estate was one by entirety, and, if the wife died first, her surviving husband would take not a curtesy consummate, even though all the other requisites should exist, but he would become invested with the entire fee. In other words, the survivor took the entire title. Upon this proposition, it must be again repeated that counsel overlooked the question as to the character of the estate that the facts developed at the trial show this estate to be. In equity the conveyance, if made jointly to husband and wife, would not be held an estate by the entirety. This has been expressly ruled by this court in McLeod v. Venable, 163 Mo. 536, 63 S. W. 847; Jones v. Elkins, 143 Mo. 647, 45 S. W. 261. If this estate created by this deed conveying the Pritchett 40 acres to the husband and wife jointly is to be construed for the purpose of defeating the husband of the curtesy as an estate by the entirety, then it is clear that the plaintiffs, as to that 40 acres, would have no standing in this court, for the reason that, under that construction of the deed, the husband would be the absolute owner of the Pritchett 40 by his right of survivorship. Upon that proposition, we have reached the conclusion that the defendant is also entitled to a curtesy interest in the Pritchett 40-acre tract.

2. This leads us to the consideration of the complaints of the defendant appellant James R. Griffith. Learned counsel for defendant appellant insists that the conveyance of the Pritchett 40-acre tract to James R. Griffith and Leona Griffith, his wife, created an estate by entirety, and that, upon the death of the wife, the defendant became the absolute owner in fee of said 40 acres by right of survivorship. It must be conceded that, if nothing else was disclosed by the record in this cause other than the conveyance itself, the contention of counsel for the defendant would be unanswerable. The authorities are all one way on that proposition; but this suit involves a contest as to the nature and character of the estate created by this conveyance, and all the facts were developed concerning the execution and delivery of the deed. That the purchase money for this land was partly furnished by the defendant, James R. Griffith, and partly by money constituting the separate estate of the wife, the testimony shows beyond dispute. We have read in detail the testimony developed upon the trial, and it fully supports the finding of the court concerning the amount of money belonging to the husband and wife which was applied to the payment for the purchase of the Pritchett 40 as well as the interests of the parties in said lands. Upon the facts disclosed by the record applicable to this case, it comes directly within the rules of law announced in McLeod v. Venable and Jones v. Elkins, supra, and the doctrine as announced in those cases is a full and complete answer to the contention of the defendant that the deed to Griffith and wife constituted an estate by entirety. It was expressly ruled in Jones v. Elkins, supra, that, where the husband purchases land and pays for it with the separate money of his wife in part without her written assent authorizing him so to do, and in part with his own money, and takes the legal title jointly to himself and wife, a court of equity will protect the wife in the enjoyment of her interest in the property, and declare a trust in her favor. In McLeod v. Venable, supra, the case of Jones v. Elkins, was unqualifiedly approved, and it was held that, under the rule announced in the Elkins Case, as well as under the exceptions to the common-law rule announced distinctly in Garner v. Jones, 52 Mo. 68, that, under the facts in that case, the wife had a trust estate in the land in proportion to the amount contributed by her to the full amount of the purchase money, which a court of equity would protect. An examination of those cases will demonstrate that the facts upon which the rules of law are predicated are nearly identical with the facts in the case at bar. Counsel for defendant manifestly rely upon the case of Garner v. Jones, supra. That case, it is true, very clearly and correctly announced the rules of law applicable to estates by entirety, and in a clear, painstaking manner sets forth the reasons upon which the doctrines of estates by entirety are predicated. With the doctrine announced upon that subject in Garner v. Jones we have no fault to find or criticism to suggest. It is entirely in harmony with the uniform unbroken line of decisions by this court, as well as most of the courts of our sister states where the subject has been in judgment before them. However, it is apparent that defendant overlooked what was said in that case, which is strikingly applicable to the case at bar. The learned judge, after discussing the law applicable to estate by entirety, in conclusion announced this rule in the following language: "It may be conceded that, if a husband invests the separate funds of his wife in real estate and takes a deed to them jointly; a court of equity would protect her in the enjoyment of the property, and declare a trust in her favor. But no such point arises in this case." The cases to which I have directed attention treating of this proposition cite numerous authorities in support of the conclusions therein reached, and it is sufficient to say that, if the doctrine as announced in the cases applicable to this proposition are longer to be followed, then there can be but one conclusion reached upon this question, and that is that Leona Griffith, the wife of the defendant appellant, had an interest in the lands involved in this proceeding, which a court of equity would protect, and, she being dead, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the interests as designated in the written finding of the court, and the court was warranted, as was done in the case of McLeod v. Venable, supra, to decree partition and order the land to be sold and the proceeds distributed in accordance with the interests of the parties.

3. This brings us to the consideration of the final question in this case, as to whether or not, under the testimony as developed at the trial, the chancellor was warranted in charging the interests of the defendant in the land involved with certain rents, which it seems is claimed accrued by reason of the occupancy of a part of the land by the defendant and the renting out by the defendant of a part of it prior to the death of the wife. We take it that the charge of rents was based upon the use of the premises prior to the death of the wife, for subsequent to her death the defendant was a tenant by the curtesy, and therefore was not liable for the payment of rents. We have fully considered the testimony which is sought to be made the basis of that part of the decree which charges the interests of the defendant with rents, and have reached the conclusion that these rents were improperly charged, and should be entirely omitted from the decree. While it is true that there is testimony showing that defendant used this land, it must not be overlooked that he and his wife were living together, both of whom, doubtless, enjoyed the benefits and products of such land. Again, it must not be overlooked that this is not a contest between the wife and the husband as to the control of her separate estate in this land. There is an entire absence from this record of any dispute while they were living together as husband and wife, up to the time of her death, as to the control of the premises, or as to whom the rents should be paid. After the passage of the married woman's act, the unity of husband and wife as to their property rights designated in such act was dissolved; hence as to such property rights they had full authority to contract with each other in respect to the same. Manifestly as applicable to this case, if the wife during the time that she and her husband were occupying the premises was denied any right of control of her interest in such premises, or denied the right to collect the rents to which she was entitled, she could have maintained an action in her own name against her husband asserting her rights, thereby recovering a judgment for any rents her husband had deprived her of respecting those premises.

In Rice S. & Co. v. Sally, 176 Mo. 107, 75 S. W. 398, it was expressly ruled by this court, after a most exhaustive review of all the authorities, that after the passage of the married woman's act the husband and wife had the right to deal at arm's length with each other; and it was there said, speaking through Judge Gantt, that "the statutes dissolve the unity of husband and wife as to the property rights enumerated in our married woman's act, and make the wife a feme sole, and, as the husband could always have contracted with a feme sole and granted his property after marriage as before, with the exceptions that he could not receive a deed directly from her, and could not dispose of her inchoate dower, there remains no obstacle to their dealing directly with each other at law as well as in equity. That such was the purpose of these married woman's acts we have no doubt whatever, and we think that releasing the bonds which bound the wife necessarily left the husband free of the disability which rested on him solely and only because the law rendered his wife incompetent, and when she was rendered sui juris nothing remained of the common rule as to their incapacity to contract." We repeat that this suit does not involve any contest between the wife and her husband as to the control and collection of rents upon lands in which she had a separate estate. Neither does the record disclose any dispute or controversy while they were living together up to the time of her death about the application of rents. While they were authorized under the law respecting their rights of property to contract concerning such property with each other, there is an entire absence from this record of any disclosures showing any express contract or any reference made as to the accounting for rents by the husband to the wife by reason of his occupancy and control of these premises. The law manifestly would not favor the implication of a contract between parties where the relation of husband and wife existed where they were residing together in harmony with due respect and consideration for such relation. It is significant in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

McLeod v. Venable, 163 Mo. 536, 63 S. W. 847, where, as before stated, a similar state of facts to the case at bar were developed, that the conveyance was made to the husband and wife jointly on July 10, 1876, and the title to the land involved in that suit remained in the husband and wife until January 24, 1897, a period of nearly twenty-one years, when the wife died, that no effort was made in that litigation to charge the interest of the husband with any rents, but the decree simply made partition and ordered the sale of the land and the distribution of the proceeds between the husband and her collateral heirs, who were parties to the proceeding. While it is true the record of that cause does not disclose how the lands involved in suit were controlled, yet the conveyance having been made jointly to the husband and wife, together with other facts recited as to the purchase of the land, indicate that the husband managed and controlled the property, the same as was done by the husband in the case at bar.

Our attention has not been directed to any cases directly in point upon the proposition now in hand. There are cases in which the husband has been required to account for the separate estate of the wife, and has been required to pay money which constituted a part of her separate estate, together with the interest upon such money; but in those cases it must not be overlooked that it was a controversy between the husband and wife while living, and not a dispute as between the collateral heirs of the wife after her death and the husband as to whether or not he should be charged with rents for lands jointly owned by both of them, and about which, as to the use, management, and control of the lands, there had never been any reference to a contract, or as to the application of rents, or any dispute whatever concerning the manner in which the property was used.

Our conclusion is that the defendant appellant's interest in the land in this suit should not be charged with the rents as contained in the decree; that, in order to warrant such a charge, the record should clearly disclose that the wife had been denied the control of her interest in the estate, and had also been denied the payment of rents which may have accrued from the premises. We repeat that the husband and wife, under the facts as disclosed in this case, were living together and jointly enjoying the use, benefits, and products of this land in a manner entirely satisfactory to themselves; and we at least are unwilling, upon the facts as disclosed by this record, to hold that the husband should be made to account for the rent upon the lands involved in this controversy.

We have given expression to our views upon the legal propositions disclosed by this record, and have pointed out the error of the decree. The judgment and decree of the trial court is affirmed, except that part of it to which we have called attention, in which it seeks to charge the interests of the defendant in the lands sought to be partitioned, with rents. The subject of rents has no place in that decree.

It is therefore ordered that this cause be remanded to the Circuit Court with directions that it modify the decree by omitting entirely from it the subject of rents.

All concur.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

GALVESTON, HARRISBURG, & SAN ANTONIO RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.
IDA MATZDORFF.

(— Tex. —, 112 S. W. 1036.)

Carrier — station — friend of passenger.

A railroad company is not bound to keep its station safe as for invited guests, for a mere friend or acquaintance of an intending passenger who resorts to it to see him begin his journey.

(October 28, 1908.)

Case Note. — Duty of carrier to persons who accompany passengers to, or wait for them at, station.

This note confines itself strictly to the questions indicated in its title and excludes cases on the liability of a carrier to one who goes upon a train to assist a passenger in boarding or alighting. For a consideration of the latter question, see the note to Hill v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 432.

Where a person is at a railroad station awaiting the arrival of a relative, and at the place provided by the company for that purpose, he is lawfully at the place so provided; and the company is liable to him for injuries received due to negligence of its employees in placing a baggage truck in the place used for receiving and discharging passengers, so as to render it an instrument of danger. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Spencer, 27 Colo. 313, 51 L.R.A. 121, 61 Pac. 606.

In New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mushrush, 11 Ind. App. 192, 37 N. E. 954, 38 N. E. 871, where a boy twelve years old, while at the defendant's station for the purpose of meeting his sister, was thrown under the wheels of a moving train and killed as the result of stumbling over some obstruction upon the platform, it was held that it was the duty of the railroad company to keep its station and platform in a reasonably safe condition for the negligent failure to do which it was answerable not only to actual ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fourth Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court of Bexar County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Baker, Botts, Parker, & Garwood, Newton & Ward, and Teagarden & Teagarden, for plaintiff in error:

If there is no mutuality of interest in the purpose of the visit between the owner of the premises and the visitor, the visitor is a mere licensee, and assumes all risks arising out of want of ordinary care respecting the condition of the premises.

Galveston Oil Co. v. Morton, 70 Tex. 400, 8 Am. St. Rep. 611, 7 S. W. 756; Post v. Texas & P. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 708; Burbank v. Illinois C. R. Co. 42 La. Ann. 1158, 11 L.R.A. 720, 8 So. 580; Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 317; Woolwine v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Manning v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co.) 36 W. Va. 329, 16 L.R.A. 271, 32 Am. St. Rep. 859, 15 S. E. 81; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Bingham, 29 Ohio St. 364, 23 Am. Rep. 751; Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 467; Sweeney v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 10 Allen, 374, 89 Am. Dec. 644; St. Louis, passengers, but also to those who came to meet friends or see them safely off.

In McKone v. Michigan C. R. Co. 51 Mich. 601, 47 Am. Rep. 596, 17 N. W. 74, where the plaintiff, while at the defendant's depot to meet his wife, was injured by stepping into a deep hole upon the defendant's grounds, it was held that he was not a trespasser, his presence being not only lawful, but obviously within the license which the company had extended to the public.

In Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 317, the plaintiff, while present at a railroad station out of mere curiosity, was injured by the falling of the station platform, and a recovery was denied. In commenting upon the company's liability, the court said: "Had it been the hour for the arrival or departure of a train, and he had gone there to welcome a coming or speed a parting guest, it might very well be contended that he was there by the authority of defendants as much as if he was actually a passenger, and it would then matter not how unusual might have been the crowd, the defendants would have been responsible."

The established rule is again clearly recognized in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Tomlinson, 69 Ark. 489, 64 S. W. 347, where the court said, in an action for the death of one who had gone to escort a friend to his coach which was open for passengers, and, on returning, was killed while crossing the track: "Now, if Tomlinson went to the cars not

I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Fairbairn, 48 Ark. 491, 4 S. W. 50; 2 Jaggard, Torts, p. 889; 3 Elliott, Railroads, p. 1948; Patterson, Railway Acci. Law, p. 176, § 184; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, Pass. Carr. pp. 25, 109, 110.

An invitation to visit the premises is not inferred in favor of one who goes on a mission purely personal, and where there is no common, mutual advantage shared with the owner.

Bennett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 102 U. S. 585, 26 L. ed. 238; Campbell, Neg. § 33.

Mr. John Sehorn, for defendant in error:

Appellee was at the depot by the implied invitation of appellant, and appellant owed her the duty of ordinary care to keep the depot in a reasonably safe condition.

out of mere idle curiosity, but to assist a friend who desired to take passage, and needed assistance to reach and enter the coach, it is evident that he was not a trespasser, and the rules that apply in a case where a trespasser is injured would not be applicable in such a case. An escort of that kind performs a service in the common interest of the carrier and the passenger. His entry upon the premises of the company is upon an implied invitation of the carrier, which should use at least ordinary care to avoid injury to him while there."

In Cherokee Packet Co. v. Hilson, 95 Tenn. 1, 31 S. W. 737, where the plaintiff present at a boat landing for the purpose of bidding good-by to her grandson who was taking passage, was injured by the negligence of the company in unloading freight from its boat, it was held that a common carrier is under the duty to prevent injury from its negligence to those who come upon its premises for the purpose of doing business with it; and, among others, this obligation extends to persons who are on the premises to meet a friend or see him off.

It is the duty of a railroad company to provide safe platforms at its station, and its liability for negligence in failing to do so extends not only to passengers, but also to one at the depot in attendance upon arriving or departing friends. In this case the plaintiff and his wife were present at the defendant's station to accompany and assist two old and decrepit friends. The court said that, if the infirmities of passengers to go on the train required the assistance of friends to see them safely on board, servants or friends attending them for that purpose would clearly be in attendance at the depot under an invitation of the company as direct as that given to the passengers themselves. The injury complained of was suffered by the plaintiff's wife as a result of the company's failure to provide railings about its platform and necessary lights. Hamilton v. Texas & P. R. Co. 64 Tex. 251, 53 Am. Rep. 750. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Hamilton v. Texas & P. R. Co. 64 Tex. 251, 53 Am. Rep. 750; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Best, 66 Tex. 116, 18 S. W. 224; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Williams, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 469, 51 S. W. 653; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Miller, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 241, 27 S. W. 905; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Phillio, 96 Tex. 18, 59 L.R.A. 392, 97 Am. St. Rep. 868, 69 S. W. 994; Izlar v. Manchester & A. R. Co. 57 S. C. 332, 35 S. E. 584; McKone v. Michigan C. R. Co. 51 Mich. 601, 47 Am. Rep. 596, 17 N. W. 74; Keokuk Packet Co. v. Henry, 50 Ill. 264.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The judgment in this case was recovered against the plaintiff in error by defendant in error, plaintiff below, on account of a fall which she received in entering the wait-

The duty of carriers of passengers to exercise ordinary care to keep their waiting rooms in a reasonably safe condition is held in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Grimsley (Ark.) 117 S. W. 1064, to extend also to the benefit of those who go to stations for the purpose of meeting and assisting the incoming, or of aiding the outgoing, passengers in such friendly offices as may be reasonably necessary for their convenience, comfort, and safety. Such persons, the court said, were upon the premises upon the implied invitation of the railroad company, and a recovery was allowed the plaintiff, who was injured in attempting to use a defective chair while present in the station to aid his departing daughter-in-law and her children.

Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Owens, 123 Ga. 393, 51 S. E. 404, recognizes the rule that the railroad company owes a duty to keep its passenger station in a safe condition, not only to those who come there for the purpose of embarking upon trains or those who use the station in alighting from trains, but also to those who may accompany others about to become passengers, or who resort there for the purpose of meeting incoming passengers; and the court holds that the company owes the duty of ordinary care to one who is awaiting in its station the arrival of a friend, and is liable to such a person injured as the result of ordinary neglect on the part of servants of the company in handling baggage upon the portion of the platform where he was waiting.

Upon the point in question, Judge Dennan in Watkins v. Great Western R. Co. 37 L. T. N. S. 193, was of the opinion that a railroad company keeping open a bridge over its tracks at a station for the use of its passengers is bound to keep that bridge reasonably safe; and that if, in practice, the friends are allowed by the company's servants to see passengers off by the train, and to cross the bridge without asking special permission, the duty of the company in that respect cannot be put toward them otherwise ing room for passengers kept by the railroad company at San Antonio. The fall was caused by a piece of wire projecting from a door mat, which penetrated plaintiff's shoe as she stepped upon it. Plaintiff was not a passenger, and had not gone to the station upon any business with the company or with any passenger. One Mrs. Simpson, intending to take passage for a temporary absence, went to the station accompanied by her husband and children. Mrs. Nicholls and plaintiff went with them; plaintiff going upon the invitation of Mrs. Nicholls to accompany her, and to bid Mrs. Simpson goodbye. Upon these facts, the question is whether or not the plaintiff has a cause of action arising from a failure of the defendant to keep the waiting room and its approaches in safe condition, which is the only theory upon which the judgment is defended. If she is to be regarded as there upon an implied invitation from the defendant, the question should be answered affirmatively. If she was no more than a mere licensee, it should be resolved in the negative. Greenville v. Pitts (Tex.) 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 979, 107 S. W. 50.

Those who keep premises for the carrying on of business with the public impliedly invite people to come and transact business with them, and from this invitation arises the duty to keep the premises in suitable condition for use by those accepting it. Common carriers of passengers in this way extend invitations to persons desiring transportation as passengers and owe to them the resulting duty. The attendance and assistance of others is often necessary or convenient to passengers, and the invitation to them includes the right to have others with them than it is towards those whom they accompany. The passenger's friend so permitted to go along the bridge by constant acquiescence is not to be regarded as a person barely licensed, but as being invited to go there to the same extent as the person whom he accompanies.

A person who is present at a railroad station to assist friends in getting to the train and to bid them good-by cannot be considered a trespasser upon the company's premises. The company owes the duty of exercising reasonable and ordinary care towards such a person; and is liable to one so attending her friends, who is injured by the negligent handling of trunks upon the station platform while she remains upon it awaiting the departure of the train to bid her friends a final farewell. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Johns, 36 Kan. 769, 59 Am. Rep. 609, 14 Pac. 237.

And so Izlar v. Manchester & A. R. Co. 57 S. C. 332, 35 S. E. 583, holds that a person who goes upon the lands of a railroad company in order to reach the station at which his wife or child embarks or disembarks from the passenger train of such railroad is not a trespasser, but is to be regarded as a licensee to whom the railroad company is liable for its failure to use ordinary care in keeping in repair the approaches to its station.

Again, in Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Matzdorf (Tex. Civ. App.) 107 S. W. 882, the rule is followed without question that a railroad impliedly extends an invitation to persons in general to meet a coming friend or accompany a departing one to its depot, and is bound to the exercise of ordinary care in having its premises in a reasonably safe condition. The plaintiff in this case was injured as she was entering the station, in company with a departing friend, by stumbling over a defective door mat, and her recovery was affirmed on the above theory.

In Smoak v. Savannah. F. & W. R. Co. 65 S. C. 299, 43 S. E. 662, where a gentleman, while at the defendants' station to meet his daughter, received serious injury in falling from steps improperly constructed and unlighted, while going from the platform to where the car stopped, it was held that, while the company did not owe him the same degree of care that it owed a passenger, nevertheless it did owe him as a licensee ordinary prudence.

A railroad is again held to owe the duty of ordinary care, with regard to the proper maintenance of its station and platform, to one going to the station to meet an arriving relative, in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Williams, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 469, 51 S. W. 653. Such a person the court said was not a trespasser, and the company was liable to her for injuries received in falling from the station platform, which was without a railing and unlighted.

In York v. Canada Atlantic S. S. Co. 22 Can. S. C. 167, the plaintiff and his wife were at the steamship wharf of the company to meet the wife's mother and assist her home. In an action to recover for the wife's death alleged to have resulted from the company's negligence in not lighting the wharf, the court held that they were lawfully on the wharf, having a right to assume that they were, under the circumstances, invited by the company; that they had a right to expect that the means of approach were safe for anyone using ordinary care; and that the company was under an obligation to see that they were safe.

The following dictum from Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Thompson, 77 Ala. 448, 54 Am. Rep. 72, is of value upon the point under discussion: "All the property of a railroad company, including its depots and adjacent yards and grounds, is its private property, on which no one is invited, or can claim the right to enter, save those who have business with the railroad. Under this classification, however, we must include attending friends and protectors, who accompany friends to the train to aid them in getting on, in procuring tickets, and in checking baggage, and to assist them in attending to the details incident to departure or arrival. Hence such persons are entitled, in right of the passenger, to the use of the carrier's premises. The domestic relation and the ties of kinship and the usages incident thereto make it so customary as to be looked upon as a matter of course for persons sustaining such relations to attend the arrivals and departures of each other upon and from journeys. The existence of such relations, therefore, may often properly be regarded as sufficient to include within the invitation to the traveler those who so naturally are to be expected to attend his going or to await his coming. In the authorities stating the rule the invitation is said to include those who go to "welcome the coming, speed the going, guest." This suggests the existence of the relation of host or entertainer and guest, and is based upon social custom, which exacts the extension of certain courtesies and attentions by kindred services. The same license is accorded to protecting friends, when the traveler is to leave the train. To persons filling these classes, the railroad corporation owes special obligations of duty, different from those due to the general public."

Persons going on a carrier's premises to greet an arriving passenger, or to take leave of one departing, cannot be deemed passengers, but should be considered as licensees, to whom the carrier owes certain duties. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 518.

Fetter on Carriers, § 237, cites Langton v. Board of Land & Works, 6 Vict. L. R. 316, as holding that railway proprietors owe a duty to friends of a passenger going to a station to receive him to protect them from any dangerous places not only in the way provided for access to the station, but also in any other way of access allowed to be commonly used by persons resorting to the station. One not a friend of an incoming passenger, but accompanying friends going to meet him, is entitled to the same protection.

The rule so generally followed was also recognized in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Best, 66 Tex. 116, 18 S. W. 224, where the plaintiff was at the station by appointment with one supposed to be on the defendant's incoming train, the plaintiff intending himself to become a passenger if the appointment was met.

The recent case of Cogswell v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (Okla.) post, 837, 99 Pac. 923, fully sanctions as a generally recognized doctrine the theory that one who goes to the premises of a railway company to meet an incoming passenger, or to accompany a departing one, goes upon the company's premises under an implied invitation, and is entitled to have the company exercise ordinary care for his safety. In applying the general rule, the court said that the reason for it does not require that it be confined to those persons who are present at stations with one to the other of those sustaining such a relation. Business relations may exist between passengers and others, which will entitle both to be at the station and upon the premises of the carrier. We believe that these classes will be found to embrace all who have been held, by actual decisions, to be included by implication in that invitation which is extended by the carrier to the traveler himself. It is sometimes said generally that friends who go to stations to see passengers off or to await their arrival are in the invited class; but it will be found, in examining the facts of cases, that such expressions refer to those who sustain some special relation to the passenger, such as attendant, assistant, member of his family, host, or the like.

In the case of Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Thompson, 77 Ala. 457, 54 Am. Rep. 72, the rule is stated thus: "All the property of a railroad company, including its depots and friends for social pleasure or from promptings of friendship or kinship; and the holding extended the railroad's liability to one who was injured by the company's negligence while at the station for the purpose of consummating a business transaction with one who was a passenger.

Trice v. Navigation Co. L. R. 5 N. S. Wales, 137, is cited by Fetter in his work on Carriers of Passengers, § 237, as holding that one escorting a passenger to a station or to a seat in a train, while not a passenger, is not a trespasser; and that, being on the company's premises by its implied invitation, he is entitled to have the company exercise ordinary care for his safety.

But Dowd v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 84 Wis. 105, 20 L.R.A. 527, 36 Am. St. Rep. 917, 54 N. W. 24, holds that a woman who goes to a railroad depot to see her husband off on a freight train which does not carry passengers, but on which he is carried under a contract by which he ships horses and other freight, is a mere licensee, to whom the company owes no duty to keep lights and railings on the station platform.

Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Phillio, 96 Tex. 18, 59 L.R.A. 392, 97 Am. St. Rep. 868, 69 S. W. 994, holds that one who goes to a railroad depot merely to assist his wife in taking a train is there by the implied invitation of the company, and is not a trespasser; but the railroad is under no obligation to protect such a person from assault by others lounging about its station, even though such duty may exist as to the intending passenger.

A few cases have been found where the plaintiff was, as a matter of fact, at a railroad station to meet or see a friend depart; but such decisions, apparently assuming the plaintiff's right to be at the station, have not taken up the question involved in this discussion, and have therefore been omitted as having no practical value on the point.

adjacent yards and grounds, is its private property, on which no one is invited, or can claim the right to enter, save those who have business with the railroad. Under this classification, however, we must include attending friends and protectors, who accompany friends to the train, to aid them in getting on, in procuring tickets, and in checking baggage, and kindred services. The same license is accorded to protecting friends, when the traveler is to leave the train. To persons filling these classes the railroad corporation owes special obligations of duty different from those due to the general public. While the former come by invitation, express or implied, the latter are mere pleasure seekers, or are prompted by curiosity. For the use and comfort of the former class, railway companies are bound to keep in safe condition all portions of their platforms and approaches thereto, to which the public do or would naturally resort, and all portions of their station grounds reasonably near to the platform, where passengers, or those who have purchased tickets with a view to take passage on their cars, would naturally or ordinarily be likely to go."

We are not disposed to draw narrowly the line defining those entitled to the benefit of the principle; but that line must be drawn somewhere, and we find no authority for the proposition that the invitation extends to those who have no business with the carrier or passenger and sustain no relation to the latter but that of friendship or acquaintanceship. If it includes one merely because he is a friend or acquaintance, it includes all friends and acquaintances, not of one passenger only, but of all. Not only that, but it is held that the invitation to those included in it is not simply to the station houses, waiting rooms, or platforms, but to the trains and any other places where the discharge of the duty of the attendant to the passenger makes it proper for the former to go. The consequences of such an extension of the doctrine may easily be seen. That which is really a mere incident of the relation of the carrier to the passenger would become the principal thing, and, instead of facilitating, would seriously impede, the discharge of the duties of that relation.

In not a few of the cases in which the doctrine has been referred to, the real ground on which the carrier was sought to be held liable was that of active negligent conduct of its employees towards persons at stations or upon trains. It is scarcely necessary to say that we have before us no such case, or that our decision would not affect a right of recovery of that kind. Persons who go to such places upon occasions like that which took plaintiff to defendant's waiting room are not there unlawfully or wrongfully, and 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) their rights as licensees to complain of active negligence by which they are injured is unquestioned. The question here is whether or not the carrier owes them the affirmative duty of keeping its premises safe for their use as persons invited by it to go there, and we must hold that it does not owe that duty.

Reversed and rendered.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

JUD COGSWELL

v.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY.

(— Okla. —, 99 Pac. 923.)

Carrier — persons at station — relation.

1. A railway company is bound to exercise ordinary care for the safety of a person who is upon its premises for the purpose of meeting an incoming passenger, and is liable to such person for injuries sustained on account of the railway company's failure to exercise such care.

Same — defective platform — liability.

2. A person went to the depot of a railway company to meet an incoming passenger with whom he had an engagement to meet him for the purpose of continuing, after he had met him, a business negotiation between them. Held, that the railway company was liable to such person for injuries received by him because of the negligence of the company in permitting its Headnotes by HAYES, J.

Case Note. — Duty of carrier to person at station for business consultation with individual passenger.

The authorities upon the question presented in COGSWELL v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. R. Co. as to the liability of a carrier for the safety of a person upon its station premises to meet an incoming passenger are reviewed in the note accompanying Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Matzdorff, ante, 833. The rights of a person present at a station upon the departure or arrival of a passenger, as affected by the fact that he is there purely on business matters with the passenger, seem to have been discussed in but one other case. There, also, the railroad company was held liable for the exercise of ordinary care toward one who was present at its station for the purpose of meeting for business consultation a person who was expected to take a train. Klugherz v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 90 Minn. 17, 101 Am. St. Rep. 384, 95 N. W. 586.

The question as to a carrier's duty toward one whom it permits to enter its cars upon his own business, and not as a passenger, is treated in a note to Peterson v. South & W. R. Co. 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1240.

station platform to become in a dangerous condition, on account of which said person fell and was injured.

Judgment — reduction — right of court.

3. Where the verdict in an action for damages is deemed by the court to be excessive, it may impose upon the successful party the alternative of accepting a reduced amount or of submitting to a new trial; but it has no power to render judgment for the smaller sum, where the plaintiff refuses to remit and objects to such action of the court, and such action on the part of the court is error as to both parties.

(February 2, 1909.)

CROSS WRITS OF ERROR to the United States District Court for the Northern District of the Indian Territory to review a judgment rendered in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence; the defendant complaining of the judgment in plaintiff's favor, and the plaintiff complaining of the court's action in reducing the verdict. Reversed.

Statement by Hayes, J.:

This action was brought by Jud Cogswell, plaintiff, against the Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fé Railway Company, defendant, in the United States district court for the northern district of the Indian territory at Bartlesville, for damages sustained on account of personal injuries by him received at defendant's station platform in the town of Bartlesville, caused by the alleged negligence of the railway company. The negligence alleged by plaintiff on account of which he seeks to recover his damages is as follows: "That, on or about the 28th day of December, A. D. 1906, said defendant, disregarding its duties, negligently and carelessly permitted the said platform at said station or depot house to be in improper and dangerous condition, and to be and remain in an unsafe and dangerous condition; and said station and platform were, by defendant, negligently and carelessly operated, kept, and maintained, in that said defendant suffered, allowed, and permitted a large hole to be in said platform of said station, which was, by defendant, negligently and carelessly covered by a loose and unnailed board; and that on said date the plaintiff, while lawfully, rightfully, and necessarily walking along and over said platform for the purpose of meeting a friend whom he expected on an incoming train, did, between the hours of 8 and 9 o'clock in the evening of said day, step and fall into and through said hole; that, in order for the plaintiff to enter said station, or to meet said train, it was necessary for him to pass over said platform wherein was said defective portion and hole; that the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) said platform was not lighted, and on said evening was dark, and that said unsafe and dangerous condition of said platform was well known to said defendant." He alleged that, solely by reason of said negligence of defendant in permitting said hole and loose board to remain as alleged, he was precipitated into and through the hole in the platform, and his leg was seriously and permanently injured. Defendant, in its answer, specifically denies all the allegations of the petition. The case was tried to a jury, who returned a verdict for plaintiff, and assessed his damages at $1,600. On motion for a new trial the court required the plaintiff to elect to accept a judgment for $1,000 in lieu of the amount fixed by the jury, which plaintiff declined to do. The court then remitted $600 upon his own motion from the amount fixed by the jury, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $1,000. From this judgment defendant appealed to the United States court of appeals of the Indian territory, and plaintiff has filed his cross appeal, complaining of the court's action in reducing the judgment. The case is now before this court for final disposition under the provisions of the enabling act (Act June 16, 1906, chap. 3335, 34 Stat. 267).

Messrs. Montgomery & O'Meara and John H. Burford, for plaintiff.

One who is injured while going to the station to meet an incoming passenger, or to escort an outgoing one, may recover for injuries caused by defendant's negligence.

Tobin v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 59 Me. 183, 8 Am. Rep. 415; McKone v. Michigan C. R. Co. 51 Mich. 601, 47 Am. Rep. 596, 17 N. W. 74; Pierce, Railroads, 175; Langan v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 72 Mo. 392; Lucas v. New Bedford & T. R. Co. 6 Gray, 64, 66 Am. Dec. 406; Hamilton v. Texas & P. R. Co. 64 Tex. 251, 53 Am. Rep. 756; Macon & A. R. Co. v. Mayes, 49 Ga. 355, 15 Am. Rep. 678; Bishop, Non-Contract Law, § 1109.

Messrs. J. R. Cottingham, Charles H. Woods, and George M. Green, for defendant.

Plaintiff was at the station on a personal matter, and not to welcome a coming guest.

Post v. Texas & P. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 708.

It was the duty of the court to grant the defendant a new trial.

Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 33 L. ed. 110, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696.

Hayes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff in error has made twenty-seven assignments of error in its petition, but all may be considered under two propositions. The issues of fact, including the alleged acts of negligence on the part of the railway company, were found by the jury in favor of defendant in error.

The first proposition to be determined is whether the facts found constitute in law negligence in the railway company as against defendant in error. Defendant in error, on the 28th day of December, 1906, went, after night, to defendant's depot in Bartlesville to meet a passenger by the name of Crane, whom defendant in error expected on one of the incoming passenger trains of the railway company, due to arrive at Coffeerville at about the hour plaintiff went to the depot. Crane lived in Bartlesville, and had gone to Coffeerville on the preceding day, and was to return to Coffeerville on the next day thereafter. A deal concerning a barber shop was pending between Crane and defendant in error. Defendant in error had agreed to meet Crane. The night was dark, and, as plaintiff stepped upon defendant's depot platform, which he did just as the train arrived, his foot passed through a hole in the platform, and he fell and fractured one of the bones of his leg and inflicted other injuries. It is conceded that plaintiff had no other business at the depot than to meet the passenger, Crane, and that his purpose in meeting Crane was that he had agreed to meet him, and that they were to continue the negotiations pending between them relative to the barber shop. The railway company contends that plaintiff, under these facts, was at its depot and upon its premises as a licensee, and that it owed him no duty except not to wilfully or wantonly injure him. On the other hand, it is contended by plaintiff that he was at the depot for the purpose of meeting an incoming passenger, and that, although his principal purpose in meeting the passenger, Crane, was to revive the business negotiations pending between them, he was there under the implied invitation of the railway company, and that it owed him ordinary care in the construction and maintenance of its depot and platforms to avoid injuring him. A person who does not go upon the premises of a railway company as a passenger, servant, trespasser, or as one standing in any contractual relation to the corporation, but who is permitted by the company to come upon its premises for his own interest, convenience, or benefit, is upon the premises of such railway company as a licensee, and the railway company is liable only for wilful or wanton injuries which may be done to such licensee by the gross negligence of its agents or employees. Woolwine v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Manning v. Chesapeake) 36 W. Va. 329, 16 L.R.A. 271, 32 Am. St. Rep. 859, 15 S. E. 81; Sweeney v. Old Colony & N. R. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Co. 10 Allen, 368, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Bingham, 29 Ohio St. 364, 23 Am. Rep. 751; Burbank v. Illinois C. R. Co. 42 La. Ann. 1156, 11 L.R.A. 720, 8 So. 580; 3 Elliott, Railroads, 2d ed. ¶ 1251. On the other hand, one who goes upon the premises of a railway company to transact business with it or its agents or to transact business in the operation of the road, or who is there by invitation of the company, express or implied, is lawfully there, and the railway company owes him a duty of using ordinary care in the construction and maintenance of its depot and platforms to avoid injuring him. Bennett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 102 U. S. 577, 26 L. ed. 235. One who goes with the permission and acquiescence of the owner upon the premises of another solely for his own pleasure and benefit goes as a licensee. Benson v. Baltimore Traction Co. 77 Md. 535, 20 L.R.A. 714, 39 Am. St. Rep. 436, 26 Atl. 973; 3 Elliott, Railroads, 2d ed. ¶ 1248. But one who goes upon the premises of another in a common interest or to a mutual advantage is there under the implied invitation of the owner.

The test as to whether there is an implied invitation is stated by Mr. Campbell in his treatise on Negligence in the following language: "The principle appears to be that invitation is inferred where there is a common interest or mutual advantage, while a license is inferred where the object is the mere pleasure or benefit of the person using it." [2d ed. § 44]. This language is quoted with approval in Bennett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. supra; but the court in that case does not, and we do not here, undertake to say that this principle furnishes an invariable test by which it may be determined in every case whether a person is upon the premises of another under an implied invitation. The courts have not, to our knowledge, fixed any general rule by which such tests may be made, and whether an invitation exists in any case must be determined by the circumstances surrounding the case. But, where the facts of any case bring it within the language of the first sentence of the above quotation, an invitation is implied. It now seems to be the doctrine of the various state courts of the Union that one who goes to the premises of a railway company to meet an incoming passenger or to accompany a departing passenger is within this rule, and goes upon the premises of the railway company under an implied invitation of the company. 3 Elliott, Railroads, 2d ed. ¶ 1256; Tobin v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 59 Me. 183, 8 Am. Rep. 415; McKone v. Michigan C. R. Co. 51 Mich. 601, 47 Am. Rep. 598, 17 N. W. 74; Doss v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 59 Mo. 27, 21 Am. Rep. 371; Louisville & N. R. Co. v.

Berry, 88 Ky. 222, 21 Am. St. Rep. 320, 10 S. W. 472; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Spencer, 27 Colo. 313, 51 L.R.A. 121, 61 Pac. 606; Izlar v. Manchester & A. R. Co. 57 S. C. 332, 35 S. E. 583; Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Thompson, 77 Ala. 448, 54 Am. Rep. 72; Sullivan v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 39 La. Ann. 800, 4 Am. St. Rep. 239, 2 So. 586; New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mushrush, 11 Ind. App. 192, 37 N. E. 954, 38 N. E. 871; Hamilton v. Texas & P. R. Co. 64 Tex. 251, 53 Am. Rep. 756; Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Owens, 123 Ga. 393, 51 S. E. 404.

In the last case cited the court said: "A railroad company owes a duty to keep its passenger station in safe condition, not only to those who come there for the purpose of embarking upon trains, or those who use the station in alighting from trains, but also to those who may accompany others about to become passengers, or who resort there for the purpose of meeting incoming passengers. The company owes to one who goes to its station for the purpose of meeting an incoming passenger the same duty, in regard to the station and the conduct of its employees thereat, as it does to any person going there for the purpose of transacting business with an agent of the company. While such a person is not a passenger, the company owes to him ordinary care for his safety, and will be liable to him if he is injured as a result of ordinary neglect on the part of the agent or servants of the company.

One of the cases most frequently cited by the courts in support of this doctrine is Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 317. In that case a multitude of people had gathered upon the platform of the railroad company's depot at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, for the purpose of seeing and hearing President Johnson, who was a passenger upon a special train of said company. The platform, which extended over a canal, gave way under the weight of the multitude gathered upon it, and fell. Many of the persons who were upon the platform were precipitated into the chasm and seriously injured or killed. The court held the railway company was not responsible to the persons injured who came through curiosity or for the purpose of their own pleasure and without business with the road, but, as to the persons who came to meet or part with passengers, the right of recovery existed. Mr. Justice Sharswood, who delivered the opinion of the court, said: "Had it been the hour for the arrival or departure of a train, and he [the plaintiff] had gone there to welcome a coming or speed a parting guest, it might very well be contended that he was there by the authority of the defendants as much as if he was actually a passenger, and it would then matter not how unusual might have been the crowd, the defendants would have been responsible. As to all such persons to whom they stood in such a relation as required care on their part, they were bound to have the structure strong enough to bear all who could stand on it. As to all others they were liable only for wanton or intentional injury." The general practice of the members of the public of accompanying departing friends and acquaintances to the stations of railway companies upon whose passenger trains such friends and acquaintances are to depart, and of meeting and receiving at said places friends and acquaintances who are passengers on incoming trains, is one in which the railway company has an interest in common with the members of the public who go to its stations for such purposes. One who travels upon passenger trains must go to the places provided by the railway company for receiving him and for beginning his journey, and he has a right to have someone carry or accompany him to such places; and one who rides upon the passenger trains of a railway company must, in order to reach his ultimate destination, depart from the train and from the premises of the railway company, and such person has a right to have someone meet him and accompany him in his departure therefrom. In many instances, without such right, persons would be unable to travel upon passenger trains or to do so only with great inconvenience. It is true the facts in the case at bar do not make it such a case, but the principle is illustrated by such instances. The right of persons who travel upon passenger trains to have his friends and acquaintances accompany him in departing to the station of the railway company, or to meet and receive him at such place upon his coming, adds to the convenience and pleasure of traveling upon the company's railroad, and tends to lessen its inconveniences and burdens, and thereby tends to encourage travel, in all of which the railway company has an interest. Its interest in having passengers met at its stations by their friends and acquaintances is one in common with the interest of the persons who meet such a passenger, and we do not think that the reason of the rule requires it to be narrowly confined only to those persons who go to meet an incoming passenger purely for social pleasure or from the promptings of friendship or kinship; and the fact that one who meets an incoming passenger, acquaintance, or friend is prompted by the motive of ultimately consummating a business transaction, which may result profitably to him or both to him and the passenger, does not take him without the rule.

In Tobin v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. supra, the person who was injured conveyed a passenger to the railway company's depot and received an injury while aiding the passenger to alight upon the platform of the company. He was there solely in his own business and profit. The court in that case said: "The hackman, conveying passengers to a railroad depot for transportation, and aiding them to alight upon the platform of the corporation, is as rightfully upon the same as the passengers alighting. It would be absurd to protect the one from the consequences of corporate negligence, and not the other. The hackman is there in the course of his business; but it is a business important to and for the convenience and profit of the defendants." Klugherz v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 90 Minn. 17, 101 Am. St. Rep. 384, 95 N. W. 586, is a case in which the facts are very similar to the facts in the case at bar. In that case a boy fourteen years of age went to the depot grounds of the company for the purpose of meeting for business consultation a person whom he had reason to believe was to take a train. The court held that there is no reasonable distinction between the right of a person visiting the premises for the purpose of accompanying another to the departing train and the rights of one who goes there for the purpose of talking with a departing passenger on a business matter. The boy had gone to the station about an hour before the time for the train to depart, and had received his injuries while awaiting for the arrival of the expected departing friend and of the train. The court held that whether the time at which he went to the station in advance of the time for the departure of the train was negligence upon his part was a question to be determined by the jury. It is not contended in this case that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. There is no contention that he was upon the company's platform an unnecessary length of time before the arrival of the train, or that he lingered upon the platform for an unnecessary length of time after its arrival. He, in fact, received the injuries just as he was approaching the depot and just as the train arrived. The company owed the plaintiff the duty of exercising ordinary care in the maintenance of depot platforms, to make them reasonably safe for his use. In the discharge of this duty the jury has found the company was negligent, and there is evidence to support the verdict.

In its motion for a new trial, some of the grounds assigned by plaintiff in error were: "Because said verdict is for excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion and prejudice;" "because the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence;" and "because it is contrary to the evidence." The court upon hearing the motion required the plaintiff to elect to accept a judgment of $1,000 in lieu of the amount fixed by the jury, which plaintiff declined to do. The court thereupon remitted $600 from the amount fixed by the jury, overruled plaintiff in error's motion for a new trial, and rendered judgment for the sum of $1,000. This act of the court is complained of by plaintiff in error in its petition and by defendant in error in his cross appeal, and was error as to both. The Code in force in the Indian territory at the time of the trial in this case provided that the court may vacate and set aside the verdict of a jury and grant a new trial upon several grounds, among which are the following: "Excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice;" "the verdict or decision is not sustained by sufficient evidence, or is contrary to law." Mansfield's Dig. (Ark.) § 5151. As was said by the court in Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 33 L. ed. 110, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696, under this statute, as at common law, the court, upon the hearing of a motion for a new trial, may, in the exercise of its judicial discretion, grant or deny a motion for a new trial, or make order that a new trial be granted unless the plaintiff elects to remit the excessive part of the verdict; and, if he does remit, that judgment be entered for the amount of the verdict less the amount remitted. See also Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Barker, 39 Ark. 491; Northern P. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 500; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Turley, 1 Ind. Terr. 283, 37 S. W. 52; Blunt v. Little, 3 Mason, 102, Fed. Cas. No. 1,578. But the trial court is without authority to reduce a verdict and render judgment for the reduced amount without the consent and over the objection of the plaintiff. Mas-sadillo v. Nashville & K. R. Co. 89 Tenn. 661, 15 S. W. 445; Brown v. McLeish, 71 Iowa, 381, 32 N. W. 385; Noel v. Dubuque, B. & M. R. Co. 44 Iowa, 293; Young v. Cowden, 98 Tenn. 577, 40 S. W. 1088. It is therefore apparent that the action of the court in rendering judgment for the reduced amount was error as to the plaintiff, for when he refused to remit the court was only authorized to grant a new trial.

Plaintiff in error was also prejudiced by the action of the court; for, when the court decided that the verdict of the jury was excessive, and should be reduced to the amount specified by him in his order, it was entitled to have a new trial if defendant in error refused to remit the amount required by the court; and, while in one sense, it may be said that this act of the court is in favor of plaintiff in error in that its result is to reduce the amount of the judgment against it, it is not, however, the order plaintiff in error was entitled to. Kennon v. Gilmer, supra, is an action in which the facts are somewhat similar to the facts in this case. That action arose in one of the district courts of the territory of Montana, and resulted in a judgment for damages in the sum of $20,750 in favor of plaintiff. On appeal to the supreme court of the territory, that court held the judgment to be excessive, and, without giving plaintiff an opportunity to remit, reduced the judgment of the inferior court from $20,750 to $10,750. From the judgment of the supreme court of the territory of Montana both plaintiff and defendant appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court, in passing upon the action of the territorial supreme court, said: "The defendants were prejudiced, because, if the judgment for the lesser sum had been conditional upon a remittitur by the plaintiff, the defendants, if the plaintiff had not remitted, would have had a new trial generally; and if the plaintiff had filed a remittitur, and thereby consented to the judgment, he could not have sued out a writ of error, and the defendants would have been protected from the possibility of being obliged in any event to pay the larger sum. Whereas upon the absolute judgment entered by the court, without any election or consent of the plaintiff, the plaintiff had the right to sue out a writ of error; and he availed himself of that right, and docketed his writ of error in this court before the defendants docketed their writ of error. The defendants were thus put in the position of being obliged to contest the plaintiff's writ of error in order to defend themselves against being held liable for the larger sum, as the plaintiff contended that they must be upon this record." In the case at bar, when the court rendered judgment for the lesser sum, if plaintiff in error had not appealed, defendant in error had the right of appeal, and has availed himself of it by his cross appeal herein, and plaintiff in error would have been compelled to defend against defendant in error's appeal in order to prevent being held for the larger sum on appeal, for which plaintiff now contends in his cross appeal.

We have examined carefully the evidence in this case, and cannot say that the trial court erred in his conclusion that the verdict was excessive. The cause will be reversed and remanded with directions to grant a new trial, and that the costs in this court be taxed equally against the parties.

Kane, Ch. J., and Williams, Turner, and Dunn, JJ., concur.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

DANIEL DERAGON, Respt.,

v.

NORBERT SERO, Appt.

(— Wis. —, 118 N. W. 839.)

State — jurisdiction — reservation.

1. State laws for the peace and good order of the people within its borders extend over Indian reservations, and apply to the infraction of such laws by persons of Indian blood.

Indian reservation — police regulation — instruction.

2. A direction of an Indian agent to policemen on the reservation to keep people back from car entrances when persons are getting on and off cars does not apply to a person of Indian blood who goes in an orderly manner to meet his wife and children who are arriving on a train.

Assault — policeman — damages.

3. A policeman on an Indian reservation who assaults and imprisons a person of Indian blood who, upon going to a train to meet his wife and children, disregards his directions to keep back from the entrance to the train, is liable therefor in damages.

Indian reservation — police regulation — reasonableness.

4. An Indian agent cannot authorize policemen on a reservation to require persons of Indian blood, going to meet relatives on an incoming train, to keep away from the entrances to the cars.

(December 15, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Ashland County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for assault and battery. Affirmed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Civil action for assault and battery.

Both plaintiff and defendant were partly of Indian blood. The occurrence was at Odanah railway station on the Indian reservation in Northern Wisconsin. The defendant justified upon the ground that he was an Indian policeman lawfully acting in the performance of his duties.

There was evidence showing, or tending to show, the following situation: Defendant was a subordinate United States officer on the Indian reservation having authority to enforce observance of the regulations of the Interior Department for the preservation of peace and good order and the observance of law thereon. Plaintiff knew, or ought to have known, of that fact. The latter went upon the depot platform to meet his wife and child, whom he expected, presently, to arrive by train. Defendant ordered him back from the front of the platform and persisted in enforcing his demand in that regard after being informed of plaintiff's purpose. The latter persisted in carrying out such purpose after the train arrived and his wife was about to alight therefrom notwithstanding defendant indicated a determination to prevent it by force. The result was that defendant pushed plaintiff back, roughly, and knocked him down with a policeman's club and then incarcerated him in a badly kept jail for two nights and a day and then set him at liberty.

Note. — As to the general question of the rights of a person to accompany departing friends and relatives to the train, or to meet them on their return, see note to Galveston. H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Matzdorff, ante, 833.

There was evidence on defendant's side tending to show he acted in good faith to enforce, as he supposed, lawful rules made by the Indian agent, his superior officer; that he assaulted plaintiff to prevent being assaulted by him; that he took him into custody because he was, and persisted in being, disorderly; that he kept him the two nights and one day because of the time, the intervening day being Sunday, and that he set him at liberty, without further pursuing the matter, as a favor. There was evidence on the other side tending to show the assault was needless and perpetrated, revengefully, to prevent plaintiff from going to meet his wife and child. There was evidence that the Indian agent had given orders to keep persons away from trains on their arrival who were not desirous of boarding the cars, but there was no rule of the Interior Department on the question, nor any rule of such department which plaintiff violated up to the time the assault occurred. The jury rendered a verdict in plaintiff's favor. The amount allowed thereby was reduced to comply with terms of denying a motion for a new trial, and judgment was rendered accordingly.

Messrs. William G. Wheeler and Henry H. Morgan, for appellant:

The case is one of Federal cognizance only. United States v. Mullin, 71 Fed. 682; Re Neagle (Cunningham v. Neagle) 135 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 55, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658; Sheriff v. Turner, 119 Fed. 231; Anderson v. Elliott, 41 C. C. A. 521, 101 Fed. 609; Hirsch v. Rand, 39 Cal. 315; Ohio v. Thomas, 173 U. S. 276, 43 L. ed. 699, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453; Peters v. Malin, 104 Fed. 849.

Mr. V. T. Pierree, for respondent:

Both parties are citizens of the state and as such are subject to its laws, both civil and criminal.

Re Heff, 197 U. S. 488, 49 L. ed. 848, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506; State v. Morrin (Wis.) 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

117 N. W. 1006; State v. Duxtater, 47 Wis. 283, 2 N. W. 439; Schriber v. Langlade, 66 Wis. 627, 29 N. W. 547, 554; Stacey v. La Belle, 99 Wis. 522, 41 L.R.A. 419, 67 Am. St. Rep. 879, 75 N. W. 60.

The action was properly brought against the policeman.

Y-ta-tah-wah v. Rebock, 105 Fed. 257; Freeman v. Robinson, 7 Ind. 321; Brock v. Stimson, 108 Mass. 520, 11 Am. Rep. 390; Tubbs v. Tukey, 3 Cush. 438, 50 Am. Dec. 744; 19 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 353, 354.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Counsel for appellant cover a broad range in their printed argument, bringing to our attention many Federal statutes and decisions and some authorized rules promulgated by the Interior Department. Such brief recognition of counsel's industry in that regard will, in the main, suffice, since it is conceded, and properly too, that, notwithstanding the occurrence took place on the Indian reservation, the trial court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action and the parties, if appellant's act was not performed in the proper execution of a Federal statute or rule authorized by law.

The laws of this state for the peace and good order of people within its boundaries extend over Indian reservations and apply to infractions of such laws whether by persons of Indian blood or others. State v. Duxtater, 47 Wis. 278, 2 N. W. 439; State v. Harris, 47 Wis. 298, 2 N. W. 543. That does not conflict with the police duties of Federal officers on reservations, rendering them liable to be prosecuted in the state courts for acts lawfully done in the discharge of their duties.

There was an attempt to justify appellant's conduct on the theory that it occurred in the lawful execution of a rule of the Federal government, promulgated by the Interior Department, but no such rule, touching the case in hand, was produced, or is referred to in counsel's brief. Moreover, there was evidence that no such rule existed for keeping persons of Indian blood, or others, off from depot platforms on the reservations and depriving them of the ordinary privilege of going to and from car entrances on business, and that appellant did not pretend to act in execution of any such rule but of a mere verbal declaration of the Indian agent and Indian farmer to keep people back from car entrances when persons were getting on and off cars. The reasonable limits of that direction, we apprehend, are that mere curiosity seekers, loafers, and persons having no business to go to a car entrance at a depot platform are to be kept at a reasonable distance therefrom so as not to interfere with the proper and safe transaction of business between railroad companies and their patrons in respect to railway travel. Manifestly, it could not reasonably have anything to do with interference with a person going, in an orderly way, to a car entrance to meet and assist his wife and family in alighting from the car and taking care of them and their belongings. Such a person has business of a perfectly legitimate character in respect to railway travel, and any official direction prohibiting reasonable enjoyment of the privilege would need to be in language unmistakable in that regard, before it could be held to go that far, and then its validity might well be challenged, since the right to enjoy such privilege is well established by law. 2 Rorer, Railroads. p. 1130; Thomp. Carr. Pass. p. 49; Dowd v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 84 Wis. 105-114, 20 L.R.A. 527, 36 Am. St. Rep. 917, 54 N. W. 24; Banderob v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 133 Wis. 249, 113 N. W. 738; Doss v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 59 Mo. 27, 21 Am. Rep. 371; Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 317.

There was evidence, as indicated in the statement, tending to show appellant assaulted respondent to prevent him from enjoying his foregoing stated lawful privilege. There was no justification, as the jury were warranted in finding, for violating respondent's person after the notification of the perfectly legitimate purpose in mind. The act of pushing him back after being so notified and following it up with harsh treatment upon being defied for the unlawful interference, culminating in knocking him down with a club and incarcerating him in the jail, seems to have been without the slightest legal warrant, as the jury may well have found.

The foregoing amply shows that the case was rightfully submitted to the jury and upon the question of punitory as well as actual damages.

A suggestion is made that the court erred in submitting to the jury the question of whether rules promulgated by the Interior Department of the Federal government were reasonable. There was no such submission. Counsel's argument in that field seems to be purely academic. The language of the court's instruction, to which we are referred, must be read in connection with the evidence to which it applies. The only evidence there was of any regulation testified to have been violated was the direction of the Indian agent and Indian farmer to which we have referred. Were that as drastic as to justify the interference the jury found, and were warranted in finding, occurred, then appellant was not prejudiced by the reasonableness thereof being submitted to the jury for it was unreasonable as a matter of law, The judgment is affirmed.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE CALDBECK

v.

CHARLES SIMANTON.

(— Vt. —, 71 Atl. 881.)

Warranty — tort — scienter.

1. An action in tort for breach of warranty that an article sold was perfect, which may be begun by arresting defendant, will not lie unless scienter is alleged.

Pleading — warranty — falsity — knowledge.

2. An allegation in a declaration for breach of warranty, that defendant "falsely and fraudulently warranted the property," is not sufficient to charge knowledge of the falsity on his part.

Debt — arrest — citizen — description.

3. A warrant describing defendant as of a certain municipality in a certain county located within the state is sufficient to determine his residence within the United States, so as to entitle him to the benefit of a statutory exemption from arrest for debt.

(February 13, 1909.)

Case Note. — Arrest under civil process for breach of warranty.

While, as is clearly shown in the foregoing opinion, an action in the form of tort might lie for a breach of warranty, and, indeed, formerly such actions were of that character rather than in assumpsit, yet, the court holds, the actual nature of the action is to be determined by the substance of the claim rather than by the mere form or classification of the action. The court therefore follows the rules asserted by many authorities, that a plaintiff who may proceed either on the contract or in tort cannot, by proceeding in tort, secure an order of arrest of the defendant where he would not be entitled to such an order if he proceeded on the contract.

Although the court makes a very fine distinction between the effect of the phrase "falsely and fraudulently" as applied to "representations" and "pretense" and to a "warranty," yet, having determined that the declaration did not sufficiently allege scienter, it was undoubtedly correct, according to the weight of authority upon the general subject of arrest, in holding that the plaintiff could not proceed by arrest. A search of the authorities, however, has failed to disclose any other case in which an arrest was sought in an action for breach of warranty.

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Caledonia County Court overruling a motion to dismiss a case brought to recover for false warranty. Judgment reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Harland B. Howe and Herbert W. Hovey, for defendant:

The declaration is trespass upon the case for breach of warranty, and no scienter is alleged which is fatal to the action.

Stuart v. Wilkins, 1 Dougl. K. B. 18; Williamson v. Allison, 2 East, 446; Sprigwell v. Allen, Ayleyn, 91; Denison v. Ralphson, 1 Ventr. 366; Weall v. King, 12 East, 452; Wright v. Geer, 6 Vt. 151, 27 Am. Dec. 538; Bates v. Martin, Brayton (Vt.) 78; Howard v. McKee, 82 Pa. 409; Staines v. Shore, 16 Pa. 200, 55 Am. Dec. 492; Orphans' Ct. use of Groff v. Groff, 12 Serg. & R. 184; McCauley v. Salmon, 14 Phila. 131; Re Stephenson, 32 Mich. 60; Sedgbeer v. Moore, Brightly (Pa.) 197; Jennings v. Rundall, 8 T. R. 335; Green v. Greenbank, 2 Marsh. 485; Campbell v. Stakes, 2 Wend. 137, 19 Am. Dec. 561.

The process in the case at bar was issued and served as a capias, and is void.

Pike Bros. v. McMullin, 66 Vt. 121, 28 Atl. 876; Aiken v. Richardson, 15 Vt. 500; Muzzy v. Howard, 42 Vt. 23; French v. Holt, 57 Vt. 187; Adams v. Whitcomb, 46 Vt. 708; Hill v. Whitney, 16 Vt. 461; Ferris v. Ferris, 25 Vt. 100.

Messrs. David E. Porter and Simonds & Searles for plaintiff:

It is an action in tort.

Dean v. Cass, 73 Vt. 314, 50 Atl. 1085; Beeman v. Buck, 3 Vt. 53, 21 Am. Dec. 571; Joy v. Hill, 36 Vt. 335; Kenerson v. Bacon, 41 Vt. 573; Carter v. Glass, 44 Mich. 154, 38 Am. Rep. 240, 6 N. W. 200; Schuchardt v. Allen, 1 Wall. 359, 17 L. ed. 642; Humiston v. Smith, 22 Conn. 19.

A count for false warranty may be joined with other counts in tort.

Humiston v. Smith, supra; Shippen v. Bowen, 122 U. S. 576, 30 L. ed. 1173, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1283; Morehouse v. Northrop, 33 Conn. 380, 89 Am. Dec. 211; Lassiter v. Ward, 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 443.

At common law the plaintiff was entitled to arrest defendant in an action ex contractu as well as in tort.

3 Cyc. Law & Proc. 901; Aiken v. Richardson, 15 Vt. 500; Scott v. Curtis, 27 Vt. 763.

The fact that plaintiff might have waived the tort and sued in assumpsit does not make the issuance of the writ as a capias void, where the action brought is in tort.

Cotton v. Sharpstein, 14 Wis. 226, 80 Am. Dec. 774; Suydam v. Smith, 7 Hill, 182; Armstrong v. Ayres, 19 Conn. 540; Hopper v. Williams, 2 Clark (Pa.) 448; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.).

Emerson v. Dow, 11 W. N. C. 270; Russel v. Phelps, 73 Vt. 390, 50 Atl. 1101; Barnes v. Tenney, 52 Vt. 558; Elwell v. Martin, 32 Vt. 217.

When all the other essential allegations have been made, the phrase "falsely and fraudulently" imports a knowledge and sufficiently avers scienter.

Shepherd v. Worthing, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 189; State v. Smith, 63 Vt. 201, 22 Atl. 604; Mixer v. Herrick, 78 Vt. 349, 62 Atl. 1010; 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 100; Pryor v. McNairy, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 150; Thomas v. Beebe, 25 N. Y. 246; Eibel v. Von Fell, 64 N. J. L. 364, 48 Atl. 1117; 63 N. J. L. 3, 42 Atl. 754; Steip v. Seguire, 66 N. J. L. 370, 49 Atl. 715; Forsyth v. Vehmeyer, 176 Ill. 359, 52 N. E. 55; Pursley v. Wickle, 118 Ind. 139, 19 N. E. 478; West v. Wright, 98 Ind. 335.

Munson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff declares, in substance, that he bargained with the defendant for the purchase of a diamond, and that the defendant sold him the diamond for a certain price by "falsely and fraudulently warranting" it to be a perfect stone, when, in fact, it was not a perfect stone, but defective in certain respects stated, and that the defendant thereby "falsely and fraudulently deceived him." The service was by arrest, and the case stands on a motion to dismiss. The defendant argues that no scienter is alleged; that the declaration is in case for a breach of warranty; that there could be no recovery without proving the warranty; and that this conclusively determines that the action is founded on contract. No point is made distinguishing between the counts.

In 2 Chitty's Pleading, 279, there is a form for declaring in assumpsit on a warranty, and at page 679 there is one for declaring in tort on a warranty. The latter form is the one used here. The two forms were joined in one declaration in Dean v. Cass, 73 Vt. 314, 50 Atl. 1085, and the second was held to be in tort and improperly joined with the first. So the declaration before us may be classed, without special examination, as in form a declaration in tort. In pursuing the inquiry further, it will be well to have in mind the nature of a warranty, and the history and characteristics of the remedies permitted for a breach of it. The ordinary warranty relates to the condition of the property at the time of the sale. Such a warranty, if broken at all, is broken when made. The breach consists in the fact that the property is not as it is stated to be. The warranty may be made merely as an assumption of a contract obligation, or it may be deceitfully made with a knowledge of its falsity. In either case it is made to induce the purchase. Personal actions are either for breaches of contract or for wrongs unconnected with contract; assumpsit being in the first class, and case in the second. Chitty, 97. The original action on the case, permitted in suits for which the established forms were not adapted, was not similar to the present action of assumpsit, but resembled rather the present form of a declaration in case for a tort. Chitty, 99. It was at first difficult to distinguish assumpsit from case; and the early decisions in actions on warranties were made before the boundary between the two remedies was well defined. Note to Chandelor v. Lopus, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 178. The practice of declaring in tort for warranty broken originated in this early period; and the remedy then adopted continued in almost exclusive use until the middle of the eighteenth century. As late as 1778, Lord Mansfield considered an action of assumpsit for a breach of warranty so peculiar that he reserved the question of its sufficiency; and this method of declaring was then authoritatively sanctioned. Stuart v. Wilkins, 1 Dougl. K. B. 18. Since then assumpsit and case have been recognized as concurrent remedies for breach of warranty. Williamson v. Allison, 2 East, 446; Beeman v. Buck, 3 Vt. 53, 21 Am. Dec. 571; 19 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 82, and cases cited.

Closely connected with the subject of warranty is that of deceit by fraudulent representations. The two grounds of liability are entirely distinct, but both may be developed by one affirmation. The evidence may make the affirmation either a deceit or a warranty, or both. The allegations of a declaration charging deceit by means of a false warranty, and of one charging a deceit independent of warranty, are in other respects substantially the same, as is indicated by the first counts of the forms in 2 Chitty, Pl. 687, 688. If the allegation of knowledge in a declaration following the first count of the first of these forms be treated as surplusage, the case becomes an action of tort for a breach of warranty. This treatment of a declaration so framed was sanctioned in Williamson v. Allison, before cited, and that case has since been generally followed. The recognition of assumpsit and case as concurrent remedies for breach of warranty, and the decision in Williamson v. Allison regarding the scienter, have led to the adoption of forms confessedly designed to enable the plaintiff to recover for a breach of warranty or for deceit, as the case might develop. A short declaration, framed in this double aspect, was used in Beeman v. Buck, supra; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Vail v. Strong, 10 Vt. 457; West v. Emery, 17 Vt. 583, 44 Am. Dec. 356; Goode-nough v. Snow, 27 Vt. 720; Pinney v. Andrus, 41 Vt. 631. This declaration, given in full in the case first cited, avers that the defendant deceitfully sold the property by warranting it to be as described, "well knowing" it to be otherwise. The first count of the form in 2 Chitty, Pl. 687, before referred to, is a more formal declaration of the same character. This form was followed in Harlow v. Green, 34 Vt. 379, and was apparently the basis of the declaration in Whitton v. Goddard, 36 Vt. 730. The direct allegation of knowledge contained in the phrase "well knowing" or its equivalent is ordinarily employed in declarations which claim a recovery on the ground of deceit, and its absence from the declaration used here is the basis of the defendant's claim.

The plaintiff claims that a sufficient averment of knowledge is contained in the form used. The inclusion of this form under the general marginal heading of "deceit" is of little consequence, especially in view of the early history of the subject. It is not probable that Mr. Chitty considered the allegations sufficient to show knowledge; for in subsequent forms for deceitfully selling property by falsely and fraudulently warranting it the usual scienter is employed. The concluding averment that the defendant thereby falsely and fraudulently deceived the plaintiff cannot enlarge the effect of the matters previously alleged. If the declaration contains a scienter, it must be—where the plaintiff claims it to be,—in the allegation that the defendant "falsely and fraudulently warranted" the property. Words similar to those contained in this declaration are found in the form at page 279, which is unquestionably a declaration in assumpsit. It is there alleged that the defendant, "contriving and fraudulently intending to injure the said plaintiff, did not perform or regard his said promise and undertaking, . . . but thereby craftily and subtly deceived and defrauded the said plaintiff, in this:" That the property was not as warranted. But it will be noticed that the words in the two forms are used in different connections. In the assumpsit declaration the words quoted are applied to the breach of the defendant's promise, and not to the promise itself. In the declaration in tort the words "falsely and fraudulently" are applied directly to the act of warranting. This difference, however, is minimized by the fact that the undertaking is broken when assumed, so that in the first form the fraudulent intent is really laid at the time of the sale. The assumpsit form was considered in Shepherd v. Worthing, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 188, and was held to contain no substantial allegation of fraud; but it was suggested that an averment that the defendant falsely and fraudulently warranted the property might be equivalent to the required scienter. In State v. Smith, 63 Vt. 201, 22 Atl. 604, the court examined an indictment for perjury in which the usual words "as he then and there well knew" were omitted, and it was held that the averment that the respondent testified to the matter "wilfully and corruptly" sufficiently alleged that the statement was false to his knowledge. The averment that the defendant "falsely and fraudulently" warranted the property, given its natural construction, might seem to import more than a warranty false in fact. It may be urged with some force that "fraudulently" characterizes the defendant's act, and implies a knowledge of the falsity of his statement. But the construction long given to the form, in connection with the construction of other forms pertaining to the same subject, is not to be ignored in passing upon the question.

The case of Eibel v. Von Fell, 63 N. J. L. 3, 42 Atl. 754, should be considered in this connection. There the declaration alleged that the defendants sold certain premises to the plaintiff by "falsely and fraudulently representing" that the house was new, when, in fact, it was old. The court held that this disclosed a cause of action, not for a false warranty as was claimed by the plaintiff, but for deceit, and said: "A good cause of action for deceit may be set out without a charge that the representation alleged to be false was known by defendant to be so, provided it is charged that the false representation was fraudulently made." It will be noticed that in the second of the two forms for charging deceit before referred to (2 Chitty, Pl. 688), the first count contains an allegation that the defendant knew that the representation was false, while the second count does not contain this, but stands on the allegation that the defendant, "contriving and intending to deceive and defraud the said plaintiff in that behalf, then and there falsely and deceitfully pretended to the said plaintiff," etc. It would seem from these authorities that the words "falsely and fraudulently" as applied to a "pretense" or even to a "representation" are given an effect to which they are not entitled when applied to a warranty.

But the precise question has been adjudged in this state, although without special consideration. In Foster v. Caldwell, 18 Vt. 176, the declaration alleged, in substance, that the deceased sold the plaintiff a number of sheep by falsely and fraudulently warranting them to be sound when in fact they were diseased, and that the deceased deceived the plaintiff in the sale; but there was no allegation that the deceased knew the sheep were unsound. The verdict taken was in tort, and the court allowed it to be amended, after the panel was dismissed, by striking out the words "is guilty" and inserting the words "did assume and promise." In sustaining this action, it was said: "There is no allegation of a scienter in the declaration, and consequently there can be no recovery . . . for a deceit, notwithstanding the declaration is, in form, in case for a false warranty."

But the plaintiff contends, further, that no scienter is necessary, that the declaration is in tort, and that the question whether the process issues on a contract is to be determined, not by the origin of the claim, but by the form of the action. We have seen that the declaration is tort in form, and incapable of being joined with assumpsit. But it may nevertheless be process issuing on a contract within the meaning of the statutory provision. The plaintiff's argument to the contrary is based largely upon what was said by the courts soon after the recognition of assumpsit as a proper remedy placed them in the position of sustaining assumpsit and case as concurrent remedies for the breach of a purely contract obligation. It was said by Lord Ellenborough in Williamson v. Allison, 2 East, 446, that the warranty is the thing which deceives the buyer who relies on it, and that it is sufficient to prove the warranty broken to establish the deceit. It has sometimes been said in following this authority that the law implies deceit from the breach of the warranty. This view is clearly untenable,—even when the undertaking of warranty is treated as a representation. "No misrepresentation is fraudulent at law, unless it is made with actual knowledge of its falsity, or under such circumstances that the law must necessarily impute such knowledge to the party at the time when he makes it." 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 884. The law raises no presumption of knowledge of falsity from the mere fact that the representation was false. Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 31 L. ed. 678, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881. The phraseology of our standard forms reflects the indefiniteness of distinction which prevailed in the formative period of the common law, and this is true to some extent of the language of commentators comparatively modern. Blackstone, writing about 1758, after speaking of the beating of another and the taking of another's goods as trespasses, proceeds: "So, also, nonperformance of promises or undertakings is a trespass upon which an action of trespass on the case in assumpsit is grounded." The subject may be briefly reviewed and further elucidated in the words of the note to Chandelor v. Lopus, 2 Smith's Lead. Cas. 187 (Am. ed. 1847), where it is said in connection with a consideration of Williamson v. Allison and kindred cases: "Originally actions upon breaches of warranty, as well as of all other promises, were substantially, as well as nominally, actions on the case, which went upon the ground of deceit, and set forth the undertaking of the defendant, and the consideration by which it was supported, for the purpose of establishing a fraud on his part, and a consequent legal injury to the plaintiff. But in modern times the distinction between assumpsit and case has become as well established as that between trespass and covenant, and it is not easy to see why it should be disregarded in the single instance of actions such as those we have just been considering." It may also be said that there is no plainer distinction in the law than that between breach of warranty and deceit; and the law no more implies deceit from a breach of warranty than it does from a breach of covenant for title or from the non-performance of a contract of suretyship.

The difference between assumpsit and case as remedies for wrongs of this character was comparatively of little importance when our earliest cases upon the subject was decided. The subsequent abolishment of imprisonment for debt has introduced an element which cannot be ignored in reviewing the subject at this date. It is not necessary to consider further the construction, technicalities, and classification of the different forms employed, nor to anticipate the questions of practice that may arise in connection with their use. It is enough to say that, if a plaintiff wishes to proceed by arrest, he must allege a case that entitles him to arrest. That right cannot be given by mere form or classification. The test must be the nature of the action as determined by its substance. It is said in Beeman v. Buck, 3 Vt. 53, 21 Am. Dec. 571, that assumpsit is supported by proof of the sale, a warranty, and the breach of it, and that nothing more is required in tort. If the declaration in tort requires the same and only the same proof as the one in assumpsit, it is manifestly a declaration in tort only in name. The declaration before us is so framed that nothing more is required. It discloses a warranty false in fact, but not false to the knowledge of the warrantor. If the plaintiff recovers upon this declaration, it will be solely by force of the contract. Proof of fraud was not pertinent to the issue presented.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Commencement by trustee process is authorized, and arrest or imprisonment is prohibited, in actions founded on contract. It is held in regard to trustee process that the form of the action governs (Elwell v. Martin, 32 Vt. 217), and it is argued that this holding is decisive here. It is true that we have substantially the same expression in both statutes, but it is used with reference to different subjects, and the nature of those subjects may justify, and even require, different constructions. It is the general scheme of our law that a man's property shall be held for the satisfaction of all his obligations, but that his body shall be held only for the satisfaction of obligations of a certain class. The trustee process is a method provided for reaching property held in certain forms, and whatever the scope given it by construction its operation will be in line with the general purpose of the law. The right of arrest pertains only to a limited class of obligations, and the right to exercise it in a given case must be determined by the line which separates that class from others. Any test or construction which carries the right beyond that line will be at variance with both the purpose and the letter of the law.

It is said that it does not appear that the defendant is a resident of any of the United States, and so within the exemption. But the writ sets up the defendant as of St. Johnsbury, in the county of Caledonia, and this is a sufficient determination of residence for the purposes of defendant's motion.

Judgment reversed, motion to dismiss sustained, and writ dismissed.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

SOUTHERN STEEL COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

WILEY HOPKINS, Adm., etc., of Sam Birchfield, Deceased, et al.

(— Ala. —, 47 So. 274.)

Corporation — consolidation — rights.

1. A corporation formed by consolidation of others may assert the rights, equities and defenses of one of the constituent companies when sued on a liability existing against it prior to the consolidation.

Parties — defect — effect.

2. A motion to dismiss an action against

Case Note. — Power of equity to take jurisdiction because of multiplicity of actions at law for personal injuries growing out of a single tort.

SOUTHERN STEEL Co. v. HOPKINS is one of a very few cases that has had presented to it for consideration the foregoing proposition. The case reopens a controversy that a consolidated corporation for a liability which arose against one of the constituent companies before the consolidation cannot prevail because the name of the original defendant was necessary and not used in the cause, since the defect might have been cured by amendment.

Injunction — multiplicity of suits.

3. A corporation having a perfect defense applicable alike to more than one hundred cases brought against it by employees injured by an accident in its works may, to avoid a multiplicity of suits, maintain a bill to enjoin prosecutions of the actions at law until the defense can be established.

Same — jury trial.

4. The right of trial by jury is not infringed by entertaining a bill in equity in favor of one sued by numerous persons against whose actions he has a common defense, to enjoin prosecution of the actions to enable him to establish his defense so as to avoid a multiplicity of suits.

(February 13, 1908.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Chancery Court for Jefferson County dismissing a bill filed to enjoin prosecution of numerous suits at law. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Campbell & Johnston, for appellant:

The equitable jurisdiction to enjoin numerous actions at law may and should be exercised on behalf of a single party against has been going on for some time between the courts and Mr. Pomeroy in reference to the soundness of one of the four grounds mentioned by him for equitable interposition in ordinary actions at law on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits. The one referred to is number 3, which reads: "Where a number of persons have separate claims . . . against the same party, but all arise from some common cause, are governed by the same legal rule, and involve similar facts, and the whole matter can be settled in a single suit." 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 245.

This broad statement of Mr. Pomeroy, is, however, limited by him to a certain extent in § 251½. The proposition in the abstract, as is laid down in Pomeroy, if given the scope often claimed for it, would violate the rule of equity pleading relating to multifariousness. Is it not the purpose of this note, however, to engage in this controversy.

SOUTHERN STEEL CO. v. HOPKINS is the only case that a careful search reveals which holds that an alleged tortfeasor, who has been sued in actions at law for personal injuries by a number of persons injured by the alleged tort, may, because of the number of suits, invoke the aid of equity to settle the controversies in one suit, on the ground that the complainant has a common defense to all of such actions.

The cases cited therein as sustaining the position taken by the court in exercising jurisdiction, do not go to the extent that SOUTHERN STEEL CO. v. HOPKINS does. Moreover, those cases presented some well-settled ground of equitable jurisdiction. Thus, York v. Pilkington, 1 Atk. 282, was a bill of peace by one in possession to settle a right of fishery against several claimants.

The most reliance seems to be placed upon Sheffield Waterworks v. Yeomans, L. R. 2 Ch. 8. It is very evident that the court misconstrued this case, as it apparently treated it as being a bill in equity to restrain several actions for damages by a great many defendants injured by an inundation caused by the bursting of a reservoir, on the ground that a multiplicity of suits would thereby be prevented. As a matter 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) of fact, the case did not present that question, and it was not passed upon by the court. Indeed, in so far as the question here under consideration is concerned, the case, if it is an authority either way, sustains a proposition contrary to SOUTHERN STEEL CO. v. HOPKINS, since the entire proceeding is based upon a tacit recognition of the right of injured persons to have the question of their injury settled by proceedings at law.

It appears that upwards of 7,000 people were either killed or injured by this inundation, and, by a special act, called "The Sheffield waterworks act," commissioners were appointed who were to inquire into the damages occasioned by the inundation, and any person claiming damages under the act was directed to lodge a statement of his claim at the office of the commissioners. Where, on any claims, damages were assented to by the county or assessed by the commissioners, the costs of the claimants were to be borne and paid by the county, and the commissioners were to certify accordingly. Most of the claimants for compensation under this act were poor and ignorant, and employed improper persons to represent them. The commissioners therefore made a regulation that no certificate should be issued except to the claimant in person. A difference of opinion arose among the commissioners as to the validity of 1,500 of such certificates, as it was questionable whether the power of the commissioners had not expired prior to their issuance. These certificates, however, were delivered to the defendant in the case, who was the town clerk. According to the act in question, these certificates, unless paid as therein provided, had the effect, as against the company, of a judgment. While the certificates were still in the hands of the town clerk, the water company, by a bill in equity, sought to restrain the clerk from delivering the certificates to the persons entitled thereto, on the ground that they were invalid for the reasons already stated, and that, if issued, the holders thereof would have them taxed according to the terms of the act, and have judgment rendered thereon, and that such proceedings would seriously prej-a numerous body, although there is no "common title" nor "community of right" or of "interest in the subject-matter" among these individuals, where there is, and because there is, merely a community of interest among them in the questions of law and fact involved in the general controversy, or in the kind and form of relief demanded and obtained against each individual member of the numerous body.

Turner v. Mobile, 135 Ala. 126, 33 S. W. 132; Cleveland v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 151 Ala. 191, 44 So. 37; Jones v. Hardy, 127 Ala. 221, 226, 28 So. 564; Morgan v. Morgan, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 386, 21 Am. Dec. 638; York v. Pilkington, 1 Atk. 282; Kennedy v. Kennedy, 2 Ala. 571; Dallas County v. Timberlake, 54 Ala. 403; 15 Enc. Pl.

& Pr. pp. 675 et seq.; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. §§ 269, 274; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 64, 65; Sheffield Waterworks v. Yeomans, L. R. 2 Ch. 8; Hale v. Allinson, 188 U. S. 77, 47 L. ed. 392, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 244; Bispham. Eq. 7th ed. § 417, p. 576; Wyman v. Bowman, 62 C. C. A. 189, 127 Fed. 263; Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. v. Bradley, 108 Wis. 467, 84 N. W. 870; Southern P. R. Co. v. Robinson, 132 Cal. 408, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 497, 64 Pac. 572; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McFarlan, 31 N. J. Eq. 730; 3 Current Law. p. 1216; American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Landau, 56 N. J. Eq. 513, 39 Atl. 400; Kerr, Inj. 135; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Ohio Valley Improv. & Contr. Co. 57 Fed. 45; Osborne v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 43 Fed. 824; Deduce the complainants by compelling them to defend themselves on numerous improper taxations. It was also alleged that the question whether these certificates were valid or invalid was the same as to all of them. The relief sought was that the clerk be restrained from delivering the certificates except as the court should direct; also for a decree declaring their invalidity.

From the foregoing statement it is obvious that the question presented to the court of equity was not the question of the validity of the claim of the defendants for damages arising from the tort in question, but simply a question of law as to the validity of certificates issued by commissioners authorized in that regard, but under such circumstances, as claimed, as to be without the scope of their authority, and therefore invalid.

In considering the question of relief after holding, on demurrer to the bill, that it presented proper grounds for equitable jurisdiction, the vice chancellor said that the other question, whether the documents ought to be delivered up and canceled, or whether the parties ought to be allowed to have them and pursue their legal remedy, depended upon whether these were proper certificates, and that again depended on all the details and facts as to what was done by the commissioners and their clerk by their direction.

In affirming the judgment of the vice chancellor, Lord Chelmsford, L. C., said that, strictly speaking, perhaps the bill was not a bill of peace, as the rights of the claimants under the alleged certificates were not identical. Continuing, he said: "The rights of the numerous claimants for costs all depend upon the same question,—the validity of certificates sealed under the circumstances stated in the bill. Each of the 1,500 persons, if he obtained the certificate from Mr. Yeomans [the town clerk], might produce it to a master of one of the superior courts of common law, and obtain, as a matter of course, a taxation of the costs. He might then enter up judgment and sue out execution, and no application could be made in any of the common-law courts to stop the proceedings, although it may turn out 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) in the result of this suit that the certificates are wholly invalid. It is true that, if the certificates have no validity, a motion might be made in the court where judgment was entered up, and from which the execution issued, to set aside that execution, but not until considerable expense had been incurred, and possibly after the same course of proceeding to judgment and execution had been taken by many of the claimants. It seems to me to be a very fit case, by analogy, at least, to a bill of peace, for a court of equity to interpose and prevent the unnecessary expense and litigation which would be thus occasioned, and to decide once for all the validity or invalidity of the certificates upon which the claims of all the parties depend."

The criticism in SOUTHERN STEEL CO. v. HOPKINS, of Tribette v. Illinois C. R. Co. infra and the citing of Pomeroy to the contrary, is also apparently based upon a misconception of the position taken by that able writer. In his 3d edition, § 264, pp. 428, 429, he considers the Tribette Case, and concedes that a defense by the complainant that the defendants were guilty of contributory negligence, would be a common defense as against all of the several actions for the injury but would require a separate issue as to each of them, which could not be avoided by removing the cases to a court of equity. He, however, asserts that, if the case presented the single question of the denial of complainant's negligence, it would then be within ground number 3.

While, as stated, it is not the purpose of this note to engage in this controversy, yet a search fails to reveal any case which, on the facts, sustains the proposition if applied to actions for breach of contract or the commission of a tort; and Pomeroy cites no such case.

Much the same question as that considered by the court in SOUTHERN STEEL CO. v. HOPKINS was presented and passed upon in the case of Tribette v. Illinois C. R. Co. 70 Miss. 182, 19 L.R.A. 600, 35 Am. Rep. 642, 12 So. 32, which is cited and disapproved of in that case. In this case it was sought to restrain actions for damages by several persons for injuries by fires, caused from Forest v. Thompson, 40 Fed. 378; Carlton v. Newman, 77 Me. 408, 1 Atl. 194; 14 Harvard Law Rev. pp. 611, 612; Kellogg v. Siple, 11 App. Div. 458, 42 N. Y. Supp. 379; Guess v. Stone Mountain Granite & R. Co. 67 Ga. 215; 16 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 66, article "Equity;" Bailey v. Tillingham, 40 C. C. A. 93, 99 Fed. 807; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 17 N. Y. 592; Boyd v. Schneider, 65 C. C. A. 209, 131 Fed. 223; Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 51 C. C. A. 21, 113 Fed. 1; Crawford v. Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. 83 Miss. 708, 102 Am. St. Rep. 476, 36 So. 82; Smith v. Bank of New England, 69 N. H. 254, 45 Atl. 1082; Pom. Eq. 4th ed. § 261, note; Tisdale v. Three Ins. Cos. 84 Miss. 709, 36 So. 568; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Garrison, 81

Miss. 257, 95 Am. St. Rep. 469, 32 So. 996; Henderson v. Hall, 134 Ala. 455, 63 L.R.A. 673, 32 So. 840; Gulf Red Cedar Co. v. Crenshaw, 138 Ala. 134, 35 So. 50.

The jurisdiction for the prevention of a multiplicity of vexatious actions at law is a part of the chancery jurisprudence, and the exercise thereof does not deprive plaintiffs at law of any right to trial by jury.

York v. Pilkington, supra; Morgan v. Morgan, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 383, 21 Am. Dec. 638; Cleveland v. Insurance Co. of N. A. supra.

Messrs. Frank S. White & Sons and John C. Carmichael, for appellees:

There being no privy or common interest between the defendants in the action at law, and the negligence alleged being a several and separate wrong as to each sparks emitted by an engine of the complainant. The case contains a very able presentation of the grounds on which equity will take jurisdiction to avoid a multiplicity of suits, and, after considering the authorities on the subject, it is held that the existence of numerous suits for damages for a tort or breach of contract, where each depends upon the same questions of fact and law, does not present a sufficient ground for the interposition of equity. The doctrine of that case was recognized in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Garrison, 81 Miss. 257, 95 Am. St. Rep. 469, 32 So. 996, but was distinguished from a case involving actions of trespass when the liability in each case depended upon the same facts, and the act of which complaint was made in each of the suits was a constantly recurring one. In later decisions, however, the case seems to have been practically overruled, and, from the conservative position taken by the court in that case, that court seems to have gone to the opposite extreme.

Thus, in Blumer v. Ulmer (Miss.) 44 So. 161, it was held that equity would take jurisdiction in behalf of different depositors of an insolvent bank to recover from the directors damages for deceit, on the sole ground that a multiplicity of suits was thereby avoided.

And in Whitlock v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. 91 Miss. 779, 45 So. 861, it was held that the fact that a number of suits were pending against a railroad company by passengers on the same train to recover damages because of being unreasonably delayed in transit presented sufficient ground for equitable jurisdiction to dispose of such actions in one suit; and the several actions at law were accordingly restrained.

Ducktown Sulphur, Copper, & I. Co. v. Fain, 109 Tenn. 56, 70 S. W. 813, involves a principle very similar to that in the Tribette Case. In this case the court of equity refused to assume jurisdiction and restrain actions at law by different property owners for damages for a nuisance, and to dispose of the matters involved in such suits in a single action in equity, on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits. The court, in so holding, cited the Tribette Case with approval.

A case directly in point is that of Vandalia Coal Co. v. Lawson (Ind.) 87 N. E. 47, wherein, after giving the matter very able consideration, the Tribette Case is sustained and the doctrine of SOUTHERN STEEL CO. v. HOPKINS criticized and disapproved. So far as the facts are concerned, the cases are very similar, many people being injured in a mine by the alleged negligent action of the mine owners or operators. The aid of equity was sought by the company to restrain the bringing of suits by the injured persons, or their representatives, for damages sustained by them, and seeking to have the entire matter disposed of by a single action in a court of equity, on the ground that the company was in no wise liable to the defendants for any of their alleged injuries; that the claim of each was based on the same explosion, and that, upon the trial of the cause, the company would clearly prove a state of facts which would be a common defense to all the actions. In refusing to take jurisdiction for this purpose, it is said that the exercise of the power to issue an injunction to prevent a multiplicity of suits is not to be absolutely controlled by the discretion or caprice of the various courts. "Such arbitrary power would be as unreasonable as that possessed by a monarch. The discretion used should be the result of legal reasoning and consideration, wherein all the facts and circumstances are considered with regard to whether the assumption of jurisdiction by equity would 'make for justice.' . . . Many of the later cases show that the number of cases in which equity will assume jurisdiction is increasing; but in allowing this condensation of litigation courts must look well to the facts and see that a consolidation will not confuse the issues, will not bring so many questions or varied interests into a case that they cannot be as well decided as if the cases were tried separately. will not work a practical denial of that grand constitutional guaranty, trial by jury. Every man has the right to try his case party injured, equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin their actions to avoid a multiplicity of suits.

Turner v. Mobile, 135 Ala. 124, 33 So. 132; Tribette v. Illinois C. R. Co. 70 Miss. 182, 19 L.R.A. 660, 35 Am. St. Rep. 642, 12 So. 32; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Garrison, 81 Miss. 263, 95 Am. St. Rep. 469, 32 So. 996; Marselis v. Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 31; Adams, Eq. p. 200; Randolph v. Kinney, 3 Rand. (Va.) 394; Dodd v. Hartford, 25 Conn. 232; Thomas v. Council Bluffs Canning Co. 34 C. C. A. 428, 92 Fed. 422; Schulenberg-Boeckeler Lumber Co.

v. Hayward, 20 Fed. 422; Scofield v. Lansing, 17 Mich. 437; Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 Mich. 410, 20 Am. Rep. 654; Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 107, 41 L. ed. 648, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 262; O'Brien v. Fitzgerald, 6 App. Div. 509, 39 N. Y. Supp. 709; Rayner v. Julian, 2 Dick. 677; Brookes v. Whitworth, 1 Madd. Ch. 86; Sheffield Waterworks v. Yeomans, supra; Brinkerhoff v. Bostwick, 105 N. Y. 567, 12 N. E. 58; National Tube Co. v. Smith, 57 W. Va. 210, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 195, 110 Am. St. Rep. 771, 50 S. E. 717; Deepwater R. Co. v. Motter, 60 W. Va. 55, 116 Am. St. Rep.

with its issues clear and well defined. If a consolidation can be had without interfering with this right, it should be granted in a proper case; if it cannot be so had, it should be denied. Should the court take jurisdiction of this case in equity and the issues tried out therein, it would be necessary to submit the questions of fact—the amount of damages done the several injured persons, etc.—to a jury. The possibility that the jury might confuse the evidence relating to so many separate parties is strong. Great difficulty might arise in adjusting the rights of all parties in one decree, and justice would be more likely obtained by separate trials. . . . Given countenance by such eminent authority as Professor Pomeroy, it is not strange that courts have been found willing to carry the doctrine of injunctive relief to prevent a multiplicity of action to such an extent as to seriously impair the right of trial by jury; and it is certain that other courts, in time, with the added warrant of precedent given by the first cases, will be found willing to still further undermine that right."

In referring to SOUTHERN STEEL Co. v. HOPKINS, it is said the effect of that decision is to prevent single suits brought by competent parties in competent courts, where the issues, separate and distinct, "could be determined in accordance with constitutional and regular methods, and where it, equally with the administrator of the dead employee, could have a fair trial. The right of a single employee separately injured to have his case thus tried has not yet been denied. But by the case under review it is substantially held that the cost of an explosion which kills 110 men must not be made greater than it would have been had only one man been killed." Continuing, the court says: "The inability of appellees to pay judgments or costs which might be rendered against them cannot be considered as a reason for invoking equity jurisdiction. The law does not limit a man's privilege to establish his rights by his financial standing, and justice in due and orderly course is as much the right of the poor as it is of the rich."

It is doubtful if one of the reasons stated for equity not assuming jurisdiction, to the effect that it would be necessary to ascertain the amount of damages occasioned to the injured people, would generally be recognized, as it is a question whether, if equity found that the alleged common defense was not a valid defense to the several actions, it would retain jurisdiction to assess the damages of the defendants. Under such circumstances, it would be quite as apt to dismiss the bill and allow the prosecution at law of the various suits. Conceding that this course would be indulged in rather than the one suggested by the court, it would seem to present an additional reason why, under such circumstances, equity ought not to take jurisdiction. If the only purpose of taking jurisdiction is to decide a question of law, based upon disputed facts which it must determine, and which, ordinarily, the defendants would be entitled to have submitted to a jury, then it would seem clear that not only one, but two, valid reasons are presented for refusing to take jurisdiction. One reason—a deprivation of the right to trial by jury—has already been considered; the other rests upon the equitable principle that "equality is equity." That "equity abhors inequality." The determination of this question of law, or common defense, as it is called, based upon a disputed state of facts, should the determination result in favor of the defendants, would result simply in a dismissal of the bill, leaving the defendants in a position no better than before their actions were restrained, while, in the meantime, the long delay incident to the ordinary chancery case would undoubtedly result in greatly injuring and impairing their chances of recovery by the removal or death of witnesses, and loss of memory incident to the delay. The defendants would not even have the advantage of claiming that the decision of the court of equity was res judicata upon either the law or the facts, as the company would be entitled in each case to contest the facts and have the same submitted to the jury on variant theories, which might, and undoubtedly would, raise questions of law not presented in the equity case. If it be conceded that a favorable decision to the company would be res judicata as to the defendants, and it undoubtedly would, as it would result in the actions at law being permanently restrained, then the added reason for refusing equitable jurisdiction is presented

875, 53 S. E. 705; Freer v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 1, 59 L.R.A. 556, 94 Am. St. Rep. 895, 43 S. E. 164; Story, Eq. §§ 72, 73; Sadlier v. New York, 185 N. Y. 408, 78 N. E. 272; Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 451, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; Winslow v. Jenness, 64 Mich. 84, 30 N. W. 905; Dilly v. Doig, 2 Ves. Jr. 486; Ward v. Northumberland, 2 Anstr. 469; Morris & E. R. Co. v. Prudden, 20 N. J. Eq. 531; Hinchman v. Paterson Horse R. Co. 17 N. J. Eq. 75, 86 Am. Dec. 252; Murphy v. Wilmington, 6 Houst. (Del.) 108, 22 Am. St. Rep. 355; Ritchie v. Dorland, 6 Cal. 40; Scottish Union etc. Ins. Co. v. J. H. Mohlman Co. 73 Fed. 68; Swift v. Larrabee, 31 Conn. 239; Doggett v. Hart, 5 Fla. 215, 58 Am. Dec. 468; Woodward v. Seely, 11 Ill. 157, 50 Am. Dec. 445; Storrs v. Pensacola & A. R. Co. 29 Fla. 617, 11 So. 229; Boonville Nat. Bank v. Blakey, 166 Ind. 427, 76 N. E. 534; School Dist. No. 25 v. Rice, 11 Idaho, 99, 81 Pac. 155; Scott v. Erie R. Co. 34 N. J. Eq. 355; Scott v. McFarland, 70 Fed. 281; Merrill v. Lake, 16 Ohio, 373, 47 Am. Dec. 380; Hardin v. Swoope, 47 Ala. 276; Zanhizer v. Hefner, 47 W. Va. 418, 35 S. E. 4; Tompkins v. Craig, 93 Fed. 885; Scott v.

in that in assuming jurisdiction no possible advantage could result to one of the parties to the suit, and no possible injury to the other. If the company wins, it has ended the matter; if it loses, its rights would still be practically intact with the added gain arising from the delay.

The Tribette Case, was also cited and quoted from with approval by the Alabama court in Turner v. Mobile, 135 Ala. 73, 33 So. 132, which case is analyzed and quoted from in a note to Illinois Steel Co. v. Schroeder, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 239. In the Turner Case, in considering the third proposition of Mr. Pomeroy, it is said: "The authorities which take a different view of the doctrine under discussion hold, as we have seen, that to authorize numerous persons to unite in one bill for the prevention of a multiplicity of suits, they must have a common title to, or a common interest in, the subject-matter involved; and that a mere common interest in a question of law involved in pending or threatened suits will not suffice. This position is nowhere better or more fully stated than by Campbell, Ch. J., in Tribette v. Illinois C. R. Co. 70 Miss. 182, 19 L.R.A. 660, 35 Am. St. Rep. 642, 12 So. 32; and, as the opinion treats fully of Mr. Pomeroy's position, and demonstrates its fallacy, we quote it in part."

The doctrine of the Tribette Case also finds support in Bliss on Code Pleading, § 76, wherein, as illustrating the necessity of community of interest, in order that actions for damages may be united, the learned writer mentions as a case where there is no such community of interest, one where a common carrier carelessly destroyed property belonging to different persons, or the lives of different passengers.

This question also receives a very exhaustive discussion in Beach on Injunctions, § 543, and the doctrine of the Tribette Case is therein approved.

This case is also cited with approval as authority to sustain this doctrine in High on Injunctions, § 65-a.

The trend of modern authorities on the question of equitable jurisdiction to avoid a multiplicity of suits is to exercise a certain degree of discretion as to when jurisdiction will be taken on that ground. This discretion is not arbitrary, but depends to a great extent upon the question of convenience to each party, and also on the question of injury to either party by assuming jurisdiction or refusing jurisdiction. To a great extent this discretion is controlled by the question whether the exercise of it will deprive any of the parties of their constitutional right of trial by jury. This right is generally placed by the courts beyond and above any question of convenience or pecuniary loss. In determining whether in a given case the discretion vested in the court should be exercised by assuming jurisdiction or extending jurisdiction to meet a new state of facts, or a new condition, the rule that one is not deprived of his constitutional rights to jury trial by a court of chancery taking jurisdiction of and disposing of a case presenting ordinary equitable features is not applicable. In determining whether or not the discretion in the court should be exercised to save a multitude of suits, it is not the question of its right that the court considers, but the question what it ought, under the circumstances presented, to do. The following cases, while not within the scope of this note, illustrate this tendency of the courts: American Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Godfrey, 158 Fed. 225; United States v. Bitter Root Development Co. 200 U. S. 451, 50 L. ed. 550, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318; Southern P. Co. v. Robinson, 132 Cal. 408, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 497, 64 Pac. 572; Chicago v. Collins, 175 Ill. 445, 49 L.R.A. 408, 67 Am. St. Rep. 224, 51 N. E. 907; North American Ins. Co. v. Yates, 214 Ill. 272, 73 N. E. 423; Livingston County Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Keach, 219 Ill. 9, 76 N. E. 72; Adams v. Oberndorf, 121 Ill. App. 497; Boonville Nat. Bank v. Blakey, 166 Ind. 427, 76 N. E. 529; Jordan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 69 Kan. 140, 76 Pac. 396; Daab v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 70 N. J. Eq. 489, 62 Atl. 449; Christian Feigenspan v. Nizolek, 71 N. J. Eq. 382, 65 Atl. 703; Miller v. Willett, 71 N. J. Eq. 741, 65 Atl. 981; Tudor Boiler Mfg. Co. v. I. & E. Greenwald Co. 5 Ohio C. C. N. S. 37; Columbian University v. Taylor, 25 App. D. C. 124; National Tube Co. v. Smith, 57 W. Va. 210, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 195, 110 Am. St. Rep. 771, 50 S. E. 717 (citing Tribette v. Illinois C. R. Co. supra). See also Illinois Steel Co. v. Schroeder, supra.

Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 35 L. ed. 358, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712; Eldridge v. Hill, 2 Johns. Ch. 281; Northern P. R. Co. v. Amacker, 1 C. C. A. 345, 7 U. S. App. 33, 49 Fed. 629, S. C. 46 Fed. 233; Manchester F. Assur. Co. v. Stockton Combined Harvester & Agri. Works, 38 Fed. 378; Dodge v. Briggs, 27 Fed. 160; Hughes v. Hannah, 39 Fla. 365, 22 So. 613; Rowbotham v. Jones, 47 N. J. Eq. 337, 19 L.R.A. 663, 20 Atl. 731; Richardson v. Davidson, 2 Silv. Sup. Ct. 194, 5 N. Y. Supp. 617; Mt. Zion v. Gillman, 9 Biss. 479, 14 Fed. 123.

Messrs. Caldwell & Carmichael, Bowman, Harsh, & Beddow, Stallings & Drennen, Robert M. Bell, B. M. Allen, George P. Bondurant, W. K. Terry, D. B. Anderson, Sam Will John, John S. Kennedy, H. K. White, and Smith & Smith also for appellees.

Tyson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Two questions only are involved in this appeal: One, whether the appellant was a party who could file the bill; second, whether the court has jurisdiction of the case made. The lower court dismissed the bill for want of equity, deciding both points against the appellant.

The appellant is the resultant or successor and assign by consolidation of two corporations—one the Alabama Steel & Wire Company, and the other the Underwood Coal & Iron Company—in December, 1905. The Alabama Steel & Wire Company having been sued at law on a liability existing prior to the consolidation, the first question is: Can the appellant, the new company, assert the rights, equities, and defenses of the wire company, as set up in the bill in this case. We think there ought to be no doubt about this right. The appellant is the successor in law of the merged companies. It succeeds to all their respective rights, privileges, powers, and franchises, and becomes liable for all their debts, liabilities, and duties, and thus plainly has the right to defend and prosecute suits at law and in equity for the protection of its rights, the same as the original companies could do. The original company in this case in all prosecutions and defenses in its name would necessarily act for and under the control of the new company. The policy of the law and the character of the change affected by the consolidation of the corporations are shown by § 1151 of the Code, and by Gen. Acts 1903, pp. 331, 332, § 40. See Johnson v. State, 88 Ala. 176, 7 So. 253. If the name of the original corporation was essential in this proceeding on special objection urging and showing such necessity, the defect could 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) easily have been cured by amendment, and therefore was not available on motion to dismiss.

The second question is whether the bill is properly filed as one to avoid a multiplicity of suits. An explosion occurred in a mine owned by the wire company, by which 110 persons lost their lives, and 110 separate suits were brought by their representatives to recover damages for alleged negligence by the owner of the mine, by which the accident occurred. The appellant, alleging that the wire company (and it, as its successor) has a perfect defense applicable alike to all these suits, filed the bill in this case to enjoin actions at law until this defense could be determined. The question abstractly is whether the court has jurisdiction of any case of this kind; for, if it has, this case must come within the rule, since the allegations show that, though the defense be perfectly good, it would be impossible for the appellant to properly present the same at law, because many of the cases would be on trial in different courts at the same time, and further show that the expenses and costs of the litigation at law would be ruinous, though successful against every plaintiff.

It is objected by the appellees that, the negligence alleged being a several and separate wrong as to each party injured, and there being no privity or common interest between the defendants in the actions at law, the court of chancery has no jurisdiction to enjoin their suits to avoid a multiplicity of suits. The principle upon which this jurisdiction is established is that it is the duty of the government to furnish a full, adequate, and complete remedy for the assertion and protection of all property rights of its citizens; and this bill is filed upon the idea that it is the peculiar function of the chancery jurisdiction to supplement the law courts and to give such remedy when it does not exist at law in a way "as practical and efficient to the ends of justice as the remedy in equity," and that there is no plain, adequate, complete, and practical remedy for appellants' protection in the courts of law. Boyce v. Grundy, 3 Pet. 210, 7 L. ed. 655; Oelrichs v. Spain (Oelrichs v. Williams) 15 Wall. 211–228, 21 L. ed. 43, 45; Allen v. Hanks, 136 U. S. 311, 34 L. ed. 418, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 961.

The right of defense, and of a form of defense as efficient and practical as the nature of the transaction will reasonably admit of, are rights as sacred as the corresponding rights of prosecution for the assertion of property rights. There can be no distinction, nor is there any, between the right to an efficient remedy for defense and one for the reclamation of property, as protection in the acquisition and in the defense of property is only the application of the same principle of security in different forms. Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 175, 44 L. ed. 120, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77; West v. Louisiana, 194 U. S. 258-263, 48 L. ed. 965-970, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650.

Independent of special grounds for proceeding in equity, the court at an early date assumed a jurisdiction to prevent a multiplicity of suits by settling in a single case a right or transaction which at law involved the trial of numerous cases, entailing loss of time and perhaps ruin in costs. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 657; Tenham v. Herbert, 2 Atk. 483; Hanson v. Gardiner, 7 Ves. Jr. 309, 310. Lord Hardwicke, in the Case of Tenham, supra, expressed the rule as to when a bill of this kind could be filed and when the right must first be established at law. Not quoting the authorities cited in 26 English Reports, Reprint, 692, sustaining his position, he said: "Undoubtedly there are some cases in which a man may, by a bill of this kind, come into this court first; and there are others where he ought first to establish his right at law. It is certain, where a man sets up a general exclusive right, and where the persons who controvert it with him are very numerous, and he cannot, by one or two actions at law, quiet that right, he may come into this court first, which is called a bill of peace, and the court will direct an issue to determine the right, as in disputes between lords of manors and their tenants, and between tenants of one manor and another; for in these cases there would be no end of bringing actions of trespass, since each action would determine only the particular right in question between the plaintiff and defendant. . . . As to the case of York v. Pilkington, 1 Atk. 282, the plaintiffs there were in possession of the right of fishing upon the River Ouse for 9 miles together, and had constantly exercised that right, and, as this large jurisdiction entangled them with different lords of manors, it would have been endless for the corporation to have brought actions at law. But, where a question about a right of fishery is only between two lords of manors, neither of them can come into this court till the right is first tried at law."

This we consider as expressing the rule of law; the principle dictating the rule being the duty and necessity of affording a practical and efficient form of remedy for protection to persons and property founded in the very conception of government. 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 972. If this case falls within the rule, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the allowance of the proceeding is no infringement of the constitutional right of trial by jury, for that guaranty refers to, and is coextensive only with, the common-law right then existing, and it was always a principle of the common law that the trial by jury must give way to an appeal to equity, when from the nature of the situation, the transaction to be investigated, and the relation of the parties to that transaction the ordinary proceeding at law would not answer sufficiently the purpose of administering justice. Boring v. Williams, 17 Ala. 510; Oelrichs v. Spain, supra; Cook v. Schmidt, 100 Ala. 582, 13 So. 686; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 972-974. It is the duty of affording an efficient and speedy and economical administration of justice which evoked and established the principle of jurisprudence under which a court of equity interferes to avoid a multiplicity of suits. This principle, then, is established by the application of reason to the circumstances of the particular case, and, of course, it can have no other limit than that of reason. The classification by the text writers and courts of the instances in which a particular jurisdiction founded on a general principle has been exercised may be a guaranty of safety in following in their footsteps; but it is only a recognition of the controlling principle, and does not by any means restrict the principle itself.

The question here, then, is, What is the principle upon which equity interferes to avoid a multiplicity of suits? In determining this, it may be borne in mind that the jurisdiction is not to be invoked when the remedy at law is plain, adequate, and complete, and that no court has the right to infringe upon the wholesome doctrine of multifariousness which prevents a mingling in one suit of entirely distinct and separate causes of action between different parties. Subject to these restrictions, the principle and rule is that, where numerous parties are jointly and severally claiming against one, or where one is claiming against many liable jointly or severally, and the same title or right of defense will be called in question, and will be determinative of the issue for or against all, a case for the interposition of equity to avoid a multiplicity of suits is made without the aid of any independent equity. The fact that this unity of claim or defense frequently or generally arises from privity or joint action by or between the many affords an obvious instance of the application of the rule, and it has induced some to suppose that the junction and unity of interest calling for the application of the rule is limited to such cases. But the association and unity of interest in the many as to the other party, may be brought about just as well by the nature of the transaction or the situation and relation of the parties, independent of all privity or joint action. And therefore privity, or joint right, or liability, although good examples for the application of the principle, afford no test for the propriety of its application.

The case made by the bill in this case is this: An explosion in a coal mine killed 110 persons. The several administrators of these persons have brought several suits against the appellant as the owner and operator for damages, insisting that its negligence was the proximate cause of the accident. The appellant in effect says, if these actions are allowed to proceed at law it will be ruined in costs and expenses, though it be successful in every suit; that the plaintiffs are all insolvent, and thus could not pay the taxed costs against them, should they be unsuccessful; that the suits are pending in different courts, and will be called for trial in different courts at the same time; that, by reason of this, and the necessity of having the same witnesses in each trial, it is impossible for the defendants to present a proper defense to these multitude of claims. The appellant says, moreover, that it has one and the same and a perfect defense or defenses to all these suits, which will be put forward in each case, and which will be determinative of all alike; and, on this ground, it is insisted that this is a plain case for the application of the jurisdiction of a court of equity to avoid a multiplicity of suits. We agree with this contention on principle.

The first thing to obliterate from the mind in considering the question is that it is immaterial how the unity of title, claim, or defense is brought about. It is the factum of a single title against many, or a common defense against many, which is the foundation of the jurisdiction. A vested right of property and a vested cause of defense for protection against liability stand precisely on the same basis; and whence and how such right originated is wholly immaterial. 8 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 911; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 132, 27 L. ed. 104, 107, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102. If the unfortunate persons who lost their lives by the explosion had jointly leased the mine, and their administrators had instituted several actions as in this case against the owner, it is conceded that the privity between the plaintiffs established by the contract would justify a bill to have the question of liability determined in one suit. But why? Only because a single and common defense would, if successful, determine all the suits. Suppose, however, the owner leased to a third party, instead of the operators and the same accident happened, and a thousand suits were brought or threatened by solvent, or especially by insolvent, parties, what reason is there for, or could there be for, denying the jurisdiction to enforce in a single suit the common cause of defense against all? Ingenuity, we think, cannot discover a substantial distinction between the two cases under which the owner in one instance may take shelter in a court of equity against the wrongful and vexatious suits, while in the other he must submit to financial ruin in defending a thousand vexatious actions at law.

We now examine the precedents to show that the great legal minds who have administered the principles of equity in the past do not disagree with this conclusion. In the Case of Tenham, 2 Atk. 484, the master builder of equity jurisprudence, whose words we have quoted above, lays it down as clear and certain that, when a general right is set up, and is disputed by many, the party may come into equity in the first instance against the many, and have that right determined in one suit; for if this could not be done there would be no end of bringing actions of trespass, since each action would determine only the particular right in question between the plaintiff and defendant. Suppose the case was reversed, and the many had already instituted their separate suits; would not the principle announced entitle the party having a common defense against all, through a "general right," to claim the aid of the court for a settlement of liability vel non in a single suit? Clearly so. It is the general vested right in property, or common cause of defense for the protection of property, which opens the field for the operation of the principle. In the case of York v. Pilkington, 1 Atk. 282, the same great judge laid down the rule in language which covers this case. There the suit was to establish a right of fishing against a number of defendants not connected by title or privity. At first a demurrer was sustained by the chancellor, but on reargument he said he had changed his mind, saying that it matters not about privity of any sort, nor about a general right on the part of the defendants; that the question as to such bills "is whether the plaintiffs have a general right to the sole fishing, which extends to all the defendants." This case has been followed and approved in England to the present day. One of the most interesting applications is in the case of Sheffield Waterworks v. Yeomans, L. R. 2 Ch. 8, decided in 1866. In that case a reservoir of the water company had burst, and 7,315 persons lost their lives or had their property injured, and many were prosecuting claims against the company. The bill was filed to test the liability in a single suit, and was sustained. The vice chancellor defined the case for a bill of peace as being one in which "there were a number of persons claiming as against one, or one person against a number, and where all were claiming alike." On appeal the court sustained the lower court, saying: "It seems to me to be a very fit case, by analogy, at least, to a bill of peace, for a court of equity to interpose and prevent the unnecessary expense and litigation which would be occasioned, and to decide once for all the validity or invalidity of the certificates upon which the claims of all the parties depend."

The same view of the law is entertained by the Supreme Court of the United States and many of the states. In Hale v. Allinson, 188 U. S. 77, 47 L. ed. 392, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 244, though the court declined to exercise the jurisdiction, it stated with accuracy the rule itself, stating that it did not require a common title, nor community of right or interest in the subject-matter, among the defendants, but only a common interest in the questions of law or fact in controversy. And the statement of law in this case has been approved by the same court at the present term (1907) in the case of Bitterman v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 207 U. S. 205, 52 L. ed. 171, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 91. The following, amongst many other, cases strongly support the rule that, when all the cases may be determined on a single question or defense common to all, the jurisdiction will be exercised. Wyman v. Bowman, 62 C. C. A. 189, 127 Fed. 263; Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. v. Bradley, 108 Wis. 467, 84 N. W. 870; Southern P. Co. v. Robinson, 132 Cal. 408, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 497, 64 Pac. 572; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McFarlan, 31 N. J. Eq. 730; American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Landau, 56 N. J. Eq. 513, 39 Atl. 400; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Ohio Valley Improv. & Contr. Co. (C. C.) 57 Fed. 45; Osborne v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. (C. C.) 43 Fed. 824; DeForest v. Thompson (C. C.) 40 Fed. 375; 1 Pom. Eq. §§ 269-274.

We are committed to the same principle in Alabama. In the early case of Morgan v. Morgan, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 383, 21 Am. Dec. 638, it is said: "It is not conceived to be necessary, in bills of peace, that there should appear to be any privity or connection between the defendants. There are cases where bills of peace have been brought, though there has been a general right claimed by the plaintiffs, and yet no privity between the plaintiffs and defendants, nor 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) any general right on the part of the defendants." And in the case of Cleveland v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 151 Ala. 191, 44 So. 37, decided in 1907, we used the following language comprehending the rule of Lord Hardwicke: "The jurisdiction of the court of equity will be exercised in suits by a single party against a number of persons to restrain the prosecution of simultaneous actions at law brought against him by each defendant, and to procure a decision of the whole in one proceeding, where all of the actions depend upon the same law and facts."

It is insisted that the case of Turner v. Mobile, 135 Ala. 77, 33 So. 132, is opposed to the view above expressed. That there are expressions in the opinion to that effect is not to be doubted, but there are other expressions which approve and define with accuracy the very basis of our conclusion in this case. Judge McClellan, in that case, says: "So, where one party is subjected to or threatened with numerous and vexatious actions at law, or is the victim of numerous, repeated, and continuing wrongs, so that a multitude of suits would be necessary for his redress at law, he may come into chancery, because the necessity for numerous suits or defenses to numerous suits at law is in itself such a wrong and vexation to him as vests him with an equity." This case is founded on this declaration of the law, which is clearly and precisely and accurately stated. In reference to other expressions in the opinion it is sufficient to say that every decision must be read in the light of the exact case before the court, and which it was intended to decide. Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257; Gaines v. Hennen, 24 How. 553, 16 L. ed. 770; Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Crocker, 95 Ala. 430, 11 So. 262. The point and principle here at issue was not in the least involved in the Turner Case. Judge McClellan in the opening of his opinion so declares. He says: "There is no pretense that this case falls within the first, second, or fourth classes" pointed out by Mr. Pomeroy, in which equitable jurisdiction on account of multiplicity of suits is allowed. And then he shows that the bill was not sufficient under the third class. So that the question in this case, which comes directly within the fourth class, as defined by Mr. Pomeroy and Judge McClellan, was not before the court in the Turner Case, and was not and could not have been decided.

The case, however, of Tribette v. Illinois C. R. Co. 70 Miss. 182, 19 L.R.A. 660, 35 Am. St. Rep. 642, 12 So. 32, is directly opposed to our views. That case we consider as overruled by the subsequent one in the same court of Crawford v. Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. 83 Miss. 708, 102 Am. St. Rep. 476, 36 So. 83, in which the court expressly approves the view repudiated in the Tribette Case. It is said in the Hightower Case: "We think the doctrine announced by Pomeroy is sound and clearly established by the best considered modern cases." After this repudiation of the Tribette Case by the supreme court of Mississippi, we will not follow the reasoning of the opinion in that case to point out its defection from and opposition, in our opinion, to the ancient as well as modern view of the extent of the jurisdiction of courts of equity in reference to multiplicity of suits. That jurisdiction is too well established and too beneficent, when wisely exercised, to be any longer called in question.

It would be a strange casus in juridical evolution to meet the needs of society if there was no remedy against a party being vexatiously prosecuted at the same time by over 7,000 separate invalid claims held by insolvent plaintiffs, as in the Sheffield Waterworks Case, supra, when each case is founded upon the same facts, and when it is alleged and admitted, by the objection to the jurisdiction, that there is a defense common to all the claims. It is to avoid the monstrosity of such a result that the court of chancery extends its plenary jurisdiction to stay the proceedings at law until the question of liability can be determined in one suit, and therefore we hold that the bill in the case was well filed.

The bill in this case was dismissed on motion. The demurrers, therefore, are not before us; nor have we to do more than to say that the bill on its statements has equity on the single ground of preventing the multiplicity of suits unaided by the other matters averred. The decree of the lower court is reversed, and one will be here rendered overruling the motion.

Haralson, Anderson, and Denson, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied July 3, 1908.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

PINK CARTER et al., Appts.,
v.
WILLIAM COUCH.

(— Ala. —, 47 So. 1006.)

Devise — debased fee.

1. A debased fee, and not a life estate, is created by a devise to one to have and to hold to her and to the heirs of her body. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(which fee tail is by statute raised to a fee), and, should she die without issue surviving, the property to go to her heirs at law; and, upon the happening of the contingency, the fee vests in the heirs at law.

Curtsey — determinable fee.

2. A surviving husband is entitled to curtesy out of a determinable fee owned by his wife with issue born alive, notwithstanding the contingency upon which the fee is to terminate exists at the time of her death.

(December 15, 1908.)

Case Note. — Right of curtesy in determinable fee.

The rule as to a husband's right of curtesy in the conditional and limited estates of his wife is said in 4 Kent, Com. 33, and in 1 Washb. Real Prop. 6th ed. §§ 322-326, to be that, if the wife's estate is determined by a condition expressly annexed thereto requiring the entry of the grantor and his heirs in order to defeat it for a breach of the condition, such entry would destroy the wife's estate and all intermediate rights, including curtesy; but, if limited either by way of a springing use or executory devise, which takes effect at the wife's decease, thereby determining the original estate before its natural expiration and substituting a new one in its place, by which the estate is merely shifted from one person to another, the wife's seisin is left undisturbed, and the husband's curtesy is preserved.

And in Northcut v. Whipp, 12 B. Mon. 65, though the case is not exactly in point in this note, being an action for dower, it was said that dower, being an estate growing out of that of the husband or incident to it, could not, from its nature, exist after the estate to which it was attached had ceased; and, therefore, if the fee were ~~devoted~~ by title paramount, or were determined by entry of the donor for condition broken, dower and curtesy necessarily ceased. To quote from the opinion: "So, in a case of a qualified or base fee, dower and curtesy cease when the estate is determined; and it is said (1 Cruise, Dig. title, 'Dower,' chap. 3, § 27) that, where an estate in fee is made determinable on some particular event, if that event happens, dower and curtesy cease with the estate. On the other hand, it is well settled in the English common law, that, in the case of an estate tail, dower and curtesy continue after the estate is determined; as, where land is given to a man or a woman, and the heirs of his or her body, and the donee marries and dies, leaving no heirs to the body, the surviving wife is entitled to dower, or the husband, if there had been issue born alive, to curtesy, though the estate tail is determined, according to its own limitation, and the interest of the donor or remainderman becomes immediate."—citing Paine's Case, infra.

Leaving out of consideration estates limited by condition, and confining the discussion to determinable fees, such as presented by CARTER v. COUCH, it may be laid down as APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Marshall County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. A. Lusk, for appellants:

The only right of the wife in the property was to a life estate.

Findley v. Hill, 133 Ala. 229, 32 So. 497; Ballentine v. Foster, 128 Ala. 638, 30 So. 481.

An estate by curtesy cannot exist, as the wife was not seised of an estate of inheritance.

3 Tiedeman, Real Prop. §§ 75, 84; 1 Tiffany, Real Prop. pp. 486, 491.

Messrs. Street & Isbell, for appellee:

The wife took an absolute fee under the will.

4 Kent, Com. § 506; 3 Washb. Real Prop.

a general rule of law, supported by almost all the authorities, that if the other requisites are present, a husband is entitled to curtesy out of his wife's determinable estate, notwithstanding the contingency upon which the fee is to terminate exists at the time of her death.

Thus, it is said in 1 Co. Litt. 30a: "If a woman tenant in taile generall taketh a husband, and hath issue, which issue dyeth, and the wife dieth without any other issue, yet the husband shall be tenant by the curtesie, albeit the estate in taile be determined, because he was intitled to be tenant per legem Angliæ before the estate in taile was spent, and for that the land remaineth."

And in Paine's Case, 8 Coke, 34, it was held "by the whole court that, at the common law, if lands had been given to a woman, and the heirs of her body, and she had taken a husband and had issue, and the issue died, and the wife also without issue, whereby the inheritance of the land did revert to the donor, in that case the estate of the wife is determined, and yet the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy, for that is facit implied in the gift."

And in Buckworth v. Thirkell, 4 Dougl. K. B. 323, Lord Mansfield held that a husband was entitled to curtesy in land which had been devised to trustees and their heirs to receive the rents and profits, and apply them for the maintenance of the cestui que trust, till she arrived at the age of twenty-one years, or till she married, and, on her arriving at such age or marrying, to the use of the cestui que trust and her heirs and assigns; but, if she should die before the age of twenty-one years, and without issue, remainder over, where it appeared that she married and had a child, and the child and the cestui que trust died before she arrived at the age of twenty-one years.

And in Sweetapple v. Bindon, 2 Vern. 536, in which it appeared that a testator devised money to be laid out in land and settled to the use of her daughter and her children, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) pp. 414, 699; Holt v. Pickett, 111 Ala. 362, 20 So. 432; Mason v. Pate, 34 Ala. 390; Wilson v. Alaton, 122 Ala. 635, 25 So. 225; Smith v. Greer, 88 Ala. 414, 6 So. 911; Slayton v. Blount, 93 Ala. 575, 9 So. 241; 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 699, and notes.

If not an absolute fee, the grant to Mrs. Couch was a base or qualified fee subject to be defeated upon the happening of the contingency that she leaves no issue surviving her, with an executory devise over in that event to the persons happening to be her heirs at law.

30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 751, 753, and notes; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 431.

In such an estate the husband is entitled to an estate by curtesy.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 519, and notes; Webb v. First Baptist Church, 90 and, if the daughter died without issue, to go over; and the daughter married and had a child; and both she and the child died; and the money was not laid out as directed,—it was held that the money was to be considered as land, and the husband entitled to curtesy therein.

And in Sammes's Case, 1 Leon. 167, in which it appeared that the mother of two daughters covenanted to stand seised of certain lands to the use of her elder daughter in tail, upon condition that the latter should pay to her sister within a certain specified time a certain sum, and, if she should fail in payment or should die without issue before such payment, then to the use of her sister in tail; and the mother died and the elder sister married and had issue, and died without issue before the day of payment,—it was held that her husband was entitled to curtesy.

So, in Webb v. First Baptist Church, 90 Ky. 117, 13 S. W. 362, it was held that, where the wife owned an estate in fee subject to be defeated in the event of her death without issue, the surviving husband was entitled to curtesy if the other requisites thereof were present, although there was no issue alive at the time of the wife's death.

And in the following cases it was held that curtesy attached to an estate in fee though it was to be determined if the wife died without issue surviving: Hatfield v. Sneden, 54 N. Y. 280, reversing 42 Barb. 615, disapproving Weller v. Weller, 28 Barb. 588, (a case of dower in which the rule there laid down would apply as well to curtesy); Buchannan v. Sheffer, 2 Yeates. 374; Thornton v. Krepps, 37 Pa. 391; Crumley v. Deake, 8 Baxt. 361; Taliaferro v. Burwell, 4 Call (Va.) 321.

So, in Hay v. Mayer, 8 Watts. 203, 34 Am. Dec. 453, and in Holden v. Wells, 18 R. I. 802, 31 Atl. 265, a husband was held to be entitled to curtesy in an estate tail of his wife, though she died without issue surviving.

Ky. 117, 13 S. W. 362; 8 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1012, and notes; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 374.

McClellan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Charles Carter's will contains this clause, called "clause B" hereinafter, omitting the description of the lands described: "I hereby will and bequeath to my daughter Elizabeth Couch, . . . to have and to hold to her and to the heirs of her body, but should she die without issue surviving, the said tract of land shall go to the heirs at law of the said Elizabeth H. Couch." The legal effect of the devise by clause B to Mrs. Couch and to the heirs of her body was to create a fee tail, which, under our statute (Code 1896, § 1021), was raised to an absolute fee. The devise was clearly the paramount intent of the testator, as expressed in clause B. The succeeding limitation, based upon her death without issue surviving, is pendent upon the superior estate created in Mrs. Couch, and debased it upon the defined contingency happening. The result was the creation of a determinate fee in the land, which, upon the happening of a definite event, viz., her death without issue surviving, invested that fee in the heirs at law of Mrs. Couch. 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 431, 432, and authorities in notes; 16 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 602, 603, and notes; 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 751 et seq., and notes.

The theory of counsel for appellant, that a life estate was the estate devised to Mrs. Couch, cannot be approved, because, and if so, the plainest expression of the creation of a fee tail estate, enhanced by statute into an absolute fee, would be thereby wholly ignored, without anything in the instrument to justify such an interpretation. The limitation that in default of issue surviving the heirs at law of Mrs. Couch should take is not only not inconsistent with the view that a debased fee was created by the terms of the whole clause, but is repugnant to an interpretation that would distort a clear creation of an estate in fee tail into a mere life estate. The argument for a construction of clause B creative of a life estate is necessarily predicated upon the provision therein with respect to the death of Mrs. Couch. The provision is referable only to a description of an event, not, abstractly speaking, a limitation of an estate, upon which the existence vel non of the defined contingency shall be ascertained, and upon the ascertainment of the happening of which the heirs at law shall take.

Mrs. Couch died without issue surviving her, but issue was born alive to her. Her husband, William Couch, appellee, continued in the possession of the premises; and the heirs at law instituted this action of ejectment, which he defends upon the idea that, under the doctrine of curtesy, he is entitled to the possession and enjoyment of the lands during his life. The status being as we have defined it, viz., that Mrs. Couch took a determinate fee in the lands in controversy, the second question then is: Is the

And in the following cases from South Carolina, in which jurisdiction there were (at the time of the decisions, at least) no estates tail because of the fact that the statute de donis had never been in force there, it was held that a grant to a woman and the heirs of her body created a conditional fee in which the husband had a right of curtesy, though the wife died without issue surviving: Wright v. Herron, 5 Rich. Eq. 441, affirmed in 6 Rich. Eq. 406; Withers v. Jenkins, 14 S. C. 597; Odom v. Beverly, 32 S. C. 107, 10 S. E. 835.

These rules of law find support, also, in the following authorities: Martin v. Renaker, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 469, 9 S. W. 419; Grout v. Townsend, 2 Hill, 554; Evans v. Evans, 9 Pa. 190; Moody v. King, 2 Bing. 447; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 579; 1 Greenleaf's Cruise, Real Prop. title 5, chap. 2, § 8; 1 Roper, Husb. & W. 38; while in Butler's note to 2 Co. Litt. 241a, and in Park, Dower, 163, will be found discussions which seem to question the principle.

The only case that throws any doubt upon this rule of law is McMasters v. Negley, 152 Pa. 303, 25 Atl. 641, in which curtesy was denied in land devised to a daughter by a will which further provided that, if she died before the age of twenty-five without leaving children, her share should revert to, and become part of, the testator's residuary estate. The court said that this case came within the rule laid down by Washburn that, if the estate of the wife was an estate of inheritance determined by a limitation which operated to defeat her estate at common law, the right of curtesy was gone, thus treating it as a conditional estate, and not as a determinable one, distinguishing on this ground Thornton v. Krepps and Evans v. Evans, supra. The idea of the court here seems to be that, if a testator devises his fee-simple estate to his daughter with a devise over to another if the daughter dies without issue, this will make the daughter's estate a determinable fee in which her husband will have curtesy; but if, as in the present case, upon the failure of issue, it is to revert to the testator's estate, it will be a conditional fee. The court, however, itself admits, that the distinction is "exceedingly refined." It might be well to add that in any event the husband in this case would not, at common law, have been entitled to curtesy, as there was never any issue of the marriage, that requisite to an estate by curtesy having been abolished by statute in Pennsylvania.

surviving husband entitled to curtesy out of such estate? The question has been often answered in the affirmative, and never in the negative so far as we are now advised, and it will suffice to set down some only of the numerous authorities so holding: Webb v. First Baptist Church, 90 Ky. 117, 13 S. W. 362; Hatfield v. Sneden, 54 N. Y. 280; McMasters v. Negley, 152 Pa. 303, 25 Atl. 641; Taliaferro v. Burwell, 4 Call (Va.) 321; 2 Co. Litt. p. 241a, note; 12 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1012; Withers v. Jenkins, 14 S. C. 597.

The court below, therefore, correctly gave the affirmative charge for and at the request of the defendant; and its judgment is affirmed.

Tyson, Ch. J., and Dowdell and Anderson, JJ., concur.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

J. M. MILLER et al., Appts.,
v.
STATE OF ALABAMA, Resp't.

(— Ala. —, 48 So. 360.)

Bail — discharge — new liability.

After conviction of an accused, for whose enlargement bail had been given, when he was present in court and his passing into custody of the sheriff, the court cannot, without the knowledge of the sureties, upon granting him a new trial, permit him to go at large under the former bond.

(January 14, 1909.)

Case Note. — Effect of granting new trial after a conviction, to extend the liability of accused's bond.

There is but little direct authority upon this question, and there appears to be no other case which presents the same condition as is presented in MILLER v. STATE, viz., the effect of granting a new trial to extend the liability of accused's bail after the bondsmen have surrendered the accused into the hands of the sheriff. There are, however, a few cases which involve the liability of the accused's bail after a new trial has been granted in which the accused had not been surrendered by the bondsmen.

Thus, in Wells v. State, 21 Tex. App. 594, 2 S. W. 806, it was held that, when a judgment of conviction is reversed, the recognizance given on appeal has served its purpose and is functus officio, the bail bond or original recognizance of the defendant still has full force and effect, and it is upon such obligation, and not upon his recognizance on appeal, that he is bound. To the same effect was the decision in Ex parte Guffee, 8 Tex. App. 409, where the court said: "The question seems to be fully settled in favor of 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Walker County in favor of the State in a proceeding by scire facias to enforce a forfeited recognizance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. D. Acuff, for appellants:

The sureties' liability on the bond ended when the defendant was convicted and taken in custody.

Hawk v. State, 84 Ala. 466, 4 So. 690; Ex parte Williams, 114 Ala. 29, 22 So. 446.

Mr. Alexander M. Garber, Attorney General for the State.

Denson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding by scire facias against bail on a forfeited recognizance. The defendants, in answer to the scire facias, showed that their principal, at the term of the court previous to the one at which the judgment nisi was entered, was tried and convicted of the offense against which, for his enlargement, the bond was given. The principal was present in court when the verdict of guilty was returned and the judgment of conviction thereupon was entered, and at that time he was taken into custody by the sheriff and placed in jail under said conviction. At a subsequent day during that term, and while he was so in custody, the court, on the defendant's motion, set aside the verdict and judgment of guilt, and granted defendant a new trial, at the same time ordering that defendant be held under his former bond (the one here in question) until discharged by due process the applicant by those provisions of our Codes which prescribe that, where the court of appeals awards a new trial to the defendant, the cause shall stand as it would have stood in case the new trial had been granted by the court below; and the effect of granting a new trial in the court below is to place the cause in the same position in which it was before any trial had taken place. In cases of mistrial, new trial, or reversal, the defendant is remanded by the law to the custody of his sureties, and their surrender of his person for purposes of trial does not operate, in either case, as a discharge of their liability upon the recognizance or bond."

And in Jenkins v. State, 45 Tex. Crim. Rep. 253, 76 S. W. 464, it was held that, upon the reversal of a judgment of conviction in the second trial, the defendant was entitled to his liberty under the original bond, which was executed upon the jury's disagreeing in the first trial.

Under an earlier statute, it was held that the recognizance given by the defendant on appeal could be forfeited in the trial court after the judgment of conviction had been reversed and the cause remanded by the ap of law. The sureties on the bond knew nothing of the order of the court, and took no part in procuring it. The court held that these facts presented no sufficient reason for setting aside the judgment nisi, and made it absolute. The sureties appeal, and assign this ruling as one of the grounds of error.

In Ex parte Williams, 114 Ala. 29, 22 So. 446, it was held that, upon the reversal of a judgment of conviction, the defendant, who at the time of his conviction and sentence was out on bond, was not entitled to release from custody by virtue of that bond; and a petition for habeas corpus to be released on the bond was refused. In the course of the opinion in that case the court said: "Whenever a party is convicted and sentenced, he is no longer in the custody of his bail, but is in the custody of the proper officer of the law, and the bail are thereby discharged by the operation of law without a formal order to that effect." Upon the word "sentenced," or upon the fact that the court pronounced sentence on the defendant, it is sought by the attorney general to differentiate that case from the one in judgment. The court, further on in that opinion, said: "The mere appearance of the defendant at court for trial, or his presence during trial, or a mistrial, will not operate to discharge the bail. The obligation of a proper bail bond binds the sureties, at least, until after the verdict of the jury; but, when the sentence of the law is pronounced, the officer of the law is charged with its due execution. The bail have no further control over the custody of their principal, and cannot be longer held responsible." It was also said: "The bail bond became functus by the trial and sentence."

Hawk v. State, 84 Ala. 466, 4 So. 690, peNate court. Weaver v. State, 43 Tex. 386; Riviere v. State, 7 Tex. App. 55.

In State v. Heed, 62 Mo. 561, it was held that it was the duty of the defendant, upon his appeal being sustained and the cause remanded for a new trial, to appear in court and submit himself to trial; and a failure so to do was a breach of his recognizance on appeal.

In Ex parte Williams, 114 Ala. 29, 22 So. 446, a defendant who had previously been released upon bail was tried and sentenced to imprisonment. Upon a reversal of the judgment and the granting of a new trial, he attempted by means of habeas corpus to secure his release upon his former bail; but it was held that that bail bond had become functus officio by the trial and sentence. This decision necessarily implies, of course, that the bondsmen would not be liable if the court, for any reason, had granted the accused his liberty, and he failed to present himself for a new trial.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

was one where the defendant in a criminal case, on bond, absconded during the progress of the trial and before the jury returned a verdict. It was there said that the statute "declares that the undertaking of bail binds them for the appearance of the defendant 'until he is discharged by law.' This discharge can take place after the trial is begun, in the absence of a surrender by the sureties, only by an order of discharge based on a nolle prosequi of the indictment, a verdict of acquittal, or a verdict of conviction, followed by the sheriff's taking custody of the defendant by the implied or express order of the court, which includes any necessary custody taken to prevent his escape. The obligation, therefore, ordinarily binds the sureties for the continued appearance of the defendant during every stage of the trial, from the time it is entered on at least until the rendition of the verdict of the jury." Ibid. In Cook v. State, 91 Ala. 53, 8 So. 686, the defendant appeared and continued his presence in court until the jury retired to consider their verdict in his case, whereupon he absconded; and it was sought by his bail to avoid a judgment absolute. The court said of the pleas setting up these facts: "The pleas were fatally defective. Disclosing that the trial had been entered upon, they should have disclosed, further, that the defendant had remained in attendance to respond to the judgment that should result therefrom, or that the sureties were discharged by reason of the defendant being taken in custody." By these authorities it seems to be established, beyond cavil, that, when the principal is taken into custody by the proper officer, he is no longer in the custody of the bail, and the bail are discharged.

In this case the principal was convicted of a felony. He was present at the rendi-

A few cases may be noticed which, although not involving the effect of a new trial, do present a somewhat analogous condition.

Thus, in State use of Independence County v. Glenn, 40 Ark. 332, it was held that, when bail has once been exonerated by a judgment in favor of defendant, reversal for error does not revive the liability.

And in People v. McReynolds, 102 Cal. 308, 36 Pac. 590, a defendant who had been at liberty on bail was, at the beginning of the trial, ordered into the custody of the sheriff. This was held to be an exoneration of the bail, and a vacation of the order did not, by operation of law, restore the defendant to the custody of the bondsmen.

Where a demurrer to an indictment was sustained, and the defendant permitted to go without bail, it was held, in State v. Murphy, 10 Gill & J. 365, that a reversal of the judgment on the demurrer would not revive the liability on the bond.

tion of the verdict and judgment of the court on the verdict; and, this being true, it was the duty of the sheriff to take him into custody. While there was no express order of the court that he should do so, there is, under such circumstances, always an implied order that the sheriff shall take custody of the defendant; and the defendant was as legally in the custody of the sheriff as if the bail had delivered him, under the statute (Code 1907, § 6351), into such custody. It is the surrendering of the defendant into the custody of the sheriff that exonerates bail under the statute; and if, under a judgment of conviction of the offense charged, the sheriff rightfully secures custody of the defendant, it must follow that the defendant is as rightfully withdrawn from the custody of his bail, so far as that offense is concerned, as if they had surrendered him. Ex parte Chandler, 114 Ala. 8, 22 So. 285. From these considerations it is manifestly true that, if the defendant, after his conviction and before granting of the new trial, had escaped from the jail or the custody of the sheriff, no liability would have attached to the sureties on the bond.

The defendant having been legally withdrawn from the custody of his bail, the question then is: Did the granting of a new trial and the making of the order by the court that he be held under the bond revive the sureties' liability? We can see no difference in principle between the status of sureties on a bail bond after the judgment of conviction against their principal has been reversed, and that after the judgment has been annulled on motion for a new trial. The judgment in either case is set aside and held for naught. State v. Glenn, 40 Ark. 332; State v. Murphy, 10 Gill & J. 365. It was the taking of the prisoner from the custody of the bail, and transferring him to that of the sheriff, that released the sureties (State v. Murmann, 124 Mo. 502, 28 S. W. 2); and, being released, the court could not, without their consent, revive their liability by simply ordering that "the defendant be held under his present bond." That would be the making of a contract, for the sureties and without their consent, by the court.

There is, under the facts of this case, no liability against the sureties on the bond, and the circuit court erred in not so holding. The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and judgment will be here rendered for the defendants.

Reversed and rendered.

Haralson, Simpson, and Anderson, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied February 5, 1909.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

JOHN R. BOOTH, Trustee, etc., of George W. Humphry, Appt.,
v.

RALPH PRETE.

(81 Conn. 636, 71 Atl. 938.)

Bankruptcy — deposit account — set off.

The set-off by a bank against a depositor's account of a note which it bona fide holds against him is not a transfer or preference within the provisions of the bankruptcy act; and it will therefore be upheld in favor of both the bank and the indorser from whom the note was received, although made within four months of the time the depositor becomes bankrupt.

(February 16, 1909.)

Case Note. — Set-off by bank against bankrupt's deposit as a preference within the bankruptcy law.

The doctrine of BOOTH v. PRETE, that it is not an unlawful preference within the bankruptcy law for a bank to charge past-due notes bona fide held by it to the account of the maker, is in harmony with the other cases on the question, both as to a preference which could be avoided by a trustee and a preference which, unless surrendered, would bar the preferred creditor from filing a claim.

The foregoing doctrine was authoritatively settled in New York County Nat. Bank v. Massey, 192 U. S. 138, 48 L. ed. 380, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 199, which held that it did not amount to an unlawful preference which would prevent a bank from filing its claim against the bankrupt's estate without first surrendering a deposit which it had credited to a past-due note of the depositors, with knowledge of the insolvency, even though substantially all of the deposits, although made in the usual course of business, were made a few days prior to bankruptcy, and when the makers were hopelessly insolvent. The court reasoned that a deposit of money to one's credit in a bank did not operate to diminish the estate of a depositor, for when he parted with the money he created at the same time on the part of the bank an obligation to pay the amount of the deposit as soon as the depositor saw fit to draw a check against it, and hence it was not a transfer of property as a payment, pledge, mortgage, gift, or security. It was, however, said: "It is true that it creates a debt which, if the creditor may set it off under § 68, amounts to permitting a creditor of that class to obtain more from the bankrupt's estate than creditors who are not in the same situation, and do not hold any debts of the bankrupt subject to set-off. But this does not, in our opinion, operate to enlarge the scope of the statute defining preferences so as to prevent set-off in cases coming within the terms of § 68a. If this argument were to prevail, it would, in cases of insolvency, defeat the APPEAL by complainant as trustee in a bankruptcy from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for New Haven County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover from the defendant the amount paid him on a certain promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. Birney Tuttle, for appellant:

Payments by bankrupts within four months prior to the filing of petition in bankruptcy upon his indorsed notes, which the indorsers would have paid if he had not, constitute a preference.

Swartz v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 54 C. C. A. 387, 117 Fed. 1.

Courts of equity will not allow a set-off of a joint debt against a separate debt, or of a separate debt against a joint debt. Scammon v. Kimball, 92 U. S. 367, 23 L. ed. 485.

The payment by the bank was a voidable preference.

Re George M. Hill Co. 66 L.R.A. 68, 64 C. C. A. 561, 130 Fed. 318; Bartholow v. Bean, 18 Wall. 635, 21 L. ed. 866; Re Lyon, 58 C. C. A. 143, 121 Fed. 725; Re W. W. Mills Co. 162 Fed. 56; Lynch v. Bronson, 80 Conn. 566, 69 Atl. 538; Western Tie & Timber Co. v. Brown, 196 U. S. 509, 49 L. ed. 574, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 339; Wilson v. City Bank, 17 Wall. 473, 21 L. ed. 723.

Messrs. Matthew A. Reynolds and J. F. Donovan, for appellee:

A bank has the right to set off a deposit right of set-off recognized and enforced in the law, as every creditor of the bankrupt holding a claim against the estate subject to reduction to the full amount of a debt due the bankrupt receives a preference in the fact that, to the extent of the set-off, he is paid in full."

But where, on the day a bank suspended and went into bankruptcy, the manager of a clearing house, of which it was a member, deposited money to its credit in another bank in which it carried an account, which was at the time overdrawn, and the money was deposited and received with knowledge of the insolvency of the depositor, and for the purpose of covering the overdraft, it amounts to a fraudulent preference. Rector v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 200 U. S. 420, 50 L. ed. 533, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 294.

Following the doctrine of the Massey Case, Tomlinson v. Bank of Lexington, 76 C. C. A. 400, 145 Fed. 824, held that the charging by a bank of an overdraft to the debtor's deposit, made in the usual course of business, did not amount to a preference which would require the bank to surrender the deposit as a condition of filing its claim against the bankrupt's estate for the balance due. To the same effect as to the right to charge past-due notes to a depositor's account, are Re Scherzer, 130 Fed. 631, and Re George M. Hill Co. 66 L.R.A. 68, 64 C. C. A. 561, 130 Fed. 315.

On the authority of the Massey Case, Irish v. Citizens' Trust Co. 163 Fed. 880, held that, although checks on an account in a bank, payable to the bank, to apply on demand notes bona fide held by the bank, were drawn by the debtor to prefer the bank as a creditor, and had that effect, yet the debtor's trustee in bankruptcy could not recover the deposit for the benefit of the estate, although the deposits were made with the intention on the part of the debtors to prefer the bank, the bank not having reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent and intended to prefer it, either by making the deposit or drawing the checks. In reaching this conclusion, the court reasoned that, as the deposits were actually applied by the depositor and received by the bank on notes then due and payable, the voluntary action of the debtor in turning the deposit over should not place the bank in a worse position than it would have been in had it exercised its right to charge the notes to the debtor's account; that the mere fact that it did not do this because the deposit was turned over voluntarily, did not forfeit the bank's right of set-off. It will be noted that this was an action by the trustee to recover the deposit on the theory that payment in this manner was a preference, and it was therefore necessary for him to prove notice to the bank, or reasonable cause on its part to believe that the debtor intended to prefer it.

The Massey Case was also followed as authority in Steinhardt v. National Park Bank, 120 App. Div. 255, 105 N. Y. Supp. 23, which held that a bank was not liable to a trustee for his bankrupt's deposit account, which, after insolvency, had been applied on the bankrupt's demand notes due to the bank, which in amount exceeded the deposit, although such indebtedness was secured by collateral exceeding in value the amount of the indebtedness. This conclusion was reached on the theory that the amount owing by the bank for moneys on deposit is deemed in law to have been applied upon the indebtedness of the bankrupt. To the same effect is Hooks v. Gila Valley Bank & T. Co. (Ariz.) 100 Pac. 806.

West v. Bank of Lahoma, 16 Okla. 328, 85 Pac. 469, holds that it does not amount to a preference which a trustee in bankruptcy may avoid, for a bank which loaned money to the bankrupt prior to his bankruptcy, taking his note, secured by chattel mortgage, therefor, to charge the note at its maturity to the bankrupt's deposit account, which consisted of the balance of the loan not checked out, since this mutual transaction brought about the exact condition mentioned in § 68a, a case of mutual debts and mutual credits between the estate of the bankrupt and the creditor. The court reasoned that, after the adjudication the bank would have been entitled to have set off the

to the credit of a bankrupt against the indebtedness of the bankrupt to the bank.

25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 519; Re Myers, 99 Fed. 691; Loveland, Bankr. 3d ed. 373; New York County Nat. Bank v. Massey, 192 U. S. 138, 48 L. ed. 380, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; Re George M. Hill Co. 66 L.R.A. 68, 64 C. C. A. 561, 130 Fed. 315; Re Scherzer, 130 Fed. 631; Re Philip Semmer Glass Co. 67 C. C. A. 551, 135 Fed. 77.

Thayer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, as the trustee of the bankrupt estate of George W. Humphry, brings this action to recover from the defendant $464.61, the amount of a deposit which the bankrupt had in the Merchants' National amount of the bankrupt's deposit against the amount due on his note to the bank, and to have the balance allowed against his estate; and that, this being the right of the bank in the event of the depositor's bankruptcy, it had not put itself in any worse position by making the transfer of the deposit in payment of its debt by the adjudication in bankruptcy.

Also following the Massey Case, Habegger v. First Nat. Bank, 94 Minn. 445, 110 Am. St. Rep. 379, 103 N. W. 216, held that a bank could apply on a past-due note a deposit standing to the credit of the maker, although at the time it knew that the maker was insolvent, where the deposit was made in the due course of business, and not with any intent to prefer the bank as a creditor. The court said that, upon this state of facts, the application of the deposit upon the note did not amount to an unlawful preference under the terms of the bankruptcy act, which would authorize a trustee of the bankrupt to recover the deposit on the theory that it was a preference.

This doctrine was also applied by the courts before the question was settled by the Massey Case. Thus, in Re Myers, 99 Fed. 691, the doctrine was enunciated that a deposit in a bank upon the bankruptcy of a depositor became a security for and payment pro tanto of his liability to the bank by the operation of the law of mutual credits. Hence, the bank was entitled to retain the amount on deposit to the credit of the bankrupts, and apply it on the indebtedness of the bankrupts to the bank. Applying this doctrine, the court allowed the bank to amend its proof of claim so as to deduct therefrom the amount on deposit with it to the credit of the bankrupt at the time of his adjudication.

If the right to offset accrues prior to insolvency, it may be exercised after adjudication, when a demand is made on the bankrupt's estate for the balance after crediting the bankrupt's deposit, or it may be exercised when a demand is made by the trustee of the bankrupt for the deposit as the property of the bankrupt. In either case the exercise of the right does not amount to an un-

Bank of New Haven on March 17, 1908, and which was on that day applied by the bank in part payment of a note of the bankrupt payable on that day at the bank to the order of the defendant, and by him indorsed and discounted there. This application of the deposit was within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, and it is claimed that the action of the bank in making it worked a preference in favor of the defendant voidable by the trustee under § 60b of the United States bankruptcy law (Act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, 30 Stat. at L. 562 [U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3445]), as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, chap. 487, 32 Stat. at L. 799 (U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1907, p. 1031). If this claim is correct, the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

lawful preference which must be surrendered as a condition to filing a claim against the bankrupt's estate for the balance. Re Elsasser, 7 Am. Bankr. Rep. 215.

Re Little, 110 Fed. 621, also held that it did not amount to an unlawful preference which would require a bank to surrender a deposit as a condition of filing its claim against the bankrupt's estate, for it to have credited on its indebtedness a deposit in favor of the bankrupt, made in the usual course of business.

A contrary conclusion was, however, reached in Re Kellar, 110 Fed. 348, as to the right of a bank, without notice of the insolvency of the depositor, to apply deposits made in the usual course of business to an overdraft of the depositor. It was held that such application amounted to an unlawful preference, which the bank must surrender as a condition to filing its claim against the bankrupt's estate. The doctrine of this case is undoubtedly overruled by the Massey Case.

A bank cannot charge to a debtor's account, or receive a check on his account in payment of a note held by it not yet due, without it amounting to a preference within the bankruptcy law, which the trustee may avoid. Irish v. Citizens' Trust Co. supra.

Ridge Ave. Bank v. Studheim, 76 C. C. A. 362, 145 Fed. 798, although in harmony with the Irish Case in holding that the payment to a bank of a note not yet due by a depositor giving a check on his account was a preference and could be avoided by the trustee, did not, however, base the decision on that fact, but rather upon the proposition that the doctrine of set-off would not apply to a voluntary payment of a deposit. On this point the reasoning of the court is apparently opposed to that followed in the Irish Case. In distinguishing a voluntary turning over of a deposit from a set-off, the court said: "This is not the case of a deposit remaining to the credit of a bankrupt's estate at the time of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, and which, under certain circumstances, and in the absence of collusion, might be the subject of set-off, but is rather that of a transfer to a bank of

The bank at the time of the application of the deposit was the owner of the note, having discounted it for the defendant, and was therefore a creditor of the bankrupt. It was also his debtor to the amount of his deposit. They were mutual debts, and subject to be set off against each other under § 68 of the bankruptcy act. New York County Nat. Bank v. Massey, 192 U. S. 138, 146, 48 L. ed. 380, 383, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 199; Re Scherzer (D. C.) 130 Fed. 631, 632; Re Philip Semmer Glass Co. 67 C. C. A. 551, 135 Fed. 77; Lowell v. International Trust Co. 86 C. C. A. 137, 158 Fed. 781, 784. Such set-off is not a transfer of property by the bankrupt within § 1, subdiv. 25, of the act, and does not give a preference within § 60a of the act. New York County Nat. Bank v. Massey, supra. The case last referred to distinguishes between cases like Pirie v. Chicago Title & T. Co. 182 U. S. 444, 45 L. ed. 1176, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906, and other cases cited by the plaintiff, where there was a payment by the bankrupt of his notes due at the bank, and cases like the present, where a bank, having a general deposit of the bankrupt, sets it off against his notes of which it is the owner. The payment of the note in the former case is a preference voidable against both the bank and the indorser who may have negotiated it. It changes the relations existing between the bank and the bankrupt. But in equity and under the statutes of this and other states, where there are mutual debts, the difference between them after one has been set off against the other is deemed to be the only sum really due. Section 68 of the bankruptcy law recognizes this and permits the set-off. The fact that the set-off in the present case was made by the bank prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition does not affect the question because it did only what the law would have done had the bank waited until the petition was filed. Re Scherzer, supra.

We are assuming that the transaction was bona fide. If the giving of the note and the application of it in disposing of the bankrupt's deposit was, as claimed by the plaintiff, a trick devised to appropriate the bankrupt's deposit to the defendant's benea portion of the bankrupt's estate by the bankrupt's own act prior to the bankruptcy, and which was accepted by the bank in partial payment of an unmatured claim, and concerning which transaction a jury has said that the bank had reasonable cause to believe at the time the payment was made that it was accepting a preference."

The doctrine that charging a past-due indebtedness by a bank to the debtor's deposit account does not amount to an unlawful preference, even though the depositor was bankrupt at the time, was also applied under the bankruptcy law of 1867. Thus, in Robinson v. Wisconsin M. & F. Ins. Co. Bank, 9 Bias. 117, Fed. Cas. No. 11,969, it was held that it was not an unlawful preference, which could be avoided by an assignee in bankruptcy, for a bank, with knowledge of the insolvency of the debtor, to accept a check upon his deposit account to cover his indebtedness. As to the effect of the fact that payment was voluntary, the court said: "There can be no doubt that, if the transaction as stated had not occurred between the parties, and the matter had been, subsequent to the adjudication in bankruptcy, brought to the court for adjustment, it would have directed an account between the parties to be stated, and would have ordered, as authorized by § 5073, one debt set off against the other. Disregarding matters of form which I deem immaterial, the question is whether the transaction between the parties was not in fact an exercise of the right of set-off within the meaning of the statute; and, if this be so, whether the court can declare it illegal, because the adjustment was thus made by the parties before the adjudication, instead of by the court after adjudication. Here was a plain case of mutual debts between the parties. Hardly a clearer case for application of the statute could arise."

To the same effect is Hough v. First Nat. Bank, 4 Biss. 349, Fed. Cas. No. 6,721.

To the same effect, also, is Re Petrie, 7 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 332, Fed. Cas. No. 11,040, as to the right of a bank to charge an unpaid draft to the acceptor's account, where the acceptor at the time was insolvent, which fact, however, was unknown to the bank.

In Winslow v. Bliss, 3 Lans. 220, it was held not to be a preference for a bank to charge a past-due note to the maker's deposit account, and deliver the note to the maker, who at the time was insolvent.

But in Re Warner, Fed. Cas. No. 17,177, in holding that a bankrupt was not entitled to his discharge in bankruptcy because he had transferred his deposit in a bank to it to apply on a note owned by the bank and not yet due, the court expressed the opinion that, while such a transaction was valid as between the parties, yet, that as between them on the one hand, and the other creditors on the other hand, it might constitute an unlawful preference under the bankruptcy law, and for that reason be void.

The conclusion of the court in First Nat. Bank v. Gish, 72 Pa. 13, seems also to be opposed to the doctrine that it does not amount to a preference for a bank to apply, either with or without the consent of the depositor, his deposit account on his bona fide indebtedness to it, as it was held that a trustee in bankruptcy, under the bankruptcy law of 1867, could recover a bankrupt depositor's deposit from the bank, although at the time he was owing it. The reason for the decision does not appear, the matter being disposed of in a word or two.

fit, it would not stand. But the finding does not warrant the claim. We must treat it, as the trial court has done, as a bona fide transaction. So treated, the set-off did not work a preference in favor of either the bank or the defendant.

There is no error.

The other Judges concur.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

OCEAN STEAMSHIP COMPANY OF SAVANNAH, Plff. in Err.,
v.
SAVANNAH LOCOMOTIVE WORKS & SUPPLY COMPANY.

(— Ga. —, 63 S. E. 577.)

Sea carrier — duty — discrimination.

1. The common-law obligation of a carrier by sea is to receive goods which it is able and accustomed to carry, in the order of their tender, without preference to any shipper.

Same — extent.

2. At common law a carrier's duty to carry was limited to its facilities for transportation. A navigation company, whose charter confers no power of eminent domain, nor imposes any public duties, is not to be classed as a public or quasi public institution, and is not bound to provide sufficient facilities to carry all goods which may be offered to it. It may decline to receive goods for transportation in excess of its carriage capacity.

Same — rights and duties — when not public.

3. A carrier, not a public institution, may select the character of the goods it proposes to carry, or discontinue to carry a particular commodity.

Same — duty — discrimination.

4. A common carrier by sea cannot lawfully reject some goods which it professes to carry, and afterwards receive and transport other goods, where at the time of the tender there is room in the vessel for the rejected goods, and the safety of the vessel will in no wise be imperiled.

Same — advance bookings — discrimination.

5. The carrier's common-law obligation of indifferently serving the public in the receipt and transportation of goods does not inhibit a carrier by sea from making "bookings" of freight; that is, from making specific arrangements for the transportation of goods by a particular vessel, in advance of its sailing day, provided this privilege is indifferently extended to all patrons, or if the grant of this privilege to shippers of one commodity does not interfere with the carrier's discharge of duty to the shippers of other commodities with respect to the receipt and transportation of their goods. The same rules which govern a carrier by sea in the reception of goods for transportation apply to the carrier's engagements to transport by a particular vessel, or within a specified limit of time.

Same — discrimination — injunctive relief.

6. There was evidence authorizing a finding that the defendant discriminated against the plaintiff in the reception and transportation of lumber tendered for shipment, and the court did not abuse his discretion in granting an ad interim injunction.

(January 15, 1909.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Chatham County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to enjoin defendant as a common carrier from practising certain alleged discriminations. Affirmed.

Statement by Evans, P. J.:

The Ocean Steamship Company is a common carrier operating three vessels between the ports of Savannah, Georgia, and Boston, Massachusetts, and six vessels between the ports of Savannah and New York. The Savannah Locomotive Works & Supply Company is a corporation engaged in buying and selling lumber to persons living in Boston and other eastern points. In September and October, 1907, there occurred at the port of Savannah a congestion of cotton and lumber shipments destined from Savannah to Boston. The plaintiff brought suit against the carrier to enjoin certain discriminations against it, alleged to be as follows: (1) The carrier received and transported, in preference to the lumber offered it by the plaintiff, the lumber of other shippers of later tender, where the same was offered it under through bills of lading issued by railroads at points in the interior. (2) It received and transported, in preference to the plaintiff's lumber, cotton and naval stores of later tender offered by other shippers. (3) It contracted with persons deal-

Headnotes by EVANS, P. J.

Note. — Research has failed to disclose any decision as to the right of a carrier by water to refuse transportation of goods tendered, other than those which hold that it is the duty of such a carrier, where holding itself out to the public as a common carrier, to serve the public indifferently. The distinction taken in the case reported between such a carrier and a carrier by rail, with respect to the duty of providing sufficient facilities to carry all goods which may be offered, seems to be well taken, the duty thus imposed upon railroads being beyond that imposed upon common carriers generally by the common law.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ing in cotton in advance of the sailing day of a vessel that it would carry the cotton thus agreed to be transported on a particular steamer, but declined to make in advance of the sailing of a vessel a similar contract with the plaintiff or other lumber merchants to carry lumber on a particular steamer, and the carrier transported the cotton of other patrons in compliance with its contract, and refused to receive and transport the plaintiff's lumber of prior tender. The steamship company denied that it discriminated against the plaintiff in favor of other shippers. It denied that it discriminated against lumber in favor of cotton and other articles of commerce in the facilities afforded for transportation. It admitted that it made with shippers of cotton specific engagements in advance for the shipment of cotton on particular vessels, where such cotton was intended for foreign shipment by way of New York, and that it refused to "book" ahead lumber, because it was unable, in the course of its business as a common carrier, to contract reservations for future shipments of lumber by its vessels for the reasons set out in the answer. On the interlocutory hearing the defendant was enjoined from "booking" future shipments of cotton and other articles of commerce for persons dealing in the same until it places plaintiff upon a substantially similar basis for booking lumber for future shipment, wherever the storage capacity and safety of the ships permit such equality of basis of booking; from receiving or carrying any lumber or other articles of commerce of similar character and similarly circumstanced to defendant for shipment until it receives and carries lumber of the plaintiff tendered to defendant at a prior date, the storage capacity and safety of defendant's ship permitting; and from receiving or carrying any articles of commerce similarly circumstanced for any other person until it carries for plaintiff lumber tendered to it for shipment prior to the date of the tender of said articles of commerce for shipment, the storage capacity and safety of defendant's ships permitting, and from refusing to receive and carry the lumber of plaintiff in the order in which it is tendered for shipment, provided the storage capacity and safety of the ship permits such reception and carriage."

Messrs. Lawton & Cunningham, with Messrs. H. C. Cunningham and H. W. Johnson, for plaintiff in error:

A common carrier by water is not bound to provide transportation for all traffic offered.

1 Hutchinson, Carr. § 60; State ex rel. McComb v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 71 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Neb. 593, 99 N. W. 309; 2 Hutchinson, Carr. § 495.

Discrimination as between different commodities is lawful; only undue and unjust discrimination is unlawful.

Central R. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co. 122 Ga. 646, 69 L.R.A. 119, 50 S. E. 473; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 179; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 684, 28 L. ed. 297, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; 2 Hutchinson, Carr. § 495; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. State, 73 Ark. 373, 84 S. W. 503; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Alabama Midland R. Co. 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 685, 21 C. C. A. 51, 41 U. S. App. 453, 74 Fed. 723; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 184, 40 L. ed. 935, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 391, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 700; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 145 U. S. 263, 33 L. ed. 699, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 92, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 844, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 192, 43 Fed. 37; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 198, 40 L. ed. 940, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 405, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 666; State ex rel. McComb v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. supra; United States ex rel. Pitcairn Coal Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 154 Fed. 108; Harp v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. 118 Fed. 169, 61 C. C. A. 405, 125 Fed. 445; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Wolcott, 141 Ind. 267, 50 Am. St. Rep. 320, 39 N. E. 451; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Oppenheimer, 64 Ark. 271, 44 L.R.A. 353, 43 S. W. 150; E. L. Rogers & Co. v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 12 Inters. Com. Rep. 309; Wright v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 5.

No discrimination arose from the refusal to book lumber.

Van Zile, Bailments & Carriers, § 550; Southern P. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U. S. 537, 50 L. ed. 586, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 330; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Wilson, 132 Ind. 517, 18 L.R.A. 109, 32 N. E. 311; Central R. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co. 122 Ga. 650, 69 L.R.A. 119, 50 S. E. 473; Railroad Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 10 Inters. Com. Rep. 173; Fred G. Clark Co. v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 11 Inters. Com. Rep. 576; Miner v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 11 Inters. Com. Rep. 427.

Messrs. Osborne & Lawrence and Hitch & Denmark, for defendant in error:

All common carriers are bound to serve the public indifferently, and to receive and carry all freight tendered and in the order of its tender.

Hilton Lumber Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 141 N. C. 171, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 232, 53 S. E. 823; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 177; Beale & W. Railroad Rate

Regulation, § 175; McDuffee v. Portland & R. R. Co. 52 N. H. 430, 13 Am. Rep. 72; Ballentine v. North Missouri R. Co. 40 Mo. 491, 93 Am. Dec. 315; 6 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 372; Hutchinson, Carr. § 511; Kates v. Atlanta Baggage & Cab Co. 107 Ga. 644, 46 L.R.A. 431, 34 S. E. 372; New England Exp. Co. v. Maine, C. R. Co. 57 Me. 188, 2 Am. Rep. 32; Union P. R. Co. v. Goodridge, 149 U. S. 690, 37 L. ed. 902, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 970; Atlanta & C. Air-Line R. Co. v. Holcombe, 76 Ga. 590; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. State, 84 Ark. 150, 104 S. W. 1106; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 279, 23 L. ed. 349.

Evans, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. It was admitted in the answer of the defendant that it was a common carrier by sea, operating a certain number of vessels between the port of Savannah, Georgia, and the ports of Boston, Massachusetts, and New York City, and accustomed to carry the particular commodity offered it by the plaintiff, and against which it is alleged to have discriminated. From the earliest times it has been considered that a common carrier exercises a public employment, with public duties to perform. He cannot, like a merchant, receive or reject a customer at pleasure. He is bound to serve the public indifferently, and this duty with respect to the commonness of service was regarded by Judge Nisbet as the distinguishing trait of a common carrier. Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 349, 46 Am. Dec. 393. In the case just cited it was said that "a common carrier is bound to convey the goods of any person offering to pay his hire, unless his carriage be already full, or the risk sought to be imposed upon him extraordinary, or unless the goods be of a sort which he cannot convey, or is not in the habit of conveying." If the carrier be under obligation to accept goods which he proposes to carry, and there is room for them in his vehicle, the time for acceptance is when the goods are tendered. It therefore follows that all applying have an equal right to have their goods transported in the order of their tender. Indeed, the proposition is too well established at this late day to require citation of authorities. 6 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 372; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1772; Hutchinson, Carr. § 512.

Counsel for the plaintiff in error contend that at common law a carrier has the right to discriminate in the facilities offered to shippers of different commodities so long as shippers of the same commodities are all treated alike, and that this right of discrimination justifies a preference given to shippers of cotton over the shippers of lumber 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) in the order of acceptance of these commodities for transportation. We have examined the cases cited to support this contention, as well as many others on the same general subject; and we find in all of them which concede to a carrier the right of discrimination among shippers a recognition of the principle that the right to discriminate only arises when the carrier has fulfilled his obligations to the shipper affected by the alleged discriminatory conduct. We do not think any case which has come under our notice goes further than to hold that, when a carrier extends a favor to one shipper, such favor is not to be regarded as an unjust discrimination so long as the carrier, by granting the favor, does not deny to other shippers any right which they may demand under the law, and the favored shipper is not given any material advantage in competition in business with them. A brief reference will be made to some typical cases to illustrate the accuracy of our analysis. There are a considerable number of decisions which hold that at common law the carrier was under no duty to charge every patron the same rate of carriage; that his duty was to charge a reasonable rate, and, if the rate charged was reasonable, one shipper could not lawfully complain that other shippers were charged a less rate. Johnson v. Pensacola & P. R. Co. 16 Fla. 623, 26 Am. Rep. 731; Ragan v. Aiken, 9 Lea, 609, 42 Am. Rep. 684. Some courts hold that, inasmuch as a carrier has the right to demand of all shippers the prepayment of his freight charge, it was not undue discrimination to exact of one shipper payment of the carriage charge in advance of carrying the freight, and collect it from other shippers at the end of the transportation. Randall v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 108 N. C. 612, 13 S. E. 137. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that railroad companies may transport the traffic of one express company and refuse to transport the traffic of another express company over their lines because they "are not obliged either by the common law or by usage to do more as express carriers than to provide the public at large with reasonable express accommodation; and they need not, in the absence of a statute, furnish to all independent express companies equal facilities for doing an express business upon their passenger trains." Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 791, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 542, 628. In these cases the complaining shippers were accorded by the carriers every legal right which they could lawfully exact, and their complaint was not that the carriers were remiss in any duties to them, but that they were entitled to share in the favors extended to other shippers. In the case in hand the complaint is that the carrier denies the plaintiff a substantial legal right, that the carrier owes it a duty to accept its lumber in the order of its tender, and that the carrier refuses to perform this duty and is prevented from performing it by giving a preference to the shippers of cotton. The gist of the complaint is not so much that favors are shown the shippers of cotton, as it is that the bestowal of these favors interferes with the steamship company in discharging its duty to the plaintiff by accepting its commodity in the order of its tender. We are also cited to the case of Central R. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co. 122 Ga. 646, 69 L.R.A. 119, 50 S. E. 473, as sustaining the contention that a carrier may discriminate in the facilities offered to shippers of different commodities so long as shippers of the same commodity are treated alike. In that case the shipper claimed that the railroad company delivered to his competitor in the same commodity cars for unloading at his competitor's private warehouse, and refused to deliver to the plaintiff at his private warehouse cars to be forwarded over the railroad of another company; and the refusal of the railroad company in this respect was alleged to be a breach of a certain rule of the railroad commission. It was held that the rule of the commission did not apply to discrimination in commodities. In the discussion of the points involved, it clearly appeared that the alleged discrimination did not consist in the denial of any right to the plaintiff which the carrier was under duty to grant, but that the cause of action in this particular hinged upon the refusal of the carrier to deliver its cars at the plaintiff's warehouse for shipment over the railroad of another company solely because it switched cars for unloading to the private warehouse of a competitor.

Much stress is put upon an adjudication of the supreme court of Arkansas in the case of Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Oppenheimer, 64 Ark. 271, 44 L.R.A. 353, 43 S. W. 150. This was a suit for a penalty under an Arkansas statute prohibiting discrimination by railroads. It appeared that the plaintiffs were merchants at a non-competitive station on the carrier's line, and that the carrier failed to furnish sufficient cars to move the cotton from that station, while sufficient cars were furnished a competitive point. The supreme court reversed the judgment of the trial court on the merits of the case, and it was said that "the complaint of unjust discrimination grew out of the unusually large cotton crop of 1891. Sufficient transportation was not furnished them because applicants had not anticipated it." The complaint was 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) not that the railroad company refused to accept the plaintiff's cotton, but that it failed to provide sufficient cars for its prompt transportation. Besides, that case is controlled by the principle that a railroad company as a public institution is bound to provide only such facilities for the transportation of freight which might ordinarily be anticipated, and, as the same number of cars were furnished in 1891 as had been furnished in previous years, which were sufficient to move the freight at plaintiff's station, the railroad had discharged its duty, and in the regulation of its business it could devote its other cars to meeting the demands of its business at competitive points. From an examination of the authorities we conclude that by the common law a common carrier, not only is obliged to receive and carry such goods as he is able to carry and customarily does carry, but he is required to carry for all patrons alike, all applying have an equal right to have their goods transported in the order of their application. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 63 Tex. 322.

2-4. At common law a carrier's duty to receive goods was limited to his facilities for transportation. The owner of a single ship may hold himself out to the public to carry certain goods for hire. As to the goods he proposes to carry, he is a public carrier; but he is under no obligation to provide other ships because his vessel is inadequate to transport all goods which may be offered him. Such a carrier does not owe to the public all the duties imposed by the law on railroad companies and similar public institutions to furnish adequate transportation facilities for all goods which may be tendered. Railroad companies are public institutions, and are granted certain exclusive franchises and rights which naturally impose correlative duties. They are invested with the power of condemnation, by the exercise of which sovereign right they acquire an exclusive privilege to carry on their business over the highway constructed by them. They are endowed with special and unusual powers, with an express view to their rendering to the public adequate service. The conferment of these unusual powers raises an obligation, not only to serve the public impartially, but to serve the public efficiently. Upon them the law imposes the obligation to furnish sufficient facilities for the reasonably prompt transportation of goods tendered for carriage; and they are bound to provide sufficient cars for transporting, without unreasonable delay, the usual and ordinary quantity of freight offered to them, or which might reasonably and ordinarily be expected. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 167. A navigation company like the defendant, which receives no franchise from the state to use the open sea, and which enjoys no monopoly or right of eminent domain, owes no duty to the public to furnish adequate facilities to transport all of the traffic of the ports of its termini. It is under no obligation to buy other ships because it does not undertake to carry any more goods than its vessels will safely accommodate. If there is a demand for more ships, the commercial necessities will regulate the deficiency in transportation service, either by voluntary enlargement of the facilities of existing ship lines or the establishment of new ones. A carrier, not a public or quasi public institution may select the class of goods which he proposes to carry. Whether the right of selection may include the right to limit the quantity of any commodity he proposes to carry, provided he gives public notice of the limitation, is not before us.

57 The principal complaint of the complaining lumber dealer is against the system of booking cotton for a particular vessel in advance of its sailing day. It is said that this practice results in accumulating large quantities of lumber and cotton at the port of Savannah beyond the immediate carrying capacity of the steamship company's vessels, and that "booked" cotton is transported in preference to lumber tendered subsequent to the booking, but prior to the arrival and receipt of the "booked" cotton, and that the steamship company refuses to accord to lumber dealers the privilege of booking their commodity. The system of "booking," as explained in the record, is the practice of the steamship company to make specific engagements with shippers of cotton for a reservation of space for cotton to be shipped on a particular vessel in advance of its sailing day. If the steamship company indifferently extended this privilege to all its patrons and to all commodities, we do not think it would violate any duty which it owed the public. The basal principle of the requirement of the common law that a common carrier must convey the goods of all persons offering to pay his hire, unless his carriage be already full, is that there should be no unjust preference given one member of the public over another. The practice of making specific engagements in advance of the shipment, if the privilege is indifferently extended to all, is but another form of acceptance of goods tendered in the order of their application. The same impartiality of service is rendered when public notice is given by the carrier that he will "book" the freight of all patrons, and reserves space for the goods engaged to be transported as if he had received the goods of the shipper in the order of their tender. But, when a carrier reserves space in his carriage for a favored patron or a favored commodity, not perishable in its nature, and refuses to reserve space for another patron or commodity, he fails to afford that commonness of service which the law annexes as an incident to his business. The steamship company may discontinue to carry any particular commodity it desires, or it may voluntarily cease to do business as a common carrier and engage in the business of a special carrier; but, so long as it pursues the business of a common carrier, it is bound to render to the public the service which the law exacts of a common carrier.

6. The requirement of the common law that a common carrier must receive goods offered for transportation in the order of their tender cannot on principle be affected either by the place where the shipment originates or by the ultimate destination of the goods. There is no reason why the steamship company should prefer freight tendered in a car from one forwarding agency, and deny freight similarly tendered by another forwarding agency or shipper. If the steamship company desires an inland carrier to issue through bills of lading, it may do so subject to its obligations to receive and carry freight in the order of its tender. The mere fact that a particular commodity is destined to a foreign port cannot justify a carrier in giving a preference to it over the same or another commodity because the latter may be a domestic shipment. It is urged that in apportioning its space to the various commodities, according to the volume of freight at the port, no discrimination was shown by the steamship company against lumber shipments in favor of cotton or other articles of commerce. Some of the reasons advanced are that the steamships are built with a view to the packet trade, that lumber is bulky, and cannot be as expeditiously handled as cotton; that the vessels are advertised to sail on particular days, and to require a greater percentage of lumber to be carried than was carried would not enable the vessels to observe their sailing dates; that there is a congestion of freight and a larger percentage of lumber than of cotton is carried; that cotton moves only within three or four months of the year, whereas lumber moves evenly throughout the year; that the price of cotton is liable to fluctuation, while that of lumber is more constant; that cotton is the great staple crop of the state of Georgia, and that a larger number of the public is served by the prompt transportation of cotton to the preference of lumber. With respect to the contention that, if the steamship company accepted all the lumber which was tendered to it, its vessels could not sail at the advertised times, the evidence was in conflict. As previously indicated, the steamship company is under no duty to carry all the freight of the port of Savannah; so that the main question on the facts is whether cotton possesses such inherent qualities as to permit a preference to be given to that commodity over all other articles which the steamship company customarily carries. We fully appreciate the value of the South's great staple product, and are aware that for years the slogan has been that "cotton is king." But the great value of the cotton crop and the importance of its prompt transportation gives to that staple no imperial rights over the other products of this state. It is not perishable in its nature, and it will not be contended that its fluctuation in price is so violent that a delay in transportation would substantially destroy its value. On the whole, after a careful consideration, we think that, under the legal principles applicable to the facts of the case, there was no abuse of discretion in the grant of an ad interim injunction. The terms of the injunction did not extend to matters outside of pleadings, nor are they indefinite and uncertain.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur, except Fish, Ch. J., absent on account of sickness.

Petition for rehearing denied February 10 1909.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE STELTZ

v.

ARMORY COMPANY, Limited.

(15 Idaho, 551, 99 Pac. 98.)

Building contract. — acceptance — defects — waiver.

1. As a general rule, where the owner of a building accepts the same and takes possession thereof, and at the time of doing so the building is incomplete and contains patent and obvious defects, the acceptance will be deemed a waiver, and the contractor will be entitled to recover the amount earned on the contract.

Same — latent defects.

2. An acceptance of a building or structure that has been completed, or which contains latent defects either in the class or character of its workmanship or the quality of material used, will not be deemed a waiver of such latent defects; but, on the contrary, the owner may maintain his action against the contractor for breach of the contract at such time as he discovers the extent of the defects or after he has had reasonable time and opportunity, by due diligence, to have discovered the same.

Mechanics' lien — foreclosure — set-off — breach of contract.

3. Where a building has been completed, and the owner thereof has entered into possession of the same on the theory that the building is a completed structure, and he later discovers that the building was defectively constructed and not properly tied to the adjoining wall, and the front falls out, the owner may recover the damages thus incurred on account of breach of the contract as an offset against the contractor, who is seeking to foreclose his mechanics' lien for the construction of the building.

Building contract — acceptance — defect — knowledge — waiver.

4. The fact that the owner of a building went into possession thereof with knowledge that the building contained latent defects in its construction and inferior material will not prevent his claiming damages for such defects as an offset against the contractor's action to recover the contract price therefor, unless an express waiver is shown, or such other facts and circumstances as would amount to a waiver of damages.

Mechanics' lien — amount due.

5. Under the provisions of § 6 of the lien laws of this state (Sess. Laws 1899, p. 148), every person performing labor or furnishing material for a building or structure is entitled to a lien therefor; and the amount to be recovered under such lien is always measured by the amount found to be due him under his contract.

Same — set-off — necessity of pleading.

6. Where a building contract provides for a forfeiture of $5 per day for each day the owner is kept out of possession thereof after the day fixed by the contract for the completion of the building, such damages cannot be recovered by the owner in an action by the contractor to foreclose his lien, unless the same is affirmatively pleaded by way of defense or cross complaint.

(December 16, 1908.)

Case Note. — Taking possession of building with knowledge of defects as waiver thereof, as against contractor.

The reason which underlies the doctrine that the owner's taking possession of a building, though with knowledge of defects therein, will not prevent his claiming damages for such defects against the building contractor, is the same which governs the closely related question of the effect of the use of a building by the owner as an acceptance of work of construction or repair, which has heretofore been discussed in a case note to Pope v. King, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 489.

As is said in United States v. Walsh, 52 C. C. A. 419, 115 Fed. 697: "The owner of CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the District Court for Latah County enforcing a mechanics' lien; defendant appealing from so much of the judgment as enforced the lien, and plaintiff appealing from so much as allowed defendant a set-off for damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of defective construction. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Stewart S. Denning for plaintiff.

Mr. I. N. Smith for defendant.

Allshie, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted by the plaintiff for the foreclosure of a mechanics' lien. Plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendant corporation to furnish the material and construct an armory building in the city of Genesee. Plans and specifications were adopted, the price and terms of payment were agreed upon, and the building was erected. The company went into possession of the building and continued to use it for some six weeks, at which time an unusual windstorm occurred and blew down the front of the building. The company declined to pay the contractor, whereupon he filed his lien and prosecuted this action to foreclose the same. The defendant company answered, admitting the contract, but denying that the building was ever completed "in a good, substantial, and workmanlike manner." It also alleged that, as an affirmative defense, the building was defectively constructed, in that the front wall was not properly tied to the adjoining building, and other defects were charged, whereby the defendant alleged damages in the sum of $200. The trial resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for a balance due of $700 on the contract and $28.50 for extras. The court found in favor of the defendant on its allegation of damages in the sum of $140, which sum was offset against the total balance due on the contract. Both parties appealed from the judgment, and, since each party is both appellant and respondent in this court, we shall refer to them in this opinion as plaintiff and defendant.

Findings 4, 5, 6, and 7 are as follows: "(4) The court finds that the defendant tendered into court the sum of $610, and is shown to have tendered the same amount to the plaintiff at a period long prior to the time of the case. (5) The court also finds that the defendant corporation has been in possession of the building ever since the date shortly after its construction, and that they went into possession of the said building with full knowledge of the defect alleged to have been the cause of the falling real property, who has employed another to erect a structure on his land, does not, by taking possession and appropriating the structure to the uses for which it was built, preclude himself from insisting that the builder has not properly performed his contract. The results cannot be separated from the necessary consequences of ownership; and, as he cannot, without prejudice to himself, reject them or refuse to retain them, the law does not imply any promise from his acceptance of them. This being so, it matters not whether, at the time, he is or is not aware of the defects."

In Cannon v. Hunt, 116 Ga. 452, 42 S. E. 734, it is held that where, after the expiration of the time within which the contractor stipulated to complete the building, the owner entered into possession of the premises, as it was his right to do, he cannot be held to have waived all defects of which he knew or could have known by the exercise of ordinary care.

In Ludlow Lumber Co. v. Kuhling, 119 Ky. 251, 115 Am. St. Rep. 254, 83 S. W. 634, it is said that, even if there had been a defect in the construction of the house, and the owners had knowledge of it before moving in, that fact would not prevent them from recovering for the breach of the contract.

In Stewart v. Fulton, 31 Mo. 59, an instruction that, if the plaintiff accepted the building in question and received the same, he would be debarred from claiming damages for any noncompliance with the contract of construction, unless the fact should appear that the defect in the work could not be, or was not, ascertained at the time of the acceptance of the building, was held erroneous; the court saying that the fact that the house had been used is a matter to be weighed by the jury with all the other circumstances in the case, which may strengthen the force of it or dispel it altogether.

In Mohney v. Reed, 40 Mo. App. 99, it was held that, in building contracts, where the house is built upon the property of him who has it built, acceptance and use of the work, knowing it is not done in accordance with the contract, is not a waiver, the owner being powerless to do anything else, unless he should tear the house down.

So, also, in Franklin v. Schultz, 23 Mont. 165, 57 Pac. 1037, it was held that the owner of a house, upon taking possession thereof, did not waive any further compliance on the part of the builder with the terms of the contract,—the defects claimed to have been waived being failure to plaster a portion of the basement and omission to build a flue.

In New York v. Dexter, 59 Misc. 157, 110 N. Y. Supp. 360, damages were allowed to a person for whom a gangway to his bath house had been constructed, where, after knowledge of the defect complained of, he continued to use the gangway.

of the wall. (6) The court finds that the north wall of the building was defectively constructed, and that it was not properly tied to the building, and that on an occasion, shortly after the defendant had taken possession of the same, the wall was blown down by a high wind, and the court finds that all of the aforesaid facts are substantiated by the evidence. (7) The court further finds that it would take the sum of $140 to replace the said wall, and that the defendant has been damaged to that extent, and the court finds that the defendant is entitled to deduct from the amount of the contract the sum of $140."

Defendant contends that the fifth finding, to the effect that the company went into possession of the building with full knowledge of the defect alleged to have been the cause of the falling of the wall, is unsupported by the evidence, while the plaintiff contends that findings 6 and 7, to the effect that the north wall of the building was defectively constructed to the defendant's damage in the sum of $140, is not supported by the evidence. We may dispose of these contentions on the part of both plaintiff and defendant by saying that there is a substantial conflict in the evidence on all these points, and that there is sufficient evidence in the record to support each of the findings. We would not disturb them on that ground. The contract provided that the plaintiff should construct this building "in a good, substantial, and workmanlike." Evidence was produced tending to show that the defendant complied with this provision of the contract. There was also a great deal of evidence produced by defendant to the effect that he had not complied with this part of the contract. There is also evidence both ways on the question as to whether defendant had knowledge in a general way of this defect at the time it entered into possession of the building. It must be admitted, we think, that the defect in not tying the wall to the adjoining building with spikes or ties was not an obvious or patent defect, but was rather a latent defect. Had it been a patent and obvious defect or a failure to complete the building, the defendant would, under ordinary circumstances, be held to have waived the same by taking possession of the building without doing so conditionally, or protesting against its conditions, or demanding its completion. It may often happen that a building or structure contains a latent defect that the owner cannot reasonably discover at the time he takes possession. For instance, the material of which it is constructed may be of an inferior quality, or the work may have been so imperfectly done as to render the building or structure of little use or slight value, or so that it may fall, and thereby cause great damage to the owner. In such case the owner, although having paid for the building, would be entitled to recover damages for breach of the contract. Barker v. Nichols, 3 Colo. App. 25, 31 Pac. 1024.

Counsel for the defendant contends that these defects actually existed as proven and found by the court, and that for such reason the plaintiff had failed to "faithfully perform and fully comply with the contract on his part," and was consequently not entitled to recover and particularly not entitled to a lien, under § 7 of the Lien Laws (Sess. Laws 1899, p. 148). In support of this contention, plaintiff cites the cases of Justus v. Myers, 68 Minn. 481, 71 N. W. 667, and Boots v. Steinberg, 100 Mich. 134, 58 N. W. 657, and 27 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 402, 403. The Justus Case involved a contract for putting in a heating plant. The contract contained a warranty to the effect that the radiation should be sufficient to heat the rooms to 75 degrees on the coldest winter weather, and that the plant might be tested by the owner before accepting, and that, if not entirely satisfactory, it should be made so by the contractor without any additional expense. The defendant alleged that she had never accepted, but, on the contrary, had notified the plaintiff that it was not up to the requirements, and that she would not accept it. The court held that there was no substantial compliance with the contract, and that they could not maintain their action. In Boots v. Steinberg the contract provided for the erection of a house, and, among other stipulations, provided that it should be to the satisfaction of the owner, who should have the right to act as superintendent of the work, or appoint someone to act in that capacity, and the last payment was not due until "ten days from the completion of said work to the satisfaction of said Julius Steinberg." It appeared from the evidence that a number of things required to be done by the contract were never in fact completed in any manner, and others were imperfectly completed. The court held that the contract was not substantially complied with and refused plaintiff any relief. The facts of that case are somewhat different from the facts of the present case. Here, so far as outside appearances were concerned, and as a matter of fact, the building was a completed structure, although defectively constructed. The company accepted it, and one of the defendant's officers went far enough on the night it was opened for use to publicly state that they had a better building than they had expected to get for the money, and that they thanked the contractor for the work he had done. The trouble was, however, that, in the matter of construction itself, the building, although a completed structure, was so defectively and imperfectly erected as to entail damage to the defendant by reason of the front blowing out when the storm came.

Taking possession of the building with knowledge of the latent defect it contained is sufficient to prevent the owner from denying the completion of the building in an action by the contractor to foreclose his lien. Section 6, Lien Laws (Sess. Laws 1899, p. 148); Boisot, Mechanics' Liens, § 1; Bell v. Teague, 85 Ala. 211, 3 So. 861. On the other hand, the mere fact of entering into possession with knowledge of this defect is not sufficient to defeat the owner's right of action for breach of the contract as to the quality of material used, of the class and character of workmanship put on the building, unless an express waiver is shown, or such other facts as would amount to a waiver. The owner always has the general possession of the property, and the contractor's possession is only a special and limited possession for the purpose of doing the work for which he has contracted. It often becomes necessary and essential for the owner to take possession of a building or structure, although not completed or imperfectly and defectively constructed, in order to protect himself from still further and greater damages. The fact of such possession should not be a bar to his right of recovery for breach of the contract. Barker v. Nichols, supra; Hanley v. Walker, 79 Mich. 607, 8 L.R.A. 207, 45 N. W. 57; Boots v. Steinberg, supra; United States v. Walsh, 52 C. C. A. 419, 115 Fed. 697. Knowledge in a general way of a latent defect, of which the owner had no means of knowing its extent and latent dangers, will not amount to a waiver of the right of action for a breach of the contract, in the absence of other facts tending to disclose an intent to waive the right of action.

Under § 6 of the Lien Laws (Sess. Laws 1899, p. 148), every original contractor claiming the benefit thereof must within ninety days, and every other person within sixty days, after the completion of a building, improvement, or structure, or in case he, for any cause, ceases to labor thereon before the completion thereof, file for record with the county recorder his notice of lien, etc. Section 1 of the act provides that every person performing labor or furnishing material for a building or structure is entitled to a lien. This statute seems to be drawn upon the theory that any person who contributes labor or material for the construction, alteration, or repair of a building or structure on another's real estate is entitled to a lien therefor. Of course, the extent of the lien when he comes to foreclose it must be measured by the amount found due him on his contract at the time of filing his lien. If there is nothing due him under his contract, he is not entitled to any lien; but, if anything is found to be due him, he is entitled to a lien therefor. This statute is evidently based on the theory that whoever contributes labor or material whereby the real property of another is enhanced in value shall be entitled to a lien upon the whole property in the sum due. The affirmative answer and defense of defendant in this case is drawn apparently on the theory that the building, although at one time a completed structure and accepted by the defendant, contained latent defects and faults which resulted in damage to the defendant, and that defendant was entitled to recover the amount of damage sustained by reason thereof and have the same set off against the contract price of the building. The court's findings and judgment seem to follow that theory of the case. We think it was proper, and in harmony with the law, for the court to find the amount of damage sustained by defendant on account of the defective workmanship and construction, and to offset the same against the balance due on the contract price.

Appellant also insists that the court erred in not awarding it damages at the rate of $5 per day for each day it was kept out of possession of the building, from the 1st day of September until the date it entered into possession. The contract contained a provision that the building should be completed on the 1st day of September, and that the contractor should pay the owner the sum of $5 per day for each day thereafter until the building should be completed. The court made no finding on this question. In fact, there was no issue tendered on that subject. The defendant did not plead damages on account of plaintiff's failure to complete the building within the time specified in the contract. There is no mention of this either in the answer or affirmative defense. It would be manifestly erroneous to allow a party to recover such an item of damages for breach of a contract without tendering any issue whatever on the subject. Stevens v. Home Sav. & L. Asso. 5 Idaho, 741, 51 Pac. 779, 986; Murphy v. Russell, 8 Idaho, 151, 67 Pac. 427.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment will therefore be affirmed. Each party having appealed in this case, the whole cost of the two appeals will be equally divided between the parties to the action.

Sullivan and Stewart, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

RUSSELL STRAFFORD, by Next Friend,
v.
REPUBLIC IRON & STEEL COMPANY,
Appt.

(238 Ill. 371, 87 N. E. 358.)

Master — minor — contributory negligence.

1. The contributory negligence of a child employed in violation of the terms of a statute is no defense to an action against the master for personal injuries received by Case Note. — May one employing child under statutory age rely on contributory negligence or assumption of risk to defeat liability for personal injury sustained by the latter.

The earlier cases upon the subject are collected and discussed in a case note to Lenahan v. Pittston Coal Min. Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 461, and this note is confined to the more recent cases, which are quite numerous.

In the earlier note there was no decision which expressly held that neither assumption of risk nor contributory negligence was available as a defense to an action for personal injuries to a minor employed in violation of the statute, but a few of the more recent decisions do so hold.

It was so held in Marquette Third Vein Coal Co. v. Dielie, 110 Ill. App. 684, affirmed in 208 Ill. 116, 70 N. E. 17. As to contributory negligence the court said: "But, if plaintiff was injured while absent from the post of duty, or while violating his orders, or if it was carelessness or negligence for him to run between the sides of the moving cars and the mine wall, still, in our judgment, those facts would not prevent a recovery under the second count. The statute absolutely forbids the employment of a child of that age in a mine. One reason, no doubt, is that immature children are liable not to understand the significance and importance of the regulations prescribed for the mine and the employees therein; they may thoughtlessly disobey orders, or expose themselves to peril, or do acts which would be careless in an adult. The company which violates this statute ought not to be allowed to screen itself from liability because the child has been injured by reason of those childish traits which give rise to the statute."

And in Frorer v. Baker, 137 Ill. App. 588, it was held that the defendant was liable for injuries to a minor employed in violation of the statute notwithstanding the fact that he may have been guilty of contributory negligence. The decision follows the Armentraut Case, which is set out at length in the previous note and also in STRAFFORD v. REPUBLIC IRON & STEEL CO.

Same — statutory liability.

2. A master is not relieved from liability for injury to a child employed in violation of the terms of a statute because the statute does not in express terms provide for such liability.

(February 19, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Second District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Rock Island County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

So, in Swift & Co. v. Miller, 139 Ill. App. 192, it was held that the doctrine of assumed risk has no application where a minor is employed in violation of the express provisions of the statute. The question of contributory negligence did not arise in this case, but the rule in Illinois is apparently well settled.

And in Stehle v. Jaeger Automatic Mach. Co. 220 Pa. 617, 69 Atl. 1116, the court followed Lenahan v. Pittston Coal Min. Co. 218 Pa. 311, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 461, 120 Am. St. Rep. 885, 67 Atl. 642, which held that it was within the power of the legislature to fix an age limit below which children should not be employed in dangerous kinds of work, and that an employer who violated the law by engaging a child under the statutory age did so at his own risk; and, in an action of trespass for personal injuries sustained in such employment, the master cannot set up as a defense either the assumption of risk or the contributory negligence of the child servant. And to the same effect was the decision in Sullivan v. Hanover Cordage Co. 222 Pa. 40, 70 Atl. 909.

So, in Inland Steel Co. v. Yedinak (Ind.) 87 N. E. 229, in violation of a statute a boy thirteen years of age was required to work at night twelve hours a day; on one occasion, becoming exhausted and having no immediate duty to perform, he sat down in a dangerous place, fell asleep, and while in this condition was injured. In holding that neither assumption of risk nor contributory negligence was available as a defense under the circumstances of the case, the court said: "The doing of a thing prohibited, or the failure to do an act commanded, by

Messrs. Richard Jones, Jr., William A. Meese, and Peck & Dietz, for appellant:

In case an employee is hired in violation of statute, and is injured, the unlawful employment must be the direct and proximate cause of the injury to warrant recovery for such injury.

Nickey v. Steuder, 164 Ind. 189, 73 N. E. 117; Goodwillie v. London & Guarantee & Acci. Co. 108 Wis. 207, 84 N. W. 164; Evans v. American Iron & Tube Co. 42 Fed. 519; Belles v. Jackson, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 194; Kutchera v. Goodwillie, 93 Wis. 448, 67 N. W. 729.

Where, at the time of an injury, an employee hired in violation of statute has disregarded the scope of his authority and the direction of his employer, and is engaged at a task which he was not directed or which he was expressly forbidden to perform, his contributory negligence is a necessary ele-statute, constitutes negligence per se, the natural consequence of which the master cannot escape on the ground that the employee knew of such disobedience and assumed the risk of injury. . . . The employer of a child in violation of a specific statute cannot screen itself from liability for an injury sustained by the child in its service because the injury was occasioned through such negligence, imprudence, or childish traits as gave rise to the statute."

When a defendant violated the law in putting a minor at work at a forbidden employment, it was held in Nairn v. National Biscuit Co. 120 Mo. App. 144, 96 S. W. 679, that the master assumed all the risks of danger to the latter, and, where there was nothing to show that the plaintiff knowingly placed his person in danger, there could be no question of contributory negligence.

In Sterling v. Union Carbide Co. 142 Mich. 284, 105 N. W. 755, it was held that a minor child did not assume the risk of injury where he was employed in violation of the statute; but whether or not his acts constituted contributory negligence was, in view of his immaturity, held to be a question for the jury.

And the Sterling Case was cited with approval in Syneszewski v. Schmidt, 153 Mich. 438, 116 N. W. 1107, where it was held that a minor employed in violation of the statute did not assume the risk of injury from the negligent act of a fellow servant.

A number of cases, in which there was no question as to assumption of risk, have held that the question of the injured child's contributory negligence was for the jury, or have directly held that contributory negligence is a complete defense to an action for personal injuries.

Thus, in Woolf v. Nauman Co. 128 Iowa, 261, 103 N. W. 785, it was held that the question of contributory negligence was for the jury. Upon the question whether the statute operates to create a conclusive pre-ment to be considered in determining his right to recover for such injury.

American Car & Foundry Co. v. Armendraut, 214 Ill. 509, 73 N. E. 766; Evans v. American Iron & Tube Co. supra; Lee v. Sterling Silk Mfg. Co. 115 App. Div. 589, 101 N. Y. Supp. 78; Yeung v. Eugene Dietzgen Co. 72 App. Div. 618, 76 N. Y. Supp. 123, affirmed in 176 N. Y. 590, 68 N. E. 1126; Belles v. Jackson, supra; Marino v. Lehmaier, 173 N. Y. 531, 61 L.R.A. 811, 66 N. E. 572.

Mr. W. R. Moore, for appellee:

In an action for injuries to a child employed in violation of a statute prohibiting the employment, in manufacturing establishments, of children under the age of fourteen years, it is no defense to the employer that the child's own negligence contributed to his injuries.

American Car & Foundry Co. v. Armensumption that a child under sixteen years of age is too immature to be permitted to assume a risk of the prohibited kind, the court declined to pass as it was not presented, and the theory upon which the trial court proceeded was favorable to the appellant-defendant.

So, in Smith v. National Coal & I. Co. (Ky.) 117 S. W. 280, it was held that the question of contributory negligence was one for the jury.

And in Braasch v. Michigan Stove Co. 153 Mich. 652, 118 N. W. 366, although the court did not squarely pass upon the question, there is an implication to the effect that the question of contributory negligence is one for the jury.

So, in Peters v. Gille, 133 Mo. App. 412, 113 S. W. 706, the question of the plaintiff's contributory negligence was passed upon by the jury.

And in Evans v. American Iron & Tube Co. 42 Fed. 519, the judge, in his charge to the jury, said that the mere employment of the injured child below the prohibited age would not entitle him to recover if the question of contributory negligence was involved.

So, in Fortune v. Hall, 122 App. Div. 250, 106 N. Y. Supp. 787, a boy was employed under the statutory age, but the injury occurred after he had passed such age; the court held that the statute was not applicable to the case, and, further, disregarding that question, there could be no recovery as the injuries appeared to have been caused by his own carelessness.

A master is not liable for injury to a boy employed in violation of the statute where the injuries were received while the boy was subjecting himself to an obvious risk the danger of which he was capable of appreciating. Darsam v. Kohlmann (La.) post, 881, 48 So. 781.

Both contributory negligence and assumption of risk have in some cases been held to be questions for the jury.

traut, 214 Ill. 509, 73 N. E. 766; Jefferson Theatre Program Co. v. Crejczyk, 125 Ill. App. 1; Marquette Third Vein Coal Co. v. Dielle, 208 Ill. 116, 70 N. E. 17; Helm-bacher Forge & Rolling Mills Co. v. Garrett, 119 Ill. App. 166; Morris v. Stanfield, 81 Ill. App. 264; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Voelker, 129 Ill. 540, 22 N. E. 20; Marino v. Lehmaier, 173 N. Y. 530, 61 L.R.A. 811, 66 N. E. 572; Lenahan v. Pittston Coal Min. Co. 218 Pa. 311, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 461, 120 Am. St. Rep. 885, 67 Atl. 642; Stewart v. Ferguson, 164 N. Y. 553, 58 N. E. 662; Western Anthracite Coal & Coke Co. v. Beaver, 192 Ill. 333, 61 N. E. 335; Springfield Coal Min. Co. v. Gedutis, 227 Ill. 9, 81 N. E. 9, affirming 127 Ill. App. 327; Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Pating, 210 Ill. 342, 71 N. E. 371, affirming 112 Ill. App. 4; Willis Coal & Min. Co. v. Grizzell, 100 Ill. App. 480; La Porte Carriage Co. v. Sullender (Ind. App.) 71 N. E. 922; Brower v. Locke, 31 Ind. App. 353, 67 N. E. 1015; Monteith v. Kokomo Wood Enameling Co. 159 Ind. 149, 58 L.R.A. 944, 64 N. E. 610; Buehner Chair Co. v. Feulner, 28 Ind. App. 479, 63 N. E. 239; Leathers v. Blackwell Durham Tobacco Co. 144 N. C. 330, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 349, 57 S. E. 11; Ornamental Iron & Wire Co. v. Green, 108 Tenn. 161, 65 S. W. 399; Bromberg v. Evans Laundry Co. 134 Iowa, 38, 111 N. W. 417; Sterling v. Union Carbide Co. 142 Mich. 284, 105 N. W. 755; Perry v. Tozer, 90 Minn. 431, 101 Am. St. Rep. 416, 97 N. W. 137.

Farmer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the appellate court affirming a judgment of the circuit court in favor of appellee for $10,000 for personal injuries. Appellee is a minor, and was employed by appellant to work in its steel mill or manufacturing establishment about the middle of May, 1906. On the 25th day of October, 1906, while feeding angle irons into the "straightening machine," he received injuries that resulted in the loss of his left arm and one finger of the right hand. At the time of said injury appellee was thirteen years, eleven months, and eight days old. The first two counts of the declaration are based on § 1 of the act of 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 90; Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1908, p. 1038), which provides "that no child under the age of fourteen years shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work for wages at any gainful occupation hereinafter mentioned." The occupations thereafter mentioned in the act embrace manufacturing establishments, factories, and workshops. The third count is based on § 6 of said act, which provides that "no child under the age of sixteen years shall be employed, or permitted, or suffered to work by any person, firm or corporation in this state at such extra-hazardous employment whereby its life or limb is in danger, or its health is likely to be injured, or its morals may be depraved." Each count of the declaration charged that the employment of appellee by appellant was unlawful and was the proximate cause of his injuries. Appellant pleaded the general issue, and a trial by jury resulted in a verdict in favor of appellee for $10,000, upon which the circuit court, after overruling a motion for a new trial, rendered judgment, and the appellate court for the second district has affirmed that judgment.

It was a controverted question of fact on the trial whether appellee was set at the work he was performing when injured by appellant's foreman, or whether he had been set to do other work which he quit without orders to do so, and, without any directions from the foreman, but against his orders, began the work of feeding angle irons into the machine, which he was engaged in doing when injured. The proof offered by appellee tended to show he was set at the work he was engaged at when injured by the foreman, while the proof offered by appellant tended to show he was set at other

Thus, in Bromberg v. Evans Laundry Co. 134 Iowa, 38, 111 N. W. 417, it was held that assumption of risk and contributory negligence were for the jury. In speaking of the rule applicable to cases of this character, the court said: "It leaves open to the employer to show affirmatively, if he can, that the injured person, notwithstanding he or she was within the protected age, was yet in fact of sufficient capacity, strength, and judgment to recognize and appreciate the risks attendant upon that kind of labor, or arising from the known negligence of the employer, or that, by a failure to exercise the degree of care which a person of his or her age, experience, and capacity ought to exercise, he or she contributed to the injury of which complaint is made." 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And in Perry v. Tozer, 90 Minn. 431, 101 Am. St. Rep. 416, 97 N. W. 137, the court sustained the charge of the trial judge that the employment of a child in violation of statute is prima facie evidence of negligence, which might be overcome by proof that the machine which injured the child was properly guarded, or that the plaintiff himself was guilty of contributory negligence.

The questions of contributory negligence and assumption of risk of a boy employed under the statutory age were held, in Rahn v. Standard Optical Co. 110 App. Div. 501, 96 N. Y. Supp. 1080, to be for the jury. And to the same effect was the decision in Regling v. Lehmaier, 50 Misc. 331, 98 N. Y. Supp. 642.

work and ordered not to work at the straightening machine. Appellant's contention is that it was incumbent upon appellee to prove his injury was the direct and proximate result of the unlawful employment, and that if he had of his own accord left the work he was employed for, and directed to do and attempted to do a different character of work which he was forbidden to do, and was injured while so engaged, and his own negligence contributed to the injury, then there can be no recovery.

The second instruction given on motion of appellee is, as follows: "The jury are instructed that in this case the law is that no child under the age of fourteen years shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work at any gainful occupation in any mercantile institution, store, office, laundry, manufacturing establishment, factory, or workshop within this state; and in this case it does not make any difference whether the plaintiff was or was not told by the foreman to work on the straightening machine, if you believe from the evidence the plaintiff was under the age of fourteen years at the time he was injured and was at that time working for defendant in its manufacturing establishment for a compensation to him, to be paid by defendant." The court refused instructions asked by appellant to the effect that it was incumbent upon appellee to prove that he was in the exercise of due care, and that he could not recover if at the time of the accident he was doing work which he was not authorized to perform or which he had been forbidden to do. The correctness of the court's rulings in giving appellee's instruction No. 2 and refusing those asked by the appellant are the only questions presented for our consideration.

In American Car & Foundry Co. v. Armentraut, 214 Ill. 509, 73 N. E. 766, it was held that one of the purposes of the statute was to protect children from their own immaturity, inexperience, and heedlessness; and that, where a child under fourteen years of age, employed in violation of the statute, was injured while engaged in the performance of the work he was directed to do, the negligence of the child, though it may have contributed to the injury, was no defense to the liability of the employer. In that case the child was injured while engaged in doing the work it was directed to do by the employer. After stating the rule announced in the opinion that contributory negligence was not a defense where the injury resulted while the child was performing the work he was directed to do, the court said: "If the child left the task which he had been directed to perform, and, while not engaged in doing work which he had been directed to do by his master, was injured through an accident to which his own negligence contributed while he was still in or upon the premises of the master, a different question would present itself." This language, appellant insists, indicates the view of the court was that in such cases contributory negligence would constitute a defense. We do not think it means any more than it said,—i. e., that the court had no such question as that before it for consideration,—and is not to be accepted as an expression of the court's view of the law if such question had been presented. The statute in express and positive language forbade the employment of appellee in the business appellant was engaged in, in any capacity, and in the Armentraut Case it was said such construction should be given the act as to effectuate its purpose, if it can be done without violence to the letter of the statute. The validity of such statutes has been sustained as an exercise of the police power of the state upon the ground that the state is interested in the protection of children, and to that end may pass laws preventing their employment at a tender age, when they should be in school, in occupations that expose them to danger of being crippled and maimed for life, and thereby rendered less capable of taking care of themselves and discharging the duties of citizenship on arriving at maturity. The wisdom and humanity of the statute cannot be questioned, and in the Armentraut Case we held that an employer must know, at his peril, that children employed by him are of an age that he may lawfully employ them. It is a matter of common knowledge and experience that boys under fourteen years of age are less cautious and careful than persons of more mature age, and cannot be expected to observe and follow directions and instructions given for their protection, like older persons. This lack of appreciation of danger and regard for authority are matters which, no doubt, had an influence on the legislature in the adoption of so sweeping an act. There may be, and doubtless are, positions in the industries in which children under fourteen years of age are forbidden by the statute to be employed, where there would be little or no hazard to life or limb if the child confined himself exclusively to the duties of such position, but the childish inclination to experiment and do something he has seen others do is so well known as to make it dangerous to permit his employment in establishments, especially where machinery is used, and the legislature has therefore seen fit to prohibit his employment in any capacity in such establishments; and we are of opinion that to hold that a child who is employed in violation of the statute and directed to perform a certain line of work, but who temporarily abandons it and attempts to do something else in the master's business, whereby he is injured, is precluded from recovering if his negligence contributed to his injury, would seriously affect the purposes sought to be accomplished by the statute. Nor in such case can it reasonably be said that there is no causal connection between the employment and the injury.

Appellant, assuming the fact to be as contended by it, that appellee had of his own accord left the work he was employed and directed to do and engaged in work he was forbidden to perform when injured, argues that there is no more reason for saying his injury resulted from his employment than there would be if he had, while in appellant's employment, been struck by lightning. It is true liability does not depend alone upon the employment, but the injury must be a consequence of such employment. The mere fact that a child employed in violation of law receives an injury in nowise resulting from the employment would not create a liability. But such is not the case here. The vital and distinguishing fact here is that appellee was employed by appellant to labor in its manufacturing establishment, and, while engaged in performing services for it in said establishment, he was injured. He was in appellant's plant by virtue of his employment to work for it, and the fact that he may have temporarily abandoned the work he was employed and directed to do, and engaged in a forbidden line, we think does not destroy the causal relation between the employment and the injury; and, if it does not, contributory negligence of appellee would constitute no defense, and the court did not err in refusing to submit that question to the jury. It is imposing no harsh burden on appellant to hold that, having unlawfully employed the appellee to labor in its plant, it is liable to him for any injury received by him resulting from the performance of services for it, whether those services were in the line he was directed to perform or not. The law forbids, and was enacted for the purpose of preventing, the employment of children in any capacity in such establishment as appellant's; and it is contrary to the spirit of the law to say that the consequences of its wilful violation may be avoided by showing that the child left the work given it to perform and negligently undertook to do something else, which resulted in the injury. If appellant thought it had set appellee to perform work he could safely perform, and had forbidden him to perform other work thought to be dangerous to him, it was bound, at its 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) peril, to see to it that appellee did not attempt to engage in a forbidden line. Appellant was bound to know that, on account of appellee's tender years, he was not capable of a proper appreciation of danger, and was also bound to know that, on account of his immaturity, he was incapable of a proper comprehension of the necessity for obedience to orders of those in authority, and, under such circumstances, if it chose to violate the law by employing him, it assumed the burden of protecting him against his own negligence while engaged in such employment. The fact that the statute under consideration does not in express terms provide a liability in damages for its violation, as is done by certain statutes relating to mines and miners, can make no difference under the construction given the statute in American Car & Foundry Co. v. Armentraut, supra. The statute was enacted for the protection of the health and safety of children, and a liability for damages resulting from its violation is created whether it is expressly so declared in the statute or not.

Appellant cites cases from other jurisdictions which tend to support its contention that the court should have submitted the question of appellee's contributory negligence to the jury, notably Evans v. American Iron & Tube Co. (C. C.) 42 Fed. 519, which squarely decides the question as contended for by the appellant. The reasoning of other cases cited, while not so precisely in point, tends to support that view. Some of them are in conflict with our decision in the Armentraut Case, and the reasoning in none of them appeals to us with such force as that we would feel justified in following them. Ornamental Iron & Wire Co. v. Green, 108 Tenn. 161, 65 S. W. 399, we think in point in support of our view. The Code of Tennessee prohibited the employment of any child under twelve years of age in any workshop, mill, factory, or mine, and provided a penalty for its violation. A boy under the prohibited age, employed by the iron and wire company, was injured by some panels of iron fence which had been stacked up falling upon him. The contention of the plaintiff was that he was passing the stack of iron fence on his way to deliver a message to another employee of defendant, under the directions of his superior, when he accidentally stumbled against the panels of fence and the pile toppled over on him. The defendant's contention was that the plaintiff went to the place where he was hurt without orders and not on any matters connected with his employment, and was playing with the stack of fence panels, when he lost his balance, fell backwards, and drew them down upon him. On the trial the defendant requested the court to instruct the jury that if the injury occurred to plaintiff while not engaged in and about any work for defendant, but while playing with the panels of fence, he could not recover. The court held that this request was properly denied, and that, even upon defendant's theory, it was liable for the reason that the employment was a violation of the statute, and that every injury resulting from such employment is actionable. The court said: "In the case presented by the plaintiff below, as well as in that adduced by the defendant company, the connection between the employment and the injury is that of cause and effect, and brings the complaint within the operation of the statute." Appellant has endeavored to explain this case as not being in conflict with its position, but we do not so understand it. Instruction No. 2, given at the request of appellee, did not take from the jury the question whether his injury was the result of his employment by appellant, but instructed them that whether appellee was or was not told by appellant's foreman to work on the straightening machine could make no difference as to the liability, if the evidence showed that he was under fourteen years of age and was at the time of his injury working for appellant in its manufacturing establishment for compensation to be paid him by appellant.

We are of opinion there was no error committed by the court in giving and refusing instructions, and the judgment of the Appellate Court is affirmed.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

FRANK DARSAM AND WIFE, Apts.,
v.
LOUIS KOHLMANN.

(— La. —, 48 So. 781.)

Master — injury to servant — statute — contributory negligence.

1. Whilst the violation by the master of the provisions of a statute regulating the employment of his servants is negligence per se, and actionable, if injuries are sustained by the servants in consequence thereof, such provisions are not to be so construed as to abrogate the ordinary rules relating to contributory negligence, which is available as a defense, notwithstanding the statute, unless the latter is so worded as to leave no doubt that such defense is to be excluded.

Headnotes by MONROE, J.

Note. — See case note to Strafford v. Republic Iron & Steel Co. ante, 876. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Servant — minor — statute — contributory negligence.

2. Where the foreman of a factory employs a boy, in his twelfth year, and assigns him to work in a perfectly safe position, instructing him to stay there, and not to go near or meddle with any of the machinery, the owner of the factory will not be liable in damages, notwithstanding that the employment of boys of that age in factories is prohibited, under penalty of fine and imprisonment, for injuries received by the boy whilst, unnecessarily and in violation of his instructions, subjecting himself to an obvious risk, the danger of which he was capable of appreciating. And, a fortiori, is this true where the boy was employed in the belief, superinduced by his own representations and his appearance, and by the acquiescence of his family, that he was over the age prescribed by the statute.

(February 15, 1909.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries to plaintiffs' minor son alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Armand Romain, for appellants:

The hiring of the child in violation of statute constituted negligence per se.

Marino v. Lehmaier, 173 N. Y. 530, 61 L.R.A. 812, 66 N. E. 572; Queen v. Dayton Coal & I. Co. 95 Tenn. 458, 30 L.R.A. 82, 49 Am. St. Rep. 935, 32 S. W. 460; Nickey v. Steuder, 164 Ind. 189, 73 N. E. 117; Lee v. Sterling Silk Mfg. Co. 47 Misc. 182, 93 N. Y. Supp. 560; Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 44 La. Ann. 692, 16 L.R.A. 43, 32 Am. St. Rep. 348, 11 So. 51; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 659, 21 L. ed. 745; McCloughry v. Finney, 37 La. Ann. 27; Salisbury v. Herchenroder, 106 Mass. 458, 8 Am. Rep. 354; 1 Thomp. Neg. §§ 344, 345; 4 Thomp. Neg. § 3827; 1 Kinkead, Torts, § 324.

Mr. George Montgomery also for appellants.

Mr. Charles Rosen, for appellee:

The rules of contributory negligence, which is a defense, are not abrogated by the statute.

Hilliard v. Henry Rose Mercantile Mfg. Co. 120 La. 364, 45 So. 278; Brown v. J. A. Adams & Sons Co. 120 La. 119, 44 So. 1005; Daly v. H. Haller Mfg. Co. 48 La. Ann. 214, 19 So. 116; 1 Kinkead, Torts. 325; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 348, p. 890; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 408, 407, 409; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 151; Hailey v. Texas & P. R. Co. 113 La. 533, 37 So. 131; Lopes v. Sahuque, 114 La. 1004, 38 So.

810; Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 44 La. Ann. 692, 16 L.R.A. 43, 32 Am. St. Rep. 348, 11 So. 51; 4 Thomp. Neg. 2d ed. § 3827, p. 103; Belles v. Jackson, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 194; Evans v. American Iron & Tube Co. 42 Fed. 519; Kutchera v. Goodwillie, 93 Wis. 448, 67 N. W. 729; White v. Witteman, Lithographic Co. 58 Hun, 381, 34 N. Y. S. R. 895, 12 N. Y. Supp. 188, affirmed in 131 N. Y. 631, 30 N. E. 236.

Monroe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiffs seek to recover damages for the use of their minor son, and on their own account, resulting from an injury sustained by the minor whilst in the defendant's employ, and, as they allege, through defendant's negligence and disregard of the law. Defendant, after excepting on several grounds, denies the averments of the petition, and alleges that the injury sustained by the minor was due to his own negligent act. It appears from the evidence that at the time of the accident that caused the injury complained of (August 15, 1907) the minor was about eleven years and one month old, but large for his age, wearing the clothing usually worn by boys of fifteen, and fairly intelligent. He lives, with his parents, on Clouet street, between Chartres and Royal, and on the opposite side of the street defendant operated, and for a number of years has operated, a moss factory, in which the minor's two elder brothers (one of them a major) were, or had been, employed. The minor, Clarence, was enjoying a vacation from school during the month of August, and being, as we infer from the testimony, an active lad, made repeated requests of the foreman of the moss factory to give him work, stating on one occasion, in the presence of his brother George, that he was fifteen years of age, and, on being corrected by George, asserting, without further correction, that he was fourteen, which latter statement he made on another occasion in the presence of a number of the employees of the factory. Defendant appears to have known the law upon the subject of the employment of minors, and had a further interest in the matter, in that he was insured against accidents to his employees by a policy which did not cover an accident to a minor under twelve years of age, and he had specifically instructed his foreman to employ no small boys. He had another business, however, and spent very little time at the moss factory, the operatives in which were employed and discharged by the foreman, and he knew nothing of the employment or age of Clarence Darsam. The foreman apparently thought that the age limit with regard to the employment of minors in factories was 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

fourteen years, and the evidence satisfies us that, if he had not believed that plaintiff's son had attained that age, he would not have employed him. As it was, the boy was persistent and seemed anxious to earn something, and on two successive Saturdays the foreman employed him in moving dust in the yard with a wheelbarrow. On one of these occasions the father, in passing, inquired what he was doing, and, being told, said he did not think he could stand the dust. He says that he told the foreman that he did not want the boy to work about the factory, but the foreman denies it, and testifies, without contradiction, that the boy's lunch was sent to him from home,—referring as we understand, to the subsequent period of employment, between August 10th and August 15th,—and we hardly think that would have happened without the knowledge of his parents, nor do we find any sufficient reason for believing that the foreman would have employed him against his father's expressed wish. When he applied, on August 10th, he was assigned to about as light and as safe work as is done in the factory. The moss, it appears, is brought into the upper story of the building upon an automatic carrier, consisting of what may be called a belt of slats, which passes up an inclined place, over and around a wheel raised some 5 feet above the floor, and, in so doing, deposits the moss on the floor in front of the wheel. The incline up which the carrier moves is built alongside of and about 16 inches from the wall of the building, and the power which drives the apparatus is communicated to the carrier wheel through a driving wheel and two cogwheels, geared together in the space between the end of the carrier wheel and the wall, the driving wheel getting its power from a steam engine, through a rope, and having a grooved or hollowed periphery in which the rope works. The driving wheel, which is nearest the wall, is 26 inches in diameter, and on the same axle is a cogwheel, 4½ inches in diameter, on which is geared (on the further side from the front of the carrier wheel) the other cogwheel, 30 inches in diameter. In order to prevent the moss and dirt brought up on the carrier from falling into the cogs, and possibly by way of precaution against accidents, defendant caused to be built a wooden partition separating the driving wheel and cogwheels from the carrier and from the end of the carrier wheel, and projecting to the front edgewise, so that a person standing immediately before the carrier wheel would be safe from contact with the others. And it was to that position that Clarence Darsam was assigned: it being his duty to take up with a pitchfork the moss as the carrier brought it over the wheel and dropped it on the floor, and to distribute it among a number of girls and women who were standing within a few feet of him, and whose function it was to take the moss in their hands and shake it apart.

Being asked by plaintiff's counsel: Clarence, how did you get hurt on that day? How did you come to get hurt?" he replied: "Well, I was standing this way, and when I wanted to throw the moss, it all happened so quick that I didn't know what had hold of me, and when I hollered, Mr. Monroe [the foreman] came there with a crowbar and stopped the machine, and took my hand out and threw the wheel up. . . ."

Q. What was it that caught your hand?

A. Well, I don't know exactly what it was, whether it was the flywheel or the cogwheel.

Q. And when Mr. Monroe came and took your hand out, where was your hand?

A. It was in the cogwheels. . . .

Q. Clarence, what made your hand get caught between the cogwheels?

A. It was my sleeve.

Q. Did you have your coat on at the time?

A. No, sir, no coat.

Q. Well, what did you have on?

A. I had on a red shirt, and the sleeve was a big sleeve, and it caught.

On his cross-examination, his attention was called to the fact that the cogs lie back some 15¼ inches, in the narrow space between the driving wheel and the end of the carrier wheel, and that the rope on the driving wheel lies imbedded in its grooved periphery, and he could give no explanation further than to say that he had a button on his shirt sleeve, and that it might have been caught between the driving wheel and the rope, as the latter was loose. Being asked whether he knew that the button was caught, he replied that he did not; the sum and substance of his testimony being that he knew nothing about the accident, save that he found his hand between the cogwheels, where (it may be here stated) it was very badly mangled, necessitating the loss of the thumb, with the first and second fingers and part of the palm. He was taken to the hospital, and two of the young women who were working with him at the time called on him, about a week later, and they testify as follows:

Miss Louise Macke: "I asked him how did he get his hand hurt, and he said he put his hand there, and he never thought he was going to get his hand hurt."

Mrs. Louise Schlusser: "I asked him how he did that, and he said he put his hand behind there."

Q. That he put his hand in where?

A. In the cogwheels.

Q. That is what Clarence told you?

A. Yes, sir.

Being questioned in regard to the statements thus attributed to him, the minor admitted that the witnesses called on him and that he had a conversation with them, but, being asked, "Did you have any conversation at all with those young ladies as to how this accident happened?" he replied, "No, sir."

That the accident could not have happened as the boy says it did, or in any other way save by his deliberately meddling with the driving wheel or cogwheels, if the partition to which we have referred was in position, is made manifest by all the testimony, and the story told by the boy rests upon the premise that the partition was not in position. The carpenter who built the partition (in 1904) testified that, whilst he could not absolutely identify the boards, they appeared to be the same that he had used. Fourteen other witnesses testified, positively, that the partition was there on the day of the accident, and had been there, just as it was on that day, from the time it was built, or for a year or two years, as they happened to know the fact.

Plaintiff seems to have conceived the idea that three new planks of white pine were put in after the accident, and the photographer employed by him was probably impressed with his view of the matter, as he testified that, when he took his photographs (shortly after those for defendant had been taken), the three planks looked to him like pieces of dry-goods cases. Defendant, however, called several witnesses who testified that the planks are of yellow pine, and, as it would have been easy matter to have shown that they were wrong, if such had been the case, we assume that plaintiffs, who made no attempt to disprove their statements, concluded that they were right. Apart from that, the testimony adduced on behalf of plaintiffs to show that the partition was not in its place at the time of the accident is conflicting, and withal insufficient, both in volume and character, to overcome that adduced by defendant. We therefore conclude, as a matter of fact, that the partition was in its place when the accident occurred.

There was a verdict and judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiffs have appealed.

Having found, as facts, that the minor, whilst engaged in the discharge of the duty to which he was assigned, could not have come in contact with the driving wheel or cogwheels, and hence could not have been injured by them, if the partition, represented in the photographs offered in evidence, was in position, and that the partition was in position at the time of and prior to the accident, we are now to inquire whether defendant should be held liable upon any other basis than that of its alleged negligence in failing to provide one of its employees with a safe place in which to do his work.

Counsel for plaintiffs refers the court to the provisions of act No. 34, p. 50, of 1906, which, so far as they are pertinent to the issue to be determined, read:

"Sec. 1. . . . That no boy, under the age of twelve years, and no girl, under the age of fourteen years, shall be employed in any factory, mill," etc.

"Sec. 7. . . . That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of an offense for each violation thereof, and, upon conviction of the same, shall be punished by a fine, . . . or by an imprisonment," etc.

From this law he argues that, by the mere fact of his employing the minor, Clarence Darsam, in his factory, defendant was guilty of negligence which renders him civilly liable for any injury which the minor may have sustained whilst so employed, and this whether there was any proximate causal connection between the employment and the injury or not; and he cites, among others, the following authority, to wit: "Status of Children Employed in Violation of Statute.—Upon this subject, one idea is that the hiring of a boy under twelve years of age, in violation of a statute declaring it to be a misdemeanor, constitutes negligence per se, such as will render the employer liable for all injuries suffered in consequence of and in course of the employment. Another view is that to employ a child, in violation of such a statute, to operate a dangerous machine, is evidence of negligence in case the child is injured in so working, because the statute indicates that such children are unfit, by reason of their immaturity and indiscretion, to be so employed."

The remaining portion of the section thus quoted (as supplied by defendant's counsel) reads: "By the view which more nearly comports with judicial analogies is that such unlawful employment of a child does not, per se, constitute negligence which will render the employer liable for injuries to the child, where such employment is not the direct or proximate cause of the injury." 4 Thomp. Neg. 2d ed. § 3827.

And the view of the learned author, as thus expressed, is sustained by a consensus of opinion. Thus: "When it appears that the violation . . . of a statute, ordinance, or municipal regulation was a contributing cause to produce the injury complained of, then such statute . . . is competent evidence tending to charge the defendant with negligence. But such evidence is incompetent, as being immaterial, if the violation of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

statute . . . did not contribute to produce the injury." Buswell, Personal Injuries, 2d ed. p. 185, citing Wakefield v. Connecticut & P. Rivers R. Co. 37 Vt. 330, 86 Am. Dec. 711; Steves v. Oswego & S. R. Co. 18 N. Y. 422; Brooks v. Buffalo & N. F. R. Co. 25 Barb. 600; Dascamb v. Buffalo & State Line R. Co. 27 Barb. 221; Evans v. American Iron & Tube Co. (C. C.) 42 Fed. 519. "The fact that defendant's failure of duty consists in the violation of a statute will not relieve the plaintiff from the obligation of showing that he was in the exercise of due care,"—citing Taylor v. Carew Mfg. Co. 143 Mass. 470, 10 N. E. 308; Nosler v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. 73 Iowa, 268, 34 N. W. 850; Ryall v. Central P. R. Co. 76 Cal. 474, 18 Pac. 430; Hudson v. Wabash Western R. Co. 101 Mo. 13, 14 S. W. 15. "Thus the violation, by the employer, of a statute requiring cogs in factories to be properly guarded, does not render the employer liable for the injury to an employee by coming in contact with unguarded cogs, when the danger was obvious and the employee assumed the risk of it,"—citing E. S. Higgins Carpet Co. v. O'Keefe, 25 C. C. A. 220, 51 U. S. App. 74, 79 Fed. 900; Buswell, Personal Injuries, 2d ed. pp. 187, 188. "In many jurisdictions statutes have been enacted which impose upon masters certain duties in relation to their servants. While it is well settled that the violation of these provisions is negligence per se, and actionable, if injuries are sustained by the servants in consequence thereof, they are nevertheless not so construed as to abrogate the ordinary rules relating to contributory negligence, which is available as a defense, notwithstanding the statutes, unless they are so worded as to leave no doubt that this defense is to be excluded." 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 151. See also 26 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1091.

The doctrine thus stated has been recognized by this court in Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 44 La. Ann. 692, 16 L.R.A. 43, 32 Am. St. Rep. 348, 11 So. 51; Hailey v. Texas & P. R. Co. 113 La. 533, 37 So. 131, and Lopes v. Sahuque, 114 La. 1004, 38 So. 910. In McCloughry v. Finney, 37 La. Ann. 31 (relied on by plaintiff), defendant, a dealer in Western produce, had piled a lot of grain in sacks on the banquette, in violation of a city ordinance, and this court having, in the original opinion, used some language which suggested the idea that he thereby became liable for an injury sustained by a boy by reason of the falling of the sacks, and without reference to any contributory negligence of which the boy might have been guilty, a rehearing was applied for, in refusing which, Manning, Ch. J., said: "A re-examination of the record confirms us in the opinion, expressed before, that there is no proof of contributory negligence, and, therefore, there is no need to say what effect proof of contributory negligence would have."

In the cases of Queen v. Dayton Coal & I. Co. 95 Tenn. 458, 30 L.R.A. 82, 49 Am. St. Rep. 935, 32 S. W. 460, and Marino v. Lehmaier, 173 N. Y. 530, 61 L.R.A. 811, 66 N. E. 572, the boys on whose account the damages were claimed were both injured whilst in the actual discharge of the duties for which they were employed in violation of prohibitory statutes, and hence sustained their injuries by reason of such employment. In the instant case, considered without reference to his status as a minor, the employment of Clarence Darsam had no more causal connection with the injury sustained by him than it would have had if, employed to devote an hour a day to the copying or addressing of letters in the office, he had of his own motion undertaken to investigate some curious machine in a remote part of the building, and had been injured in so doing.

Moreover, it will be noted that we have found as a fact that defendant's foreman employed the boy in the belief, superinduced by the boy's own representations, his appearance, and the apparent acquiescence of his family, that he was at least fourteen years of age, a circumstance which will be borne in mind in the consideration of the remaining question: Was the danger that, being in the factory, he might curiously put his fingers between cogwheels which were not connected with his employment and with which he had no concern, a danger unsuitable to or beyond his apparent capacity? The generally accepted view in regard to the relation between minors and their employers is, as we think, correctly stated as follows: "Persons who employ children to work with or about dangerous machinery, or in dangerous places, should anticipate that they will exercise only such judgment, discretion, and care as is usual among children of the same age under similar circumstances, and are bound to use due care, having regard to their age and experience, to protect them from dangers incident to the situation in which they are placed; and as a reasonable precaution, in the exercise of such care in that behalf, it is the duty of the employer to so instruct such employees concerning the dangers connected with their employment which, from their youth and inexperience, they may not or are presumed not to appreciate or comprehend, that they may, by the exercise of such care as ought reasonably to be expected of them, guard against and avoid injuries arising therefrom. Yet the mere fact that the servant is a minor does not of itself affect the liability of the principal or master as to obvious—facts and dangers, unless the minor was a child of unsuitable age to be exposed to unsuitable risks in a hazardous business. If a minor engages to work, the risks of the business are incident to the work, so far as he is competent to comprehend and appreciate them. And it can make no difference in the application of the rule whether such employment was with or without the consent of the parent." Bailey, Master's Liability for Injuries to Servants, pp. 114, 115. See also 1 Kinhead, Torts, p. 325; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 348, p. 890; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 406, 407, 409.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Defendant's foreman says, in his testimony, that he told the minor, Clarence, "to stay there" (in a perfectly safe place) "and to throw that moss over there" (a safe occupation) "and keep away from the end, from the machine, from everything else. . . . I ran him away when he came around the gin, one time, not only once or twice, but I told him to go and stand behind the carrier wheel, in his own position. . . . at the place where he was working."

It is true that the boy denies that he received such instructions, but we think the foreman is corroborated, in that the other employees who were working about the carrier, girls and women, unite in testifying that they all received such instructions, and it is improbable that the foreman would have made an exception in the case of the boy. Beyond that, it seems to us that an intelligent boy, in his twelfth year, who has attended school sufficiently to have acquired the rudiments of a common-school education, who has lived across the street from a factory in which his older brothers were employed, and about which he has played and worked, may be assumed to have sufficient capacity to appreciate a danger so obvious as that involved in coming in contact with plainly exposed revolving cogwheels. In fact, he himself admits that he knew the danger. Upon the whole, we find no error in the verdict and judgment appealed from, and they are, accordingly, affirmed, at the cost of the appellant.

Petition for rehearing denied March 15, 1909.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

GULF, COLORADO, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

NANNIE T. MOSELEY.

(88 C. C. A. 236, 161 Fed. 72.)

Limitation of actions — changing current of stream. Digitized by Google
The limitation period for injury to land on the opposite shore by deflection of the current of a river by the construction of a permanent dike to protect one shore begins to run from the completion of the structure, although the injury occurs by the washing away of the shore during periods of high water in successive years thereafter, a process as certain to continue as the annual rains and the flow of the water of a large river.

(April 20, 1908.)

ERROR to the United States Court of Appeals in the Indian Territory to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the United States Court for the Southern District of the Indian Territory in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's land through defendant's alleged wrongful act. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Sanborn and Adams, Circuit Judges, and Phillips, District Judge.

Mr. S. T. Bledsoe for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. A. Eddleman and J. F. Sharp for defendant in error.

Phillips, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error (hereinafter designated the "plaintiff") in the United States court for the southern district of the Indian territory recovered judgment against the plaintiff in error (hereinafter designated the "defendant") for damages to her land in the sum of $1,980, with interest at 6

Case Note. — When does statute of limitations begin to run against action for damages to land on account of obstructing stream or surface water.

This note is intended to include all cases passing on the question, when the statute of limitations begins to run against an action for damages occasioned by the placing of a structure, other than a milldam, in such manner as to obstruct the flowing of water and thereby injure adjoining real property by overflowing the same. Cases in which the act complained of was the diverting of the water and the consequent injury to the lower proprietor because of the loss of use of such water have been expressly excluded. For cases dealing with the application of the statute of limitations to actions for injuries caused by a milldam, see case note to Priebe v. Ames, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 206. Cases in which the damages are the result of the digging of a ditch or drain, or because of water passing through a culvert, are covered in the note to Turner v. Overton, post, 894.

A majority of the cases hold, in accordance with the holding of GULF, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. MOSELEY, and as indicated by the cases gathered in the note to Priebe v. Ames, that whenever a dam or embankment obstructing a stream is of a permanent character, and its construction and continuance are necessarily an injury, the damage is considered original, and may be recovered in one action, and in such case the statute of limitations begins to run upon the construction of the dam or embankment or at least from the time of the first injury; and the one damaged cannot rely upon the theory that every continuance of a nuisance is a fresh nuisance.

Thus, in Parker v. Atchison, 58 Kan. 29, 48 Pac. 631, it was held that, where a permanent improvement is made by a city on the bank of a water course in such a way as to narrow the channel and wash and injure private property on the opposite bank, an action therefor can be brought only within two years after the erection of such improvement. Other cases holding to the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) same effect are St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Morris, 35 Ark. 622 (embankment and trestle causing stream to overflow); St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Anderson, 62 Ark. 360, 35 S. W. 791 (filling up of ditch used for drainage); Heard v. Middlesex Canal, 5 Met. 81 (permanent dam in river for raising head of water for canal); Bunten v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 50 Mo. App. 414 (placing permanent embankment across stream); Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Graham, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 55, 33 S. W. 576 (dam built across creek to prevent water from injuring roadbed); Brown v. Texas C. R. Co. 42 Tex. Civ. App. 392, 94 S. W. 134 (embankment with insufficient culvert); Patterson v. Great Western R. Co. 8 U. C. C. P. 89 (digging of ditch, resulting in immediate injury).

A number of authorities hold that, in case of a permanent structure in a stream with its necessarily consequent injuries, the statute of limitations does not necessarily begin to run at the time of the erection of the structure, but at the time of the first injury.

Thus, in King v. United States, 59 Fed. 9, where water was thrown back by a government dam on its completion, so as to flow a plantation, but the full effect in rendering the land unfit for cultivation was not ascertained until three years later, it was held that an action brought five years after such injury was within the statutory period of limitations.

So, in Van Orsdol v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 56 Iowa, 470, 9 N. W. 379, where a railroad embankment dammed up a slough and thereby caused permanent injury to a landowner several years thereafter, it was held that the statute of limitations began to run from the time of the injury, and not from the date of the erection of the embankment.

Other cases which apparently have followed this rule are Stodghill v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 53 Iowa, 341, 5 N. W. 495 (diverting of water by railroad embankment); Bird v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 30 Mo. App. 365 (flooding of land caused by in-per cent from July 4, 1895, which judgment was affirmed by the court of appeals of the territory, to reverse which this writ of error is prosecuted.

In 1893 the plaintiff, under the homestead law, owned a tract of land of 137 acres, bordering on the east bank of the Canadian river, in Cleveland county, Oklahoma territory. The defendant railroad company, prior to 1893, had constructed its roadbed along the opposite west bank of said river on its right of way. The Canadian river, of varying width, at the point in question was perhaps $\frac{1}{2}$ mile wide under high stage of water. The stream was somewhat treacherous in its flow, subject annually to high floods, which rendered its current, when veering to the bank, destructive to adjacent lands. The bank along the plaintiff's land, owing to the sandy soil formation, was quite susceptible to disintegration from the wash of the current; and, owing to the low surface of the body of the land, this condition existed throughout the tract, so that the caving in of large areas of the land was an apparent inevitable result when the current was sent against the east bank of the river. Prior to 1893 the normal flow of the current was toward and along the west shore line, opposite the plaintiff's land, with the result that it was constantly making inroads on the right of way of the defendant company, endangering it roadbed and tracks, until, as the defendant claims and the testimony tends to establish, it became necessary for the pres-sufficient culvert); Stack v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 139 N. C. 366, 51 S. E. 1024 (insufficient culvert ponding water in lot); Ridley v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. 118 N. C. 996, 32 L.R.A. 708, 24 S. E. 730 (failure to make sufficient passageway for water through railroad embankment).

This seems, also, to have been recognized in Erwin v. Erie R. Co. 98 App. Div. 402, 90 N. Y. Supp. 315, affirmed without opinion in 186 N. Y. 550, 79 N. E. 1104, where, because of the absence of a culvert in a depression, not, however, a water course, land was flooded.

In Buntin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 41 Fed. 744, where land was overflowed because of the construction of a bridge which was shown to be a permanent structure and not liable to change, it was said: "As such, the statute of limitation would begin to run against the cause of action from the time of the first overflow occasioning any damage to the plaintiff, for which the plaintiff had a cause of action, in which he could have recovered as for a permanent injury to the freehold, because it was then made apparent that the property was liable to perpetual injury." The court, however, took occasion to say further: "But, waiving this proposition, and treating the wrong done as not involving the entire destruction of the estate or its beneficial use, and conceding that it may be apportioned from time to time, so that separate actions may be brought to recover for each overflow, still the right of entry or action for such overflow would be barred after the lapse of ten years from the time the plaintiff's cause of action first originated. . . . More than eleven years transpired after his first injury before this amended petition was filed, claiming any damage resulting from the construction of said bridge. The whole history of this case shows that the claim of injury resulting from the improper construction of the bridge or the accumulation of debris thereat, appears for the first time in this amended petition, although this controversy and litigation between the railroad company and the adjacent landowners has been in progress for years."

In Culver v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 38 Mo. App. 130, it was held that the statute of limitations did not begin to run against an action for obstructing the flow of a stream until damage resulted to plaintiff from such obstruction, although the obstruction was of gradual formation, and was finished for some time before the injury occurred.

In Haisch v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 606, 33 N. W. 126, where an opening into a railroad embankment was originally designed for a cattle way, and was never designed as an outlet for water, and was not adapted to that purpose, it was held, in an action for injury to the land caused by the insufficient outlet, that the statute of limitations commenced to run from the time of the building of the road, and the injury which at that time resulted.

So, in New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hamlet Hay Co. 149 Ind. 344, 47 N. E. 1060, 49 N. E. 269, it was held, without passing on the question whether successive actions might be maintained for damages resulting from the obstruction of a stream by bridge embankments, that an action brought within the statutory period after the first injury was not barred.

To the same effect is Sullens v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 659, 7 Am. St. Rep. 473, 38 N. W. 545, where it was held that an action for damages the result of an insufficient culvert in an embankment, which, however, could not have been foreseen with any degree of accuracy, but depended in part upon the seasons, was not barred, having been brought within the statutory period of limitations after the first injury.

And see Howard County v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 130 Mo. 652, 32 S. W. 651, infra.

It will be noticed that in all of the above cases it is held that, in case the obstruction is a permanent one, the person injured must recover all his damages in one action, and that action accrues at the time of the erection of the obstruction or at the time of the first injury. Opposed to this class of cases, ervation of its roadbed to construct at the point in question a line of powerful dikes, with the view of throwing the current back to its wonted place as at the time of the construction of the road. The effect of these dikes, the plaintiff claims, was to so deflect the natural current of the river as to drive it forcibly against the opposite shore line, undermining and disintegrating the natural barrier of the bank protecting her land.

The petition avers that in September, 1893, about one month after the completion of the dikes, the current of the river so diverted washed away of the plaintiff's land about 5 acres, in 1894 about 10 acres, in 1895 about 75 acres, and in 1897 about 5 acres. This action was originally instituted on the 11th day of December, 1897, covering the damages sustained up to that time. On the 23d day of November, 1899, an amended petition was filed, claiming damages for the destruction of 5 acres of the land in 1898 and for damages to the remaining portion of the land. A demurrer to the petition having been overruled, the defendant answered, pleading, inter alia, the statute of limitations. The trial court denied the applicability of this defense. If in fact and law this plea was good, the discussion of other assignments of error is unnecessary. The statute of the state of Arkansas, (§ 4478, Mansfield's Dig. [Ind. Terr. Anno. Stat. 1899, § 2945]), applicable to the Indian territory, declares that an action for trespass upon lands shall be brought it would seem there are a few cases which have proceeded upon the theory that, where the dam or embankment constitutes a permanent structure, from the building and continuance of which an injury will necessarily result, the person guilty of maintaining the nuisance is liable, at least within the period of prescription, for successive suits, each continuance being a new nuisance, and the injured party is entitled to recover all the damages accruing within the statutory period of limitations. Among these cases are Delaware & R. Canal Co. v. Lee, 22 N. J. L. 243 (damming back of stream because of insufficient culvert); Arnold v. Hudson R. Co. 55 N. Y. 661 (interference by railroad of trunk used for manufacturing power); Reed v. State, 108 N. Y. 407, 15 N. E. 735 (construction of dam for purposes of providing feeder for canal); Prime v. Yonkers, 115 N. Y. Supp. 305 (old abutment causing stream to injure adjoining property); Valley R. Co. v. Franz, 43 Ohio St. 623, 4 N. E. 88 (diverting stream by means of dam and new channel, and thus injuring land because of water thrown across old channel); Stout v. Kindt, 24 Pa. 449 (building dam across water course); Ramsdale v. Foote, 55 Wis. 557, 13 N. W. 557 (dam across ditch or drain, flooding land); Devery v. Grand Canal Co. Ir. L. R. 9 C. L. 194 (embankment over stream with insufficient culvert, causing damage for first time several years after it was built).

There is another class of cases, although not necessarily opposed to the doctrine that when the obstruction is a permanent one, and the damages therefrom directly and necessarily following, the statute of limitations begins to run against the right of action to recover damages for injuries from the time the dam is built or the damages first sustained, yet, finally attain the same results as those cases immediately preceding, in which it is held that the one damaged can rely upon the theory that every continuance of a nuisance is a new nuisance. In some of these cases a distinction is made between a nuisance of a permanent character, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

with an injury resulting necessarily from its construction and continuance, and a structure which, although of a permanent character, is not necessarily injurious; others base their decision upon the ground that the injury is the result of the negligence or want of skill of the one maintaining the obstruction, and that, when the latter's attention is called to it, he will take steps to improve the conditions. However, in any event, whatever the basis of the decision, it is held in these cases that, if the structure is of such a character that it may or may not do injury, the cause of action for damages from an injury arises only when an injury is done, and, as is said, or directly so implied, in most of these cases, a new cause of action arises with every injury.

It should be noted, however, that although, in the following cases, the statute of limitations is held to begin to run from the time of the injury, and generally imply that for each injury a new cause of action arises, it is practically impossible in many instances to state whether the court based its decision upon the theory that the facts constituted an exception to the rule that the statute of limitations begins to run from the erection of the obstruction, or whether they based their decision upon the theory that in the case of a permanent obstruction the statute begins to run from each successive injury, or even following the rule laid down in many of the Iowa cases, that the statute of limitations begins to run from the first injury. In some of the cases, however, the decision is clearly referred to an exception to the general rule that the statute commences to run from the time of the original obstruction or injury.

Thus, in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Biggs, 52 Ark. 240, 6 L.R.A. 804, 20 Am. St. Rep. 174, 12 S. W. 331, it was said: "Whenever the nuisance is of a permanent character, and its construction and continuance are necessarily an injury, the damage is original, and may be at once fully compensated. In such case the statute of limitations begins to run upon the construction of the nuisance. . . . But, when such structure is permanent in its character, and within three years after cause of action accrues. As construed by the supreme court of Arkansas, the three-year period applies to an action for damages of this character. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Morris, 35 Ark. 622.

The defendant's contention is that the dikes were permanent in construction, and, under the allegations of the petition and the proofs, the injuries to the plaintiff's freehold were obviously consequential, and therefore the entire damages could have been recovered in one action, the cause for which arose as early as September, 1893, more than four years prior to the institution of suit, which was more than three years after the damage was done in 1894. The contention of the plaintiff is that the structure did not immediately involve the entire destruction of her estate, or its beneficial use, but the damages were apportionable from time to time, and therefore separate actions might be brought to recover damages for each successive injury as it occurred. That the structure of the dikes was permanent in character, and intended by the defendant to be so, hardly admits of debate. The evidence shows that the piles, at the large end, were from 14 inches to 2 feet in diameter, and were driven down into the earth from 5 to 7 feet, and were about 7 feet apart, with caps of heavy boards along the tops. These rows of dikes were boarded up with planks from 2 to 3 inches in thickness, and were filled in with smaller stones at the bottom, and on the its construction and continuance are not necessarily injurious, but may or may not be so, the injury to be compensated in a suit is only the damage which has happened; and there may be as many successive recoveries as there are successive injuries. In such case the statute of limitations begins to run from the happening of the injury complained of."

So, in Willitts v. Chicago, B. & K. C. R. Co. 88 Iowa, 281, 21 L.R.A. 608, 55 N. W. 313, it was held that an action for obstruction of surface water by a railroad embankment, which is in reality based upon failure to keep open a ditch along the side of the embankment, is not for a single permanent injury which accrues with the making of the embankment, but an action accrues with each injury from failure to keep the ditch open.

And in International & G. N. R. Co. v. Kyle (Tex. Civ. App.) 101 S. W. 272, it was held that, where the building of a railway embankment is not of itself a nuisance, but becomes so only at intervals by diverting water from rainfalls from its usual flow upon plaintiff's land, the cause of action arises upon receipt of each injury, and successive actions may be brought for each injury as it occurs, and an action for such injury would not be barred by limitations for two years thereafter.

To the same effect is Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Willi, 53 Ill. App. 603, where an insufficient culvert caused land to overflow. The court in this case, after recognizing that each overflow upon the land of an adjoining owner caused by negligent construction of the road creates a new cause of action, and that then the twenty years' limitation had no application, said: "In addition to this view, it may be said that such a limitation only applies to damages of a permanent character, apparent at the time of the creation of the nuisance causing them, and that go to the entire destruction of the estate affected thereby."

In Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Thillman, 143 Ill. 127, 36 Am. St. Rep. 359, 32 N. E. 529, it was said: "Each overflow upon the land of an adjoining owner, caused by the negligence or want of skill of a railroad company in its mode of constructing or maintaining a bridge or embankment over a running water course, creates a new cause of action against the company for injury thereby occasioned to the crops upon such land."

In Indiana, I. & I. R. Co. v. Patchette, 59 Ill. App. 251, it was said that damages to a landowner from overflow caused by the improper and negligent construction of a railroad embankment are called continuing damages, originating from a cause not permanent in its character, but may have existed many years, and back of the statute of limitations; and, while the statute of limitations may be pleaded to the damages occurring beyond five years from the commencement of the suit, yet suit may be brought for continuing damages as long as the original obstruction may remain, causing such damage.

In Lawton v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 75 S. C. 82, 55 S. E. 128, it was held that the negligent construction and maintenance of an embankment across a natural stream by which lands of another are flooded is continuous in its nature, and, although the embankment was built beyond the period of the statute of limitations, damages might be awarded for such period immediately preceding the commencement of the action.

In Finley v. Williamsburg, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1336, 71 S. W. 502, it was held that a city is liable for each overflow of property caused by its diverting surface water into a stream without providing a sufficiently large culvert for its escape, as for a separate trespass; and the statute of limitations begins to run at the time of each trespass, and not at the time of the act of the city in diverting the water.

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. McCutchen, 80 Ark. 235, 96 S. W. 1054, where a railway company constructed its embankment so near a ditch which drained plaintiff's land that the dirt from the embankment would slide off into the ditch and cause the land to overflow, it was held that the obstruction or injury was not a permanent one, and the landowner's right of action for each successive injury accrued at the time of the top with stones so large that only three of them could be loaded onto a car, which was run out along the side of the dike, and the stones were lifted in place by derricks.

It may be true, in the abstract, that nothing constructed by the hand of man is indestructible. The rasure of time and the process of erosion of the waters may wear away this structure. But in its relation to the practical affairs of human action, with which the law deals, this formidable, substantial work must be regarded as possessing in a high degree the quality of a permanent structure. The petition itself avers: "That the natural and probable consequence of the erection of said dikes was to change the current and channel of said river, by turning the current over and against the east or left bank of said river and cutting and washing said bank away, and that they were built and maintained by the defendant for this purpose. . . . That the effect of said dikes was to, and they did, change the current of said river, and throw the same over and against the left or east bank of the same, and cut and washed the same away, and destroyed plaintiff's land, and changed the channel of said river, making the same much farther east than it ever was before the wrongful building of said dikes. That after and on account of the said building and maintaining of said dikes, at each successive rise in said river, the current was thrown over and upon plaintiff's land, and washed a portion of the same away, and destroyed it."

injury, and was not barred by a former judgment in an action for a prior injury.

In Crabtree Coal Min. Co. v. Hamby, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 687, 90 N. W. 226, it was held that for the obstructing of a stream by refuse from a coal company, and its consequent poisoning of the water which is thus thrown over the adjoining land, a fresh cause of action accrues for the damage done by each overflow, so that any damage within five years before the bringing of the action may be recovered.

In Cameron v. Ontario, S. & H. R. Union Co. 14 U. C. Q. B. 612, it was held that an action against a railroad company for preventing the drainage of surface water from land by the construction of its roadbed is not limited to be commenced within six months, as it is a continuing injury, and therefore is in time so far as regards any damage sustained within six months of the commencement of the action.

In Drake v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 302, 50 Am. Rep. 746, 19 N. W. 215, where a railroad, by its unlawful obstruction of surface water, caused damage to a landowner for more than five years prior to his bringing action therefor, it was held that the action was properly brought for the injuries sustained during the five years immediately preceding, and was not barred by the fact that a cause of action had arisen out of the same wrong more than five years before. The court in this case, in distinguishing a case in which the whole injury was regarded as being received at one time, said that, while the remedy applied in that case could not be done by the guilty party, the remedy in the case at bar was to be applied on the railroad's premises, and that, too, in the discharge of a subsisting obligation.

In Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Standen, 22 Neb. 343, 35 N. W. 183, it was held that a bridge which, because of its negligent construction, prevents the free passage of ice and water, is a nuisance for which no action accrues to a landowner until he sustains an actual injury caused by such unlawful obstruction, and for every continuance of which, when damages have been sustained, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) an action will lie for the recovery of such damages as accrued before the action was brought; and one action is not a bar to a second action brought for damages thereafter sustained. This case was followed and approved in Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Brown, 29 Neb. 492, 46 N. W. 39 (bridge insufficient to permit ice and driftwood to pass); and Missouri P. R. Co. v. Hemingway, 63 Neb. 610, 88 N. W. 673 (embankment holding back surface water). Other cases holding to the same effect are St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Yarrowborough, 56 Ark. 612, 20 S. W. 515 (embankment with insufficient culverts, causing water during an overflow to destroy growing crop); St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Stephens, 72 Ark. 127, 78 S. W. 766 (obstruction of creek and drain by railroad embankment with insufficient culvert); St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hoshall, 82 Ark. 387, 102 S. W. 207 (obstruction of stream by failure to remove debris not result of construction of trestle); Savannah, A. & M. R. Co. v. Buford, 106 Ala. 303, 17 So. 395 (stopping of ditch and channels draining surface water by railroad embankment); Daneri v. Southern California R. Co. 122 Cal. 507, 55 Pac. 243 (levee deflecting current of river, causing it to make new channel and injure owner of land 6 miles away); Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wachter, 23 Ill. App. 415, affirmed in 123 Ill. 440, 5 Am. St. Rep. 532, 15 N. E. 279 (embankment over stream with insufficient culvert); Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Elliott, 34 Ill. App. 589 (negligent construction of railroad embankment over stream); Sherlock v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 115 Ind. 22, 17 N. E. 171 (overflow caused by the negligent construction of a railroad bridge); Kelly v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 28 Ind. App. 457, 91 Am. St. Rep. 134, 63 N. E. 233 (insufficient culvert to carry away accumulations of waters in times of heavy rains); Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Emmert, 53 Neb. 237, 68 Am. St. Rep. 602, 73 N. W. 540 (embankment holding back flood waters); Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Andreesen, 62 Neb. 456, 87 N. W. 167 (negligent construction of culvert in embankment, the latter being an old

As if to aid this defense, the plaintiff's evidence was full and strong to the point that within the month succeeding the construction of the dikes the effect was to send the current of the river directly across to the east shore, where it began rapidly to eat away the bank, destroying 5 acres of the land, and in the following year 10 acres. and 1895, 75 acres more. In the very nature of the situation, this deflection of the current to the east shore was constant,—more destructive at intermittent periods of high water than at others. This characteristic of the river, its history shows, was as certain of manifestation as the coming of the seasons. The quality of the soil composing the ever-receding bank and the lay of the land rendered it so probable that this process of disintegration and work of destruction would proceed, unless arrested by human agency, as to have permitted a tangible estimation of the whole damage, within the admissibility of the law, in a single action as early as September, 1893. Indeed, the plaintiff ought not to be heard to say that this ascertainment was too remote and speculative, for the reason that in this suit the trial court, under the evidence introduced by the plaintiff, permitted her to recover, not only damages for all the land hitherto destroyed by the alleged nuisance within the three years next preceding the institution of suit, but for the prospective damages to the remainder of her land yet left intact. Some of her witnesses testified that the residue of the land was rendered treble work filled up); Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Wright, 21 N. J. L. 469 (damming back of stream because of insufficient culvert); Henry v. Ohio River R. Co. 40 W. Va. 234, 21 S. E. 863 (embankment closing culvert in street and thus flooding adjoining property); Eells v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 49 W. Va. 65, 87 Am. St. Rep. 787, 38 S. E. 479 (maintenance of railroad bridge deflecting stream and injuring adjoining property); Bonner v. Wirth, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 560, 24 S. W. 306 (embankment causing diversion of flow of surface water); Clark v. Dyer, 81 Tex. 339, 16 S. W. 1061 (insufficient culvert); St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Beck (Tex. Civ. App.) 80 S. W. 538 (embankment across creek with insufficient culvert); Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Caldwell (Tex. Civ. App.) 102 S. W. 461 (insufficient culvert in embankment, resulting in occasional overflows); Texas & P. R. Co. v. Ford (Tex. Civ. App.) 117 S. W. 201 (the same); Hill v. Empire, State-Idaho Min. & Developing Co. 158 Fed. 881 (refuse of ore-reduction works thrown in creek, causing it to fill up and during high water to overflow); Moison v. Great Western R. Co. 14 U. C. Q. B. 109 (bridge over stream with insufficient culvert); McGillivray v. Great Western R. Co. 25 U. C. Q. B. 69 (railroad embankment with insufficient culvert not showing its injurious effects immediately); Whitehouse v. Fellowes, 10 C. B. N. S. 765 (negligent construction of drains whereby water is thrown upon adjoining premises); Carrou v. Great Western R. Co. 14 U. C. Q. B. 192 (embankment with insufficient culvert). And see, in connection with these cases, Buntin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 41 Fed. 744.

In Howard County v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 130 Mo. 652, 32 S. W. 651, where, because of the throwing of large quantities of rock into a creek, several years thereafter a county bridge was materially injured, it was held an action brought within five years from such injury was not barred by the statute of limitations. In this case the court evidently took pains to show that no actual or material injury was done to the pier until within a period of five years next before 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the suit was brought, thus seemingly bringing the case within that class wherein it is held that all the damages must be recovered in one action, and that within the period of limitations from the first injury. The court, however, took occasion to say, further: "While there is some conflict between the American cases on this subject, the rule sustained by the great weight of authority seems to be that when, by wrongful acts, a permanent nuisance is created, and the injury therefrom is direct, immediate, and complete, so that the damages can be immediately measured in a single action, the statute will begin to run from the erection of the nuisance. On the other hand, when the injury, as in this case, is not complete so that the damages can be measured at the time of the creation of the nuisance in one action, but depends upon its continuance and the uncertain operation of the seasons, or of the forces set in motion by it, the statute will not begin to run until actual damage has resulted therefrom."

In McClure v. Broken Bow (Neb.) 115 N. W. 1081, it seems to have been recognized that, where a city fills with earth the channel of a creek, and fails to provide a sufficient outlet for the flood waters that would naturally find passage down said water course, so that at widely separated dates the flood waters are backed up and cast against and over plaintiff's lots and into his mill, plaintiff's cause of action will accrue at the date of the injury to his property, and not at the time of defendant's negligent acts.

In Heath v. Texas & P. R. Co. 37 La. Ann. 728, where land was flooded because of the building of a railroad, it was said that prescription runs, not from the building of the roadbed, but from the time the damage is caused by that act.

In a few cases the question depended somewhat upon whether the person injured complained of the erection of the obstruction, or whether the gravamen of the action was the resulting damages.

Thus, in King v. Danville, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1188, 107 S. W. 1189, where an action was brought for damages resulting from the wrongful diversion and unlawful use of the almost worthless, and that they would not pay the taxes thereon for its value.

It is to be conceded that there is much conflict in the decisions of courts touching the application of the statute of limitations to nuisances of this character. This conflict has arisen especially in reference to the erection of railroad embankments across creeks and swales, draining large areas of adjacent land without sufficient ditches or culverts to carry off the waters on occasions of freshets, whereby the land becomes flooded by overflows, damaging annual crops, and the like. In such case there is not infrequently present elements of uncertainty, such as the insufficiency of the openings in the embankments, which, the presumption may be indulged, the railroad might at any time in the future sufficiently enlarge, rather than submit in the first action to the recovery of all the consequential damages. In the second place, where the damage is to crops, it may depend entirely upon the possibility of the nonrecurrence of water in a stream, and not from the construction of a dam, it was held that the injured party might recover for such damages as resulted from the diversion of the water during five years next preceding the commencement of the action, without reference to the time of the construction of the dam.

In Dallas v. Young (Tex. Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 1036, where a recovery was sought for damages occasioned to property as the result of water and filthy sewer matter being forced upon such property "during rains" by reason of the erection of certain embankments, it was held that the cause of action accrued at the time of the injury, and not at the time the embankments were built.

To the same effect are Gloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Dorman (Ala.) 49 So. 242, when the gravamen of the action was the filling and clogging up of a waterway and culvert, and not the negligence in their construction; and Savannah, A. & M. R. Co. v. Buford, 106 Ala. 303, 17 So. 395, where the gravamen of the action was that the road-bed and embankment, at a particular time after their construction, caused the surface water to flow upon the lands of the plaintiff.

In Barnett v. St. Francis Levee Dist. 125 Mo. App. 61, 102 S. W. 583, where the owner of land was damaged by an overflow of his premises caused by the negligent construction of a levee, it was held that his cause of action accrued, so as to set in motion the statute of limitations, when the injury was inflicted, and not when the dam was built. The court in this case evidently based its decision upon the fact that the gravamen of the case was negligent and unskilful construction of the levee, resulting in damage to the landowner, and the further fact that, although the levee was a solid and permanent structure, yet it would not necessarily cause the overflow of the land so that the injury could have been anticipated from the first.

In Union Trust Co. v. Cuppy, 26 Kan. 754, it was held that an action for damages caused by the flooding of lands occasioned by the building of an insufficient culvert in a railroad embankment accrued at the time of the injury, and not at the time of the building of the culvert, the court placing especial emphasis on the fact that the foundation of the action was the obstruction of a natural water course, causing damage to the plaintiff, and not the building of the culvert. To the same effect, Delaware & R. Canal Co. v. Lee, 22 N. J. L. 243 (damming back of stream because of insufficient culvert).

So, when a change is made in the obstruction, and damages result therefrom, the statute of limitations begins to run from the time of the change, and not from the original erection of the structure.

Thus, in Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Chapman, 39 Ark. 463, 43 Am. Rep. 280, where an embankment was built which obstructed the natural flow of surface water, which embankment, however, was later abandoned, and, without objection of the railroad company, cut through to permit proper drainage, it was held, upon the company building another embankment, having no different effect from the former, that the statute of limitations commenced to run against the action for damages from the time of the construction of the second embankment, and not from the construction of the first.

In Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Nuetzel, 43 Ill. App. 108, reversed on other points in 143 Ill. 46, 32 N. E. 529, it was held that the raising of a railroad embankment from time to time within five years of the bringing of suit was sufficient to permit a landowner to maintain an action for damages caused by floods, although the embankment itself was erected more than five years before the institution of the suit.

In Thiessen v. Clausen, 135 Iowa, 187, 112 N. W. 545, it was held that, where a landowner, claiming the right to repel surface water coming from an adjacent tract, erects a barrier on the partition line, and maintains the same with the knowledge, or express or implied consent, of the owner of the adjacent tract for ten years or more, the right of the latter to an injunction against the maintenance of the obstruction is barred.

It is probably well to note that, although those cases bearing upon the right to bring an action where a change of ownership intervenes between the original cause and the effect are closely related to the subject here annotated, unless they expressly pass on the question of the statute of limitations they are not intended to be included in this note.

On the general question when right of action for injury to real estate accrues, when cause not immediately effective, see case note to Mast v. Sapp, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 379.

the overrunning flood in any given year, or the contingency of no crop being planted thereon, or being cultivated in a product subject to little damage from a temporary overflow. Such are not the conditions of the nuisance in question. The very purpose to be subserved by the defendant's permanent structure does not admit of any rearrangement to obviate sending the force of the current of the river against the plaintiff's shore line. Neither did the situation admit of the probability of the removal of the dikes in the future, as the burden of the defendant's proof was that they are indispensably necessary to prevent the destruction of its right of way, roadbed, and tracks. Moreover, the injury to the plaintiff did not consist in now and then flooding her land with water, damaging possible crops; but it was the destruction of the freehold by the constant eating away of the protecting bank,—a process as certain to continue as the annual rainfalls and the flow of water in a large river, and a result reduced to a demonstration more than three years before this suit was instituted.

Gould, in his work on Waters (§ 416), speaking of permanent injury, says: "In such cases the rule is altered for the sake of convenience, and but one action is allowed. The plaintiff is required to recover in one suit the entire damages, present and prospective, caused by the defendant's act. Injuries caused by permanent structures infringing upon the plaintiff's rights in his land, such as railroad embankments, culverts, and bridges, permanent dams, and permanent pollutions of water, fall in this class."

Farnham, in his work on Waters & Water Courses (vol. 2, § 586), discussing this question, says: "The rule that every continuance of a nuisance is a fresh nuisance should have no application in case of permanent nuisances of this class, any more than it should be contended that a trespass upon the land and erection of a structure there should constitute a fresh trespass every moment it was continued, for the purpose of extending the time within which the action could be brought. And there are cases which have applied the true rule that, in case the dam is a permanent one, the limitation period will begin to run against the right of action to recover damages for the injuries from the time the dam was built. The rule that the statute of limitations is not available to defeat an action for damages for the flooding of land until the right to flood it has been acquired by prescription, since every continuance of the injury is a fresh nuisance, is a mere arbitrary rule, invented by the courts to meet the necessities of an apparently hard case. The difficulty seems to be that the courts have confounded two distinct rights of action. As was seen in a preceding section, it was held that ejectment will not lie to destroy an inchoate flowage easement. To avoid the effect of that ruling, the courts which apply the successive-injury doctrine, in order to prevent the acquisition of an easement in real estate in less than the prescriptive period, hold that the nuisance is a continuing one, and that the action may be brought at any time until the right to maintain it has been acquired by prescription. The latter holding seems illogical. If a permanent obstruction is erected, so that it casts water across the boundary line onto the land of the upper owner, the injury is complete at the time the obstruction is erected and the injury done, and there is no ground for holding that a right of action for damages may be carried along for a period of twenty years, when the statute of limitations says that it shall be barred in six years."

This position is reinforced by Judge Brewer in Central Branch Union P. R. Co. v. Twine, 23 Kan. 586, 33 Am. Rep. 203.

As applied to the instance where the permanent structure is such as to injure the land itself of the adjacent proprietor, the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts maintains that the whole injury, present and prospective, is recoverable in one action, maintainable immediately when the effect of the nuisance was first manifested. In Fowle v. New Haven & N. Co. 107 Mass. 352, the plaintiff sued to recover damages for injury to the freehold resulting from the construction of the defendant's railroad along the bank of Mill river and across the bed thereof. The construction was of earth and stone, so as to obstruct and deflect the flow and current of the river, driving it against the embankment of the plaintiff's land, whereby it was undermined, and large portions thereof were destroyed, whereby the value of the residue of the land was diminished. The defendant pleaded a former recovery for the first damage resulting from the destruction of the land, which occurred beyond the statutory period of limitations. Gray, J., said: "The embankment of the defendants was a permanent structure, which, without any further act except keeping it in repair, must continue to turn the current of the river in such a manner as gradually to wash away the plaintiff's land. For this injury the plaintiff might recover in one action entire damages, not limited to those which had been actually suffered at the date of the writ. And the judgment in one such action is a bar to another like action between the parties for subsequent injuries from the same cause. Troy v. Cheshire R. Co. 23 N. H. 83, 55 Am. Dec. 177; Warner v. Bacon, 8 Gray, 397, 402, 405, 69 Am. Dec. 253. This case is not like one of illegally flowing land by means of a milldam, where the damage is not caused by the mere existence of the dam itself, but by the height at which the water is retained by it, according to the manner of its use from time to time, as in Staple v. Spring, 10 Mass. 72, and Hodges v. Hodges, 5 Met. 205. Nor is it the case of an action against a grantee who, after notice to remove it, maintains a nuisance erected by his grantor as in McDonough v. Gilman, 3 Allen, 264, 80 Am. Dec. 72, and Nichols v. Boston, 98 Mass. 39, 93 Am. Dec. 132."

When the case went back for retrial, the plaintiff again sought to recover by some additional evidence. After advertng to the fact that in the first action for damages there were probably included in the recovery prospective damages, Judge Colt said: "The case at bar is not to be treated strictly in this respect as an action for abatable nuisance. More accurately, it is an action against the defendant for the construction of a public work under its charter in such a manner as to cause unnecessary damage by want of reasonable care and skill in its construction. For such an injury the remedy is at common law; and, if it results from a cause which is either permanent in its character, or which is treated as permanent by the parties, it is proper that entire damages should be assessed with reference to past and probable future injury." [112 Mass. 334, 17 Am. Rep. 106.]

This doctrine is supported by the following cases: Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Maher, 91 Ill. 312; Van Schoick v. Delaware & R. Canal Co. 20 N. J. L. 249; Van Orsdol v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 56 Iowa, 470, 9 N. W. 379; Henderson v. New York C. R. Co. 78 N. Y. 423; Rockland Water Co. v. Tillson, 69 Me. 255; Powers v. Council Bluffs, 45 Iowa, 654, 24 Am. Rep. 792; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Loeb, 118 Ill. 214, 59 Am. Rep. 341, 8 N. E. 460.

The supreme court of Arkansas has applied the rule, under the statute of limitations, to the instance of permanent railroad embankments, whereby the natural waterflow is diverted so as to deluge, in time of freshets, adjacent lands. The pertinent decisions of that court are reviewed in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Anderson, 62 Ark. 360, 35 S. W. 791. The plaintiff had constructed a drainage ditch on his lands. The defendant railroad company built a permanent embankment across it, and obstructed the outflow of water, whereby in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) times of freshets the plaintiff's lands were flooded and the value diminished. The court affirmed the proposition that, "whenever the nuisance is of a permanent character, and its construction and continuance are necessarily an injury, the damage is original, and may be at once fully compensated. In such case the statute of limitations begins to run upon the construction of the nuisance." Further on the court said: "In this case the obstruction of the ditch was permanent; that is, it will continue without change from any cause, except human labor. The effect of it was to restore the land drained to the condition in which it was before the ditch was dug. Its present and future effect upon the land could be ascertained with reasonable certainty. The damage was original, and susceptible of immediate estimation. 'no lapse of time was necessary to develop it'. . . . As the law does not favor the multiplicity of suits, and all damages which will be sustained as the necessary result of the filling of the ditch in question and are recoverable could have been estimated at the time of such obstruction from the effect of it upon the value of the land, only one action should be brought therefor, and that within three years after the ditch was closed up."

The trial court, as in effect requested by the defendant, should have instructed the jury that the action is barred by the statute of limitations. It results that the judgment of the Court of Appeals and of the United States Court for the Southern District of the Indian Territory must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to grant a new trial, and for further proceeding in conformity with this opinion.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

W. V. TURNER, Appt.,

v.

J. H. OVERTON et al.

(86 Ark. 406, 111 S. W. 270.)

Limitation of action — change of water course.

The statute of limitations begins to run upon a right of action against a railroad

Case Note. — When does statute of limitations commence to run against action for damages for the flooding of land caused by the digging of a ditch or drain.

The question as to when the statute of limitations commences to run against an action for damages for the flooding of land caused by the digging of a ditch or drain is company which, without authority, straightens the bed of a stream so as to accelerate the flow in such manner that its future injurious effect on the riparian land is certain from the time of the completion of the work, although the actual injury is done only by gradual erosion and the overflow of the property in times of freshet.

(June 1, 1908.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Clay County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's land through the alleged wrongful act of defendants in changing the bed of a stream. Affirmed.

Statement by Hart, J.:

Appellant, W. V. Turner, was, and had been for several years prior to the institu-determined by the same test applied in the cases gathered in the note to Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moseley, ante, 885, which deals with the question as to when the statute of limitations begins to run against an action for damages to land on account of obstructing the flow of a stream or surface water. As was said there in regard to dams and embankments, so here it may be said in regard to the construction of ditches or drains, that whenever a ditch or drain causing the flooding of adjoining property is considered of a permanent character, and its construction and continuance necessarily causes injury, the damage is, by the majority of the cases, considered original, and may be recovered in one action, and in such case the statute of limitations begins to run from the construction of the ditch, or in some jurisdictions from the first injury; and the one damaged cannot rely upon the theory that every continuance of a nuisance is a new nuisance, although, as was also true of the other note, there are many cases cited in this note which apply an exception to that general rule because of the fact that the ditch was not necessarily a nuisance or would not necessarily continue to injure the property, and a few cases apparently deny the rule altogether.

In Powers v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 158 Mo. 87, 57 S. W. 1090, where the channel of a stream was changed by means of the digging of a canal, and the injuries resulting therefrom become apparent at once and inevitably continuous, it was held that the statute of limitations began to run at the time of the construction of the canal, although the injury gradually increased and did not become complete until some time afterwards.

In Atkinson v. Atlanta, 81 Ga. 625, 7 S. E. 692, where an action was brought against the city for damages alleged to have been sustained from the grading of certain streets and the construction of certain sewers, by reason of which a large body of water was thrown upon an adjoining lot, it was held that, since the whole damage could have been assessed in one action within the statutory period of limitations after that work was completed by the city, this action, having been brought more than four years thereafter, was barred.

In Powers v. Council Bluffs, 45 Iowa, 652, 24 Am. Rep. 792, it was held that the statute of limitations begins to run against an action to recover damages for the insufficient construction of a ditch in such manner that the flow cuts the earth away backward up the stream by an adjoining owner, as soon as it reaches such adjoining owner's land and it becomes apparent that such will be the result of the action of the water; and thus in this case, the cause of action having accrued more than five years prior to the commencement of the suit, it was barred by the statute of limitations.

In Miller v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 680, 16 N. W. 567, where, because of the digging of a ditch, land was overflowed several years thereafter, it was held that an action for damages, brought within the statutory period after the first injury, was not barred by the statute of limitations.

To the same effect is McCormick v. Winters, 94 Iowa, 82, 62 N. W. 655 (increased flow of water on adjoining property because of construction of tile drain).

This was also recognized in Peden v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 73 Iowa, 328, 5 Am. St. Rep. 680, 35 N. W. 424, where water was caused to overflow adjoining land because of the construction of a culvert under a railroad embankment.

However, in Spilman v. Roanoke Nav. Co. 74 N. C. 675, it was held that successive actions for damages lie for the continuous flooding and sobbing of land caused by the leaking of a canal; and the right of action is not barred for later acts because the statute of limitations has run against the earlier acts.

In Wells v. New Haven & N. Co. 151 straight, its current was much swifter. There were about twelve overflows during the year 1905. The creek overflowed its banks on appellant's land, and the action of the water washed the soil from some of his land and cut deep gullies across other portions of it. The worst part of the overflow and the swiftest current was on that part of appellant's land nearest the outlet of the ditch. Appellant testified that overflows never occurred on that part of his land prior to 1905, and that the land overflowed there when the creek was only half bank full. Appellant brought this suit to recover damages, alleging that the overflow was caused by the construction of the ditch accelerating the flow of the water in the creek. Appellees answered, making a general denial, and pleading the statute of limitations of three years. There was a jury trial and verdict for the appellees. The case is here on appeal.

Messrs. L. Hunter, Huddleston, & Taylor, and Johnson & Burr, for appellant:

Where a nuisance is not necessarily injurious, but may or may not be so, and, if it proves to be injurious, the injury continues for awhile, inflicts damage, and then entirely ceases, the statute of limitations begins to run from the time the damage is done, and not before; and there may be as many successive recoveries as there are successive injuries, and the statute of limitation runs from the time each of such injuries occurs.

St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Morris, 76 Ark. 548, 89 S. W. 846; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Biggs, 52 Ark. 240, 6 L.R.A. 804, 20 Am. St. Rep. 174, 12 S. W. 331;

Mass. 46, 21 Am. St. Rep. 423, 23 N. E. 724, where a railroad unnecessarily brought together several natural streams of water, and discharged them through a culvert upon adjoining land at a place different from the original course of any of them, it was held that the structure constituted a continuous nuisance for which an action for damages would lie at any time, and the action would not be barred by the lapse of six years from the erection of the structure. The court in this case said: "If the defendant's act was wrongful at the outset, as the jury have found, we see no way in which the continuance of its structure in its wrongful form could become rightful, as against the plaintiff, unless by release or grant, by prescription, or by the payment of damages. If originally wrongful, it has not become rightful merely by being built in an enduring manner. That which was a nuisance at first does not lose its character as such by being continued for six years, whatever effect the lapse of time might have upon equitable remedies for its removal; and the maintenance of a structure which will continue to cause a wrongful diversion of water upon the plaintiff's land, in quantities varying with the seasons, is a continuing nuisance, and an invasion of the plaintiff's right from day to day, and he may select his own time for bringing an action therefor, and he is not barred by the lapse of six years from the erection of the structure. The case falls within the ordinary rule applicable to continuing nuisances and continuing trespasses."

To the same effect seems to be Wright v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 49 Hun, 445, 3 N. Y. Supp. 480, affirmed without opinion in 124 N. Y. 668, 27 N. E. 854, where, because of the changing of a stream by means of digging a new channel, a large amount of debris was thrown upon adjoining land.

Presenting the same difficulties as to classification as pointed out in the note to Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moseley, ante, 885, there is a large class of cases in which it is held 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that, whenever the ditch or drain is of such a character, because of either its lack of permanency, or negligent construction, variance in seasons, or many other reasons that might be ascribed, that an injury does not necessarily follow from its construction and continuance, a cause of action does not accrue to the injured party until the happening of the injury and, as pointed out in the majority of instances, for every occurrence of which he has a new cause of action, and against which the statute of limitations begins to run only from the time of each injury or overflow.

Thus, in Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Anderson, 79 Tex. 427, 23 Am. St. Rep. 350, 15 S. W. 484, where the mere construction of an embankment and culverts by a railroad did not constitute a nuisance as to an adjoining landowner, but subsequently became so at intervals by diverting water from its usual flow upon the adjoining land to the injury of the land and crops, it was held that successive actions for recovery of damages might be brought against the company for causing the overflows, and the statute of limitations would begin to run from each overflow. The court said: "We conclude from the authorities that, where a nuisance is permanent and continuing, the damages resulting from it should all be estimated in one suit; but, where it is not permanent, but depends on accidents and contingencies, so that it is of a transient character, successive actions may be brought for injury as it occurs; and that an action for such injury would not be barred by the statute of limitation unless the full period of the statute had run against the special injury before suit. The building of the embankment and the culverts as alleged was not of itself a nuisance; it was no invasion of plaintiff's rights,—they were not put on his land. They became a nuisance only at intervals by diverting water from rainfalls from its usual flow upon plaintiff's land. The embankment and the culverts were permanent, but the nuisance was not; there was no constant

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Yarborough, 56 Ark. 612, 20 S. W. 515; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Cook, 57 Ark. 387, 21 S. W. 1066; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Stephens, 72 Ark. 127, 78 S. W. 786; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. McCutchen, 80 Ark. 235, 96 S. W. 1054; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hoshall, 82 Ark. 387, 102 S. W. 207.

Messrs. Moore, Spence, & Dudley and Lamb & Caraway for appellees.

Hart, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellees have pleaded the statute of limitations of three years in bar of this action. The suit was commenced on the 23d day of December, 1905, and the undisputed testimony shows that the ditch complained of was constructed during the spring and continuing injury. It may be that, where land is destroyed, and its value before destruction is recovered as damages, there can be but one recovery. The soil and improvements might be renewed, however, in which case other suits might lie for damage to its renewed state. But suppose the land is only injured or the crops occasionally destroyed by rains, the just and rational rule as adopted in this state is that successive actions may be brought for the injuries as they occur."

In Reid v. Atlanta, 73 Ga. 523, it was held that it was a nuisance, for which continuous actions for damages lay, to keep up a sewer, which, when it rained, threw upon one's lot excrement, disagreeable in smell and hurtful to health; and an action therefor could be maintained although the sewer was built more than four years before bringing the suit.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cornelius, 111 Ky. 752, 64 S. W. 732, it was held that injuries to land and crops resulting from overflows of surface water collected by a railroad embankment and flowing through an improperly and negligently constructed culvert are not of a permanent, but recurrent, nature; and the statute of limitations runs on each overflow only from the time of its occurrence, and not from the time of the construction of the culvert.

In Danielly v. Cheeves, 94 Ga. 263, 21 S. E. 524, it was held that successive actions for damages to land by diminished or suspended fertility thereof for the production of crops, caused by the digging of a ditch and saturating adjoining land, might be maintained from year to year until such time as it is shown that the effect of the nuisance has been wholly and permanently to destroy the fertility of the land so that, if the nuisance were abated, it would not restore the land and render it again fertile and fit for cultivation.

In Hunt v. Iowa C. R. Co. 86 Iowa, 15, 41 Am. St. Rep. 473, 52 N. W. 668, where a ditch upon a railroad right of of 1902. In the case of St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Biggs, 52 Ark. 240, 6 L.R.A. 804, 20 Am. St. Rep. 174, 12 S. W. 331, the rule is stated as follows: "Whenever the nuisance is of a permanent character, and its construction and continuance are necessarily an injury, the damage is original, and may be at once fully compensated. In such case the statute of limitations begins to run upon the construction of the nuisance.

. . . But, when such structure is permanent in its character, and its construction and continuance are not necessarily injurious, but may or may not be so, the injury to be compensated in a suit is only the damage which has happened; and there may be as many successive recoveries as there are successive injuries. In such case the statute of limitations begins to run from the happening of the injury complained way caused intermittent overflows, some being slight and beneficial to the land, while others were very injurious, it was held that the first injurious overflow would not furnish a safe basis from which future damages could be calculated; and therefore an action for damages would not be barred because not brought within the statutory period from the first injurious overflow. In this case the court took occasion to say: "Again, it is clear that the plaintiff herein could not have maintained an action until some actual injury was caused to her by the diversion of the water by the defendant. There is here no claim of any such injury until 1888,—less than two years prior to the commencement of this action. True, the evidence shows various overflows of the plaintiff's land prior to that, but, if they caused any injury, no damage is claimed for it."

In Consolidated Home Supply Ditch & Reservoir Co. v. Hamlin, 6 Colo. App. 341, 40 Pac. 582, it was held that damages to land, inflicted long subsequent to the lawful and proper construction thereof of an irrigation ditch, from percolation and seepage from the ditch, which could not be foreseen or the extent of the injury determined when the ditch was constructed, are continuing damages for which recovery may be had for the full period of the statute of limitations.

Cases of a similar nature and holding to the same effect are Huntsville v. Ewing, 116 Ala. 576, 22 So. 984 (digging of ditch by city resulting in overflow of adjoining property); Smith v. Atlanta, 75 Ga. 110 (overflowing of sewer during heavy rains and foul deposits left on lot); Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Connors, 25 Ill. App. 561, and Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Riley, 25 Ill. App. 569 (digging of ditch along railroad embankment, diverting water and throwing it upon adjoining land); Baker v. Leka, 48 Ill. App. 353 (throwing of water on adjoining land by construction of ditch which was abatable as a nuisance and thus not permanent in of." This rule has been repeatedly followed by the court, being applied according to the facts in each individual case. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Yarbrough, 56 Ark. 612, 20 S. W. 515; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Cook, 57 Ark. 387, 21 S. W. 1066; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Anderson, 62 Ark. 360, 35 S. W. 791; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Stephens, 72 Ark. 127, 78 S. W. 766; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Morris, 76 Ark. 542, 89 S. W. 846; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. McCutchen, 80 Ark. 235, 96 S. W. 1054; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hoshall, 82 Ark. 387, 102 S. W. 207.

Counsel for appellant in their brief contend that appellees were wrongdoers ab initio, and that they are chargeable with knowledge that the straightened channel of the creek, made so by the construction of the ditch, would so accelerate the flow of the water as to materially injure the land of appellant. Conceding this to be true, the damage was original and susceptible of immediate estimation. In other words, they claim that the injury to the land resulted from the construction of the ditch. Therefore it necessarily follows that the cause of action was barred at the institution of the suit. The physical facts bear out this view. The evident object of digging the ditch was for the purpose of straightening the channel of the creek across the lands through which it runs, and thereby draining the lands. It was obvious that water would flow faster through a straight than through a crooked channel. That the velocity of the water in the channel of the ditch was greater than that in the old channel of the creek must have been perceptible from the first. That the swifter current would cause the banks of the ditch to be worn away, and thus make it deeper and wider, was also apparent. The present and future effect upon the land could have been ascertained with reasonable certainty, and the injury complained of was permanent in its character.

Therefore, we are of the opinion that the action is barred by the statute of limlaw); Kansas City v. King, 65 Kan. 64, 68 Pac. 1093 (failure to provide suitable flood gates for sewer, on account of which during freshets water and sewage were backed up on plaintiff's premises); Kansas City v. Frohwerk, 10 Kan. App. 120, 62 Pac. 432 (grading and guttering of street, in consequence of which water was thrown on adjoining property); Louisville v. Norris, 111 Ky. 903, 98 Am. St. Rep. 437, 64 S. W. 958 (overflow from defective sewer); Sloggy v. Dilworth, 38 Minn. 179, 8 Am. St. Rep. 656, 36 N. W. 451 (construction of ditch, overflowing adjoining property); Mangold v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 24 Mo. App. 52 (digging of ditch by railroad into which creek overflowed during high water, and thence upon adjoining property); Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. Harlin, 50 Neb. 698, 36 L.R.A. 417, 61 Am. St. Rep. 578, 70 N. W. 263 (negligent construction of ditches along railroad, whereby surface water was gathered and thrown onto adjoining property); Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 74 Neb. 563, 104 N. W. 1144 (construction of ditch along railroad embankment, resulting in overflow of adjoining property and its consequent destruction of crops); Morse v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Neb.) 116 N. W. 859; Hocutt v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 124 N. C. 214, 32 S. E. 681 (cutting of ditches along right of way of railroad, and thereby causing increased flow in adjoining small stream); Houston v. Houston, E. & W. T. R. Co. 26 Tex. Civ. App. 228, 63 S. W. 1056 (change of sewers and drainage ditches by cities, resulting, during heavy rains, in overflow of adjoining property); Houston v. Parr (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 393 (construction of ditch by city, resulting in overflow of property from year to year); St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Clayton (Tex. Civ. App.) 118 S. W. 248 (negligent construction of ditches by which land was overflowed and crops destroyed).

This seems, also, to have been recognized in Louisville v. O'Malley, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 873, 53 S. W. 287, where the city permitted the end of a sewer to stop up and thus overflow adjoining property; and Gulf, W. T. & P. R. Co. v. Goldman, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 257, 28 S. W. 267, where the digging of a ditch without a sufficient outlet caused stagnant water to stand therein to the injury of the value of an adjoining farm and the health of near-by inhabitants.

In Lebanon v. Twiford, 13 Ind. App. 384, 41 N. E. 844, it was held that an action for injury to land from overflow caused by the overtaxing of a main drain constructed by a municipal corporation as an outlet for surface waters, by the subsequent construction of lateral drains and the grade of streets, is not barred by the statute of limitations, where it does not appear that the lateral drains and other improvements were constructed six years prior to the commencement of the action, although a longer time has elapsed since the construction of the main ditch.

In Roundtree v. Brantley, 34 Ala. 544, 73 Am. Dec. 470, it was held no defense to an action for damages to land from the overflowing thereof by backwater caused by the accumulation of sand washing into the stream from a ditch constructed by the defendant, that such ditch was constructed and has been used by him for the period necessary for the requirement of a prescriptive right, when the lands have been overflowed for less than such period; as there was no infringement of any right of the plaintiff until the ditch had caused the formation of an obstruction, and consequently the computation of the period of prescription could not commence until that time.

itations. Having held that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, it is not necessary to determine the other questions presented by the appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

NORMAN L. NEWHALL, Respt.,

v.

JOURNAL PRINTING COMPANY, Appt.

(105 Minn. 44, 117 N. W. 228.)

Master — contract of employment — mutuality.

1. A contract for employment is not lacking in mutuality because the party employed does not bind himself to continue in the employment for a definite period.

Agency — termination.

2. A contract of agency, which leaves the agent free to terminate his relations with the principal on reasonable or specified notice, must be construed to confer the same

Headnotes by JAGGARD, J.

Case Note. — Mutuality of contract of employment which, by its terms, is binding upon only one of the parties for the time designated.

The question as to the right to specific performance of a contract of employment as affected by lack of mutuality is not included in this note, as the denial of specific performance on that ground does not necessarily imply that the contract is invalid.

It would seem to be the rule, in the absence of an independent consideration, that, where a contract of employment does not bind one of the parties for either a definite or indefinite time, but, by its terms, does bind the other; or, in other words, where the termination of the contract depends upon the will or actions of one of the parties, — such a contract is not considered a mutual obligation, and is therefore not binding upon either, unless the element of mutuality is otherwise supplied.

This seems to have been recognized in East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Scott, 72 Tex. 70, 13 Am. St. Rep. 758, 10 S. W. 99, infra, where the court said: "Reciprocal promises, made at the same time and in relation to an agreement, furnish the one for the other a consideration to support a contract; and, if the appellee was relying on such a consideration to sustain the contract, he would fail, for there is no pretense that he promised to render any services whatever for the appellant." This, however, was dictum as there was an independent consideration in this case.

So, in Bolles v. Sachs, 37 Minn. 315, 33 N. W. 862, infra, it was recognized that, unless such an agreement was supported by some other consideration, the employer might right upon the principal, unless provisions to the contrary are stipulated.

Corporation extension — presumption — damages.

3. Damages for the breach of such an agency contract by improper termination by the principal, if a corporation, do not necessarily extend beyond the period for which it was organized. There is no presumption of law that such a corporation will prolong its artificial existence by availing itself of statutory provisions for renewal of its franchise.

Damages — contract — breach — profits.

4. It is here held that defendant newspaper was not, as a matter of law, justified in terminating a contract with a carrier; that its breach of that contract did not entitle the plaintiff to recover damages for prospective profits for a longer time than during the remainder of the period for which the company was incorporated; that plaintiff was not entitled, under his complaint for a breach of a contract for daily delivery "(Sundays excepted)," to recover damages for breach of a contract to sell and deliver the Sunday edition subsequently issued.

(July 3, 1908.)

revoke it before the other party had acted upon it. In this case also there was an independent consideration.

A case closely related to the above is Vogel v. Pekoc, 157 Ill. 339, 30 L.R.A. 491, 42 N. E. 386, where it was held that a contract whereby the first party agrees to employ the second party to perform such work as he may assign to him from time to time imposes no obligation on the first party; and a provision therein for the forfeiture of a specified sum by the servant in case he shall leave the employment without a specified notice constitutes no defense to an action by the latter for his wages, as the contract is void for want of mutuality. And see Bowers v. Detroit Southern R. Co. 26 Ohio C. C. 518, infra.

In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Matthews, 64 Ark. 398, 39 L.R.R. 467, 42 S. W. 902 it was held that want of mutuality in the contract will permit the discharge at any time of a railroad engineer employed under a contract by which the employer agrees to pay him according to specified rates for his services, not to discharge him without just cause, to promote him according to specified grades of service, and, when discharges of engineers are made, to discharge in the order of juniority in service, where there is no agreement on his part to serve for any specified time.

A similar case so holding is Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Offutt, 99 Ky. 427, 59 Am. St. Rep. 467, 36 S. W. 181.

An interesting case on this question, though possibly not strictly in point here, is Wilkinson v. Heavenrich, 58 Mich. 574, 55 Am. Rep. 708, 26 N. W. 139. Here a tailoring firm agreed to employ a cutter for

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Hennepin County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for breach of contract. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cohen, Atwater, & Shaw, for appellant:

The contract, being silent as to its duration, was terminable at any time, either with or without cause, on thirty days' notice.

Willcox & G. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Ewing, 141 U. S. 627, 35 L. ed. 882, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 94; Bolles v. Sachs, 37 Minn. 315, 33 N. W. 862; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v.

Matthews, 64 Ark. 398, 39 L.R.A. 467, 42 S. W. 902.

It was error to permit the jury to assess damages for plaintiff's loss of profits during the possible renewal of the term of the corporation.

McMullan v. Dickinson Co. 63 Minn. 405, 65 N. W. 661, 663; Kronsnabel-Smith Co. v. Kronsnabel, 87 Minn. 230, 91 N. W. 892.

Mr. Norton M. Cross for respondent.

Jaggard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff sought to recover damages for the breach of a contract made by the defendant three years, in consideration of the latter working for them for that length of time, the contract being signed by the employers only. It appeared that, after the cutter had worked for some time, he was discharged, and thereupon he brought an action in assumpsit; the court, in holding that the action could not be maintained, said: "The consideration consisted of mutual promises of the parties, not to be performed within a year from the making thereof. The defendants' promise was in writing, and signed by them; but the plaintiff's promise does not appear in the writing signed by the defendants, nor was any note or memorandum made and signed by him, promising to labor for defendants three years or any length of time. Plaintiff was never bound by the agreement. There never was, then, any consideration to support defendants' promises. The agreement was void for want of mutuality. The plaintiff was under no legal obligation to work for defendants a moment longer than he chose, and the defendants were under none to keep him in their employment."

However, in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jackson, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 342, 69 S. W. 89, it was held competent for parties to make a contract binding upon one of them for a certain length of time, but which the other might terminate whenever he saw fit. And see Carter White Lead Co. v. Kinlin, 47 Neb. 409, 66 N. W. 536, infra.

In Woodward v. Smith, 109 Wis. 607, 85 N. W. 424, it was held that a contract with well drillers by which they were to drill until a flowing well was obtained or they were ordered to stop, at fixed prices per foot depending on the distance drilled, is not void for want of mutuality.

The court, in NEWHALL v. JOURNAL PRINTING CO., declares that a contract for employment is not lacking in mutuality because the party employed does not bind himself to continue in the employment for a definite period; but it will be noted that in Carnig v. Carr, 167 Mass. 544, 35 L.R.A. 512, 57 Am. St. Rep. 488, 46 N. E. 117, cited in support of that proposition, as well as in the NEWHALL CASE itself, there was an independent executed consideration moving from the employee.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In two cases the element of mutuality seems to have been considered as supplied by the employee's signature to the contract.

Thus, in Nounenbocker v. Hooper, 4 E. D. Smith, 401, a contract signed by both parties, whereby an employer promised to give an employee steady employment for the term of one year on certain terms, was held not void for want of mutuality, although in form at least there was no covenant on the latter's part.

In Walton v. Mather, 16 Misc. 546, 38 N. Y. Supp. 782, a memorandum signed by both parties, reciting an employer's engagement of an actor's services for the season at a specified salary, was held not unilateral, the latter's signature being an assent to the engagement specified.

So, the element of mutuality may be supplied by the party not bound commencing working under it.

In Raphael v. Hartman, 87 Ill. App. 634, it was held that a contract by the terms of which an agent undertakes to devote his time for the period of one year to the sale of goods in consideration for the principal's agreement to pay him his salary and traveling expenses was held not void for want of mutuality, although the agent did not sign the contract, but in fact did accept its terms by commencing work under it.

So, in Morris v. Taliaferro, 75 Ill. App. 182, it was held that an undertaking of one person to employ another for one year, when accepted and acted upon by the employee until he is discharged, possesses the mutuality essential to a contract, and is binding on the employer.

In Sagalowitz v. Pellman, 32 Misc. 508, 66 N. Y. Supp. 433, it was held that a contract for services until a specified date, assumed, for the purpose of the case, to be lacking mutuality in that the employee failed at the time of making the contract to promise the employer that he would render services during that term, may be remedied as to the want of mutuality by the subsequent conduct of the parties, or by subsequent admissions of the employer that the contract is still in existence.

In Butterick Pub. Co. v. Whitcomb, 225 Ill. 605, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1004, 80 N. E. 247, the stipulation in regard to the term of with plaintiff's assignor for the delivery of newspapers and for collection of the price thereof. The contract in question set forth that for a consideration of $135, paid by plaintiff's assignor to the defendant, the defendant gave to such assignor, and therefore to plaintiff, the exclusive right to sell defendant's publication within certain specified territory under the terms and conditions stated in the contract. The specification of the time of the duration of the contract was as follows: "Either party to this contract may at any time terminate said contract upon thirty days' written notice to the other party, and upon the expiration of the thirty days from the date of the service of said notice all the rights of said second party under said contract shall cease, except the right of reimbursement as hereinafter provided; provided, however, that said first party shall not terminate this contract, except for the dishonesty, incompetence, negligence, inattention, or irresponsibility of said second party." The jury returned a verdict of $928.40. A motion for a new trial was granted unless plaintiff would remit all of the verdict above $728, in which event the court ordered that the verdict should stand in all respects as if originally rendered for $728. Plaintiff duly remitted in accordance with the order. This appeal was taken from that order.

service was considered binding upon both parties; and it was therefore held that a contract of employment signed by the employer only is not void for want of mutuality upon the ground that it was not binding on the employee, where it recites that he is to begin service at a specified date, that it is mutually understood that it is to continue for five years, and that his willingness to perform his duties is a part of the essentials of the agreement.

The question of mutuality of contract has often arisen in those cases where, in consideration of the release from liability for injuries received, an employer agrees to give his injured employee steady and permanent employment, or for a definite period, without exacting from the employee the corresponding promise to remain for such designated period. It has, however, been universally held in these cases that such contracts are mutual and therefore binding upon the employer. Pennsylvania Co. v. Dolan, 6 Ind. App. 109, 51 Am. St. Rep. 289, 32 N. E. 802; Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. v. Rule, 106 Ky. 455, 50 S. W. 685; Sax v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 125 Mich. 252, 84 Am. St. Rep. 572, 84 N. W. 314; Smith v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 60 Minn. 330, 62 N. W. 392; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Tierney, 29 Ohio C. C. 83, affirmed in 75 Ohio St. 565, 80 N. E. 1128; East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Scott, 72 Tex. 70, 13 Am. St. Rep. 758, 10 S. W. 99; Stearns v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 112 Mich. 651, 71 N. W. 148; Kelly v. Peter & B. Stone Co. (Ky.) 113 S. W. 486.

A similar case, and holding to the same effect, is Carter White Lead Co. v. Kinlin, supra, the court saying that a contract does not lack mutuality merely because every obligation of the one party is not met by an equivalent counter obligation of the other.

In Bowers v. Detroit Southern R. Co. 26 Ohio C. C. 518, although the court recognized that a contract of employment in no stipulated capacity, for no stated period, except such as may be satisfactory to the employer, and for no designated wages, does not imply mutuality, it was held that an answer of a railroad company, based upon a contract of re-employment of a former employee, which avers that, in consideration of his re-employment, plaintiff released it from all claims that he had against it arising out of any injuries sustained by the accident set forth in the petition; and that thereupon, in consideration of said release, defendant re-employed plaintiff and continued to retain him in its employ until such time as plaintiff voluntarily left its employ, —is not demurrable for want of consideration or mutuality of contract.

In McMullan v. Dickinson Co. 63 Minn. 405, 65 N. W. 661, 663, it was held that an agreement by a corporation to employ a person at a stated salary as long as its business continues, provided he discharges his duties efficiently and continues to hold in his own name a specified amount of the capital stock, is supported by mutual consideration on both sides.

In Carnig v. Carr, supra, where a person, in consideration of giving up his own business, made an agreement with another for permanent employment, the contract was held mutual, although the employee did not bind himself to continue in such employment.

In Bolles v. Sachs, 37 Minn. 315, 33 N. W. 862, although the period of service was left expressly and entirely to the employee's election, the contract was considered mutual, there being in this case also sufficient consideration for such a contract.

In Hobbs v. Brush Electric Light Co. 75 Mich. 550, 42 N. W. 965, it was recognized that an agreement on the part of an employer to give an employee steady employment upon the latter's releasing a cause of action for damages against the former was a legal and binding contract.

There are possibly many other cases which have upheld the validity of such a contract, but have not, in terms, at least, discussed its mutuality. No effort has been made to exhaust these cases.

For cases on mutuality of contract giving a real-estate broker exclusive authority to sell, or promising him commissions in case of sale by anyone else: but which does not in terms impose any obligation upon him,—see case note to Schoenmann v. Whitt, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 599.

One of the essential questions in this case is whether the contract was terminable by defendant, with or without cause, on thirty days' notice. Defendant contends that, where a contract for the employment of a person in a particular business as long as the latter may elect to serve has been broken by the employer, the employee, having never fixed by his election the period of service, cannot recover substantial damages for the breach, inasmuch as the obligation violated is too uncertain. Bolles v. Sachs, 37 Minn. 315, 33 N. W. 862; Cf. McMullan v. Dickinson Co. 63 Minn. 405, 65 N. W. 661, 663. And see St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Matthews, 64 Ark. 398, 39 L.R.A. 467, 42 S. W. 902. It is, however, well settled that a contract for employment is not lacking in mutuality because the party employed does not bind himself to continue in the employment for an definite period (Carnig v. Carr, 35 L.R.A. 512, and note, [167 Mass. 544, 57 Am. St. Rep. 488, 46 N. E. 117]), and that a contract for agency, which leaves the agent free to terminate his relations with the principal on reasonable or specified notice, must be construed to confer the same right upon the principal unless provisions to the contrary are stipulated. Willcox & G. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Ewing, 141 U. S. 627, 35 L. ed. 882, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 94; Smith v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 60 Minn. 330, 62 N. W. 392. And see Pennsylvania Co. v. Dolan, 6 Ind. App. 109, 51 Am. St. Rep. 289, 32 N. E. 802. There is no doubt that, by the present contract, the parties intended, and clearly expressed their intention, that the defendant should not terminate that contract "except for dishonesty, incompetence, negligence, inattention, or irresponsibility" of the other party thereto, who, for present purposes, is the plaintiff. The conclusion follows that the plaintiff was entitled to recover in some amount unless the evidence showed that he was discharged for cause. An examination of the record has satisfied us that the defendants were not, as a matter of law, justified in terminating the contract for cause, and that the verdict of the jury on this point is sustained by the evidence.

With respect to the extent of the recovery of damages, the trial court construed the contract as continuing through any renewal of the primary term of the corporate existence, and permitted the plaintiff to assess damages for plaintiff's loss of profits during the possible renewal. No period was fixed by the contract itself at which it must be terminated. The defendant's charter, un- 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

der the laws of this state, expired in about five years. No evidence was offered to show that in fact the defendant intended to renew its artificial existence for any further time in pursuance of statutory provisions. Plaintiff thinks, indeed, that no such proof would have been admissible or obtainable. The award of damages to the extent allowed by the trial court must have rested entirely upon the presumption of law that the corporation would extend its franchise. Why this should be presumed, although it could not be proved, has not been made to appear. The reasoning is analogous. Artificial presumption is made to stand as a substitute for proof said to be impossible. By parity of reasoning that presumption would not be subject to rebuttal. Thus the law, independent of facts, has finally adjudged that the corporation will renew its existence; for it is to be observed that the court did not submit to the jury whether, as a matter of fact, the corporation would prolong its own life. It is by no means certain that, under all conditions, proof of probable renewal of corporate existence would not be obtainable and admissible; but it is clear that upon this record the charge of the trial court as to the period for which plaintiff's damages could be assessed was erroneous.

The final question is whether a new trial should be granted or the verdict reduced to the reasonable profits from the date of the breach by the corporation to the end of the artificial existence of the defendant. Plaintiff was entitled to a return of his deposit and to the fair estimate of his profits for the remaining five years, more or less. The present yearly profits were estimated at $120. Of this, however, about one half was derived from the sale and delivery of the Sunday Journal. At the time the contract was signed the defendant did not issue a Sunday edition. The contract expressly provided that the defendant should sell and deliver to the carrier "as soon as practicable after publication each day (Sundays excepted) as many copies of said newspaper" as the carrier shall order. Subsequently a Sunday edition was issued, and was in fact sold and distributed by the carrier. For the services so rendered, recovery could be had, but not under the original contract. Whether or not what was said or done by the parties amounted to a new contract, or to a modification of the original contract, we need not inquire. Nothing to that effect is alleged in the complaint. A reduction of the verdict is accordingly not feasible.

Reversed, and new trial granted.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.
(Division No. 1.)

PATRICK KELLY et al., Appts.,
v.
HENRY BENAS et al., Respts.

(— Mo. —, 116 S. W. 557.)

Negligence — unsafe premises — attractive nuisance.

1. A landowner is not liable for injury to a trespassing child by the fall of a pile of lumber on which he was playing, on the theory that it was an attractive nuisance.

Same — children — invitation.

2. No invitation to children to play in one's lumber yard can be implied from the fact that he does not always drive them away when they enter it.

(February 25, 1909.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from an order of the Circuit Court for the City of St. Louis overruling a motion to set aside a nonsuit in an action brought to recover statutory damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiffs' minor son. Affirmed.

Statement by Lamm, P. J.:

Plaintiffs (father and mother of Michael Kelly) sued for the death of Michael, an infant of tender years, laying their damages at $5,000, and grounding their action on negligence. Proof went in pro and con. At the close of the evidence the court instructed the jury that, under the pleadings and evidence, their verdict must be for defendants. Thereupon plaintiffs took a nonsuit with leave. Failing to get it set aside, they appeal.

The Pleadings.

The petition charges the intermarriage of plaintiffs; that their son, Michael, was the rise of nine years old on the 18th of June,

Note.—The doctrine of attractive nuisance, upon which the above case turns, will be found fully discussed in a note to Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone & Co. 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1094. Since the publication of that note it has been held in Snare & T. Co. v. Friedman, 169 Fed. 1, that one who piles in a public highway iron beams which to his knowledge are attractive to children of tender years is bound, on that account, to use due care to prevent such material from becoming so unstable as to fall upon them while at play thereon. This is just the opposite conclusion from that reached in Friedman v. Snare & T. Co. 71 N. J. L. 605. 70 L.R.A. 147, 108 Am. St. Rep. 764, 61 Atl. 401, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 497, a case in the state court between the same parties on the same facts, which will be found cited in the note above referred to. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

1905; that defendants were the owners, occupants, and proprietors of certain premises on South Second street, in the city of St. Louis, and the lumber and lumber yard thereon; that said premises opened on said street and on a public alley, were unfenced and unguarded, and that children in large numbers played on the premises, all of which defendants well knew; that such open lumber yard was an attraction for children to play on said premises at and about where the lumber was piled, as defendants well knew; that children in large numbers were attracted to play at and about the piles of lumber upon said premises, and were endangered if such lumber be negligently piled, all of which defendants well knew before Michael was killed; that defendants negligently piled lumber in their yard so loosely, insecurely, and without any fastenings that said lumber fell upon Michael and injured him so that he died; that on said date defendants had piled and were maintaining a pile of lumber in said yard in such manner that long pieces of lumber and timber were laid on top of shorter pieces, to a great height; that thereby said pile was made top-heavy and liable to fall; that the pile was built without braces or cleats to secure it from falling, and was without fastenings of any kind to prevent its falling; that a pile so piled was dangerous to persons near the lumber, because liable to fall and injure them; that it was especially dangerous to children attracted by said premises to be and play near said pile, as defendants well knew at all said times, notwithstanding which defendants so negligently piled and maintained said lumber pile in such dangerous and defective condition that on said date Michael was attracted to said premises to be and play thereon near said dangerous pile of lumber, when, by reason of its defective condition, it gave way, and the lumber, falling upon Michael, fractured his skull, and otherwise so broke his bones and crushed him that he died two days later.

The answer was a general denial, and a plea of the negligence of Michael, in that he with some companions wrongfully trespassed upon the premises, and carelessly and negligently caused lumber to fall upon him; and, moreover, that the injuries of Michael were caused, or directly contributed to, by the carelessness and negligence of plaintiffs in permitting their said son wrongfully to trespass upon said premises and the lumber piles.

The reply was a general denial.

The Facts.

It is agreed on all sides that defendants for many years maintained a box factory across the street from the locus; that they owned a lumber yard maintained on the north half of a certain lot, and that they rented the premises from month to month; that at the time in hand they had several piles of lumber on this half lot; that said half lot never had been fenced in front or rear, but wagons drove through the yard directly from Second street to the alley. That plaintiffs lived in an upper apartment in a house next door to the lumber yard.

Plaintiffs put in proof tending to show that they did not allow Michael to play in the lumber yard, and that, whenever they found him there in disobedience to their instructions, they admonished him and brought him away; that the yard is located in a populous part of the city of St. Louis, and many children lived in that region; that the pile killing the boy had been there several months, and was twelve feet and upwards high, was some distance from the alley, and some distance from Second street; that it had no cleats or "stick binders," and no bracing of any kind, and that, while short pieces were on the bottom, longer pieces were on top. They also put in evidence tending to show that children played in the yard frequently, mostly afternoons after school hours, and Sundays; that the right way to pile lumber safely was to pile it with cross-binding sticks or cleats to brace the pile. Patrick Kelly testified that defendant George Benas told him in the presence of one Carraher and his own foreman, the next day after the accident, that he (Benas) knew boys played there, and that the pile was not in good condition. Carraher also testified that he heard Benas say that the lumber was not piled right. Plaintiffs' evidence further tended to show that at about 7 o'clock Sunday evening, on said 18th of June, Michael's father was eating his supper when the boy left the room and went downstairs. In about fifteen minutes the crash of falling lumber was heard, and Michael was found, under some boards that had fallen off said pile, mortally hurt. The boards were about 16 feet long, 2 inches thick, and 12 inches wide. Their evidence further tends to show that, at the time the upper part of the pile fell off, nobody was on it, and that Michael was standing 4 or 5 feet from it watching another boy fly a kite, when all at once the lumber gave way and crushed him. There was evidence of a negative character put in by plaintiffs to the effect that neither the defendants nor their watchman had been seen by the witnesses testifying or heard to chase or warn boys away from the yard; that on some occasions the watchman was seen looking at boys playing there, and did or said nothing. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Defendants, on their part, put in proof to the effect that the lumber was carefully piled; that they employed a watchman on Sundays and evenings, who guarded the yard and lumber against trespassers and warned children away; that children did not play there with the consent of defendants, but, to the contrary, were constantly warned and driven away by them and their employees and by policemen; that the pile was not rickety or top-heavy; that there was a shed used by a junk dealer joining the lumber yard, about a foot from the pile, which was a little higher than the pile; that at the time of the accident there had been some boys on the roof of this shed flying a kite,—Michael, one of them; that they were warned off by the wife of the owner of the shed, and, in jumping from the shed to the lumber pile, Michael was the last to go, and the lumber fell just as he jumped. Other evidence tended to show that, in flying a kite, the boys went on a lumber pile instead of the roof of the junk dealer's shed; that Michael had been on the roof shortly before, but got down to the ground, and, in climbing back on the lumber pile, the upper part fell on him. Evidence was put in contradicting the admissions testified to by Patrick Kelly and Carraher to the effect that Benas knew the lumber was not piled properly.

Such, in brief, is the case on the facts.

Messrs. A. R. Taylor and Howard Taylor, for appellants:

The lumber pile was an attractive nuisance for which the landowner is responsible.

Hydraulic Works Co. v. Orr, 83 Pa. 336; Fink v. Missouri Furnace Co. 10 Mo. App. 61; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Strout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Townsend v. Wathen, 9 East, 277; Crafton v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 55 Mo. 580; Morgan v. Wabash R. Co. 159 Mo. 275, 60 S. W. 195; Klockenbrink v. St. Louis & M. River R. Co. 172 Mo. 687, 72 S. W. 900; Scullin v. Wabash R. Co. 184 Mo. 707, 83 S. W. 760; Reyburn v. Missouri P. R. Co. 187 Mo. 574, 86 S. W. 174; Sites v. Knott, 197 Mo. 711, 96 S. W. 206; Wise v. St. Louis Transit Co. 198 Mo. 558, 95 S. W. 898; Goff v. St. Louis Transit Co. 199 Mo. 709, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 244, 98 S. W. 49; McQuade v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. 200 Mo. 158, 98 S. W. 552.

Messrs. Lyon & Swarts and Dwight D. Currie, for respondents:

The defendants were under no duty to guard the lumber pile although it was attractive to children.

Smith v. Jacob Dold Packing Co. 82 Mo. App. 9; Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 126 Mo. 372, 26 L.R.A. 847, 28 S. W. 1069;

Arnold v. St. Louis, 152 Mo. 173, 48 L.R.A. 291, 75 Am. St. Rep. 447, 63 S. W. 900; Moran v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 134 Mo. 641, 33 L.R.A. 755, 56 Am. St. Rep. 543, 36 S. W. 659; Overholt v. Vieths, 93 Mo. 422, 3 Am. St. Rep. 557, 6 S. W. 74; Gillespie v. McGowan, 100 Pa. 144, 45 Am. Rep. 365; Rodgers v. Lees, 140 Pa. 484, 12 L.R.A. 216, 23 Am. St. Rep. 250, 21 Atl. 399; Thompson v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 218 Pa. 444, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1162, 120 Am. St. Rep. 897, 67 Atl. 768, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 894; Butz v. Cavanaugh, 137 Mo. 503, 59 Am. St. Rep. 504, 38 S. W. 1104; Loftus v. Dehail, 133 Cal. 214, 65 Pac. 379; Richards v. Connell, 45 Neb. 467, 63 N. W. 915; Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1; Klix v. Nieman, 68 Wis. 271, 60 Am. Rep. 854, 32 N. W. 223; Ratte v. Dawson, 50 Minn. 450, 52 N. W. 965; Benson v. Baltimore Traction Co. 77 Md. 535, 20 L.R.A. 714, 39 Am. St. Rep. 436, 26 Atl. 973; Vanderbeck v. Hendry, 34 N. J. L. 467; Shea v. Gurney, 163 Mass. 184, 47 Am. St. Rep. 446, 39 N. E. 996; Williams v. Kansas City, S. & M. R. Co. 96 Mo. 275, 9 S. W. 573; Straub v. Soderer, 53 Mo. 43; Barry v. Calvary Cemetery Asso. 106 Mo. App. 358, 80 S. W. 709; Johnson v. Paducah Laundry Co. 122 Ky. 369, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 733, 92 S. W. 330; Friedman v. Snare & T. Co. 71 N. J. L. 605, 70 L.R.A. 147, 108 Am. St. Rep. 764, 61 Atl. 401, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 497; Smith v. Hopkins, 57 C. C. A. 193, 120 Fed. 921; Mathews v. Bense, 51 N. J. L. 30, 16 Atl. 195; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Edwards, 90 Tex. 65, 32 L.R.A. 825, 36 S. W. 430; Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355, 5 Am. St. Rep. 281, 5 S. E. 369; Williamson v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 40 Tex. Civ. App. 18, 88 S. W. 279.

At the time plaintiffs' son was killed he was a trespasser upon defendant's property, and defendants owed him no duty except to refrain from wilfully injuring him.

Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 126 Mo. 372, 26 L.R.A. 847, 28 S. W. 1069; Moran v. Pullman Palace Car Co.; Williams v. Kansas City, S. & M. R. Co.; Smith v. Jacob Dold Packing Co.; Gillespie v. McGowan; Rodgers v. Lees; Thompson v. Baltimore & O. R. Co.; and Williamson v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co.,—supra.

Lamm, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On such record we are of opinion plaintiffs cannot recover. This, because:

One applicable general rule of law is that there must be a duty raised by the law and breached by defendant before an action for negligence lies. Another is that the landowner or occupant owes no duty to trespassers or volunteers, going upon his 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

land for their own purpose, to maintain it in any particular condition for their benefit. Sweeney v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 10 Allen, loc. cit. 372, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Straub v. Soderer, 53 Mo. 38. Volunteers, bare licensees, and trespassers take the premises for better or for worse, as they find them, assuming the risk of injury from their condition, the owner being liable only for concealed spring guns, or other hidden traps intentionally put out to injure them, or any form of wilful, illegal force used towards them. To invitees, however, he owes the active duty to exercise reasonable care for their safety.

There was always a main modification allowed to the foregoing general nonliability to persons entering without the owner's permission, and that arose where he made such changes in his land so hard by a public highway as to put a traveler in danger who mistook the course of the highway, and, without fault on his part, inadvertently strayed from it into the danger. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. v. Harvey, 77 Ohio St., loc. cit. 240, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1136, 122 Am. St. Rep. 503, 83 N. E. 66, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 981. Says Campbell, J. (Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. loc. cit. 5): "We have found no support for any rule which would protect those who go where they are not invited, but merely with express or tacit permission, from curiosity or motives of private convenience, in no way connected with business or other relations with the occupant. . . . A person incurs no duties towards persons by not warning or driving them from his premises, and they go there, if mere volunteers and without invitation, at their own risk." In the same case that jurist says (referring to the application of the foregoing principles to children): "There is some danger, in dealing with these questions, of confounding legal obligations with those sentiments which are independent of the law, and rest merely on grounds of feeling or moral considerations. We feel, usually, more indignation at wrongs done to children than at wrongs done to others. But the law has not usually given them civil remedies on any such basis. Nor does it usually, if ever, impose any duties on strangers towards them, resting entirely on the fact that they are children. Those who have any special dealings with them, as parents, teachers, and employers, incur obligations appropriate to their relations, and differing from those incurred towards others in proportion to the necessity of care and protection and the risk of injury. But those who have no such relations with them are not liable for negligence in carrying on their own business, beyond what would be their liability to others, as well as children, who are equally free from blame." In the Hargreaves Case care was taken to express no opinion concerning cases where the nature of the business is such as to present peculiar attraction to children, beyond other kinds of occupation, nor was the writer dealing with the subject-matter of contributory negligence relating to children, which is to be gauged with reference to infantile capacity. With these modifying suggestions, we give approval to Judge Campbell's remarks.

There is another main exception grafted on the general rule of nonliability to trespassers, volunteers, or bare licensees, and on that exception appellants lean as on a staff. It is known in the law as the doctrine of the Turntable Cases,—a doctrine of this court (Berry v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co. 214 Mo. 593, 114 S. W. 27; Koons v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 65 Mo. 592; Nagel v. Missouri P. R. Co. 75 Mo. 653, 42 Am. Rep. 418) and of many other courts of last resort. The doctrine of those cases is, in substance, that a railroad turntable is a dangerous machine created by the act of its owner, peculiarly attractive to the childish instincts of little ones as a merry-go-round, and, if left unlocked when not in use (when it might be easily locked), and when exposed in a public place where children resort to it with the knowledge and tacit acquiescence of its owner to play on it, becomes an attractive nuisance and operates as an inducement, an implied invitation to them, and therefore when injured thereon, they are not treated strictly as voluntary trespassers, but as toled into a hidden pitfall or trap.

There has been marked judicial eloquence and astuteness in stating the legal grounds of liability in the Turntable Cases, and no little difficulty is found in formulating sound and settled legal principles for it to rest on; but it is established in our law, and doubtless on principle ought to be applied (in those jurisdictions asserting the doctrine) to other cases coming strictly within the limits of the doctrine and presenting every earmarking element upon which liability is predicated in the principal case. While this is so, the manifest distress and injustice flowing from unnecessarily extending the doctrine, or loosely applying it to many conceivable cases, has caused those courts accepting it to restrict its application to the narrowest bounds. For instance: In this court, in Overholt v. Vieths, 93 Mo. 422, 3 Am. St. Rep. 557, 6 S. W. 74, we refused to apply it in a case where a child was drowned in a pond of water in a rock quarry. In Schmidt v. Kansas City Distilling Co. 90 Mo. 284, 59

Am. Rep. 16, 1 S. W. 865, 2 S. W. 417, we applied it to a little pool of hot water on the private premises of defendant, made by blowing off hot water, débris, and steam through an escape pipe from defendant's distillery, in which pool a child was fatally scalded. But in Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 128 Mo. 372, 26 L.R.A. 847, 28 S. W. 1069, we doubted and refused to follow the Schmidt Case, and held that moving railroad cars were not within the purview of the Turntable Cases as dangerous and attractive machinery. In that case a child six years old got into a railway yard where children much frequented, and, catching hold of the stirrup in the foot of the ladder on a car and putting his feet against the trucks to steal a ride, he slipped off and was mangled. In Witte v. Stifel, 126 Mo. 295, 47 Am. St. Rep. 668, 28 S. W. 891, a little boy went to a building under way, 3 feet from the street line, and tried to draw himself up by taking hold of a loose stone placed across the top of a cellar window frame. The stone fell and killed him. It was held there could be no recovery. In Moran v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 134 Mo. 641, 33 L.R.A. 755, 56 Am. St. Rep. 543, 36 S. W. 659, the owner of a lot was held not liable for failing to fence it. In that case there was a pond on the lot, and a child was drowned while bathing in it. In Butz v. Cavanaugh, 137 Mo. 503, 59 Am. St. Rep. 504, 38 S. W. 1104, the owner of land was held not liable for injuries to a child who voluntarily went on his private premises against the admonition of his own father, and, in trying to get a piece of wire in an old quarry, used as a dumping ground, burned his feet in a smoldering fire. And in Arnold v. St. Louis, 152 Mo. 173, 48 L.R.A. 291, 75 Am. St. Rep. 447, 53 S. W. 900, a pond, lightly frozen over in the neighborhood of a public school, attractive to children of tender years for skating purposes, and where children were known by defendants to resort, was allowed to exist. Two children were drowned there while skating without the permission or invitation of the owner of the lot, and recovery was denied. In Carey v. Kansas City, 187 Mo. 715, 70 L.R.A. 65, 86 S. W. 438, a child lost its life by drowning. While pursuing a frog, he got through a fence inclosing a public reservoir. This reservoir was located in a public park or pleasure ground of the city, and the parents were cast on the theory that when the boy fell into the reservoir he was trespassing.

In other jurisdictions applying the turntable doctrine, there is the same tendency to limit it within strict bounds, as pointed out by Summers, J., in Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. v. Harvey, 77 Ohio St., loc. cit. 245, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1136, 122 Am. St. Rep. 503, 83 N. E. 66, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 981. The prying mind of the student in jurisprudence may see cases in point there collated from Minnesota, Georgia, Nebraska, California, Kansas, Texas, Tennessee, and Washington, to that effect. See also authorities cited by diligent counsel in their briefs.

If the old channel of the law is to be quite changed by the application of the new doctrine automatically and without discrimination, of sentimental considerations (however elevated and tender) are to usurp the place of cold and calm reason as the foundation for rules of law, then the flood gate now damming back liability will be raised, letting in strange and deep waters for the landowner to struggle with. Not only will he be liable for boys drowned while swimming in his stock pond (the idea of swimming being alluring to a boy), for those who fall into uncovered wells, cisterns, and cellars (the notion of playing on the brink of such being a boyish one), for children who are suffocated while playing in piles of sand accumulated for building purposes or in sliding down stacks of straw unscientifically piled and exposed, but he may be mulcted in damages for injuries to his neighbor's children, who, romping in his haymow, without his invitation, break their bones by sliding down his hay chute, or those who, playing in his rock quarry, are hurt. Shall he fence against adventurous, trespassing boys? Almost as well suggest "that he build a wall against birds." If he is held to liability for injury to the children of Jones because of the way he piles his lumber, by the same token, as to Brown, liability would be fastened on him for the way he piles his stones, his bricks, his corn in pens, his hayricks, and his cordwood on his private grounds; in fact, as has been pointedly said, every landowner will be liable for injuries to his neighbor's children under the new doctrine except the neighbor himself. We cannot well write the law that way.

Michael was a trespasser. Defendants did not intentionally injure him. They set no trap for him. Their lumber piles were not an attractive nuisance as defined in the Turntable Cases. Their yard was not used by children by their invitation, express or implied, as a playground, even though their watchman did not always drive children away, and though, on this Sunday evening, he was off duty for a spell. We think the court ruled correctly.

Therefore, the judgment is affirmed.

All concur.
20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

JOSEPH MORRIS .

v.

ARCHIE MILLER, Appt.

(— Neb. —, 119 N. W. 458.)

Assault — trial — instructions.

1. In an action for damages for an assault and battery, wherein it was claimed by each of the parties that the other was the aggressor, and by the defendant that what he did was in self-defense, it was not error for the court to instruct the jury, among other things, that the right of self-defense did not imply the right to attack, or to voluntarily enter into an affray, nor to use more force than was necessary for his defense; and that the question as to who provoked the difficulty or made the first assault was for the jury to decide under the evidence.

Trial — instructions — construction.

2. In construing instructions upon any given proposition, all instructions bearing upon the same should be construed together as a whole.

Assault — voluntary combat — right of action — defense.

3. Where two persons engage voluntarily in a fight, either can maintain an action against the other to recover the actual dam-

Headnotes by REESE, Ch. J.

Case Note. — Effect of fact that combat was by agreement or mutual consent of parties upon civil liability for assault.

The overwhelming weight of authority is in accord with the conclusion reached in the above case that, where two parties fight voluntarily, either party may recover from the other the actual damages suffered; and the consent of the plaintiff to engage in the combat will not bar his suit to recover.

Thus, in Lizana v. Lang, 90 Miss. 469, 43 So. 477, it was held that the acceptance of a challenge to fight, and the voluntarily engaging in a fight by one party with another because of the challenge so to do, could not be set up as a defense in a civil suit for assault and battery.

So, in Stout v. Wren, 8 N. C. (1 Hawks) 420, 9 Am. Dec. 653, it was held that the rule that a man should not recover recompense for an injury received by his own consent must necessarily be qualified to the extent that the act from whence the injury came must be lawful, and that "in those manly sports and exercises which are thought to qualify men for the use of arms, and to give them strength and activity, if two played by consent at cudgels and one hurt the other, no action would lie. But where, in an action for assault and battery, the defendant offered to give in evidence that the plaintiff and he boxed by consent, from whence the injury proceeded, it was held to be no bar to the action; for, as the act of age for the injuries he may receive; and the fact that the combat was by agreement or mutual consent of the parties to it is no defense.

Same — evidence — admissibility.

4. Immediately after an encounter between plaintiff and defendant, the plaintiff's hat was picked up near where he fell, and was introduced in evidence upon the trial, showing a break or rent at a place which, when worn, would be over or near the point of injury upon plaintiff's head. The identity, condition, and possession of the hat were shown by evidence preliminary to its introduction. Held, that the admission of the hat in evidence was not erroneous.

Appeal — exhibit in jury room — harmless error.

5. After the conclusion of the instructions by the court to the jury, and upon the jury retiring from the court room to deliberate upon their verdict, one of the jurors, by mistake and inadvertence, picked up the hat which had been introduced in evidence and carried it into the jury room, where it remained until the next day, when it was removed by a bailiff and returned to the court room. The evidence adduced upon the motion for a new trial showed: That the hat was taken by mistake, and that little, if any, attention was paid to it by the jurors; that it was upon the table around which the jurors assembled and used as a ballot box a part of the time; and that it was not used in any way for the purpose of influencing the minds of the jurors, and did not influence them. Held, that the taking of the hat to the jury room under the circumstances was an irregularity, but without prejudice to the defendant.

(January 23, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Buffalo County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for assault and battery. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

boxing is unlawful, the consent of the parties to fight could not excuse the injury."

And this proposition that the consent of the plaintiff cannot be pleaded as a defense in an action for assault and battery is asserted to be the law in the following authorities also: Matthew v. Ollerton, Comb. 218; Boulter v. Clark, Bull. N. P. 16; Christopherson v. Bare, 11 Q. B. 473; McNeil v. Mullin, 70 Kan. 639, 79 Pac. 168; Jones v. Gale, 22 Mo. App. 637; Bell v. Hansley, 48 N. C. (3 Jones, L.) 131; Willey v. Carpenter, 64 Vt. 212, 15 L.R.A. 853, 23 Atl. 630; 1 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. 282, 284.

Such, also, was the conclusion reached in the following cases, which also support the rule enunciated in Barholt v. Wright, 45 Ohio St. 179, 4 Am. St. Rep. 535, 12 N. E. 185, and in Grotton v. Glidden, 84 Me. 589, 30 Am. St. Rep. 413, 24 Atl. 1008 (both of which are reviewed at length in MORRIS v. MILLER), that it might be shown in mitigation of damages that the assault and battery complained of was committed by the defendant in the course of a fight with the plaintiff, entered into by mutual consent: Logan v. Austin, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 476; Thomas v. Riley, 114 Ill. App. 520; Adams v. Waggoner, 33 Ind. 531, 5 Am. Rep. 230; Lund v. Tyler, 115 Iowa, 236, 88 N. W. 333; Schutter v. Williams, 1 Ohio Dec. Reprint. 47; Shay v. Thompson, 59 Wis. 540, 48 Am. Rep. 538, 18 N. W. 473.

Indeed, the only cases which question this proposition are the following Michigan decisions, which are also cited in MORRIS v. MILLER.

In Galbraith v. Fleming, 60 Mich. 403, 27 N. W. 581, it was held that an instruction was as favorable to the plaintiff as the law would admit which stated that, if the plaintiff voluntarily engaged in the fight in the first instance for the sake of fighting, and not as a means of self-defense, he could not recover unless the defendant beat him excessively or unreasonably. To quote from the opinion: "The law does not put a premium upon fighting; and one who voluntarily enters into a quarrel will not be afforded relief for his own wrong in damages if he come out second best. While the voluntary act on the part of the plaintiff would not preclude the state from punishing him or the defendant for a breach of the peace, it nevertheless prevents him from bringing a civil action to recover compensation for injuries received by his own seeking, and in violation of law."

This position of the Michigan court would seem to find support in the other case from the same jurisdiction. Smith v. Simon, 69 Mich. 481, 37 N. W. 548, in which it appeared that the trial judge charged the jury that, if the plaintiff's arm was broken in a fight entered into by mutual agreement, the plaintiff could not recover unless the injury was the result of unnecessary and excessive beating and harshness on the part of the defendant, and the defendant intended seriously to injure him; but that, if the arm was broken with no intent to break it on the part of the defendant, the plaintiff could not recover. A judgment for the plaintiff was reversed because there was an entire absence of testimony tending to show that the defendant was guilty of unnecessary beating and harshness, or intended to do the plaintiff the injury complained of.

Of course, if the injury complained of in an action for assault and battery resulted from a friendly scuffle, there can be no recovery for the plaintiff unless it is shown that the defendant used greater force than was justifiable under the circumstances, or was reckless or negligent. Nicholls v. Colwell, 113 Ill. App. 219; Fitzgerald v. Cavin, 110 Mass. 153; Gibeline v. Smith, 106 Mo. App. 545, 80 S. W. 961.

Messrs. H. M. Sinclair and W. D. Oldham, for appellant:

One who voluntarily enters into a quarrel cannot recover compensation for injuries received by him as a result of the combat.

Galbraith v. Fleming, 60 Mich. 403, 27 N. W. 581; Smith v. Simon, 69 Mich. 481, 37 N. W. 548.

Proper foundation was not made for the introduction of the hat in evidence, as it was not shown that it had not been tampered with after the combat.

State v. Hossack, 116 Iowa, 194, 89 N. W. 1077; State v. Goddard, 146 Mo. 177, 48 S. W. 82; People v. Hill, 123 Cal. 571, 56 Pac. 443; State v. Phillips, 118 Iowa, 660, 92 N. W. 876; State v. Cook, 17 Kan. 394.

The unwarranted taking of the hat to the jury room, which had a material bearing on an important issue in the case, constituted prejudicial error.

Harris v. State, 24 Neb. 803, 40 N. W. 317; Rainforth v. State, 61 Ill. 365; Hairgrove v. Millington, 8 Kan. 480; Welch v. Franklin Ins. Co. 23 W. Va. 289; Shields v. Guffey, 9 Iowa, 322; Hendel v. Berks, 16 Serg. & R. 92; Howell v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 6 Biss. 163, Fed. Cas. No. 6,779; Chance v. Indianapolis & W. Gravel R. Co. 32 Ind. 472; Re Foster, 34 Mich. 21; Sanderson v. Bowen, 4 Thomp. & C. 675; Alger v. Thompson, 1 Allen, 453; Koehler v. Cleary, 23 Minn. 325; La Bonty v. Lundgren, 41 Neb. 312, 59 N. W. 904; Cheek v. State, 35 Ind. 492; Lotz v. Briggs, 50 Ind. 346; State v. Hartmann, 46 Wis. 248, 50 N. W. 193; United States v. McKee, 91 U. S. 442, 23 L. ed. 326.

Messrs. C. A. Robinson, John A. Sheehan, and H. D. Rhea, for appellee:

The presence or absence of "provocation" may greatly affect the question of self-defense, as that doctrine cannot be invoked where the defendant was the aggressor, since to do so would be to allow him to take advantage of his own wrong.

Jones v. Gale, 22 Mo. App. 637; Kees v. State, 44 Tex. App. 543, 72 S. W. 855; Watrous v. Steel, 4 Vt. 629, 24 Am. Dec. 648; Thomason v. Gray, 82 Ala. 291, 3 So. 38; Collock v. State, 148 Ala. 669, 41 So. 727; Lizana v. Lang, 90 Miss. 469, 43 So. 477; Morris Hotel Co. v. Henley, 145 Ala. 678, 40 So. 52; 3 Cyc. Law. & Proc. pp. 1047, 1072, 1074; Wells v. Englehart, 118 Ill. App. 217.

If two persons engage voluntarily in a fight, either can maintain an action against the other to recover damages for the injuries he may receive.

Grotton v. Glidden, 84 Me. 589, 30 Am. St. Rep. 413, 24 Atl. 1008; Willey v. Carpenter, 64 Vt. 212, 15 L.R.A. 853, 23 Atl. 630; Shay v. Thompson, 59 Wis. 540, 48 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Am. Rep. 538, 18 N. W. 473; McNeil v. Mullin, 70 Kan. 634, 79 Pac. 168; 3 Cyc. Law. & Proc. p. 1070; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 987.

The taking of the hat to the jury room did not, under the circumstances, constitute prejudicial error.

Bell v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 436, 24 S. W. 419; Spencer v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 238, 30 S. W. 46, 32 S. W. 690; Hendricks v. State, 28 Tex. App. 416, 13 S. W. 672; Kennon v. Territory, 5 Okla. 686, 50 Pac. 172; Trafton v. Pitts, 73 Me. 408; People v. Tipton, 73 Cal. 405, 14 Pac. 894; Jack v. Territory, 2 Wash. Terr. 101, 3 Pac. 832; State v. Webster, 21 Wash. 63, 57 Pac. 361; Adams v. State, 93 Ga. 166, 18 S. E. 553; Spencer v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 238, 30 S. W. 46, 32 S. W. 690; People v. Mahoney, 77 Cal. 529, 20 Pac. 73; Blazinski v. Perkins, 77 Wis. 9, 45 N. W. 947; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Berry, 96 Ky. 604, 29 S. W. 449.

Reese, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted in the district court of Buffalo county by plaintiff, Morris, and against defendant, Miller, for damages resulting from an assault and battery alleged to have been made and inflicted by defendant upon plaintiff. A jury trial was had, which resulted in a verdict in plaintiff's favor, upon which, after an adverse ruling upon a motion for a new trial, judgment was rendered, and from which defendant has appealed. The motion for a new trial and the assignments of error in this court consist of a number of alleged grounds, but none of them are urged in the briefs, except that there was error in the instructions given by the court to the jury, errors in the admission of evidence, and misconduct of the jury while deliberating upon their verdict. These contentions will be noticed in the order in which they are presented.

1. There is no contention that there was not an encounter between the parties at the time and place named in the petition, and there would seem to be no reasonable ground to contend that plaintiff was not seriously injured in the conflict. It is claimed by defendant, both in his answer and upon the witness stand, that whatever injury plaintiff sustained was inflicted by defendant in the legal and reasonable defense of his person from an attack made by plaintiff. In support of this, it is urged that the injury suffered by plaintiff was the result of a fall by him against a hitching post in front of a business house in the village of Elm Creek, and through which post was a bolt to which a ring was attached and that the bolt protruded through and beyond the side of the post opposite the ring and against which plaintiff fell, inflicting the wound upon his head of which complaint is made; and that the fall was occasioned by a blow given by defendant with his left hand, but which was of no greater force than was reasonably necessary for defendant's protection and defense. It was also claimed that the personal conflict was voluntarily entered into by the parties; and that defendant should not, under the circumstances, be held responsible for the resultant injury. Upon the other hand, it was claimed by plaintiff that defendant was the aggressor, and that the assault which led to the conflict was by him. Upon this part of the case the court gave the following instruction, numbered 9, and to which defendant excepted: "The court instructs the jury that the defendant alleges that he acted in self-defense. You are instructed that the law does not permit a person to voluntarily seek or invite a combat or put himself in the way of being assaulted, so that when hard pressed he may have a pretext to injure his assailant. The right of self-defense does not imply the right of attack; and it will not avail in any case where the difficulty is sought for and induced by the party by any wilful act of his, or where he voluntarily and of his own free will enters into it. The necessity, being of his own creation, shall not operate to excuse him. Nor is anyone justified in using more force than is reasonably necessary to get rid of his assailant; but if he does not bring on the difficulty, nor provoke it, nor voluntarily engage in it, he is not bound to flee to avoid it, but may resist with adequate and necessary force until he is safe. Now, if you believe from the evidence in this case that the defendant voluntarily sought or invited the difficulty in which plaintiff was injured, if you believe from the evidence that he was injured, or that he provoked or commenced or brought it on by any wilful act of his own, or that he voluntarily or of his own free will engaged in it, then and in that case you are not authorized to find for him upon the ground of self-defense. In determining who provoked or commenced the difficulty or made the first assault, you should take into consideration all the facts and circumstances in evidence before you."

The jury were quite fully instructed upon the different phases of the case, and, with one other exception, to be hereafter noted, no complaint is made of instructions given. As it is the well-established rule that all instructions given should be considered and construed together, we refer to instruction No. 10, to which no complaint is made, and which we here set out: "The court instructs the jury that, if you believe from the evidence that plaintiff began the affray and was the aggressor, then you are instructed that the defendant had a right to defend himself from such assault, and he would have the right to use that amount of force which was reasonably and apparently necessary in making his defense. And, if you believe from the evidence that the defendant was so acting in self-defense from the real and honest conviction of apparent danger, or what would seem apparent danger to a reasonable man, you will return a verdict for the defendant, unless you further believe from the evidence that the defendant unlawfully used a degree of force and violence upon the plaintiff that was not reasonably and apparently necessary under the facts and circumstances then and there surrounding the defendant."

These instructions correctly state the law. The evidence clearly and conclusively establishes the fact that the parties were in a business house in Elm Creek, and that there was a difference or quarrel between them. As to the extent of the anger displayed by each of them, the evidence is conflicting; but all agree that plaintiff left the building through the front door, closely followed by defendant, both crossing the sidewalk into the street, but to only a few feet beyond the outer edge of the sidewalk, and the conflict was immediately entered upon. Just which one made the first attack may be in some doubt, as each one places the blame upon the other. It is claimed by plaintiff that defendant made the first attack and struck him in the forehead with some deadly instrument by which the wound was inflicted, while defendant claims he did not make the attack, but acted solely in the defensive, using only his fist, and by which the wound complained of could not have been inflicted. When we consider these contentions we can see no objection to the instruction complained of as being to defendant's prejudice. If it is true, as claimed by plaintiff, that defendant sought or invited the combat, and made use of a dangerous instrument by which the injury was inflicted, or that he created the occasion in order to inflict it, or did intentionally inflict it, the instructions cannot be said to be misleading, or to mistake the law. They properly left the whole question for the consideration of the jury under "all the facts and circumstances in evidence" before them.

The next instruction of which complaint is made is No. 11, and is as follows: "You are instructed that, if you believe from the evidence that plaintiff and defendant voluntarily and by agreement entered into a fight, still I charge you that such agreement, if made, was unlawful, for the reason that such agreement, if made, would be in violation of the laws of the state and void, and such agreement, if made, would not be any defense to this action." This instruction was given as applicable to the contention that the fight, or combat, was entered into voluntarily and by mutual agreement, and that the unsuccessful party to the strife could not transfer his cause from the street to the courts and recover damages for whatever injury he might sustain by reason of the prowess or activity of his adversary. At the time of the argument of the case at the bar of this court, the writer was of the opinion that the giving of the instruction might have been erroneous, but more mature reflection and an examination of the authorities have led to a different conclusion. It is true that an instruction of this kind would be condemned by some reputable authorities, among which are Galbraith v. Fleming, 60 Mich. 403, 27 N. W. 581, and Smith v. Simon, 69 Mich. 481, 37 N. W. 548; but it is quite clear that the great weight of authority is the other way, and that the recognized rule is that, where two parties fight voluntarily, either party may recover from the other the actual damages suffered, and the consent of the plaintiff to engage in the combat will not bar his suit to recover. In jurisdictions where punitive damages are allowed, the consent will prevent the allowance of such damages, but will not prevent recovery for the actual loss or damage.

In referring to the rule that one cannot recover for an injury to the infliction of which he has consented, the supreme court of Ohio, speaking through Judge Minshall in Barholt v. Wright, 45 Ohio St. 179, 4 Am. St. Rep. 535, 12 N. E. 186, says: "But as often as the question has been presented, it has been decided that a recovery may be had by a plaintiff for injuries inflicted by the defendant in a mutual combat, as well as in a combat where the plaintiff was the first assailant, and the injuries resulted from the use of excessive and unnecessary force by the defendant in repelling the assault. These apparent anomalies rest upon the importance which the law attaches to the public peace as well as to the life and person of the citizen. From considerations of this kind it no more regards an agreement by which one man may have assented to be beaten, than it does an agreement to part with his liberty and become the slave of another. But the fact that the injuries were received in combat in which the parties had engaged by mutual agreement may be shown in mitigation of damages. . . . This, however, is the full extent to which the cases have gone,"—citing cases. In Grotton v. Glidden, 84 Me. 589, 30 Am. St. Rep. 413, 24 Atl. 1008, it is said: "The evidence satisfies us that plaintiff's injuries were received while he and the defendant were engaged in a voluntary fight. The defendant contends that he acted only in self-defense, but the evidence satisfies us that the fight was voluntary on the part of both parties. This brings us to the question whether, if two persons engage voluntarily in a fight, either can maintain an action against the other to recover damages for the injuries he may receive. We think he can. It seems to be settled law that each may maintain an action against the other. It is familiar law that each may be punished criminally, and it seems to be equally well settled that, by the rules of the common law, each may have an action against the other and recover full damages for all the injuries he received. The fact that the fight was voluntary is admissible in evidence, as are many other facts, to keep down the amount of the punitive damages, but not to reduce the actual damages,"—followed by citations and extracts from a number of cases. The rule is also recognized and stated in Wiley v. Carpenter, 64 Vt. 212, 23 Atl. 630, annotated in 15 L.R.A. 853; Shay v. Thompson, 59 Wis. 540, 48 Am. Rep. 538, 18 N. W. 473; McNeill v. Mullin, 70 Kan. 634, 79 Pac. 168; Adams v. Waggoner, 33 Ind. 531, 5 Am. Rep. 230; Jones v. Gale, 22 Mo. App. 637; Bell v. Hansley, 48 N. C. (3 Jones, L.) 131. See, also, 1 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. 282, and 3 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1070. In McNatt v. McRae, 117 Ga. 898, 45 S. E. 248, which was an action for an assault and battery, it was held that cross actions in favor of each party against the other may arise out of the same affray, and such claims for damages may be presented in separate suits, or in a petition by one and a plea of set-off by the other.

We therefore find no error in the instructions complained of.

2. It is insisted that the court erred in permitting a hat which plaintiff claims to have worn at the time of the encounter to be put in evidence. It is said that the hat introduced had a hole or rent at or about the point where plaintiff was wounded, that the hat was on his head at the time, and it was claimed that the break or rent in the hat showed that it could not have been made with the fist of defendant, and from this it was argued that some heavy and dangerous instrument was used by defendant in striking the blow. The claim is that there was not sufficient preliminary proof of the identity of the hat, or that it was presented in the same condition as when found, to permit its submission to the jury. The hat introduced was shown to be the property of plaintiff and upon his head at the time of the encounter, that it was picked up at the place where plaintiff had fallen len, and had been preserved in its present condition from that time to the time of its introduction. We can detect no error in the action of the court in that behalf.

3. The next contention is upon the ground of misconduct of the jury with reference to the hat above alluded to. From the evidence submitted upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial it appears: That, when the jury retired from the court room for the consideration of their verdict, one of the jurors, presumably by mistake and inadvertence, picked up the hat in question and carried it to the jury room, where it remained until the forenoon of the next day, when it was returned to the court room by a bailiff; that practically no attention was paid to it in the jury room; that it attracted little or no attention while there; that it had no influence on the verdict of the jurors; and that during a part of the time it was upon the table, around which the jurors were gathered, and was used as a ballot box into which the jurors placed their ballots when voting. There is no suggestion that the removal of the hat to the jury room by the juror who took it there was with any evil or corrupt intent, or that it was there used for any improper purpose, or, indeed, any purpose which could influence the deliberations of the jury, or have any effect upon the result thereof. That the taking of the hat to the jury room was an irregularity is perhaps true, and would not have occurred had the attention of the court, counsel, or juror been called to the fact; but, as the act was an innocent mistake, without wrongful intention, and it is shown beyond question that no use was made of the hat by the jury which could in any way affect or influence the minds of the jurors or work any injury to defendant, we must hold that it was without prejudice to him, and affords no ground for a reversal of the judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 145.

Finding no reversible error in the record, it follows that the judgment of the District court must be affirmed, which is done.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

A. H. HUMPHREY

v.

H. K. MIDKIFF.

OIL CITY IRON WORKS, Limited, Garnishee, Applicant.

(122 La. 939, 48 So. 331.)

Garnishment — interrogatories — traverse.

1. Interrogatories were propounded. They were answered by an officer of the corporation. They were not satisfactorily answered. They were successfully traversed.

Headnotes by BREAUX, Ch. J.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — debt — unearned salary.

2. Although traversed and shown incorrect, it remained that the plaintiff [creditor] was not entitled to the amount claimed.

Unearned salary — liability to garnishment.

3. The writ of garnishment has the effect of seizing the property in esse at the date of the service; and it does not reach out and seize unearned salary at the date the order to answer is served.

Garnishment — debt — evidence.

4. The testimony does not show that anything was due by the garnishee at the date the proceedings were instituted and service was made.

Unearned salary — liability to garnishment.

5. Decision cited by plaintiff considered, and distinguished from the case. The salary cannot be reached by anticipation. Work to be performed cannot be drawn upon through process of garnishment.

(January 18, 1909.)

Case Note. — Garnishment of unearned salary.

It is apparently a firmly established rule which denies a creditor the right to attach by garnishment proceedings the unearned salary of his debtor. Sanborn v. Ward, 84 N. H. 611, 6 Atl. 27; Thomas v. Gibbons, 61 Iowa, 50, 15 N. W. 593; Central Bank v. Ellis, 20 Ont. App. Rep. 364.

A garnishee act providing for the attachment of debts "due or thereafter to become due" does not allow the attachment of wages unearned at the time of garnishment. Thomas v. Gibbons, supra.

Advances on a building contract not yet earned are not subject to attachment in the hands of the owner. Excelsior Brick & Stone Co. v. Haines, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 631.

And, upon the theory that wages unearned are not attachable, it has been held that the salary of an execution debtor, payable in advance, is not subject to garnishment. Reinhart v. Empire Soap Co. 33 Mo. App. 24; Martin v. Gayle, 2 Disney (Ohio) 86; Alexander v. Pollock, 72 Ala. 137; Callaghan v. Pocasset Mfg. Co. 119 Mass. 173; Van Vleet v. Stratton, 91 Tenn. 473, 19 S. W. 428; Scholz v. Scholz (Mo. App.) 115 S. W. 509.

But Teeter v. Williams, 3 B. Mon. 562, 39 Am. Dec. 485, holds that a creditor may garnish whatever may be due his debtor for labor already performed, and whatever may become due upon an existing contract for his future labor; but that the debtor cannot be compelled to work out his contract for the benefit of the attaching creditor.

Where an employee is to be paid in advance on the first day of each month, his salary becomes due and payable on that APPPLICATION for a writ of certiorari to review a judgment of the Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, affirming a judgment of the District Court for the Parish of Calcasieu in plaintiff's favor in a garnishment proceeding to recover unpaid salary alleged to be due the defendant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cline & Cline, for applicant:

The salary of an employee, unearned at the time of the issuance of a writ of attachment, is not subject to the writ.

Cross, Pl. p. 3414; Roth, B. & Co. v. Hotard, 31 La. Ann. 195; Bean v. Mississippi Union Bank, 5 Rob. (La.) 336; Marchand v. Bell, 21 La. Ann. 33; Peet v. Whitmore, 16 La. Ann. 48.

Messrs. Gorham & Gorham and Williams & Williams, for respondent:

Property of the debtor coming into the hands of the garnishee after notice of seizure and before the garnishee is discharged is day; and, if any part remains uncollected, it becomes a debt due from his employer, for which assumpsit may be maintained, and which is subject to garnishment. Gray v. Perry Hardware Co. 111 Ala. 532, 20 So. 368.

Archer v. People's Sav. Bank, 88 Ala. 249, 7 So. 53, also holds that a salary payable weekly in advance is not subject to garnishment unless the privilege of collecting it is waived by the debtor; but that the debt would not become due except in one of the following contingencies: Either the services for the given work must have been performed, or the option to draw the amount in advance must have been asserted by a request to pay.

And so, where the payment of salary or wages is subject to contingencies, nothing becomes due until such time as the condition is removed; and a garnishment process served before that date subjects nothing to the payment of the debt due the creditor. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Gallahue, 14 Gratt. 563; Williams v. Androscooggin & K. R. Co. 36 Me. 201, 58 Am. Dec. 742; Daily v. Jordan, 2 Cush. 390; Foster v. Singer, 69 Wis. 392, 2 Am. St. Rep. 745, 34 N. W. 395; Main Bros. v. McInnis, 4 N. W. Terr. 517; Norton v. Soule, 75 Me. 385.

Wages which, by the terms of a contract of employment, are to be paid at such times as the employer determines, and all of which are to be forfeited in case the employee violates the contract, are not attachable by a creditor, even though it had been the practice to make advances or payments on account at regular periods. Potter v. Cain, 117 Mass. 238.

Nor are wages of a judgment debtor, earned subsequent to the service of the writ and before answer, subject to attachment in the hands of the garnishee. Bliss v. Smith, 78 Ill. 359; Van Vleet v. Stratton, supra; Tracy v. Bridges, 2 Miles (Pa.) 352; Bur-20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

affected thereby; and the writ of garnishment covers the debtor's interest in a contract for the year by the terms of which the debtor is to be paid a monthly salary.

Buddig v. Simpson, 33 La. Ann. 375; J. A. Fay & E. Co. v. Ouachita Excelsior Saw & Planing Mills, 50 La. Ann. 205, 23 So. 312, 51 La. Ann. 1708, 26 So. 386.

The garnishee who has been cited in a suit must declare clearly and categorically what sums he may owe to the defendant, whether the same are due or not yet due; and, if he refuses or neglects so to state, judgment should be rendered against him for amount claimed.

Deblanc v. Webb, 5 La. 85; Gaty v. Franklin M. & F. Ins. Co. 12 La. Ann. 273; Warren v. Copp, 48 La. Ann. 810, 19 So. 746.

Breaux, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a garnishment process, in which lington & M. River R. Co. v. Thompson, 31 Kan. 180, 47 Am. Rep. 497, 1 Pac. 622.

But it was held in Goodwin v. Claytor, 137 N. C. 224, 67 L.R.A. 209, 107 Am. St. Rep. 479, 49 S. E. 173, that wages owing by a garnishee to the principal debtor at the time of his appearance and answer, although they were unearned at the time of service of summons, may be applied in satisfaction of the claim of the attaching creditor.

Where a contract for services covering a certain period is construed to be an entire contract, a creditor of one rendering services under such a contract may not garnishee his wages during the period, even as to the pro rata amount earned at the time of garnishment. Hadley v. Peabody, 13 Gray, 200; Coburn v. Hartford, 38 Conn. 290; Robinson v. Hall, 3 Met. 301.

And this rule has been held to apply even where the employer paid in advance a larger portion of the amount due than the portion of the work done bore to the whole work. Warner v. Perkins, 8 Cush. 518.

A salary payable quarterly, and not due until a future date, is not a debt "due, owing, or accruing," and cannot be attached by garnishment process. Hall v. Pritchett, 47 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 15.

Ely v. Blacker, G. & Co. 112 Ala. 311, 20 So. 570, holds that salary may be attached in the hands of a garnishee as soon as earned, though before it actually becomes due; and that the garnishee cannot relieve himself by making payments before they are actually due.

The right of duly appointed receivers in general creditors' actions, to the unearned salary of the debtors, presents a question which has not been examined in this note. Cases involving the right to attach the wages of seamen during a voyage have also been excluded, the latter class of decisions turning upon the determination of when a voyage is completed, rather than on the question under consideration here.

the plaintiff seeks to hold the garnishee liable for an amount he avers the garnishee owes to the defendant.

The facts are that plaintiff obtained a judgment against the defendant, Midkiff, and, in his proceedings to garnishee the indebtedness he alleged, that he propounded interrogatories to the defendant, "the Oil City Iron Works, Limited," that were answered by Midkiff, secretary of the company, who was defendant in the original suit of Humphrey v. Midkiff, in which a judgment was rendered against the latter for the amount which plaintiff seeks to recover from the garnishee, alleged debtor of Midkiff. He was not a disinterested witness, as he was the judgment debtor.

Among other questions propounded, he was asked to say whether defendant paid him (Midkiff, secretary, and plaintiff's debtor) any salary for his services to the company. He answered briefly enough, "No," to each interrogatory, and denied all indebtedness of the company.

Plaintiff, on rule filed by him, traversed the answers, and, on the trial of this rule, the secretary testified substantially that he was president of the company garnished, that his indebtedness to the company was large, and that, in accordance with an agreement entered into some time before the suit he gave his services to the company and credited his indebtedness to the company at the rate of $125 per month, less his actual living expenses; that, at the date of the service of the interrogatories, the contract was in force, that he has never received any salary from the company except in accordance with the terms of the contract, that his family expenses were paid directly by the company, and at the end of each month the balance remaining between such expenses and the credited sum of $125 was credited on his indebtedness to the company.

The alleged agreement was a subterfuge. It had not been entered into with the company.

The testimony on the traverse impeaches the answer originally given by plaintiff in answer to the interrogatories.

The contention of the garnishee is that the company cannot be held liable in a sum larger than the amount due Midkiff, defendant, by the garnishee at the date of the service of the interrogatories, or, at the most, at the date of the answers of the garnishee.

There does not appear to have been due to Midkiff anything at the date of the service. The claim is exclusively for unearned salary.

The district court decided that the garnishee was liable for the amount for which it became indebted to the defendant after the answers had been made to the interrogatories. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) tories and up to the time of the trial of the rule to traverse.

The garnishee does not state that the answers were originally proper answers. The garnishee company concedes their incorrectness. The ground of the garnishee is that they cannot be penalized by rendering a judgment for a larger amount than that due at the date of the service of the interrogatories, and that, as nothing was due at that date, plaintiff has no right to a judgment.

It follows the decree of the district court condemned the garnishee to pay a sum which became due after the writ of garnishment had been served. The court of appeals affirmed the judgment. The usual preliminary order was issued by this court on the application for a writ of certiorari and review. The case is now before us on the issues as made up between the parties on the application.

The writ of garnishment in this case was issued in aid of an execution. The purpose of plaintiff in matter of this writ was to seize and apply to the payment of his claim the credits of the debtor in the hands of the garnishee company. The petition, moreover, indicated that it was the intention to garnishee the amount due at the date that the writ was issued. In the petition plaintiff, judgment creditor, alleged that there "was in possession or under the control of the Oil City Iron Works Company, Limited, rights or credits belonging to the defendant." (Italics ours.) This referred to an existing right, and not one to be earned by the plaintiff after the petition and interrogatories had been served. If the plaintiff be held to his allegation, he would not have a right to unearned salary on the face of the papers. As the garnishee's answers were evasive and untrue, it had the effect of driving plaintiff to the conclusion, we imagine, that he was entitled to the amount earned after the interrogatories had been served.

Unearned salary does not come within the grasp of the writ of garnishment, issued to have salary earned retained in the hands of the garnishee for the benefit of the creditor. The right of the creditor who seeks to recover the amount of wages is fixed from the moment the garnishee makes answer to the interrogatories. The writ of garnishment cannot be made to do service in securing salaries not earned at the time of the service. If it could be held otherwise the writ might be held in suspense over the debtor's head for an indefinite time while he is at work. In any event, the garnishment process should not be used as an agent to collect future earnings. That is not the intention of the law.

We have examined the decisions to which learned counsel for plaintiff invited our attention. In Buddig v. Simpson, 33 La. Ann. 377, it was decided that property of the debtor falling into the possession of the garnishee after notice of garnishment is affected by the seizure. In that decision, different from the present case, the property was in esse at date of service. In the other case cited the raw material in esse belonging to the debtor in the hands of the garnishee was in esse at date of service. In the other nishee must account for the price after it had been manufactured. This is an extreme case, and it will not always meet with approval as a precedent, if carried too far.

In the pending case it is different. The right to the property was not in esse, and the whole was to be earned by human labor.

Another, and the only other, decision is not, as to the page, correctly cited, and only figures are given. It would add very much to the certainty of finding a decision, if there be error in the reference to pages in writing or printing briefs, if the title of the case were inserted in citing it, as well as the number.

Plaintiff can gain nothing by the contention that he was entitled to have the interrogatories taken pro confesso.

Though plaintiff, according to article 264, Code Prac., successfully contradicted the answers of the garnishee, none the less the article interposes its authority, and fixes the amount of the liability of the garnishee to the amount proved against him.

It is otherwise if he fails to answer at all. Then the interrogatories are taken pro confesso, and the party becomes liable for the whole amount demanded. Marks v. Reinberg, 16 La. Ann. 349.

Here the liability falls within the terms of the first-cited articles of the Code of Practice.

For reasons assigned, and the law and the evidence being in favor of the garnishee, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment of the Court of Appeals be avoided, annulled, and reversed. It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment of the District Court be avoided, annulled, and reversed. It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that there be judgment against plaintiff, annulling all proceedings, and that he pay all costs of all courts. The rule nisi is affirmed, and the demand of applicant is granted and made perpetual, at the costs of A. H. Humphrey, plaintiff, respondent.

Petition for rehearing denied February 15, 1909.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

JOHN H. OLSTON, Admr., etc., of William H. Olston, Deceased, Appt.,

v.
OREGON WATER POWER & RAILWAY COMPANY, Respt.

(— Or. —, 96 Pac. 1095.)

Administrator — power — settling claim.

1. An administrator may settle a claim for the negligent killing of his intestate without authority from the court.

Evidence — release — administrator.

2. It is not error to refuse to exclude from evidence a release of liability for negligently killing a person, signed by his administrator, as such, in an action by him to recover damages for the killing on behalf of the estate, on the theory that it was signed by him in his individual capacity, because it binds only him, his heirs, executors, and administrators, since the question of the intent is for the jury.

Release — seal — attack at law.

3. A release under seal may be attacked at law for fraud in the consideration, where the seal is, by statute, made only prima facie evidence of consideration.

Same — fraud — representations.

4. That a release of liability for negligently killing a person was induced by fraud may be found from the fact that the responsible person represented that his attorney, having full knowledge of the circumstances and cause of action, said that there was no liability for the death, and that the person signing the release need not go to the expense of looking up the facts and seeking advice, but might settle the case upon the opinion of such attorney.

(August 11, 1908.)

Case Note. — Right, in an action at law, to attack release for fraud.

The peculiar force which, at an early time, was given instruments under seal, as a rule, has been considerably abated or entirely disregarded in the more modern cases. To a great extent this result has been accomplished by statutory provision taking from instruments under seal the peculiar sanctity formerly attaching to such instruments, and placing them in the same category as unsealed instruments. The distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments has also, to a great extent, been removed by the courts themselves refusing to recognize any distinction, so far, at least, as such instruments were affected by fraud. This inclination to disregard any distinction between the two classes of instruments as affected by fraud has been applied to releases to such an extent that, as a rule, a release under seal is no more invulnerable to an attack on the ground of fraud than an unsealed release; and the question of jurisdiction, whether at law or in equity, is usually APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

Statement by Eakin, J.:

Plaintiff alleges, in his complaint, that W. H. Olston, a passenger, was killed on November 4, 1905, by being crowded from an overloaded street car during a panic, occasioned by the explosion of the jack or fuse on the car, and plaintiff, the administrator of his estate, brings this action for damages for his death. Among other defenses set up by defendant is that, on the 8th day of November, 1905, plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of decedent, duly executed to the defendant a release under a seal for the consideration of $500 and all funeral expenses of the decedent. Plaintiff, for reply to this answer, denies execution of the release as alleged, but states affirmatively that, being induced thereto by the false, fraudulent, and unlawful misrepresentations made by defendant with intent to defraud and deceive him, he signed the release in his individual capacity, and not as administrator of the estate of decedent, and that thereafter he rescinded said settlement, and tendered the return of all money, checks, and deposits given by the defendant for said release. And for a second and separate reply plaintiff alleges that said settlement is not binding upon the estate of the decedent or his personal representatives, for the reason that the same was made with-determined without reference to whether it is a sealed or an unsealed instrument.

Thus, in Wagner v. National L. Ins. Co. 33 C. C. A. 121, 61 U. S. App. 691, 90 Fed. 395, Judge Taft said that, except for the peculiar sanctity anciently attaching to a sealed writing at common law, which is now disappearing, it is difficult to see how there can be any doubt about the right, in an action at law, to avoid a release by a reply of fraud.

And in Lyons v. Allen, 11 App. D. C. 543, in holding that a release by an employee of a claim for personal injuries, though under seal, could be impeached in an action at law for the injuries, on the ground of fraud in misrepresenting its terms to the releasor, who could not read, the court said: "If the release was, as contended by the plaintiff, procured from him by any fraudulent device or deception, and he has not substantially ratified it, he may show the facts in evidence, and avoid the release in an action at law, when set up as a bar to the action. Formerly this right of avoiding a release under seal, on the ground of fraud, in an action at law, when set up as a defense to the action, was generally denied, and the party was referred to a court of equity, in jurisdictions where remedies at common law and equity are separate. But it is now generally held, by a great preponderance of authority, that a release so set up as a defense may be avoided at law."

So, an injured person may defeat the operation of a release under seal, pleaded in bar to an action at law for the injury, by showing fraud in its procurement, although there was no actual misrepresentation as to the character and purport of the instrument executed, as there is no reason for the maintenance of any distinction between the right to attack in an action at law a release under seal and one not under seal. Rockwell v. Capital Traction Co. 25 App. D. C. 98, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 648. While it was not claimed in the foregoing case that the instrument was other or different from what it purported to be, yet it appeared that the injured person was greatly enfeebled from pain and opiates at the time of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

execution of the instrument, and that misrepresentations had been made to her husband to induce him to join in a settlement, which also induced him to bring pressure upon plaintiff to consent thereto and join therein.

While in some cases it has been held that the validity of a release under seal could not be challenged in an action at law for fraud going to the consideration, although the release was pleaded as a bar to the action, yet these cases apparently only apply to a sealed release the doctrine that is in many jurisdictions applied to unsealed releases, and nothing appears in them to indicate any intention of applying a different rule from what would have been applied to an unsealed release.

Thus, in Johnson v. Merry Mount Granite Co. 53 Fed. 569, the court said that a release under seal, pleaded in bar to an action for personal injuries, could not be impeached in that action for fraud in its procurement by taking advantage of plaintiff's weakened mental condition to secure the release for an inadequate consideration, and added that such a defense had no place in a court of common law, as it involved a state of facts too complex to be properly weighed and passed on by the jury.

And Waln v. Waln, 58 N. J. L. 640, 34 Atl. 1068, held that the consideration of a release under seal, releasing a simple-contract indebtedness, could not be controverted in an action at law upon the indebtedness.

Barnes v. Ward, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 93, 57 Am. Dec. 590, recognized the doctrine that a release under seal could not be impeached in an action at law, and hence allowed a ward, who was suing her guardian for money in his hands belonging to her, an injunction restraining the guardian from offering in evidence, as a defense to such action, a release obtained by him from the ward by fraud and imposition.

In Illinois, as will be hereafter seen, a distinction is made between releases of unliquidated and releases of liquidated claims. As to the former, a release whether under seal or not can only be attacked for fraud in the execution, there being no distinction in out an order of the county court authorizing the same. Defendant demurred to the second reply, on the ground that it constitutes no defense to the allegations of the answer, and the demurrer was sustained by the court. On the trial the defendant offered in evidence the said release, which is in words as follows: "Know all men by these presents that I, John H. Olston, administrator of the estate of William H. Olston, deceased, of Portland, in the county of Multnomah, state of Oregon, for and in consideration of the sum of five hundred and no one-hundredths dollars ($500) and funeral expenses of said deceased, to me in hand paid by the Oregon Water Power & Railway Company, a corporation duly incorporated and organized under the laws of the state of Oregon, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, for myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, hereby release and forever discharge the said Oregon Water Power & Railway Company, its successors and assigns, its officers, agents, and employees, of and from all actions, causes of action, suits, controversies, claims, damages, and demands of every name and nature, for and by reason of any matter, things, or thing from the beginning of the world to this 8th day of November, 1905, and especially from all claims, damages, and demands, accrued or hereafter to accrue, arising out of an accident or injury resulting in the death of said deceased, occurring by virtue of a panic resulting from a flash occasioned by the blowing out of the jack or fuse on car No. 32 of this respect between releases under seal and releases not under seal. But this doctrine does not apply to liquidated claims. A release not under seal of such a claim is not a bar to the action, while a release under seal of a liquidated claim can only be impeached in an action at law for fraud in its execution.

The serious question with reference to the right to attack releases in an action at law for fraud is not whether the release is under seal, but whether the fraud was inherent in the execution of the instrument, or related to collateral matters to secure its execution. In determining this question the fact as to whether the release in question was or was not under seal seems usually to have been treated as of no importance. Hence, in treating herein, the question of the right to attack a release for fraud in an action at law, to which it is pleaded as a bar, no particular distinction will be made between sealed and unsealed releases, although, where it clearly appears that the release in question was a sealed instrument, mention will be made of that fact.

At common law, the doctrine was at an early time enunciated that written instruments, and particularly instruments under seal, could not be attacked or impeached in an action at law for fraud in consideration. The reason advanced for this doctrine was that, in setting aside or rescinding a contract, equity could better impose such terms as would be just and equitable between the parties as a condition to granting the relief asked; and while, as a general thing, this reason would hardly apply, at the present time, to releases, whether under seal or not, yet this early doctrine has greatly influenced the courts of this country in passing upon the right to impeach a release for fraud in an action to which it is pleaded as a bar, and in many jurisdictions a distinction is recognized, even as to releases not under seal, between the right to attack a release for fraud in its execution—that is, where it is obtained by some trick or device, with no intention or understanding on the part of the releasor of executing such an instrument—and fraud in the consideration. In these jurisdictions it is held that fraud in the execution renders the instrument absolutely void, and that such an instrument is not a bar to an action relating to the subject-matter which it purports to release. Hence, such fraud may be shown in an action at law wherein the release is set up as a bar to the action. But fraud relating to the consideration, it is said, will only render the instrument voidable; and it can only be avoided by a direct proceeding in equity to rescind. Hence, such fraud can only be availed of to impeach a release by a direct proceeding in equity for that purpose.

Thus it has been said that if, through some fraud, a person was deceived into signing a release other and different from what he intended to sign, the fraud may be shown under a replication of non est factum. If, however, the facts show that the fraud and imposition related to the party's rights, by which he was induced to extinguish a valuable claim in consideration of the payment of a trifling sum, his remedy is by a direct proceeding in equity to set aside the release. Shampeon v. Connecticut River Lumber Co. 42 Fed. 760.

Perry v. M. O'Neil & Co. 78 Ohip St. 200, 85 N. E. 41, also recognizes the distinction between fraud in the execution of a release and fraud in securing execution, and it is said that where there is fraud in the execution of the instrument, such as misreading it, or the surreptitious substitution of one paper for another, or obtaining by some other trick or device a release which the injured person did not intend to give, an action may be maintained for the injury without first procuring a rescission of the release. In such a case the court said the release was void and could be ignored in the petition; and, if pleaded as a bar to the action in the answer, the facts showing the invalidity could be pleaded in reply; but that, if the release was not void, but only voidable, to maintain an action for the injury released, the rescission or cancellation of the release must first be obtained.

The only fraud which may be availed of in an action at law to avoid a formally executed release not under seal, of all claims said company, in which panic of the passengers on said car, the deceased was thrown from said car to the curb at the side of the street, suffering an injury to his head resulting in his death, which accident occurred on said car while north bound at the corner of East Eleventh and Caruthers streets in the city of Portland, Oregon, on November 4, 1905, at 7:40 o'clock P. M. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal the day and date last above written. Executed in the presence of: Charles Olston, G. F. Martin, John H. Olston, as administrator of the estate of William H. Olston, deceased. [Seal.] Plaintiff thereupon offered to prove that said release was procured by fraudulent misrepresentations of the defendant, by which he was deceived and misled, and induced to sign the same, to which offer defendant objected, on the ground that "the release which was introduced in testimony here cannot be contradicted in a proceeding at law for any reason other than some matter which affected the execution of it, and for the second reason that the equity court, being the proper court for a suit for cancelation for any matters which do not concern the execution of the paper itself, and that any representations which preceded it which might bring about the execution of it are only matters which can be heard in a court of equity, and consequently all these statements are immaterial." The court sustained the objection and excluded evidence of all representations or statements made in behalf of the defendant, under a life insurance policy, is misrepresentation, deceit, or trickery, practised to induce the execution of a release which the signer never intended to execute, and upon which the minds of the contracting parties never met. Misrepresentations of fact to procure the execution of a release as actually made can only be availed of in equity. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Webb, 84 C. C. A. 603, 157 Fed. 155 (misrepresentations as to liability).

The distinction between fraud in consideration and fraud inherent in the execution of a release was also recognized in Kosztelnik v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 91 Fed. 606, wherein it was held that a release for personal injuries, pleaded in bar to an action therefor, could be impeached for fraud in misrepresenting its contents, which were written in English, to the injured party, who was unable to read that language. The court said that while on this ground the release could be attacked in the action for the injuries, it could not, however, be attacked in such an action for fraud in procuring its execution.

This distinction was also recognized in Connor v. Dundee Chemical Works, 50 N. J. L. 257, 12 Atl. 713, wherein the court said that a release pleaded in bar to an action for damages for the wrongful death of another could not be attacked on the mere allegation of fraud, but, to avail, it must also be alleged that the fraud related to the execution; since, if it related to the consideration, it would not be a shield against the release at the trial.

Also in Hill v. Northern P. R. Co. 104 Fed. 754, affirmed on other grounds in 51 C. C. A. 544, 113 Fed. 914, wherein a release of a claim for personal injuries was alleged to have been obtained by fraudulent representations as to the liability of the defendant, and it was held that, to attack a release for such fraud, an independent suit in equity must be resorted to; and the fact that the action was originally commenced in the state court, from which it was transferred by the defendant, a nonresident, to the Federal court, did not alter the rule, although in the state court, wherein the action was 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) originally planted, the release could have been attacked in the original action for the fraud alleged.

To the same effect is Vandervelden v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 61 Fed. 54, as to the right to attack a release not under seal, pleaded in bar to an action at law for personal injuries, for fraud based on misrepresentations by the defendant's physician as to the extent of the plaintiff's injuries.

In Illinois, where the distinction between courts of law and equity is still maintained, it is held that there are two kinds of fraud for which a release of a claim for personal injuries may be impeached. One is where the execution of such an instrument is induced by misrepresentation or fraudulent representations as to collateral matters, or as to the nature and value of the consideration. In such cases the instrument is executed with a knowledge of its nature and character, and the fraud, if any, is as to facts outside of the instrument itself. To impeach such release, a resort must be had to a court of equity. The other kind of fraud for which such a release may be impeached is fraud which inheres in the execution of the instrument. That is to say, where the signer of the instrument is deceived into signing it by the belief that he is signing something other than that which he really does sign. A release procured through fraud of this character may be shown in an action at law for the injury if the release is pleaded as a bar to the action. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Welch, 52 Ill. 183, 4 Am. Rep. 593; Eagle Packet Co. v. Defries, 94 Ill. 598, 34 Am. Rep. 245; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Mommson, 107 Ill. App. 353; Mattoon Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Dolan, 111 Ill. App. 333; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lewis, 109 Ill. 120; National Syrup Co. v. Carlson, 155 Ill. 210, 40 N. E. 492; Papke v. G. H. Hammond Co. 192 Ill. 631, 61 N. E. 910; Chicago City R. Co. v. Uhter, 212 Ill. 174, 72 N. E. 195; Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Buzis, 213 Ill. 341, 72 N. E. 1060; Hartley v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 214 Ill. 78, 73 N. E. 398.

To authorize the impeachment of such a release in an action at law, the fraud must leading up to the settlement, and, at the close of the trial, the court, upon the motion of defendant, directed a verdict for defendant for the reason that the evidence was insufficient to be submitted to the jury, and judgment was rendered for the defendant upon the verdict, and plaintiff appeals.

Mr. J. L. Taugher for appellant.

Mr. William T. Muir, for respondent:

The representations made by the defendant preceding the execution of the release are not admissible as evidence.

George v. Tate, 102 U. S. 584, 26 L. ed. 232; Fire Asso. v. Allesina, 45 Or. 154, 77 Pac. 123; Thomas v. Ruddell, 66 Ind. 326; Hill v. Northern P. R. Co. 104 Fed. 754; Houston v. Williams, 3 Blackf. 170, 25 Am. Dec. 84; Vandervelden v. Chicago & N. W.

R. Co. 61 Fed. 54; Saunders v. Stotts, 6 Ohio, 380, 27 Am. Dec. 263; Hartley v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 214 Ill. 78, 73 N. E. 398; Hill v. Northern P. R. Co. 51 C. C. A. 544, 113 Fed. 914; Brown v. Rice, 26 Gratt. 467; Shampau v. Connecticut River Lumber Co. 42 Fed. 760; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 L. ed. 203; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Reed, 33 Ohio St. 283; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 21 Colo. 302, 41 Pac. 501; Nelson v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 61 Minn. 167, 63 N. W. 486; Doty v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. 49 Minn. 499, 52 N. W. 135; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Wilcox, 54 C. C. A. 147, 116 Fed. 913; Gant v. Hunsucker, 34 N. C. (12 Ired. L.) 254, 55 Am. Dec. 408.

A denial of liability is no fraud.

Rose v. West Philadelphia Pass. R. Co.

relate to the execution of the instrument itself, which is procured by some trick, device, or other fraudulent means, such as representations that the release merely covered time or wages lost (Illinois C. R. Co. v. Welch, supra; Whitney & S. Co. v. O'Rourke, 172 Ill. 177, 50 N. E. 242); or that the paper signed was a receipt to show the officers of the company as evidence of money expended in behalf of the injured party (Eagle Packet Co. v. Defries; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lewis; and National Syrup Co. v. Carlson, supra); or that it was a receipt for money paid the injured party to cover a doctor's bill occasioned by the injuries (Chicago City R. Co. v. Uhter, supra); or that the company wanted to have the injured person's name (Chicago City R. Co. v. McClain, 211 Ill. 589, 71 N. E. 1103).

In the foregoing cases, either because of the physical condition of the injured person at the time of the execution of the instrument, or because of illiteracy, the nature of the instrument signed was not known, and the representation of the wrongdoer or its agent was relied upon as to the nature of the instrument.

But in Hartley v. Chicago & A. R. Co. supra, where an injured employee in an action at law attempted to impeach a release given by him to the company, on the ground that he understood that it was simply to cover time lost because of the injury, and it appeared that, while he could read and write, he did not read the paper before signing it, but, instead, relied upon representations of the general manager and attorney of his employer as to its purport, and where the release was in printed form containing at the top the words "Release of all claims," in capital letters of large type, the court said that the evidence did not tend to show that the execution of the release was fraudulently obtained, and that therefore the release was a bar to the action.

Where the fraud relates to consideration or misrepresentations as to the extent of the injury, it is not such a fraud as will 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

permit the impeachment of a release of a claim for personal injuries in an action at law. Papke v. G. H. Hammond Co. and Mattoon Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Dolan, supra.

With the exception of Illinois C. R. Co. v. Welch and Papke v. G. H. Hammond Co. supra, it does not appear that any of the releases in the foregoing cases were under seal; and as to actions for damages for personal injuries, the foregoing doctrine apparently applies without reference to whether the release was under seal, as the damages are unliquidated and indefinite in amount; but where a claim is liquidated and the amount due thereon is definite, a distinction is made between a release under seal and one not under seal as to its impeachment for fraud in an action at law.

Thus, a release not under seal of the amount due on an insurance policy, executed by the beneficiary upon the receipt of a portion only of the amount due, is not a bar to an action on the policy for the balance remaining unpaid. Farmers' & M. Life Asso. v. Caine, 224 Ill. 599, 79 N. E. 956.

But in such a case, where the release is under seal, it can only be impeached in an action at law for fraud inherent in its execution; and if the execution was procured through misrepresentations as to collateral matters, a resort must first be had to a court of equity to reform or set it aside before an action at law can be maintained on the policy. Jackson v. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. 233 Ill. 161, 84 N. E. 198.

The doctrine that fraud in execution may be availed of to attack a release in an action to which it is pleaded as a bar, while fraud in the consideration can only be shown to affect the validity of the release by a direct proceeding in equity, was also recognized and applied by the Missouri courts for some time. Thus, in Homuth v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 129 Mo. 629, 31 S. W. 903, it was said that the issues raised by a reply impeaching the integrity of a release of damages for personal injuries, 9 Sadler (Pa.) 313, 12 Atl. 78; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Wilcox, 54 C. C. A. 147, 116 Fed. 915; Hartley v. Chicago & A. R. Co. supra.

Evidence of fraud, to set aside a release, must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing.

Pederson v. Seattle Consol. Street R. Co. 6 Wash. 202, 33 Pac. 351, 34 Pac. 665; Mateer v. Missouri P. R. Co. 105 Mo. 320, 16 S. W. 839; The Annie L. Mulford, 107 Fed. 525; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Sullivan, supra; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Shay, 82 Pa. 198; East St. Louis Packing & Provision Co. v. Hightower, 9 Ill. App. 297.

An administrator may compromise disputed claims in favor of the estate which he represents.

Weider v. Osborn, 20 Or. 310, 25 Pac.

on the ground of fraud in the execution, where such release was pleaded as a bar to an action for the injuries, could be tried in such action without a resort to equity; but where the signatures were admitted and the contents were read and its purport understood, courts of law would regard it as binding between the parties. To get rid of such instrument on the ground of fraud inducing its execution by the misrepresentation by defendant's physician of the extent of plaintiff's injuries, resort must be had to a court of equity.

It was also recognized in Girard v. St. Louis Car Wheel Co. 123 Mo. 358, 25 L.R.A. 514, 45 Am. St. Rep. 556, 27 S. W. 648, wherein it was held that a release by an employee of a claim for personal injuries, where, at the time of its execution, he was mentally incompetent to contract, was absolutely void, and could be impeached in an action at law when offered as a bar to an action for the injuries.

It was also applied in Och v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 130 Mo. 27, 36 L.R.A. 442, 31 S. W. 962. There was a difference of opinion among the judges in this case as to whether the release in question—which was of a claim for personal injuries received by a passenger on a railroad—was submitted to the jury on the theory that there was fraud in its inception because of the mental condition of the injured person at the time of the execution, together with fraudulent representations by an agent of the company as to the contents of the release, or whether it was fraud as to a collateral matter, being misrepresentation by the company's physician as to the extent of the injury. It was, however, agreed, that the question as to fraud in the inception of the instrument was properly raised in the action at law, and that any fraud in procuring the execution could not be relied upon to impeach it.

The same distinction was also made in Dwyer v. Wabash R. Co. 66 Mo. App. 335, as to a release of a claim for personal injuries.

And the doctrine was also applied in Hancock v. Blackwell, 139 Mo. 440, 41 S. W. 205, wherein it was held that a release 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

715; Parker v. Providence & S. S. B. Co. 17 R. I. 380, 14 L.R.A. 414, 33 Am. St. Rep. 869, 22 Atl. 284, 23 Atl. 102; Chadbourn v. Chadbourn, 9 Allen, 173; Bean v. Farnam, 6 Pick. 269; Chase v. Bradley, 26 Me. 531; Chouteau v. Suydam, 21 N. Y. 179; Wood v. Tunncliffe, 74 N. Y. 38.

Eakin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The second reply to the answer, namely, that the administrator cannot settle an unliquidated claim for damages without an order of the county court, involves the effect of our statute upon the common-law powers of the administrator. It is settled by Weider v. Osborn, 20 Or. 307, 25 Pac. 715, that Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & of damages for slander, with knowledge on the part of the releasor as to the character of the instrument and its purpose and effect, could not be avoided, when interposed as a bar to an action for the slander, on the ground that its execution was induced by fraudulent representations that the defendant never uttered the slander, and also by undue influence. The court said that, on such grounds, the release could only be attacked by a direct proceeding in equity for that purpose.

But this case was again before that court in 150 Mo. 245, 51 S. W. 668, on an appeal by the defendant from a verdict against him for slander, which had been rendered after the release had been set aside by the court of equity; and in a separate opinion the court said that the former opinion was erroneous under §§ 242 and 252, Rev. Stat. 1889, which, in substance, provide that, when a release is offered as an affirmative defense, the plaintiff may meet it by showing fraud in its procurement. This case may therefore be said to settle the rule in Missouri that a release may be impeached by fraud without reference to whether the fraud was inherent in its execution, or whether it related to collateral matters to procure its execution.

It was followed as authority on this point in Cardwell v. Stuart, 92 Mo. App. 586, as to a release by an heir to an administrator, which was procured by false representations as to the amount of the estate being administered.

It was also followed in Lomax v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co. 119 Mo. App. 192, 95 S. W. 945, which, however, held that sufficient evidence of fraud in procuring the release had not been shown.

It is now settled by statute (Rev. Stat. 1899, § 654), that a plea of fraudulent or wrongful procurement of a release pleaded in bar to an action can be set up in plaintiff's reply, and that that issue should be tried by a jury, with and as a part of the whole case, and a general verdict returned. Goodson v. National Masonic Acci. Asso. 91 Mo. App. 339.

In other jurisdictions the rule applied in Statutes, § 1168, prohibiting the sale of personal property by an administrator except upon an order of the county court or judge thereof, applies only to tangible property, and has no application to choses in action. At common law the executor and administrator has an absolute power of disposal over the whole of the personal effects of decedent (1 Williams. Exrs. & Adms. pp. 485, 545), with full power to compromise or accept any composition or otherwise settle any debt, claim, or thing whatsoever (Id. p. 713), and Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 1211, authorizing certain debts to be compounded, applies only to those of insolvent debtors, and does not include the adjustment or settlement of an unliquidated claim for damages

(Washington v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 34 Ill. App. 658, Id. 136 Ill. 49, 26 N. E. 653; Moulton v. Holmes, 57 Cal. 337; Parker v. Providence & S. S. B. Co. 17 R. I. 376, 14 L.R.A. 414, 33 Am. St. Rep. 869, 22 Atl. 284, 23 Atl. 102). Therefore, as to an unliquidated claim for damages, the powers of an administrator remain in this state as at common law, and he may liquidate and accept settlement of such a claim without special authority from the county court.

Plaintiff objected to the introduction of the release in evidence, for the reason that it is only his individual release, and does not bind the estate. Although it states that "for myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, hereby release," etc., yet the circumstances under which it was given

OLSTON v. OREGON WATER POWER & R. CO. also prevails and a release may be attacked for fraud, whether relating to the execution or consideration, in any action wherein the release is relied upon. As in the Missouri cases, most of the decisions so holding are influenced by statutory or Code provisions, combining to a greater or less extent legal and equitable remedies. Wagner v. National L. Ins. Co. 33 C. C. A. 121, 61 U. S. App. 691, 90 Fed. 395, while clearly recognizing the distinction still maintained between actions at law and equity by the Federal court, held it proper in a suit at law for the plaintiff to meet a plea of release by a replication that the release was obtained by fraud, whether the fraud was in the execution or in a misrepresentation of material facts inducing the execution. This case involved both fraud in the execution of the surrender of a life insurance policy as well as fraud in its procurement. The decision is by Judge Taft, who apparently gave the matter serious consideration. On this point he said: "The law side of a court of the United States is a court of common law with no equity jurisdiction, except such as the common-law courts of England exercised before the acts of Parliament, which, in terms, gave them certain equitable powers. A close study of the two concurrent systems of law and equity between Lord Mansfield's time and the passage of the act of 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. chap. 125), which, for the first time, gave the courts of law power to entertain equitable pleas and replications, would doubtless show that the more enlightened and liberal course of the chancellor in disregarding forms, and looking to the substance, and in avoiding circuitry of action by settling controversies in one suit, had a direct effect upon the procedure in the common-law courts. Certain it is that early in this century, and perhaps earlier, the common-law courts began to assert what they called an equitable jurisdiction to defeat certain inequitable defenses. The manner of doing this we shall refer to later. By the judicature act of 1873, the courts of law finally obtained full equitable powers. It is not always an easy matter to determine whether the procedure approved in cases decided in this period of transition is based on common-law or equitable principles. When we consider the American authorities, we are still in greater perplexity, because in some states the distinction between law and equity pleading and practice has been abolished as far as possible; in other states it has been modified; and in others it remains comparatively intact. This much must be said, however: That, although the distinction between law and equity procedure has always been maintained in courts of the United States, it is natural and it is proper that the relaxing of the rigid lines between the two jurisdictions in England and in most of the states of this country should render courts of the United States, sitting as courts of law to-day, less acute than in earlier days to exclude pleas and replications having an equitable flavor, which would have been of doubtful validity in a court of law presided over by Lord Holt or Sir Matthew Hale, or even by Lord Kenyon or Lord Ellenborough. Even courts of common law must partake of the spirit of progress.

"But, whatever the proper rule may have been as to other forms of specialty, the history of the course of the English and American courts in defeating releases which would have been set aside in equity justifies the conclusion that there was more liberality in allowing replications to avoid them than in the case of other specialties. The inconvenience of compelling a plaintiff in an action at law, who was met by a plea of release, to resort to an expensive and vexatious proceeding in equity to set it aside for fraud, led courts of law to exercise what has already been alluded to as their equitable jurisdiction to defeat the plea."

So, where a release for personal injuries is obtained by fraud or misrepresentation, it is void, and the question of its validity may be tried in an action for the injuries; and this rule applies to a release obtained by fraud, misrepresentation, and undue influence relating to collateral matters. Busian v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 325, 14 N. W. 462. In this case the show that the payment which it acknowledges was to cover the whole liability of the defendant, not only in his own interests, but in the interest of his mother, brother, and sisters, and that he was appointed administrator of the estate because he could not individually receipt for it. It is a claim in which the individual heirs have no direct interest. The fund is the property of the estate. By Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes, §§ 379, 381, the heirs have no remedy for damages occasioned by an injury to the person of the decedent. The release is signed by "John H. Olston, as administrator of the estate of William H. Olston, deceased," which shows an intention to bind the estate, especially as it alone was entitled to receive the money. However, if court remarked that, if the release was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation, it is void, and that question could always be tried in a court of law before the adoption of the Code. Citing 2 Chitty, Pl. 16th Am. ed. 455.

In New York, since the adoption of the Code, all actions relating to the same subject-matter, whether of an equitable or legal character, may be combined. Hence, a release of money loaned may be impeached for fraud in an action to recover the money, and where such an action is pending it must be attacked there, and cannot be attacked in a proceeding in equity for that specific purpose. Dambman v. Schulting, 51 How. Pr. 337.

Whether a release of the amount due on an insurance policy was fairly obtained is a question of fact, which may be raised in any action where the release is made the basis of a defense. Rauen v. Prudential Ins. Co. 129 Iowa, 725, 106 N. W. 198 (release procured by false representations as to liability).

It was also stated in Yaple v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 57 App. Div. 265, 68 N. Y. Supp. 292, that there was no doubt about the right in an action for personal injuries to impeach a release thereof because of fraud in procuring it.

A release of a claim for personal injuries, procured by misrepresentations as to the extent of the injuries, may be impeached on the trial of an action for the recovery of the injuries. Fleming v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 95 App. Div. 110, 88 N. Y. Supp. 732.

An injured employee may maintain an action to cancel a release procured by the fraudulent representations of the wrongdoer's physician as to the extent of his injuries, and also recover in the same action damages for the injury. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Cade (Tex. Civ. App.) 93 S. W. 124.

A release of a claim for personal injuries, obtained from the injured party by the exercise of undue influence upon him when in a feeble and nervous condition, caused by the injuries, and also by the use of false and fraudulent representations as to the the intention is ambiguous or doubtful, it is a question of fact for the jury to determine, and the court was not in error in refusing to exclude the release on that ground.

Defendant contends that the release cannot be attacked at law for fraud in procuring the settlement upon which the release was executed. The general rule is that courts of equity and courts of law have concurrent jurisdiction of fraud. There are exceptions to this rule, however, based upon whether or not there is a remedy at law, and whether it is adequate. If there is a remedy at law, the fraud may be established in that jurisdiction; but, if that remedy is not adequate, resort may be had to a court of equity. It is said that, where extent of the injuries, may be impeached in an action at law for the injuries, without first proceeding in equity to have the release set aside or rescinded, where, by the Code, legal and equitable rights are administered in a single court and in one form of proceeding. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Goodholm, 61 Kan. 758, 60 Pac. 1066.

In North Carolina, under the Code, a defendant to an action for damages for personal injuries may allege a release as a defense, and the plaintiff, by reply, may attack its validity on the ground of fraud in its procurement, going to the consideration. Bean v. Western North Carolina R. Co. 107 N. C. 731, 12 S. E. 600.

In Tennessee, a release of a claim for personal injuries, pleaded in bar to an action at law for damages therefor, may be impeached for fraud or misrepresentation either in its execution or in the inducement to the execution. Brundige v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 112 Tenn. 526, 79 S. W. 1027 (action by employee; fraud in execution and consideration); Memphis Street R. Co. v. Giardino, 116 Tenn. 368, 92 S. W. 855, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 176 (fraud based on mental incapacity and inadequate consideration).

A release of a claim for personal injuries may also be attacked in England for fraud in the consideration as well as in the execution. Such was the holding as to a release of a claim for personal injuries not under seal, in Hirschfeld v. London, B. & S. C. R. Co. L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 1, where, in an action for personal injuries, a reply to an answer setting up a release as a bar to the action was sustained on demurrer; although, as a ground for impeaching the release, it alleged fraud by the defendant's physician in obtaining it by falsely representing that the plaintiff's injuries were slight and of a temporary character, and that, if they turned out to be more serious, the release, which was absolute in its terms, would not affect his right to recover. In disposing of the question, Mellor, Judge, said: "I think that there is nothing in law, and certainly nothing in equity, which says that a man who has been induced to execute a deed in a court of law can get hold of the whole matter, it is as competent to try questions of fraud as a court of equity. Rust v. Larue, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 411, 14 Am. Dec. 172. The law relieves against fraud negatively by preventing either a recovery or a defense founded upon an instrument induced by fraud. Lamborn v. Watson, 6 Harr. & J. 252, 255, 14 Am. Dec. 275. Fraud may be pleaded at law when the relief sought in a particular case is such as can be effected by a judgment. Ankrim v. Woodworth, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 355; Wheeler v. Clinton Canal Bank, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 449; Wing v. Sherrer, 77 Ill. 200; Slack v. McLagan, 15 Ill. 242; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 172, 174. At common law there is an exception to this rule in the case of sealed instruments; but it is general as to all contracts not under seal. 1 Bigelow, Fr. 174, 175; Sanford v. Royal Ins. Co. 11 Wash. 653, 40 Pac. 609; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Hayes, 83 Ga. 558, 10 S. E. 350; Hoitt v. Holcomb, 23 N. H. 535. A release at common law is required to be under seal, and therefore is a specialty, in which a consideration is conclusively presumed. Leake, Contr. 653. And therefore it cannot be questioned in a law action except for fraud or deceit affecting its execution,—that is, upon a plea of non est factum,—but, for fraudulent representations inducing the settlement,—that is, affecting the consideration,—equity alone can relieve. Bigelow, Fr. 326, says: "At common law, it has generally been held incompetent to a de-consequence of a misrepresentation as to its effect has no defense." And Lush, Judge, remarked that, while he did not think it necessary to determine that question, yet, if it were before him, he would not have the least hesitation in holding that fraud in the procurement of a release, by misrepresenting its effect, constituted a defense thereto.

And in Stewart v. Great Western R. Co. 2 De G. J. & S. 319, on a bill to restrain the defendant railway company from setting up a plea of release of a claim for personal injuries in an action at law for such injuries, on the ground of fraud in its procurement by falsely representing the extent of the injuries, in granting relief the Lord Chancellor remarked that, even in the action at law, the company would be held responsible for the fraudulent conduct of their agent in procuring the release.

A release of a note may, in an action on the note, to which it is pleaded as a bar, be shown to have been made to enable the maker to procure the dismissal of proceedings against him in bankruptcy, with an express understanding with the holder that the note was not to be thereby released, but was later to be paid in full. Scott v. Scott, 105 Ind. 584, 5 N. E. 397.

Where a release of money due under an insurance policy was procured by fraudulent representations as to the liability of the company, and the execution of the instrument was procured late at night by the agent of the company agreeing to bring the papers back in the morning and arrange a settlement satisfactory to the insured, the court, in Sanford v. Royal Ins. Co. 11 Wash. 653, 40 Pac. 609, said that it would best harmonize with the spirit of the Code system to allow the validity of the release to be attacked in the action on the policy, in bar of which the release had been pleaded.

In the following cases the question of fraud in obtaining a release was held a proper one to be submitted to the jury along with other questions in the action with reference to which the release was pleaded as a bar, although the question here under consideration was apparently not considered: O'Brien v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 89 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Iowa, 644, 57 N. W. 425; Meyer v. Haas, 126 Cal. 560, 58 Pac. 1042; Butler v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 88 Ga. 594, 15 S. E. 668 (fraud in execution); Wells v. Morrison, 91 Ind. 51; O'Neil v. Lake Superior Iron Co. 63 Mich. 690, 30 N. W. 688; Burik v. Dundee Woolen Co. 66 N. J. L. 420, 49 Atl. 442 (fraud in execution); Ettinger v. Jones, 139 Pa. 218, 21 Atl. 137 (release under seal); Bjorklund v. Seattle Electric Co. 35 Wash. 439, 77 Pac. 727, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 443; Ball v. McGeoch, 81 Wis. 160, 51 N. W. 443; Sheanon v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 83 Wis. 507, 53 N. W. 878.

In view of the doctrine that fraud in execution is available in an action at law to impeach a release pleaded in bar thereto, while fraud in the consideration is not, it becomes important in many cases to distinguish between the two kinds of fraud. The following cases are therefore important as illustrating fraud in execution, sufficient to impeach a release in the action at law to which it is pleaded as a bar:

Thus, a release of a claim for personal injuries by an injured person at a time when he was mentally incapacitated from contracting is not a bar to an action for injuries. Gibson v. Western New York & P. R. Co. 164 Pa. 142, 44 Am. St. Rep. 586, 30 Atl. 308; Julius v. Pittsburg, A. & M. Traction Co. 184 Pa. 19, 39 Atl. 141; Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Jones, 73 Miss. 110, 55 Am. St. Rep. 488, 19 So. 105.

So, where an injured person, illiterate and unable to read or write, except to sign her name, is induced to sign a release of all damages occasioned by the injury by the fraudulent representations that it is a mere receipt for servant hire, and it also appears that, at the time, she was mentally and physically incapacitated from acting in the matter, the receipt may be impeached in an action at law for the injuries. Perry v. M. O'Neil & Co. 78 Ohio St. 200, 85 N. E. 41.

And a release of a claim for personal injuries, from an illiterate employee, procured by fraudulently misrepresenting the contents, is utterly void, and is no defense to an action at law for the injuries. Hayes v.

fendant sued at law on a specialty to plea that the instrument was obtained by false representations. Such defense must be made in equity; but it is otherwise of the execution of the instrument, as where the bond is misread to the obligor, or where his signature is obtained to an instrument which he did not intend to sign. In such cases, fraud may be alleged at law. The ground of this rule seems to be that to admit evidence of fraud not relating to the execution of the deed would be to allow the obligor to disprove the presumption of consideration, which presumption, in the case of a specialty, is an absolute one, not to be rebutted. Some courts, however, admit the plea of fraud as to the consideration, as well as to the execution of the instrument; and in other courts it is allowed by statute." The court, in Hartshorn v. Day, 19

How. 211, 222, 15 L. ed. 605, 611, which is the leading case on this question, says: "The general rule is that, in an action upon a sealed instrument in a court of law, failure of consideration, or fraud in the consideration, for the purpose of avoiding the obligation, is not admissible as between parties and privies to the deed; and, more especially, where there has been a part execution of the contract. The difficulties are in adjusting the rights and equities of the parties in a court of law; and hence, in the states where the two systems of jurisprudence prevail, of equity and the common law, a court of law refuses to open the question of fraud in the consideration, or in the transaction out of which the consideration arises, in a suit upon the sealed instrument, but turns the party over to a court of equity, where the instrument can

Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co. 143 N. C. 125, 55 S. E. 437, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 737.

So, a release in full for injuries, if executed by the injured party with the belief that it was only a receipt for wages, which belief was induced by the fraud of the releasee, is not a bar to an action at law for the injuries. Cleary v. Municipal Electric Light Co. 47 N. Y. S. R. 172, 19 N. Y. Supp. 951, affirmed without opinion in 139 N. Y. 643, 35 N. E. 206.

To the same effect are Shaw v. Webber, 79 Hun, 307, 29 N. Y. Supp. 437, affirmed without opinion in 151 N. Y. 655, 46 N. E. 1151; Dixon v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 100 N. Y. 170, 3 N. E. 65 (mental incapacity to execute release).

And it has been held that a release of a claim for personal injuries may be attacked in an action to recover for injuries, on the ground that, when it was signed, the signer did not know that it was a release, and was not informed of that fact, and that she was induced to sign it by false representations as to the nature and extent of her injuries. O'Meara v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 16 App. Div. 204, 44 N. Y. Supp. 721.

An action may be maintained at law for personal injuries, notwithstanding the written release, if it was obtained by fraudulent representations that the instrument signed was merely a receipt for money paid for lost time. Under such circumstances it is unnecessary first to sue in equity to cancel the release. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Smith, 82 Ark. 105, 100 S. W. 884.

And a release by an employee of a claim for personal injuries, induced by false representations as to the extent of his injuries, executed under the belief that it was for his wages and expenses while recovering from the injuries, constitutes no defense to an action for the injuries. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hambright, 87 Ark. 614, 113 S. W. 803.

So, an employee who signs an alleged discharge or acquittance for damages because of his injuries, without knowing its contents, and without intending to sign such an instrument, is not bound by it, although it is pleaded as a bar to an action for the injuries. Schultz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 44 Wis. 638.

While not discussing the question of jurisdiction in Union P. R. Co. v. Harris, 158 U. S. 328, 39 L. ed. 1003, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 843, the question whether a release of a claim for personal injuries was obtained when the injured person was so mentally enfeebled by opiates and the shock and pain of the injuries as to be unable to enter into contractual relations was held to have been properly submitted to the jury, as affecting the validity of the release as a bar to an action for the injuries.

To the same effect also, as to the question of fraud in procuring the release, based in part upon the physical condition of the injured person and also upon false representations made to him as to the nature of the release, is Bliss v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 160 Mass. 447, 39 Am. St. Rep. 504, 36 N. E. 65.

To same effect, also, is Blackburn v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. (Mass.) 87 N. E. 579 (representation that releasor's attorney advised its execution).

A release not under seal, of damages for fraud and deceit in the sale of real estate, if regarded as a mere declaration or admission, is subject to explanation the same as a receipt, without proof of fraud or mistake; and, if considered as a release or agreement, it is subject to impeachment for mutual mistake, fraud, or any misrepresentation by which the party was induced to sign it without knowing its contents. Croekie v. Hirshfield, 50 App. Div. 87, 63 N. Y. Supp. 365. To the same effect is Creshkoff v. Schwartz, 53 Misc. 576, 103 N. Y. Supp. 782, as to a release of a claim for damages for fraud and deceit in the sale of steamship tickets, where the release was procured from one unfamiliar with the English language, by fraudulently representing that it was an agreement, in consideration of a note of even date, not to sue for a stated period.

be set aside upon such terms as, under all the circumstances, may be equitable and just between the parties. A court of law can hold no middle course; the question is limited to the validity or invalidity of the deed. Fraud in the execution of the instrument has always been admitted in a court of law, as where it has been misread, or some other fraud or imposition has been practised upon the party in procuring his signature and seal. The fraud in this aspect goes to the question whether or not the instrument ever had any legal existence." To the same effect are: George v. Tate, 102 U. S. 564, 26 L. ed. 232; Papke v. G. H. Hammond Co. 192 Ill. 631, 61 N. E. 910; McArthur v. Johnson, 61 N. C. (Phill. L.) 317, 93 Am. Dec. 593; Saunders v. Stotts, 6 Ohio, 380, 27 Am. Dec. 263; Truman v. Lore, 14 Ohio St. 144, 155; State ex rel. Jones v. Jones, 131 Mo. 194, 33 S. W. 23; Vandervelden v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (C. C.) 61 Fed. 54; Wyche v. Macklin, 2 Rand. (Va.) 426; Phillips v. Potter, 7 R. I. 289, 82 Am. Dec. 598; Hartley v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 214 Ill. 78, 73 N. E. 398. In the case of Lumley v. Wabash R. Co. 22 C. C. A. 60, 43 U. S. App. 476, 76 Fed. 66, the release was a sealed instrument, and the proceeding was in equity to cancel it. The lower court dismissed the complaint because there was a remedy at law, and the decree was reversed because the release, being under seal, could not be attacked at law for fraud; the court saying: "If the release had in fact been procured by fraud, he could have shown this at law; the fact that the release was under seal out of the way." Hill v. Northern P. R. Co. 51 C. C. A. 544, 113 Fed. 914, and Papke v. G. H. Hammond Co. supra, also make the distinction that it is the seal that excludes the proof of fraud at law, citing these United States cases. Judge Putnam, in Johnson v. Merry Mount Granite Co. (C. C.) 53 Fed. 569, 572, in holding that the seal is the distinguishing feature that precludes proof of fraud in the consideration, that being, at common law, the effect of the seal, says: "However, it must be admitted that, on account of want of careful discrimination in the various directions which I have suggested, late text-writers, and even courts of common law, have not always distinguished between the remedy in equity and that at common law, when fraud is alleged as an answer to a release under seal or other deed." Defendant criticizes the opinion in the case of Wagner v. National L. Ins. Co. 33 C. C. A. 121, 61 U. S. App. 691, 90 Fed. 395, 404, as being contrary to the holding of the other United States courts; but the final conclusion in that case is fully in accord with all the cases above cited on that question. The release in the Wagner Case is 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

but a receipt not under seal. Judge Taft, who writes the opinion, says: "We find no reason, therefore, to modify the remark made by this court, speaking through Judge Lurton in Lumley v. Wabash R. Co. 22 C. C. A. 67, 43 U. S. App. 476, 489, and 76 Fed. 73, where he said: 'If the release had in fact been procured by fraud, he [the plaintiff] could have shown this at law, if the fact that the release was under seal had been out of the way.' The remark was, perhaps, not necessary to the case then before the court, but in this case, where the question calls for decision, we have no difficulty in confirming it."

We find that the rule at common law permitted any writing not under seal to be attacked at law for fraud in the consideration in all cases where the relief sought could be obtained in that jurisdiction, and a bond or writing obligatory, namely, a specialty, can be attacked at law for fraud in the execution of it, but not for fraud in the consideration. In many of the states the seal has lost much of its significance by the changes which the statute has made in the common law. In some the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments has been abolished. In 1893 Missouri dispensed with private seals entirely (Laws 1893, p. 117); also, Washington (Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 4523 [Pierce's Code, § 4438]); also, Kansas and Nebraska; while others still recognize the seal as prima facie evidence of consideration, but permit defenses at law to sealed instruments the same as to unsealed. This was the Missouri statute of 1845 (Rev. Stat. 1845, ch. 136, art. 7, § 20); also, Alabama (Giles v. Williams, 3 Ala. 316, 37 Am. Dec. 692); New York (Case v. Boughton, 11 Wend. 106); Michigan (Lumley v. Wabash R. Co. 22 C. C. A. 60, 43 U. S. App. 476, 76 Fed. 73), and Iowa, Indiana, and New Hampshire. And our own statute modifies the common-law effect of the seal, making it prima facie evidence of consideration. Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 765, provides: "The seal affixed to a writing is primary evidence of a consideration. In other respects there is no difference between sealed and unsealed writings, except as to the time of commencing actions or suits thereon. A writing under seal may therefore be modified or discharged by a writing not under seal or by an oral agreement otherwise valid." And "primary evidence" is defined by § 686, Id.: "Primary evidence is that which suffices for the proof of a particular fact until contradicted and overcome by other evidence." Section 767, Id., relating to releases, provides: "An agreement in writing, without a seal, for the compromise or settlement of a debt or controversy, is as obligatory as if a seal were affixed." The reason that want of, or fraud in, the consideration of a specialty, cannot be shown at law, is that the seal conclusively imports a consideration. 1 Parsons, Contr. (9th ed.) * 428; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. p. 664; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. p. 93; Ortman v. Dixon, 13 Cal. 33. And the effect of the seal, by our statute, being only prima facie evidence of the consideration, gives to a sealed instrument no greater significance than to one unsealed, which expresses the consideration on its face, and either may be attacked at law for fraud in the consideration as well as for fraud in the execution. The following additional cases are to that effect; Withers v. Greene, 9 How. 213, 13 L. ed. 109; Aller v. Aller, 40 N. J. L. 446; Girard v. St. Louis Car Wheel Co. 123 Mo. 358, 25 L.R.A. 514, 45 Am. St. Rep. 556, 27 S. W. 648; McCarty v. Beach, 10 Cal. 461; Northern Kansas Town Co. v. Oswald, 18 Kan. 336; Judy v. Louderman, 48 Ohio St. 562, 29 N. E. 181; Huston v. Williams, 3 Blackf. 170, 25 Am. Dec. '84. In Paddock v. Hume, 6 Or. 82, which was an action upon a bond, it is suggested that, if want of consideration, or that it was obtained by fraud, had been pleaded in the answer, it would have been a good defense; and to the same effect is Taylor v. Fleckenstein (C. C.) 30 Fed. 99, which is an action on a bond under our statute. Therefore the release in question, although under seal, may be attacked in a law action for fraud in the consideration.

It is further contended by the defendant that, even if the statements made to plaintiff which are alleged to have been false and fraudulent were so, yet they were only statements of opinions, and not representations of fact. The sufficiency of the allegations of the fraudulent conduct contained in the reply was not raised in the lower court, nor was the evidence objected to on the ground that it tended to prove statements of opinions, and not facts, and seems to be raised here by the brief for the first time. The evidence offered at the trial tended directly to prove the allegations of fraud contained in the reply, and therefore the correctness of the court's ruling in excluding the evidence depends upon whether those allegations are sufficient. They are in the following words: "That it would be useless expense for said John H. Olston to get legal advice from any lawyer concerning the matter; that the attorney and legal adviser of the defendant company, as a person skilled in the law, had authorized the defendant company, and its agents and officers to tell said John H. Olston that there was no responsibility on the part of the defendant company for said accident or death, and that it was not liable in damages in any amount because of said accident or death of said deceased; that if said John H. Olston, or any of the heirs at law of the said deceased, brought any action at law against the Oregon Water Power & Railway Company, the company would keep such action in court for ten years or more, and would make it cost John H. Olston or any heir or heirs of said deceased that might bring such action all the money he or they might be worth, and would prevent him, or them, from recovering any damages whatever." Although the matter alleged and offered in proof as constituting the fraud is largely a matter of opinion, yet sometimes a statement of an opinion is necessarily based upon a fact or carries with it such an inference of fact that it can be interpreted as a statement of fact, and where it is known to be false and made with intent to deceive, it may be actionable. It is said, in 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 18: "An expression of opinion may be so blended with statements of fact as to become itself a statement of fact. Where one of the parties has superior knowledge on the subject, his expression of an opinion which he knows he does not entertain, because it is contrary to the facts, may be actionable if made for the purpose of inducing another to act upon it, which he does to his injury." To the same effect is 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 35. In an English case (Smith v. Land, & House Property Corp. L. R. 28 Ch. Div. 7, 15), in discussing this question, it is said: "It is material to observe that it is often fallaciously assumed that a statement of opinion cannot involve the statement of a fact. . . . But, if the facts are not equally known to both sides, then a statement of opinion by the one who knows the facts best involves very often a statement of a material fact, for he impliedly states that he knows facts which justify his opinion." In Stebbins v. Eddy, 4 Mason, 414, 423, Fed. Cas. No. 13,342, the court says: "It has been suggested at the bar that fraud cannot be predicated of belief, but, only of facts: but this distinction is quite too subtle and refined. The affirmation of belief is an affirmation of a fact, that is, of the fact of belief; and if it is fraudulently made to mislead or cheat another, to abuse his confidence, or to blind his judgment, it is in law and morals just as reprehensible as if any other fact were affirmed for the like purpose. The law looks not to the nature of the fact averred, but to the object and design of the affirmation." In People v. Peckens, 163 N. Y. 576, 591, 47 N. E. 883, 887, Mr. Justice Martin says: "It is insisted that many of the representations to the complainant and her husband, which induced the making and delivery of her deed, were expressions of opinion, and, although false, and known to be so, no liability resulted. As a general rule, the mere expression of an opinion, which is understood to be only an opinion, does not render a person expressing it liable for fraud; but where the statements are as to value or quality, and are made by a person knowing them to be untrue, with an intent to deceive and mislead the one to whom they are made, and he is thus induced to forbear making inquiries which he otherwise would, they may amount to an affirmation of fact, rendering him liable therefor. In such a case, whether a representation is an expression of an opinion or an affirmation of a fact is a question for the jury. The rule that no one is liable for an expression of an opinion is applicable only when the opinion stands by itself as a distinct thing." The allegations of fraudulent representations, and of which proof was offered and excluded by the court, are to the effect, among other things, that the defendant's attorney, having full knowledge of the circumstances and cause of the accident, says that the company is not liable in damages for the death of the decedent, and that plaintiff need not go to the expense of looking up the facts or to seek advice, but urges the defendant to act upon these opinions; and this, at least, may be interpreted as a representation of fact, and the evidence should have been submitted to the jury upon these questions. Therefore the court erred in excluding the evidence offered by plaintiff to show fraud in the consideration for the release, and, as this necessitates the reversal of the judgment, it is unnecessary to consider the other assignments of error.

The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Eakin, J., handed down the following response on October 6, 1908:

The motion for rehearing is based largely upon the idea that the opinion in effect holds that equitable defenses may be pleaded at law; but such is not the intent of the opinion. Counsel for defendant have attributed that effect to it upon their conclusion that the fraud relied on is "equitable fraud," probably meaning fraud over which equity has exclusive jurisdiction. The opinion is to the effect that, even if this is an instrument under seal, yet by operation of our statute it is deprived of the solemnity formerly ascribed to it by reason of the seal. Now the seal is primary evidence of a consideration, which means that the presumption thus arising may be overcome by evidence to the contrary, and is therefore subject to defenses at law, the same as a simple contract in which the consideration is expressed. If a simple contract is induced by fraud, the defrauded party may rescind it without the aid of equity, and may plead the fraud in defense of an action to enforce it or to recover damage for its breach. 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 343; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 158; 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 433; Brown v. Freeman, 79 Ala. 406; Strayhorn v. Giles, 22 Ark. 517; Miliken v. Thorndike, 103 Mass. 382; Irving v. Thomas, 18 Me. 418. And our statute having reduced sealed instruments to the footing of simple contracts that express consideration, fraud in the consideration is recognized at law and is not exclusively an equitable defense. The only authority cited by defendant in the motion that seems to conflict with this view is Vandervelden v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (C. C.) 61 Fed. 54. This case recognizes the force of the Iowa statute abolishing the effect of the seal, but ignores that fact and holds that, because the instrument is sealed, the defense of fraud is cognizable only in equity. But in Williams v. Haines, 27 Iowa, 251, 1 Am. Rep. 268, it is held that, by reason of the statute having abolished the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments, defenses to sealed instruments going to the consideration may be pleaded at law.

Counsel seek to make a distinction between the effect of the Alabama statute, as construed in Withers v. Greene, 9 How. 213, 13 L. ed. 109, and our own; but that statute only admits defenses to sealed instruments "as if the said writing had not been sealed." Referring to that statute, Justice Daniel says: "By the enactment herein first cited it is obvious that specialties are divested of any force or solemnity at any time ascribed to them by reason of their having a seal annexed, and are placed with respect to all inquiries which may be instituted into the validity of their consideration precisely upon the footing of parol agreements." The same is true of the New Jersey statute (Rev. Stat. 1874, p. 380, § 16), which reads: "In any action upon an instrument in writing, under seal, the defendant in such action may plead and set up as a defense therein, fraud in the consideration of the contract upon which recovery is sought, as fully and to all intents and purposes as if such instrument were not under seal" (see Aller v. Aller, 40 N. J. L. 446), thus permitting such defenses of fraud, and only such, as are permissible to unsealed instruments, and placing sealed instruments on the footing of simple contracts in that particular.

By our statute, quoted in the opinion, the effect of the seal is eliminated, except as to the time of commencing actions or suit thereon, and that it shall be primary evidence of a consideration and is as comprehensive as that of either Alabama, New Jersey, or Iowa. Therefore we hold that the defense pleaded is not an equitable defense, but a legal one. This in no manner conflicts with the decision in Fire Asso. v. Allesina, 45 Or. 154, 77 Pac. 123, or Cohn v. Wemme, 47 Or. 146, 81 Pac. 98, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 508, both of which cases relate to awards. The rule is that an award is a final judgment, both at law and in equity. It is said that an award is entitled to that respect which is due to the judgment of a court of last resort (2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 794; 3 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 728), and therefore cannot be classed with contracts, sealed or unsealed.

The motion is denied.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

ESTHER A. SMITH, Appt.,
v.
METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

(222 Pa. 226, 71 Atl. 11.)

Insurance — death of beneficiary — effect.

1. Death within the lifetime of the insured terminates the interest of the bene-

Case Note. — Right of insurance company, in making payment of proceeds of life policy, to rely on clause giving company option as to payee, and making receipt conclusive evidence of payment to proper person.

SMITH v. METROPOLITAN L. INS. Co. decides a question upon which there is apparently some lack of uniformity, although this may, in some instances, at least, be traced to the provisions of the particular policy in suit.

This note includes only cases where payment had actually been made by the company to another than the plaintiff, and a provision like the one in question was invoked as a defense.

A clause similar to that in the SMITH CASE, providing that the company might pay the sum due to any relative or to any other person appearing to said company to be equitably entitled to the same, and that a receipt signed by such person, or other sufficient proof of payment, should be conclusive evidence of payment to the person entitled to receive the amount, was held to protect the defendant company in Bradley v. Prudential Ins. Co. 187 Mass. 226, 72 N. E. 989, where the action was by an administrator to recover the proceeds of a policy held by his intestate in favor of her exficiary of life insurance policies, and leaves the insured free to make other disposition of the policy.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — change of, beneficiary — estoppel.

2. An insurance company which furnishes blanks for change of beneficiary, and accepts and recognizes a designated change for a period of years, is estopped to claim that the change was not made in strict accordance with its by-laws.

Same — wrongful payment — contract rights.

3. A life insurance company cannot absolve itself from liability to the beneficiary duly designated by the insured for the proceeds of the policy by paying them to the administrator of the insured, although the policy provides that the production by the corporation of the policy and of a receipt signed by any person furnishing satisfactory proof that he is executor of insured shall be conclusive proof that the sum had been paid to the person lawfully entitled to receive the same.

(October 5, 1908.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Schuylkill County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James B. Reilly and George W. Ryan for appellant.

executors or administrators or assigns, and payment had been made by the company in good faith to one who was living with the insured as her husband, and who had paid part of the premiums and all the funeral expenses.

The same rule was followed in Thomas v. Prudential Ins. Co. 148 Pa. 594, 24 Atl. 82, where the action was by an administrator, and the company successfully defended under the same clause because payment had been made to the decedent's landlady, to whom he was indebted for board and funeral expenses.

Brennan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 170 Pa. 488, 32 Atl. 1042, construing the same clause, follows the Thomas Case, supra, and holds that payment by the company, in the exercise of the discretion given it by the policy, to one appearing to be equitably entitled to the proceeds, is a complete defense to an action by the personal representative of the deceased, even though settlement was made for a less amount than named in the policy, if made in good faith, and in an honest effort to meet and discharge the obligations of the contract. As to why the payee in this case was equitably entitled to the proceeds does not appear. The principle thus announced is followed in Sheridan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 128 Ill. App. 519 (aff.)

Messrs. R. H. Koch and Guy E. Farquhar, for appellee:

An insured cannot, without the consent of the beneficiary's legal representatives or heirs, change the sole benefit under a policy of insurance taken out on his life for such beneficiary.

Waltz v. Mutual Aid Soc. 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 208; Anderson's Estate, 85 Pa. 202; Brown's Appeal, 125 Pa. 303, 11 Am. St. Rep. 900, 17 Atl. 419; Entwistle v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 202 Pa. 141, 51 Atl. 759; Herr v. Reinoehl, 209 Pa. 483, 58 Atl. 862; Watt v. Gideon, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. 499; Jones v. Jones, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 254; Glanz v. Gloeckler, 104 Ill. 573, 44 Am. Rep. 94; Weston v. Richardson, 47 L. T. N. S. 514; Pence v. Makepeace, 65 Ind. 345; Allis v. Ware, 28 Minn. 166, 9 N. W. 666.

Mitchell, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Gordon took out five separate policies of insurance on his own life. No beneficiary or person to whom the insurance should be paid on the death of the insured was named in any of the policies, but, in the applications for three of them, in answer to the printed question as to whom the money should be payable, the name of his wife was written. In the other two there was not even this designation of a beneficiary, but it was conceded at the trial that the insurance was intended for her benefit, and that the policies were handed to her by the insured. The trial court, therefore, treated all the policies as alike in her favor as beneficiary, and for the purposes of this case no question on this point need be considered. The wife died first, and subsequently the husband, by written order, on a blank "change of designation" furnished by the company, appointed his daughter, the plaintiff, as the beneficiary. She brought suit, and on the trial was nonsuited on the ground that the interest in the policies had vested in the wife, and at her death passed to her administrator as part of her estate.

In support of this result, reliance is had principally on the cases of Anderson's Estate, 85 Pa. 202, Brown's Appeal, 125 Pa. 303, 11 Am. St. Rep. 900, 17 Atl. 419, and Entwistle v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 202 Pa. 141, 51 Atl. 759. The facts, however, in these cases were so different that none of them can be regarded as a controlling authority for the present. In Anderson's Estate the policy was payable to the wife, "her executors, administrators, or assigns." The insured (husband) having died insolvent, the money was claimed by his creditors, but it was held that it was an asset of the wife. In Brown's Appeal the policy was payable to the wife, and, in case of her death before that of the insured, then to her children. The wife and the husband jointly executed an assignment, and, after the wife's death, it was held on interfirmed without comment in 230 Ill. 33, 82 N. E. 426), where the facts were, in a general way, parallel with the Brennan Case.

And such a clause is again held valid in State, Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., Prosecutor, v. Schaffer, 50 N. J. L. 72, 11 Atl. 154, where payment of the proceeds was made to the decedent's daughter, who produced to the company the policy and the premium receipt book. The court said that, whatever interest the beneficiary had in the policy, it was subject to the conditions of the contract, which operated as an appointment by both the assured and the beneficiary of certain persons, any of whom were authorized to receive payment of the sum agreed. The condition here in question provided that "the production by the company of this policy and a receipt for the sum assured, signed by any person furnishing proof satisfactory to the company that he or she is the beneficiary or an executor or administrator, husband or wife, or relative by blood, or connection by marriage, of the assured, shall be conclusive evidence that such sum has been paid and received by the person or persons lawfully entitled to the same, and that all claims and demands upon said company, under this policy, have been fully satisfied."

Pfaff v. Prudential Ins. Co. 141 Pa. 562, 21 Atl. 663, held that, in an action on a policy providing that payment might be made to executor, administrator, husband, wife, or relation by blood or marriage, and that the production of a receipt signed by any or either of such persons should be conclusive evidence of payment to the person entitled thereto, an affidavit of defense, averring payment to the insured's mother, and her receipt therefor, is sufficient to prevent a rule for summary judgment.

But the Brennan Case, supra, is criticized in Shea v. United States Industrial Ins. Co. 23 App. Div. 53, 48 N. Y. Supp. 548, where a mother, at the time of insuring her daughter's life, was made the beneficiary by the insurance company. The policy contained the clause passed upon in the Brennan Case, giving the company the option to pay any relative by blood or marriage, or anyone appearing to be equitably entitled to the proceeds, together with the provision as to the production of a receipt, etc. Relying on this clause, the company resorted to fraudulent means to effect a settlement with the husband of the deceased, but the court denied its right to make payment to the husband under the provision in question, holding that its representations to the plaintiff that she should be the beneficiary amounted to an agreement to that effect that was a present election by the company to exercise its option under the clause in question in favor of the plaintiff.

In Wilkinson v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co.

pleader that the children had title under the original contract, and it could not be devested by the assignment. In Entwistle v. Travelers' Ins. Co. the insurance was payable to the wife, and, if she died before the husband, then to the children; but, if the husband survived both wife and children, then to his legal representatives. By the terms of the policy, its value was convertible into cash at the option of the holder after fifteen years. Husband and wife sought to exercise the option, but it was held that the children had a beneficial interest which brought them within the term "holders," and could not be devested without their sanction. In all the foregoing cases the contingency presented by the state of facts was one expressly provided for in the policy, and it is beyond question that, where such is the case, the terms of the policy, which is the substantial contract of the parties, must govern. But where, as is this case, a state of facts exists for which the policy makes no express provision, a very different question is presented. In Brown's Appeal it was said that the death of the wife in the lifetime of her husband "extinguished her interest in the policy," and in Entwistle v. Travelers' Ins. Co. "the interest of the wife was wholly contingent upon her surviving her husband. . . . If the wife die before the insured, she will take nothing under the policy." These expressions, of course, and the decisions in which they were used, were based, as already said, on the language of the policies; but the same result would follow upon general principles. Where all the conditions of fact expressly provided for in any contract have failed, and the contract is silent as to anything further, regard must be had to the fundamental intent and effect of the contract. The contract of life insurance contemplates a payment by the insurer upon the death of the insured. That is the certain primary intent, and does not admit of doubt.

The secondary question, to whom is the payment due, is contingent on the circumstances. The naming of a beneficiary to whom payment is to be made a gift of a benefit in future, but is contingent on the circumstances. Thus it carries with it no obligation to the beneficiary that the donor will keep the policy alive by continuing to pay the premiums. That is contingent on his doing so voluntarily. And the nature of the thing given would seem to imply that the beneficiary must survive the in-

63 Mo. App. 404, an assignee of a policy, having paid the premiums, had surrendered the policy and his receipt book to the company, as required by the policy preliminary to a settlement. Afterward the company paid the amount of the policy to the widow of the deceased, and defended its action under the same clause that was construed in SMITH v. METROPOLITAN L. INS. CO. It was held that the assignee was a lawful beneficiary, belonging to one of the classes mentioned in the condition of the policy in question, and entitled to the proceeds, and that the company was not at liberty to make an arbitrary selection of any other person belonging to the designated classes.

This ruling is followed in Wilkinson v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 64 Mo. App. 172, where the facts were practically the same, except that the company paid the proceeds to the public administrator instead of to a relative of the deceased. The defense and holding were the same as in the first case.

Carraher v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. S. R. 665, in passing upon the same clause that was construed in the Schaffer Case, supra, distinguishes that case, and holds that such a clause does not protect the company in making payment to any one of the persons designated in the provision, where a beneficiary was specifically named in the policy. Referring to the Schaffer Case, the court said: "In that case, the son was the beneficiary named, but it did not appear that the son ever had possession either of the policy or the premium receipt 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)" book, or that he ever knew of the existence of the policy until after the death of the assured. In the present case, the policy was delivered to the beneficiary (the plaintiff). She paid the premiums thereon, and she gave notice of the death of the assured, and surrendered the policy and premium book to the company, accompanied by a demand for payment. The plaintiff here had a vested interest in the policy. In the Schaffer Case the son never acquired a vested interest therein."

McNally v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 199 Pa. 481, 49 Atl. 299, was an action by a named beneficiary where the company had made payment to the duly-appointed administrator by virtue of the following condition: "The production by the company of this policy and of a receipt for the sum assured, signed by any person furnishing proof satisfactory to the company that he or she is the beneficiary or an executor or administrator, husband or wife, or relative by blood or connection by marriage of the assured, shall be conclusive evidence that such sum has been paid to and received by the person or persons lawfully entitled to the same; and that all claims and demands upon said company under this policy have been fully satisfied." A per curiam decision was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, but there was no attempt to distinguish the opposing decisions, except to say that the provisions of the policy in question differed materially from some of the provisions in the policies of the Prudential Company.

sured. Thus, in the present case, the gift is equivalent to a provision that, when the husband dies, having kept the policy alive, the wife shall be entitled to the money. But the intent is to provide for her, not for any other, and, if she has died first, the expressed intent is incapable of fulfilment. and we are not at liberty to supply a further intent which the donor did not indicate. He might have done so by naming her executor, or administrator, or children, at his own choice, but, as he did not do so, we are not authorized to make a choice for him. The natural presumption is that he did not desire such result, nor intend to continue to pay premiums for the benefit of any other person. At the inception of the contract the whole disposition of the insurance money was within the control of the insured. He might have provided in the policy for its disposition under any and all conditions, but he did not. By the designation of his wife as the party to receive it, he vested a right in her, and, to that extent, parted with his control. But he did nothing more, and, on her death before his, the condition failed, and the right of control, which he had only parted with on condition, returned to him, and, in the absence of any further disposition by him, would have become an asset of his estate.

The cases relied upon by the learned court below, as already said, differed so entirely in their essential facts that they are not authority for this. No Pennsylvania case has decided the question now raised. Outside of this state the decisions are not in entire harmony, but the weight of authority is with the views above expressed. In 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 654, the general rule is thus stated: "Ordinarily where the insured survives those specified to take at his death, the insurance money, where no other disposition is made of it, becomes, at his death, a part of his estate, to be administered as his will, or, in the absence of a will, as the law directs. . . . But where a person, as a husband, takes out a policy on his life in favor of another, as the wife, without further mention, and pays the premiums, and he survives the beneficiary, he may change the policy for the benefit of any other person, as a subsequent wife." Id. p. 656.

This brings us to the consideration of the plaintiff's claim. The wife, the beneficiary designated in the applications, died in 1897, and the next year the insured substituted his daughter, the plaintiff, as beneficiary. The testimony was that, desiring to do so, the insured applied to the agent of the insurance company, was furnished by him with printed blanks, called "change of designation," which he executed, thereby substituting his daughter, the plaintiff, as beneficiary, in place of his wife, who was dead. These changes of designation were delivered to the defendant company, and were accepted by it. The company thus recognized the right to change the beneficiary, accepted the method of doing so, and for more than seven years the insured continued to pay, and the company to receive, the premiums on the basis of such change. Whether the papers were strictly in accordance with the requirements of the by-laws of the company is immaterial. So far as the case was developed, every element of estoppel exists to prevent the company from now disputing their validity. As the trial in the court below, however, resulted in a nonsuit, no evidence was given for the defendant, but it appears from the affidavit of defense that the company paid the insurance money to one Thomas S. Gordon, executor of the insured, and reliance is apparently placed on a clause in the policies, varying somewhat in expression, but substantially to the effect, that "the production by the company of this policy, and of a receipt for the sum assured, signed by any person furnishing proof satisfactory to the company that he or she is the executor or administrator, husband or wife, or relative by blood, or lawful beneficiary of the insured, shall be conclusive evidence that such sum has been paid to and received by the person or persons lawfully entitled to the same, and that all claims and demands upon said company under this policy have been fully satisfied." Similar clauses are not uncommon in the class known as "industrial insurance," where the amounts and estates are small and the purpose is to avoid the necessity of the expense of formal administration by law. But they are not intended, and could not be allowed, to override rights fixed by the policies. If, for example, the wife had survived the husband in this case, no such clause as that quoted could make a payment to his executor a valid defense against her vested claim as primary beneficiary. If the plaintiff's substitution as beneficiary was valid, as prima facie it appears to be, the payment to Thomas S. Gordon, as executor of the insured, is no defense.

But it is intimated that the fact as well as the good faith of the nominal substitution as between father and daughter are open to question. As the case did not reach the stage for evidence on that point, we express no opinion upon it.

Judgment reversed, and procedendo awarded.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

PHILADELPHIA COMPANY et al.,
v.
BARONETT F. RENNER et al., Appts
(222 Pa. 512, 71 Atl. 1056.)

Draft — payable through clearing house — effect.

That a draft for rent which may be paid by check or draft is made payable through a particular clearing house does not render it ineffectual as a tender, and justify a forfeiture of the lease for nonpayment of rent.

(January 4, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Court of Common Pleas for Greene County restraining them from interfering with plaintiffs' right to drill for oil and gas on certain lands leased by them from defendants. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank W. Downey and James J. Purman, for appellants:

The words, "payable only through Pittsburg Clearing House," destroyed the right to demand the money, and limited the manner of payment.

2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1712; Gray v. Donahoe, 4 Watts, 400; 1 Field, Lawyers' Briefs, §§ 588, 590, 593, 594; Crane v. Fourth Street Nat. Bank, 173 Pa. 567, 34 Atl. 296; Philler v. Patterson, 168 Pa. 468, 47 Am. St. Rep. 896, 32 Atl. 26.

Mr. A. H. Sayers for appellees.

Elkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

As this case has developed, the only question to be determined here is whether, at the time this proceeding was instituted, there had been a forfeiture of the lease by failure to pay the rental according to the terms of the contract. The appellants claim the right to declare a forfeiture, which the appellees deny. The clause under which a forfeiture is asserted provides that the lease shall become null and void unless a well shall be completed on the premises within sixty days from the date thereof, or unless the lessee shall pay at the rate of $30 quarterly, in advance, for each additional three months such completion is delayed. The well was not completed within

Note. — The above case seems to be one of first impression as to whether the fact that a check has across its face the words "payable only through" a named clearing house will render it ineffectual as a tender under a contract which permitted payment by check, as an extensive search has failed to disclose any other case involving that question.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

sixty days, but the quarterly payments were made from time to time during a period of nine years up to and including the rental due August 17, 1907, as to which payment the controversy in the present proceeding arises. The lease provides that the quarterly payments may be made direct to the lessors, or to Baronett F. Renner, one of the complainants, at Garrison postoffice, by check or draft. Payment was tendered in due time by a check or draft, drawn upon the Farmers' Deposit National Bank of Pittsburg, for the sum of $30, which check or draft was deposited in the mails for transmission and was received by Renner, November 16, 1907, one day before the payment was due. He refused to accept the draft, and returned the same by first mail to the lessee, upon the ground that across its face were printed the words "payable only through the Pittsburg Clearing House;" the contention then and now being that a draft made payable through the clearing house was not a compliance with the contract. The objection is too technical to be substantial. The contract only provided that the payment could be made by check or draft, and nothing is said about the method of collection. What Renner had the right to demand was a check or draft, drawn by the lessee on a bank, which, when paid, was a compliance with the very letter of the covenant. He received in due time a draft drawn upon a responsible banking institution, calling for the payment of the proper sum to meet the advance rental, and all that he had to do was to deposit it for credit with the bank in which he did business, and collection would follow in due course of banking. The fact of payment was what the lessor was interested in, and not the method of making it, so long as the terms of the contract were not violated. It was immaterial to the lessor whether the draft was paid over the counter of the banking institution drawn upon or through the clearing house, if, in point of fact, it was paid, or would have been paid, and he had received or would have received the benefit of it. That the draft was good is not denied, and that it would have been paid through the clearing house, if presented, is not questioned. Certainly, under these circumstances, complainant was not justified in returning the draft and declaring a forfeiture of the lease. For a long period of years the lessee had paid the quarterly rentals by draft just as was done in this instance, except the former drafts were not made payable through the clearing house; but, as hereinbefore suggested, this, at most, only affected the method of collection in due course of banking, and did not deny to the lessor any substantial right under the contract.

We find no reversible error, and the decree is affirmed at the cost of appellants.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

STEVENS & COMPANY

v.

NED C. STILES, Appt.

(— R. I. —, 71 Atl. 802.)

Secrets — employee — injunction.

One employed by an optician to examine the eyes of patients and prescribe lenses will, after leaving his employment, be enjoined from making use of names, addresses, and prescriptions which he copied from his employer's records, although his contract did not expressly forbid his making use of such knowledge, and the information he is attempting to use relates exclusively to persons examined by him and the records of whose cases he himself made.

(February 4, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Providence and Bristol Counties temporarily enjoining him from making use of names, addresses, and prescriptions pertaining to plaintiff's business. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John I. Devlin for appellant.

Mr. Mendell W. Crane for appellee.

Johnson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the decision of the superior court, granting a preliminary injunction. The complainant, a corporation, carried on, under the name of "Villers Company, the Modern Optical Shop," the business of examining the eyes of persons, by expert opticians, and prescribing, manufacturing, and selling eye-glasses. The Case Note. — Protection of trade secrets.

This subject is considered in a note to Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Can Co. 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 102. Only cases subsequent thereto will be included herein. But few cases on the subject have been reported since that note. Those that have been are in harmony with the doctrine therein stated, which also finds support in STEVENS & Co. v. STILES.

The doctrine of Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Can Co. was reaffirmed by the New Jersey court in 69 Atl. 1103, when that case was again presented to it.

This doctrine was also recognized and applied to employees of a paint manufacturing company in Elaterite Paint & Mfg. Co. v. Frost, 105 Minn. 239, 117 N. W. 388. In this case there was no express contract on the part of the employees not to divulge secrets learned during employment, but nevertheless certain employees and a rival company subsequently employing them were restrained from using or making use of secret formulas for the manufacture of paint from elaterite, of which formulas one of the employees had obtained knowledge through his employment, while the other employee restrained was the original discoverer of the formula, but had sold and transferred it to his employers under an agreement not to make use of or divulge it to the prejudice or detriment of his employer. In reaching its conclusion, the court said that the law was undisputed that equity recognized a secret in trade as property, and would protect trade secrets by injunction as against those who sought to disclose or use them by a violation of confidential relations or contract stipulations, express or implied, arising from their relations to, or dealings with, the owner thereof.

It was also applied in Witkop & H. Co. 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

v. Boyce, 61 Misc. 126, 112 N. Y. Supp. 874, as to a traveling salesman who was restrained from making use of knowledge or information gained from a former employer's list of customers. Although there was an express contract by the employee not to make use of such knowledge to the detriment of his employer, yet the decision is not based upon that ground, but on the theory that, irrespective of any express contract between the parties, equity would restrain the acts complained of because they arose out of a violation of duty having its origin in the relation of employer and employee, and an implied contract that an employee would not divulge confidential knowledge gained in the course of his employment, or use such information to the employer's prejudice.

It was also held in the foregoing case that the names of the customers of a business concern whose trade and patronage had been secured by years of business effort, in advertising, and the expenditure of time and money, constituting a part of the good will of the business which enterprise and foresight had built up, should be deemed just as sacred, and entitled to the same protection, as the secret of compounding some article for manufacture and commerce.

A very similar question is the right of an employer to be protected against the breach of an express contract by an employee not to engage in a competing business. Relief is usually given in such cases upon the theory of the protection of the employer against the use of trade secrets, confidential information, etc., gained by the employee during his employment. This subject will be found discussed and the cases passing thereon gathered in a note to Simms v. Burnette, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 389.

respondent was employed by the complainant, at its place of business, to examine the eyes of customers and patrons of said complainant, prescribe glasses, etc. He had access to the books and records of the complainant, and, as a part of his duties, made a record of cases, showing the names and addresses of patrons, and the particular sort of lenses required by such patrons. It was alleged that the respondent surreptitiously, fraudulently, and without the knowledge of the complainant, copied the names of a great number of such patrons, with their postoffice addresses, from such records, and, after leaving the employ of the complainant, sent circular letters to persons whose names and addresses he had thus acquired, soliciting their patronage, and that the business of the complainant suffered thereby. On hearing upon the prayer of the complainant for a preliminary injunction, the court below found, as a matter of fact, that the respondent did surreptitiously copy the names and addresses of the complainant's customers from the records of the complainant, and had made use of such list of names and addresses in addressing circulars to the complainant's customers. The court said upon this point: "We are of the opinion that the surreptitious copying of the names and addresses of the complainant's customers from its records is a violation of confidence against which equity can enjoin, and that equity can enjoin against the use of such lists so unfairly obtained. It is true that equity will not enjoin against an employee carrying away such skill and intelligence as he can carry in his head, other than trade secrets. This would not permit him to copy the records of his employer for future use." A decree was entered September 26, 1908, "that the respondent, Ned C. Stiles, and his agents and servants, be, and they hereby are, enjoined and restrained, until the further order of this court, from using the names and addresses of the complainant's customers, which he copied from the records of the complainant, from soliciting the patronage of such customers whose names he thus obtained, and from divulging the names and addresses of said customers of the complainant to anyone else." From this decree the respondent appealed.

Counsel for the respondent makes no question that equity will restrain the disclosure of confidential communications, trade secrets, and the contents of private papers. But he urges that, in the case at bar, the relations of the parties were not confidential; that there was no agreement that respondent, upon severing his relations with the complainant company, should not enter into competition with it; that the only names copied from complainant's lists were those of customers he personally examined; and that to copy and use such a list of names is not a breach of trust or a breach of confidence. As to the argument that the relations of the parties were not confidential, we do not understand that the fact of agency is denied. It is admitted that the respondent was in the employ of the complainant in its store, examining the eyes of patrons, prescribing glasses, and making records of the cases examined and treated, as also of prescriptions which came to the store from physicians outside. We do not see how such relations can be considered as other than confidential. As to the absence of an agreement not to enter into competition with the complainant, it is sufficient to say that the decree does not enjoin such action on the part of the respondent. Particular stress is laid upon the claim that the only names copied from complainant's lists were those of customers whom the respondent personally examined, and it is argued that to copy and use such a list of names is not a breach of trust or a breach of confidence. The argument does not commend itself to us. It is elementary that what is done by the agent in the course of his employment is, in the legal sense, done by the master himself. The respondent could have no more right to copy records made by himself, while acting for the complainant, than he would have to copy any other records of the complainant to which he had access.

In Lamb v. Evans [1893] 1 Ch. 218, the plaintiff was the proprietor and publisher of a trade directory entitled "The International Guide to British and Foreign Merchants and Manufacturers." It had a continental section, which contained a list of continental traders who desired to advertise in this book. These advertisements were arranged under special headings, denoting the nature of the business, which were arranged alphabetically. Each heading was given in English, French, German, and Spanish, and under it the names of the traders who came within it were alphabetically arranged. In some cases only their names and addresses were given; in others, more elaborate advertisements were furnished. The headings were prepared by the plaintiff, or by persons employed and paid by him. Each of the defendants Evans was employed by the plaintiff to canvass for advertisements in a certain district on the continent. In each case the plaintiff agreed to employ the canvasser exclusively in that district, and the canvasser agreed to work therein for the plaintiff exclusively. Each was remunerated by a large commission on the amount received by him for advertisements, and agreed to furnish all blocks and translations relating to his canvass free of charge. The blocks, however, were generally furnished by the advertisers, and handed over for the purpose of printing the advertisements. After the engagement of the defendants Evans came to an end, they entered into the service of a rival publication, and assisted in adding thereto a "continental section." The plaintiff brought his action against the defendants Evans and the publisher of the rival directory. The defendants were enjoined "from using blocks or materials obtained by the defendants E. A. Evans and T. H. A. Evans, or either of them, while in the employment of the plaintiff, and for the purposes of his said work, or any copies thereof, for the purposes of any work other than the said work of the plaintiff." The decree was affirmed on appeal, only being modified so as to permit the publishing of copies at the request, or by the direction, of the advertisers to whom the blocks belonged. Lindley, L. J. (page 226), says: "What right has any agent to use materials obtained by him in the course of his employment, and for his employer, against the interest of that employer? I am not aware that he has any such right. Such a use is contrary to the relation which exists between principal and agent. It is contrary to the good faith of the employment, and good faith underlies the whole of an agent's obligations to his principal. No case, unless it be the one which I will notice presently, can, I believe, be found which is contrary to the general principle upon which this injunction is framed, viz., that an agent has no right to employ, as against his principal, materials which that agent has obtained only for his principal, and in the course of his agency. They are the property of the principal. The principal has, in my judgment, such an interest in them as entitles him to restrain the agent from the use of them except for the purpose for which they were got. It is said that Reuter's Teleg. Co. v. Byron, 43 L. J. Ch. N. S. 661, before Sir G. Jessel, is opposed to this. If that case went on the ground that the Master of the Rolls was not satisfied that the case was plain enough for him to grant an interlocutory injunction, there is nothing more to be said about it; but, if the decision goes further than that, I think that undoubtedly the principle was applied there more narrowly than it ought to have been." Bowen, L. J. (page 231), says: "You must look at the whole transaction, and make up your mind what the parties must have intended, if the transaction is to have any business-like efficacy at all. If you see that it could not have been intended by the parties that the agent should be allowed to deal in the way he is proposing to do, with materials obtained in the course of his agency, then the law will imply that it was part of the bargain that he should not do so. It is said by Mr. Farwell that it must have been intended that the confidential fetter imposed upon the use of these documents should terminate as soon as the book was published for which they were being compiled, and he urges that otherwise we should be importing questions of copyright into the discussion of this branch of the case. On the contrary, it is by insisting on that view that he imports the idea of copyright into this part of the case. The point we are now considering has nothing to do with it. It is perfectly true that you must look at the whole transaction to see what the documents and materials had been collected for; but that would, by no means, sufficiently protect the employer if the agent was to be left free to do what he liked with the materials the moment the volume was published. That argument, it seems to me, cannot prevail." Kay, L. J. (pages 234, 235), says: "The illustrations given in argument show that there might be some material collected by the defendants while they were the plaintiff's agents, and for the purposes of his book, which material could be legally used for the new book. The argument was put most forcibly, as I followed it, in this form: Why should they not retain these notebooks in their hands, having now left the plaintiff's employ, and use them in order to find out the persons abroad with whom they had formerly entered into engagements, and to obtain from those advertisers authority to put advertisements of theirs into a rival publication, to be published as a rival of the plaintiff's book? The answer is a very simple one. All those materials were obtained while you, the defendants, were acting as the plaintiff's agents, while you were in that confidential relation to him, and for the purpose for which he employed and paid you, viz., of compiling this book of the plaintiffs; and therefore to allow you to use any of those materials for your own purposes would be allowing you to use them for a purpose for which they were not compiled; you, while you compiled them, being in the position of the plaintiff's agent, and there being a confidential relation between you and the plaintiff."

In the earlier case of Morison v. Moat (1851) 9 Hare, 241, an injunction was granted to restrain the use of a secret in the compounding of a medicine not patented, and to restrain the sale of such medicine by a defendant, who acquired a knowledge of the secret in violation of the contract of the party by whom it was communicated, and in breach of trust and confidence. Vice Chancellor Turner said (page 255 of 9 Hare): "The subsidiary ground brought forward by the bill, of the defendant's selling his medicines under the original name and description, was relied upon rather in support of the case of breach of faith and of contract than as a separate and distinct ground for the interference of the court. Upon that part of the case it is sufficient, therefore, to observe, that there might be difficulty in maintaining it, at all events, until the plaintiffs should have established their right at law. The true question is whether, under the circumstances of this case, the court ought to interpose by injunction, upon the ground of breach of faith or of contract. That the court has exercised jurisdiction in cases of this nature does not, I think, admit of any question. Different grounds have indeed been assigned for the exercise of that jurisdiction. In some cases it has been referred to property, in others to contract, and in others again it has been treated as founded upon trust or confidence, meaning, as I conceive, that the court fastens the obligation on the conscience of the party, and enforces it against him in the same manner as it enforces against a party to whom a benefit is given the obligation of performing a promise on the faith of which the benefit has been conferred; but, upon whatever grounds the jurisdiction is founded, the authorities leave no doubt as to the exercise of it." The decree was affirmed on appeal. 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 248. See also Yovatt v. Winyard (1820) 1 Jac. & W. 394, where Lord Eldon, upon the express ground of breach of trust and confidence, granted an injunction to restrain the defendant, who had been the plaintiff's assistant in his business, from using or communicating recipes which he had surreptitiously copied while in the plaintiff's service. In Abernethy v. Hutchinson (1824) 3 L. J. Ch. 209, 1 Hall & T. 28, the question again came before Lord Eldon. In this case Mr. Abernethy had filed a bill to restrain the publication of lectures delivered by him at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, which had been taken down by someone present when they were delivered. The injunction was granted upon the ground of breach of confidence. In Prince Albert v. Strange (1849) 1 MacN. & G. 25, Lord Cottenham said: "This case by no means depends solely upon the question of property, for a breach of trust, confidence, or contract would of itself entitle the plaintiff to an injunction."

Robb v. Green (1895) 64 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 593, is a case on all fours with the case at 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

bar. The defendant, being employed by the plaintiff as manager of his business, as a dealer in pheasants and pheasants' eggs, and having confidential access to his master's books for the purposes of his business, copied from the plaintiff's order book the names and addresses of the plaintiff's customers, with a view to using them to facilitate his canvass for their custom after he had left the plaintiff's service, and had set up a business on his own account, and did so use them. It was held, on the authority of the cases cited, supra, that the defendant had committed a breach of his implied promise that he would not abuse his master's confidence in matters appertaining to his service, and that he was liable in damages for any loss caused to the plaintiff by reason of such breach, and judgment was entered for damages, "and for the injunction as prayed,—namely, that the defendant may be ordered to deliver up to the plaintiff, to be destroyed, the list of the names and addresses of the plaintiff's customers and their keepers, copied or extracted by the defendant from the plaintiff's books, and all copies or extracts of or from such list now in his possession or under his control, and that the defendant be restrained from making use of the information obtained by him by copying or extracting such names and addresses." This case furnished another opportunity for a review of the cases considered supra, and for the use by the court of some very lucid and vigorous language in passing upon the defendant's claim that, in copying from the plaintiff's order book while in his employ, the names and addresses of the plaintiff's customers, with a view to using them to facilitate his own canvass for their custom after he had left the plaintiff's employ and set up a business on his own account, and in so using them, he had done only that which he had a right to do. Thus Hawkins, J. (page 597): "As to the third contention, I have a very decided opinion that, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, there is involved in every contract of service an implied obligation, call it by what name you will, on the servant, that he shall perform his duty, especially in these essential respects,—namely, that he shall honestly and faithfully serve his master; that he shall not abuse his confidence in matters appertaining to his service; and that he shall, by all reasonable means in his power, protect his master's interests in respect to matters confided to him in the course of his service. It would be monstrous to suppose that a servant would be absolved from the observance of these essential elements to good service unless they were in terms specially provided for in the contract." And again (page 599), speaking of the argument of defendant's counsel: "Having gone thus far, they are compelled, in order to justify the conduct of the defendant, to contend that a servant might, in his master's service, having confidential access to his master's books for the purposes of his business, copy, as in this case, the names and addresses of his master's customers with a view to use them to facilitate his canvass for their custom, as soon as he should see fit, after the termination of his service; in short, to canvass with the aid of stolen material, without which, having regard to the wide extent over which the customers were spread, practically he could not canvass at all. I confess this seems to me a startling proposition, and to it I do not assent." The decision was affirmed on appeal. See also Helmore v. Smith (1886) 56 L. J. Ch. N. S. 145; Tuck v. Priester (1887) 56 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 553; Pollard v. Photographic Co. (1888) 58 L. J. Ch. N. S. 251; Merryweather v. Moore (1892) 61 L. J. Ch. N. S. 505; and Louis v. Smellie (1895) 73 L. T. N. S. 226.

The same doctrine prevails in this country. Judge Story, after speaking of the prevention by injunction of the use of names, marks, letters, or other indicia of a tradesman, by which to pass off goods to purchasers as the manufacture of that tradesman when they are not so, states the doctrine broadly, as follows: "Upon similar grounds of irreparable mischief, courts of equity will restrain a party from making a disclosure of secrets communicated to him in the course of a confidential employment. And it matters not in such cases whether the secrets be secrets of trade or secrets of title, or any other secrets of the party important to his interests." 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 952. In 1. High on Injunctions, § 19, it is thus stated: "The disclosure of secrets which have come to one's knowledge during the course of a confidential employment will be restrained by injunction. And where a confidential relationship has existed, out of which one of the parties has derived information or secrets concerning the other, equity fastens an obligation upon his conscience not to divulge such knowledge, and enforces the obligation, when necessary, by injunction. Thus, persons who, in the capacity of attorneys, agents, or in other confidential relations, have obtained the custody of the books and documents of their principals, or have come into possession of secrets relating to their affairs, will be restrained from making them public." See also 5 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 267. In Peabody v. Norfolk, 98 Mass. 452, 96 Am. Dec. 664, there was a contract not to disclose secrets as to machinery. The court, Gray, J., says (page 461 of 98 Mass.): "A secret of trade or manufacture does not lose its character by being confidentially disclosed to agents or servants, without whose assistance it could not be made of any value. Even if, as is argued in support of the demurrer, the process is liable to be inspected by the assessor of internal revenue or other public officer, the owner is not the less entitled to protection against those who in, or with knowledge of, violation of contract and breach of confidence, undertake to disclose it or to reap the benefit of it." He also quotes, with approval, the statement of the doctrine by Judge Story, supra, and also the language of Lord Cranworth in the opinion in Morison v. Moat, on appeal: "The principles that were argued in this case are principles really not to be called in controversy. There is no doubt whatever that, where a party who has a secret in a trade employs persons under contract, express or implied, or under duty express or implied, those persons cannot gain the knowledge of that secret and then set it up against their employer." 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 248. In Loven v. People, 158 Ill. 159, 42 N. E. 82, the bill alleged, inter alia, that Loven fraudulently, and without the knowledge or consent of his employers, copied the names of a great number of their customers, together with postoffice addresses, by means of his duties as correspondent, from the books kept by his employers. A decree was entered enjoining Loven "from in any manner corresponding with complainant's agents or customers, or soliciting them to buy defendant's medicines of any kind, or divulging the names of complainant's customers and agents, or any of the secrets of the business, or interfering therewith."

Upon the authorities considered, it is clear, not only that equity will restrain defendants from disclosing secrets pertaining to plaintiff's business, where the knowledge of such secrets has been acquired while in the employ of the plaintiff, under an agreement that, in consideration of the employment, they would not divulge such secrets, but also that, in such case, it is not necessary that there should be an express covenant upon the part of the defendant not to disclose the secrets of the plaintiff's business, if such agreement may fairly be implied from the circumstances of the case and the relation of the parties. See also Stone v. Goss, 65 N. J. Eq. 756, 63 L.R.A. 344, 103 Am. St. Rep. 794, 55 Atl. 736; Westervelt v. National Paper & Supply Co. 154 Ind. 673, 57 N. E. 552; Eastman Kodak Co. v. Reichenbach, 79 Hun, 183, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1143.

Our conclusion is that the doctrine that equity will restrain as well from breach of trust or confidence arising from the confidential relation of employer and employee as from breach of express contract is clearly established by the authorities, and is in accordance with sound reason.

The preliminary injunction was properly granted. The appeal is dismissed, the decree below is affirmed, and the cause is remanded to the Superior Court for further proceedings.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

ELIZABETH HASE, Appt.,

v.

CITY OF SEATTLE, Respt.

(— Wash. —, 98 Pac. 370.)

Municipal corporation — negligence — notice — residence.

1. A provision in a municipal ordinance making notice a prerequisite to suit against the municipality for damages caused by its negligence, that the notice must state the injured person's place of residence for a year past, is unreasonable, and omission of such statement from the notice will not defeat an action.

Same — location.

2. A statement in a notice of claim for an injury alleged to have been due to the negligence of a municipal corporation, that it was caused by falling through a defective sidewalk, the location of which is stated, is a sufficient compliance with a requirement that the notice must describe the defect that caused the injury.

(Mount and Fullerton, JJ., dissent from proposition 1.)

(December 8, 1908.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Case Note. — May injured person's place of residence be required to be stated in notice of accident or injury as condition of liability of municipality.

The rule laid down in the first headnote to HASE v. SEATTLE has since been reaffirmed in Jones v. Seattle (Wash.) 98 Pac. 743; and Wurster v. Seattle (Wash.) 100 Pac. 143.

In Johnson v. Troy, 24 App. Div. 602, 48 N. Y. Supp. 998, it appeared that the city charter required, as a prerequisite to a suit against the city for injury, that the claimant should present a statement of his claim to the city comptroller, in which he should Messrs. Shorett & Shorett for appellant. Messrs. Scott Calhoun and James E. Bradford, for respondent.

The charter provision which requires that the claim must "accurately locate and describe the defect" causing the injury is not complied with by stating that complainant fell through a defective sidewalk at a certain place.

Mears v. Spokane, 22 Wash. 323, 60 Pac. 1127; Lord v. Saco, 87 Me. 231, 32 Atl. 887; Noonan v. Lawrence, 130 Mass. 161; Miles v. Lynn, 130 Mass. 398; Gardner v. New London, 63 Conn. 267, 28 Atl. 42; Biesiegel v. Seymour, 58 Conn. 43, 19 Atl. 375; Lilly v. Woodstock, 59 Conn. 219, 22 Atl. 41; Dolan v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 497, 61 N. W. 564; Paddock v. Syracuse, 61 Hun, 8, 15 N. Y. Supp. 387; Madden v. Springfield, 131 Mass. 441; Dalton v. Salem, 131 Mass. 551; Shea v. Lowell, 132 Mass. 187; Cronin v. Boston, 135 Mass. 110; Lyon v. Cambridge, 136 Mass. 419.

The notice as to residence is a reasonable and important requirement.

Johnson v. Troy, 24 App. Div. 602, 48 N. Y. Supp. 998; Borst v. Sharon, 24 App. Div. 599, 48 N. Y. Supp. 997; Mears v. Spokane, supra.

Dunbar, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant brought an action against the city of Seattle for damages resulting from personal injuries. A claim for damages for said injury was filed with the city clerk of said corporation, and later a suit brought thereon. At the trial the claim provided for by ordinance was offered in evidence, and objection was made to its introduction, which was sustained by the court. The court directed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the city, which was done. Judgment of dismissal was entered, and appeal followed. So that the only question in the case is whether the claim presented by the appellant to the city council was sufficient.

The principal objection urged to the claim, give his residence by street and number, and that plaintiff's residence was not numbered. It was held that while the law would not require the performance of an impossibility, and where no number existed, none need be stated, still, the impossibility of complying with one requirement did not relieve him from complying with another, and, the street on which he lived being named, he should have given it in his notice, since the court will not say that is unimportant and may be disregarded which the legislature has declared to be necessary. No other cases on this question have been found.

and the one on which the court rejected it, is that the claimant did not state her residence for the past year, and this alleged defect was the cause alleged by the city for refusing the claim. It is also insisted that the notice was not sufficient, in that it did not clearly set forth the defect in the sidewalk which was the alleged cause of the accident. The claim presented was as follows: "To the City Council of the City of Seattle: The undersigned, Elizabeth Hase, hereby presents to the said city council her claim for damages against the city of Seattle, a municipal corporation of the state of Washington, in the sum of $10,000, which said claim is hereby filed with the clerk of said city of Seattle; that said claim for damages is on account of personal injuries sustained by the said Elizabeth Hase in the said city of Seattle on the 23d day of March, 1907, at 9:30 p. m.; that said injuries consist of pain from a broken left forearm (a fracture known as 'Colles fracture'); also suffers much pain from being bruised through the chest, between the shoulder blades, and across the small of the back, and since the accident she has suffered nervous chills; that the said injuries were sustained by the said Elizabeth Hase on said date in the city of Seattle on the west side of Sixth avenue, between Blanchard street and Bell street; that the said injuries were caused by said Elizabeth Hase falling through a defective sidewalk." The ordinance demanding the presentation of the notice was as follows: "All claims for damages against the city must be presented to the city council and filed with the clerk within thirty days after the time when such claim for damages accrued; and no ordinance shall be passed allowing any such claim or any part thereof, or appropriating money or other property to pay or satisfy the same or any part thereof, until such claim has first been referred to the proper department, nor until such department has made its report to the city council thereon, pursuant to such reference. All such claims for damages must accurately locate and describe the defect that caused the injury, accurately describe the injury, give the residence for one year last past of the claimant, contain the items of damages claimed, and be sworn to by the claimant. No action shall be maintained against the city for any claim for damages until after the same has been presented to the city council and sixty days have elapsed after such presentation."

Counsel for appellant vigorously inveigh against the application of the rule of liberal construction, insisting that the city is authorized under the laws and Constitution to make such provisions as it deems necessary for its protection, and that it is not the province of the court to destroy such provisions by construction. So far as the first proposition is concerned, it is not a question of construction, liberal or otherwise, for the ordinance plainly provides that the claimant must state in his notice his residence for one year last past. This language is not susceptible of any two meanings, and therefore the only question to be considered is the right of the city to make such a demand of a claimant as a prerequisite to waging his claim for damages. It is insisted that the uniform trend of authority is that such charter provisions are constitutional and wise, and some authorities are cited to sustain that contention, among them Scurry v. Seattle, 8 Wash. 278, 36 Pac. 145. An examination of this case, however, convinces us that it does not announce all that is claimed for it by learned counsel. All that that case held was that the provision of the freeholders' charter of Seattle, declaring that no action shall be maintained against the city for any claim for damages unless such claim had been presented to the city council within six months after the time when such claim for damages had accrued, was not unconstitutional and void as being in contravention of the statute of limitations with reference to the commencement of actions; but it was also held in that case that the only limitation of the right of the city to make a provision concerning the time in which a claim for damages should be presented would be the limitation of a reasonable time, and that must necessarily always be a limitation to be taken into consideration else cities would be conferred with power to destroy rights existing at the common law. As showing that it never was the idea of this court that the power of cities is unlimited, it was held in Tacoma v. State, 4 Wash. 64, 29 Pac. 847, that, although the freeholders' charter of a city may provide an ample method for the condemnation of private property for use as a public street, and legislative enactment may confer upon cities organized under freeholders' charters the authority to appropriate private property to corporate uses, such power was inoperative, in the absence of an act of the legislature conferring the right of eminent domain, and prescribing the method by which it should be exercised. And in State ex rel. Snell v. Warner, 4 Wash. 773, 17 L.R.A. 263, 31 Pac. 25, it was held that, under article 11, § 10, of the Constitution, authorizing a city of 20,000 or more inhabitants to form a charter for its own government, and providing for amendments thereto, no authority is given such city to extend its boundaries by amendment to its charter; the court in that case saying: "While the provisions of the Constitution are to be given every liberal interpretation when the accomplishment of the purpose to be attained by them is at stake, we are bound to remember that they are somewhat unusual and extraordinary provisions, and that they are indirect restrictions on the power of the legislature, which can prescribe rules for the government of every municipal corporation but these."

It must be borne in mind that the powers claimed by the city in this case, and in fact in all cases of this character, are restrictions on common-law rights. In Seymour v. Tacoma, 6 Wash. 138, 32 Pac. 1077, it was held that the power conferred by the Constitution and laws did not extend to the municipality power to impose a qualification of registration upon the electors. In State ex rel. Fawcett v. Superior Ct. (Fawcett v. Pritchard) 14 Wash. 604, 33 L.R.A. 674, 45 Pac. 23, it was held that these constitutional provisions would not sustain charter provisions providing a tribunal for determining election contests. There we said: "But we must not lose sight of the elementary proposition that municipal corporations have only the powers which are specially conferred upon them by the legislature, or such other powers as by necessary implication flow therefrom." But this identical question has been decided by this court in Durham v. Spokane, 27 Wash. 615, 68 Pac. 383, where it was held that such charter provisions and restrictions could only be maintained where such conditions and restrictions were reasonable. This was a case for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by reason of a defective sidewalk. So that the question there discussed was the identical question at issue in this case; and in aid of the construction of the requirement in the ordinance in that case this court said: "But it is not the rule that a city may say whether or not it shall be held for personal injuries caused by its neglect of duty. Charter provisions of the character in question, whether enacted by the legislature, or, as in the present case, by the city itself, are to be upheld only so far as they are reasonable and tend to the due administration of justice. When such provisions so far depart from reasonableness as to amount to a denial of justice, they are void." So that the question in this case is resolved into a question of the reasonableness of the ordinance requiring the claimant to give his residence for one year last past.

It seems to us that this provision is unreasonable, and would in no way aid the city in the investigation of the claim. This court, in common with all other courts, has uniformly held that the object of these ordinances and the theory upon which they were sustained was notice, so that the city might be able to prepare for the trial of the cause if it was deemed expedient not to settle the claim. From an excerpt from the opinion of the court it seems that the court was influenced largely by the report of an Oregon case, wherein it was ascertained that a professional fraud, who was permanently crippled, had been claiming in different actions that the cause of the injury to his leg was falling through sidewalks in different cities, and had secured judgments fraudulently in different cities in Oregon; that the fraud had finally been discovered, and the claimant sent to the penitentiary. But the fact that fraud in an exaggerated case may be perpetrated upon a city is no reason for the enactment of unreasonable restrictions. Fraud is perpetrated sometimes, not only upon municipal corporations, but upon other corporations and upon individuals, in claims and suits of different characters. A provision requiring claimant to give a present residence, as was the case in Johnson v. Troy, 24 App. Div. 602, 48 N. Y. Supp. 998, cited and relied upon by counsel, might be held to be reasonable, for the reason that it would give the city authorities an opportunity to see the claimant and to talk with him, ascertain something of his appearance, or to make advances towards settlement of his claim, if deemed expedient. But to require anything further than that seems to be unnecessary and savors somewhat of inquisitiveness. If a requirement of this kind should be sustained, it is difficult to tell where the subject of biography would end. If the object is to inquire into the character or reputation of the claimant, then it might as well be said that the city had a right to demand, as a prerequisite to commencing an action, that the claimant should give the place of his birth, the different localities in which he had resided from that time up until the filing of the claim, his calling or profession, his parentage, associations, and a thousand and one other things that might be interesting to the city as a matter of idle curiosity. We have not been able to find any case exactly on this point, for it seems that it has never occurred to any other city to place any such provision in its charter. Believing that the provision is unreasonable and uncalled for, especially in consideration of the other requirement prohibiting the commencement of the action for sixty days from the date of the presentation of the claim, thereby allowing ample time for all pertinent investigation, we think the court erred in rejecting the admission of the notice on that ground.

The other objection urged by counsel for the respondent is that the language used, viz., "that the said injuries were caused by said Elizabeth Hase falling through a defective sidewalk," the location of the sidewalk having been described, is not such a description of the defective sidewalk as is demanded by the ordinance in the provision that "all such claims for damages must accurately locate and describe the defect that caused the injury;" and Mears v. Spokane, 22 Wash. 323, 60 Pac. 1127, is relied upon to sustain this contention. In that case the language of the claim was as follows: "Which injuries were caused by defects and obstruction in the sidewalk of the said city," describing the location; and this court said, in sustaining the objection to the claim, that: "To state that the injury was caused by a defect and obstruction in the sidewalk is but to state the general ground upon which a city in every case is liable for injuries sustained upon its streets; but it states no cause for the particular injury. The charter provision is intended to require notice to be given of the cause of the particular injury, and a notice that fails so to do cannot be made the basis of an action against the city for personal injuries."

It seems to us that the case at bar does not fall within the reason of the rule announced in that case. There it could not be ascertained, from the claim presented, whether the defect was too narrow a sidewalk, or whether it was a temporary obstruction on the sidewalk, or whether it was something hanging down from above and obstructing the sidewalk. In fact, it gave no notice whatever of the character of the defect, and the officers of the city might not have been able to ascertain the character of the defect by a visit to the location. But claims of this kind must be viewed certainly with all the liberality of a pleading, and under the liberal provisions of our Code there can be no question that there was enough in the notice in the case at bar in this respect to put the city on notice that it was the sidewalk itself that was defective, that it was no pendent obstruction, and that it was no obstruction of any kind on the top of the sidewalk. These things they would not naturally look for under the notice given in this case; for where the allegation is that the claimant fell through a defective sidewalk, any ordinarily intelligent mind would immediately reach the conclusion that there was a hole in the sidewalk, or some aperture through which the claimant fell. This case, instead of being governed by the Mears Case, supra, falls more squarely within the rule announced in Faddin v. Seattle, 50 Wash. 561, 97 Pac. 658, where the language of the claim was, "Fell through said sidewalk, owing to its defective condition, into a hole thereunder;" and this 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) language was held sufficient to give notice to the city of the defect complained of.

The rule of all the cases was summarized by this court in Ellis v. Seattle, 47 Wash. 578, 92 Pac. 431, where it was said: "This court has uniformly placed a liberal construction upon the requirements of such notice, holding that the notice had a common-sense object; viz., to apprise the officers of the municipality of the location, so that it might be examined with a view to preparing a defense to the action if it was thought a defense should be made; that, if it directs the attention of said officers with reasonable certainty to the place of the accident, the requirements of the notice have been met; and that it was not intended that the terms of the notice should be used as a stumbling block or pitfall to prevent recovery by meritorious claimants." Surely this notice did direct the attention of the officers with reasonable certainty to the place of the accident, and, when they were once there, the announcement made to them by the notice, that the claimant fell through a defective sidewalk at that particular point, was an announcement sufficiently plain to direct an intelligent investigation on the part of such officers. The evident spirit of this character of objections is to prevent a hearing on the merits, and therefore cannot be sustained.

The judgment will be reversed, and the court instructed to overrule the objections to the introduction of the claim, and proceed with the trial of the cause.

Hadley, Ch. J., and Rudkin and Crow, JJ., concur.

Mount, J., dissenting:

I cannot agree that the provision of the city ordinance requiring the claimant to give his residence for one year last past is an unreasonable requirement. I therefore dissent.

Fullerton, J., concurs.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF WISCONSIN EX. REL.
FRANCIS E. MCGOVERN

v.

ORREN T. WILLIAMS, Circuit Judge.

(136 Wis. 1, 116 N. W. 225.)

Courts — superintending control.

1. The superintending control extends to reviewing the decision of the trial court that a grand juror was incompetent to act, which results in its refusal to proceed with the trial, and to requiring it to do so by mandamus if the decision was erroneous.

Jury — competence.

2. The presence upon the grand jury of the man intended by the jury commissioners is shown by the fact that although, in placing his name in the box, an initial was misplaced, and the statute did not require his residence to be designated on the paper slip, yet they substituted for the residence of the man bearing the name so written on the slip that of the one who served on the jury.

Mandamus — control of trial court.

3. The issuance of a writ of mandamus to compel a court to proceed to hear a cause is not prevented by the fact that the effect of so doing will result in requiring the overruling of an order quashing an indictment for disqualification of a member of the grand jury.

(May 8, 1908.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel respondent to proceed with the trial of a criminal case. Issued.

Statement by Dodge, J.:

By the petition and alternative writ of mandamus it is made to appear that on April 1, 1904, an indictment was returned by a grand jury against one Biersach charging him with crime. To that indictment, when called up in the circuit court for Milwaukee county, three pleas in abatement were interposed. The second and third pleas Case Note. — Superintending control over inferior tribunals.

The present note is, to the extent hereinafter indicated, supplementary to an exhaustive note appended to State ex rel. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 51 L.R.A. 33, on "Superintending control and supervisory jurisdiction of the superior over the inferior or subordinate tribunal," to which reference is made for the earlier decisions on the subject. In view of the very full citation of authorities in such note, the present note will not include cases where the power of superintending control has been exercised without being designated as such, but will be limited, with but few exceptions, to a review of those decisions in which the existence and exercise of the power has been discussed eo nomine.

Before entering upon such review, however, it may not be amiss, in connection with the case reported, to call attention to the various opinions rendered by members of the Wisconsin supreme court in the case of State ex rel. Umbreit v. Helms (Wis.) 118 N. W. 158; and especially to the concurring opinion rendered by Marshall, J., by whom the entire subject is elaborately considered with the intention of more clearly defining the scope of the superintending control of the supreme court over other courts, and the conditions under which such power should be exercised; which opinion closes with the following recapitulation:

"(1) The second constitutional grant of power to this court, that of 'general superintending control over all inferior courts,' is not limited other than by the necessities of justice. It extends to judicial as well as jurisdictional errors.

"(2) The necessities of justice, in a legal sense, do not reach beyond the scope of governmental policy as to righting wrongs by judicial interference; as, for example, it stops in criminal cases at the constitutional prohibition of a second jeopardy.

"(3) The grant of superintending control, though without specified means or instrumentalities for its exercise, includes, by necessary implication, all common-law writs 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) and means applicable thereto, and all power necessary to make such writs and means fully adaptable for the purpose.

"(4) The extent of the power of superintending control, as to any particular group of circumstances, is not measurable by that of the common-law writ most adaptable in its ordinary scope to vitalize such power in regard to such circumstances. Such extent is referable to the necessities of the case; and the ordinary use feature of the writ is to be expanded to meet the exigencies thereof.

"(5) The common-law writs, with the power indicated, to adapt them, leaves no part of the court's superintending control power to be necessarily dormant for want of means to vitalize it.

"(6) The existence of error in the field of the controlling power does not, necessarily, upon proper request in form, require the doors of the jurisdiction to open. When that should occur rests in sound judicial discretion.

"(7) By the policy of this court its superintending control power is to be exercised only when the right of the matter involved is plain, there is no other efficient remedy for its invasion or denial, such invasion or denial is prejudicial, and, generally, and especially as to errors not strictly jurisdictional, the case presents circumstances of exceptional or extraordinary hardship."

In general.

The power of superintending control over inferior courts is a high power which enables the supreme court, by the use of all necessary and proper writs, including the writ of mandamus, to control the course of litigation in inferior courts when such a court either refuses to act within its jurisdiction, or acts beyond its jurisdiction, to the serious prejudice of the citizen. State ex rel. Tewalt v. Pollard, 112 Wis. 232, 87 N. W. 1107.

The high prerogative authority of superintending control of the supreme court over inferior courts applies as well to criminal have been overruled, and are not material of statement. The first plea set forth that the grand jury was illegally constituted, in that one John George Davies served thereon, who was not selected by the jury commissioners, and whose name was not placed upon the general jury list, and was not drawn from the box as one of the seventeen men to constitute the grand jury in question, whereby he was incompetent to serve. The court took testimony with reference to the identity of the person who had been selected by the jury commissioners and designated by the name George J. Davies, his name having also been drawn from the box as one of the grand jury, and reached the conclusion that the John George Davies who served upon the grand jury was not the person so selected and drawn by the jury commissioners. As a result of such conclusion, he ordered that the indictment be abated and quashed, and refused to proceed further with the trial of the charge therein made. He, however, did not formally discharge the prisoner, but entered a stay of proceedings to enable an application to this court for such relief as might be deemed proper. The evidence on which the circuit court reached its determination is set forth in the petition, and all other facts material to the action of this court are conceded by the respondent to be so set forth, so that a final determination might be reached upon the motion to dismiss the writ and petition, which was interposed by the respondent.

as to civil cases. State ex rel. Umbreit v. Helms, supra.

The only questions the supreme court must determine as preliminary to the exercise of its power of general supervision are whether there exists any error or abuse in the court of inferior jurisdiction, without other remedy expressly provided, and whether the exercise of the power is "necessary for the furtherance of justice and the due administration of the law." Hyde v. Superior Ct. 28 R. I. 204, 66 Atl. 292.

Construction of constitutional and statutory grants.

Under this head may be found decisions involving more particularly matters of construction of various constitutional and statutory provisions; but other decisions also placing a construction upon like provisions may be found under the specific heads, and notably, under the heads "Over what courts or jurisdictions power may be exercised" and "Modes in which power may be exercised," infra.

The original jurisdiction to control the action of a judge of a county court, to compel him to reinstate and try criminal cases nolle prosequi by him, resides in the circuit, and not the supreme, court. Ex parte State ex rel. Atty. Gen. (Ala.) 47 So. 742.

Under Const. 1874, art. 7, § 14, providing that the circuit courts shall exercise a superintending control and appellate jurisdiction over county, probate, court of common pleas, and corporation courts, and justices of the peace, and shall have power to issue, hear, and determine all the necessary writs to carry into effect their general and specific powers; and § 4, art. 7, which provides that the supreme court, except in cases otherwise provided by the Constitution, shall have a general superintending control over all inferior courts of law and equity, and that, in aid of its appellate and supervisory jurisdiction, it shall have power to issue writs of error and supersedeas, certiorari, habeas corpus, prohibition, mandamus, and quo warranto and other remedial writs, and hear and determine the same, the supreme 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

court has no concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court to issue writs of mandamus, etc., in aid of appellate and supervisory jurisdiction of the circuit courts over inferior courts, but only in aid of its own appellate and supervisory jurisdiction; and its supervisory jurisdiction over probate courts comes not originally, but by way of appeal and supervision through the circuit courts. Featherstone v. Folbre, 75 Ark. 510, 88 S. W. 554.

Under § 119 of the Constitution, empowering the court of appeals to issue such writs as may be necessary to give it a general control of inferior jurisdictions, such court has jurisdiction to intervene by a writ of prohibition to stay an inferior court from proceeding out of its jurisdiction. Shackelford v. Patteson, 110 Ky. 863, 62 S. W. 1040; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Miller, 112 Ky. 464, 66 S. W. 5; Campbellville Teleph. Co. v. Patterson, 114 Ky. 62, 69 S. W. 1070; Com. v. Jones, 118 Ky. 889, 82 S. W. 643, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1192; Hargis v. Parker, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 441, 69 L.R.A. 270, 85 S. W. 704; Renshaw v. Cook, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 860, 895, 111 S. W. 377.

The supreme court has original jurisdiction of an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the issuance of an execution on a judgment, the power to issue original remedial writs as they were known at common law being conferred on the court by Const. art. 6, § 3, which provides that "the supreme court shall have a general superintending control over all inferior courts. It shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, and other original remedial writs, and to hear and determine the same," and is entirely independent of the provisions of § 12 of the same article. State ex rel. Kansas City v. Renick, 157 Mo. 292, 57 S. W. 713.

The power of superintending control vested by Constitution, Art. 6, § 3, in the supreme court, may be exercised whether or not it has appellate jurisdiction over the case in the inferior court. State ex rel. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v. Eby, 170 Mo. 497, 71 S. W. 52; State ex rel. Wm.

A large number of other indictments were presented by the same grand jury, the validity whereof is assailed on the same ground. The ruling of the circuit court will prevent the trial of such offenses, many of which are now barred by statutes of limitation, so that great and irreparable injury is done the public, and the administration of justice obstructed, if, as claimed by relator, the ruling of the circuit court is wrong.

Messrs. Frank L. Gilbert, Attorney General, Francis E. McGovern, and Franz C. Eschweiler, for relator:

In the very language of the Constitution itself is found not only the power to grant the relief prayed for, but also the duty to exercise it.

J. Lemp Brewing Asso. v. Eby, 170 Mo. 528, 71 S. W. 1133; State ex rel. St. Louis Brewing Asso. v. Eby, 170 Mo. 529, 71 S. W. 1133; Koehler v. Snider, 177 Mo. 546, 76 S. W. 1032.

The supreme court has power to require one of the courts of appeals to reinstate an appeal and to exercise its jurisdiction by hearing and determining a cause of which it has jurisdiction, under Constitution, art. 6, § 3, and § 8 of the amendments adopted in Nov. 1884, granting "superintending control over the courts of appeals by mandamus, prohibition, and certiorari." State ex rel. Stanberry v. Smith, 172 Mo. 618, 73 S. W. 134.

The Cape Girardeau court of common pleas, the powers of which are derived from acts of the legislature, and to which the express grant of superintending control is limited to justices of the peace of the county in civil cases, has no superintending control over the probate court,—especially in view of § 1674, Rev. Stat. 1899, which confers upon circuit courts superintending control over probate courts in all cases not expressly prohibited by law; nor can a grant of such power be inferred from § 1461, Rev. Stat. 1899, providing that "whenever the term 'circuit court' is used in any law general to the whole state, the same shall be construed to include 'courts of common pleas' unless such construction would be inconsistent with the evident intent of such law, or of some law specially applicable to courts of common pleas," such construction being inconsistent with the evident intent and purpose of the statute creating the Cape Girardeau court of common pleas; nor from § 4449, Rev. Stat. 1899, providing that "the supreme court and each division thereof, the two courts of appeals and the circuit and common pleas courts, within their several jurisdictions, and also the judges thereof to the extent hereinafter provided in this article, shall have power to hear and determine proceedings in prohibition," such section not being the origin of the power to issue the writ, but simply an enactment indicating the procedure in the exercise of 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Att. Gen. v. Blossom, 1 Wis. 317; State ex rel. Brownell v. McArthur, 13 Wis. 407; Att. Gen. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 425; State ex rel. Buchanan v. Kellogg, 95 Wis. 672, 70 N. W. 300; State ex rel. Att. Gen. v. Circuit Ct. 97 Wis. 1, 38 L.R.A. 554, 65 Am. St. Rep. 90, 72 N. W. 193; State ex rel. Spence v. Dick, 103 Wis. 407, 79 N. W. 421; State ex rel. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 103 Wis. 591, 51 L.R.A. 33, 79 N. W. 1081, 105 Wis. 164, 83 N. W. 320; State ex rel. Oshkosh, A. & B. W. R. Co. v. Burnell, 104 Wis. 251, 80 N. W. 460; State ex rel. Rose v. Superior Ct. 105 Wis. 651, 48 L.R.A. 819, 81 N. W. 1046; State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 127 Wis. 468, 107 N. W. 500; State ex rel. Tewalt v. Pollard, 112

the power to hear and determine proceedings in prohibition. Koehler v. Snider, supra.

The supreme court has the same power to control the action of the courts of appeals with respect to their jurisdiction, and to prevent them from taking judicial action in excess of their jurisdiction, that it has as regards other courts of inferior jurisdiction. State ex rel. Sale v. Nortoni, 201 Mo. 1, 98 S. W. 554.

Where, by reason of the presence of a constitutional question, the supreme court would have exclusive jurisdiction of an appeal, a court of appeals has no supervisory jurisdiction over the circuit court. Ibid.

The power of general supervisory control over all inferior courts, conferred upon the supreme court by Const. art. 8, § 2, is distinct and separate from its appellate jurisdiction, and from the power conferred by § 3 to issue and to hear and determine the writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, prohibition, and injunction, and such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary or proper to complete the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. State ex rel. Whiteside v. First Judicial Dist. Ct. 24 Mont. 539, 63 Pac. 395.

The restrictions imposed in the constitutional provision conferring upon the supreme court a general supervisory control over all inferior courts, "under such regulations and limitations as may be prescribed by law," do not, it seems, render such power dormant, in the absence of procedure provided by the legislature, so that the legislature, by failing to act, can render such power of no avail; but, in the absence of legislative action, the court has the power to establish rules therefor. Sufficient legislative sanction to enable the court to exercise such power is, however, found in § 205, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides: "When jurisdiction is, by the Constitution or this Code, or any other statute, conferred on a court or judicial officer, all the means necessary to carry into effect are also given; and, in the exercise of this jurisdiction, if the course of

Wis. 232. 87 N. W. 1107; State ex rel. Schutz v. Williams, 127 Wis. 236, 106 N. W. 286. 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 303; State ex rel. Rinder v. Goff, 129 Wis. 668, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 916, 109 N. W. 628; Re Pierce, 44 Wis. 411.

The relief prayed for here, to review, on behalf of the state, proceedings in a criminal case, has been granted in numerous courts.

Luton v. Circuit Judge, 69 Mich. 610, 37 N. W. 701; Grand Rapids v. Braudy, 105 Mich. 670, 32 L.R.A. 116, 55 Am. St. Rep. 472. 64 N. W. 29; State ex rel. Bayha v. Philips (State ex rel. Bayha v. Kansas City Ct. of Appeals) 97 Mo. 331, 3 L.R.A. 476, 10 S. W. 855; Swift v. Circuit Judges, 64 Mich. 479, 31 N. W. 434; People ex rel. Robison v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529, 26 N. W.

694; Louisell v. Benzie Circuit Judge, 139 Mich. 40, 102 N. W. 371; People v. Murray, 72 Mich. 10, 40 N. W. 29; Clute v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 139 Mich. 337, 102 N. W. 843; Hill v. Morgan, 9 Idaho, 718, 76 Pac. 323; State ex rel. Smith v. Smith, 69 Ohio St. 196, 68 N. E. 1044; State ex rel. Shannon v. Hunter, 3 Wash. 92, 27 Pac. 1076; State ex rel. Harris v. Laughlin, 75 Mo. 358; People ex rel. Coberly v. Scates, 4 Ill. 351; Crane v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 111 Mich. 497, 69 N. W. 721; McCreary v. Rogers, 35 Ark. 298; Com. v. Balph, 111 Pa. 365, 3 Atl. 220; Illinois State Dental Examiners v. People, 123 Ill. 227, 13 N. E. 201; Glencoe v. People, 78 Ill. 382; People ex rel. Oebricks Superior Ct. 5 Wend. 114; State ex rel. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v.

proceeding be not specifically pointed out by this Code or the statute, any suitable process or mode of proceeding may be adopted which may appear most conformable to the spirit of this Code." State ex rel. White-side v. First Judicial Dist. Ct. supra.

And in State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. District Ct. 25 Mont. 504, 65 Pac. 1020, it is reaffirmed that the power of supervisory control is distinct and independent of the appellate power and the power to grant original writs; and that, from its nature, it must be exercised by means of instrumentalities distinct from those by which the others are made available.

The superintending authority of the King's bench over inferior tribunals is, to the extent that it may be exercised by the use of the writ of mandamus, included in and part of the original jurisdiction given by the Constitution to the supreme court. State ex rel. Reynolds v. Graves, 66 Neb. 17, 92 N. W. 144.

Constitution, art. 4, § 8, which provides that "the supreme court . . . shall have the power to issue any remedial writs necessary to give it a general supervision and control over the proceedings of the inferior courts," gives the supreme court general supervision and control of proceedings in the lower court. State v. Crook, 132 N. C. 1053, 44 S. E. 32.

The supreme court, being the highest tribunal in the state, with appellate and supervisory jurisdiction over all proceedings and judgments of all inferior courts, has the inherent power to grant a writ of certiorari whenever necessary in the exercise and enforcement of this jurisdiction, and is not restricted in its use by § 10, art. 6 of the Constitution, providing that the judges of inferior courts of law and equity shall have power to issue it in civil cases, to remove such proceedings from any inferior jurisdiction into a court of law. Tennessee C. R. Co. v. Campbell, 109 Tenn. 640, 75 S. W. 1012.

The supreme court has not the same general power to issue the writ of mandamus "in cases warranted by the principles and 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

usages of law" which the court of King's bench, in England, has to issue the writ to inferior tribunals. Smith v. Conner, 98 Tex. 434, 84 S. W. 815.

Under Const. art. 5 § 6, which provides that the courts "shall have such other jurisdiction, original and appellate, as may be prescribed by law," and Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 1000, authorizing the court of civil appeals to issue the writ of mandamus to compel a judge of the district and county courts to proceed to trial and judgment in a cause, the court of civil appeals may compel a district court to retry a cause where the granting of a new trial as to some of the parties operated as to all. Levy v. Gill (Tex. Civ. App.) 46 S. W. 84.

The power of superintending control given to the circuit courts by Const. art. 7, § 8, unlike the grant of power of the superintending control to the supreme court, is limited by the means afforded for its exercise,—in other words, by the functions of the original writs referred to in connection with the grant, all of which appertain to matters of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 127 Wis. 468, 107 N. W. 500; Potter v. Frohbach, 133 Wis. 1, 112 N. W. 1087.

Under Const. art. 5, § 2, which vests in the supreme court a general superintending control over all inferior courts, under such rules as may be prescribed by law, and Const. art. 5, § 3, which provides that "the supreme court shall also have power to issue writs of mandamus, review, prohibition, habeas corpus, certiorari, and other writs necessary and proper to the complete exercise of its appellate and revisory jurisdiction," the court is authorized, in appropriate cases, to issue the writ of prohibition to restrain the action of an inferior court in excess of its jurisdiction. State ex rel. Mau v. Ausherman, 11 Wyo. 410, 72 Pac. 200, 73 Pac. 548.

In courts of the United States.

In bankruptcy, the circuit court of appeals has jurisdiction, upon petition and notice, "to superintend and revise, as mat-

Smith, 172 Mo. 446, 72 S. W. 692; Bob v. State, 2 Yerg. 173; State ex rel. New Orleans v. Civil Dist. Judge, 52 La. Ann. 1275, 51 L.R.A. 71, 27 So. 697; Benness v. State, 124 Ala. 97, 26 So. 942; Ex parte Barnes, 84 Ala. 540, 4 So. 769; Ex parte Haralson, 75 Ala. 543; State v. Hart, 19 Utah, 438, 57 Pac. 415.

The doctrine here contended for has been recognized to its fullest extent in England.

R. v. Middlesex Justices, L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 516; R. v. Brown, 7 El. & Bl. 757; R. v. Pilkington, 2 El. & Bl. 546; R. v. Adamson, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 201.

Where a party has more than one Christian name, and elects to be known by other than the first, such name is, to all intents, his Christian name.

ter of law," the proceedings of the district court; but otherwise it has no power to vacate, set aside, or modify an order of the district court except by appeal or writ of error. United States v. Moy Yee Tai, 48 C. C. A. 203, 109 Fed. 1.

Power of legislature to interfere.

By § 3, art. 6 of the Constitution, the supreme court is given power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, injunction, and other original and remedial writs, and it is beyond the power of the general assembly to abridge or enlarge the same; and therefore chapter 28 of the Code, authorizing courts of record on certiorari to review the proceedings of an inferior court or tribunal because it has abused its discretion, or to review mere questions of law of less dignity than such as go to the jurisdiction, has no application to original proceedings instituted in the supreme court of the state. Leppel v. District Ct. 33 Colo. 24, 78 Pac. 682.

Where the Constitution confers supervisory control over inferior tribunals, the legislature has no power to encroach upon, impair, or limit the jurisdiction thus conferred. Home Sav. & T. Co. v. District Ct. 121 Iowa, 1, 95 N. W. 522.

Const. art. 8, § 2, providing that "the supreme court shall have a general supervisory control," lodges this jurisdiction in the supreme court sitting as an organized judicial body, and the power of general supervision cannot be conferred upon any other body, or upon any individual or individuals, even though justices of the supreme court. Re Weston, 28 Mont. 207, 72 Pac. 512.

Where the Constitution has provided that "the circuit courts shall have . . . appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts and tribunals and a supervisory control over the same. They shall also have the power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, injunction, quo warranto, certiorari, and all other writs necessary to carry into effect their orders, judgments, and decrees, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 306; Nolan v. Taylor, 131 Mo. 224, 32 S. W. 1144; Steinmann v. Strimple, 29 Mo. App. 478; Binfield v. State, 15 Neb. 484, 19 N. W. 607; Hommel v. Devinney, 39 Mich. 522; United States v. Winter, 13 Blatchf. 276, Fed. Cas. No. 16,743; Langdon v. People, 133 Ill. 382, 24 N. E. 874; People v. Lake, 110 N. Y. 61, 6 Am. St. Rep. 344, 17 N. E. 146; King v. Hutchins, 28 N. H. 561; Ross v. State, 116 Ind. 495, 19 N. E. 451; Keene v. Meade, 3 Pet. 1, 7 L. ed. 581; Games v. Stiles, 14 Pet. 322, 10 L. ed. 476; Rooks v. State, 83 Ala. 79, 3 So. 720; Fincher v. Hanegan, 59 Ark. 151, 24 L.R.A. 543, 26 S. W. 821.

Messrs. Walter Schintz and Carl Runge with Mr. Lyman G. Wheeler for respondent.

and give them a general control over inferior courts and jurisdictions," the legislature cannot take from the circuit court any part of its supervisory jurisdiction over lower courts, nor deprive the circuit court of the use of any writ so far as it may be necessary for the exercise of that jurisdiction; and a statute attempting to do this must be held to be void. State ex rel. Tewalt v. Pollard, 112 Wis. 232, 87 N. W. 1107.

In what courts the inherent power exists.

In the absence of negative or substitutionary provisions of statutes, the state courts of general original common-law jurisdiction have and exercise an inherent authority to revise the proceedings of inferior jurisdictions on certiorari, according to the course of the common law. Such process, however, must go from a court of general original common-law jurisdiction unless otherwise expressly provided by statute. Sullivan v. District of Columbia, 19 App. D. C. 210.

The court of appeals of the District of Columbia is a court of appellate jurisdiction, with no original common-law jurisdiction in matters criminal out of which the common-law writ of certiorari can issue to remove the record and proceedings of the court of an inferior criminal jurisdiction, by virtue of any supervisory power existing in it, although it has been given power as an appellate court to issue all necessary and proper remedial prerogative writs in aid of its appellate jurisdiction. Ibid.

Where application to correct should be first made.

Although Const. art. 6, § 3, gives the supreme court a general superintending control over "all inferior courts," it will, in the absence of an exigency, decline to exercise its power when application could have been made to one of the circuit courts, upon which power has been conferred by the Constitution to issue certain writs necessary to give them control over inferior courts

Dodge, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The present application is confessedly addressed to the power vested in this court by the Constitution of superintending control over inferior courts. The meaning of that grant of power was very fully expounded in State ex rel. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 103 Wis. 591, 51 L.R.A. 33, 79 N. W. 1081, and the following conclusion reached and stated at page 614 of 103 Wis.: "It is very apparent that, when the makers of the Constitution used the words 'superintending control over all inferior courts,' they definitely referred to that well-known superintending jurisdiction of the court of Kings' bench. In England it was a branch of the King's power, lodged with the King's and tribunals. Mitchell v. Bay Probate Judge (Mich.) 119 N. W. 916.

Over what courts or jurisdictions power may be exercised.

A county board of registrars of election is not one of the "jurisdictions" which the supreme court may control by original writs under § 140, Const. 1901, which gives the supreme court original jurisdiction "to issue writs of injunction, habeas corpus, quo warranto, and such other remedial and original writs as may be necessary to give a general superintendence and control of inferior jurisdiction." Ex parte Giles, 133 Ala. 211, 32 So. 167.

A probate court is an "inferior court" within the meaning of Const. art. 6, § 8, giving the circuit court the power to issue certain writs necessary to give them general control over inferior courts and tribunals, the term "inferior courts" being used in the sense of grade, and meaning lower courts. Mitchell v. Bay Probate Judge, supra.

Under the constitutional provision conferring upon the courts of appeals "the power to issue writs of habeas corpus, quo warranto, mandamus, certiorari, and other remedial writs, and to hear and determine the same, and to exercise a superintending control over all inferior courts of record in the appellate district," a writ of prohibition may be issued to an inferior court, such as a board of arbitration, whether a court of record or not. School Dist. No. 6 v. Burris, 84 Mo. App. 654.

The power conferred by the Constitution of "general supervisory control over all inferior courts," operates only upon inferior courts, and not upon persons. Re Weston, supra.

A court-martial is not an "inferior court" within the meaning of a constitutional provision giving the supreme court a general superintending control over all inferior courts, it not belonging to the judicial, but to the executive, department of the government. State ex rel. Poole v. Nuchols (N. D.) 119 N. W. 632. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

court; in this country it is a branch of the sovereign power of the people, committed by them as a sacred charge to this court, not to be exercised upon light occasion, or when other and ordinary remedies are sufficient, but to be wisely used for the benefit of any citizen when an inferior court either refuses to act within its jurisdiction, or acts beyond its jurisdiction, to the serious prejudice of the citizens." Since that case was decided the nature of this power has been the subject of very much explanation, but hardly with the result of greater clearness or exhaustiveness than in the words just quoted. Some of the more important of the later cases are the following: State ex rel. Mitchell v. Johnson, 105 Wis. 90, 80 N. W. 1104; State ex rel. Fourth

The court of civil appeals, when acting in those cases in which its judgments are made final, is not inferior to the supreme court, which can therefore exercise no revisory power over it. Smith v. Conner, 98 Tex. 434, 84 S. W. 815.

Modes in which power may be exercised.

The Constitution confers upon the supreme court the control and general supervision of all inferior courts, and, for the purpose of such jurisdiction, authorizes it to make use of the writs of certiorari, mandamus, prohibition, and quo warranto, and other remedial writs; and the functions of the writs mentioned are thereby broadened by the authority of the fundamental law, in order that they may subserve the uses to which they are thus assigned. State ex rel. New Orleans v. Civil Dist. Judge, 52 La. Ann. 1275, 51 L.R.A. 71, 27 So. 697.

Under the plenary powers, control, and general supervision over inferior courts conferred by art. 94 of the Constitution, the writ of certiorari will issue, coupled with mandamus, when the judge of an inferior tribunal refuses to try a case, and such refusal amounts to a denial of justice. State ex rel. Sorrel v. Foster, 106 La. 428, 31 So. 57.

Under the Constitution, certiorari is one of the methods by which the supreme court exercises its superintending control over the courts of appeals, and may be resorted to not only in cases where it is alleged that the lower court is absolutely without any jurisdiction whatever, but it also may reach and afford a remedy in cases where such court has jurisdiction, but undertakes to exercise unauthorized powers. State ex rel. Scott v. Smith, 176 Mo. 90, 75 S. W. 586.

The superintending control of circuit courts over probate courts, conferred by § 1674, Rev. Stat. 1899, does not embrace an appeal from a decision of the probate court to the circuit court in a case not otherwise appealable, but can only be exercised by an original writ issuing out of the circuit court, directed to the probate court, as a writ of certiorari, mandamus, or prohibition. Morris v. Morris, 128 Mo. App. 673, 107 S. W. 405.

Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 105 Wis. 164, 83 N. W. 320; State ex rel. Milwaukee v. Ludwig, 106 Wis. 226, 82 N. W. 158; State ex rel. W. G. Taylor Co. v. Elliott, 108 Wis. 163, 84 N. W. 149; State ex rel. Coffey v. Chittenden, 112 Wis. 569, 88 N. W. 587; Re Gates, 117 Wis. 445, 94 N. W. 292; State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 127 Wis. 468, 107 N. W. 500; State ex rel. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. v. Circuit Ct. 133 Wis. 442, 113 N. W. 722; State ex rel. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. v. Circuit Ct. 134 Wis. 301, 114 N. W. 455.

It will be observed that one limitation upon the exercise of this power, stated in the first Johnson Case and many times reiterated, is the absence of any other adequate and sufficient remedy. 2 Spelling, Extr. Relief, § 1392; High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 177; State ex rel. Meggett v. O'Neill, 104 Wis. 227, 80 N. W. 447; Re Gates, supra. We, therefore, elsewhere in this opinion, without express reiteration, must be understood as intending that qualification in all cases where it may be stated the power exists. It is not material to the present case, for both parties concede and proceed on the assumption that, if the acts of the circuit court here complained of are otherwise within reach of our superintending jurisdiction, exercisable by the writ of mandamus, other adequate remedy is wanting, and that a case of exigent prejudice to public welfare is presented. State v. Kemp, 17 Wis. 670; State v. Grottkau, 73 Wis. 589,

The writ of certiorari is not a suitable means for the exercise of supervisory control where there has been no excess of jurisdiction; but the proper instrument by which to exercise the power must be framed when the case properly arises and may be termed a supervisory writ. State ex rel. Whiteside v. First Judicial Dist. Ct. 24 Mont. 539, 63 Pac. 395.

Const. art. 7, § 2, providing that "the original jurisdiction of the supreme court shall extend to a general supervising control over all inferior courts, and all commissions and boards created by the law. The supreme court shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, prohibition, and such other remedial writs as may be provided by law, and to hear and determine the same," authorizes the supreme court to issue the writ of certiorari as it exists at common law, for investigation as to jurisdictional errors only, as an aid in the exercise of its general superintending control over all inferior courts. Baker v. Newton (Okla.) 98 Pac. 931.

In the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred by art. 12, § 1, of the amendments to the Constitution, which provides that the supreme court shall have final revisory and appellate jurisdiction in all questions of law and equity, and shall have power to issue prerogative writs, and shall also have such other jurisdiction as may, from time to time, be prescribed by law, under § 2 of the court and practice act, which provides that "the supreme court shall have general supervision of all courts of inferior jurisdiction, to correct and prevent errors and abuses therein when no other remedy is expressly provided; it may issue writs of habeas corpus, of error, certiorari, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, and all other extraordinary and prerogative writs and processes necessary for the furtherance of justice and the due administration of the law," and § 33 of the same act, which provides that "the supreme and superior courts shall have power to enter such judgments, decrees, and orders, and to frame and issue such citations, executions, and other writs and processes, as may be necessary or proper to carry into full effect all the powers and jurisdictions which are or shall be conferred upon them respectively by the Constitution or by law," the supreme court is not confined to any narrow, technical definition of the office of the extraordinary writs named in the statute above quoted, but may use those writs in their accepted forms when adapted to the purpose sought; or it may adapt them, or modify them, or it may frame new writs and processes. Hyde v. Superior Ct. 28 R. I. 204, 66 Atl. 292.

The writ of certiorari issued in the exercise of the power of superintending control to a court of equity is not a common-law writ, but an extraordinary process, appropriate to the revisory and supervisory powers of the supreme court. Ibid.

The fact that a constitutional grant of the power of superintending control fails to name the writ of prohibition is of no moment, the court taking the necessary writs with the grant of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Tewalt v. Pollard, 112 Wis. 232, 87 N. W. 1107.

Policy governing its exercise.

The power of superintending control will not be exercised upon light occasions, or when other and ordinary remedies are sufficient (State ex rel. Milwaukee v. Ludwig, 106 Wis. 226, 82 N. W. 158; State ex rel. Umbreit v. Helms [Wis.] 118 N. W. 158); or when nothing practical may be accomplished thereby (State ex rel. Winchell v. Circuit Ct. 116 Wis. 253, 93 N. W. 16); but it will only be exercised in special emergency cases, and in order to prevent great impending present injury. (Murat v. New Orleans, 119 La. 505, 44 So. 279).

It will only be exercised where the duty of the inferior court to act within its jurisdiction, or to refrain from going beyond its jurisdiction, is plain and imperative, where such court threatens to violate that duty to the substantial prejudice of the rights of the petitioner, where all other remedies are inadequate, and the application for relief prompt. State ex rel. Milwaukee

9 Am. St. Rep. 816, 41 N. W. 80, 1063; Von Rueden v. State, 96 Wis. 671, 676, 71 N. W. 1048; United States v. Sanges, 144 U. S. 310, 36 L. ed. 445, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609.

The present application is claimed to present a case where the circuit court refuses to act within its jurisdiction, for that, by reason of some preliminary consideration, it has declared that it has no right to proceed with the consideration of the charge against the accused. If that contention is sustained, it will neither be necessary nor proper in the present case to attempt a disquisition upon or further definition of the jurisdiction of this court in other directions. That the act of the circuit court is a refusal to exercise its jurisdiction and perform its duty to consider the criminal charge against the accused seems too plain for discussion. He has declared that purpose most unambiguously, and, but for the stay entered to enable the application to this court, the accused would have been discharged, immune from further prosecution, it is said, because a new prosecution for his alleged offense is barred by the statute of limitations. Thus, prima facie, an obvious case is presented to which either a writ of mandamus or the old-time writ of procedendo ad iudicium would be appropriate to command the circuit court to perform its duty to consider and judicially pass judgment upon the controversy instituted by this indictment. To this prima facie case it is responded that we cannot Electric R. & Light Co. v. Circuit Ct. 133 Wis. 442, 113 N. W. 722; State ex rel. Milwaukee v. Ludwig, supra.

It should be exercised with extreme caution, and only in a clear case, to aid the administration of justice, and not to defeat it or needlessly embarrass it. Quay's Petition, 189 Pa. 517, 42 Atl. 199.

A litigant cannot, as matter of right, call upon the supreme court to exercise its power of control and general supervision over inferior courts, but such power will be exercised by the court in any particular case in its wise discretion. State ex rel. Union Sawmill Co. v. Summit Lumber Co. 117 La. 643, 42 So. 195.

The supervisory power of the supreme court will only be exercised after consideration, deliberation, and a judicial determination of the merits of the controversy with reference to which it is sought to be invoked. It cannot be appealed to and a remedy had under it as a matter of course. Re Weston, 28 Mont. 207, 72 Pac. 512.

Control of lower courts' discretion.

Certiorari will not be granted, in the exercise of the power of general supervision, to review or control the discretion of the subordinate tribunal, unless it clearly appears that there has been an abuse of this discretion. Home Sav. & T. Co. v. District Ct. 121 Iowa, 1, 95 N. W. 522.

In the exercise of discretion vested in them by law, the inferior courts will not be subjected to interference under the power of superintending control merely because the views of the superior court on the subject may be at variance with those of the lower court; but there must in such case be such an abuse of discretion as would indicate a failure to hear or a bias in the consideration of the question by the trial judge. Renshaw v. Cook, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 860, 895, 111 S. W. 377.

Use in place of appeal or other remedy.

The supervisory power will not be exercised where there is an adequate remedy by 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

appeal or otherwise (State ex rel. Johnson v. Thompson, 111 La. 315, 35 So. 582; State ex rel. Clark v. District Ct. 30 Mont. 442, 76 Pac. 1005; Baker v. Newton (Okla.) 98 Pac. 931; State ex rel. Tewalt v. Pollard, supra; Re Gates, 117 Wis. 445, 94 N. W. 282; State ex rel. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. v. Circuit Ct. 134 Wis. 301, 114 N. W. 455); or if the applicant has an adequate remedy elsewhere (Montgomery v. Viers [Ky.] 114 S. W. 251).

The extraordinary supervisory powers of the supreme court over inferior tribunals will not be exercised where the issue raised can be reviewed on appeal, and no injury is shown beyond the ordinary delays of litigation. Murphy v. Police Jury, 117 La. 355, 41 So. 647.

Questions that may be decided on appeal will not be reviewed under the power of supervisory control if no prejudicial delay is to result, and there is no immediate necessity for the review of the cause presented on the application. McClelland v. Gasquet, 122 La. 241, 47 So. 540.

Under the supervisory powers conferred by the Constitution, the supreme court will not review the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused. State ex rel. Johnson v. Thompson, 111 La. 315, 35 So. 582.

But where the appeal, writ of error, or other remedy is slow, difficult, or inadequate, the power will be exerted. Hargis v. Parker, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 441, 69 L.R.A. 270, 85 S. W. 704; Renshaw v. Cook, supra; State ex rel. Whiteside v. First Judicial Dist. Ct. 24 Mont. 539, 63 Pac. 395; State ex rel. Reynolds v. Graves, 66 Neb. 17, 92 N. W. 144; Gates v. McGee, 15 S. D. 247, 88 N. W. 115,—hereinafter set forth under title, "Occasions for its exercise."

Occasions for its exercise.

—in general.

When a new jurisdiction is created by statute, and the court or officer exercising it proceeds in a summary mode or in a course different from the common law, and a remedy for the revision of its exercise is not ascertain whether it is the circuit court's duty to proceed with the case without reviewing the obviously judicial determination made below, that the indictment is void, clearly within the court's jurisdiction to resolve either way,—a determination reached upon so clearly judicial acts as the weighing evidence and reaching conclusions upon disputed questions of fact, as also deciding uncertain questions of law as to the effect on the validity of the grand jury's action of the presence and participation of an unqualified person as a member of that grand jury. But this is no insuperable obstacle. This court is not universally restrained from reviewing acts done within the jurisdiction and judicial power of the inferior court in the exercise of superintending control. State ex rel. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 103 Wis. 623, 51 L.R.A. 33, 79 N. W. 1081; State ex rel. Milwaukee v. Ludwig, 106 Wis. 234, 82 N. W. 158; State ex rel. Winchell v. Circuit Ct. 116 Wis. 253, 93 N. W. 16. True, it is frequently asserted that the writ of mandamus issued under the power of superintending control cannot be made to serve as a writ of error, and that, when the lower court does take up any question for consideration, and in its best judgment decides, it exercises jurisdiction and performs its duty, and there is nothing left but a supposed judicial error for review. High, Extr. Legal Rem. 3d ed. § 188; State ex rel. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Johnson, supra; State ex rel. Oshkosh, A. & B. W. R. Co. v. Burnell, 104 Wis. 246.

given by the statute creating it, certiorari from the court having general superintendence and control over inferior jurisdictions will lie for its revision. Home Sav. & T. Co. v. District Ct. supra.

The court of appeals may exercise its constitutional power to prevent an inferior court from exceeding its jurisdiction before the question of jurisdiction can be presented to such court, where the situation disclosed is such that, to take the ordinary course, would be of itself to subject the complaining party to irremediable loss. Hargis v. Parker, supra.

Though the inferior court may have jurisdiction, but there is not an adequate remedy by appeal, the court of appeals may, in its discretion, exercise a supervisory control over the inferior court so as to prevent irreparable injury and injustice. Renshaw v. Cook, supra.

A proper function of the supervisory power is to control the course of litigation in the inferior courts where these courts are proceeding within their jurisdiction, but, by a mistake of law, or wilful disregard of it, are doing a gross injustice, and there is no appeal, or the remedy by appeal is inadequate. State ex rel. Whiteside v. First Judicial Dist. Ct. supra.

The power of supervisory control is vested in the supreme court, not for the purpose of interfering at every stage of the proceedings in the district court, and directing the conduct of the business there, but only under extraordinary circumstances, where there is no other remedy, and a party litigant is, by some wrong committed by the court, liable to suffer irreparable injury. State ex rel. Clark v. District Ct. 30 Mont. 442, 76 Pac. 1005.

A proper case for the exercise of superintending authority is presented where the rights of the relator can be adequately protected only by the prompt rescission of the orders of the inferior court of which he complains though such orders may be reviewed in an appellate proceeding, such remedy, however, not being an adequate one. State ex rel. Reynolds v. Graves, supra.

The fact that it becomes necessary to review judicial action of an inferior court is no insuperable obstacle to the exercise of the power of superintending control in a proper case; but the general rule that mandamus issued under the power of superintending control cannot be used to serve the purpose of a writ in error to review judicial action of the trial court is subject to limitations, as where a preliminary question is involved. State ex rel. Umbreit v. Helms (Wis.) 118 N. W. 158.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A preliminary question respecting the control of trial courts in criminal actions arises upon any action of the court which amounts to a refusal to enter upon the trial of the case before a jury is duly impaneled and sworn to try the accused. Ibid.

No justification appears for the exercise of the superintending and supervisory power of the supreme court where the order and judgment against which prohibition is sought are entirely within the jurisdiction of the inferior court, and, if erroneous, will be promptly reviewable on appeal from the judgment. Re Gates, 117 Wis. 445, 94 N. W. 202.

The mere importance of obtaining a speedy, final settlement of a controverted question, even of a public nature, short of necessity in that regard to prevent irreparable loss of valuable rights, will not justify the exercise of the power of supervisory control. Re Mielke, 120 Wis. 501, 98 N. W. 245.

The superintending control of the supreme court over inferior courts will not be extended to determine whether a circuit judge should do what he has refused to do, where the error claimed to have been committed is reviewable on appeal from the order entered in the matter, or from a final determination of the matter or proceeding in which it was made, and the refusal does not deny a clear statutory right, but involves the determination of questions of law or fact, or both, of such difficulty that a judge might reasonably, proceeding considerably, commit judicial error. State ex rel. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. v. Circuit Ct. 134 Wis. 301, 114 N. W. 455.

251, 80 N. W. 460. What limitations upon that rule appear in practical application of superintending control need not here be discussed, with one exception, which seems specially relevant to the situation before us. The courts are agreed, with but little failure of unanimity, that though the resolution of either a jurisdictional question or of a preliminary one, which precedes the consideration of the main controversy proposed to the court, may be judicial in character, none the less the court refuses to perform its duty to that controversy when it resolves the preliminary question adversely and refuses further action, and the superintending court is not precluded from considering whether or not that duty exists. There could not well be argument against the power to direct the lower court to proceed to consider a suit when its refusal to do so was arbitrary or based on no stated reasons, but the result to the party is the same when the court states such reasons; he is equally denied the judicial consideration and determination upon his controversy which the trial court owes him as a duty. It is generally true of all official action by courts or other officers, that they are obliged, before proceeding to the performance of that official duty, to decide whether the condition exists which calls it into activity. A court must always inquire whether the law either gives it the jurisdiction or imposes upon it the duty to entertain a given controversy, and must inquire into existence of facts, either of no-

—to compel change of venue.

In State ex rel. Rowell v. Dick, 125 Wis. 51, 103 N. W. 229, mandamus was granted to compel a change of venue on the ground that the judge was disqualified by reason of having been concerned in the litigation as an attorney, where a statute expressly entitled the applicant to such change.

In State ex rel. Schutz v. Williams, 127 Wis. 236, 106 N. W. 286, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 303, mandamus was granted to compel a change of venue on the ground of the prejudice of the judge before whom the case was brought for trial, which change had been denied by the inferior court, the applicant having a clear statutory right thereto.

The power of superintending control will not be used to force the trial judge into granting a change of venue where there is no clear statutory requirement for the change, and a number of questions are involved, in respect to each of which the trial court might well have hesitated as to the right thereof. State ex rel. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. v. Circuit Ct. supra.

No case is presented for the exercise of the power of supervisory control to compel the removal of an accusation of an officer from one department of the district court to another, where it does not appear that, if the court should proceed to a determination of the cause, the relator would suffer any injury or wrong for which an appeal would not furnish him an adequate remedy. State ex rel. Clark v. District Ct. supra.

—to correct erroneous decision of jurisdictional question.

In Hays v. Stewart, 7 Idaho, 193, 61 Pac. 591, it is held that a writ of mandate will issue to require a district court to proceed with a criminal case in such court which is triable, when such court refuses to proceed at all with such case.

In Hill v. Morgan, 9 Idaho, 718, 76 Pac. 323, it is held that the rule that mandamus will not issue to control discretion or revise judicial action has no application to the determination of preliminary questions relating to the sufficiency of the service of summons, but that, when the tribunal or officer whose duty it is to take jurisdiction of the matter, believing erroneously that it has no jurisdiction, declines to consider the matter, mandamus will issue to compel action.

In Com. ex rel. Barth v. McCann, 123 Ky. 247, 94 S. W. 645, the court was equally divided upon the question whether, under the constitutional and statutory provisions conferring upon the court power to issue such writs as may be necessary to give it control of inferior jurisdictions, the court had the power to award a writ of mandamus directing the judge of a municipal police court to proceed to the trial of persons whose demurrers to the warrants under which they were arrested had been sustained by such judge.

In the absence of apparent jurisdiction over a cause in any appellate court, the supreme court has, under its supervisory jurisdiction, the authority to instruct the court of original jurisdiction to reinstate a case dismissed on the ground, and for the alleged reason, that the court is without jurisdiction, if it be manifest that the court has jurisdiction. Reynolds v. Carroll, 114 La. 610, 38 So. 470.

In State ex rel. Smith v. Smith, 69 Ohio St. 196, 68 N. E. 1044, it is held that mandamus will lie to compel a justice of the peace to proceed with a trial of a defendant over whom he has decided that he has no jurisdiction.

A proper case for the exercise of the power of supervisory control is presented where an inferior court, not in the exercise of its discretion, but in disobedience of a mandatory and imperative statute, has refused to grant a motion to dismiss a complaint, and the order denying such motion is not appealable, so that otherwise the defendant will be subjected to the great inconvenience, difficulty, and expense of trial before the action of the court can be reviewed on appeal. State ex rel. Mitchell v. Johnson, 105 Wis. 90, 80 N. W. 1104.

In Re Grossmayer, 177 U. S. 48, 44 L. ed. 665, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535, it was held that a writ of mandamus may lie to compel a court to enter judgment by default, where it erroneously declines to take jurisdiction of the case after sufficient service on the detice to one of the parties or of some other preliminary condition, upon which the law imposes on him the power and the duty. In so deciding, he, of course, acts judicially. Where that judicial action can be corrected by ordinary appellate procedure, there may be no need for the exertion of the more extraordinary superintending control; but where it cannot, the result of an erroneous adverse determination of the preliminary question is an effectual refusal to perform his duty and exercise his jurisdiction, as complete and as injurious as if done arbitrarily and without reason. The courts, English and American, agree with practical unanimity that such preliminary decision, however judicial in character, may be reviewed under the superintending power, and, in case of erroneous decision thereof by the inferior court, the latter should be required, by mandamus, to proceed to perform its duty toward the principal controversy notwithstanding its decision upon the preliminary question. Merrill, Mandamus, §§ 203, 204; 2 Spelling, Extr. Relief, §§ 1394, 1403; High, Extr. Legal Rem. §§ 147, 151, 188; Hayne, New Trials & Appeals, § 323; Temple v. Superior Ct. 70 Cal. 211, 11 Pac. 699; Territory ex rel. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Third Judicial Dist. Judge, 5 Dak. 275, 38 N. W. 439; R. v. Kent Justices, 14 East, 395; R. v. Cumberland Justices, 1 Maule & S. 190; R. v. Dayman, 7 El. & Bl. 672; R. v. Brown, 7 El. & Bl. 757; Ex parte Lewis, L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 191; Re Grossmayer, 177 U. S. 48, 44 L. ed.

fendant, who does not appear, except specially, to contest the jurisdiction.

No case is presented for the exercise of the power of superintending control where the trial court has refused to dismiss an action upon the ground of alleged invalidity in the service of the summons. State ex rel. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. v. Circuit Ct. 133 Wis. 442, 113 N. W. 722.

Exercise of power to compel reinstatement of an appeal, see State ex rel. Stanberry v. Smith, 172 Mo. 618, 73 S. W. 134, hereinbefore set forth under heading "Construction of constitutional and statutory grants."

—to correct decision of other preliminary questions.

While the decision of the inferior court upon the merits of a cause cannot be controlled by mandamus, the writ will lie to compel a judge to try a case, when he declines to try it on an erroneous determination of a question of practice preliminary to the whole case. State ex rel. Sorrel v. Foster, 106 La. 428, 31 So. 57.

The power of general supervision over inferior courts will be exercised to compel the reinstatement and trial of a case, dismissed by the inferior court upon the ground of insufficiency in the pleading, where no appeal is possible. Ibid.

To whatever extent considered final by the judge of the court a qua the appellate court, under its supervisory jurisdiction, may review an order overruling a motion to dismiss. McClelland v. Gasquet, 122 La. 241, 47 So. 540.

The supreme court has power in a proper case to compel the circuit court to proceed with the trial of a criminal case when it refuses to do so and wrongfully quashes the complaint, information, or indictment upon which the accused is brought to trial before a jury is impaneled and sworn. State ex rel. Umbreit v. Helms (Wis.) 118 N. W. 158.

—grant or refusal of injunction by inferior court.

Under the power of supervisory control 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a writ of prohibition will be issued to a circuit judge, restraining him from interfering, by order or judgment of his court, with the trial of an application for an injunction in an action between two claimants of the office of sheriff. Renshaw v. Cook, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 860, 895, 111 S. W. 377.

The power of supervisory control may be exercised to direct the modification of an injunction obtained in an action for separation, restraining a husband from disposing of any of his property. McClelland v. Gasquet, supra.

Where, upon an appeal from a conviction for the violation of a city ordinance, an injunction has been obtained restraining the municipal authorities from enforcing the ordinance against the party convicted, on the ground that it is unconstitutional, no such necessity exists as will warrant an exercise of the extraordinary power vested in the supreme court to regulate the proceedings of inferior tribunals by prohibiting the court issuing the injunction from proceeding to enforce it. People ex rel. Adams v. District Ct. 29 Colo. 1, 66 Pac. 888.

The power of supervisory control will not be exercised to compel the grant of an injunction restraining any attempt to enforce the provisions of a city ordinance alleged to be invalid, and from causing relator's arrest, trial, and conviction for the violation thereof, where the city has taken no action against the relator, such injunction not being one to which the relator is entitled as a matter of absolute right, but one which the judge may grant or refuse, in the exercise of his judicial discretion. Murat v. New Orleans, 119 La. 505, 44 So. 279.

The superintending control vested in the supreme court over inferior courts is to be exercised in a different way than by regulating or determining an action or proceeding pending in a district court upon a mere motion to vacate some order made by that court, especially when such order is within the jurisdictional authority of such court; and therefore the supreme court has no original jurisdiction of a motion for the vacation of an injunction granted in a district

665, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535; Re Connaway, 178 U. S. 421, 44 L. ed. 1134, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 951; State ex rel. Harris v. Laughlin, 75 Mo. 358, 366; State ex rel. Shannon v. Hunter, 3 Wash. 92, 27 Pac. 1076; State ex rel. Smith v. Smith, 69 Ohio St. 196, 68 N. E. 1044; Hoke v. Com. 79 Ky. 567; Cassidy v. Young, 92 Ky. 227, 17 S. W. 485; Hill v. Morgan, 9 Idaho, 718, 76 Pac. 323; State ex rel. Keane v. Murphy, 19 Nev. 89, 6 Pac. 840; State ex rel. Spence v. Dick, 103 Wis. 407, 79 N. W. 421; State ex rel. Rowell v. Dick, 125 Wis. 51, 103 N. W. 229; State ex rel. Schutz v. Williams, 127 Wis. 236, 106 N. W. 286, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 303.

There is some contrariety of opinion as to just what questions are preliminary under this doctrine, and when the lower court will be considered to have entered upon consideration of the merits of the controversy. The English and Kentucky cases above cited present antithetic decisions upon that distinction. The ruling of the trial court in this case, that the action of the grand jury was void, and that no indictment exists against Biersach to arouse either power or duty in the circuit court to try him, is, however, clearly a preliminary one within the most restricted definition of that term. Obviously that court has stopped short not only of any consideration of the guilt or innocence of the accused, but even of those earlier considerations, whether the facts stated in the indictment would, if proved, constitute any crime. We conclude that court. Smith v. Healy, 12 Wyo. 219, 75 Pac. 430.

—miscellaneous.

Where a petition for a writ of certiorari shows that registration lists in the hands of election commissioners, and which they are about to copy and send out to the several election judges, contain fictitious names and false and fraudulent registrations, and that the judgment of the court below directs that such commissioners shall make a full and true copy of all registration lists, which will necessarily include the alleged fictitious names and false and fraudulent registrations, a case is presented which fully justifies the supreme court in assuming jurisdiction, and directing such commissioners to omit all names known to be fictitious, false, or fraudulent. People ex rel. Hodges v. District Ct. 33 Colo. 14, 84 Pac. 694.

A case for the exercise of the constitutional powers of the supreme court to control and correct decisions of inferior courts in special cases by means of prerogative and remedial writs is prevented where it appears that a circuit court, after another circuit court had appointed a receiver for a corporation, has enjoined such receiver from acting as such, and appointed another person as receiver, and it appears that delay caused by taking appeal may lead to the forfeiture of several mining claims upon which development work is required to be done within a brief period. Gates v. McGee, 15 S. D. 247, 88 N. W. 115.

The power of supervisory control may be exercised to conform to the statute the terms of a supersedeas bond, where no appeal is provided from the order made on a motion to discharge the bond on account of defect in substance or insufficiency in security. Home Sav. & T. Co. v. District Ct. 121 Iowa, 1, 95 N. W. 522.

The action of a trial judge in declining to recuse himself, from which no appeal lies, will be reviewed by the supreme court in the exercise of its supervisory power, where the reasons assigned in the motion to recuse are not purely frivolous, but allege bias and prejudice in the judge. State v. Banta, 122 La. 235, 47 So. 538; State v. Holliday, 122 La. 239, 47 So. 539; State v. Danos, 122 La. 240, 47 So. 539; State v. Dunlap, 122 La. 241, 47 So. 540.

Under the provision of the Constitution which gives the supreme court superintending control over the courts of appeals by mandamus, prohibition, and certiorari, it may interfere by certiorari where a court of appeals, in the exercise of its conceded jurisdiction exceeds the bounds thereof, and, in its judgment, undertakes to dispose of a matter not before it on the appeal by directing a final judgment. State ex rel. Manning v. Smith, 188 Mo. 167, 86 S. W. 867.

A proper case is made for the exercise of the power of supervisory control by the supreme court where it appears that a petition for a writ of prohibition has been presented to a court of appeals in a case over which that court has no supervisory jurisdiction, although the petition for the writ of prohibition does not disclose the presence of the question which precludes the exercise of such jurisdiction. State ex rel. Sale v. Norton, 201 Mo. 1, 98 S. W. 554.

Under the power of superintending control, the supreme court may require an inferior court to make an order for a special election, although such court, by its neglect or refusal to make such order within the time prescribed, has lost the power and jurisdiction to do so, as otherwise it would be within the power of such courts to place at defiance the laws of the state by simply waiting until the expiration of the time in which they had the power and jurisdiction to act in the premises. State ex rel. Wagner v. Patterson, 207 Mo. 129, 105 S. W. 1048.

A proper case for the exercise of supervisory control is presented, in a suit for trespass upon a mining claim, although the evidence showed the prima facie right to the claim to be in the defendants, an order granting the plaintiff the right to enter and inspect all the defendant's surrounding mines for a period of forty days, for the purpose of obtaining evidence, has been granted, such order not being appealable, and the writs of mandamus or certiorari not afford-a situation is presented to arouse the jurisdiction of this court under its power of superintending control to command the lower court to proceed to perform its duty to judicially consider and decide upon the criminal charge made by this indictment (to try the case of State v. Biersach) if, indeed, not precluded from so doing by invalidity of the indictment,—a question we proceed to consider.

The evidence upon which the circuit court acted, while somewhat extended, may be summarized as follows: The jury commissioners met at the December, 1903, term of the municipal court for Milwaukee county and proceeded to select at least seventy-five persons whose names should be placed upon a list from which grand jurors should be drawn. They made such selections, the names being written under their direction by one Mr. Wieber, who acted as the clerk of the jury commissioners. Upon this list was set the name "George J. Davies." The law required no further designation; but against each name was set a place of residence, and against the name George J. Davies was set "663 38th street." In 1904, when a grand jury was ordered to be called, the jury commissioners convened, being still assisted by Mr. Wieber as their clerk, and slips bearing names taken from said list were put into a box, and, among others, a slip on which was first written in Wieber's handwriting "George J. Davies, 2825 Cedar street," upon which, at the time of the trial of this plea in abatement, there appeared a pencil line drawn through that street and number, and pencil marks placed below it reading, "663 38th street." This slip was one of the seventeen drawn from the box, whereupon from said slips a list of the seventeen persons to constitute the grand jury for that term of court was written out under the direction of the commissioners and certified by them to contain the names of those who should constitute that grand jury, and upon this list appeared the name "George J. Davies, 663 38th street," the law not requiring any other designation than merely the name. A venire was made out containing the same name and the same street number, and was by the sheriff served upon John George Davies, who resided at the place specified; the return, however, stating that it was served personally upon the person named in the venire. John George Davies attended, answered as to his qualifications, and was sworn and served as a juror. Before being sworn he informed the clerk, apparently without the knowledge of the court or of the jury commissioners, that his correct name was J. George Davies instead of George J. Davies, and thereafter it so appeared upon the clerk's books. It appeared without dispute that the juror was commonly known amongst acquaintances as George Davies; that, while he used the signature J. George, ing any remedy. State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. District Ct. 25 Mont. 504, 65 Pac. 1020.

The supreme court has jurisdiction, when a proper case for the exercise of supervisory power is presented, to send a case to another county for trial, or to detail one of its justices to preside at the trial. Quay's Petition, 189 Pa. 517, 42 Atl. 199.

Where an equity court has, after considerable expense has been incurred, set aside an interlocutory decree of partition entered by consent, some of the parties having refused to abide by the same, there is such an error or abuse where "no other remedy is expressly provided,"—no appeal lying from such action,—as will warrant the exercise of the power of supervision. Hyde v. Superior Ct. 28 R. I. 204, 66 Atl. 292.

A proper case for the exercise of the power of supervisory control is presented where the inferior court has violated the statutory right of creditors to the appointment, as assignee for the benefit of creditors, of a person nominated by them. State ex rel. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 105 Wis. 164, 83 N. W. 320.

No case is presented which justifies the interference of the supreme court under its power of supervisory control where, after a new trial granted, one of the parties obtaining it having died, and no administrator having been appointed or executor qualified, there is no one upon whom a notice of appeal from the order can be served. State ex rel. Cohn v. District Ct. (Mont.) 99 Pac. 139.

No case is made for the exercise of this power of supervisory control conferred by Sayles's Civ. Stat. 1897, art. 1000, which provides that courts of civil appeals "may issue the writ of mandamus to compel a judge of the district court to proceed to trial and judgment in a cause, agreeably to the principles and usages of law," where it is not shown that the judge before whom a motion for a new trial is pending has been requested or has refused to make a ruling thereon. Dunn v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. 40 Tex. Civ. App. 242, 88 S. W. 532.

The power of supervisory control is not to be exercised to compel the dismissal of an action which has been brought by a lot owner on behalf of himself and others to restrain a street railway company from extending its lines, the plaintiff in which, having attempted to discontinue the action, has been permitted to withdraw, the court substituting another lot owner as plaintiff,—especially where the railway company has obtained an injunction against the commencement, by any taxpayer or abutting owner, of any similar suit pending the decision of its motion to vacate an injunction pendente lite. State ex rel. Milwaukee v. Ludwig, 106 Wis. 226, 82 N. W. 158.

he considered George his Christian name, and, not infrequently, he had been designated in correspondence and otherwise as George J. It further appeared without dispute that he had all other qualifications for service as a grand juror except the one of having been selected for the jury list by the jury commissioners. On the other hand, there was produced a man whose name was George Jeremy Davies, who passed by the name of George Davies, and whose usual signature and designation in writing was George J. Davies, who lived at 2825 Cedar street, and who also possessed all the requisite qualifications of a grand juror except that of having been selected by the jury commissioners. He had some slight acquaintance with one or two of the jury commissioners, while John George had no acquaintance with them.

The foregoing states substantially all of the material facts from which the circuit court had to decide that the man who was called and did serve on the grand jury was not the person who had been selected for the jury list by the jury commissioners. The use of a middle initial, while it is said to have no significance in law, may, of course, under some circumstances, be very significant of the identity of the person named; but that significance varies very much with circumstances, and the misplacement of an initial used by one whose current Christian name is also used is so probable and frequent an occurrence, at least, among those whose acquaintance with him is not exact and intimate, that its significance is very much diminished. While the jury commissioners had no official duty to state the place of residence of the man whom they selected, the fact that they did state it is none the less significant of the identity of the man whom they had in mind in placing the name on the jury list, and we think is of so vastly greater weight than the mere transposition of the letter "J" in his name as to entirely outweigh it; but when we add to this the apparent fact that the same jury commissioners, in the process of preparing the slip for insertion and withdrawal from the box and the record of it on the list of the grand jury actually drawn, discovered that the George J. Davies who appeared by the directory to live on Cedar street had apparently been designated thereon, and industriously caused such designation to be removed, and to be substituted therefor the residence on 38th street, we cannot avoid the conviction that it was established by overwhelming preponderance of evidence that the George Davies who lived at that place, and who appeared in court in response to the venire, in the presence of the jury commissioners, and was accepted in answer to that name, was the identical person whom those commissioners had selected as suitable for grand jury service. Hence, without discussing the effect of the presence and participation of the wrong man on the grand jury, we must conclude that the fact was not established, and that the circuit court erred in holding the indictment invalid.

It is further urged that the relief sought in this proceeding is the vacation of a certain order, and that mandamus is not the proper remedy therefor. State ex rel. Pfeiffer v. Taylor, 19 Wis. 567; State ex rel. W. G. Taylor Co. v. Elliott, 108 Wis. 163, 84 N. W. 149; State ex rel. Winchell v. Circuit Ct. 116 Wis. 253, 93 N. W. 16. This contention is based upon a misapprehension. The real and practical purpose, and obviously the primary one, is to require the circuit court to perform its duty to consider and decide upon the criminal charge presented, which it has refused to do. The fact, if it be such, that some orders theretofore made in that court constitute a formal obstacle to his so doing, merely invites an enlargement of the command which this court shall issue to the effect that the trial court take formal action necessary to remove those obstacles, as ancillary to and in aid of the primary relief sought and granted. That was the exact situation in both of the Johnson Cases, where the thing commanded was obstructed by certain orders entered by the court, and it was urged that they could not be reversed by mandamus, even to enable the performance of an act which the court's duty required. The court said (103 Wis. page 624): "This court holds its power under no such uncertain terms. Those powers are not dependent upon the speed with which the trial court enters orders. If it becomes necessary, in the due discharge of its power of superintending control, that orders of the inferior court be vacated, this court will not hesitate to compel the vacation of such order by the inferior court by so framing its writs of mandamus." The same distinction was also noted in the opinion in State ex rel. W. G. Taylor Co. v. Elliott, 108 Wis. 164, 84 N. W. 149. When, therefore, it is concluded that the circuit court should be directed to proceed with his duty as above stated, it is entirely within the power of this court to command that he remove any obstacles to such proceeding which his own improper acts have erected. The command of the alternative writ goes no further than this.

We understand respondent to concede that nothing material could be added to the petition and alternative writ by return, so that therefore the merits might be decided on the present hearing.

Let imperative writ issue.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

RICHARD STENBOM

v.

BROWN-CORLISS ENGINE COMPANY,
Resp't.

C. J. RICHARDS, Receiver, Appt.

(— Wis. —, 119 N. W. 308.)

Indemnity Insurance — satisfaction of claim — receiver's note.

1. The giving to the employee of his note by a receiver appointed in supplementary proceedings to collect a judgment against an insolvent employer for injury to his employee is not a satisfaction of the claim within the meaning of an indemnity insurance policy, that no action shall lie against the insurer unless brought by the assured himself, to reimburse him for actual loss sustained and paid by him in satisfaction of a judgment, and gives the receiver no standing to enforce the policy.

Order — setting aside — right to complain.

2. A court which has entered an ex parte order in a supplementary proceeding to enforce a judgment against an insolvent employer in favor of an injured employee, empowering the receiver appointed in such proceeding to execute his note in satisfaction of the judgment, and bring an action for reimbursement upon a policy of indemnity insurance held by the employer, which is indefensible in character, may set the order aside as soon as its attention is called thereto, although the motion is made by the judgment debtor, who had no right to complain thereof.

(January 26, 1909.)

APPEAL by the receiver of the defendant, Brown-Corliss Engine Company, from an order of the Circuit Court for Racine County vacating a former ex parte order authorizing the settlement of a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, and authorizing the receiver to commence suit upon an indemnity insurance policy which had become an asset in his hands as receiver. Affirmed.

Statement by Barnes, J.:

This action was brought to recover damages for a personal injury sustained on April 10, 1905, and on January 15, 1907, judgment was rendered in plaintiff's favor for $10,099.58. After the action was commenced, and on November 14, 1905, the defendant was adjudicated a bankrupt, and a receiver in bankruptcy was duly appointed. At the time of plaintiff's injury the defendant held a liability policy of insurance which indemnified the holder against loss by reason of injuries suffered by an employee, in a sum not exceeding $5,000 for any one accident, and provided that the company would, at its own cost and expense, assume the defense of any action brought on account of such injury. Among other things the policy provided that it indemnified the holder "against loss from common-law or statutory liability for damages on account of bodily injuries, fatal or nonfatal, accidentally suffered within the period of this policy by any employee or employees of the assured while on duty at the places and in the occupations mentioned in the schedule hereinafter given." The policy further provided: "No action shall lie against the company as respects any loss under this policy, unless it shall be brought by the assured himself, to reimburse him for loss actually sustained and paid by him in satisfaction of a judgment within sixty days from the date of such judgment, and after trial of the issue." It is conceded by the parties that the claim of the plaintiff could not be proved in the bankruptcy court before judgment thereon was obtained in the state court, and that, at the time of the rendition of the judgment, the time within which it might be filed as a claim in the bankruptcy proceedings had expired. Shortly after the rendition of the judgment in plaintiff's favor an execution was issued thereon, and was returned unsatisfied, whereupon supplementary proceedings were instituted and a receiver of said defendant, as judgment debtor, was appointed by a circuit court commissioner. On February 9, 1907, such receiver filed a petition in the bankruptcy court, praying that the trustee in bankruptcy should be ordered to assign and turn over to such receiver the aforesaid indemnity policy, which petition was granted. Thereafter demand for payment was made upon the insurer by the Note. — The question whether the giving of a note is a loss or damage within a condition of a contract of indemnity is discussed in the case note to Kennedy v. Fidelity & C. Co. 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 478. Since that decision was rendered, and in reliance upon the rule enunciated therein and in the cases cited in the note thereto, it was held in Seattle & S. F. R. & Nav. Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 50 Wash. 44, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

121, 96 Pac. 509, that the execution by an employer of his note in good faith, in satisfaction of a judgment against him, obtained by his employee, was within the meaning of an indemnity policy which provided that no action should lie against the insurer as respects any loss except to reimburse the insured for loss actually sustained and paid by him in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issue.

receiver, which demand was not complied with. On February 19th the receiver filed a petition in the circuit court, alleging, among other things, that the plaintiff was ready and willing to compromise and settle his claim for $3,000, and would accept the receiver's promissory note for such sum in settlement and satisfaction of the judgment. Upon the filing of such petition the court made an ex parte order directing the receiver to execute a demand, promissory, judgment note to the plaintiff in settlement of such judgment, and authorizing the receiver to commence suit on the policy of insurance. The note was executed and delivered to plaintiff, and he satisfied his judgment, whereupon the receiver commenced an action against the insurance company to collect the amount alleged to be due upon the policy. After such action was commenced, the Brown-Corliss Engine Company moved for an order vacating and setting aside the ex parte order authorizing the settlement, and the execution of the promissory note, and the commencement of the action against the insurance company. This motion was granted, and from the order granting the same the receiver prosecutes this appeal. The error assigned is that the court erred in making such order.

Mr. W. B. Rubin, with Messrs. Rubin & Zabel and Wallace J. Ingalls, for appellant:

The order authorizing the receiver to enforce the policy was properly issued.

Kennedy v. Fidelity & C. Co. 100 Minn. 1, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 478, 117 Am. St. Rep. 658, 110 N. W. 97, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1073; Davis v. Shearer, 90 Wis. 250, 62 N. W. 1050; Interstate Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Lewis, 31 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 83.

Mr. Robert N. McMynn with Mr. Charles A. Vilas, for respondent:

Where a policy of indemnity insurance contains a clause to the effect that no action shall be brought under the policy except by the assured himself, to reimburse him for loss actually sustained and paid by reason of a judgment, the injured employee has absolutely no interest whatever in the policy, and cannot reach the proceeds thereof, either by action at law or in equity.

Allen v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 958, 76 C. C. A. 265, 145 Fed. 881; Connolly v. Bolster, 187 Mass. 266, 72 N. E. 981; O'Connell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 187 Mass. 276, 72 N. E. 979; Carter v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 76 Kan. 275, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1155, 91 Pac. 178; Cushman v. Carbondale Fuel Co. 122 Iowa, 656, 98 N. W. 509; Beyer v. International Aluminum Co. 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

115 App. Div. 853, 101 N. Y. Supp. 83; Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. 97 Me. 241, 59 L.R.A. 444, 94 Am. St. Rep. 500, 54 Atl. 395; Allen v. Gilman, McN. & Co. 137 Fed. 136.

Barnes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The authorities seem to be quite uniform to the effect that, under a policy of indemnity insurance such as that here involved, there is no privity of contract between the insurer and the employee, and the latter cannot reach the proceeds of such policy, at least, in an action brought directly against the insurer. Allen v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 958, 76 C. C. A. 265, 145 Fed. 881; Connolly v. Bolster, 187 Mass. 266, 72 N. E. 981; O'Connell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 187 Mass. 276, 72 N. E. 979; Carter v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 76 Kan. 275, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1155, 91 Pac. 178; Cushman v. Carbondale Fuel Co. 122 Iowa, 656, 98 N. W. 509; Beyer v. International Aluminum Co. 115 App. Div. 853, 101 N. Y. Supp. 83; Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. 97 Me. 241, 59 L.R.A. 444, 94 Am. St. Rep. 500, 54 Atl. 395; Allen v. Gilman, McN. & Co. (C. C.) 137 Fed. 136.

No good reason is apparent why the payment which the contract obligates the assured to make as a condition precedent to his right to maintain action upon the policy might not be made otherwise than in money, provided such payment is made and accepted in good faith, and there is a bona fide settlement and satisfaction of the judgment secured by the injured employee. Kennedy v. Fidelity & C. Co. 100 Minn. 1, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 478, 117 Am. St. Rep. 658, 110 N. W. 97, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1. Neither do we attach any particular significance to the fact that the suit is brought by a receiver, instead of in the name of the beneficiary designated in the policy. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Moses, 63 N. J. Eq. 260, 92 Am. St. Rep. 663, 49 Atl. 720.

The receiver here was not appointed to administer the affairs of the insolvent corporation for the benefit of creditors generally, but was appointed in a proceeding supplementary to, and in aid of, an execution issued at the instance of a single creditor, and for the sole purpose of collecting the judgment in this action. With the exception of the policy referred to, apparently all of the assets of the insolvent were turned over to the trustee in bankruptcy, for the benefit of creditors having provable claims against it. The policy by its terms was of no value to the defendant herein, or to anyone else, until the judgment of the plaintiff was satisfied.

Considering the purpose for which the receiver here was appointed, if he could pay the judgment by giving his note, and such note was received in satisfaction of the judgment, and it was satisfied, it would seem that the object for which he was appointed had been accomplished, and any further proceeding on his part was unnecessary to discharge his legitimate functions. However this may be, the proceeding was certainly novel. On its face the action taken was a mere subterfuge, resorted to for the purpose of making a nominal compliance with the terms of the insurance contract. The contract was one which the parties thereto had a right to make, and it would be trifling with its terms for a court to hold that the shadowy payment here attempted to be made conformed to its requirements. There was no bona fide payment of the judgment. The fictitious payment resorted to is too thinly veiled to stand the test of judicial scrutiny.

It may well be doubted whether the defendant in this action had any right to complain of the ex parte order authorizing the giving of the note and the compromise of the judgment and the bringing of the action against the insurance company. Whether it had or not, it was clearly within the province of the court to set aside the former ex parte order as soon as attention was called to its indefensible character. It is well settled that the matter of authorizing receivers to execute notes in proper cases, and of authorizing them to commence actions, rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and that orders in reference to such matters, made by such courts, will be reversed only when there is an abuse of such discretion. Neeves v. Boos, 86 Wis. 313, 56 N. W. 909. The case might well be disposed of upon this rule of law; but, lest a decision upon this point should be construed as intimating that the ex parte order of the trial court might be sustained if the trial court had refused to set it aside, we deemed it best to consider the question on its merits rather than to simply hold that there was no abuse of discretion in making the order appealed from.

Order affirmed.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

CORONA COAL & IRON COMPANY,
Appt.,
v.
NORA WHITE.

(— Ala. —, 48 So. 362.)

Master — runaway team — liability.

1. A coal dealer whose team is under the control of his servant all the time, whether he is hauling coal or not, to feed and care for, cannot escape liability for injury caused by its running away when left unattended by the servant, because, at the time, he has gone to move a trunk which was not within the scope of his duty to do, since it was his duty to see that the team was not left unattended in the street.

Horse — runaway — negligence — liability.

2. The owner of a horse left by his servant unhitched and unattended in a public street is liable for injury done to others by its running away.

Highway — pedestrian — negligence — runaway team.

3. One walking on the sidewalks or crosswalks of a municipality is not negligent in failing to look to see whether or not a team which he hears approaching is running away, so as to preclude his holding the owner of the team liable for injuries caused by being struck by it, since he has a right to assume that the team is under control and will not be driven over him.

(November 26, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. C. Davis, S. D. Weakley, and J. B. Weakley for appellant.

Messrs. Bowman, Harsh, & Beddow, for appellee:

Ordinary care does not require a person to look backwards every time he hears a wagon rattling on the street, when he himself is in a position where the wagon has no rights, and would not ordinarily be expected to come.

1 Thomp. Neg. §§ 1327, 1328; Bowser v. Wellington, 126 Mass. 391; Wiel v. Wright, 29 N. Y. S. R. 763, 8 N. Y. Supp. 776.

It was, at least, a question for the jury as to whether or not defendant was responsible for the negligence of its driver.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 166, 167, § 5; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Brantley, Case Note. — Negligence in leaving horse unhitched in highway.

This note cites only those cases which have been reported since the preparation of the subject note upon the same question to Moulton v. Lewiston, B. & B. Street R. Co. 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 845.

In Kokoll v. Brohm & B. Lumber Co. (N. J. L.) 71 Atl. 120 and Francois v. Hanff (N. J. L.) 71 Atl. 1128, it was held that the unexplained presence on a public highway of a team of runaway horses harnessed to a wagon, unattended by the owner or other person, raised a presumption of negligence on the part of the owner.

In Stevenson v. United States Exp. Co.

107 Ala. 683, 18 So. 321; Williams v. Hendricks, 115 Ala. 277, 4 L.R.A. 650, 67 Am. St. Rep. 32, 22 So. 439; Southern R. Co. v. Wildman, 119 Ala. 565, 24 So. 764.

Simpson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee sued in this case for damages caused by being struck and knocked down by a wagon and team belonging to the defendant. It is not disputed that the wagon and team were left by the driver, while he went into the house to get a trunk belonging to the shipping clerk of defendant company to take the same to the depot, and that, while left unattended, the team ran away and came in collision with the plaintiff, who was walking on the street of Corona. The contention of the appellant is that it was entitled to the general affirmative charge, because, first, it was not within the scope of the driver's duties to carry a trunk of one of the employees to the depot; and, second, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, in not turning to look when she heard the wagon and team coming down the street.

The evidence is without conflict that this team was under the care and control of MacKimbrell, the driver, all of the time, whether he was hauling coal for the defendant or not. He fed, hitched, and unhitched the team; and, whether it was before 7 o'clock in the morning (the hour for regular work) or not, he had charge of the team as the servant and agent of the defendant, and it was his duty not only to care for it, but to see that it was not left unattended on the street, so as to incur the danger of its running away and injuring those who had a right to be on the street.

The evidence in this case is not so clear as to authorize the court to take away from the jury the right to determine whether or not the driver of the team was acting in accordance with the usual custom in the use of the team, and with the acquiescence of the master.

It is negligence for the owner to leave a team of horses unhitched and unattended on a public street, and he thereby becomes liable for any damage caused by their running away. Dolfinger v. Fishback, 12 Bush, 474, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 288; Doherty v. Sweetser, 82 Hun, 556, 31 N. Y. Supp. 649, 1 Am. Neg. Cas. 333; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 3d ed. p. 235, § 194; 26 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 1529, 1530.

A person traveling on the public streets has a right to presume that horses moving on said streets are under the control of their owners; and it is not contributory negligence to walk on the sidewalks and to cross the streets without looking up and down the street, although, of course, it would be negligence to walk right in front of a moving team. Merely hearing the team coming was not notice to the plaintiff that it was running away. The rule with regard to looking and listening, before crossing a railroad, has no application to a person crossing a street. Moebus v. Herrmann, 108 N. Y. 349, 2 Am. St. Rep. 440, 15 N. E. 415.

There was no error in the refusal of the court to give the general charge in favor of the defendant; and, this being the only point argued by counsel for appellant, the judgment of the court is affirmed.

Affirmed.

Tyson, Ch. J., and Denson and McClellan, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied February 5, 1909.

221 Pa. 59, 70 Atl. 275, the court said: "One who leaves a horse unhitched and unattended on a city street takes the risk of what the horse may do. . . . Such an act raises a presumption of negligence, and puts on the party doing it the burden of showing circumstances which justified or excused it. How strong the presumption will be must depend largely on the circumstances. If the horse is young, skittish, nervous, or unused to the sights and sounds of a city street, the presumption would be strong; while if he is old, staid, and accustomed to city life, it might be very slight. But even a staid and veteran horse may be liable to sudden fright, or, as in this case, to sudden pain, which may induce dangerous behavior. It is, therefore, a matter for the jury."

In Damonte v. Patton, 118 La. 530, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 209, 118 Am. St. Rep. 384, 43 So. 153, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 862, where it appeared that a statute provided that 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"the owner of an animal is responsible for the damage he has caused;" and that the driver of a cart left the horse unhitched and unattended to go back for his hat, blown off into the street, and that the horse ran away injuring a third person on the highway, it was held that the burden was on the owner of the horse to prove that he was without the slightest fault and did all that was possible to prevent the injury.

In Swift & Co. v. Murphy, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 497, 100 S. W. 997, it was held that where defendant claimed that its runaway horse had been properly hitched to a strap and buggy weight, but made no claim that the strap had broken, and two witnesses testified that, as they saw the horse running, there was no strap to him, it was proper for the trial court to instruct the jury that, if the driver left the horse unattended on the street without being hitched, he was guilty of negligence.

In Denver v. Utzler, 38 Colo. 300, 8 L.R.A.

(N.S.) 77, 120 Am. St. Rep. 108, 88 Pac. 143, it was held that one who left a horse attached to a wagon unhitched in a public highway, and without having the lines within reach, was guilty of negligence, and could not recover for a personal injury caused by the horse running away and coming in contact with an obstruction in the highway.

In Damonte v. Patton, supra, it was held negligence for the driver of a horse and cart to abandon the same in the street and go back for his hat, blown off by the wind, without fastening or otherwise securing the animal; and where the horse, thus left standing, ran away, the owner was held responsible for injury inflicted by the runaway's collision with a third person not guilty of contributory negligence.

In Trenchard v. New Orleans R. & Light Co. (La.) 48 So. 575, it was held that where a horse attached to a wagon was left standing unhitched in a public street, and ran away and collided with a street car, whereby plaintiff was injured, the owner of the horse was not entirely blameless, no matter how much the animal may have been accustomed theretofore to stand when left in that way.

In Karstendiek v. Jackson Brewing Co. (La.) 48 So. 958, it was held to be negligence for a driver to leave a pair of mules harnessed to a beer wagon, and not hitched, on one of the public streets in a populous part of a city, while he was in a restaurant nearby at lunch on a day of general rejoicing.

In Hayes v. Wilkins, 194 Mass. 223, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1033, 120 Am. St. Rep. 549, 80 N. E. 449, it appeared that a horse, attached to a wagon, while left unhitched and unattended on a street by defendant's driver, ran away and injured plaintiff. "The court said: 'While he had the horse in custody for his master and was charged with the duty of continuing this custody as a servant, he negligently omitted to continue it, and as a consequence the horse ran away. . . . His negligence occurred while he was directly engaged in his master's business, by the mere omission of that which he should have done in the business.'"

In Riordan v. Gas Consumers' Asso. 4 Cal. App. 639, 88 Pac. 809, it was conceded that the driver was guilty of negligence where it appeared that he took the bridle off the horse's head before he had tied him, and while getting the feed bag, or while about to adjust the feed bag, the horse, finding himself free, ran away and collided with another buggy.

In Hull v. Thomson Transfer Co. (Mo. App.) 115 S. W. 1054, where the driver removed the bits from the horses' mouths in a public street to allow the team to eat, and, while the team was unsecured, a drum on the wagon filled with liquid carbonic acid exploded and caused them to run away and injure the plaintiff, it was held that the driver's negligence in leaving the team unsecured, and not the explosion, was the proximate cause of the injury.

In Corcoran v. Kelly, 61 Misc. 323, 113 N. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Y. Supp. 686, it was held that negligence could not be predicated of the mere leaving of a wagon and team of horses unhitched and unattended in the street while they partook of their midday meal; and that where, while so unattended, one of the horses bit a passing child, the vicious propensity of the horse, and not the leaving of it unhitched and unattended, was the proximate cause of the injury.

In Putermann v. Simon, 127 Mo. App. 511, 105 S. W. 1098, it was held that a petition which alleged that, while plaintiff was lawfully walking along a sidewalk in a city, defendant's horse was carelessly and negligently allowed to pass on said sidewalk unhitched and unguarded, contrary to a city ordinance, and the said horse viciously sprang at plaintiff, biting him in a severe manner in the cheek, etc., stated no cause of action, since plaintiff sued for a tort which could not grow out of a violation of the ordinance, inasmuch as the ordinance was clearly enacted to prevent injury and damage from being done by the running away of unhitched and unguarded horses, and not to prevent them from biting people.

In Southern Hardware & Supply Co. v. Standard Equipment Co. (Ala.) 48 So. 357, it was held that the driver was not guilty of negligence per se regardless of an ordinance which forbade the leaving of a horse unattended in the street, simply because he was not holding the bridle or lines at the time the team started to run away, where he was loading the wagon, and grabbed the bridle before they had gone 10 feet.

In Caughlin v. Campbell-Sell Baking Co. 39 Colo. 148, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1001, 121 Am. St. Rep. 158, 89 Pac. 53, it was held that a municipal ordinance which imposed a penalty for leaving a horse attached to a wagon in the street without fastening the horse to a stationary object, or to a ground weight weighing not less than 15 pounds, was admissible in behalf of the owner of a team as bearing upon the question of negligence in leaving the team in the street unattended, but hitched to a ground weight weighing 56 pounds.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

LUCIEN D. WINSTON, Appt.,
v.

ARLINGTON FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(32 App. D. C. 61.)

Insurance — Limitation — inefficient repairs.

A stipulation in an insurance policy that no suit shall be brought on a contract unless Case Note. — Effect of insurer's election to rebuild, repair, or replace the insured property after a loss.

It is an undoubted proposition of law that, when the insurer elects to repair, re-within twelve months next after the damage occurs does not apply to a suit for damages because of the defective character of repairs which the insurer elects to make after the loss in accordance with its rights under the contract.

(November 4, 1908.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for breach by defendant of its contract to repair a building injured by fire. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. D. S. Mackall, for appellant:

After an insurance company has elected to repair the insured property, its liability is for breach of the obligation to repair, and not under the obligation to pay the insurance, and the rights and remedies of the insured are governed accordingly.

19 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 890; Wynkoop v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 478, 43 Am. Rep. 686; 2 May, Ins. 4th ed. §§ 433, 433a; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Peebles' Hotel Co. 27 C. C. A. 223, 54 U. S. App. 215, 82 Fed. 546; Beals v. Home Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 522; Heilmann v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 75 N. Y. 7; Good v. Buckeye Mut. F. Ins. Co. 43 Ohio St. 394, 2 N. E. 420; Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Barnard, 49 C. C. A. 559, 111 Fed. 702; Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. Rosenthal, 108 Pa. 474, 1 Atl. 303; 1 Clement, Fire Ins. p. 292; Smith v. Glen's Falls Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 85.

Mr. William G. Johnson for appellee.

build, or replace the insured property, under a clause in the policy giving it that option, the contract of insurance is converted into a contract of repairing or rebuilding or replacing, and the rights of the parties are to be determined by the rules of law governing such contracts. It follows, therefore, that if the insured property is defectively or incompletely rebuilt, repaired, or replaced, the remedy will be upon the new contract, and not upon the policy of insurance.

Thus, in Henderson v. Crescent Ins. Co. 48 La. Ann. 1176, 35 L.R.A. 385, 20 So. 658, in which this rule was adhered to, it was held that when the insurers elected to repair they were in the same position as contractors who had examined the building and made an estimate of the expense. The court said: "No original defects in the building could possibly excuse them from doing just what they had agreed to do. It was to repair the building as it originally stood, and if there were defects in the timber, weak walls, etc., it was their duty to have considered these matters before making the election. They cannot be urged as defenses for nonexecution of the contract. If the obligations of defendants thus arise from an ordinary contract to build or repair, it would seem that it is even the more imperative when the contract has been substituted for the contract to indemnify the loss in money, as the contract of insurance is to fully indemnify the insured, and to place him in as favorable a position as he was before the loss."

And in Morrell v. Irving F. Ins. Co. 33 N. Y. 429, 88 Am. Dec. 396, Chief Justice Denio said (p. 455) that when the insurers had elected to provide the stipulated indemnity by way of rebuilding instead of the payment of money, and had entered upon the premises of the assured party and had commenced the erection of a new building upon the site of the former one, the contract then became one for rebuilding, and the alternative which looked to the payment of money became obsolete and impracticable, and the action was then the same as it would have been if the contract had obliged the defendant simply to rebuild in case of a loss.

Such was the conclusion reached also in the following cases: Collins v. Etna Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 3,009; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Peebles' Hotel Co. 27 C. C. A. 223, 54 U. S. App. 215, 82 Fed. 546; Zalesky v. Iowa State Ins. Co. 102 Iowa, 512, 70 N. W. 187, 71 N. W. 433; Beals v. Home Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 522, affirming 36 Barb. 614; Heilmann v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 75 N. Y. 7; Wynkoop v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 478, 43 Am. Rep. 686; Munk v. Maryland Casualty Co. 116 App. Div. 756, 102 N. Y. Supp. 164; Good v. Buckeye Mut. F. Ins. Co. 43 Ohio St. 394, 2 N. E. 420; Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. Rosenthal, 108 Pa. 474, 1 Atl. 303.

But in Haskins v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. 5 Gray, 432, a provision in the contract of insurance that the insurer might within a reasonable time rebuild, repair, or replace the property lost or damaged, but that the insurer should not be liable for any action for the loss, unless the company should neglect for a certain period to proceed to rebuild, repair, or replace, was held not to prevent the assured, upon the failure of the insurer to complete the repairs within a reasonable time, from maintaining an action on the policy, since the contract of insurance merely suspended the right of action upon the policy during the time within which the insurer had a right to rebuild, repair, or replace the property, instead of paying the loss in money.

Where there has been a total failure by the insurer to exercise the option to repair or rebuild after having elected so to do, the authorities differ as to whether this will of itself preclude a recovery upon the policy. Thus, in Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Peebles' Hotel Co. supra, it was held that after such an election no action would lie to recover the money indemnity stipulated for in the policy, and that for a total failure to repair or rebuild, as well as where the repairing or rebuilding did not result in the restoration of the building to a condition substantially like that existing before the fire, the action would be for a breach of the con-

Shepard, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was begun by Lucien D. Winston against the Arlington Fire Insurance Company of the District of Columbia, on December 12, 1907. The declaration alleged that on and before June 8, 1901, plaintiff was the owner of a certain house in the city of Washington, that was then damaged by fire. That said house was then under insurance by the defendant against loss by fire. That by the terms of said contract of insurance, the defendant had the right to pay the amount of the ascertained loss, or at its option to repair, rebuild, or replace the said house within a reasonable time tract to repair or rebuild, and not upon the policy.

On the other hand, in Langan v. Aetna Ins. Co. 48 C. C. A. 174, 108 Fed. 985, affirming 99 Fed. 374, it was held that if the company, after having elected to rebuild or repair, did not in fact repair or rebuild, for any reason or for no reason, then the contract would remain unchanged, and the insured be entitled to recover the sum due under the policy.

So, in Home Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Garfield, 60 Ill. 124, 14 Am. Rep. 27, it was held that the mere giving of notice by the insurer that it intended to rebuild the insured building would not change the contract of insurance into a contract to rebuild, and that the insurer, upon failing to rebuild within a reasonable time, would become liable to pay the amount of the insurance stipulated in the policy, with interest, and a fair rental value of the premises while the owner was thus deprived of their use.

So, in Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. v. Woodward, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 496, 45 S. W. 185, it was held that if the damaged or destroyed building could not, by the repairs proposed or offered to be made by the insurer, be restored to a condition practically as good as it was before the disaster, and the assured refused, for that reason to permit any repairs, such offer to repair would not relieve the insurer from liability upon the policy.

And the election to repair will, under certain circumstances, be a waiver by the insurer of defenses based upon the policy. Thus, in American Cent. Ins. Co. v. McLanathan, 11 Kan. 533, it was held that, where the insurer, after the loss and with full knowledge of the facts, elected to repair, such election would be a waiver of the assured's omission to state in the policy the exact state of his title and interest in the insured property.

And in Bersche v. Globe Mut. Ins. Co. 31 Mo. 546, it was held that the election to repair or to rebuild was a waiver by the insurer of any misrepresentation on the part of the assured, where the insurer had knowledge of the facts, and no fraud or mistake was shown.

Upon the same principle, it was held in Wynkoop v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. supra, that an election to repair rendered inoperative the provision in the policy as to arbitration.

So, in Collins v. Aetna Ins. Co. supra, it was held that the election to restore and repair the burned building was a waiver of the notice of the fire, and of the extent of the injury, as required by the policy.

Of course, if the insurer properly rebuilds an insured building or completely replaces the insured property, there can be no action upon the contract of insurance. Tolman v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 1 Cush. 73; Munk v. Maryland Casualty Co. supra.

This is also true if the assured does not permit the insurer to repair or rebuild or replace, after the latter has signified its intention so to do. Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Hamill, 5 Md. 170; Beals v. Home Ins. Co. supra.

In St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 77 Ill. 598, and in Baroness of Pontalba v. Phoenix Assur. Co. 2 Rob. (La.) 131, 38 Am. Dec. 205, it was held that there could be no claim for rent for the time during which the insurer was engaged in repairing, in the absence of any stipulation to that effect in the contract of insurance, if the repairs were completed within a reasonable time.

It follows, therefore, from the rule here under discussion, that, as to the question of damages for defective rebuilding or repairing, the policy of insurance is no longer to be considered; and that neither the amount of the insurance therein stipulated for nor the amount of the loss is controlling upon the amount to be recovered. Henderson v. Crescent Ins. Co.; Beals v. Home Ins. Co.; Wynkoop v. Niagara F. Ins. Co.; Heilmann v. Westchester F. Ins. Co.; and Munk v. Maryland Casualty Co.—supra.

Such, too, was the rule as to damages laid down in the following cases, in which it was also held that the measure of damages, where the repairing or rebuilding did not result in the restoration of the insured building to a condition substantially like that before the fire, would be the difference between the work as done and its value if it had been fully repaired: Collins v. Aetna Ins. Co. and Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Peebles' Hotel Co. supra; Parker v. Eagle F. Ins. Co. 9 Gray, 152; Morrell v. Irving F. Ins. Co.; Beals v. Home Ins. Co.; Good v. Buckeye Mut. F. Ins. Co.; and Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. Rosenthal—supra.

Where the insurer is liable for successive losses to the property insured during the life of the policy, and the property being destroyed, the insurer, under the option to repair, repairs the building at a cost less than the total amount of insurance, this will not discharge the insurer altogether from liability upon the policy; but, if the property as repaired or rebuilt is again destroyed, the insurer will be liable for the difference between the amount stipulated in the policy and its expense in replacing the property when first destroyed. Trull v. Roxbury Mut. F. Ins. Co. 3 Cush. 263.

after said fire. That in pursuance of said contract, and in consideration thereof, the defendant elected, and undertook to repair and reconstruct said house, including the replacing of a metal roof thereon, which had been damaged by fire, with one of like kind and quality. That disregarding its obligation, undertaking, and duty, it failed to repair and replace said roof with another of like quality, but replaced and reconstructed the same with material of an unlike, insufficient, and inferior quality. That by reason thereof the said roof became more and more defective and insufficient until, to wit, April 1, 1907, when it became necessary, to render said building inhabitable, to put an entirely new roof thereon. That defendant, though requested so to do, failed and refused, and plaintiff was compelled to put on the new roof at a cost of $382.50, wherefore he has sustained damages to the amount of $500.

The defendant entered three pleas to the declaration: (1) That the defendant never undertook and promised as alleged; (2) that the cause of action did not accrue within three years next before bringing suit; (3) that in the said contract of insurance it was stipulated that no suit or action on said contract shall be sustainable in any court of law or equity, unless commenced within twelve months next after the fire doing damage to the property insured; and that the plaintiff did not bring his action within twelve months next after said fire, wherefore he is barred and forever estopped from bringing this action.

Plaintiff demurred to the third plea. The demurrer was overruled; and plaintiff electing to stand upon his demurrer, judgment was rendered for the defendant. This appeal is prosecuted therefrom.

The single question for determination is whether this is an action on the contract of insurance so as to bring it within the operation of the limitation clause set out in the plea. The contract of insurance bound the defendant to pay the loss or damage occasioned by fire, not to exceed the stipulated amount. But it reserved an option to the defendant to repair and replace the building. By the exercise of this option, and election, in which the plaintiff was bound to acquiesce, the original contract of the parties was converted into a new one on the part of the defendant to repair the building and restore it to its former condition. The contract to pay the loss was thus superseded by the contract to repair. Plaintiff no longer had a right of action upon the former; his sole remedy was upon the new contract. Wynkoop v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 478, 482, 43 Am. Rep. 686; Heilmann v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 75 N. Y. 7, 9; Morrell v. Irving F. Ins. Co. 33 N. Y. 429, 437, 88 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Am. Dec. 396; Beals v. Home Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 522, 526; Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. Rosenthal, 108 Pa. 474, 478, 1 Atl. 303; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Peebles' Hotel Co. 27 C. C. A. 223, 54 U. S. App. 215, 82 Fed. 546, 548. Plaintiff's declaration set out the contract for insurance with the stipulation therein for the option to contract to repair, and alleged the election so to do; but this was by way of inducement to the statement of the cause of action, which is the failure to perform the new undertaking created by that election. As the action, then, is not upon the contract of insurance, we think that the limitation clause of that contract cannot be made to apply to the action upon the undertaking to repair by which it was superseded.

There is no difference in principle between an action of this kind and one to recover the amount of the adjusted loss or damage under an insurance contract, to which, it has been held, the limitation clause of the policy does not apply. Smith v. Glen's Falls Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 85, 86; Illinois Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Archdeacon, 82 Ill. 236, 239, 25 Am. Rep. 313.

We are of the opinion that it was error to overrule the plaintiff's demurrer to the plea. The judgment will therefore be reversed with costs, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

Reversed.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

I. J. STERRETT, Appt.,

v.

S. B. SWEENEY, Resp't.

(15 Idaho, 416, 98 Pac. 418.)

Limitation of actions — promissory note — part payment.

1. Under the provision of § 4817, Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes (Wash.)

Headnotes by STEWART, J.

Note. — The general subject of the law governing the limitation of actions on contracts is treated in a case note to Thomas v. Clarkson, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 658, in which are cited two cases (Obear v. First Nat. Bank, 97 Ga. 587, 33 L.R.A. 384, 25 S. E. 335, and Tilliard v. Hall, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 381, 32 S. W. 863) upon the specific question whether the foreign law or the law of the forum governs as to the effect of a partial payment or acknowledgment. Other cases will be found in that note, disclosing the extent to which the law of the forum has been applied to the determination of incidental questions affecting the ultimate question of limitation.

(Pierce's Code, § 301), a partial payment made upon a promissory note, after due, and before the statute of limitations has run, fixes the date of such payment as the time from which the statute begins to run.

Same — nature of statute.

2. The statute of limitations does not mean that the debt has been paid. It is a personal privilege which the law gives to the debtor whereby he may say that the debt is stale, and for that reason should not be enforced.

Same — promissory note — part payment — effect.

3. This statute of Washington, however, says to the debtor that, if he acknowledge the indebtedness by making a payment thereon, it becomes an acknowledgment that the debt has not been discharged, and recognizes the debt as in existence, and fixes the date of payment as a new date from which the statute begins to run.

Same — waiver.

4. This statute in effect declares that the making of a partial payment by a debtor, after the maturity of the debt, and before the statute of limitations has run, is a waiver of the debtor's privilege to claim the maturity of the debt as the date from which the statute begins to run.

Same — what law governs.

5. Where a resident of this state goes into the state of Washington and makes a partial payment upon a Washington contract after its maturity, and before such contract is barred by the statute of limitations of that state, upon his return to this state, the contract follows him as made, and is enforceable under the laws of this state, and the statute of limitations of this state begins to run upon his re-entry into this state after such payment.

Same — comity between states.

6. In order to determine the application of the statute of limitations of this state to a contract entered into in the state of Washington, it is necessary to examine said contract and the laws of the state of Washington for the purpose of determining the date from which the statute runs.

Trial — findings — sufficiency.

7. A general finding that all the material allegations of the answer are supported by the evidence, and true, and that all the material allegations of the complaint in conflict with the foregoing findings are unsupported by the evidence, and untrue, is insufficient to support a judgment.

Limitation of actions — residence.

8. Whether residence within this state for the statutory period will prevail as a plea in bar upon a written contract depends upon the nature of the contract, its maturity, and the date from which the statute begins to run.

(November 21, 1908.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Nez Percé County, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ty denying a motion for new trial after verdict for defendant in an action brought to recover upon certain promissory notes. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. I. N. Smith for appellant.

Mr. George W. Tannahill, for respondent:

Limitation is governed by the law of the forum in which the suit is brought.

Adams Exp. Co. v. Walker, 119 Ky. 121, 67 L.R.A. 415, 83 S. W. 106; Arrington v. Arrington, 127 N. C. 190, 52 L.R.A. 204, 80 Am. St. Rep. 791, 37 S. E. 212; M'Elmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. ed. 177; Drake v. Bigelow, 93 Minn. 112, 100 N. W. 664; Montague v. Cummings, 119 Ga. 139, 45 S. E. 979; Krogg v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. 77 Ga. 202, 4 Am. St. Rep. 79; O'Shields v. Georgia P. R. Co. 83 Ga. 621, 6 L.R.A. 152, 10 S. E. 268; Medbury v. Hopkins, 3 Conn. 472; Blackburn v. Morton, 18 Ark. 384; Thompson v. Tioga R. Co. 36 Barb. 79; Worth v. Wilson, Wright (Ohio) 162; Pulsifer v. Greene, 96 Me. 438, 52 Atl. 921; Lamberton v. Grant, 94 Me. 508, 80 Am. St. Rep. 415, 48 Atl. 127; Wright v. Moradant, 77 Miss. 537, 78 Am. St. Rep. 536, 27 So. 640.

The acknowledgment, to revive a debt, must be unqualified and the promise definite.

Braithwaite v. Harvey, 14 Mont. 208, 21 L.R.A. 101, 43 Am. St. Rep. 625, 36 Pac. 38; Biddel v. Brizzolara, 56 Cal. 382; Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 362, 7 L. ed. 179; McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 185, 95 Am. Dec. 170.

Stewart, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was commenced May 3, 1905. The complaint contains three causes of action. The first is founded upon a promissory note executed by defendant to plaintiff for the sum of $700, dated July, 1890, and payable on or before October 1, 1890. The place of payment is not stated in the note. The note, however, is dated at Walla Walla, Washington. It is alleged that payments were made upon said note as follows: December 10, 1890, $70; December 10, 1901, $125. That latter payment was indorsed upon said note by the defendant himself at the time the payment was made. Then follow allegations as to non-payment and amount alleged to be due. The statutes of the state of Washington are set forth as a part of said cause of action, as follows: Section 4816, Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes (Pierce's Code, § 300): "No acknowledgment or promise shall be sufficient evidence of a new continuing contract whereby to take the case out of the operation of this chapter, unless the same is contained in some writing signed by the party to be charged thereby; but this section shall not alter the effect of any payment of principal or interest." Section 4817, Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes (Pierce's Code, § 301): "When any payment of principal or interest has been or shall be made upon any existing contract, whether it be a bill of exchange, promissory note, bond, or other evidence of indebtedness, if such payment be made after the same shall have become due, the limitation shall commence from the time the last payment was made." Section 4798, Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes (Pierce's Code, § 281): "Within six years: (1) An action upon a judgment. . . . (2) An action upon a contract in writing, or liability, express or implied, arising out of a written agreement. (3) An action for the rents and profits . . . " the said statute being the statute of limitations relative to contracts in writing.

The second cause of action is founded upon a promissory note alleged to have been executed by defendant to plaintiff at Walla Walla, Washington, June 8, 1893, for the sum of $2,000, payable four months after date, at the Baker-Boyer National Bank of Walla Walla, Washington. It is also alleged that payments were made upon said note as follows: November 20, 1893, $20; November 13, 1901, $500; that the last payment was indorsed on said note by defendant himself at the time the said payment was made. Then follow allegations of non-payment, the amount due, and the reasonableness of the attorneys' fees claimed and provided for in said note, and also the same allegations as to the statutes of Washington as set forth in the first cause of action.

The third cause of action is founded upon a promissory note alleged to have been executed by defendant to plaintiff at Walla Walla, Washington, on October 5, 1893, for the sum of $1,700, payable sixty days after date, at the First National Bank of Walla Walla, Washington. It is also alleged that payments were made upon said note as follows: January 27, 1898, $50; November 14, 1901, $500; that the last payment was indorsed on said note by the defendant himself at the time said payment was made. Then follow allegations of non-payment, the amount still due, the reasonableness of the attorneys' fees claimed, as provided for in said note, and also the same allegations as to the statutes of Washington as set forth in the first cause of action.

Thereafter an amendment was filed to the complaint, in which the plaintiff alleged 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that, within a period of five years last past prior to the commencement of this action, said defendant acknowledged the existence of the said indebtedness in an instrument in writing, signed by himself, and that the said defendant is the person to be charged with such acknowledgment and with such indebtedness. By such acknowledgment said defendant promised and agreed to pay the said indebtedness set out in the first cause of action. Then follow the same allegations as to the second and third causes of action. The defendant, in his answer, admits the execution of the several notes set forth in the complaint, but denies that said notes were executed or delivered in the state of Washington, and denies that they are Washington contracts; denies that there is anything due upon said notes, and denies that the payments alleged to have been indorsed upon said notes by the defendant were so indorsed by the defendant; denies that defendant acknowledged the existence of said indebtedness in writing; alleges that defendant has no knowledge or information as to whether or not the payments shown to have been made upon said notes were, in fact, made, and on that ground denies the same; alleges want of knowledge or belief as to the Washington statutes as pleaded, and upon that ground the defendant denies the existence of same. As a part of said answer and as a fourth defense, the defendant alleges that each of said causes of action, as set forth in the complaint, was barred by the provisions of § 4051, Idaho Rev. Stat. 1887, and § 4798, Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes (Wash.). During the trial it was admitted by counsel that the statutes of the state of Washington existed and were in force as alleged in the complaint. Trial was had by the court, and the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law. It found the making and delivery of each of the notes set forth in the complaint, the making of the payments indorsed, that said notes were governed by the laws of the state of Idaho, and were barred by the provisions of § 4051, Rev. Stat. 1887; that the letter introduced in evidence and relied upon by the plaintiff for the purpose of renewing and reviving the notes was insufficient to revive said notes or extend the statutes or remove the bar of the statutes; that all of the material allegations of the defendant's answer are supported by the evidence and true; and that all of the material allegations of plaintiff's complaint in conflict with the foregoing findings are not supported by the evidence, and untrue. There was no finding as to whether said notes were Washington contracts, or whether said notes were barred by the provisions of § 4798, Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes (Wash.). As conclusions of law the court found that said notes set forth in the complaint were barred by the provisions of § 4051 of the Revised Statutes of Idaho; that the defendant is entitled to have the action dismissed and recover his costs. Judgment was rendered accordingly. Motion for a new trial was made and denied. This appeal is from the order overruling the motion for a new trial and from the judgment.

Before entering into a discussion of the merits of this case, it is proper to refer to what seems to have been a clerical error running throughout the case. It is alleged in the complaint, and the court finds, that § 4051 of the Revised Statutes is the section applicable to the contract alleged in the complaint. This evidently is a clerical error, and the reference no doubt was intended to be to § 4052. While counsel for appellant takes advantage in his argument of this clerical error, we are not inclined to permit what plainly appears to be a clerical error to affect the substantial rights of the parties in this case. The appellant assigns as error the holding and deciding by the court that the said notes and each of them were and are barred by the statute of limitations, and the rendering of a decision for the defendant. These two assignments of error in our opinion are both well taken. Under the provisions of § 4817, of Ballinger's Annotated Codes & Statutes of Washington, supra, when any payment of principal or interest has been or shall be made upon any existing contract, whether it be by bill of exchange, promissory note, bond, or other evidence of indebtedness, if such payment be after the same shall have become due, the limitation shall commence from the time the last payment was made. The first note was dated July, 1890, and was due on October 1, 1890. The statute of limitations, therefore, would begin to run on October 1, 1890, unless a new date was fixed according to the statutes of Washington by a payment on the principal or interest after said note became due. The second note was dated June 8, 1893, and became due October 8, 1893, and the statute of limitations would begin to run October 8, 1893, unless a new date was fixed according to the statutes of Washington by a payment on the principal or interest after the note became due. The third note was dated October 5, 1893, and was due on December 5, 1893, and the statute of limitations would begin to run December 5, 1893, unless a new date was fixed as above stated. This statute evidently has reference to payments made on contracts before the statute has run against them. Creighton v. Vincent, 10 Or. 56. If, however, the statute is complete before payment is made, and the debt becomes dead, then to revive or continue the contract the acknowledgment should be in writing, as provided in § 4816, Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes (Wash.). If this rule be correct, then it is apparent that the plaintiff cannot recover in this case upon the first cause of action, as it appears that the statute was complete at the time the second payment was made. In other words, more than six years had expired between the date of the first payment, December 10, 1890, and the second payment, December 10, 1901. In order, therefore, to revive or continue this contract under the statute of Washington, it was necessary that the defendant sign some writing whereby he acknowledge or promise to pay said debt; otherwise the statute of limitations would apply to said indebtedness. This, however, is not true as to the second and third causes of action, as it will be observed that the statute was not complete between the maturity of either of said notes and the first payment thereon, or the first payment and the second payment, or after the last payment and the commencement of this action. Under the statutes of Washington, therefore, neither the second nor the third cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations of the state of Washington.

If the notes sued upon were Washington contracts, then the laws of the state of Washington became a part of said contracts, and the effect upon such contracts of the payments made after the notes were due, and before the statute of limitations had matured, was to fix a new date from which the statute would begin to run. The statute of limitations does not mean that the debt has been paid. It is a personal privilege which the law gives to the debtor, whereby he may say to the creditor: "You have waited so long before action has been instituted to collect the claim that it has become stale, and for that reason you should not be permitted to maintain an action thereon." This Washington statute, however, comes to the relief of the creditor, and says to the debtor: "If you acknowledge an indebtedness by making a payment thereon, it becomes an acknowledgment upon your part that the debt has not been discharged; and, by reason of your recognizing the existence of the indebtedness, the law fixes such recognition as a new date from which the staleness of the claim may be determined, and from which the right to maintain an action thereon may be reckoned." The statute in effect says that, by making such payment, the debtor waives the privilege of having the time prior to such payment reckoned as a part of the time to be computed under the statute of limitations, and denies to the debtor the right to plead the statute as a bar until the required time shall have run after such payment. Stubblefield v. McAuliff, 20 Wash. 442, 55 Pac. 637; Ah How v. Furth, 13 Wash. 550, 43 Pac. 639. This is also true in the absence of a statute. Hopkins v. Stout, 6 Bush, 375; English v. Wathen, 9 Bush, 387; Littlefield v. Littlefield, 91 N. Y. 203, 43 Am. Rep. 663. If, then, the payments made were a recognition by the defendant of the existence of said contract and his liability thereon, and fixed the date of payment as the time from which the statute of limitations should begin to run, then the defendant could not plead the statute of limitations of the state of Washington as a bar to an action upon said notes until the expiration of six years from the date of the last payment thereon. The trial court seems to have concluded that the payments made upon the notes sued upon did not keep said notes alive in the state of Idaho, or prevent the statute of limitations of this state from running against the same, and that the defendant's residence within this state for the period of five years was sufficient to sustain the plea of the statute, and bar the plaintiff's right to recover upon said notes.

This position is untenable in the light of the law of the state of Washington and the effect the law of that state gave to the act of payment. When the defendant entered the state of Washington and made partial payments upon the notes sued upon, and thereafter returned to this state, he returned with his liability fixed, and a new date was established for the beginning of the statute. The statute of limitations of that state would not become complete until the expiration of six years from the date of the last payment made upon said notes, and the statute of this state would not become complete until five years from the date of such last payment, or 1906. By making such payment, the defendant recognized said notes as live contracts, and such live contracts followed him into this state, and the statute would begin to run in this state upon his re-entry into the state after such payment. The mere fact that the defendant had resided within this state for a period of more than five years prior to the commencement of this action would not be sufficient to avail him of the plea of the bar of the statute. Such plea must be determined in the light of the contracts and the statutes of the state of Washington, where the contracts were made, as the statute of that state entered into and became a part of said contracts. 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 582; McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 608, 11 L. ed. 397; United States ex rel. Gaines v. New Orleans (C. C.) 17 Fed. 483; Parsel v. Barnes, 25 Ark. 261; Collins v. Collins, 79 Ky. 88; Fowler v. Smith, 2 Cal. 568. We think, in order to determine the questions involved in this case, as to whether or not the contracts sued upon were barred by the statute of limitations of this state, it was necessary to examine and determine the question as to whether or not said contracts were Washington contracts, and alive and binding upon the defendant at the time that he returned into this state, after making such partial payments. If said contracts were Washington contracts, and it was necessary to determine this question before the court could conclude whether the action was barred by the statute of limitations of this state, then it was necessary for the court to make a finding whether the notes sued upon were Washington contracts, and whether or not the defendant acknowledged the existence of said contracts in the state of Washington by making payments thereon, and thereby fixed the time of such payment as the date from which the statute would begin to run. Upon this question the court made no finding whatever. The court, however, did find generally that all the material allegations of the answer were supported by the evidence and true, and that all the material allegations of the plaintiff's complaint, in conflict with the foregoing findings, were unsupported by the evidence, and untrue. This finding is not sufficient. Wood v. Broderson, 12 Idaho, 190, 85 Pac. 490; Olympia Min. Co. v. Kerns, 13 Idaho, 514, 91 Pac. 92; Brown v. Macey, 13 Idaho, 451, 90 Pac. 339.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It follows from this discussion that the trial court failed to find upon all the material issues in the case. The judgment will be reversed and a new trial ordered. Costs awarded to appellant.

Allshie, Ch. J., and Sullivan, J., concur.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

FENNER B. CROSSETT, Appt.,

v.

J. W. CAMPBELL et al.

(122 La. 659, 48 So. 141.)

False Imprisonment—ejection from ball grounds.

Plaintiff entered upon grounds which were lawfully in possession of schoolboys, who were giving a free picnic and who had given notice, in advance, that later in the day a game of baseball would be played, to which a trifling admission fee would be charged. When the game was about to begin he refused, though repeatedly requested so to do, to pay the fee or go out, and he was thereupon taken by the arm by a citizen—one of the assembled guests or patrons—acting in behalf of the boys, though without special authority, and led in the direction of the gate, always with the privilege of paying and staying, and the alternative of not paying and going. Before reaching the gate, he paid the fee, and thereafter stayed and witnessed the game.

Headnote by MONROE, J.

Held, that the restraint imposed was not total, and did not render it impossible for plaintiff to stay where he was, or otherwise control his movements; that, being at all times able to release himself on payment of the fee, for which, if he stayed, he was morally and legally bound, the restraint imposed on him, merely as a means of his ejection, until he elected to pay, was the result of his voluntary persistence in an unlawful act, did not deprive him of "free egress," and affords no ground for an action in damages for false imprisonment.

(December 14, 1908.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Judicial District Court for the Parish of Winn in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged false imprisonment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John H. Mathews, for appellant:

False imprisonment is any unlawful detention of the person,—an unlawful restraint upon a man's freedom of locomotion.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 196; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 733; 19 Cyc. Law & Proc.

Case Note.—May false imprisonment be predicated of a partial or conditional restraint.

To constitute a false imprisonment two elements must concur: (1) There must be a restraint; (2) such restraint must be unlawful. A certain inconsistency discernible in the case reported, in that, while the decision is ostensibly upon the ground that the restraint, being partial and conditional, did not amount to an imprisonment, the court seems to have been influenced by its view that the restraint was properly imposed, becomes apparent upon its comparison with other decisions involving the question whether a partial restraint, or a restraint which may be voluntarily determined by the person restrained, amounts to a false imprisonment.

While some cases appear to lend countenance to the view that a partial interference with one's liberty, such as an obstruction of passage, does not amount to false imprisonment, the conclusion arrived at would seem to be based more properly upon the ground that such interference does not amount to a restraint in the sense of an imprisonment. The true test seems to be, not the extent of the restraint (where the interference amounts to a restraint), but the lawfulness thereof.

Partial restraint.

The case usually cited as authority for the view that a restraint, to amount to a false imprisonment, must be total, is Bird v. Jones, 7 Q. B. 742, the facts in which were as follows: A part of a public highway was inclosed and appropriated for spectators of a boat race, paying a price for their seats. The plaintiff was desirous of entering this part, and was opposed by the defendant; but, after a struggle, during which no momentary detention of his person took place, he succeeded in climbing over the inclosure. Two policemen were then stationed by the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

defendant to prevent, and they did prevent, him from passing onwards in the direction in which he declared his wish to go; but he was allowed to remain unmolested where he was, and was at liberty to go, and was told that he was so, in the only other direction by which he could pass. This he refused for some time, and, during that time, remained where he had thus placed himself." It was said by Coleridge, J.: "I lay out of consideration the question of right or wrong between these parties. The acts will amount to imprisonment, neither more or less, from their being wrongful or capable of justification. And I am of opinion that there was no imprisonment. To call it so appears to me to confound partial obstruction and disturbance with total obstruction and detention. A prison may have its boundary large or narrow, visible and tangible, or, though real, still in the conception only; it may itself be movable or fixed; but a boundary it must have; and that boundary the party imprisoned must be prevented from passing; he must be prevented from leaving that place within the ambit of which the party imprisoning would confine him, except by prison-breach. Some confusion seems to me to arise from confounding imprisonment of the body with mere loss of freedom. It is one part of the definition of freedom to be able to go whithersoever one pleases; but imprisonment is something more than the mere loss of this power; it includes the notion of restraint within some limits defined by a will or power exterior to our own." The notion that a restraint must be total seems to be derived from the statement made by Patteson, J., in his concurring opinion, that imprisonment is a total restraint of the liberty of the person, for however short a time, and not a partial obstruction of his will, whatever inconvenience it may bring on him.

In Wright v. Wilson, 1 Ld. Raym. 739, it was held that an action for false imprisonment will not lie for fastening one of two doors in a room in which the plaintiff was,

p. 333; 3 Elliott, Ev. §§ 2101, 2115; Wells v. Johnston, 52 La. Ann. 717, 27 So. 185.

Mr. Casimir Moss for appellees.

Monroe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages in which plaintiff appears before this court as appellant from a judgment rejecting his demands.

He states his supposed cause of action by alleging that "petitioner was in company with his wife and friends on an open lot, in the village of Dodson, . . . behaving himself, in every respect, as a good citizen should do; . . . that, while so situated, J. W. Campbell, the marshal of the town, . . . and W. C. Johnson, acting in conjunction with and aiding and assisting each other, did, with force and arms, unlawfully arrest, detain, and imprison your petitioner, although he could not go through the other without trespassing.

In Sullivan v. Old Colony R. Co. 148 Mass. 119, 1 L.R.A. 513, 18 N. E. 678, it was held that the removal of a disorderly passenger from a passenger car, without arresting him, and placing him in the baggage car to carry him to his destination, may be reasonable and proper conduct on the part of a railroad company, and not render it liable for assault or imprisonment.

On the other hand, in Bloomer v. State, 3 Sneed, 66, a prosecution for an assault, an instruction that, if the defendant met the complainant in the road, and, by means of threats, or otherwise, stopped him, and, in consequence of such conduct on the part of the defendant the complainant was stopped, and not permitted to pass along the public highway, as he had the right to do, this would be an illegal imprisonment, and in law an assault on the part of the defendant, was held to be correct.

In Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498, 52 N. W. 1000, it was held that evidence that plaintiff, who was suspected of theft, was called into an office, where she was informed that an officer was at hand to arrest her if she did not produce the stolen articles; that when she turned to go out, making no forcible effort to do so, another person present stood with his hand on the door; that she was told that she had just one hour to produce the things or acknowledge her guilt; and that she felt that she was a prisoner; and that there was an officer in the adjoining room; and that the parties proceeded, with her consent, to her house to make a search,—such facts were sufficient, if believed by the jury, to justify a finding the plaintiff understood that she was under restraint.

In Fotheringham v. Adams Exp. Co. 1 L.R.A. 474, 36 Fed. 252, it was held that an action for false imprisonment lies where a person was constantly guarded by detectives for two weeks, so that he was at no time free to come and go as he pleased, and his movements were at all times subject to by seizing hold of your petitioner's body, and drawing a deadly weapon on your petitioner, and, in this manner, dragged your petitioner through a large assembly of people congregated there, and did in this manner forcibly detain petitioner, against his will, for some considerable time; . . . that there never did exist any warrant or legal process whatever authorizing either the said J. W. Campbell or the said W. C. Johnson to take petitioner in their custody or to detain or imprison him; . . . that said acts furnish an instance of false imprisonment for which they should be held liable in solido; . . . that, on account of said false imprisonment, he has suffered damages . . . in the sum of $3,000; and he prays judgment against the defendants in solido."

An exception of no cause of action was the control and direction of those who had him in charge, who frequently urged him to make a confession of guilt.

With regard to cases arising under criminal statutes, it may be observed that such statutes seem to require a lesser interference with a person's liberty to constitute false imprisonment than is the case in civil action.

In People v. Wheeler, 73 Cal. 252, 14 Pac. 796, a conviction for the crime of false imprisonment, defined by statute as being "the unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another," was sustained where it appeared that the complainant was seized, thrown down, tied, and carried away by defendants for the purpose of ejecting him from land upon which it was claimed he was trespassing.

In Woods v. State, 3 Tex. App. 204, a conviction under a statute providing that false imprisonment is committed by the use of any "means which restrains the party detained from removing from one place to another, as he may see proper," was sustained under evidence showing that the prosecuting witness was simply forbidden to plow a field, but was not prevented otherwise from going where he pleased.

So, also, in Harkins v. State, 6 Tex. App. 452, a conviction under the same statute was sustained upon evidence showing that the parties, while riding along the road, began to quarrel, that witness, fearing a difficulty, left the road with the intention of pursuing his journey away from the road and avoiding the defendant, who compelled him to return and ride along in his company; as, under the statute, to stop a man going in any direction he sees proper, though without detaining him in a particular spot, may constitute false imprisonment.

Conditional restraint.

It seems to be uniformly held that a restraint may be none the less an imprisonment though it may lie within the power of the person restrained to obtain his release filed and overruled, and, defendant having answered, the case was tried on its merits, developing the following facts: The boys of the Dodson High School, having decided to celebrate their commencement by giving a public picnic, to be followed in the afternoon by a game of baseball, secured from the Tremont Lumber Company the use of certain ground, owned by the latter, from which they removed the stumps and other obstructions, and which they inclosed by encircling it with a rope and a wire. No charge was made for participation in the picnic, but, in order to provide balls and bats, and to aid in paying the expenses of the visiting, Winfield, High School team, the Dodson boys found it necessary to charge a fee of 25 cents to those who chose to remain, or to come, after dinner, within the inclosure and witness the baseball game, and notice of their intention in that respect was published in the Dodson paper, and was also served on many of the citizens by means of postal cards, plaintiff being one of those to whom such a card was mailed. He, however, seems to have conceived the idea that the charge was an imposition, and, before going to the grounds, announced his determination not to pay it. He says in his testimony: "About 2 o'clock the professor got up on a stump and announced for everybody to go down to the gate so that they could collect their 25 cents. Most of the ladies went, and a good lot of men. Some of them stood around and did not go."

Plaintiff's wife was one of the ladies who "went." She gave the gate keeper 10 cents, and told him she would give him the remaining 15 cents (to make up the 25 cents for her admission) before she left the grounds, and her assurance was accepted, without discussion, as satisfactory. Plaintiff, though he had in his pocket more than enough money to pay the charge, was one of those "who stood around and did not go." In that situation, appeals were made by the boys to plaintiff, and to those who assumed a like position, either to pay or to go out, and most of them did one thing or the other. Plaintiff did neither. One of the boys, being asked, "What did you propose to do if a person came on the ground that day and did not want to pay a fee," replied, "We did not think that any one would want to run over us in that way. . . . Didn't think very much about that." Campbell, the marshal, had had a talk with the mayor, in which the latter had expressed the opinion that no one could be arrested or otherwise dealt with under the town ordinances for refusing to pay the admission fee, and the marshal, acting on that opinion, contented himself with merely appealing to the recalcitrants either to pay or go out. He says he explained to plaintiff and others why the charge was made, and told them, "I believe I would pay or just go out, and not create any contrariness." He did nothing more. Johnson, a citizen of the town and a friend of the boys, seems rather to have urged the matter upon the few who persisted in holding out, and, it being said by some of them, "Everybody has gone out except that Dodson fellow [referring to plaintiff], and if he will go out we will go out too," he approached plaintiff, who had already been appealed to several times, and, at this point, there is some variance in the testimony. One or two witnesses say that Johnson asked plaintiff whether he had paid; that plaintiff replied that he had not; that Johnson then requested him to go to the gate, and took him by the arm; that plaintiff resisted, slightly, at first, and then walked in the direction of the gate, all the witnesses agreeing that he settled the matter by paying by complying with the requirements of the person imposing the restraint.—at least, where such requirements are without legal justification.

Thus, a false imprisonment was held to have been effected where defendant, finding plaintiff in a corn crib, refused to allow him to come out until he should answer his questions whether plaintiff had made certain derogatory remarks concerning the defendant's family (McNay v. Stratton, 9 Ill. App. 215); where defendants, having summoned the plaintiff to their house, locked the doors upon him, and threatened him with great personal violence unless he admitted that he had promised to marry their sister, and would then agree to pay the damages for the breach of such promise (Hildebrand v. McCrum, 101 Ind. 61); where plaintiff was required, at the point of a revolver, to unlock his safe for the purpose of determining whether it contained money alleged by the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

defendant to have been stolen from him by the plaintiff (Garnier v. Squires, 62 Kan. 321, 62 Pac. 1005); where, a mistake having been made in serving an order given by plaintiff in defendant's restaurant, a dispute arose as to the amount of his bill, and defendant had him arrested upon his refusal to pay the larger amount claimed (Buchanan v. Goettmann Bros. 29 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 302); where plaintiff was detained, though without actual or offered violence, by a dispute as to whether he had paid certain ferryage, the ferryman telling him he should not go on until he paid it, which he did (Smith v. State, 7 Humph. 43); where plaintiff, arrested under a void writ of ne exeat was compelled, in order to avoid imprisonment, to make a promise that he would not run away, and to procure others to vouch for him (Bonesteel v. Bonesteel, 28 Wis. 245).

ing before reaching the gate. Plaintiff says that Johnson asked if he had been to the gate; that he replied, "No, my wife has made arrangement;" that Johnson then said, "Consider yourself under arrest for resisting an officer," and grabbed him by the arm; that he "finally got loose, . . . was not trying very hard, and, when he did, Johnson grabbed him again," and "threw his hand back like he was going to pull a gun;" that he (plaintiff) said, "You can't arrest me, for I am not bothering you;" that Johnson said, "Pay up, then, pay up;" and that he went with Johnson for a distance of some 75 yards, when he paid up and was released. Johnson says: "I said, 'Mr. Crossett, everybody has gone out but you, and it don't look nice for you to stay;'" and I said, "If I was you, I would go out, and act nice about it," and he said, "My wife paid," and I said, "Did she pay for you?" and I asked Mrs. Crossett did she pay for him, and she said, "No;" and I said, "Crossett, you will have to go out and (or) pay," and I took him by the right arm and started, and he said he would go, and then he stopped and asked me if I was going to take him to the calaboose, and I told him, "No." We went to the other side of the cold drink stand, which I reckon was 20 or 30 steps,—I guess it took about 20 or 30 seconds,—and he said, "Hold on, I will pay you my quarter, and I will prosecute you." Plaintiff thereupon produced a dollar, from which the gate keeper, who came up at the moment, gave him 75 cents in change, and the matter ended, plaintiff returning to his wife and remaining, without further disturbance, to witness the game. A witness by the name of Dean says that Johnson had a pistol in the rear pocket of his trousers, and partly drew it out at one time, but it is shown beyond question that he was in his shirt sleeves and was wearing linen trousers, and several witnesses testify that they saw no pistol, and that they could not very well have helped seeing it if he had had one. Johnson himself swears that he had no pistol.

It will be observed from the foregoing statement of the facts of the case, as disclosed by the evidence, that instead, as he alleges, of being on "an open lot," plaintiff, at the time of the incident out of which this suit arises, was upon a lot, the use and enjoyment of which had been granted by the owner to the Dodson High School baseball team, which the members of that team had cleared of stumps and other obstructions and had inclosed, or partially inclosed, with a wire and rope for their own purposes, and of which they were in full possession; and that, instead of his "behaving himself, in every respect, as a good citizen should do," he was engaged in a most unreasonable and wrongheaded interference with a lot of schoolboys and other persons who were exercising, innocently, their legal right to amuse and be amused, upon property over which, for all the purposes of this case, they had absolute control. It will also be observed that, whereas plaintiff alleges that, "on account of said false imprisonment," he suffered the damages for which he prays judgment, the facts are that he was given the alternative of staying where he was upon complying with a condition rightfully imposed, or of removing himself from premises where otherwise he was an intruder and a trespasser; and that, upon his refusal to do either the one thing or the other, he was in course—not of being imprisoned upon but—of being ejected from the premises (with the privilege reserved to him of remaining where he was, on complying with the required condition, or of going elsewhere, without so complying, as he pleased), when he concluded to comply with the condition, and the trouble ended. There was, therefore, never an instant of time during which his release from the restraint imposed upon him was not entirely within his own control, and might not have been accomplished by his paying the trifling amount of money demanded of him, and he was never restrained from doing anything save the unlawful thing of remaining upon the boys' playground, against their wishes, in violation of their rights, and to their disturbance and the disturbance of their assembled guests. Our law (Rev. Stat. § 796) imposes a penalty for "false imprisoning," but does not define the offense. It is elsewhere defined as follows: "False imprisonment is the unlawful and total restraint of the liberty of the person. . . ."

"The right violated by this tort is 'freedom of locomotion.' It belongs, historically, to the class of rights known as simple or primary rights (inaccurately called absolute rights), as distinguished from secondary rights, or rights not to be harmed. It is a right in rem; it is available against the community at large. The theory of the law is that one interferes with the freedom of locomotion of another at his peril. . . . The right of freedom of locomotion is violated when one is wrongfully detained against his will, or is in any way deprived of, as distinguished from obstructed or subjected to inconvenience in, his right to come or go or stay when and where he wishes. Some conduct imposing restraint or detention is essential; but any conduct resulting therein is sufficient. It is the unlawful interference with the wish or desire of plaintiff which the law seeks to compensate. Free egress must therefore be impossible; the restraint must be total." 19 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 319, 322.

A note to the paragraph last above quoted reads: "If plaintiff is free to go where he wants to, he cannot sustain an action of false imprisonment; if he is prevented from going where he may have a right to go, a mere partial obstruction to his will may be the basis of some other form of action, but not of the one here under consideration. Bird v. Jones, 7 Q. B. 742; . . . Stevens v. O'Neill, 51 App. Div. 364, 64 N. Y. Supp. 663."

"There is no legal wrong unless the detention was involuntary." 19 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 323.

A note to this paragraph reads: "One who submits to arrest and imprisonment rather than pay a small license fee, illegally exacted, but which he might have recovered back, without serious injury or damage, has no cause of action. Cottam v. Oregon City (C. C.) 98 Fed. 570."

And, again, we find that it has been held that "where the contest is for possession of personal property, and there is no intent to detain the person, false imprisonment is not made out. McClure v. State, 26 Tex. App. 102, 9 S. W. 353." [19 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 322, note.]

Applying the definition and interpretation thus given to the case at bar, it will be noticed that free egress from the baseball grounds was at all times possible to the plaintiff, and that Johnson's purpose was not to imprison him in the grounds, but to eject him from them, though the privilege was accorded him of remaining there on his complying with a reasonable and lawful condition, and that it was entirely and at all times within his power to release himself from the restraint incidental to his proposed ejection by the payment of the admission fee, for which, if he stayed, he was morally and legally bound. Such restraint was therefore of his own doing, and was not involuntary.

It is said that the defendant Johnson should be held liable in any event, because, disclaiming, as he does, authority either from the marshal or the boys, he was without right, as an individual, to interfere in the matter. It might, perhaps, be answered that an individual has the right to interfere where a breach of the peace or a misdemeanor is committed, or threatened, in his presence, and that, apart from the fact that plaintiff was unlawfully disturbing the boys in their enjoyment of the premises in question,—a course of conduct the tendency of which was to provoke acts of violence,—he was, by his unauthorized presence, disturbing and invading the rights of a peaceful assemblage of which Johnson was a member, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) in violation of a statute which denounces such disturbance as an offense punishable by fine and imprisonment. Rev. Stat. § 929.

We, however, prefer to base the decision upon the ground first stated; to wit, that the restraint of which plaintiff complains was voluntary, in that it always rested with him to terminate it by desisting from the doing of an unlawful act, and that "free egress" was always open to him.

Judgment affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied January 18, 1909.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

SIDNEY J. GILLY

v.

ABRAHAM I. HIRSH, Appt.

(122 La. 966, 48 So. 422.)

Nuisance — auction — interference — damages.

1. The auction business is not a nuisance per se, but it may be so conducted as to become a nuisance; and, where an auctioneer,

Headnotes by MONROE, J.

Case Note. — Auction as a nuisance.

It was held in Com. v. Passmore, 1 Serg. & R. 217, to be a common-law nuisance for an auctioneer to deposit goods in a street, in front of his place of business, and suffer them to remain there for the purpose of being sold at auction, passage along the street being thereby rendered less convenient, although not entirely obstructed.

And in Com. v. Milliman, 13 Serg. & R. 403, it was also held to be an indictable nuisance for a constable to sell property at auction, under an executio., in a public street, thereby obstructing it.

And the fact that it was provided by statute that a constable, in making such a sale, "shall expose the goods for sale by public vendue," will not relieve him from liability, it not being necessary that a "public vendue," shall be held in the public streets. Ibid.

The exemption of auctioneers from a municipal ordinance prohibiting, under a penalty, placing goods in the streets (assuming it to be within the power of a municipality to adopt such ordinance), merely exempts auctioneers from the penalty imposed on others for a violation thereof, and leaves the law as to nuisances as it before existed. Com. v. Passmore, supra.

And a municipal ordinance prohibiting the sale or exposure for sale of goods at auction in the public streets has been upheld on the ground of keeping them free from nuisances. See White v. Kent, 11 Ohio St. 550; Com. v. Ellis, 158 Mass. 555, 33 N. E. 651.

engaged in selling goods similar to those dealt in by a merchant next door, keeps a number of employees standing about, who molest and interfere with customers, whether actual or prospective, who are looking into his neighbor's show window, and otherwise interferes with his neighbor's business, an injunction will issue to restrain him. If, however, the neighbor be damaged because the auctioneer undersells or oversells him, or sells inferior goods, it is damnum absque injuria. And when the complaint is that the auctioneer deals unfairly with his own customers, it is a matter between him and them, or between him and the state.

Auctioneer — license — forfeiture — civil suit.

2. The license of an auctioneer may be forfeited, in a criminal prosecution, for certain unfair dealings in the conduct of his business; but no such penalty can be imposed in a civil suit, brought by a neighboring merchant; nor can the latter be permitted to put the auctioneer out of business by signs or publications reflecting upon the character of his business.

Costs — division.

3. When plaintiff obtains judgment on his demand, and defendant obtains judgment on his demand in reconviction, each of the parties should pay the costs incurred in obtaining the judgment against him.

(January 18, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to enjoin defendant from continuing certain acts alleged to reflect upon plaintiff's character and business and for damages alleged to have been caused thereby. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Foster, Milling, & Godchaux, and Alexis Brian, for appellant:

A license issued by a city council authorizing the doing of a legitimate business will not justify the party holding the same to conduct an illegitimate business.

Blanc v. Murray, 36 La. Ann. 162, 51 Am. Rep. 7; Wood, Nuisances, §§ 743, 746, 751; Koehl v. Schoenhausen, 47 La. Ann. 1316, 17 So. 809.

If a business, authorized by law, and conducted under a license, becomes a private nuisance, it may be abated by injunction.

Blanc v. Murray, supra.

An auction place which sells fake jewelry, under misrepresentation as to its origin, character, and value, maintains cappers and by-bidders, creates an unusual amount of noise by hallooing in loud voices, clapping hands, and making other noises to attract passers-by, and which disturbs occupants of adjacent property, may be closed by injunction.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Froelicher v. Southern Marine Works, 118 La. 1077, 43 So. 882; State ex rel. Denis v. King, 105 La. 732, 30 So. 101.

Mr. P. L. Fourchy, with Mr. Henry L. Garland, Jr., for appellee.

Monroe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff represents that he is engaged in business at 507 Canal street, New Orleans, as an auctioneer, selling jewelry and other personal property. That defendant has the adjoining store, in which he also sells jewelry and other wares. That, for the malicious purpose of injuring him, defendant has hung in his show window, adjoining the entrance to plaintiff's store, a sign, in large letters, reading:

Don't be Misled.

This store and window display has no connection with the would-be auction, next door. Our entrance is at the corner.

That the sole object and effect of the sign is to excite the distrust of plaintiff's customers as to the honesty of his business, to his great prejudice, and that he has been damaged to the extent of $1,500. That defendant has repeatedly reported him to the mayor and police as "a criminal, carrying on an unlawful business, and has maliciously sought to injure his character and his business, and, by his said acts and slanderous charges and accusations, has damaged petitioner in his character and reputation, in the sum of $1,000. That unless . . . enjoined from the further display of said sign, and from harassing petitioner, boycotting and picketing petitioner's place of business, and from buttonholing and soliciting the customers entering and leaving. . . . the said Hirsch will inflict upon petitioner, and upon his business, repeated and irreparable damages and injury, for which no adequate redress could be obtained."

Wherefore he prays for an injunction and for judgment, condemning defendant in damages in the sum of $2,500.

In answer to a rule nisi, ordering him to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not issue, and by way of answer to the merits and of reconventional demand, defendant admits that he is exhibiting the sign, as alleged, but denies that he is doing so from any malicious motive. And he further denies that he has in any manner harassed plaintiff, or boycotted or picketed his store, or buttonholed or solicited his customers. And he alleges that the sign is necessary for his own protection, for the reason that plaintiff sells at auction, next door to defendant's jewelry store, articles of jewelry and notions upon flagrant misrepresentations as to their origin and worth, and at exorbitant prices, being assisted therein by half a dozen or more cappers, or dummy bidders, who are employed to inveigle passers-by into entering said auction shop and bidding on said articles; that defendant recently caused the arrest of one of said cappers as a dangerous and suspicious character, and he was convicted and fined; that said cappers, under the direction of said Gilly, resort to all manner of artifices, both by words and acts, to induce persons who stop at respondent's show window, and who, if unmolested, would become customers of respondent, to enter said auction shop; that the said cappers, among other artifices, represent to said passers-by that said show window of respondent and said auction shop of plaintiff are one and the same place, and that the same grade and character of articles are being sold at public auction, in plaintiff's said shop, as are being displayed in respondent's show window; that the said cappers often ". . . gather around a prospective customer of respondent and rush and crowd him into said auction shop, thus preventing said prospective customer from entering respondent's store, and consequently resulting in damage and injury to respondent, in actual loss of business and in damage to his personal and business reputation, for which respondent reserves the right to sue in a proper proceeding; . . . that the reputation of said auction shop is bad; that it was, and is, necessary for the protection of the reputation of respondent's establishment that he give, by means of some sign, due notice to the public that his store is in no manner connected with said auction shop."

He further, and for the purposes of his demand in reconvention, alleges:

"That he is engaged in the business of retailing jewelry, notions, etc.; . . . that by fair dealing . . . he had built up a remunerative trade, and was continually increasing his business, . . . until about eighteen months ago . . . plaintiff established, . . . immediately adjoining respondent's show window, a small shop, . . . where said Gilly and his employees sell jewelry, notions, etc., at auction; . . . that the auctioneer . . . is continually crying out in a loud voice, clapping his hands and making other noisy demonstrations, in his endeavors to attract people from the street, to sell his wares, and to harass respondent, his employees, and customers; that said auction shop is the rendezvous of cappers, loafers, and other dangerous and suspicious characters, who often insult, abuse, and revile respondent and his employees; that the said noise, boisterous conduct, and vile language of said plaintiff, his employees, and associates . . . are distinctly audible in respondent's store, and have caused respondent damage, to his health, feelings, and peace of mind, in the sum of $300; . . . that the said Gilly sells in said auction shop, at public auction, articles . . . of a worthless character; . . . that said Gilly and his said employees take advantage of the proximity of respondent's store, . . . and of the attractive display of first-class goods made by respondent in his show window, to create the impression, by representations to that effect, and otherwise, among respondent's customers, actual and prospective, and the public at large, that said auction shop is part and portion of respondent's store; . . . and that respondent has been damaged, in his personal and business reputation, by being classed and associated with said shop as aforesaid, in the sum of $1,500; . . . that, by reason of the aforesaid noise, vile language, and disreputable dealings carried on, and of the dangerous and suspicious characters congregated in said auction shop, the same constitutes a public and private nuisance, which should be abated by injunction . . . restraining said Gilly, his agents, and employees from further operating said auction shop."

And he prays that plaintiff's demand be rejected, and that he and his agents and employees be enjoined from further operating said auction shop, from inducing, crowding, or rushing persons from in front of respondent's show window into said auction shop; from representing to persons who stop at respondent's show window, or to any persons, that respondent's store is a part and portion of said auction shop; and from in any manner interfering with the orderly conduct of respondent's business. He further prays for damages, and costs.

After a full hearing in the district court there was judgment as follows:

"Enjoining the said defendant from placing in his show window a sign or card reflecting on plaintiff or his business, and especially the card, 'Don't be Misled. This store and window has no connection with the would-be auction next door'—and enjoining the said defendant from obstructing, interfering with, accosting, and buttonholing plaintiff's customers at or near the door of plaintiff's place of business, for the purpose of preventing their entrance therein and there transacting business with plaintiff. It is further decreed that there be judgment in favor of plaintiff in reconvention, and against the said Sidney J. Gilly, enjoining and restraining the said Gilly, his agents, and employees . . . from inducing, rushing, or crowding persons from in front of the show window of the said . . . Hirsh into the auction store of the said Gilly, from representing to persons who stop at the show window of the said Hirsh, or to any other persons, that the store of said Hirsh is a part and portion of said Gilly's shop, and enjoining the said Gilly from in any manner interfering with the employees and customers of the said Hirsh, . . . dismissing the said Gilly's demand for a moneyed judgment, and also dismissing the said Hirsh's reconventional demand for a moneyed judgment; plaintiff to pay all costs incurred by him, and defendant, in a like manner, all the costs incurred by him, including the testimony of witnesses called in his behalf."

From the judgment so rendered, defendant has appealed, but plaintiff has not appealed, nor has he answered the appeal of defendant, or prayed, for any amendment of the judgment.

Defendant's counsel insist:

- (1) That plaintiff is entitled to no injunction.
- (2) That he is not entitled to an injunction restraining defendant from interfering with his customers, picketing his place, etc.
- (3) That defendant is entitled to an injunction as prayed for by him.
- (4) That defendant is entitled to damages.
- (5) That there is error in the judgment appealed from in the matter of the costs.

The evidence shows that plaintiff has a license as an auctioneer, and is engaged in that business next door to the premises occupied by defendant; that he and defendant both sell notions and jewelry; that the jewelry sold by plaintiff is generally inferior in quality and value to that sold by defendant; that plaintiff employs men, who stand about his place, outside and inside, some of whom have interfered with persons who were looking into defendant's show window, and have represented to them that it was part of plaintiff's auction establishment; that defendant himself has, on one occasion, or perhaps oftener, been rudely treated by them, or by plaintiff; and that, on several occasions plaintiff, or those acting for him, have grossly misrepresented to purchasers the quality and value of the goods in his store.

The evidence does not show that plaintiff makes more noise than is usual in that kind of business, or that the noise made by him is such as to constitute his place a nuisance, public or private; nor, on the other hand, does it show that defendant has been interfering with plaintiff's customers in the manner alleged in the petition.

There can be no doubt that plaintiff has the right to conduct an auction business, free from interference on the part of the defendant, so long as he does not conduct it in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

such a manner as unlawfully to interfere with the business conducted by defendant.

"The law will only permit the abatement of so much of a nuisance as is necessary to prevent the injury." Wood, Nuisances, § 33. A lawful business, located in a proper place, and conducted in a proper manner, cannot be treated as a nuisance per se, although it may be so conducted, or the surrounding circumstances may be such, as to make it a nuisance. Joyce, Nuisances, § 99.

So far as we can see, the point at which plaintiff's business, by reason of the manner in which it has been conducted, has amounted to an unlawful interference with that of defendant was when plaintiff or his employees molested defendant's customers, actual or prospective, whilst enjoying the privilege of looking into his show window, and undertook to "hustle" or coax them into plaintiff's place, representing that it, and the show window, were parts of the same establishment, and such interference has been enjoined. Whether plaintiff sells goods that are inferior or superior to those of defendant, or whether he deals fairly or unfairly with his own customers, are matters with which defendant has no such concern as would entitle him to shut up plaintiff's place by the writ of injunction.

"The carrying on of banking operations contrary to the statute has been held not to be such a mischief or public nuisance that a court of equity would grant an injunction to restrain the same, even though it had jurisdiction over public nuisances." Joyce, Nuisances, § 85, citing Atty. Gen. v. Utica Ins. Co. 2 Johns. Ch. 371; Atty. Gen. v. Bank of Niagara, 1 Hopk. Ch. 354.

Where a merchant undersells or oversells his neighbor, though the latter may suffer damages thereby, it is damnum absque injuria. And if he deals unfairly with his own customers, it is a matter between him and them, or between him and the state.

If an auctioneer should be convicted, in a criminal prosecution, of having sold jewelry not of the quality represented by him, and of having refused to return the price, on demand made within twenty hours, or of having offered an article for sale, setting forth its value, and through the aid of mock bidders induced its purchase by a real bidder, and of then having substituted another article in lieu of that offered and sold, his license would be forfeited, and he would be liable to a fine of $500. Rev. Stat. §§ 155, 156. But we know of no authority for imposing any such penalty in a civil suit, and what defendant cannot do legally through the courts he cannot do illegally by means of publications or signs, such as that exhibited by him, though he, no doubt, has the right to maintain a sign in his window notifying the public that the window is his, and has no connection with the business carried on next door.

2. We find no evidence going to show that defendant has been obstructing, interfering with, accosting, and buttonholing plaintiff's customers.

3. For the reasons which have been stated, we are of opinion that the injunction, issued in favor of defendant, goes as far as it should.

4. The proof is insufficient to warrant a judgment for damages claimed by defendant.

5. The party cast should bear the costs, and the judgment appealed from must be amended in that respect.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment appealed from be amended, by annulling and avoiding so much thereof as enjoins the defendant "from obstructing, interfering with, accosting, and buttonholing plaintiff's customers, at or near the door of plaintiff's place of business, for the purpose of preventing their entrance therein, and there transacting business with plaintiff," and by annulling and avoiding that portion of it which condemns each of the litigants to pay his own costs; and, it is further adjudged and decreed that said judgment be, in other respects, affirmed, the defendant to pay the costs incurred in the lower court upon the main demand, and the plaintiff to pay the costs so incurred upon the demand in reconvention. It is further decreed that plaintiff pay the costs of the appeal.

Petition for rehearing denied February 15, 1909.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

NORTHPORT WESLEYAN GROVE CAMPMEETING ASSOCIATION

v.

HENRY H. ANDREWS.

(— Me. —, 71 Atl. 1027.)

Dedication — park.

1. A dedication of land for a park is effected by the exhibition of a plat on which the space is designated as a park when selling lots bordering thereon, followed by permitting the public to use the tract generally as it pleases.

Park — grass — right to cut.

2. Persons who have bought lots bordering on a tract of land dedicated for park purposes may, as against the owner of the fee, cut the grass thereon if the authorities have not assumed jurisdiction over the park, and the removal of the grass will render the park 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

more suitable for the use for which it was intended.

(September 10, 1908.)

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Waldo County for the opinion of the full bench of an action brought to recover damages for cutting and tramping down grass on certain lands. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William P. Thompson for plaintiff.
Messrs. Dunton & Morse, for defendant:

The lot of land was irrevocably dedicated to the use of the public, and particularly to the use of the adjacent lot owners, as a public park, and when the defendant purchased his adjoining lots; with reference to the plan on which said land was represented as a park, he acquired an easement in that land for the use designated.

13 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 448, 453, 455; 14 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1183; Clark v. Providence, 10 R. I. 437; Abbott v. Cottage City, 143 Mass. 521, 58 Am. Rep. 143, 10 N. E. 325; Atty. Gen. v. Abbott, 154 Mass. 323, 13 L.R.A. 251, 28 N. E. 346; Bartlett v. Bangor, 67 Me. 460; Heselton v. Harmon, 80 Me. 326, 14 Atl. 286.

The defendant owning an easement in the land for the purposes of a public park, had a legal right to enter upon the land and do whatever was reasonably necessary to prepare it and keep it in proper condition for the purpose to which it had been dedicated.

Heselton v. Harmon, supra; Hammond v. Woodman, 41 Me. 203, 66 Am. Dec. 219; 14 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 1210, 1211, 1214; Dickinson v. Whiting, 141 Mass. 414, 6 N. E. 92.

King, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On report. Action of trespass quare clau-

Note. — An examination of the authorities appears to indicate that the case reported is one of first impression as to the right of the owner of property bordering on land dedicated as a park, to improve the same for park purposes, as against the owners of the fee. Reference may, however, be made to the case of Heselton v. Harmon, 80 Me. 326, 14 Atl. 286, where it was held that an action of trespass would not lie against the owner of a parcel of real estate which was bounded by the original grantor on a strip of land owned by him and reserved for a street, for entering upon such strip and preparing it for use as a street.

As to the effect of a conveyance of lots laid down on plats, to prevent a change in the use or form of the property, see case note to Herold v. Columbia Invest. & Real Estate Co. 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1067.

sum to recover damages for cutting and trampling down the grass on a lot of land in Northport, Me. The defendant justifies under a claim that the locus had been dedicated by the plaintiff to the use of the public and the adjoining lot owners as a park, and that the acts complained of were done by him as one of the public and an adjoining lot owner, and at the request of other adjoining lot owners, for the purpose only of beautifying and improving said park, and rendering it more suitable for the use for which it was dedicated.

In 1876 the plaintiff purchased a tract of land for an addition to its camp ground at Northport, and caused the same to be laid out into lots for lease or sale, with an open space of about 1 acre for a park.

A plan of the tract and the laying out was made, on which the lots were designated by numbers, and the open space or park marked "Bay View Park." Lots were at first leased in perpetuum, and later others conveyed in fee, by express reference to said plan. The defendant is the owner of $4\frac{1}{2}$ lots adjoining said Bay View Park. The only instrument put in evidence, showing title of any of the lots in defendant, is dated May 18, 1881, wherein the plaintiff leases to the defendant "in perpetuum . . . " a certain lot on their camp ground numbered according to the plan made by R. B. Miller of said lots, and bounded as follows: Beginning on the easterly side of Bay View Park at the northerly corner of lot No. 314; thence, southerly by said lot and on Bay View Park 25 feet to a vacant lot; thence easterly on said vacant lot 50 feet to a stake and stones; thence northerly, by lot 314, 25 feet to a vacant lot; thence westerly on said vacant lot 50 feet to the place of beginning. Intending hereby to convey to said Andrews lot No. 314 as per said plan.

There is no material conflict of testimony as to the original laying out of the space for a park and its subsequent use as such by the lot owners and the public generally, from which testimony it satisfactorily appears: That at the time of the conveyance of lot 314 to defendant, the treasurer of the plaintiff, Mr. Ruggles, who was authorized to make the conveyance, exhibited to him said plan and promised that the park designated thereon was to be graded and kept open as a park; that after several years, nothing material having been done to improve the park, the defendant raised among the lot owners $100 or more, to which the plaintiff added $25, and this money was expended by the defendant in grading, fertilizing, and seeding to grass the park; that the lot owners, and the public generally, have used the park since it was laid out for crossing and recrossing it, and as they pleased. The circumstances leading up to the alleged acts of trespass, and explanatory of those acts, are thus stated by defendant: "I seeded it down and kept seeding it down, as I say, on the clay, and putting on year after year a good deal of fertilizer. But Mr. Dickey (the superintendent at time of acts complained of) claimed the grass. He didn't put anything on, as I say, for several years, but claimed the grass, and I was away from home a good deal, and when I would get home the first of July, sometimes away along into July, perhaps the 8th or 10th, that grass wouldn't be cut. And when it was cut, growing so stout, especially on that clay, it left it nothing but stubble, and it would take me all the season to mow it and trim it and work on it to bring it in to make a decent grass plot of it. I worked upon it the rest of the season every year to try to make it look decent; but I urged him, and the others in authority, to have it cut early, but I couldn't get that cut. They did come over on Ruggles's part earlier, but our part it was almost impossible to get it cut before July, and, as I say before, it always looked rough and coarse. He kept cutting it, and I urged him, or tried to reason with him, to let us have it to beautify and fertilize at our own expense and cut frequently; and the rest of the lot owners went to the association, went to the officers, and urged them to let us have it to care for at our own expense; but he was determined not to give it up to us, and I couldn't do anything with him. At last I made up my mind that I would cut it and see what they could do with me."

Mr. Dickey testified that he had made an arrangement with the association whereby he was to have the hay on the park in consideration for certain work he did on the rest of the grounds and trucking, and that there was an understanding that it should be cut twice each year.

The defendant cut the grass on the 18th day of June, 1907, and notified Mr. Dickey that he had done so. "And I told him that I didn't care for the grass, that was not what I was after, and that he might take it off, and that if he didn't take it off I would." This action was immediately commenced.

Was there a dedication by the plaintiff of the locus to the use of the public and the lot owners as a park? We think there was.

"Dedication" is the intentional appropriation of land by the owner to some proper public use, reserving to himself no rights therein inconsistent with the full exercise and enjoyment of such use. The intention to dedicate is the essential principle, and whenever that intention on the part of the owner of the soil exists in fact and is clearly manifest, either by his words or acts, the dedication, so far as he is concerned, is made. If accepted and used by the public for the purpose intended, it becomes complete; and the owner of the soil is precluded from asserting any ownership therein that is not entirely consistent with the use for which it was dedicated.

Judicial decisions explanatory of the principles upon which the doctrine of dedication rests have so multiplied, and are so uniform in reasoning, that but few citations need here be made. Prof. Dillon says (Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. 630): "The subject may be advantageously presented by referring to the leading case of Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. 431, 8 L. ed. 452, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, which has been extensively followed by the state tribunals, and is everywhere recognized as a sound exposition of the peculiar doctrines of the law respecting the rights which may be parted with by the owner and acquired by the public under the doctrine of dedication. . . . In its opinion in the case just mentioned, the Supreme Court asserts or assents to the following principles: (1) That it is not essential to a dedication that the legal title should pass from the owner. (2) Nor is it essential that there should be any grantee of the use or easement in esse, to take the fee, such cases being exceptions to the general rule requiring a grantee. (3) Nor is a deed or writing necessary to constitute a valid dedication. It may be by parol. (4) No specific length of possession is necessary to constitute a valid dedication; all that is required is the assent of the owner of the soil to the public use, and the actual enjoyment by the public of the use for such a length of time that the public accommodation and private rights would be materially affected by a denial or interruption of the enjoyment."

In that case (Cincinnati v. White) the question discussed was the dedication of a public park. It is there said: "And after being thus set apart for public use, and enjoyed as such, and private and individual rights acquired with reference to it, the law considers it in the nature of an estoppel in pais, which precludes the original owner from revoking such dedication. It is a violation of good faith to the public and to those who have acquired private property with a view to the enjoyment of the use thus publicly granted."

The following are a few of the cases in which the same principles have been clearly announced: Hunter v. Sandy Hill, 6 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Hill, 411; Mankato v. Willard, 13 Minn. 13, Gil. 1, 97 Am. Dec. 208; People v. Marin County, 103 Cal. 223, 26 L.R.A. 659, 37 Pac. 203; Bates v. Beloit, 103 Wis. 90, 78 N. W. 1102; Palen v. Ocean City, 64 N. J. L. 669, 46 Atl. 774; Wood v. Hurd, 34 N. J. L. 87-88; Abbott v. Cottage City, 143 Mass. 521, 58 Am. Rep. 143, 10 N. E. 325; Atty. Gen. v. Abbott, 154 Mass. 323, 328, 13 L.R.A. 251, 28 N. E. 346; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. 630 et seq.; 13 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 448, 453, 455; Bartlett v. Bangor, 67 Me. 460; Heseltin v. Harmon, 80 Me. 326, 14 Atl. 286; Indianapolis v. Kingsbury, 101 Ind. 200, 51 Am. Rep. 749.

The doctrine of dedication is applicable to public parks and squares, and the fact of dedication may be established in the same manner as in the case of streets and highways. Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. 644, and notes; Rhodes v. Brightwood, 145 Ind. 21, 43 N. E. 942; Abbott v. Cottage City, 143 Mass. 521, 523, 58 Am. Rep. 143, 10 N. E. 325, and cases there collected.

"Where the words 'public square' are used on a plat, this is an unrestricted dedication to public use." Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. 645. And the same author adds: "The word 'park,' written upon a block on a map of city property, indicates a public use; and conveyances made by the owners of the plotted land by reference to such map operate conclusively as a dedication of the block."

In Abbott v. Mills, 3 Vt. 526, 23 Am. Dec. 222, it is said: "Whenever a public square or common is marked out and set apart . . . by the owners or proprietors and individuals are induced to purchase lots or lands bordering thereon in the expectation held out by the proprietors . . . that it should so remain, or even if there are no marks on the ground, but a map or plan is made, and village lots marked thereon and sold as such, it is not competent for the proprietors . . . to disappoint the expectations of the purchasers by resuming the lands thus set apart and appropriating them to any other use."

Our own court has adopted and applied the same principles. In Bartlett v. Bangor, 67 Me. 460, 464, Walton, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "When the owner of land within or near to a growing village or city divides it into streets and building lots, and makes a plan of the land thus divided, and then sells one or more of the lots by reference to the plan, he thereby annexes to each lot sold a right of way in the streets, which neither he nor his successors in title can afterwards interrupt or destroy."

Applying these principles in the case now under consideration, we find all the essential elements of a complete dedication of the locus by the plaintiff to the use of the public and the adjoining lot owners for a park established by the evidence. Here was a dividing of a tract of land bordering on the seashore into small^o lots for sale, the setting apart of a portion of the tract for a park, the representation of the platting by a plan showing the lots by numbers and the locus as "Bay View Park," the exhibition of the plan to purchasers, the selling of lots by express reference to the plan, the promise that the park should be graded and kept open as such, and its use by the lot owners and the public generally at their pleasure continuously for a long period of years, during which they have improved and beautified it at their own expense.

An intention on the part of the plaintiff to dedicate the locus to the public use as a park was thus clearly manifested by its acts and statements explanatory of those acts. Upon that intention so expressed, the public and individual citizens had a right to act, and did act, purchasing lots with the assurance that they were to have the full benefit and enjoyment of the locus as a public park, and entering upon and using the same for such purpose. The conclusion, therefore, must be that a complete dedication has resulted.

We think such dedication affords the defendant a justification of his acts complained of.

It is true that the fee of the soil remains in the plaintiff, for a common-law dedication does not pass the fee; but, by the dedication the plaintiff is estopped from exercising any use and control of the locus inconsistent with the full use, benefit, and enjoyment of it by the public as a park. The plaintiff's limitations as to its use and control of the locus must, therefore, be considered and determined with reference to the use for which it was dedicated—a park. In order to carry into effect such intended use, a more enlarged right of control in the public may be required, with a consequently diminished right in the plaintiff, than in the case of some other public uses, such as highways and streets.

A "park" may be defined as a piece of ground set apart to be used by the public as a place for rest, recreation, exercise, pleasure, amusement, and enjoyment. See cases collected under Words and Phrases, vol. 6, p. 5176, title "Park." The full use and benefit of a park is not realized by the enjoyment only of an open view and the right of passage upon it. The right to enjoy the pleasures and advantages that beauty and ornamentation may afford is also included in the uses and purposes of a public park.

Accordingly, by its dedication of the locus as a park the plaintiff gave up and surrendered its right to exercise any acts of control or possession of it that would hinder the public in the full enjoyment of it as a place of rest, of recreation, of amusement and enjoyment, or that would prevent the public from increasing those enjoyments by its adornment and ornamentation.

To maintain this action of trespass quare clausum, the plaintiff must show that, notwithstanding the dedication, it still retained the possession and control of the locus sufficiently to have the grass growing thereon remain uncut until it ripened into hay, or at least until it saw fit to cut it. If such possession and control by the plaintiff would interfere with the full enjoyment by the public of the use of the locus as a park, then it follows that the plaintiff had not such right of possession and control. Whether or not the grass growing upon this park, if left uncut until it ripened into hay, or late in the season, would lessen the benefits and enjoyments which the public could derive from the park, is a question of fact. We think it would, and that the park would be made more suitable for use, and afford more pleasure and enjoyment to those entitled to its use, if the grass were cut earlier and oftener. It must afford less pleasure to travel through tall grass, especially when wet by dews and fogs, than to walk over a closely cut surface; so, too, the coarse and seared stubble of a late cutting is less attractive to the eye than the green of a well-kept lawn.

The municipal authorities might have exercised control over the park and improved it, but they did not. The individual citizens interested in it and entitled to its enjoyment had the right to do that which was reasonably necessary to improve the park and render it more suitable for the uses for which it was intended. Atty. Gen. v. Abbott, 154 Mass. 327, 328, 13 L.R.A. 251, 28 N. E. 346, Heselton v. Harmon, 80 Me. 326, 14 Atl. 286.

The acts of defendant in cutting the grass were done only for the purpose of improving the park, and, in the opinion of the court, so resulted.

It would hardly be contended that defendant could be held in trespass for raking dangerous rocks from footpaths over the park, or removing unsightly underbrush, or even cutting and destroying weeds and thistles growing thereon. Wherein is there a distinction in principle between such cases and the one at bar? We think the defendant, as one of the public, and an adjoining lot owner, had a right to cut the grass as he did, for the sole purpose of improving the park, and that he was not a trespasser in so doing.

It is suggested that inconveniences may result by reason of some possible conflict in the ideas of those interested in the park as to what acts would improve and benefit it. That is possible, but not probable. As before mentioned, the municipal authorities may take charge of it under authority to make by-laws and ordinances "for the proper protection and care of public parks and squares." Rev. Stat. chap. 4, § 93, ¶ 6. If any one does that which will render the locus less suitable or useful as a park, or unlawfully interrupts the rightful enjoyment of it by others, he may be restrained; and it is not probable that rivalry for its improvement in fact will exist to the extent of inconvenience.

It follows that this action is not maintained, and the entry will be:

Judgment for defendant.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

DANIEL SHEA

v.

TOWN OF WHITMAN.

(197 Mass. 374, 83 N. E. 1096.)

Pleading — defective highway — absence of rail.

1. A declaration in an action against a town for injuries caused by a defective highway, which alleges that the highway was negligently permitted to become out of repair to the injury of plaintiff, is sufficient to cover a defect consisting of want of suitable rail or barrier to protect travelers from perils which would be encountered immediately adjacent to the limits of the highway.

Highway — safety — barrier — obstruction adjoining.

2. A town is not bound as matter of law to place a barrier in every case between a highway and a stone lying immediately adjacent thereto, which, if within the limits of the highway, would constitute an obstruction, falling over which might injure a traveler; and it is immaterial that there is nothing to mark the line of the highway.

(February 27, 1908.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Supreme Judicial Court for Plymouth County made during trial of an action brought to hold defendant liable for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by its negligence. Overruled.

The action was in tort to recover damages for an injury caused by tripping over a stone alleged to be in a highway. The declaration alleged that the street where the accident occurred was a public highway, which defendant was bound to keep in repair so as to be safe and convenient for travel; but that the same was negligently suffered to become out of repair; and that plaintiff while traveling thereon, and in the exercise of due care, was injured. The stone over which plaintiff tripped was outside the limits of the street, and it was suggested that the declaration should be amended so as to allege a failure to erect a suitable barrier to protect travelers from the stone. The suggestion was not adopted.

Further facts appear in the opinion. Mr. C. B. Snow for plaintiff. Messrs. Charles H. Edson and E. O. Achorn for defendant.

Hammond, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff was right in his contention that the declaration was broad enough to cover the case of a defect in a highway.

Case Note. — Duty of town or municipality to provide barriers to protect traveler from obstructions outside the highway.

This note is confined to cases in which the obstruction complained of was within the immediate vicinity of the highway, and does not include cases which treat of the duty of towns or municipal corporations to fence the highways to protect travelers from dangers outside the highway generally. Cases in which the highway has been built up so that it is higher than the abutting land, or where the highway extends to the edge of a declivity which is left unguarded, have not been included, as such obstructions and defects are generally held to be defects in the highway itself, and consequently are not within the scope of this note.

As to what injuries may be deemed to be proximately caused by the absence of a guardrail in a highway, see case note to Lyons v. Watt, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1135.

As to duty to trespasser with respect to excavations maintained on uninclosed land near highway, see case note to Johnson v. Paducah Laundry Co. 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 733.

Upon the general subject, "Liability of townships for defects in highway," see subject note to James v. Wellston Twp. 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1219.

There is but little conflict among the decisions as to the general rules of law which govern cases involving this question, although, of course, the courts frequently disagree upon the application of the rules to a particular state of facts. The rule sustained by the majority of the cases is that consisting of a want of a suitable rail or barrier. Pub. Stat. 1882, chap. 167, § 94, form, "Negligence of Town;" Rev. Laws, chap. 173, § 130; Alger v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 402. It was therefore unnecessary for him to amend.

The order directing a verdict for the defendant, however, was general and must stand, unless the plaintiff shows that the case should have been submitted to a jury. The plaintiff was injured by tripping over a stone. It was admitted that the stone was not within the limits of the highway. It is stated that the evidence tended to show that "it would have constituted a defect if within the limits of the way," but there is no evidence as to its size or shape. The plaintiff evidently proceeds upon the theory that where a stone which, if in the way, would constitute a defect, is so near the highway that travelers by tripping over it may get hurt, a barrier or railing should, as matter of course, be erected to protect travelers. But that is not the law. It cannot be said as a matter of law that, in every such case, a barrier should be erected. As stated by Allen, J., in Damon v. Boston, 149 Mass. 147, 151, 21 N. E. 235, "the danger which requires a railing must be of an unusual character, such as bridges, declivities, excavations, steep banks, or deep water. Spaces adjoining roads, streets, and sidewalks, and unsuitable for travel, are often left open in both country and city; and a town or city is not bound to fence against them unless their condition is such as to expose travelers to unusual hazard." See also Hayden v. Attleborough, 7 Gray, 338; Scannal v. Cambridge, 163 Mass. 91, 39 N. E. 790, and cases there cited; Logan v. New Bedford, 157 Mass. 535, 32 N. E. 910; Richardson v. Boston, 156 Mass. 145, 30 N. E. 478, and cases cited. The fact that there was nothing to mark the line of the highway is immaterial. Damon v. Boston, ubi supra.

Under the doctrine thus laid down, the plaintiff failed to show a case for the jury. Exceptions overruled.

where an obstruction or defect, although outside of the line of the highway, is so close thereto as to render the highway dangerous to a person traveling thereon in the exercise of due care, the township or municipality is liable for any injuries received therefrom; but a city or town is under no obligation to render such defect or obstruction safe for those who may wander or stray, though unintentionally, from the highway. If a person voluntarily leaves the highway for purposes of his own, a different question is presented, and cases of this character are not included in this note; nor are cases which turn wholly upon the question of the contributory negligence of the person injured.

The general rule as stated above is asserted in language very similar in a large number of cases.

Thus, in Bassett v. St. Joseph, 53 Mo. 290, 14 Am. Rep. 446, the court said: "All of the evidence in the present case shows most clearly that the excavation was either extended into the highway a few feet, or came up to the edge of the highway. In such cases, if it renders travel dangerous, it is as much the duty of the city to protect the public against the danger in the one case, as in the other; and it makes no difference in such case, whether the excavation was made by the city, or made by another, except, when not made by the authorities of the city, they would not be liable until after they had notice of the dangerous condition of the street." And to the same effect were the decisions in Halpin v. Kansas City, 76 Mo. 335, and Wiggin v. St. Louis, 135 Mo. 558, 37 S. W. 528.

So in Delphi v. Lowery, 74 Ind. 520, 39 Am. Rep. 98, it was held that the duty resting upon the municipality was not fully discharged by making the traveled part of the highway safe, but such measures as ordinary prudence required must be taken to prevent persons using ordinary care from falling into dangerous places along the side or in close proximity to the lines of the highway. And to the same general effect are several other decisions in Indiana: Higert v. Greencastle, 43 Ind. 574; Vincennes v. Spees, 35 Ind. App. 389, 74 N. E. 277; Newcastle v. Grubbs (Ind.) 86 N. E. 757.

And in Spencer v. Mayfield (Ind. App.) 85 N. E. 23, the court said: "The want of a sufficient railing and protection to prevent travelers passing upon a highway from running into some dangerous excavation, or pond, or against a wall, stone, and other dangerous obstruction, without the limits of a road, but in the general direction of travel thereon, may properly be alleged as a defect in the highway itself."

And in Hewison v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 136, 91 Am. Dec. 718, it was held that any object in, upon, or near the traveled path which would necessarily obstruct or hinder one in the use of the road for the purpose of traveling thereon, or which, from its nature and position, would be likely to produce that result, will, as a general rule, constitute a defect in the highway.

Where the insufficiency complained of was the lack of a railing or other muniment to guard against a steep bank that came within about 6 inches of the westerly limit of the highway, the surface of the ground at this point being smooth and level to the very brink, not affording even the obstruction of a ditch or a rough margin to warn the traveler that he is out of the road, it was held in Drew v. Sutton, 55 Vt. 586, 45 Am. Rep. 644, that it made no difference that this defect was without the limits of the highway, but in dangerous proximity to the way. The court said that the essential question was, Does the safety of the traveler require a railing?

And in Niblett v. Nashville, 12 Heisk. 684, 27 Am. Rep. 755, the city was held liable for injuries caused by an excavation immediately adjoining a sidewalk. The court said: "We think the true rule may be stated to be that, if an obstruction or excavation be permitted which renders the alley, street, or highway unsafe or dangerous to persons or vehicles,—whether it lie immediately in or on the alley, street, or highway, or so near it as to produce the danger to the passer at any time when he shall properly desire to use such highway,—it is such a nuisance as renders the corporation liable."

So, in Stricker v. Reedsburg, 101 Wis. 457, 77 N. W. 897, it was held that it did not necessarily follow that a stump does not constitute an actionable defect, because it was outside of the way established by user, since, if it was so close to the traveled way that a traveler on such traveled way exercising ordinary care is still liable to suffer injury therefrom, then it will be an actionable defect. To the same effect was the decision in Slivitski v. Wien, 93 Wis. 460, 67 N. W. 730.

So also there are numerous other cases which sustain the general rule that it is incumbent upon a town or municipality to keep the street or sidewalk reasonably safe for travel, and that, when such street or sidewalk is so near to an excavation, steep embankment, or other dangerous place as to render it unsafe, it is the duty of the municipality to guard against such danger by railings or barriers in such a manner as to prevent accidents, or, at least, to warn passers-by of the danger. Chicago v. Baker, 95 Ill. App. 413, affirmed in 195 Ill. 54, 62 N. E. 892; Hayden v. Attleborough, 7 Gray, 338; Alger v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 402; Woods v. Groton, 111 Mass. 357; Willey v. Portsmouth, 35 N. H. 303; Davis v. Hill, 41 N. H. 329; Ivory v. Deerpark, 116 N. Y. 476, 22 N. E. 1080; Bunch v. Edenton, 90 N. C. 431; Oklahoma City v. Meyers, 4 Okla. 686, 46 Pac. 552; Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355, 5 Am. St. Rep. 281, 5 S. E. 369.

In Hayden v. Attleborough, supra, where an abutting owner excavated a cellar close to a sidewalk, the court upheld the charge to the jury that, if the line of the highway was not indicated by any visible objects, such as fences, banks of earth, etc., and if there was nothing to show the plaintiff in the evening that the route she was pursuing was not within the way intended for public travel, and if the cellar was situated without the limits of the located way, but so near as to render the travel there dangerous, then, after proper notice, the town would be liable. To the same effect was the decision in Cogswell v. Lexington, 4 Cush. 307, where the injury was caused by a post standing just outside of the highway, and there was nothing visible to indicate the line of the highway.

And in Jewhurst v. Syracuse, 108 N. Y. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

303, 15 N. E. 409, where the injury was caused by a defective sidewalk laid by third persons outside the line of the street, there being no visible dividing line between the street and the sidewalk, a recovery was sustained upon the principles enunciated in Hayden v. Attleborough, supra. The court said, however, that there could be no recovery founded upon any duty to repair such sidewalk; for as the city never laid it, never assumed control over it, did not own it, and had no legal right to go upon the land where the plank lay, such duty to repair, or liability for neglect to repair, does not exist.

A few other cases following the general rule, present somewhat unusual features.

Thus, in Ray v. St. Paul, 40 Minn. 458, 42 N. W. 297, where a city deposited and permitted others to deposit refuse material in a city at the foot of a graded street, so that the deposit appeared to be a prolongation of the street, it was held that the city might be guilty of such negligence in the premises as to render it liable to anyone injured by stepping on the deposit.

And in Knowlton v. Pittsfield, 62 N. H. 535, it was held that a town was not liable for an injury caused by a fall on ice which had accumulated upon a private walk which was close to and parallel with the sidewalk.

Where a sidewalk was extended by private persons in front of their store to the edge of a deep creek, so that a stranger, in passing along such sidewalk and continuation thereof in the dark, was, while using due care and caution, precipitated down the bank and injured, it was held in Kinney v. Tekamah, 30 Neb. 605, 46 N. W. 835, that it was the duty of the city to cause a barrier or obstruction to be erected to apprise travelers of the termination of the walk.

In Seidel v. Woodbury, 81 Conn. 65, 70 Atl. 58, it was held that the statutes of Connecticut did not impose the duty generally upon the towns to so fence the highways as to protect travelers lawfully using the highway from dangers arising from conditions outside of the highway.

In Schimberg v. Cutler, 74 C. C. A. 33, 142 Fed. 701, a recovery was denied the plaintiff on the ground that he voluntarily and knowingly left the highway for his own purposes; but the court said that, if there was a way appropriated to the use of, or actually used by, the public along the margin of the highway upon the embankment in question, and the plaintiff while traveling on it had missed his footing, or, by any other accidental cause, without negligence on his part, had fallen off the side of the way and been injured, the county board would have been liable for his damages.

A city is under no obligation to erect barriers to protect entrances to basement stores which are situated a few feet outside of the street line. Beardsley v. Hartford, 50 Conn. 529, 47 Am. Rep. 677.

But, in Baldwin v. Springfield, 141 Mo. 205, 42 S. W. 717, it was held that a city was guilty of negligence in allowing an open space leading to a cellar or basement 2 feet from the line of the sidewalk to remain unguarded.

Many cases hold that the duty of towns and municipalities to guard travelers from defects and obstructions lying immediately outside the lines of the highway does not extend so as to require them to protect travelers from dangers met while straying from the highway. This rule is not necessarily opposed to the former rule but, rather, is applicable to a different state of facts.

Thus, in Chapman v. Cook, 10 R. I. 304, 14 Am. Rep. 686, it was held that a township was not liable for defects in a private way about 150 feet from where it branched off from the public way, although there was nothing to indicate that the way was private. The court, however, enunciated the same doctrine as presented in the foregoing cases: "Towns are required to keep their highways in such condition that people exercising ordinary care, reasonably prudent men, may pass along them with their horses, teams, and carriages, with safety and convenience, and may, with such care, be enabled to keep within the line of the highway, without being in danger of falling off, or going off, without the limit of the highway, into danger that may be contiguous to it, as ponds, sloughs, cellars, or excavations, down precipices, against their will, when they would keep within the way as laid. The pit or the cellar or the excavation, outside the way, is not, properly speaking, a defect in the way. The defect in such case, if there be any, is that no provision is made in the construction or reparation to enable the traveler to avoid such danger by keeping in the way, in other words, to continue in the use of the way as a traveler thereon."

So, in Hannibal v. Campbell, 30 C. C. A. 63, 57 U. S. App. 484, 86 Fed. 297, it was held that a city was not liable for failure to erect barriers where the plaintiff drove off the usual traveled portion of the highway and fell over a dangerous precipice about 30 feet away.

And in McHugh v. St. Paul, 67 Minn. 441, 70 N. W. 5, it was held that a city was not ordinarily liable for an injury to a traveler while straying outside of an unfenced street, when the whole street was safe and convenient to travel upon.

And in Ammerman v. Coal Twp. 187 Pa. 326, 40 Atl. 1005, it was held that a city was not liable for injuries received by a traveler who had strayed away from the highway.

So, in Murphy v. Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 575, 23 N. E. 887, the city was held not liable for injuries caused by an excavation 50 or 60 feet away from the highway and separated therefrom by an embankment.

Numerous Massachusetts cases have followed the general rule that towns or municipal corporations are not liable for failure to maintain railings merely to prevent travelers from straying from the highway, where there are no dangerous places immediately contiguous to the highway, although there 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

may be such dangerous places in the vicinity which may be reached by straying: Palmer v. Andover, 2 Cush. 600; Sparhawk v. Salem, 1 Allen, 30, 79 Am. Dec. 700; Stevens v. Boxford, 10 Allen, 25, 87 Am. Dec. 616; Adams v. Natick, 13 Allen, 429; Marshall v. Ipswich, 110 Mass. 522; Warner v. Holyoke, 112 Mass. 362; Puffer v. Orange, 122 Mass. 389, 23 Am. Rep. 368; Daily v. Worcester, 131 Mass. 452; Barnes v. Chicopee, 138 Mass. 67, 52 Am. Rep. 259; Damon v. Boston, 149 Mass. 147, 21 N. E. 235; Hudson v. Marlborough, 154 Mass. 218, 28 N. E. 147; Richardson v. Boston, 156 Mass. 145, 30 N. E. 478; Logan v. New Bedford, 157 Mass. 534, 32 N. E. 910; Scannal v. Cambridge, 163 Mass. 91, 39 N. E. 790; Doherty v. Ayer, 197 Mass. 241, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 816, 125 Am. St. Rep. 355, 83 N. E. 677.

So, in Murphy v. Gloucester, 105 Mass. 470, it was held that a town was not liable for failure to erect barriers of any kind to prevent or warn travelers from straying off the highway and falling into a dock 25 feet distant therefrom, although the land between the highway and the dock was on a level therewith and open.

In a few cases it has been held that the general rule as to the liability of towns or municipalities for defects outside, but close to the limits, of the highway, does not apply to mere unevenness of the ground or small obstacles.

Thus, in Marshall v. Ipswich, supra, a town was held not liable in failing to put a railing around a pile of broken brick a few inches in height just outside the highway. The court said: "The purpose of such railings is to make the way itself safe and proper for use. They are required in the case of bridges, embankments, or causeways, and generally where excavations, deep water, etc., are so near to the line of public travel as to expose travelers to unusual hazards. . . . But we do not understand that the fact that land 'immediately contiguous to the highway,' is uneven, or rocky, in a condition unsuited to be traveled upon, or encumbered with objects which, if in the highway, would be impediments or defects, is sufficient of itself to make it the duty of a town to set up a railing by the roadside."

And in Tilton v. Wenham, 172 Mass. 407, 52 N. E. 514, it was held, following Marshall v. Ipswich, supra, that a town was under no obligation to fence a stump about 10 inches high which stood, concealed by grass, within an inch of the traveled portion of the way, if the stump was outside the line of the highway.

The fact that the state permitted the public to use a bridge over a canal and its approaches, which were within the limits of the city, was held in Carpenter v. Cohoes, 81 N. Y. 21, 37 Am. Rep. 468, not to impose upon the city the duty to render the approaches safe. To the same effect was the decision in Veeder v. Little Falls, 100 N. Y. 343, 3 N. E. 306. However, cases of this character in which a portion of the highway is under the control of some other authority are not strictly within the scope of this note.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

EDGAR O. WHITMAN

v.

MUSKEGON LOG LIFTING & OPERATING COMPANY, Appt.

(152 Mich. 645, 116 N. W. 614.)

Logs — mark — failure to record — effect.

1. Failure of the owner of logs to record, as required by statute, the mark which he places upon them does not deprive him of his property in the logs or the privilege of proving property by the mark.

Same — abandonment.

2. The mere fact that logs placed in a river, to be floated to market, sink to the bottom and cease to float, is not sufficient to show abandonment of them.

Same — obliteration of marks — loss of property.

3. The mere fact that the marks upon the logs placed in a river, to be floated to market, and which sink and become embedded in the soil, have become obliterated, does not destroy the title of their original owners or prevent an assignment of the property to a salvage company.

Riparian rights — removal of logs.

4. The rights of the riparian owner are not unlawfully interfered with by the reclamation, from the bed of the stream, of logs placed in it to be floated to market, which sink and become partly embedded in the soil, so long as there is no injury to the banks or unlawful trespass thereon.

Logs — trespass — loss of property.

5. The title of logs taken from the bed of a stream is not changed by the unlawful trespass of the owner in piling them on the property of the riparian owner.

(May 26, 1908.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a decree in Chancery of the Circuit Court for Ionia County enjoining defendant from removing logs from complainant's land. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Nims, Hoyt, Erwin, & Vanderwerp, for appellant:

Note. — The specific question involved in WHITMAN v. MUSKEGON LOG LIFTING & OPERATING CO. as to property rights in sunken logs is one which is apparently here presented to the courts for the first time, as a careful search has disclosed no other cases in point. As to treasure trove generally, see case note to Ferguson v. Ray, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 477. And see subsequent case, Kuykendall v. Fisher, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 94. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The marked logs at the bottom of the river have not been abandoned by the owners of the marks, but are still the property of such owners, who can identify them by such marks.

St. Paul Boom Co. v. Kemp, 125 Wis. 138, 103 N. W. 259; Weiler v. Coleman, 71 Pa. 346; Long v. Davidson, 77 Wis. 509, 46 N. W. 805; Goff v. Brainerd, 58 Vt. 468, 5 Atl. 393; Log-Owners' Boom Co. v. Hubbell, 135 Mich. 69, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 573, 97 N. W. 157.

The unmarked logs in the bottom of the river belong to the defendant company.

Kennebec Log Driving Co. v. Burrill, 18 Me. 314; Domat, Civil Law (Cushing) 856, No. 2155; Pothier, Droit de Domaine de Propriété, Nos. 20, 21, 58, 60, 261; Code Napoleon, art. 2279; La. Civ. Code, art. 3383; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 580; 2 Kent, Com. *356; Eads v. Brazelton, 22 Ark. 490, 79 Am. Dec. 88; Bridges v. Hawkesworth, 21 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 75, 15 Jur. 1079; Durfee v. Jones, 11 R. I. 588, 23 Am. Rep. 528; Bowen v. Sullivan, 62 Ind. 288, 30 Am. Rep. 172; Russell v. Forty Bales Cotton, Fed. Cas. No. 12,154; Hamaker v. Blanchard, 90 Pa. 377, 35 Am. Rep. 664; McAvoy v. Medina, 11 Allen, 548, 87 Am. Dec. 733; Deaderick v. Oulds, 86 Tenn. 14, 6 Am. St. Rep. 812, 5 S. W. 487; McLaughlin v. Waite, 5 Wend. 404, 21 Am. Dec. 232; Hoagland v. Forest Park Highlands Amusement Co. 170 Mo. 335, 94 Am. St. Rep. 740, 70 S. W. 878; Williams v. State, 165 Ind. 472, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 248, 75 N. E. 875; Kuykendall v. Fisher, 61 W. Va. 87, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 94, 56 S. E. 48, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 700; Wyman v. Hurlburt, 12 Ohio, 81, 40 Am. Dec. 461; Goddard v. Winchell, 86 Iowa, 71, 17 L.R.A. 788, 41 Am. St. Rep. 481, 52 N. W. 1124; Danielson v. Roberts, 44 Or. 108, 65 L.R.A. 526, 102 Am. St. Rep. 627, 74 Pac. 913; Ferguson v. Ray, 44 Or. 557, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 477, 102 Am. St. Rep. 648, 77 Pac. 600, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1.

Defendant has a right to go upon the river to recover both marked and unmarked logs.

Carter v. Thurston, 58 N. H. 104, 42 Am. Dec. 584; Gould, Waters, § 102; Forster v. Juniata Bridge Co. 16 Pa. 393, 55 Am. Dec. 509; Brown v. Chadbourne, 31 Me. 24, 50 Am. Dec. 641; Treat v. Lord, 42 Me. 552, 66 Am. Dec. 298.

Mr. Edwin H. Lyon, with Messrs. John G. Anderson and William A. Norton, for appellee:

Chattel property embedded in the soil belongs to the owner of the land.

South Staffordshire Water Co. v. Sharman [1896] 2 Q. B. 44; Elwes v. Brigg Gas Co. L. R. 33 Ch. Div. 562; Ferguson v. Ray, 44 Or. 557, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 477, 102 Am. St.

Rep. 648, 77 Pac. 600, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1; Burdick v. Chesebrough, 94 App. Div. 532, 88 N. Y. Supp. 13; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 582; Hooper v. Hobson, 57 Me. 273, 99 Am. Dec. 770; Ensminger v. People, 47 Ill. 384, 95 Am. Dec. 500; R. v. Rowe, Bell, C. C. 93; Barker v. Bates, 13 Pick. 255, 23 Am. Dec. 678.

One floating his property down a stream has no right, without license, to use the banks of the stream.

Pearsall v. Post, 20 Wend. 111; Olson v. Merrill, 42 Wis. 213; Compton v. Hankins, 90 Ala. 411, 9 L.R.A. 387, 24 Am. St. Rep. 823, 8 So. 76; Haines v. Hall, 17 Or. 165, 3 L.R.A. 615, 20 Pac. 831; Smith v. Atkins, 110 Ky. 119, 53 L.R.A. 790, 96 Am. St. Rep. 425, 60 S. W. 930; Harrington v. Edwards, 17 Wis. 586, 84 Am. Dec. 768; Wetmore v. Atlantic White Lead Co. 37 Barb. 94; Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 36 Barb. 127; The Magnolia v. Marshall, 39 Miss. 109; Pursell v. Stover, 110 Pa. 43, 20 Atl. 403; Barker v. Bates, 13 Pick. 261, 23 Am. Dec. 678; Treat v. Lord, 42 Me. 552, 66 Am. Dec. 298.

McAlvay, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Complainant, a riparian owner along the Muskegon river, a stream used for many years for the navigation, floating, and driving of saw logs, and other forest products, filed his bill of complaint against defendant company, seeking to restrain it from digging up and removing from the bed of said stream all saw logs and other forest products, and from taking away from the premises of complainant all such logs and products already taken from the bed of said stream and piled upon said premises by defendant, claiming to be the owner of all such property by reason of his riparian proprietorship, and praying the court to so decree and determine. From a decree granting complainant full relief as prayed, defendant has appealed.

The Muskegon river has been used for the navigation of forest products to as great an extent as any river in Michigan. Many hundreds of millions of feet of saw logs and other forest products have been lumbered and put afloat in the waters of this river to be floated to the places where they were to be manufactured. That it is and always has been a navigable stream for such purposes is not in dispute in this case. This record shows that in navigating forest products along a stream, certain logs from various causes sink to the bottom, and by the action of the water some of them become more or less embedded in the soil. These are called "sunken logs" and "deadheads." Defendant is a Michigan corporation operating on Muskegon river, engaged in raising these sunken and deadhead logs from their bed, under contract with the original owners of a large number of these logs to raise from the bed of the river logs bearing their log marks, and float them to their mills at Muskegon for an agreed consideration. Owners of logs put in the water to be run down stream, for purposes of identification, put their log mark upon each log. By statute logs put into the water must be marked with log marks duly recorded, and logs having marks impressed thereon are presumed to belong to the person owning the recorded mark. On some of the logs raised by defendant the marks have become obliterated. Upon these logs defendant has placed its own mark, as soon as they were raised. All the logs when raised are water soaked and heavy. They are placed upon the banks of the river at different points in rollways to dry, so that they will float when put into the water. There are now piled upon the banks of the river upon complainant's land, logs which have been raised from the river bed by defendant company.

The facts in the case are practically undisputed. The court granted complainant relief upon the ground that the marked logs had been abandoned by their original owners, and, if not abandoned, were in the same situation as the unmarked logs because the marks were not properly recorded, and that all logs, both marked and unmarked, belonged to the riparian proprietor by virtue of his ownership of the soil to the middle thread of the stream, and defendant had no right to recover or remove any of them.

Appellant alleges that the case presents the following questions: (1) As to the title to logs still in the bottom of the river and upon which the original log marks are distinguishable; (2) as to the title to logs still in the bottom of the river and upon which the marks have become obliterated; (3) as to the right of defendant to go upon the river to recover both marked and unmarked logs; (4) as to the title to logs which defendant company has already removed from the bed of the river, and which are now piled on complainant's land.

1. The court held in effect that the log marks in question were not recorded according to law, and were no evidence of identification of the logs of the owners of the marks. In this case it is not necessary to consider the construction given by the court to § 5083, 2 Comp. Laws 1897, relative to recording log marks, nor do we intimate that such construction was correct, for the reason that the failure to record the log marks could only deprive the owners of the statutory presumption of ownership. The fact that the statute makes the recorded mark prima facie evidence of ownership of logs upon which it is impressed is no warrant for the inference that the owner is deprived of his property, title to which could be established by other means, one of which might be the fact that his logs were stamped with the mark in dispute, which he in fact used and put upon his logs. St. Paul Boom Co. v. Kemp, 125 Wis. 138, 103 N. W. 259; Weiler v. Coleman, 71 Pa. 346.

The court held that the marked logs had been abandoned, and therefore belonged to complainant as riparian proprietor. We do not find from this record any evidence upon which to base such a finding. Complainant introduced no testimony on the question of abandonment, and the fact that the marked logs were in the river bottom is of itself not sufficient to support such finding. There is abundant proof to show that these logs were not abandoned. The testimony of complainant and his witnesses and the witnesses for defendant shows without contradiction that efforts were made by the owners each year for many years to recover sunken logs, and many were in fact recovered each year. The authorities are harmonious in holding that there must be an intention to abandon, without which there can be no abandonment. "The intention is the first and paramount object of inquiry." 1 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 5, and cases cited. "The mere failure to exercise the act of removal would not operate as an abandonment or proof of an intention to abandon." Log Owners' Boom. Co. v. Hubbell, 135 Mich. 65, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 573, 97 N. W. 157. In the case at bar an abandonment of property of great value is claimed upon the bare fact that the act of removal has not yet been exercised. In addition to the evidence as to the steps taken each year by the owners of the log marks to recover their sunken logs, the proofs show that they have not yet abandoned logging upon the Muskegon river. There was no abandonment, and the title to the marked logs already removed from the water and those still remaining in the bottom of the river is in the owners of the marks and those lawfully claiming under them.

2. It appears undisputed in the record that, for more than thirty years, a custom known and acquiesced in by all log owners and operators upon Muskegon river has prevailed that sunken and deadhead logs raised from the bottom of the river upon which log marks are no longer distinguishable were retained by the booming company engaged in such work as its property, and were stamped with its log mark. In raising these logs defendant is the successor of the Log Owners' Booming Company, which is still operating on Muskegon river as a booming company, but not engaged in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the work of raising sunken and deadhead logs; that work being carried on by defendant under contracts with the owners of nearly all the log marks originally used on the river for a consideration to raise their logs and bring them to Muskegon. The testimony of complainant and his principal witness shows that they had knowledge of such custom, and that complainant as late as 1903 had entered into a contract with the booming company to raise logs sunken and embedded in the stream along his property, and did do so, and delivered all such logs, marked and unmarked, to the company, without questioning its right or title. Defendant urges that such custom has the force of law, and cannot be questioned by complainant.

Complainant's claim in this case is that logs sunken in the river and partly or entirely covered with the soil of the action of the current, and upon which the marks are no longer distinguishable, belong to the riparian proprietor by virtue of his ownership of the soil to the middle thread of the stream. The distinction is made by complainant between personal property lost and found upon the surface and the same kind of property found embedded in the soil; it being admitted that the former may belong to the finder. Can it be said that any of this property may be treated as lost property? If it is not to be so considered, then a discussion of the rights of the finder and the rights of the proprietor, upon whose land the property is found, whether on the surface or embedded in the soil, would be foreign to the issue and fruitless.

We have already arrived at the conclusion in this opinion that the proof shows that the marked logs had not been abandoned. The title to that class of logs, then, continues in the original owners of their representatives and assigns. The law requires that all logs put into these waters must be marked. The presumption follows that the great share of these logs were originally marked for the purpose of identification, and that the abrasions of transportation have obliterated the marks upon the unidentified logs. Can we say on that account that the logs upon which the marks have become obliterated have been abandoned or lost? The efforts made every year by all of the log owners to recover their sunken logs were directed to the whole mass of logs put into the waters to be navigated to market, and all kinds were recovered each year. The obliteration of the marks was necessarily gradual, so that a log readily identified at one date might within a short time lose its identity as far as the mark was concerned. The proof which supports the finding that there had been no abandonment of marked logs will apply with equal force to those logs from which the marks have been obliterated by the abrasions of navigation. The loss of its mark does not divest the owner of his title to the log. The mark simply makes identification certain. We find no evidence in the case to show that these unmarked logs have been either abandoned or lost. The title, therefore, to such property, is also in the original owners and their representatives and assigns. And the fact that they cannot say to which owner the unmarked logs respectively belong does not divest them of the ownership, nor of the right to make any contract or arrangement they see fit with defendant to raise their property, and, according to a custom long established, to allow it to take such of the logs as are without marks. It is taking no property from complainant which by purchase or gift has come to him. His only claim to it can be by reason of the riparian ownership, which we will next consider.

3. An immense commerce in the navigation of logs and forest products upon this stream has been carried on for many years by those engaged in lumbering. All the logs now in the stream were put into its waters by the owners for the sole purpose of navigation, and for that purpose this stream is a public highway, as this court has frequently decided. This court will take judicial notice that, when the specific gravity of a saw log becomes greater than that of water, it will sink to the bottom, and that in streams of any considerable current such sunken logs will become embedded in the soil to a greater or less extent. This we assert is one of the incidents of the use of the stream for the lawful purpose of navigating logs and forest products. It is not necessary to cite authorities to show that, in navigating a stream for any lawful purpose, the navigator for that purpose may make all such reasonable use of such stream as may be necessary, and which does not deprive the riparian proprietor of his rights or the enjoyment thereof. We hold that to recover property, marked or unmarked, not abandoned or lost, from the bed of a stream, without injury to its banks or unlawful trespass thereon, is no unlawful interference with the rights or enjoyment of the riparian owner. Such recovery would be a proper and lawful use of the stream, and would be a right incident to the business of navigation. As we understand the argument of complainant, this right is conceded to an owner recovering his property about the title and the identification of which there is no dispute.

4. From the views herein expressed we hold that the logs now remaining upon complainants premises, which have been raised from the bed of the river and placed there by defendant, are not the property of complainant. Upon complainant's own theory they could not be held to be his property, for the reason that there is no evidence in the case identifying these particular logs as having come from the bed of the stream on complainant's land. The claimed admission in the answer does not so state. Defendant very properly disclaims in the oral argument any right to put these logs on complainant's land. Its agents and servants in so doing were unlawfully trespassing upon complainant's premises. Such trespass, however, did not operate to give complainant any title to the property. For all of which trespasses complainant has an adequate and complete remedy at law.

Our conclusion is that the circuit judge was in error in granting relief to complainant. The decree is reversed, and a decree will be entered in this court dismissing the bill of complainant, with costs of both courts.

Ostrander, Hooker, Moore, and Carpenter, JJ., concurred.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT. (Division No. 1.)

MINNIE TRIGG, Resp.,
v.

WATER, LIGHT, & TRANSIT COMPANY OF CARROLLTON, Appt.

(215 Mo. 521, 114 S. W. 972.)

Street railway — person on track — duty.

1. The one in charge of an electric car is not bound to stop the car or slacken its speed upon discovering an object beside the track, which he takes to be a clump of dirt, although it proves in fact to be a man,

Case Note. — Duty of person in charge of street car upon perceiving an object the character of which is unknown, but which is in fact a person helpless on or near the track.

An examination of the case note appended to Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hathaway, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 498, will disclose that the duty of persons in charge of a train upon a steam railroad, upon perceiving an object the character of which is unknown, but which is in fact a trespasser on or near the track, has been frequently considered by the courts. There appear, however, to be only two other cases where, as in TRIGG v. WATER, LIGHT, & TRANSIT Co., the question is treated in its relation to the duty of persons in charge of a street car.

One of those cases, Werner v. Citizens' R.

whom he strikes before he can stop the car, after he discovers that it is a man.

Same — duty to look out.

2. Those in charge of a street car are not bound to look out for persons lying on the embankment of the right of way, although it is within the limits of a public street, if there is nothing to show that anyone ever used that portion of the embankment for any purpose whatever.

Same — speed — negligence.

3. Running a street car from 12 to 20 miles an hour at night, in a sparsely settled community, upon a track elevated on an embankment 3 feet high, is not per se negligence.

Same — contributory negligence.

4. The mere fact that a street car was running at a negligent rate of speed when it struck a person beside the track will not entitle him to recover for the injury if he was negligent in being where he was when struck.

(Lamm, J., dissents from proposition 2.)

(December 23, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Carroll County granting a new trial after verdict in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's husband. Reversed.

Co. 81 Mo. 368, is sufficiently set out in the foregoing opinion.

The other case, Stelk v. McNulta, 40 C. A. 357, 99 Fed. 138, draws a distinction between cases like Missouri P. R. Co. v. Prewitt, 59 Kan. 734, 54 Pac. 1067, and other cases considered in the note above referred to, involving the injuring or killing of a trespasser upon a railroad company's right of way, and a case where the person is killed or injured under such circumstances while on a public street. In this connection the court said: "The locomotive driver has the right to assume that the object, if animate, will leave the track upon hearing the coming train. It is quite a different matter, however, where railway trains, whether propelled by steam or electricity, pass along the crowded thoroughfares of a populous city. The care to be exercised is relative, and must be proportionate to the dangers reasonably to be apprehended." The court, however, under the facts of the case, held that there was no liability on the part of the company, it appearing from the findings of facts and stipulation of facts that the motorman of an electric car, in the evening, in the outskirts of Chicago, a district sparsely populated and unlighted, upon reaching the crest of an incline, saw, at a distance of about 65 feet, an object upon the track which both he and a messenger boy standing with him upon the platform took to be a dog; that he thereupon rang the gong and applied the brakes, and, when

Statement by Woodson, J.:

The plaintiff instituted this suit in the circuit court of Carroll county against the defendant to recover the sum of $5,000 damages sustained by her for the alleged negligence in killing her husband, Charles Trigg. There was a trial had before the court and jury, which resulted in a verdict and judgment for defendant, and in due time plaintiff filed her motion for a new trial, which was by the court sustained. From this order of the court sustaining said motion, the defendant duly appealed the cause to this court.

The petition, in substance, charges: That the accident which resulted in the death of Charles Trigg, respondent's husband, occurred on South Main street, in the town of Carrollton, where the track of appellant was practically straight, and the view unobstructed for a long distance; that pedestrians and footmen had, for a long time prior thereto, used said track traveling between the city of Carrollton and the town of South Carrollton; that appellant had knowledge of such user; that, at the time of the accident, the said Charles Trigg was upon appellant's railway track in a sitting or reclining position; that appellant's servants and employees saw, or, by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, could have seen, him in such dangerous position in time the car had gone a little farther, seeing that the object did not move, applied the reverse, which, in consequence of the car being on the down grade, did not act; it further appearing that, until the real nature of the object was perceived, the motorman had no thought that it was a human being, and it being expressly stipulated that he had no reason to expect a human being to be upon the track at the point in question. The court said that it was not the duty of the motorman, upon perceiving the object, to bring the car to a stop to discover its nature: that he did no less than his duty required of him when he checked the speed of the car and sounded his gong, and, as soon as he perceived that the object did not respond to his signal, reversed the power.

Two cases reported since the note above referred to have considered the question therein discussed, as to the liability of a railroad company for killing or injuring a trespasser under such circumstances. Thus, in San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. McMillen, 100 Tex. 562, 102 S. W. 103, it was held error to submit to the jury the issue of discovered peril, upon evidence that, while a train was running at about 35 miles an hour, the fireman discovered an object upon the track 400 feet distant, and at once began to ring the bell, and continued to ring it until the object, which proved to be a man, was struck; that, at a distance of 300 feet, the engineer discovered the object, to have averted the injury and accident which resulted in his death, but negligently conducting themselves in the premises, and unskillfully managing and operating said car, and failing to sound the usual and ordinary danger signals, and running and propelling said car at a reckless and unusual rate of speed, ran its car against the said Charles Trigg, and wounded, cut, and bruised him, from the effects of which he died. The answer contained, first, a general denial of the allegations of the petition. Then, after admitting the incorporation of defendant, specially pleaded contributory negligence as a defense to the action alleged in plaintiff's petition in this: First, that respondent's husband, Charles Trigg, at a late hour of the night, voluntarily went upon appellant's railway track and assumed a place of danger by lying down upon the dump or embankment upon which the tracks of the railway were laid, in dangerous proximity to cars passing on said track, and neglected to look and listen for the approach of cars on said track, when, by looking, he could have seen, or, listening, could have heard, the approach of cars in time to have gotten to a place of safety; and, second, that said Charles Trigg was in such a state of intoxication that he did not exercise ordinary care, prudence, and caution to prevent and avoid danger to him-but that neither recognized it as a human being, until a point 200 feet distant, whereupon the engineer resorted to every means at his hand to stop the train, except reversing the engine, it appearing that, even if the engine had been reversed, the train could not have been stopped in time to avoid the injury. The court said that, admitting the contention of counsel for the plaintiff that the deceased was standing upon the track when discovered by the trainman, the engineer would not have been required to stop the train or to make any effort to slow it up until he discovered that the man would not leave the track; and, upon that assumption, the doctrine of discovered peril was not in the case.

So, in Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 529, 102 S. W. 888, it was held that, the employees having done everything possible to stop the train after discovering that an object on the track was a human being, no liability could be based upon their failure to discover or know that the object on the track was a man at the time they first discovered it, at a distance of half a mile, it appearing that they were not then able to tell what it was, but rang the bell and blew the whistle for quite a distance before reaching the point at which they discovered its real nature. This case is decided upon the authority of prior Kentucky decisions discussed in the note already referred to. As a matter of fact, the deceased in this case was an employee of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) self. It appears that the parties went to trial without a reply having been filed.

The facts of the case, as disclosed by the record, are substantially as follows:

At the time of the injury and death of Charles Trigg, he was the lawful husband of the plaintiff. That the defendant was a street railway corporation, owning and operating a street railway with electric power in the town of Carrollton, a city of about 4,000 inhabitants. The track was a single one, extending from the public square in said city south to the Wabash Railway Company's depot, located in South Carrollton, about 1 mile from the public square. The depots of the Burlington Railway and Santa Fé are situated on the line of said street railway. The principal, if not the only, traffic defendant is engaged in, was in carrying passengers to and from Carrollton to said depots. From the intersection of the track of the street railway with those of the Santa Fé for a distance of some 450 feet south, the former runs along the west side of South Main street, and is located on an embankment which is about 3 feet in height and is about the same distance above the grade of the traveled portion of the street. About 400 feet south of the Santa Fé crossing, the street railway track has a slight curve, about three degrees, to the south-road; but, for the purposes of the principle involved, the case was treated the same as if he had been a trespasser, since, at the time of the accident, he was not engaged in any duty that he owed to the railroad company.

It will be observed that the question discussed in this note and in the earlier note presupposes that the person killed or injured was not guilty of contributory negligence in getting into a position of peril, or, if so, that the doctrine of last clear chance, or humanitarian doctrine, so-called, or the principle that contributory negligence is not a defense against a wanton or wilful injury, would obviate the effect of such antecedent negligence, assuming that there had been a breach of duty on the part of the employees after discovering the object on the track. It is also to be noted that a distinctive feature of the question here discussed is that the person killed or injured was in fact helpless on the track. The duty of employees upon discovering a person upon the track who, so far as appears, is not helpless, so as to prevent him from stepping from the track in time to avert an injury, presents another question. One aspect of that question is treated in the case note to Southern R. Co. v. Chatman, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 283, as to the right of persons in charge of a train to presume that a child will get out of danger.

west, leaving the street, and crossing the Wakenda creek bottom west of the Wabash depot. The Santa Fé depot is about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile from South Carrollton, and the ground between the two is a low bottom, and the street railway track is located upon trestles much of that distance. There are but three houses located in this bottom along said street and track. The traveled portion of Main street lies east of the street railway track, and runs almost parallel with it, and due south across the Wabash tracks a short distance east of the Wabash depot. Pedestrians, with the knowledge and acquiescence of defendant, had, for years prior to the time of the injury, used said street car track as a path or pass way between Carrollton and South Carrollton.

The injury to Charles Trigg occurred at night on September 10, 1904, about 12 o'clock, at a point on the east side of the track, about 450 feet south of the intersection of the street railway track with those of the Santa Fé. The car which struck deceased had been to the Wabash depot to meet passengers who got off the Wabash train due there between 11 and 12 o'clock. There were many passengers who got off that train and took passage on the street car for Carrollton. Between the time the street car passed over the Santa Fé tracks going south to the Wabash depot, and the time it returned with said passengers, a train from the west came into Carrollton on the Santa Fé road. Deceased resided in Carrollton, and had been at Norborne that day, and had returned home on the Santa Fé train before mentioned. When Trigg left the train at Carrollton, he was in a state of intoxication. He staggered about the platform, and then went east in the direction of Main street, and turned south on Main street in the direction of the place where the injury occurred. He was seen no more until the injury occurred. Mr. Trigg laid down on the east side of the embankment at the point where the street car track begins to curve to the southwest, and where it is laid along and upon the embankment before mentioned. He was lying on his back, with his head toward the top of the embankment between or near the east end of two cross-ties, with his feet projecting down the slope of the embankment towards the traveled portion of Main street. The ends of the ties extended beyond the east rail some 16 inches. The space between the two ties was not well filled with ballast, thereby leaving a depression, the exact depth of which is not clearly shown. No portion of his body extended much, if any, above the top surface of the east end of the ties. Weeds had grown up along the east slope of the embankment, but had been cut for a distance of some 12 inches east of the east end of the ties; but the evidence fails to show just how high the weeds were at the time of the accident, except that they obstructed the view of his body, which was lying east of the strip from which the weeds had been cut.

As the car was returning from the Wabash depot in South Carrollton with its load of passengers, it was running from 12 to 20 miles an hour; and, when it reached a point about 25 feet from where Trigg was lying, the motorman saw him in the position before stated. The plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show: That the motorman in charge of said car said, immediately after the accident occurred, that he saw deceased when the car was about 175 or 200 feet from where he was lying, but that he thought he was a clump of dirt lying by the side of the track; that, immediately upon discovering Trigg, the motorman applied the brakes and other appliances which were at his command and exerted every effort within his power to stop the car and avert the injury. The efforts put forth by him were so effective that the speed of the car was so greatly and suddenly slackened that it was perceptibly noticed by all the passengers, and caused the car to jump and bound as if running over the ties, and so alarmed some of them that they left their seats with a view of leaving the car. As the car approached Trigg, no portion of his body was in a position that could have been struck by the car, had he remained still, for the reason that his head was several inches below the portions of the car which projected beyond the rail, and nearer the outer line of the east side of the car. No one saw him move, but, after the injury, he was found lying with his face almost down, with a deep wound upon the top part of the back of the head, and some slight bruises on his right shoulder. The injury on the back of the head fractured his skull and killed him almost instantly. The motorman was at all times at his place of duty and was keeping a vigilant outlook along the track in front of him, which was illuminated by an electric headlight attached to the front end of the car. While all of the witnesses testified that the car was running from 12 to 20 miles an hour when the motorman discovered Trigg, yet all of them testified that said speed was the usual and ordinary speed the car generally ran at the place of the accident, and that there was nothing in the rate of speed which indicated to any of them that the car was recklessly run or operated. After the motorman discovered the dangerous position in which Trigg was lying, it was impossible for him to stop or so slacken the car as to prevent the injury. The injury occurred at the point where the street railway track curves to the south-west. The east rail at that point was one or two inches higher than the west rail. The evidence tended to show that the height of the east rail, and the shadow cast thereby, and the curve in the track prevented the rays of the headlight falling full upon Trigg, and that, in consequence thereof, he was more or less obscured from the sight of the motorman, as the car approached him from the south. The car, in passing over the trestles, made a great deal of noise, and could have been heard for half a mile or more, and there was nothing to have prevented deceased from hearing the same or from having seen the headlight of the car had he been looking and listening. Where counsel for plaintiff contends that any of the facts before stated are not supported by the evidence, we will consider same later in the opinion.

At the close of plaintiff's case, defendant tendered a demurrer to the evidence, which was by the court overruled, and again, at the close of all the evidence in the case, defendant requested a peremptory instruction requiring the jury to find and return a verdict for the defendant, which was also by the court refused. The court refused to give the third instruction requested by plaintiff which is as follows: "(3) The court instructs the jury that, if they believe from the evidence that the track of the defendant at the place where Charles Trigg was struck and killed was laid along and upon a public street in the city of Carrollton, and that defendant's track at such point was, on the 10th day of September, 1904, and for a long time prior thereto had been, frequented by persons and used by pedestrians as a pass way or footpath with the knowledge of defendant and its employees in charge of its cars, and that the car that struck and killed Charles Trigg, in approaching such point upon the track, was being run at unusual and reckless rate of speed, and that no warning of the approach of said car was given by the sounding of the gong or bell thereon,—then the jury may take into consideration all such facts, as tending to show and prove negligence on the part of defendant in the operation of said car." On behalf of the defendant, the court instructed the jury as follows. "(2) The court instructs the jury that there is no evidence in this case that the car, at the time deceased was killed, was being run at an improper or reckless rate of speed, and they will conclusively presume that the car was being run at a safe rate of speed at the time the accident occurred." Because of the refusal of the court to give plaintiff's third instruction, above quoted, and because of the giving of the second instruction for defendant, plaintiff's motion for a new trial was by the court sustained, and a new trial ordered, from which order and ruling appellant prosecutes this appeal.

The errors assigned are as follows: (1) The court erred in overruling defendant's demurrer to the evidence. (2) The court erred in not giving defendant's peremptory instruction tendered by defendant at the close of all the evidence in the case. (3) The court committed error in sustaining plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

Messrs. Lozier, Morris, & Atwood and Jones & Conkling, for appellant:

It was not the duty of the railroad company to anticipate the presence of such footmen as were using the track or the side thereof as a bed to sleep upon.

Ayers v. Wabash R. Co. 190 Mo. 228, 88 S. W. 608; Yarnall v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 75 Mo. 575; Thomp. Neg. §§ 1789-1792; Vizacchero v. Rhode Island Co. 26 R. I. 392, 69 L.R.A. 188, 59 Atl. 105; McGauley v. St. Louis Transit Co. 179 Mo. 583, 79 S. W. 461; Coatney v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 151 Mo. 35; 51 S. W. 1036; Lyons v. Illinois C. R. Co. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1032, 59 S. W. 507; Hall v. Western & A. R. Co. 123 Ga. 213, 51 S. E. 311; Beach, Neg. §§ 391, 392; Parish v. Western & A. R. Co. 102 Ga. 285, 40 L.R.A. 264, 29 S. E. 715.

The deceased was guilty of negligence which was the sole and proximate cause of the injury.

Davies v. People's R. Co. 159 Mo. 6, 59 S. W. 982; Mockowik v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 196 Mo. 550, 94 S. W. 256; Moore v. Lindell R. Co. 176 Mo. 547, 75 S. W. 672; Petty v. St. Louis & M. River R. Co. 179 Mo. 666, 78 S. W. 1003; Reno v. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co. 180 Mo. 489, 79 S. W. 464; Aldrich v. St. Louis Transit Co. 101 Mo. App. 77, 74 S. W. 141; Markowitz v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 186 Mo. 350, 69 L.R.A. 389, 85 S. W. 351; Roenfeldt v. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co. 180 Mo. 554, 79 S. W. 706; Ries v. St. Louis Transit Co. 179 Mo. 7, 77 S. W. 734; Shanks v. Springfield Traction Co. 101 Mo. App. 707, 74 S. W. 386; Zumault v. Kansas City Suburban Belt R. Co. 175 Mo. 290, 74 S. W. 1015; Abbott v. Kansas City Elev. R. Co. 121 Mo. App. 582, 97 S. W. 198; Cole v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 121 Mo. App. 605, 97 S. W. 555; Bennett v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 122 Mo. App. 704, 99 S. W. 480; Ayers v. Wabash R. Co. and McGauley v. St. Louis Transit Co. supra; Thomp. Neg. §§ 1789, 1790, 1792; Clegg v. Southern R. Co. 133 N. C. 303, 45 S. E. 657; Upton v. South Carolina & G. Extension R. Co. 128 N. C. 173, 38 S. E. 736; Carter v. Southern R. Co. 135 N. C. 498, 47 S. E. 614; Gulf,

C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 137. 73 S. W. 413, 74 S. W. 803; Hall v. Western & A. R. Co. and Lyons v. Illinois C. R. Co. supra; Hughes v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2288, 67 S. W. 984; Kendall v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 25 Ky. L. Rep. 793, 76 S. W. 376; Beach, Neg. §§ 391, 392.

Messrs. Russell Knelsley and Busby & Busby, for respondent:

It was the duty of the motorman, who actually saw deceased, to slacken speed.

Werner v. Citizens' R. Co. 81 Mo. 373; Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 482.

Although railway servants use every effort to avoid injury after discovering the peril of persons injured, and find it impossible to do so, still, that will not excuse them in cases where they have been guilty of negligence before, which created the impossibility.

Murrell v. Missouri P. R. Co. 105 Mo. App. 94, 79 S. W. 505; Payne v. Missouri P. R. Co. 105 Mo. App. 160, 79 S. W. 719.

Woodson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The first insistence of counsel for appellant challenges the correctness of the action of the trial court in refusing to give the demurrer to the evidence, asked at the close of respondent's case. It is the contention of appellant that the record discloses beyond question that the deceased was guilty of negligence which contributed directly to his injury and death, and for that reason respondent failed to make out a prima facie case, and, consequently, the case should have been taken from the jury. Counsel for respondent do not dispute the fact that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, but, upon the contrary, he was guilty thereof; and seek to escape the effect of that concession by interposing the "humanitarian doctrine." In fact, the petition is bottomed upon that doctrine. It is earnestly insisted by counsel for respondent that the testimony introduced in her behalf tended to prove that the motorman who was in charge of the car which collided with her deceased husband saw him lying in the dangerous position in which he was struck about the time the car left the north trestle, which was about 200 feet south of the point where deceased was struck, and that, by the use of ordinary care, he could have stopped the car in time to have prevented the injury, or could have given him timely warning of its approach, which would have caused him to have moved to a place of safety before the car reached him. The substance of that evidence was as follows: That, a few seconds after the accident occurred, and while the motorman and the passengers were standing there discussing the matter, the motorman stated, in the presence of some of them, that about the time the car left the north end of the trestle he said, in substance, that he saw an object ahead, and thought it was a clump of dirt, and, as soon as he got close enough to distinguish what it was, he reversed his car, but that he was then too close to deceased to stop it in time to avoid striking him. Upon objections made by counsel for appellant, other testimony of similar import was by the court excluded; but, as that admitted was sufficient to properly present the legal proposition involved, we will not discuss the action of the court in so excluding it.

There is other evidence in the record which tends to show that, had the motorman attempted to stop the car when he first discovered the object lying up against the embankment, he could have done so in time to have averted the injury, and, having failed to do so, he was guilty of such negligence as authorizes a recovery for respondent. Her counsel insists that the evidence of this case brings it within the spirit of the cases of Werner v. Citizens' R. Co. 81 Mo. 368, and Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 475. In the former case, the evidence showed that the deceased was lying between the rails of a street car track on Olive street, in the city of St. Louis, and that the driver of the car saw him lying there in time to have stopped the car before it struck him; but, in the darkness of the night, he mistook him for a sack of oats, and made no attempt to stop the car until it was too late to do so. In discussing that case, this court, on pages 373, 374, and 375, of 81 Mo., used the following language: "If the darkness of the night had prevented the driver from seeing the object on the track, it may be conceded that no negligence would be imputed to him; but the fallacy of the argument lies in the deduction from the fact that a total obscuration of his sight would release him from the charge of negligence, that a partial obscuration, to the extent it went and the effect it produced, would relieve him of the charge. This is a non sequitur. There would have been nothing to call into activity more care and prudence on the part of the driver than was necessary to guide the horses when no danger was apparent, or reasonably apprehended; but, when he could see an object on the track as large as a sack of oats, he had reason to apprehend danger, not only to his passengers and the property in his care, but to strangers or their property, and to hold that he might drive on with the same indifference as if he had seen nothing on the track, because he could not discern what it was, would be to sanction recklessness, and ignore the duty of carriers to avoid injuring persons and property when aware of the danger to which they are exposed, or when they have reasonable grounds for an apprehension that, by proceeding as usual with their vehicles, injury will be inflicted upon persons or property. Counsel indulges in a criticism of the cases in which this court has held that, if the negligence of a defendant, which contributed directly to cause the injury, occurred after the danger in which the injured party had placed himself by his own negligence was, or, by the exercise of reasonable care, might have been, discovered by the defendant in time to have averted the injury, then defendant is liable, however gross the negligence of the injured party may have been in placing himself in such position of danger. Such is the well-established doctrine of this court. Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. supra; Harlan v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 65 Mo. 26; Zimmerman v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 71 Mo. 484; Frick v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 75 Mo. 611; Kelley v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 75 Mo. 140. And the case at bar is an apt illustration of the wisdom of the rule. In a populous city, on one of its public thoroughfares which pedestrians are crossing at all hours of the day and night, the driver of a street car on a dark night discovers an object 15 feet ahead of his horses, which he supposes to be a bundle of hay or a sack of oats, with but little reason to suppose, and which he could have ascertained, to be a human being if he had checked his horses and driven slowly up to the object, instead of recklessly driving ahead, looking, not at the object, but over his horses' heads, not endeavoring to determine what the object was, but indifferent to its character, not stopping the car or checking its speed until he had run over and killed a human being, when the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, involving a delay of only 10 or 15 seconds, would have disclosed that it was a human being, and saved a human life. It is contended by the defendant's counsel that the discovery of the danger in which Werner had placed himself, and the infliction of the injury, were simultaneous, and that therefore this doctrine has no application. The facts of the case, as testified to by defendant's witness, do not sustain that theory. The driver testified that he saw the object 15 feet ahead of the horses. That he could have stopped the car in 2 feet; so that he had ample time, after seeing the object on the track, to stop the car before the horses reached it."

In the latter case, a child twenty-one months old escaped from its keeper and had strayed upon a railroad track, and sat down between the rails. The agents in charge of the train saw the child in time to have avoided the injury, had they exercised ordinary care in doing so, but they mistook the child for a dog, and made no attempt to stop the train until it was too late to prevent the injury. In discussing that case, this court, on pages 482 and 483 of 60 Mo., said: "Moreover, it is clearly shown that the engineer and fireman discovered the infant, and had abundance of time to have stopped the train and saved its life; but they debated as to what it really was until it was too late. Might they not, by a close scrutiny and a proper observance, which it was their duty to give when they discovered an object on the track, have discovered that it was a child? The testimony is conclusive that the child was dressed in red, and that would have very easily distinguished it from a hog or a dog. The instruction, if it was intended to convey the idea that the employees, by using ordinary skill and caution after they observed the object on the track, could have distinguished that it was a child, was entirely proper. . . . The case presented, then, is that the persons running the train saw something on the track in time to avoid collision or injury; and if, after they observed it, they could, by the exercise of that care and caution which the law imposes upon them, have perceived that it was a child in time to stop the train, and they were negligent, the company is liable."

The facts of those two cases are so radically different from those of this case that the law as there enunciated is inapplicable to the facts of this one. In each of those cases the injured person was lying between the rails of the track, where obstructions of no kind had a right to be, neither man nor beast nor inanimate objects of any kind; and the mere fact that he or it was in a position where the train necessarily had to pass over imposed an imperative duty upon those in charge of the train, after observing their position, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered it, to have used proper care to have avoided the injury. A railroad company has no right to run its cars over man or beast, nor over any species of personal property; and, when those in charge of a train saw those persons on the track, it was their duty to stop the train; or to use such other appliances as were at their disposal to prevent an injury; and it was no excuse for their failure to do so to say they thought the one was a sack of oats and the other was a dog, for the reason they had no more right to kill the dog or destroy the oats than they had to injure a person; the difference being the degree of care to be exercised, and not a difference in the principle applicable to each. But, in the case at bar, Mr. Trigg was not lying between the rails of defendant's track, where the car must, of necessity, have passed over him, nor did the motorman believe in this case, as the employees did in those cases, that the object he saw lying by the side of the track was a person or, property of any kind; but, upon the contrary, all the evidence upon that point shows conclusively that he thought it was a clump of dirt. That being true, clearly, he was under no legal duty to stop the car or slacken the speed thereof before reaching it. If he had done either, or had he sounded the gong, when he really believed the object was a clump of dirt, his act would have been indicative of a flighty mind, rather than the act of a prudent person. We are therefore clearly of the opinion that the rule announced in those cases is not controlling in the case at bar.

2. It is next contended by counsel for respondent that, since the evidence discloses the fact that pedestrians had, with the knowledge and acquiescence of appellant, used its track as a footpath for years in going to and returning from South Carrollton, those who were in charge of the car which struck Mr. Trigg should have apprehended persons were likely to have been upon the track, and that it was their duty to have kept a constant outlook for those who might have been upon the track, and to have used all reasonable care and caution to have prevented injury to them; and that, having failed to do so, the company is liable for said injury. Counsel for appellant concede the law to be as contended for by counsel for respondent, but insist that it has no application to the facts of this case, for the reason that the evidence totally fails to show Mr. Trigg was using the footpath at the time the accident occurred, and that he was several feet east of it, lying down on his back against the embankment upon which the street car track and path were located, with his head resting in a depression of several inches in depth, near to or between the ends of two cross-ties, and that his feet extended downward and eastward from the track, with weeds obstructing the view of his body, excepting portions of his head.

1. We have carefully read this voluminous record of more than 500 pages of printed matter, and have failed to find any evidence whatever therein which tends, in the slightest degree, to disprove appellant's contention as to how the injury occurred, without it can be said that the physical facts of 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the case as they existed immediately after the accident occurred tend to disprove it; that is, the position the body was in at the time, the location of the wound upon the head, the place where deceased's hat was found, and the blood and hair found upon the roadway and rails. If these physical facts were viewed alone, they would indicate that Mr. Trigg was sitting up or was leaning against the east rail when struck and killed by the car, and that, if the servants in charge of the car had exercised ordinary care in keeping an outlook for him, they could have discovered his dangerous position in ample time in which to have stopped the car and thereby averted the injury; but, when viewed in the light of the testimony of all of the eyewitnesses as to the position Mr. Trigg was in just before he was struck, and the fact that he had been struck by the car and killed before all other witnesses saw his body, deprives their testimony of all weight it otherwise would have been entitled to, for the reason that both propositions may have been true, and doubtless were, due to the fact that when the car struck deceased, going at the rate of speed at which the evidence showed it was running, it must have thrown the body in the position in which it was found immediately after the accident, and all the other facts mentioned were incidents to the blow and of the injury which followed. In that view of the evidence there is no conflict between the testimony of any of the witnesses, but it harmonizes all the testimony in the case. We must therefore hold that the uncontradicted evidence shows that deceased was not using the path mentioned in the evidence when struck, and that there is no evidence that pedestrians or anyone else ever used the embankment upon which Mr. Trigg was killed for any purpose whatever.

The case at bar is on all fours with the case of Ayers v. Wabash R. Co. 190 Mo. 228, 88 S. W. 608, with the exception that, in that case, the accident occurred on a bright, clear day, while this one occurred at night, and that there was no evidence in that case which tended to show the injured party was obscured from the view of the engineer by weeds or other obstruction, as was the fact in this case. These facts, however, are only additional reasons why the respondent should not be entitled to recover. In discussing that case, this court, on pages 237 and 238 of 190 Mo., through Valliant, J., said: "There is no statute requiring the defendant to give a signal by bell or whistle on approaching a private crossing; its duty to do so depends on the circumstances of the case. There was therefore no negligence per se in failing to sound the bell or whistle. The plaintiff was guilty of negligence in placing himself in the position of danger; and, taking the plaintiff's own account of his condition, it leaves little room to infer that the sound of the bell or whistle would have had any effect on him. This reduces the case to a question of whether the engineer, after seeing the plaintiff in the position of danger, or after he could have seen him if he had been looking, could, by the exercise of ordinary care, with the means at hand, have avoided the accident. The evidence showed that, although this occurred on defendant's right of way, and where there was no public crossing, yet it was where the defendant knew that the public was in the habit of using the railroad track for a footpath, and therefore it was the duty of the engineer to be on the lookout for persons so using the track. If this man had been walking or standing on the track, he could have been seen by the engineer in time at least for a danger signal to have been given; but lying, as he was, on the west side of the track, he was not as conspicuous as a person walking or standing would have been. The engineer was not chargeable with notice that a man was liable to be found lying on the track, and therefore the fact that the engine struck the plaintiff in that position is not in itself sufficient to justify the inference either that the engineer saw him, or that he failed to use ordinary care to discover him in time. The plaintiff's testimony, aside from that of the engineer, does not undertake to expressly show his attitude. He sat down on the west end of a cross-tie, and there the stupefaction of intoxication overcame him, and there the plaintiff's evidence leaves the result to inference. The natural inference is that he fell into a recumbent position."

Technically speaking, the deceased had the legal right to be at the point where he was struck and killed, because it was a portion of a public street, which, of itself carries with it the legal right to use all portions of the street consistent with the legal uses to which it was at the time devoted; and for that reason, technically, it was the duty of the servants in charge of the car to have been careful in looking out for all persons who might have been occupying that portion of the street; but, when we come to look at the situation from a practical and common-sense standpoint, which is the essence of all law, then the duty to have looked was only commensurate with the amount of travel shown to have existed upon that portion of the street at the time the injury occurred. In this case there is not a scintilla of evidence which tends to prove anyone ever used that portion of the embankment for any purposes whatever. Defendant therefore owed him no actual duty to look out for deceased at the place where lying.

3. Counsel for respondent finally insist that the car, at the time it collided with deceased, was running at a dangerous and reckless rate of speed, and, for that reason, the trial court erred in refusing her third instruction asked, and in giving appellant's second, which, in effect, told the jury that there was no evidence in the case tending to show the car was running at a dangerous or reckless rate of speed at the time it struck and killed Mr. Trigg. The evidence shows that the track upon which the car was running was elevated upon an embankment, some 3 feet high, and that at the point where the accident occurred there were but few residences, practically in the country; and where there was but little, if any, travel at the hour of night when the accident occurred, and that the car was running from 12 to 20 miles per hour. In the absence of an ordinance of the city regulating the speed of the cars, we are asked to hold that the foregoing facts are sufficient evidence of the fact that the car was being run at a dangerous and reckless rate of speed at the time it struck deceased, and would warrant a jury in finding for respondent upon that ground. We are unable to grant that request, or to hold that such evidence would be sufficient to sustain a verdict if found in favor of respondent. It is common knowledge that, in our great cities, ordinances are enacted permitting street cars in the outskirts thereof and in the sparsely settled districts to run from 15 to 20 miles per hour, and no one, to our knowledge, has ever questioned their reasonableness. It is also generally known that steam railways are constantly running their trains at as high a rate of speed as the car in question was running at the time this unfortunate accident occurred, and that, too, through districts which are as thickly populated as is South Carrollton, yet we have never seen or heard of a case where it was contended that the speed of a car running 15 or 20 miles an hour, under the circumstances surrounding this one, was of itself sufficient evidence of negligence to sustain a verdict. In our judgment no such case exists; and, even if it did, we would be reluctant in following it. Such speed, under different circumstances, such as running through a populous city, or when connected with other facts and circumstances, doubtless would be sufficient evidence of negligence to support a verdict. But, for the sake of the argument, suppose we concede we are in error in the foregoing observations, still we are unable to see in what manner respondent could recover, even though it was negligence in appellant to run the car from 15 to 20 miles per hour at the place where deceased was struck, for the reason that the law is well settled that where the plaintiff is guilty of negligence which contributes to his injury, before he is entitled to a recovery he must first show that, after the defendant saw his dangerous position, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered it, defendant could, by the exercise of reasonable care, have avoided injuring him. Harlan v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 64 Mo., loc. cit. 483; Prewitt v. Eddy, 115 Mo. 283, 21 S. W. 742.

As shown in the previous paragraph of this opinion, there is no evidence contained in this record which tends to show defendant could have prevented the injury after discovering the dangerous position in which the deceased had placed himself.

We must therefore hold that, under no view of the case, was the respondent entitled to a recovery, and that the verdict of the jury was for the right party; and we therefore reverse the judgment of the trial court, and remand the cause, with directions to reinstate the verdict of the jury, and to enter judgment thereon in favor of the appellant.

All concur, except etaoiiu;2.o tETAOIN sents as to what is said in the last two lines of paragraph 2.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

FRANK J. EVERITT, Appt.,
v.

FARMERS & MERCHANTS' BANK OF
ELM CREEK et al.

(— Neb. —, 117 N. W. 401.)

Corporate stock — sale — rights — recording transfer.

1. In the absence of controlling statutes, a purchaser of the capital stock of a corporation for a valuable consideration, in the absence of fraud, is protected against subsequent attachment or execution issued against his grantor although he failed to have his assignment recorded upon the books of the corporation.

Sale — purchase price — payment — bona fides.

2. The rule that a vendee is not a bona fide purchaser for value until he has actually paid the purchase price, or become irrevocably bound for its payment, cannot be invoked against one who has promised to give a consideration for the transfer assailed, unless it appears that the transfer will hinder or delay the vendor's creditors.

Fraudulent conveyance — consideration — burden of proof.

3. Where a transfer of property between persons not related is assailed as fraudulent, the fact that the consideration was paid to the grantor's near relative, upon assignment thereof, does not change the rule imposing upon the party assailing the transaction the burden of proving it fraudulent.

Corporate stock — assignment — new certificate — compelling transfer.

4. A bona fide purchaser of the capital stock for a corporation may sue in equity to compel the corporation to enter the assignment upon its books, and to issue a new certificate therefor, and to restrain the sheriff from selling said stock upon an execution against the vendor, the corporation and sheriff being parties to the action

(July 17, 1908.)

Case Note. — Validity of pledge or other transfer of stock of corporation when not made in the books of company, as against attachments, executions, or subsequent transfers.

The earlier cases on this subject are covered in the note to Mapleton Bank v. Standrod, 87 L.R.A. 656, referred to in the foregoing opinion. A few decisions in point have been rendered since the publication of that note.

In Reilly v. Absecon Land Co. (N. J. Ch.) 71 Atl. 248, the court, while recognizing that there is a conflict of authority upon the point, declared that the courts of New Jersey have uniformly held that a sale of corporate stock, accompanied by a delivery of the certificate and usual power of attorney, without further steps towards completing the transaction by notice of the transfer to the company, or by causing an actual transfer to be made on the books of the company, is valid as against the creditors of the assignor, and gives the assignee precedence over subsequent judgments, executions, and attachments procured by creditors of the assignor. The court added that the provisions touching transfers on the books of the company are intended for the protection of the company; it being manifest that such provisions cannot be easily considered as intending to have the effect of recording the transfers for the protection of creditors of stockholders, since the public at large is not entitled to access to the stock books of corporations.

In Equitable Securities Co. v. Johnson, 36 Colo. 377, 85 Pac. 840, an action by an assignee of stock as collateral security, to foreclose his lien, in which the corporation contended that the lien was lost because the transfer had not been entered on the books of the company, and the original certificates had, in the meantime, been canceled and reissued to a third person, it was held that the lien was not lost, as the assignee had done all that could be reasonably

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Buffalo County in defendants' favor in an action brought to confirm plaintiff's title to and enjoin the sale of certain shares of stock. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. N. P. McDonald and George W. Wertz for appellant.

Messrs. H. M. Sinclair and C. A. Robinson for appellees.

Epperson, C., filed the following opinion:

The plaintiff, claiming to be the owner of certain shares of the capital stock of the Farmers & Merchants' Bank of Elm Creek, instituted this action in equity to confirm his title thereto, and to procure possession of the certificates representing the same, to enjoin a threatened sale of said stock upon an execution issued against his grantor, and to compel the bank to enter the transfer of said stock upon its books, and issue to him a new certificate therefor. The sheriff, who held the execution, and the judgment creditor, Beecroft, and the bank, were made defendants. The sheriff filed an answer, alleging that he levied upon the shares of stock as the property of Spencer; and he further alleged, as did Beecroft, in a separate answer filed by him, that the pretended sale and transfer of stock by Spencer to the plaintiff was made by Spencer for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors, of which the plaintiff had full knowledge; and, further, that the plaintiff paid no consideration for the stock. The bank filed a disclaimer. There is little or no dispute as to the facts. On July 16, 1906, the plaintiff herein negotiated with T. G. Spencer, for six and three-fourths shares of the capital stock of said bank, and received therefor an assignment in form as follows:

Kearney, Neb., July 16, 1906.

For value received, I hereby assign and transfer to F. J. Everitt all my interest in six and three-fourths shares of the capital stock of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Elm Creek, Nebraska, standing in my name on the books of the bank, and the proper officers of said bank are authorized and directed to transfer said shares to said F. J. Everitt on the books of the bank, and issue to him a certificate therefor.

T. G. Spencer.

This stock was represented by two certificates, each of which provided that the stock it represented was transferable only on the books of the bank on the surrender of the certificate, properly indorsed. Spencer did not have possession of, and was unable to deliver, said certificates to the plaintiff, for the reason that the same were in the possession of the bank, where they had remained from the time they were issued, although they had been demanded by Spencer. At the time of the purchase required of him to secure the transfer, having presented a written assignment to the proper officer of the corporation, although such assignment was not upon the certificates of stock, the latter not having been surrendered to the transferee, but remaining in the hands of the transferor. It appeared that the secretary made no objection to the absence of the certificate, but certified in writing upon the assignment, and under the corporate seal that he had made the proper transfer on the books of the corporation.

Where a transfer of stock as collateral security is entered upon the books of the corporation, the title to the shares of one claiming through foreclosure of the pledgee's lien is good as against an intervening purchaser from the pledgee, although the transfers subsequent to the foreclosure were not entered on the books. Richardson v. Longmont Supply Ditch Co. 19 Colo. App. 483, 76 Pac. 546.

The Arkansas supreme court, in Hudson v. Bank of Pine Bluff, 75 Ark. 493, 87 S. W. 1177, adheres to the position previously taken in Batesville Teleph. Co. v. Myer-Schmidt Grocery Co. 68 Ark. 115, 56 S. W. 784, to the effect that the statutory provisions that no transfer of stock in a corporation shall be valid as against the creditors of the transferor until a certificate of such transfer shall have been deposited with the county clerk do not apply to transfers by way of pledges, but only to absolute sales.

In Loeb v. German Nat. Bank (Ark.) 113 S. W. 1017, a pledgee of stock as collateral security for a note, who had, in turn, transferred the same to a bank as collateral security for his own indebtedness, sought to charge the bank with the loss of the stock, which was sold by the original pledgees to third persons, because it failed to have the transfers recorded in the books of the county clerk or of the corporation, although it knew that the original pledgees were insolvent. The court, however, said that both assignments of the stock as collateral were good without being recorded in the books of the county clerk or of the company; and further, that, if it were necessary to protect either the original pledgee or the bank by having the assignments recorded, that duty rested primarily upon the former, and he could not accuse the bank of neglect of such duty.

The respective rights of the parties to the transfer, or the rights of the transferee as against the corporation itself, are not within the scope of this note.

by plaintiff, he was preparing to go on a business or pleasure trip, and did not have the time to present his assignment to the bank, nor did he take the time to give Spencer his note for $675, the consideration agreed upon. It was the understanding that he would give the same upon his return home. When he returned, he further delayed because of a restraining order procured by Spencer's judgment creditor, Beecroft. By the same restraining order the bank was enjoined from transferring said bank stock on its books, or from disposing of or delivering the same from its possession. Beecroft had a judgment against Spencer for $1,348, dated September 14, 1901. On September 4, 1906, an execution was sued out by Beecroft, and levied by the sheriff upon the said shares of stock. It also appears that some sort of a notice was served by plaintiff upon the officers of the bank on the day the execution was levied, notifying the bank formally of his assignment, and demanding a transfer of said stock to him. Although the record is not clear as to the notice, it is evident that the bank and the other defendants were fully conversant with the plaintiff's claim and his alleged right to have an assignment of said shares of stock indorsed upon the books of the bank. Later, plaintiff presented his assignment to the bank, and requested that a certificate therefor be issued to him. This request was refused by the officer in charge, who said he could not issue the same, because Spencer owned the stock, and a new certificate could not be issued until the old certificates had been surrendered. The evidence shows that the original certificates had been negligently, or otherwise wrongfully, withheld from Spencer by the bank, but that, upon the levy of the execution, had been delivered to the sheriff. Four and one-half shares of this stock had belonged to Spencer since 1898, and two and one-fourth shares since 1904. After the levy of the execution, plaintiff executed and delivered his non-negotiable promissory note for $675 to Spencer's mother, to whom Spencer had assigned his claim against plaintiff for the consideration agreed upon.

The general rule seems to be that, in the absence of a controlling statute, a purchaser for a valuable consideration is protected against subsequent attachment or execution against his grantor, although he failed to have his assignment recorded upon the books of the corporation. There is a vast difference between the decisions of the different courts, which is attributed in part to the various statutory provisions, and the constructions placed thereon. But, where there is no express statutory provision requiring that an assignment be entered upon the books of the company to effect a sale, it is held that the purchaser, in the absence of fraud, takes the legal title upon an assignment of the stock. Our own statutes failing to provide the manner of bringing about a transfer of capital stock, and failing to prescribe the rights of the parties when there is a failure to indorse the assignment upon the books of the company, we need only to consider those decisions treating of similar cases, and to determine the priority of the parties as it exists in the absence of legislation. In Herrick v. Humphrey Hardware Co. 73 Neb. 809-815, 119 Am. St. Rep. 917, 103 N. W. 685, 687, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 201, it is said: "The object of having transfers of stock recorded upon the books of the company is to give the company notice of whom its stockholders are." In Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Mosher, 63 Neb. 130, 88 N. W. 552, it was held: "The real, and not the apparent, interest of a stockholder in the property of the corporation, represented by shares of stock, registered in his name, may be reached by garnishee process served on the corporation." The same rule, of course, would necessarily apply to the levy of an execution. It is the consensus of opinion, and apparently the universal rule, that a transfer by an assignment of the certificates leaves nothing in the assignor which can be reached by subsequent attachment or levy of execution, although the stock remains in his name upon the books of the corporation; and that it is immaterial that the by-laws or rules of the corporation require the transfer to be made upon its books. Finney's Appeal, 59 Pa. 398; Beckwith v. Burroughs, 13 R. I. 294; Baldwin v. Canfield, 26 Minn. 43, 1 N. W. 261; Prince Invest. Co. v. St. Paul & S. C. Land Co. 63 Minn. 121, 70 N. W. 1079; State Ins. Co. v. Gennett, 2 Tenn. Ch. 100; Gilbert v. Manchester Iron Mfg. Co. 11 Wend. 628; Goyer Cold Storage Co. v. Wildberger, 71 Miss. 438, 15 So. 235; Blouin v. Hart, 30 La. Ann. 714; Sargent v. Essex Marine R. Corp. 9 Pick. 202; Bushnell v. Hall, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 684; Lipscomb v. Condon, 56 W. Va. 416, 67 L.R.A. 670, 107 Am. St. Rep. 938, 49 S. E. 392; Mapleton Bank v. Standrod, 8 Idaho, 740, 67 L.R.A. 656, 71 Pac. 119. In Lipscomb v. Condon, supra, and the notes of the publisher in the book cited, there is a review of many cases dealing with this subject. That case holds: "An unregistered transfer of shares of corporation stock, for which no certificate has been issued, if made for a valuable consideration and without fraud, vests in the transferee a title to the shares superior to the claim of a subsequent attaching creditor of the transferor." This rule is well supported by the cases reviewed in the notes, some of which are above cited.

The supreme court of Minnesota, in Lund v. Wheatland Roller Mill Co. 50 Minn. 36, 36 Am. St. Rep. 623, 52 N. W. 268, held that a sale and transfer of corporate stock, although not entered on the books of the corporation, is effectual as between the parties, and takes precedence of a subsequent attachment in behalf of a creditor of the vendor. The statutes considered by the court in that case provided: "The transfer of shares is not valid, except as between the parties thereto, until it is regularly entered on the books of the company; . . ." and "the stock of any such corporation shall be deemed personal property, and be transferable only on the books of such corporation in such form as the directors prescribe. . . ." The reason for the decision was, as we understand it, that the provisions of the statutes were held as intended solely for the protection and benefit of the corporation, and do not incapacitate a shareholder from transferring his stock. Because of the fact that the bank whose capital stock is in controversy herein had the actual possession of the certificates of stock, a delivery thereof by Spencer to the plaintiff was impossible. The assignment made by him, of date July 16, 1906, in the absence of fraud, was sufficient to convey the stock to the plaintiff. Defendants seek to invoke the rule of Hedrick v. Strauss, 42 Neb. 485, 60 N. W. 928, and Nebraska Moline Plow Co. v. Blackburn, 74 Neb. 246, 104 N. W. 178, which, in the case last cited, is given as follows: "One is not a bona fide purchaser for value unless he has actually paid the purchase price, or become irrevocably bound for its payment." It is true that, in the case at bar, the plaintiff had not become irrevocably bound to the extent that he would have been required to give the promised note upon a failure of the consideration; but the rule invoked is not applicable to this case, for the reason that it is not shown that Spencer was insolvent, or that the transfer of the stock to the plaintiff herein and the giving of the note to Spencer's mother will operate to deprive Beecroft from the collection of his judgment. This brings us to the consideration of another and the controlling issue.

Each party contends that the burden of proof is upon the other. There is no contention that there was any fraudulent intention on the part of the plaintiff, but that, before he gave the note to Spencer's mother, he had notice of such facts as would put a man of ordinary prudence on inquiry. There is nothing in the record to indicate that an inquiry made by a prudent man would lead him to the conclusion that Spencer's transfer of the stock in controversy was made fraudulently. It does not appear that the consideration was inadequate, nor that Spencer was insolvent. It does not appear that he owed any other person than Beecroft and his own mother. His property may be sufficient to meet all of his obligations. Plaintiff is not related to Spencer, but defendants contend that, as Spencer's mother received the consideration for the shares of stock, the rule as to alleged fraudulent conveyances between relatives, casting the burden of proof upon the grantor, should be followed here. Spencer's mother's connection with this litigation is not directly involved. The real question to determine is, Where was the title to the shares of stock at the time of the levy? Had the transaction with Spencer's mother never entered into this case, defendants could not then recover. It is apparent that defendants have no greater rights than they would, had the promissory note never been given. In such case the plaintiff would be entitled to the fruits of his contract unless defendants could establish that such transaction was fraudulent. The burden of proof was upon the defendants. They introduced no evidence to prove that the transfer was fraudulent, nor that it hindered or delayed the collection of their judgment.

It is contended by the defendants that different causes of action are improperly joined in the petition, and that an injunction will not lie to restrain the sale of the stock. It cannot be successfully contended but that the assignee of the shares of stock of a corporation is entitled to maintain an action in equity to require an obstinate corporation to enter his assignment upon the books of the corporation, and issue to him a new certificate representing the same. 10 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 605. The officers of the defendant bank refuse to recognize plaintiff's assignment, and apparently co-operate with Beecroft to defeat the plaintiff's title. Beecroft is a nonresident of the state. Plaintiff is entitled to have his stock preserved to him, and to prevent its encumbrance by execution sale. For these purposes he has no adequate remedy at law.

We recommend that the judgment of the district court be reversed, and the case remanded, with instructions to the lower court to enter a judgment for plaintiff consistent with this opinion.

Duffie and Good, CC., concur.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment of the District Court is reversed, and this case remanded, with instructions to the lower court to enter judgment for plaintiff consistent with the opinion.

A petition for rehearing having been heard, Good, C., on December 5, 1908, filed the following additional opinion:

This cause is now before us upon an application for a rehearing, and has been orally argued. The opinion is reported in 117 N. W. 401. In the body of the opinion it was stated, "It does not appear that Spencer was insolvent;" and the cause was reversed and remanded, with instructions to enter a judgment for plaintiff consistent with the opinion.

The principles of law announced in the case are not seriously assailed upon this application; but it is urged that there was sufficient evidence in the record to show the insolvency of Spencer. We have re-examined the record, and find that there is some evidence tending to show Spencer's insolvency. The trial court evidently considered this evidence sufficient to warrant such a finding. We do not consider it necessary to discuss the sufficiency of the evidence to support such a finding. In view of the fact that the trial court deemed the evidence sufficient, and the fact of the insolvency of Spencer, if proved, would materially affect the ultimate disposition of the case, we think the cause should be remanded generally, so that appellee may have an opportunity to introduce further evidence, if they so desire.

We recommend that the opinion be modified, so as to direct a reversal and remanding of the case for further proceedings according to law, and that, as so modified, the opinion be adhered to.

Duffie and Epperson, CC., concur.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons given, the opinion is modified as above recommended, and, as modified, is adhered to, and the case is reversed and remanded for further proceedings according to law.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

HENRY B. GATES

v.

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, Appt.

(— Neb. —, 119 N. W. 1120.)

Process — constructive service — res judicata.

1. A court has no jurisdiction to enter a personal judgment against a nonresident constructively served, who has made no appearance in the action, nor can any finding made in the case touching his personal liability operate as an estoppel so as to prevent him from showing to the contrary in a personal action subsequently brought against him.

Headnotes by DUFFIE, C.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Surety — release.

2. A surety upon a contract is not released because the plaintiff, in an action thereon, fails to inform the court that another party to the contract is the principal debtor.

Same — married woman — effect.

3. While it is a general rule that a discharge of the principal releases the surety, an exception to the rule exists when one becomes surety for a married woman, minor, or other person incapable of contracting.

(February 20, 1909.)

Case Note. — Effect upon liability of surety of principal's incapacity to contract.

This note is intended to include only those cases where it appeared that the person sought to be held liable was a surety, and does not include those cases where the indorser or assignor of a note made by a person incapable of contracting was sought to be held liable.

Although the general rule prevails that the liability of a surety is conditional upon the liability of the principal, in accordance with GATES v. TEBBETTS, it is almost universally recognized that an exception is found in case one becomes surety for a person who himself is relieved from liability because of the wholly personal defense of incapacity to contract, since, in many instances, the very fact that the principal cannot be held liable may be the reason for requiring a surety.

That a surety is not relieved from liability because the principal is a married woman has been held in the following cases in addition to GATES v. TEBBETTS: Stillwell v. Bertrand, 22 Ark. 375; Gardner v. Barnett, 36 Ark. 479; Jones v. Crosthwaite, 17 Iowa, 393; Davis v. Statts, 43 Ind. 103, 13 Am. Rep. 382; Nabb v. Koontz, 17 Md. 283; Winn v. Sanford, 145 Mass. 302, 1 Am. St. Rep. 461, 14 N. E. 119; Whitworth v. Carter, 43 Miss. 61; McGavock v. Whitfield, 45 Miss. 452; Weed Sewing Mach. Co. v. Maxwell, 63 Mo. 486; Lobaugh v. Thompson, 74 Mo. 600; State, Wagoner, Prosecutor, v. Watts, 44 N. J. L. 126; Kimball v. Newell, 7 Hill, 116; Wiggin's Appeal, 100 Pa. 155; Smyley v. Head, 2 Rich. L. 590, 45 Am. Dec. 750; Hicks v. Randolph, 3 Baxt. 352, 27 Am. Rep. 760; Willingham v. Leake, 7 Baxt. 453; St. Albans Bank v. Dillon, 30 Vt. 122, 73 Am. Dec. 295.

The same rule prevails where the principal is an infant (Kyger v. Sipe, 89 Va. 507, 16 S. E. 627); or insane person (Adler v. State, 35 Ark. 517, 37 Am. Rep. 48; Lee v. Yandell, 69 Tex. 34, 6 S. W. 665).

In Caldwell v. Ruddy, 2 Idaho, 1, 1 Pac.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Gage County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover a deficiency arising in a certain mortgage foreclosure proceeding. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hazlett & Jack, for appellant:

The failure of the plaintiff to inform the court of the relation of principal and surety existing between the defendants in the foreclosure proceedings releases the surety.

Thomas v. Wilson, 6 Blackf. 203; Gill v. Morris, 1 Heisk. 614; 27 Am. Rep. 744; United States v. Mattoon, 5 Mackey, 565; Michener v. Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. 142 Ind. 130, 31 L.R.A. 59, 40 N. E. 679; Ames v. Maclay, 14 Iowa, 281; Wright v. Hake, 38 Mich. 525.

Mr. E. O. Kretsinger, for appellee:

Where a wife is not liable, by reason of her coverture, this fact constitutes no defense on the part of the husband, who had become his wife's surety.

24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 846, 847.

The judgment of foreclosure was a judgment in rem, or quasi in rem.

2 Black, Judgm. 1st ed. § 810; Sorensen v. Sorensen, 68 Neb. 483, 94 N. W. 540, 98 N. W. 837, 100 N. W. 930, 103 N. W. 455; 23 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 1408-1412.

Duffie, C., filed the following opinion:

In 1900 the plaintiff commenced an action to foreclose a mortgage made by Ella F. Tebbetts and C. E. Tebbetts at that time wife and husband. The mortgage secured a note made by the parties for $1,300, and covered certain lots in the city of Beatrice, Gage county, Nebraska. C. E. Tebbetts, the defendant in this action, was residing at Kansas 339, it was held that a surety to a promissory note is deemed in law to contract that the principal maker is in every way competent to contract in the manner he has, and that the instrument is a binding obligation upon such maker; and therefore a surety to a note made by an insane person cannot escape liability.

The same rule was applied in Weare v. Sawyer, 44 N. H. 198, holding the sureties liable on a note which purported to be given by a school district as principal, but was in fact signed without authority. The court said: "It is said, also that the liability of the surety is coextensive only with that of the principal, and that the school district must be regarded as the principal here. As a general proposition it may be true that, in the contract of guaranty, there must be a principal who is also liable. It would be true in all cases where the guarantor stipulated to guarantee the performance of the principal's engagement. But, in that large class of cases where the contract is to pay a specific sum of money, there, we apprehend, the guarantor or surety is, in the absence of fraud, bound by the terms of his contract, although his principal, by reason of coverture, infancy, or want of authority in the person assuming to act for him, is not bound. So it is laid down (Chitty, Contr. 9th Am. ed. 441) in respect to infants, married women, and other persons incompetent to contract; and we see no reason why the same doctrine does not apply to the case of a want of authority."

It was recognized in Davis v. Stokes County, 72 N. C. 441, that where a county did not have the power to borrow money or to give a bond, although not liable itself, a surety thereon was liable.

In Stewart v. Behm, 2 Watts, 356, it was held that the fact that a member of a firm signed a note without authority, thus not binding the firm, as was intended, did not relieve the surety from liability thereon.

So, a surety on a note is not relieved 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

from liability thereon by the fact that it was executed by a corporate principal without proper authority. Maledon v. Leflore, 62 Ark. 387, 35 S. W. 1102.

In Mason v. Nichols, 22 Wis. 376, where persons, for a valuable consideration, guaranteed the performance of contract on the part of a railroad company, it was held that the fact that it was not binding on the company did not release the guarantors from liability.

In Yorkshire Railway Wagon Co. v. MacLure, L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 478, it was held that sureties who, in effect, guaranteed the repayment of money illegally borrowed by a railroad company, could be held liable therefor.

But where an infant, upon attaining his majority, disaffirms the contract, and returns the property for which his note has been given, the sureties thereon cannot be held liable. Keokuk County State Bank v. Hall, 106 Iowa, 540, 76 N. W. 832; Baker v. Kennett, 54 Mo. 82; Patterson v. Cave, 61 Mo. 439.

In Fuller v. Davis, 1 Gray, 612, it was held that sureties on a bond for the liberty of the prison limits are not liable for a failure to surrender their principal, occasioned by his commitment to a lunatic asylum after the execution of the bond.

In Grove v. Johnston, Ir. L. R. 24 C. L. 352, it was held that the lunacy of a collector before he could enter upon his duties relieved his sureties from liability on his bond.

In Levy v. Wise, 15 La. Ann. 38, it was held that the fact that a surety in a contract of lease acknowledged that the lessee was a free woman of color did not estop him from afterwards alleging and proving that she was a slave,—a contract of lease to a slave being absolutely null and void.

In McCormick v. Hubbell, 4 Mont. 87, 5 Pac. 314, it was held that sureties for a married woman on an appeal bond cannot raise the defense of coverture of the defendant in the principal action.

City, and substituted service of summons was had on him in the state of Missouri. Ella F. Tebbetts, the wife, was personally served in this state, and she filed an answer, alleging that at the time of making the mortgage she was a married woman, residing with her husband, and that at no time did she ever bind her separate estate, trade, or business, and signed the note secured by the mortgage as surety for her husband, and had received no money for which the note was given. C. E. Tebbetts made no appearance in the action, except to object to the jurisdiction of the court over his person, upon the service first made on him. This motion was sustained, after which a second service was had upon the defendant, and, no appearance being made by or for him, he was then defaulted. In February, 1901, the case was tried. The court found that there was due upon the note to secure which the mortgage was given the sum of $1,455.98; that Ella F. Tebbetts was a married woman at the time of the execution of the note and mortgage, and that she was not liable thereon except to the extent of the mortgaged property described in the petition; that, after the mortgaged property had been exhausted and the proceeds applied in payment of the note and mortgage, "the said Ella F. Tebbetts will not be liable to the plaintiff for any deficiency judgment." There was a further finding that the decree draw interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum. A foreclosure of the mortgage was decreed, an order of sale issued, the mortgaged property duly advertised and sold to the plaintiff herein for $740. December 17, 1901, the sale was duly confirmed by the court, and a finding made that there was a deficiency of $884.23. May 2, 1902, the plaintiff applied for and obtained leave of court to bring an action at law against C. E. Tebbetts for the deficiency arising in the foreclosure proceedings, and this action for that purpose was commenced in October, 1903. To a petition reciting the above facts the defendant filed an answer which is too lengthy to be incorporated in this opinion. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant has appealed.

The principal defenses urged upon this hearing are that Ella F. Tebbetts was the owner of the mortgaged property, which was encumbered by mortgage liens when she purchased the same; that the plaintiff's mortgage was given in renewal of one of such mortgage liens; that defendant had no interest in the property, the same being the separate property of his wife, and that he signed the note secured by the mortgage as surety for his wife, and was bound thereon as surety only; that these facts were known to the plaintiff, who failed to present them to the court when the mortgage was foreclosed, and permitted and connived at the entry of a judgment in said foreclosure action, relieving said Ella F. Tebbetts from all personal liability upon said note, for which reason he alleges that he is released from liability.

The second objection urged to the judgment is that it is excessive. It is familiar law that a court has no jurisdiction to enter a personal judgment against a nonresident of this state who has not appeared in the action, and where substituted service of the summons has been had. In the foreclosure case the court had no jurisdiction to enter a personal judgment against Chas. E. Tebbetts, and did not attempt to do so. On confirming the sale made under the foreclosure decree, the court found the amount of the deficiency existing to be $884.23, and, on the trial of this case, the district court apparently took view that this finding was conclusive upon the defendant, and would not allow him to show that, in the foreclosure proceedings, an erroneous computation of the amount due upon the notes secured by the mortgage was made, and that the deficiency was not so great as found by the court. In the foreclosure proceeding the court had undoubted jurisdiction to ascertain the amount due upon the mortgage, to declare it a lien upon the mortgaged premises, and to order a sale for the satisfaction of the amount due. It is conceded that, in that action, the court was without power or jurisdiction to enter a personal judgment against the defendant, and the question now before us is: Did the court have jurisdiction to find any fact going to establish the defendant's liability to a personal judgment, and the amount thereof, which the defendant is estopped from disputing in this action? We think not. On principle the law must be that, in a case where the court has no jurisdiction to enter a personal judgment against a defendant, it cannot conclude him by a finding of material facts necessary to establish his liability or the amount thereof in a subsequent action brought in a court having jurisdiction over his person. If, by an erroneous computation of interest or otherwise, the court in the foreclosure proceeding fixed the amount of the deficiency at too large a sum, the defendant in this action is not bound by such finding, but may have the benefit of any evidence in his possession tending to show the amount of the deficiency which actually exists, and for which he is personally liable. The district court erred in refusing him this privilege.

Relating to the claim that plaintiff in the foreclosure proceedings should have used diligence to establish the primary liability of Mrs. Tebbetts for the mortgage debt, there is no evidence in the record that the plaintiff fraudulently confederated with Mrs. Tebbetts to obtain a decree relieving her of personal liability, and it is well settled that, while the general rule prevails that a discharge of a principal releases the surety, an exception to the rule is found where a person guarantees the obligation or becomes surety for a married woman, minor, or other person incapable of contracting. In such case, while the principal is discharged on account of his incapacity, the debt remains, and its burden must be assumed by the surety. Jones v. Crosthwaite, 17 Iowa, 393; Winn v. Sanford, 145 Mass. 302, 1 Am. St. Rep. 461, 14 N. E. 119. In the case last cited it is said: "Where one becomes a surety for the performance of a promise made by a person incompetent to contract, his contract is not purely accessorial, nor is his liability necessarily ascertained by determining whether the principal can be made liable. Fraud, deceit in inducing the principal to make his promise, or illegality thereof, all of which would release the principal, would release the surety, as these affect the character of the debt; but incapacity of the principal party promising to make a legal contract, if understood by the parties, is the very defense on the part of the principal against which the surety assures the promisee. Yale v. Wheelock, 109 Mass. 502." The district court in the foreclosure proceeding believed and held that Mrs. Tebbetts was not liable upon the note which the mortgage secured, and it may well be that the plaintiff held the same view, and for this very reason requested the defendant to sign the note as surety for his wife. In any view of the case which can be assumed, we are not prepared to hold that a party bringing an action upon a contract signed by two parties, one of whom is surety for the other, releases the surety by a mere failure to inform the court of the relation of principal and surety which the parties defendant sustained to each other. The case is very different from Wright v. Hake, 38 Mich. 525, where the creditor secretly and fraudulently released the principal debtor from payment of the principal amount of the debt, and then sought to hold the surety for the whole claim.

For the error in holding that the defendant was estopped from questioning the amount of the deficiency in the foreclosure proceeding, and refusing to allow him to show that the amount claimed was an excess of that owing by him, we recommend a reversal of the judgment and remanding the case for a second trial.

Good, Epperson, and Calkins, CC., concur.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment of the District Court is reversed, and the case remanded for a second trial.

Petition for rehearing denied.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

D. DUDLEY CAPRON, Resp't.,

v.

J. WALLACE DOUGLASS, Appt.

(193 N. Y. 11, 85 N. E. 827.)

Evidence — cumulative.

1. The exclusion of evidence of an assistant surgeon at an operation, tending to corroborate the evidence of the one who performed the operation, as to conditions found which bear upon the liability of another physician for malpractice, cannot, where the verdict was against defendant, be held nonprejudicial, if it was properly admissible, on the theory that it was merely cumulative.

Same — physician — privilege — waiver.

2. The plaintiff in a suit for malpractice who fully describes his injury and the operation to which he was compelled to submit because of the defendant's alleged failure properly to care for it, waives the statutory privilege of excluding from evidence the testimony of the surgeon performing the operation.

(October 6, 1908.)

Case Note. — Right of plaintiff in action for malpractice to avail himself of privilege as against testimony of defendant or other physicians.

The general doctrine governing the subject under discussion, as gathered from the decisions hereinafter set forth, may be summarized as follows: Testimony on behalf of the patient, in an action brought by himself against his physician, operates as a waiver of his privilege, both as to the physician himself and others called in consultation with him; but not as to physicians independently employed, unless, it may be, the patient testifies as to his communications to the latter. But the bringing of a suit by a husband for malpractice upon his wife, or the giving of testimony by the wife in such suit, will not of itself so operate. Nevertheless, the physician may be permitted to testify in such an action if the necessities of justice require.

In Lane v. Boicourt, 128 Ind. 420, 25 Am.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for Oneida County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for malpractice. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James Taylor Lewis, for appellant:

The law of negligence relating to physicians and surgeons, applied to the facts in this case, establishes freedom from liability; and the court erred in declining to dismiss the complaint and grant a nonsuit.

Carpenter v. Blake, 10 Hun, 359, affirmed in 75 N. Y. 15; Pike v. Honsinger, 155 N. Y. 202, 63 Am. St. Rep. 655, 49 N. E. 760; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 608.

The testimony of the assistant surgeon was erroneously excluded.

Morris v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 148 N. Y. 92, 51 Am. St. Rep. 675, 42 N. E. 410; Re Coleman, 111 N. Y. 220, 19 N. E. 71; Rosseau v. Bleau, 131 N. Y. 177, 27 Am. St. Rep. 578, 30 N. E. 52; Haack v. Weickman, 118 N. Y. 77, 23 N. E. 133; Schlotterer v. Brooklyn & N. Y. Ferry Co. 89 App. Div.

St. Rep. 442, 27 N. E. 1111, it was held that where, in an action brought by a husband for alleged malpractice upon his wife, the plaintiff, his wife, and his wife's mother testified as to all that was done by the defendant at the time the surgical operation which caused the injury was performed, a physician who was in attendance as a consulting surgeon might testify as to what occurred, the court saying: "The testimony given by the witnesses of the appellee broke the seal of privacy, and gave publicity to the whole matter. The patient waived the statutory rule. The course pursued laid the occurrence open to investigation. Nothing was privileged, since all was published. The statute was not meant to apply to such a case as this, nor it is within the letter or the spirit of the law. If a patient makes public in a court of justice the occurrences of the sick room for the purpose of obtaining a judgment for damages against his physician, he cannot shut out the physician himself, nor any other who was present at the time covered by the testimony. When the patient voluntarily publishes the occurrence, he cannot be heard to assert that the confidence which the statute was intended to maintain inviolate continues to exist. By his voluntary act he breaks down the barriers, and the professional duty of secrecy ceases. It would be monstrous if the patient himself might detail all that occurred, and yet compel the physician to remain silent. The principle is the same whether the physician called is a consulting physician, or is the defendant. The opening of the matter to investigation removed the obligation of secrecy as to all, not merely as to one. When 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

508, 85 N. Y. Supp. 847; McKinney v. Grand Street, P. P. & F. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 353, 10 N. E. 544; Powers v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 105 App. Div. 358, 94 N. Y. Supp. 184; Clifford v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 188 N. Y. 350, 80 N. E. 1094; Griffiths v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 171 N. Y. 110, 63 N. E. 808.

Messrs. Smith M. Lindsley and William S. Mackie for respondent.

Haight, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to recover damages against the defendant, a physician and surgeon, upon the ground that he was chargeable with malpractice in treating a fracture of the tibia and fibula of the plaintiff's leg. Upon the trial evidence was submitted by the plaintiff and his witnesses tending to show that, after the plaintiff received the fracture of the bones of his leg, the defendant was called as a surgeon to attend the same, and that he was negligent in reducing the fracture and in his subsequent care of the patient. After a lapse of several weeks it was discovered that there had been no union of the fractured bones, and the the obligation to silence is broken, it is broken for the defendant as well as for the plaintiff. As to all witnesses of the transaction it is fully opened to investigation, if opened at all, by the party having a right to keep it closed. A patient cannot elect what witnesses shall be heard, and what shall not; for, if once investigation legitimately begins, it continues to the end. A patient may enforce secrecy if he chooses, but, where he himself removes the obligation, he cannot avail himself of the statute to exclude witnesses to the occurrence."

In Becknell v. Hosier, 10 Ind. App. 5, 37 N. E. 580, it was held that, where a patient sues his physician for alleged malpractice in the treatment of an injury, the privilege is waived as to all matters connected with the treatment of this injury in which the physician participated; and that, therefore, the physician was entitled to prove, by himself and a consulting surgeon, what occurred at an examination made after about two months' treatment, and the condition and nature of plaintiff's injury at that time, even though this particular transaction was disconnected with the remainder of his treatment, and though plaintiff had not gone into it himself.

In Aspy v. Botkins, 160 Ind. 170, 66 N. E. 462, it was held that the testimony of physicians and surgeons upon whom the plaintiff called for examination and treatment after the service of defendant was at an end was properly excluded as privileged within the statute.

While a physician sued for malpractice may himself testify concerning communications between himself and his patient, a plaintiff was then removed to a hospital in the city of Utica, where an operation was performed by Dr. Glass, of that city, aided by Dr. Fred Douglass, one of the hospital's staff of surgeons, after which there was a union of the fractured bones, and a recovery had by the plaintiff, but with the usefulness of the leg somewhat impaired. The contention of the defendant was to the effect that he had properly reduced the fracture, placing the broken bones in apposition, but that he was disappointed in their failure to unite, and that the cause of such failure was one that could not be determined by an external examination of the limb, and was only discovered after the plaintiff had been removed to the hospital and an incision made at the place of the fracture, when it was discovered that some of the muscles of the leg had intervened between the broken ends of the bones, preventing their coming together and forming a union. This condition of the fractured bones was discovered by Dr. Glass at the hospital, who performed the operation, and was testified to by him as a witness for the defendant, without objection by the plaintiff. The defendant then called as a witness Dr. Fred J. Douglass, who assisted Dr. Glass in the operation, but his evidence was excluded upon the objection of the plaintiff's counsel, under § 834 of the Code, and an exception was taken to such exclusion. The trial court charged the jury: "If you find that the leg was properly set, the bones placed in apposition at the time of the first operation by the defendant, and you find that muscular fibres prevented union of the tibia, and that the loose fragment found at the place of the fracture of the fibula prevented union of the bone, and that such condition could not have been discovered except by the operation at the hospital, requiring extraordinary skill, and find the defendant was not guilty of negligence in failing to discover the condition of non-union prior to the time when he did discover it, then there is no liability, and the verdict must be for the defendant." In this connection the jury was further charged, at the request of the defendant, "that if the jury finds from the evidence that the fractured ends of the tibia were separated by tendon, muscle, or tissue, and for that reason could not have been made to unite without incision, and without the removal of the interposed substance, the plaintiff cannot re-physician in no way connected with defendant's attendance upon the patient, and who subsequently examined him with a view to seeing what could be done for him, cannot testify, as the bringing of the action of itself does not destroy the privilege of the statute to anything more than those things which the action itself makes it necessary to disclose, viz., the ailment and its treatment by the physician or physicians therein named. Hartley v. Calbreath, 127 Mo. App. 559, 106 S. W. 570.

Where, in an action brought by a physician for compensation, a counterclaim is set up demanding an affirmative judgment for damages for alleged malpractice, the physician is not entitled to prove by another physician, calling on an occasion on which the former was not present, that the patient had not disclosed all of his symptoms, and the reason given by him therefor, although the patient and his witnesses had testified on the trial as to his physical condition during his whole sickness, where no evidence with reference to such occasion had been given. But the evidence of a third physician is admissible, where the patient has given evidence as to the occasion when he was present. Hennessey v. Kelley, 55 App. Div. 449, 66 N. Y. Supp. 871, reversing 30 Misc. 703, 64 N. Y. Supp. 562.

The privilege of a wife against the testimony of her physician is not waived by her husband calling her as witness in a suit brought by him alone. Cramer v. Hurt, 154 Mo. 112, 77 Am. St. Rep. 752, 55 S. W. 258.

The institution of a suit by a husband 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for malpractice upon his wife has no tendency to show that he has any authority to waive the wife's statutory protection and privilege against the physician's testimony; although, if the suit was by the wife, or by the husband and the wife, against the defendant, for physical injury occasioned by his want of knowledge or negligence in her treatment, then the privilege of secrecy on the part of the defendant would thereby be waived as to all matters connected with the case and his treatment thereof. Ibid.

While it must be understood that such evidence cannot be admitted merely because other evidence of the facts cannot be obtained, yet, in a suit against a physician by a husband for damages, where it is clear that no other person, besides the physician and the wife, knows anything personally about the facts, and the proof of such facts are necessary for sustenance of his defense, it is not error to permit the physician to testify to such facts in order to prevent injustice being done. Ibid.

In an analogous case, where a claim was made against an attorney at law for alleged negligence in managing a cause, it has been held that while, as a general proposition, an attorney cannot, as a witness against his client, disclose communications made to him in his professional capacity, the rule does not apply where the client sues the attorney for disobeying instructions alleged to have been given in such consultations, and for unskillfully managing a cause upon the instruction given to him by his client in them. Nave v. Baird, 12 Ind. 318.

cover for loss or damage resulting from delayed or non-union of such fragments by reason of the presence of such foreign substance, upon the undisputed facts in this case." The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. It will therefore be observed that, under the charge of the court, the chief question of fact involved was as to whether there were muscular fibres, which intervened between the broken ends of the tibia, which prevented its union, and as to whether such a condition could have been discovered except by the operation, which was made at the hospital, requiring extraordinary skill. It is thus apparent that upon this issue the sustaining of the testimony of Dr. Glass was of importance to the defendant, and had he been permitted to avail himself of the testimony of Dr. Douglass, who assisted Dr. Glass in the operation, the result might have been different. We consequently, cannot approve of the ruling made upon the ground that the evidence was merely cumulative; for, it being offered upon the trial of the case to sustain the defendant's defense, he had the right to have it considered by the jury.

The serious question presented upon this review calls for a construction of §§ 834 and 836 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 834 is, so far as material, as follows: "A person duly authorized to practice physic or surgery, . . . shall not be allowed to disclose any information which he acquired in attending a patient, in a professional capacity, and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity." Section 836, among other things provides that the provisions of the section apply to a surgeon, "unless the provisions thereof are expressly waived upon the trial or examination by the person confessing, the patient, or the client. . . . The waivers herein provided for must be made in open court, on the trial of the action or proceeding, and a paper executed by a party prior to the trial, providing for such waiver, shall be insufficient as such waiver. But the attorneys for the respective parties may, prior to the trial, stipulate for such waiver, and the same shall be sufficient therefor." There can be no question with reference to the discovery made by Dr. Glass and Dr. Douglass, in their operation upon the plaintiff at the hospital, coming within the express language of the provisions of § 834 of the Code, and the testimony, therefore, under ordinary circumstances would be privileged. But the question here presented is as to whether such privilege has been waived by the plaintiff upon the trial. He and his counsel sat by, and permitted the testimony of Dr. Glass to be given without interposing any objection thereto, thereby waiving the privilege 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) which the plaintiff might have availed himself of had he seen fit. He has thus permitted the condition of his broken limb to be given to the public in an open trial, thereby forever preventing it and its condition from being a secret between himself and his physician. The intent of the legislature in enacting the statute making such information privileged was, doubtless, to inspire confidence between the patient and his physician, so that the former could fully disclose to the latter all the particulars of his ailment without fear that he may be exposed to civil or criminal prosecution, or shame and disgrace, by the disclosure thus made, and thus enable the latter to prescribe for and advise the former most advantageously. As was said by Ruger, Ch. J., in McKinney v. Grand Street, P. P. & F. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 352, 10 N. E. 544: "After its publication no further injury can be inflicted upon the rights and interests, which the statute was intended to protect, and there is no further reason for its enforcement. The nature of the information is of such a character that, when it is once divulged in legal proceedings, it cannot be again hidden or concealed. It is then open to the consideration of the entire public, and the privilege of forbidding its repetition is not conferred by the statute. The consent, having been once given and acted upon, cannot be recalled, and the patient can never be restored to the condition which the statute, from motives of public policy, has sought to protect."

In the case of Morris v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 148 N. Y. 88, 51 Am. St. Rep. 675, 42 N. E. 410, it was held that when a party who has been attended by two physicians in their professional capacity at the same examination or consultation, both holding professional relations to him, calls one of them as a witness in his own behalf, in an action in which the party's condition, as it appeared at such consultation, is the important question, to prove what took place, or what the witness then learned, he thereby waives the privilege conferred by the section of the Code in question, and loses his right to object to the testimony of the other physician, if called by the opposite party to testify as to the same transaction. And in the case of People v. Bloom, 193 N. Y. 1, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 898, 85 N. E. 824, which we have considered and determined in connection with this case at this present term, we have held that, where the waiver of the privilege is by admitting the testimony of the physicians without objection in a civil action, he cannot thereafter invoke the privilege by objecting to their testimony in a criminal action against him, in which he is charged with having committed perjury upon the former trial. It would thus seem that under the authorities alluded to, the plaintiff, by admitting the evidence of Dr. Glass to be given with reference to the discovery made at the operation, thereby also is deemed to have waived the privilege as to Dr. Douglass, who was there assisting Dr. Glass in the operation. But we prefer to place our decision in this case upon broader grounds.

This action, as we have seen, was for malpractice. The plaintiff, both in his complaint and in his testimony, has fully disclosed all of the details of his affliction as it existed both at his home and at the hospital. He has given in much detail how the fractures occurred, how they were treated, his pain and suffering, and, so far as he was able to comprehend when not under the influence of anesthetics, the particulars of the operation at the hospital. He himself has therefore given to the public the full details of his case, thereby disclosing the secrets which the statute was designed to protect, thus removing it from the operation of the statute. In other words, he has waived in open court upon the trial all information which he might have kept secret, by disclosing it himself. The character of the action necessarily calls for a disclosure of his condition and the treatment that was adopted by the defendant and those assisting him. To hold that the plaintiff may waive the privilege as to himself and his own physicians, and then invoke it as to the defendant and his physicians, would have the effect of converting the statute into both a sword and a shield. It would permit him to prosecute with the sword, and then shield himself from the defense by the exclusion of the defendant's testimony. It would enable the plaintiff to testify to whatever he pleased with reference to his condition and the treatment adopted by the defendant, without fear of contradiction. The plaintiff could thus establish his cause of action, and the defendant would be deprived of the power to interpose his defense, by reason of the closing of the mouth of his witnesses by the provisions of the Code referred to. Such a construction of its provisions, we think, was never contemplated by the legislature. It would lead to unreasonable and unjust results. Instead thereof, a construction of the provisions of the Code, to the effect that when the privilege of the plaintiff has been once waived by him in court, either by his own testimony or by that of others given with his knowledge and consent, and his physical condition has been given to the public, the door is then thrown open for his opponent to give the facts as he understands them. This, to our minds, affords a more just and equitable rule, and is the one that was evidently contemplated by the legislature. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Edington v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 564; Clifford v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 188 N. Y. 349, 80 N. E. 1094; Rauh v. Deutscher Verein, 29 App. Div. 483, 51 N. Y. Supp. 985; Wigmore, Ev. § 2389; Becknell v. Hosier, 10 Ind. App. 5, 37 N. E. 580; Nave v. Baird, 12 Ind. 318; Hennessy v. Kelley, 30 Misc. 703, 64 N. Y. Supp. 566.

The judgment should be reversed, and a new trial ordered, with costs to abide the event.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Gray, Werner, Willard Bartlett, Hiscock, and Chase, JJ., concur.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

EX PARTE RICHARD THOMAS.

(— Okla. —, 97 Pac. 260.)

Concealed weapons — statutory regulation.

The provisions of the statutes of Oklahoma (§§ 2502, 2503, Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. [Okla.] 1903), prohibiting the carrying of the weapons therein set out, are not repugnant to each other, or violative of § 26 of article 2 of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of Oklahoma, but are valid provisions of such statutes extended to and put in force in the state by the provisions of § 21 of the enabling act (act June 16, 1906, chap. 3335, 34 Stat. 277) and § 2 of the schedule of the Constitution.

(August 29, 1908.)

Headnote by DUNN, J.

Case Note. — Constitutional right to bear arms.

The earlier cases upon this question are collected in the note to Salina v. Blaksley, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 168, and only cases since decided are cited herein.

The constitutional right to bear arms is not violated by a statute conferring authority upon the council of a municipality to "prohibit and punish the carrying of firearms or other deadly weapons concealed or otherwise carried." Salina v. Blaksley, 72 Kan. 230, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 168, 115 Am. St. Rep. 196, 83 Pac. 619, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 925.

Nor is such constitutional privilege infringed by a municipal ordinance prohibiting the firing of any gun, pistol, or other firearm within the city limits except upon the occasion of a military parade, and then only by order of some officer having command, such regulation being a valid exercise of the police power. State v. Johnson, 76 S. C. 39, 56 S. E. 544, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 721.

So, a statute prohibiting the organization, maintenance, or employment by one of an armed body of men is not a violation of APPPLICATION for a writ of habeas corpus to secure the release of petitioner from custody to which he had been committed for alleged violation of a statute regulating the carrying of concealed weapons. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John H. Burford, A. J. Jennings, and T. J. McMurry for petitioner.

Messrs. C. J. West, Attorney General, and S. M. Cunningham for the State.

Dunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Richard Thomas was charged by information filed in the county court of Payne county, Oklahoma, with the offense of wilfully and unlawfully carrying on or about his person a pistol, concealed, contrary to the statute, etc. He was sentenced to pay a fine of $25 and to be incarcerated in the county jail for thirty days, and, on being taken in charge by the sheriff under this sentence, brought this original action of habeas corpus in the supreme court, praying a discharge. The agreed statement of facts and the briefs of counsel submit to this court for its consideration and decision the question as to the status of the law in reference to carrying weapons in this state. Counsel for petitioner makes a very ingenious argument on the subject, but, in our judgment, it is more ingenious than sound. He contends that there is no law in the state of Oklahoma to prevent or regulate the carrying of arms or weapons, and his line of reasoning is as follows: Section 583, chap. 25 (§ 2502), Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. (Okla.) 1903, is as follows: "It shall be unlawful for any person in the territory of Oklahoma to carry concealed on or about his person, saddle, or saddle bags any pistol, revolver, bowie knife, dirk, dagger, slung shot, sword, cane, spear, metal knuckles, or any other kind of knife or instrument manufactured or sold for the purpose of defense except as in this article provided." This section, counsel contends, is repealed by the one which follows it, which reads as follows: "It shall be unlawful for any person in the territory of Oklahoma to carry upon or about his person, any pistol, revolver, bowie knife, dirk, knife, loaded cane, billy, metal knuckles, or any other offensive or defensive weapon, except as in this article provided." The contention on these two sections is that, if a person is prohibited from carrying weapons at all, he is certainly prohibited from carrying them concealed, and as the first paragraph and the evil intended is fully included in the second paragraph, the first is rendered inoperative, void, and of no force and effect. He admits that his client carried the pistol mentioned, and he seeks to avoid the force of the second paragraph which prohibits the carrying of any weapons whatever by the provision of the Constitution of the state (§ 26, art. 2; § 35, Bunn's Constitution), which reads as follows: "The right of a citizen to keep and bear arms in defense of his home, person, or property, or in aid of the civil power, when thereunto legally summoned, shall never be prohibited; but nothing therein contained shall prevent the legislature from regulating the carrying of weapons." Under this section he conceives the idea that his client had the absolute right to carry the pistol for which he is now being punished; that § 2503 is in conflict with this section of the Constitution, and must fall; that § 2502, which prohibits the carrying of weapons concealed, and hence a regulation thereof, and not a prohibition, is in conflict and repealed by § 2503, and hence was not carried into force and effect by § 2 of the schedule to the Constitution, which provides that "all laws in force in the territory of Oklahoma at the time of the admission of the state into the Union, which are not repugnant to this Constitution, and which are not locally inapplicable, shall be extended to and remain in force in the state of Oklahoma until they expire by their own limitation or are altered or repealed by law." There are certain other provisions of the statute regulating the carrying of weapons and granting permission to public officers to carry arms, and for other persons to carry shotguns and rifles for hunting or for having them repaired, or for the purpose of a constitutional declaration that "the right of the individual citizen to bear arms in defense of himself or the state shall not be impaired," where it is further declared that such provision shall not be "construed as authorizing individuals or corporations to organize, maintain, or employ an armed body of men." State v. Gohl, 46 Wash. 448, 90 Pac. 259.

Under the general police power provided for in a municipal charter, the carrying of concealed weapons within the municipality may be prohibited. Orrick v. Akers, 109 Mo. App. 662, 83 S. W. 549. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A county ordinance declaring it a misdemeanor to carry a concealed weapon, and conferring authority on the sheriff to grant permits to carry such weapons, to officers and other persons as he may deem fit, is a valid exercise of the police power. Ex parte Luening, 3 Cal. App. 76, 84 Pac. 445. The court said that "whatever may be the source of the right to bear arms in the general acceptance of such term, it does not follow as a natural consequence that such right extends to every conceivable manner in which arms may be borne."

using the same in public muster or military drills, etc.; also a provision against any one except a peace officer carrying into any church or religious assembly, or to an election or place where intoxicating liquors are sold, and certain other assemblies, any weapons designated in the first and second section above set out. These particular sections are not of moment here, and hence will not be set out at length.

We agree with counsel that the statutes in question cover practically the same subject, with the exception that the first one provides that the instruments mentioned therein shall not be carried concealed, while the second provides that the weapons mentioned therein shall not be carried at all, and the things which are mentioned cover practically the same articles. A loaded cane and a billy are mentioned in the second, and are not mentioned in the first; and a dagger, slung shot, and sword are mentioned in the first, and not in the latter. With this exception and with the difference first noted, the statutes are practically identical, and why the legislature incorporated them both in the act we are not able to say, but there is no room for holding that one of these repeals the other. They may both stand, and a party may be prosecuted under either. The second paragraph contains no repeal of the first. They are both contained in the same chapter, and in the same article, were passed on the same day; and the rule in such cases is stated in Lewis's Sutherland on Statutory Construction, § 268, to be as follows: "The presumption is stronger against implied repeals where provisions supposed to conflict are in the same act or were passed at nearly the same time. In the first case it would manifestly be an inadvertence, for it is not supposable that the legislature would deliberately pass an act with conflicting intentions. In the other case, the presumption rests on the improbability of a change of intention, or, if such change had occurred, that the legislature would express it in a different act without an express repeal of the first. 'Statutes enacted at the same session of the legislature should receive a construction, if possible, which will give effect to each. They are within the reason of the rule governing the construction of statutes in pari materia. Each is supposed to speak the mind of the same legislature, and the words used in each should be qualified and restricted, if necessary, in their construction and effect, so as to give validity and effect to every other act passed at the same session.' The presumption is that different acts passed at the same session of the legislature are imbued by the same spirit and actuated by the same policy, and that one was not intended to repeal or destroy another, unless so expressed." To the same effect is the holding in the case of State v. Rackley, from the supreme court of the state of Indiana, 2 Blackf. 249: "Statutes enacted at the same session of the legislature are to be taken in pari materia, and should receive a construction which will give effect to each if possible. But if each of them cannot have the same entire effect when taken in connection with the others that it would have if taken singly, they must be so construed as to give effect to what appears to have been the main intention of the legislature." In the case at bar these statutes must have been passed as is said by Mr. Sutherland "through inadvertence;" but construing them so as to give effect to what appears to have been the main intention of the legislature, in our judgment, will give effect to both, and a prosecutor may proceed under either as the facts require. They are for the greater part cumulative, but not conflicting.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Now, the question arises: Were these sections of the territorial statutes extended to, and did they remain in force in, the state of Oklahoma, or are they repugnant to that section of the Constitution above cited, relating to the right of citizens to bear arms. The question now presenting itself is whether or not the pistol, for the carrying of which defendant is restrained of his liberty, is among the arms which he could be prohibited from carrying or bearing. Practically all of the states under constitutional provisions similar to ours have held that acts of the legislatures against the carrying of weapons concealed did not conflict with such constitutional provision denying infringement of the right to bear arms, but were a valid exercise of the police power of the state. A few of the states which have so held are indicated as follows: Nunn v. State, 1 Ga. 243; State v. Mitchell, 3 Blackf. 229; State v. Reid, 1 Ala. 612, 35 Am. Dec. 44; State v. Jumel, 13 La. Ann. 399; State v. Wilburn, 7 Baxt. 57, 32 Am. Rep. 551; Cockrum v. State, 24 Tex. 394; State v. Buzzard, 4 Ark. 18. The foregoing authorities could be multiplied, but they are deemed to be sufficient.

The question now arises: Is a pistol the character of arms in contemplation of the constitutional convention and of the people of the state when they declared that the right of a citizen "to carry and bear arms," etc., "shall never be prohibited." We hold that it is not, and most of the states where it has been passed upon support us in this conclusion. Bishop, Statutory Crimes, § 793; Andrews v. State, 3 Heisk. 165, 8 Am. Rep. 8; Fife v. State, 31 Ark. 455, 25 Am. Rep. 556; English v. State, 35 Tex. 473, 14 Am. Rep. 374; Aymette v. State, 2 Humph. 154; Hill v. State, 53 Ga. 472; Salina v. Black- ley, 72 Kan. 230, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168, 115 Am. St. Rep. 196, 83 Pac. 619, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 925. Many of the state Constitutions on this subject contain a reiteration of article 2 of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, that "a well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." Some of the courts have held that this section applied to the states, as well as the general government; but the ultimate conclusion to which practically all of the courts of the Union have finally arrived, including the United States Supreme Court, is that this Amendment is a limitation on the Federal government only. Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 252, 29 L. ed. 615, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588; Fife v. State, supra; Andrews v. State, 3 Heisk. 166, 8 Am. Rep. 8. We have found no Constitution containing a provision exactly the same as the one in ours, but the reasons which brought about its adoption and the 2d Amendment to the Federal Constitution, and the reasons underlying the motives which have caused it to be written into the different state Constitutions are identically the same. Some of the state courts in cases of this character have examined the history of this provision at length, and, while we do not deem it necessary to go into this, those who are interested in the subject will find an excellent review of the entire matter in the case of Aymette v. State, supra, wherein Justice Green, who delivered the opinion of the court, has, in a well-written opinion, reviewed the same from its earliest appearance in England, and has marked its growth until it appears in the Constitution of the United States, and finally in the Constitution of the state of Tennessee. While the language of the Constitutions of the different states may vary in terms, yet, as they have sprung from the same source, and the purposes, aims, and objects to be accomplished by those provisions are identical, the same rule of construction will be applicable. The Constitution of the state of Tennessee in force at the time of the opinion last mentioned was "that the free white men of this state have a right to carry and bear arms for their common defense." The statute under which the defendant in that case was prosecuted read: "That if any person shall wear any bowie knife, or Arkansas toothpick, or other knife or weapon, that shall in form, shape, or size resemble a bowie knife or Arkansas toothpick, under his clothes, or keep the same concealed about his person, such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." The defendant contended that the statute was unconstitutional, and that every man had a right to arm himself in the manner which he chose. The defendant, it appears, had a bowie knife, of which the court, in dealing with the question of whether or not such an instrument came within the meaning of the constitutional provision, said: "The words 'bear arms,' too, have reference to their military use, and were not employed to mean wearing them about the person as part of the dress. As the object for which the right to keep and bear arms is secured is of general and public nature, to be exercised by the people in a body, for their common defense, so the arms, the right to keep which is secured, are such as are usually employed in civilized warfare, and that constitute the ordinary military equipment. If the citizens have these arms in their hands, they are prepared in the best possible manner to repel any encroachments upon their rights by those in authority. They need not, for such a purpose, the use of those weapons which are usually employed in private broils, and which are efficient only in the hands of the robber and the assassin. These weapons would be useless in war. They could not be employed advantageously in the common defense of the citizens. The right to keep and bear them is not, therefore, secured by the Constitution." In a latter case (Andrews v. State, supra) the supreme court of Tennessee, again dealing with this same subject and speaking through Justice Freeman, said: "In order to arrive at what is meant by this clause of the state Constitution, we must look at the nature of the thing itself, the right to keep which is guaranteed. It is 'arms,' that is, such weapons as are properly designated as such, as the term is understood in the popular language of the country and such as are adapted to the ends indicated above; that is, the efficiency of the citizen as a soldier, when called on to make good 'the defense of a free people;' and these arms he may use as a citizen, in all the usual modes to which they are adapted, and common to the country. What, then, is he protected in the right to keep and thus use? Not everything that may be useful for offense or defense; but what may properly be included or understood under the title of 'arms,' taken in connection with the fact that the citizen is to keep them as a citizen. Such, then, as are found to make up the usual arms of the citizen of the country, and the use of which will properly train and render him efficient in defense of his own liberties, as well as of the state. Under this head, with a knowledge of the habits of our people, and of the arms in the use of which a soldier should be trained, we would hold that the rifle of all descriptions,—the shotgun, the musket, and repeater, are such arms; and that under the Constitution the right to keep such arms cannot be infringed or forbidden by the legislature, their use, however, to be subordinated to such regulations and limitations as are or may be authorized by the law of the land, passed to subserve the general good, so as not to infringe the right secured and the necessary incidents to the exercise of such right." The court in this case considered three cases together, in one of which there was involved, as in the case at bar, the carrying of a pistol. The case of Hill v. State, supra, was one wherein the defendant was indicted for carrying a pistol. The provision of the Constitution of Georgia reads: "A well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed; but the general assembly shall have power to prescribe the manner in which arms may be borne." In considering the question as to whether or not the statute which provided that "no person in said state shall be permitted or allowed to carry about his or her person any dirk, bowie knife, pistol, or revolver, or any kind of deadly weapon, to any court of justice or any election ground or precinct," etc., was in violation of the terms of the Constitution, the supreme court said: "The language of the Constitution of this state, as well as that of the United States, guarantees only the right to keep and bear the 'arms' necessary for a militiaman. It is to secure the existence of a well-regulated militia, that, by the express words of the clause, was the object of it, and I have always been at a loss to follow the line of thought that extends the guarantee to the right to carry pistols, dirks, bowie knives, and those other weapons of like character, which, as all admit, are the greatest nuisances of our day. It is in my judgment a perversion of the meaning of the word 'arms,' as used in the phrase 'the right to keep and bear arms,' to treat it as including weapons of this character. The preamble to the clause is the key to the meaning of it. The word 'arms,' evidently means the arms of a militiaman, the weapons ordinarily used in battle, to wit, guns of every kind, swords, bayonets, horseman's pistols, etc. The very words 'bear arms' had then, and now have, a technical meaning. The 'arms bearing' part of a people were its men fit for service on the field of battle. That country was 'armed' that had an army ready for fight. The call 'to arms' was a call to put on the habiliments of battle; and I greatly doubt, if in any good author of those days a use of the word 'arms' when applied to a people can be found, which includes pocket pistols, dirks, sword canes, tooth-picks, bowie knives, and a host of other relics of past barbarism, or inventions of modern savagery of like character. In what manner the right to keep and bear these pests of society can encourage or secure the existence of a militia, and especially of a well-regulated militia, I am not able to divine."

The same weapon was involved in the case of English v. State, 35 Tex. 473, 14 Am. Rep. 374. The arms-bearing section of the Constitution of the state of Texas reads: "Every person shall have the right to keep and bear arms in the lawful defense of himself or the state, under such regulations as the legislature may prescribe." On this the supreme court of that state, speaking through Justice Walker, said: "We understand the word 'arms,' when used in this connection, as having the same import and meaning which it has when used in the Amendment of the Federal Constitution." It will thus be seen that the court held contrary to the general rule, that the 2d article to the Amendment of the Constitution of the United States is of a nature to bind both the state and national legislatures, but its construction of the word "arms" is none the less valuable. "To refer to deadly devices and instruments, called in the statute 'deadly weapons,' to the proper or necessary arms of a 'well-regulated militia,' is simply ridiculous. No kind of travesty, however subtle or ingenious, could so misconstrue this provision of the Constitution of the United States, as to make it cover and protect that pernicious vice, from which so many murders, assassinations, and deadly assaults have sprung, and which it was doubtless the intention of the legislature to punish and prohibit. The word 'arms' in the connection we find it in the Constitution of the United States refers to the arms of a militiaman or soldier, and the word is used in its military sense. The arms of the infantry soldier are the musket and bayonet; of cavalry and dragoons, the sabre, holster pistols, and carbine; of the artillery, the field piece, siege gun, and mortar, with side arms. The terms 'dirks,' 'daggers,' 'slung shots,' 'sword canes,' 'brass knuckles,' and 'bowie knives,' belong to no military vocabulary. Were a soldier on duty found with any of these things about his person, he would be punished for an offense against discipline." The Constitution of the state of Arkansas on this subject is: "The citizens of this state shall have the right to keep and bear arms for their common defense." The legislature passed a prohibitory act providing "that any person who shall wear or carry any pistol of any kind whatever, or any dirk, butcher or bowie knife, or sword or spear in a cane, brass or metal knucks, or razor, as a weapon, shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor," etc. The construction of this provision of the laws of that state arose in the case of Fife v. State, 31 Ark. 455, 25 Am. Rep. 556, and the supreme court held: "The provisions of article 2, § 5 of the Constitution of this state, securing to the citizens the right to keep and bear arms for their common defense, relate to such arms as are used for purposes of war; and does not prevent the legislature from prohibiting the wearing of such weapons as are not used in civilized warfare, and would not contribute to the common defense. . . . The act of February 16, 1875, which prohibits the carrying of any pistol whatever as a weapon, refers to such pistols as are usually carried in the pocket, and of a size to be concealed about the person, and used in private quarrels; and not to such as are within the provisions of the Constitution." That was a case, as is the one at bar, wherein the carrying of a pistol was involved; the defendant taking the position that the act of the legislature, which prohibited absolutely the carrying of the articles mentioned therein, was in violation of the Constitution, and void. The remarks of the court are peculiarly applicable to our own statute: "From the company in which the pistol is placed, and the known public mischief which the legislature intended by the act to prevent, it is manifest that the pistol intended to be proscribed is such as is usually carried in the pocket, or of a size to be concealed about the person, and used in private quarrels and brawls, and not such as is in ordinary use and effective as a weapon of war, and useful and necessary for 'the common defense.' The indications in the evidence are that the plaintiff in error was carrying a pistol of that class or character intended to be prohibited by the legislature, and which, we think, may be prohibited in the exercise of the police power of the state, without any infringement of the constitutional right of the citizens of the state to keep and bear arms for their common defense." The case of Salina v. Blaksley, 72 Kan. 230, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168, 115 Am. St. Rep. 196, 83 Pac. 619, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 925, was another one wherein the question of the right of the defendant to carry a pistol was before the supreme court of the state of Kansas for determination. Section 4 of the Bill of Rights of that state is as follows: "The people have the right to bear arms for their defense and security; but standing armies, in time of peace, are dangerous to liberty, and shall not be tolerated, and the military shall be in strict subordination to the civil power." The statute of the state of Kansas provided that a city council may prohibit and punish the carrying of fire arms or other deadly weapons, concealed or otherwise. The defendant was arrested for carrying a pistol, and his contention was that this section of the Bill of Rights was a constitutional inhibition upon the power of the legislature to prohibit an individual from bearing arms, and that the section of the statute mentioned was in conflict with this constitutional provision, and therefore void. The court held the provision of the Kansas Constitution (Bill of Rights, § 4), "that 'the people have the right to bear arms for their defense and security,' is a limitation on legislative power to enact laws, prohibiting the bearing of arms in the militia or any other military organization provided for by law, but is not a limitation on legislative power to enact laws prohibiting and punishing the promiscuous carrying of arms or other deadly weapons." Mr. Bishop in his work on Statutory Crimes, § 793, has this to say on this subject: "The same guaranty to the people of the right 'to keep and bear arms' is largely found in our state Constitutions; in some of them in these words alone, and in others more or less qualified. In reason the keeping and bearing of arms has reference only to war, and possibly also to insurrections, wherein the forms of war are as far as practicable observed; yet certainly not to broils, bravado, and tumult, disturbing the public repose, or to private assassination and secret revenge. Nor are these, in the language of the constitutional provision now under consideration, 'necessary to the security of a free state.' Nor yet are dirks, bludgeons, revolvers, and other weapons which are not used in war 'arms.'"

While not contained in the same paragraph with the provision securing the right to bear arms, as in many of the other Constitutions, § 40 of article 3—§ 113 of Bunn's Constitution of Oklahoma—provides: "The legislature shall provide for organizing, disciplining, arming, maintaining, and equipping the militia of the state." Herein is shown clearly that the Constitution contemplates the maintenance of an armed militia, and, taking this in connection with the other provision and the views expressed by the courts from whose decisions we have quoted, and the history of, and ends to be attained by, the arms-bearing provision, we believe there is no room for doubt that the arms defendant had a right to bear, and which right could never be prohibited to him, relates solely to such arms as are recognized in civilized warfare, and not those used by the ruffian, bravler, or the assassin; and we are further convinced that the act of the legislature under which the defendant in this case was arrested, tried, and convicted was not repealed or in conflict with the terms of the Constitution, but was among the valid enactments in force in the territory of Oklahoma at the time of its admission; was neither repugnant to the Constitution nor locally inapplicable; was extended in force in the state of Oklahoma. Hence the application of petitioner herein should be denied.

All the Justices concur except Williams, Ch. J., who concurs in conclusion.

OKLAHOMA CRIMINAL COURT OF APPEALS.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

v.

WILLIE HARGO, Appt.

(— Okla. —, 98 Pac. 1021.)

Contempt — summoning jurors — officer's misconduct.

1. If any officer whose duty it shall be to summon a jury, or to select and summon talesmen when the regular panel of jurors has been exhausted, shall be guilty of unlawful, partial, or improper conduct in selecting or summoning such jurors or talesmen, he commits an act of gross contempt of court, and should be severely punished for such conduct.

Summoning jurors — officers — duties — impartiality.

2. It is the duty of the officer who summons jurors, or who selects and summons talesmen, to use his best efforts to secure men of intelligence, courage, and good moral character; but, in doing this, he should act with entire impartiality between the prosecution and the defendant.

Trial — withdrawal of jury — officer's misconduct.

3. When a motion is made, supported by

Headnotes by FURMAN, P. J.

Case Note. — Summoning biased or otherwise improper jurors or talesmen as a contempt.

A search has disclosed but one other reported case upon this subject,—namely, Richards v. United States, 61 C. C. A. 161, 126 Fed. 105,—in which it was held that the fact that the marshal knew that one of the talesmen whom he caused to be subpoenaed was a friend of the defendant was not in itself evidence sufficient to establish the charge of wilful contempt of court. The court said: "The most that can be said of the evidence against the marshal is that, conceding it all to be true, it presents some circumstances calculated to arouse affidavit, to withdraw a case from the consideration of, and to discharge, a jury, on account of improper action of the officer who selected and summoned the jury or the talesmen, and such motion is made as soon as the facts stated therein come to the knowledge of the defendant or his counsel, and the matters of fact therein stated are not denied under oath, they will be taken as confessed, and will be construed most strongly against the prosecution, and in favor of the defendant.

Jury — challenge to panel — grounds.

4. A challenge to the array or panel will lie for bias, partiality, or irregular action of the summoning officer.

Appeal — technical errors — unfair trial.

5. When the record shows that a conviction has been fairly obtained, this court will not consider technical errors which do not affect the substantial rights of the defendant. But we will not allow any judgment of conviction to stand when the record shows that unfair means were resorted to in order to obtain it.

(January 13, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the United States Court for the Western District of the Indian Territory convicting him of murder. Reversed.

Statement by Furman, P. J.:

On the 14th day of April, 1905, Willie Hargo, hereinafter called defendant, was indicted in the United States court for the western district of Indian territory, sitting at Wewoka, for the offense of murder. The defendant was arraigned and pleaded not guilty. The defendant was placed upon trial on said indictment, and on the 11th day of April, 1906, was, by the jury, found guilty of murder without capital punishment. Defendant filed a motion for a new trial, which, being overruled, defendant excepted. This case was carried by appeal to the United States court of appeals of the Indian territory. Upon the admission of the state of Oklahoma into the Union under the enabling suspicion, but not sufficient to sustain a judgment of conviction of so grave an offense as that with which he is charged."

It will be noted that this decision is opposed to UNITED STATES v. HARGO, and there is no apparent distinction between the acts of the summoning officers. Although the precise question before the court in the latter case was whether the defendant in the original suit had had a fair trial, the express and unequivocal language of the court, both in the opinion and in the first headnote, by the judge who wrote the opinion, leaves little, if any, doubt as to what its decision would have been had the summoning officer been before the court on the charge of contempt.

act (act June 16, 1906, chap. 3335, 34 Stat. at L. 267) and the Constitution, the case was transferred to the supreme court of Oklahoma. Upon the creation of the criminal court of appeals, the case was transferred to this court, as directed by statute.

Messrs. Crump & Rogers and W. J. Crump for appellant.

Mr. William M. Mellette for the United States.

Furman, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

After two witnesses had been introduced on behalf of the prosecution, the defendant filed a motion, supported by affidavit, to withdraw the case from the jury, and that the jury be discharged from the further consideration of the case, upon the ground that, after the regular panel of jurors had been exhausted, the deputy marshal, who was ordered to summon talesmen to complete the panel, was guilty of improper conduct in summoning said talesmen, by discriminating against the defendant in refusing to summon men to serve as jurors who were acquainted with George Crump, one of the attorneys for the defendant. It appears from the record that, before summoning a talesman, the deputy marshal would ask him if he was acquainted with George Crump, and then press the inquiry as to the extent of the acquaintance; and, if it appeared that the party interrogated was well acquainted with the said Crump, the deputy marshal would say, "That is all," and would pass on to other persons, without summoning such person as a talesman. It further appears that this motion was filed as soon as the information upon which it was based came to the knowledge of defendant and his counsel. There was no reply to, or denial of, the statements of fact contained in the motion and in the affidavit filed in support thereof. Here is a direct charge of improper conduct and discrimination against the defendant, on the part of an officer of the court. This charge is supported by affidavit. If the charge was untrue, it was the duty of the prosecution to reply to it. Failing to do this, we are bound to consider the facts stated as confessed. This case originated in that section of the state which then constituted Indian territory. Section 1057, Carter's Ind. Terr. Anno. Stat. 1899, which was placed in force in that territory by act of Congress, is as follows: "Every person whose duty it shall be to select or summon jurors, in any court, or before any officer, who shall be guilty of any unlawful, partial, or improper conduct in selecting or summoning any juror, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

conviction, shall be fined in any sum not less than $100." It will not be denied that it was improper, and clearly indicated partiality, for the officer who was charged with the duty of selecting and summoning the talesmen to attempt to exclude from the jury those who were acquainted with counsel for the defense. To tolerate such conduct would be to permit such an officer, charged with the duty of selecting and summoning talesmen, to amend the statute, and create a new ground for challenge for actual bias; viz., that of being acquainted with counsel for the defendant, while acquaintance with the prosecuting attorney would not be a disqualification. It is the duty of an officer selecting and summoning talesmen to use his best judgment in securing men of intelligence, courage, and good moral character. But, in doing this, he should act with entire impartiality. It was to secure this result that the statute above quoted was enacted. There being no denial of the motion and affidavit filed by the defendant, we are required to construe the statements there made most strongly against the officer, and in favor of the defendant. From this standpoint the officer was guilty of a gross contempt of court, as well as a violation of a penal statute; and should have been dequied to make a satisfactory explanation, or have been severely dealt with. Courts cannot be too careful in rigidly suppressing everything which indicates the least bias or partiality in the selection, summoning, or taking care of jurors. Anything which gives the least odor of unfairness in the selection, summoning, or control of a jury will taint their verdict, and constitute a ground for reversal. Trial by jury means much more than a trial by twelve men. It not only means that the twelve men must possess the qualifications prescribed by law, but it also means that they must have been selected and summoned by impartial and disinterested officers.

The justice of this position is so manifest that it is not deemed necessary to cite many authorities in its support, but we will give a few. "A challenge to the array or panel will also lie for the bias, partiality, or irregular action of the summoning officer." 12 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 421, and authorities there cited. "It is essential to the fair and impartial administration of justice that the jury shall be selected and summoned by officers having no interest in the matters to be decided by them. An officer is not qualified to act in summoning a jury . . . if he is interested in the event of the action, although not a party of record. . . . Where a jury is summoned by an officer who is disqualified for such reasons as [are] above stated, it is ground for challenge to the array." 24 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 226, and authorities there cited. The weight of authority goes even further than is stated in the above quotations, and holds that, if the officer who selects and summons the jury allows one who is interested in the case pending to suggest names or point out persons to be summoned, although the officer himself may not be otherwise objectionable, yet such conduct is ground for challenge to the array.

The motion to withdraw this case from the consideration of the jury, and discharge the jury, was made at the earliest possible moment after the facts came to the knowledge of defendant and his counsel. It was therefore in time. It is the supreme purpose of this court to see that every person charged with crime shall receive, as near as possible, a fair trial. No trial which is not fair comes within the definition of "due process of law." When the record shows that a conviction has been fairly had, then this court will not consider technical errors which do not affect the substantial rights of the defendant. But we will not allow any judgment of conviction to stand when the record shows that unfair means were resorted to in order to obtain it. It is true that the defendant in this case is an ignorant Indian, who cannot speak or understand the English language. So much the greater reason why the trial court should have been vigilant in guarding his right to a fair trial. There are other questions presented in this record, but we will confine our decision to the question presented alone, in order that we may emphasize the idea that trials must be fair, or convictions will not be sustained by this court. We are determined that every person in Oklahoma, regardless of race or nationality or social position or poverty, can rely upon the absolute fairness of the courts of the state.

For the error in overruling defendant's motion to withdraw this case from the consideration of, and to discharge, the jury, the judgment is reversed.

Baker and Doyle, JJ., concur.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF OREGON EX REL. J. H. McNARY, Resp't.,
v.

F. I. DUNBAR, Appt.

(— Or. —, 98 Pac. 878.)

Officer — illegal fee — duty.

1. A public official who has collected fees under statutory authority, in violation of 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the Constitution, cannot be compelled to turn them over to the state, where the legislature has made no provision therefor.

Same — copies — cost.

2. A constitutional provision that the secretary of state shall be paid a salary, and receive no fees or perquisites whatever for the performance of any duties, does not prevent the allowance to him of the necessary cost of procuring copies of laws and resolutions, which he is required to deliver to the state printer.

(December 29, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Marion County compelling him to turn over to the state the amount of fees alleged to have been illegally collected by him. Reversed.

Statement by Eakin, J.:

This is a suit originally commenced by J. K. Sears, a taxpayer, on behalf of the state, alleging that between January 14, 1899, and January 14, 1907, defendant, as secretary of state, had received for the use and benefit of the state a large amount of money as fees for filing various papers, issuing commissions and licenses, recording documents, and copying public records, which money he had converted to his own use, and asks that an accounting be taken of the sums of money so received, and for a decree requiring defendant to pay such sums to the state. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the court for the reason that Sears has not capacity to maintain the suit, and thereupon, by amended complaint, the state, at the relation of J. H. McNary, district attorney for the third judicial district, was substituted as plaintiff therein. The answer of Case Note. — Right of public to fees unlawfully collected by officer for his own benefit.

While cases are not lacking upon the question as to the right of the state, county, municipality, or other public body to recover from a public officer moneys unlawfully collected by him from third persons, where he assumed to make the collection for the benefit of the public body, a search has disclosed but three other cases which, like STATE EX REL. McNARY v. DUNBAR, involved the right of the public to fees unlawfully collected by an officer who assumed to collect them for his own benefit, and not for the benefit of the public.

One of these cases Re Benton, 66 Vt. 507, 29 Atl. 805, appears to support the position taken in the DUNBAR CASE on this point, as it held that the state could not have maintained an action against a clerk and judge of the probate court in his lifetime for fees received by him from private individuals for making records which he in fact failed to make; and, further, that the state the defendant admits that he was secretary of state, as alleged, and that the relator, J. H. McNary, is district attorney for the third judicial district, as alleged, but denies all other allegations of the complaint.

Upon the trial, the lower court found that defendant, as such secretary of state, received the following sums:

For filing articles of incorporation	$ 9,144 50
" issuing notarial commissions	17,186 00
" recording trademarks	1,285 00
" copying laws and journals	11,684 75
" issuing appointments of commissioners of deeds	148 00
" issuing other commissions	814 00
" issuing agents' certificates to fire ins. companies	35,060 00
" issuing licenses to life insurance agents	3,759 00
" issuing annual licenses to life insurance companies	21,488 16
" issuing requisitions and warrants of arrest	912 00
" registering titles in insurance matters	380 00
" issuing powers of attorney	970 00
" issuing certificates of authority to ins. companies	105 00
" filing statements of mutual fire ins. associations	390 00
Total	$103,926 41

Judgment was rendered for the above to-

could not create a claim against his estate for such fees by a legislative enactment that such records should be made at the expense of the state, which should be reimbursed by the estate. The court said: "The fees were paid him, and, as against the state, were his absolute property. He was under no liability, either express or implied, to account for them to the state. What right the parties who paid for making the records had against the deceased is a question not before us, and we express no opinion upon it."

In apparent opposition to the decision in the last case, and also to the DUNBAR CASE, is Anderson v. Lewis, 6 Idaho, 51, 52 Pac. 163, holding that where the secretary of state, under a contract with the printer of the Session Laws, received fees from the latter for preparing copies of the laws and journal for him, that being a duty which the secretary was bound by law to perform without compensation other than his salary, he may be required to pay the amount into the state treasury. This case, however, is perhaps distinguishable for the reason that the payment by the printer seems to have been voluntary, so that he probably would have had no right of action against the secretary of state to recover back the same.

The third case is Bliss v. United States, 38 Fed. 230, in which Brewer, J., held that where a United States district attorney, by arrangement with defendants in certain suits for the collection of internal revenue taxes, was paid more than the fees to which he was entitled by statute, public policy required that the excess should belong to the government, although the good faith of the transaction was beyond question. This case is perhaps distinguishable from STATE 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) tal in favor of the state, from which the defendant appeals.

Messrs. George G. Bingham and G. C. Fulton, for appellant:

Contemporaneous legislative interpretation of the Constitution, long followed and universally adopted, is entitled to the force of judicial exposition, and these acts have been recognized as constitutional for over fifty years by every legislative assembly.

Moog v. Randolph, 77 Ala. 597; Ex parte Hardy, 68 Ala. 303; Re Warfield, 22 Cal. 51, 83 Am. Dec. 49; People ex rel. Badger v. Leventhal, 93 Ill. 191; State ex rel. Horne v. Holcomb, 46 Neb. 88, 64 N. W. 437; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 357; 2 Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 376; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. Law, § 552; Cline v. Greenwood, 10 Or. 230.

The fees were voluntarily paid under legislative sanction, and no part thereof belongs to the state.

Eley v. Miller, 7 Ind. App. 529, 34 N. E. 836.

The acts of the legislature authorizing the secretary of state to collect the fees, as well as the resolutions of the legislative assembly

EX REL. McNARY v. DUNBAR, for the reason that the payment seems to have been entirely voluntary on the part of the defendants in the actions, so that they probably could not have maintained an action for its recovery. In other respects, however, the case is a strong one for this side of the question, since the transaction was open and above suspicion, and approved by the court in which the judgment was rendered, and there was nothing excessive in the allowance, considering the importance of the litigation and the labor necessarily performed in the prosecution of the suits, and Judge Brewer said that, were it not for the imperative and important rule of law and public policy, he should feel constrained to sustain the right of the district attorney to the entire amount of fees. Thayer, J., wrote an opinion in this case, reported in 37 Fed. 191, taking the same position. His judgment, however, was, for some reason not disclosed, set aside on his own motion, and the case set down for hearing before Brewer, J.

Cases like People v. Van Ness, 79 Cal. 84, 12 Am. St. Rep. 134, 21 Pac. 554; Philipsburg v. Degenhart, 30 Mont. 299, 76 Pac. 694; Yamhill County v. Foster (Or.) 99 Pac. 286; Custer County v. Tunley, 13 S. D. 7, 79 Am. St. Rep. 870, 82 N. W. 84, holding that a public officer may be required to pay to the public body moneys unlawfully collected from third persons, where he assumed to collect the money for the benefit of the public, and not for his own benefit, are not in point on this note. So, of course, cases involving the right of the public body to recover amounts unlawfully or improperly allowed or paid by it to the officer are beyond the scope of the note.

blies, authorizing the payment to him for copying laws, senate and house journals, are clearly constitutional.

State ex rel. Tzschuck v. Weston, 4 Neb. 234; State v. Kelsey, 44 N. J. L. 1; People ex rel. Follett v. Fitch, 145 N. Y. 261, 39 N. E. 972; State v. Braddish, 34 Vt. 419; Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 Pac. 1180; San Luis Obispo County v. Felts, 104 Cal. 60, 37 Pac. 780; Shiffert v. Montgomery County, 12 Montg. Co. L. Rep. 100.

A general understanding of a law, and constant practice under it for so long a period by all the officers of government whose duty it has been to execute it, unquestioned by any suit or public or private action to test or settle the construction in the courts, is very strong, if not conclusive, evidence of its true meaning and application, and that they are such as it has thus received.

Scanlan v. Childs, 33 Wis. 663; Harrington v. Smith, 28 Wis. 43; United States v. Philbrick, 120 U. S. 52, 30 L. ed. 559, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 413; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. Law, 255; Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376, 74 Am. Dec. 572; Fall v. Hazelrigg, 45 Ind. 576, 15 Am. Rep. 278; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 621, 10 L. ed. 1091.

The constitutional provision that state officers shall receive no fees or perquisites whatever for the performance of any duty connected with their respective offices other than a salary is not self-executing, and requires further legislation for its enforcement.

Acme Dairy Co. v. Astoria, 49 Or. 520, 90 Pac. 154; Griffin v. Rhoton, 85 Ark. 89, 107 S. W. 380; Groves v. Slaughter, 15 Pet. 496, 10 L. ed. 817.

Messrs. L. H. McMahan and John H. McNary for respondent:

A salaried officer cannot rightfully claim compensations as his salary for performing a new duty or one imposed by the legislature since his salary was provided.

Palmer v. New York, 2 Sandf. 318; Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. §§ 233, 234; People ex rel. Phoenix v. New York, 1 Hill, 367.

Eakin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the trial, the defendant, by motion and demurrer, questioned the power of the court to permit by an amended complaint a substitution of the state as plaintiff in place of Sears, and also the power of a district attorney of his own motion to institute a proceeding on behalf of the state to recover a debt due to it. The trial court denied the motion and overruled the demurrer, and the defendant presses these contentions here; but we find it unnecessary to consider them, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

as the case is disposed of in his favor on the merits.

The foundation of plaintiff's right of recovery, as disclosed by the complaint, is that these sums of money were collected by the secretary of state for the use and benefit of the state; the contention of plaintiff being that the Constitution prescribes a salary for the secretary of state, and fixes that as his whole compensation; and that therefore the statute which allows to him certain fees and perquisites for work done is unconstitutional and void. Article 13 of the Constitution provides, among other things, that: ". . . The secretary of state shall receive an annual salary of $1,500 . . . [and] shall receive no fees or perquisites whatever for the performance of any duties. . . ."

It is conceded that the fees received for filing articles of incorporation, issuing commissions to notaries, appointments of commissioners of deeds, miscellaneous commissions, and requisitions and warrants of arrest, were authorized by, and all collected under, § 2923, Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes, which is § 11 of an act of the legislative assembly entitled, "An Act to Prescribe the Fees of Certain Officers and Persons," passed October 24, 1864 (see Deady's Gen. Laws 1845-64, p. 732, chap. 18), § 1 of which provides: "The following fees shall be allowed to the officers and persons hereinafter named for the services herein specified." Section 11 (Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 2923) provides: "The fees of the secretary of state shall be as follows: For certifying and affixing the seal of the state to any document or paper, $2; for making copies of any record or file, each folio, 25 cents; for filing articles of incorporation, $2.50; for recording any paper or document by law required to be recorded by him, for each folio, 25 cents." Also, the fees received by him as insurance commissioner were exacted under a legislative act entitled, "An Act to License and Regulate Insurance Business in the State of Oregon," adopted February 25, 1887 (Laws 1887, p. 118), which, with amendments and additions thereto, constitutes §§ 3706-3756, inclusive, Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes. Section 1 of the act provides that "the secretary of state shall be ex officio insurance commissioner of this state, and shall receive for his services as such commissioner the compensation hereinafter provided therefor." The fees received for filing trademarks were exacted under Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 4615, which provides: "A fee of $2.50 shall be paid to the secretary of state by the owner of said trademark, as pay for recording."

Assuming, without deciding, that the compensation provided for in these statutes is fees and perquisites, and within the inhibition of the Constitution, then the legislative acts authorizing them are clearly void, to that extent, and cannot be construed as authorizing the collection of them for the use and benefit of the state. No such intention on the part of the legislature is apparent. The right to exact such fees for the benefit of the state, or its title to the money so collected, must be established by legislative authority. If the fees cannot be exacted for the purpose prescribed in the statute, then they cannot be exacted at all; and, if collected without authority, may be recovered by the person from whom exacted, if he is not otherwise barred. Mechem, Pub. Off. § 884, and cases cited. In cases in which the manner of compensating officers has been changed from fees to a salary, it has been held that the collection for the use and benefit of the state, under legislative authority, of the fees theretofore provided as compensation to the officer, is not objectionable, as being a special tax, but that it is competent for the legislature, if it sees proper, to exact from persons especially benefited by the performance of an official service a reasonable compensation therefor, to be paid into the public treasury, to reimburse the public for the expense incurred in providing for and maintaining such office. Conner v. New York, 2 Sandf. 355; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. First Judicial Dist. Judges, 21 Ohio St. 1. Both of these cases recognize that fees allowed by law to an officer as compensation for services rendered are the property of the officer, but that the legislature may compensate the officer by a salary, and require him to collect the fees for the use and benefit of the public. To the same effect is 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 387, and cases cited. But the state's right to such fees depends upon some legislative provision exacting the same as compensation to the state. This is the provision of the act of our legislature, placing county officers upon salaries (Laws 1893, p. 163), and the act fixing the salary of state officers (Laws 1905, p. 133); but the unauthorized exaction of fees by an officer cannot operate to give the state or the county title to the money so received. This was expressly decided by this court in Howard v. Clatsop County, 41 Or. 149, 68 Pac. 425, construing § 2927, Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes, which was enacted by the legislative assembly in 1899, and provides that the district attorneys of the several judicial districts shall receive salaries as full compensation for their services. Section 2928, ibid., provides that they shall receive no other fees or compensation of any kind.

By § 1098, Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes (N.S.)

& Statutes, enacted in 1878, it is made the duty of the county clerk to collect from the plaintiff in every divorce suit the sum of $10, which sum shall be paid to the district attorney as his fee in such suit. In Howard v. Clatsop County, supra, which is an action to recover from the county a $10 district attorney fee exacted in a divorce suit and paid over to the county, the court, in construing §§ 2927 and 2928, held that they operate to repeal § 1098, so far as it authorizes the collection of $10 as a district attorney fee in divorce cases. Mr. Justice Wolverton says: "The $10 fee required to be collected from a private party, under § 1074 [Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 1098], being one to which the district attorney was entitled as a perquisite for a duty performed by him, the act of 1899, putting him upon a salary, and expressly denying to him any further salary, fees, etc., must be held to supersede, and thereby to repeal, § 1074 [Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 1098] as to such fee in judicial districts other than the fourth, as the two provisions are utterly inconsistent, one with the other, and both cannot stand." And it was held that, upon the face of the complaint, plaintiff was entitled to recover such fee. The act of 1898 (Laws 1898, p. 8, § 3), which fixes a salary for the district attorney of the fourth judicial district, and which applied only to Multnomah county, provides, by § 8 thereof, which is § 3030, Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes, that the fees now established by law shall continue to be the established fees, and shall be collected for the use of Multnomah county. In State ex rel. Fitzgerald v. Moore, 37 Or. 536, 62 Pac. 26, it is held, in effect, that the right to the $10 district attorney fee in divorce cases in Multnomah county, by virtue of the above provisions inured to the benefit of the county. The effect of these two decisions is that the clerk had no authority to exact the fee for the benefit of the county unless it had been expressly authorized; and, when wrongfully collected, the county acquired no right or title to it; but that it was the property of the person from whom it had been exacted. And this principle applies equally to the statute authorizing the exaction of fees by the secretary of state. If the fees are illegally exacted, they are the property of the person from whom collected, and the state has no right thereto.

The only other item of fees sued for relates to the compensation allowed to the secretary of state for copying laws and resolutions for the use of the state printer. The legislature, at each session, by resolution, directed the secretary of state to furnish to the state printer, within thirty days after its adjournment, true and correct copies of the laws and resolutions adopted at that session; and that the compensation for making such transcripts should be as prescribed by law for like services in other cases. There is nothing in this record indicating that the amounts allowed by the resolutions were not expended in the preparation of the laws and resolutions as required. Bellinger & C. Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 2390, provides: "The secretary of state shall be empowered to employ and appoint clerks to aid in the performance of the duties of his office: Provided, that the expenditure of moneys for the pay of such clerks shall not exceed the appropriation of the legislative assembly therefor, and that such clerks shall be paid out of the state treasury as other officers are paid." The allowance provided by the resolution above referred to is not as personal compensation to the secretary of state for personal services, to be rendered by him, but is to pay the expense of having such records transcribed. A "salary" is personal compensation provided to be paid to the officer for his own services, and does not prevent an allowance for clerk hire. People use of Lawrence County v. Adams, 65 Ill. App. 283; Briscoe v. Clark County, 95 Ill. 309. A similar provision was made by the last legislature to meet the expense of like work by the present secretary of state, who is serving under a salary law which took effect January 1, 1907.

We conclude that the state has no right or title to the fees and perquisites exacted by the defendant under the statutes herein referred to, nor is the defendant accountable to the state therefor in this suit.

Therefore the decree is reversed, and the suit dismissed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

ELIZABETH H. POWELL

v.

PHILADELPHIA & READING RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(220 Pa. 638, 70 Atl. 268.)

Carrier — passenger — termination of relation.

1. The mere use, by a passenger who has alighted from a train, of a public crossing, in getting to a station on the opposite side of the track, which is nearest his destination, does not per se terminate his relation to the carrier.

Trial — jury — relation of passenger.

2. The jury must determine, as a question of fact, whether or not a passenger injured after arriving at his station, while 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

awaiting the arrival of the friends who were to meet him, had, prior to the injury, been offered a reasonable opportunity to make arrangements to depart, so as to terminate his relation of passenger to the carrier.

Carrier — passenger — termination of relation.

3. A passenger who, upon alighting from a train, goes to the station, which is some distance from the place where he left the train, simply to await the arrival of a street car upon which he intends to become a passenger, and which could have been boarded from points less distant, cannot claim the rights of a passenger if injured by the negligence of the railroad company.

Same — awaiting friends.

4. A passenger alighting from a railroad train has a right to remain in the railroad waiting room a reasonable time, awaiting the arrival of friends who are to meet him, without losing his rights as a passenger.

Same — negligence — liability.

5. A railroad company is liable to a passenger who, because of obstructions on the path providing egress from its station, is compelled to walk so close to tracks used by trains that, without negligence on his part, he is struck by a train passing along the track.

Same — absence of light.

6. A railroad company is liable for injury to a passenger through failure to light the path providing egress from its station sufficiently to enable the passenger to avoid collision with a train on an adjoining track.

(April 20, 1908.)

Case Note — Termination of passenger's relation as such upon reaching destination.

The cases upon this question prior to those cited in this note are collated in the subject note to Glenn v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 873. And prior cases upon the narrower question of what time must or should be allowed passengers to alight are to be found in the case note to Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Wimmer, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 140.

The relation of carrier and passenger ceases only after the train (Hill v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 85 Ark. 529, 109 S. W. 523) or street car (Melton v. Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. 153 Ala. 95, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 467, 45 So. 151) has reached the passenger's destination, and he has had a reasonable time and opportunity to safely alight and leave the carrier's premises.

In Southern R. Co. v. Wright (Ga. App.) 64 S. E. 703, it was held that the duty of extraordinary diligence for the safety of passengers, devolving upon a carrier, continues until the passenger has safely alighted from the train, and it is not error to so instruct the jury.

In Bass v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Bucks County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

In the opinion of the trial court by Stout, J., the facts were stated as follows:

At about 6:40 o'clock on the evening of November 29, 1905, the plaintiff, Elizabeth H. Powell, accompanied by her friend Miss Gaunt (now Mrs. Engle), arrived at Langhorne station on a train from Philadelphia. They both alighted in safety on the temporary cinder walk or platform, on the south side of the railroad, then operated as a double-track road, running at that point from west to east from Philadelphia to New York City. They were on their way to visit at the house of Edward Palmer, who lived at Langhorne, north of the railroad, and who was to meet them at the station with a carriage. The passenger station-house was on the north side of the railroad. It had been located for many years at the foot of Station avenue, a street running in a northerly direction to Langhorne borough. About three weeks prior to this date, the station had been moved about 125 feet to the east, towards Bellevue avenue, the main street crossing the railroad at about right angles, and running in a northerly direction into Langhorne borough. On the north side of the railroad the Langhorne and Bristol street railway ran from Bellevue avenue in a westerly direction along or near the defendant's land, and parallel with its tracks, for several squares to the west of the passenger station, where it crosses the railroad tracks to the south by an overhead bridge. The street railway stopped its cars at the foot of Station avenue, opposite the railroad station, to let off and take on passengers. The street railway maintained a small platform at this place for the accommodation of its passengers, but no waiting room. Street car passengers intending to take the railroad trains used the railroad's waiting rooms until the departure of their trains, and railroad passengers who desired to reach their destination by means of the street railway likewise used and remained in the defendant company's waiting rooms until the arrival of the next street car. There was no agreement between the defendant company and the street railway as to such use. The waiting rooms were so used by the passengers of both companies for the purposes aforesaid by the permission of the defendant company, at least it does not appear that any objection was made by the defendant company to such use since the street railway was in operation, about ten years. As said before, Miss Powell and her friend, Miss Gaunt, alighted on the platform in safety. It was a dark, rainy, stormy night. There was no shelter for

Co. 142 Mich. 177, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 875, 105 N. W. 151, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 718, it was held that the failure of a passenger, who was asleep when the train reached his destination, to awaken and leave the train immediately upon its coming to a stop, did not terminate his relation as a passenger and the carrier's duty of protection, where those in charge of the train, knowing the facts, failed to awaken him and acquaint him with the fact that he should alight.

In Forbes v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 135 Iowa, 679, 113 N. W. 477, it was held that where a passenger saw fit to remain upon the train, at the destination to which he had purchased a ticket, although the train had been stopped at the station for a reasonable length of time for the passengers to alight, it was to be presumed that he intended to pay the additional proper fare, and, until this presumption was overcome by some evidence that he intended to be carried without payment of fare, he was entitled to the same protection as any other passenger.

In Legge v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 197 Mass. 88, 83 N. E. 367, it was held that a carrier is bound to use proper care to see that a passenger who alights from one of its cars at a station provided for that purpose, has a safe way of exit from its grounds; and the relation of passenger and carrier continues until such exit is completed.

In Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Rosenthal, 217 Ill. 458, 75 N. E. 578, it was conceded that a passenger alighting from a street car is still a passenger while he has one foot on the ground and the other on the footboard of the car.

In Tompkins v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 201 Mass. 114, 87 N. E. 488, it was held that one riding on the platform of a crowded street car did not cease to be a passenger by temporarily alighting for the purpose of permitting some lady passengers to get off the car conveniently.

In Legge v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. supra, it was held that, if a passenger knowingly fails to make use of the proper exit provided by the carrier from its station grounds, and, without any invitation, either express or fairly to be implied from the situation and arrangements of the station and grounds, leaves the way marked out by the carrier and proceeds to make his exit in some other way, he ceases to be a passenger from that moment and becomes, at most, a mere licensee; nor does it make any difference that he goes where others, with the knowledge of the carrier, have gone before him, since the knowledge of such use, where a proper way has been provided, does not of itself amount to an invitation.

In Payne v. Illinois C. R. Co. 83 C. C. A.

passengers on the south platform, except a small open shed. Miss Powell had been at Langhorne several times before and had used the waiting rooms, but she had not been at Langhorne since the passenger station had been moved. Miss Gaunt had been a frequent visitor at Langhorne, and was well acquainted with the use of the waiting rooms, but had not been there since the station had been removed. They could not reach Mr. Palmer, who lived north of the railroad, without crossing the tracks. They could not cross from the point where they were on the platform to the waiting rooms on the north side, because of an iron picket fence between the east and west bound tracks, extending from a point west of the station to the line of Bellevue avenue, a public street crossing, the gates in front of the station being closed. They walked on the cinder walk to Bellevue avenue, over the public street crossing, to the north side of the railroad, at the end of the cinder walk, which led to the station and waiting rooms, about 190 feet west of Bellevue avenue. At this point they were as near to the street car line as they were at the station waiting rooms. They could have proceeded directly to Mr. Palmer's by the public streets, or they could have gone to the public licensed hotel opposite the street to wait for a car. They, however, did not do so. They took the newly laid cinder walk or platform to the railroad station. They entered the waiting room and at once passed through it to the back door to see whether Mr. Palmer was there with a carriage. It was through the back door that passengers usually took their carriages before the station was moved. They found the door was locked. They looked through the windows, and found Mr. Palmer was not there. They then went to the booth and telephoned to Mr. Palmer to know what to do. He told them to sit down and wait. In a short time Mr. Palmer arrived to take them home in the street car. Their purpose of using the waiting room was to meet Mr. Palmer in the first place, and afterwards to await his arrival to take them home, and to secure shelter from the storm in the meantime. They then waited for the arrival of the next car, which was due at 7:40. On the arrival of the street car Mr. Palmer, the plaintiff, and Miss Gaunt, with a number of others, were waiting there for the same purpose. They all passed down a little bridge from the elevated temporary platform in front of the waiting room to the temporary cinder walk laid along the tracks where the old platform had been taken up the day before. It was while they were passing along this walk to meet the street car that Miss Powell was struck by a passing express train from the east and was injured. During this period the waiting rooms were open for the use of the defendant's passengers. Miss Powell held a return ticket to Philadelphia.

589, 155 Fed. 73, it was held that the deceased had ceased to be a passenger prior to his death, and the carrier at that time owed no duty to him as such, where it appeared that he alighted from a train in the night at the town where he resided; that the station, the town, and his home were all on the west side of the track, and the doors of the coaches, which were vestibuled, were opened on that side; and, that after his train had departed, he was killed by another train on a track to the eastward.

In Hodges v. Southern P. Co. 3 Cal. App. 307, 86 Pac. 620, the court refused to say, as a matter of law, that the relation of carrier and passenger would cease upon the expiration of four minutes after the arrival of the train at the point of destination.

In Kaase v. Gulf. C. & S. F. R. Co. 41 Tex. Civ. App. 370, 92 S. W. 444, it was held that the evidence supported a finding that plaintiff was not a passenger at the time of his injury, where defendant's testimony showed that the station—the terminus of the road—was announced in a distinct voice, and plaintiff remained on the car for more than five minutes after the train stopped at the depot.

In Poland v. United Traction Co. 107 App. Div. 561, 95 N. Y. Supp. 498, it was held that the trial court properly charged the jury that the street car company's duty to plaintiff as a passenger had ceased at the time of the accident, where it appeared that she was the last of a number of passengers to leave the car at the terminus of its route; that she passed along the car to its front, turned sharply to cross in front of the car to the sidewalk, caught her foot in the fender of the car and was thrown down and injured; and that the time elapsing from the stopping of the car to the time she fell was from one to two minutes.

In Green v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 214 Pa. 240, 63 Atl. 603, it was held that plaintiff was not a passenger at the time of her injury, where it appeared that she had left the train, passed from the train shed to the waiting room of the station, and, while proceeding along one of several passageways, in the direction indicated by a signboard, towards steps which led to the street, stumbled and fell over a large cuspidor.

In Hall v. Bessemer & L. E. R. Co. 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 556, where plaintiff, while making his way from the train over the station platform to the street, was injured by falling over a suit case belonging to another passenger and deposited on the platform by a hotel porter, the court said: "When a passenger has alighted from a train the relation of carrier and passenger remains until he has left the premises of the carrier." But as will be seen from the preceding cases, this statement of the law is too broad.

Messrs. Henry D. Paxson and William C. Ryan, for appellant:

The plaintiff, at the time of the accident, had ceased to be a passenger, and became a mere licensee, to whom the defendant company owed only the duty of not inflicting wilful injury upon her or being so grossly negligent toward her as would amount to wilful injury.

Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 317; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Schwindling, 101 Pa. 261, 47 Am. Rep. 706; Davis v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 25 Tex. Civ. App. 8, 59 S. W. 844; Heinlein v. Boston & P. R. Co. 147 Mass. 136, 9 Am. St. Rep. 676, 16 N. E. 698.

Messrs. Henry A. James and Howard Cooper Johnson for appellee.

Elkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

After careful consideration, we have concluded that the first assignment of error must be sustained. Whether the plaintiff remained in the waiting room for an unreasonable length of time, so as to become a loiterer or mere licensee, was, under the circumstances of this case, a question of fact, to be determined by the jury. The learned trial judge, in his opinion overruling the motion for a new trial and for judgment non obstante veredicto, states that this was a question for the jury and that it was so submitted, but, upon an examination of the charge, it is clear that this question was not submitted to the jury, with instructions for them to determine this fact. On the other hand, the jury were instructed that, "according to the view which the court takes of that situation, the court will instruct you that her rights as a passenger had not ceased." This had reference to the exact question whether she had remained at the station an unreasonable length of time, and it can only be construed as a binding instruction to the jury. This binding instruction was followed by a general discussion of the facts relating to this particular question, but nowhere does it appear that any direction was given to the jury to determine this exact question. The effect of the charge in this respect can only be considered as binding instructions upon the question of reasonable length of time, and therefore the jury were not left to determine whether, under the circumstances, she had remained an unreasonable time at the station. We do not agree with the contention of the learned counsel for appellant that the relation of carrier and passenger had ceased as soon as plaintiff had been discharged from the train on the south side, and had proceeded from that point to the station-house on the north side, of the railroad tracks, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

being the point nearest her destination. This position is predicated on the thought that, in passing from the station-house on one side to the station-house on the other, the passenger passed over the tracks at a public crossing. If the railroad company had chosen to make a public crossing a convenience for its passengers in going from the station on one side of its tracks to that on the other, it cannot be excused for an act of negligence, on the ground that the relation of carrier and passenger had ceased the moment the passenger placed his foot upon the public highway. The general rule is that the relation of carrier and passenger begins as soon as one intending, in good faith, to become a passenger, enters in a lawful manner upon the carrier's premises to engage passage, and that relation continues to exist until the passenger has been made aware of his arrival at the place of destination, and has had a reasonable time to alight from the car and to leave the premises of the carrier. The duty of the defendant company, under this general rule in the present case, did not cease the moment plaintiff alighted from the train on the south side of the tracks, nor when she proceeded in the direction ordinarily taken by passengers to reach the station on the north side of the tracks, nor did it cease then until she had a reasonable opportunity to make her arrangements to depart. And right here is the pinch of the case on the question raised by the first assignment of error.

Clearly the plaintiff had the right, after alighting from the train, to proceed to the station on the opposite side of the tracks to await the arrival of a friend who was to meet her there. She was delayed a considerable length of time, and, for the reason stated in the testimony, she remained in the waiting room until the friend, whom she intended to visit, called for her. In this connection we quite agree with the suggestion made by the learned counsel for appellant, that it was no part of the duty of the railroad company to furnish a waiting room for the intending passengers of a street railway company with which the railroad company had no connection, and, if it clearly appeared that the only purpose of the plaintiff, after alighting from the train at the south side of the tracks, was to go to the station on the north side for the purpose of awaiting the arrival of a street railway car on which she intended to become a passenger, there could be no recovery, because the relation of carrier and passenger would, under these circumstances, have ceased to exist before the injury occurred. But we do not so understand the testimony on this branch of the case. The plaintiff went to the station by the ordinary route, either to meet her friend or await his arrival in order to accompany her to her place of destination. The friend who was to meet her at the station might have walked, or even driven in a carriage, or come as a passenger on the street railway, and the manner of his coming would in no way affect her rights as a passenger of the railroad company. Under these circumstances the plaintiff had a right to make use of the waiting room of the defendant company for a reasonable length of time, and what was a reasonable length of time was a question of fact, to be determined by the jury. It was the duty of the court to instruct the jury to first determine this question before proceeding to inquire into the alleged negligence of the defendant company, because the right to recover at all depended upon the determination of this question by the jury. If it should be determined that plaintiff had remained at the station an unreasonable length of time before her departure, it would necessarily follow that the relation of carrier and passenger had ceased, and there could be no recovery for an injury subsequently sustained. As we view the testimony, the question of negligence was too broadly submitted to the jury. It was not negligence on the part of the defendant company to run the train which caused the injury on its own tracks and at the usual rate of speed for that train. The question of signals, headlights, and other incidental matters connected with the running of the train, about which some testimony was furnished at the trial, has no connection with this case. The negligence, if any, of the defendant company is in no manner connected with the running of the train which caused the injury. It was the duty of the defendant company to provide safe means of access to, and departure from, its station for the use of passengers, and the plaintiff in the present case had a right to assume that the means of ingress and egress were reasonably safe. It was the duty of the defendant company to make and maintain the walk in a reasonably safe condition, and if, on the night of the accident, the walk was torn up or covered with obstructions which interfered with its proper use, or which caused the plaintiff to walk too close to the railroad tracks in order to avoid the obstructions, and if this condition of the walk was the proximate cause of the injury, there can be a recovery of damages for the injuries thus sustained. Again, it was the duty of the defendant company to keep the walks and approaches to the station properly lighted at night, or when required. This duty was more imperatively demanded of the defendant company in the present case because of the close proximity of the walk to the railroad tracks, which necessarily made it somewhat dangerous. As we view it, there are only two questions of negligence to be submitted to the jury; that is, was the walk reasonably safe for the use intended and was it sufficiently lighted, and, if not, was failure to perform these duties the proximate cause of the accident?

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It was the duty of plaintiff to use reasonable care in order to avoid danger. She was charged with notice that the defendant company had a right to run its trains on its own tracks at any time it suited its purpose to do so, and that a train might pass along while she was on the walk, and the duty rested on her to use reasonable care in order to avoid danger to her person. If she walked too close to the railroad tracks, without looking ahead and without exercising such reasonable care as a prudent person should exercise under the circumstances, and was injured by reason of her own neglect, clearly there could be no recovery. Under the circumstances, however, we have concluded that this question was also for the jury.

Judgment reversed, and a venire facias de novo awarded.

Petition for rehearing denied.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, THIRD CIRCUIT.

CHARLES GILPIN, Bankrupt, Petitioner,
v.
MERCHANTS' NATIONAL BANK.

(— C. C. A. —, 165 Fed. 607.)

Bankruptcy — false statement — mistake.

The materially false statement the use of which in obtaining credit will prevent one's receiving his discharge in bankruptcy must be intentionally or knowingly untrue; and therefore a statement by the bookkeeper of the applicant for discharge, prepared from books not fully posted, which is believed to be approximately true, but which the actual state of the business proved to be untrue, will not prevent a discharge.

(November 21, 1908.)

Case Note. — Bankruptcy; character of false statement which will prevent a discharge.

The position taken in the foregoing case, that a statement, to be false within the meaning of the provision of the bankruptcy act under consideration, must involve something more than the mere element of untruth, is supported by the opinion of Trieber, D. J., in Re Collins, 157 Fed. 120, where PETITION by Charles Gilpin, bankrupt, to review in matter of law the ruling of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania sustaining an exception to his application for discharge, to the effect that the bankrupt had obtained money on credit upon a materially false statement in writing. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Gray and Buffington, Circuit Judges, and Archbald, District Judge.

Mr. James Wilson Bayard, for petitioner:

In the use of the word "false" in § 14b of the bankruptcy act, something knowingly wrongful on the part of the person charged is implied.

Cooper v. Schlesinger, 111 U. S. 148, 28

he said that, while the court was not prepared to say that, in order to prevent a discharge, the proofs must be sufficient to warrant a conviction in a criminal case, it does hold that, to justify such an action, it must appear that the bankrupt was guilty of such acts as would sustain a civil action for fraud or deceit, and that the statements were either knowingly false, or fraudulent, or made so recklessly as to warrant a finding that he acted fraudulently. Applying this criterion, it was held that a statement made by a merchant from his books, which was in fact erroneous, because his book-keeper, owing to illness, had neglected to enter certain liabilities, would not prevent a discharge.

Upon the other hand, it has been held that it makes no difference whether a false statement made to obtain credit was knowingly false or not. Re Shaffer, 169 Fed. 724.

The opinion of McPherson, D. J., in Re Gilpin, 160 Fed. 171, which is reversed in GILPIN v. MERCHANTS' NAT. BANK, contains an able argument in support of the proposition that the word "false" in clause 3 means no more than "not true." The argument, however, evidently failed to convince the circuit court of appeals.

Re Brenner, 166 Fed. 930, merely declares that the intentional omission of indebtedness to relatives from a financial statement constitutes an intent to deceive which will bar a discharge.

The decision of the circuit court of appeals of the fifth circuit, in Hardie v. Swafford Bros. Dry Goods Co. 165 Fed. 588 (Reversing 143 Fed. 607), that a false statement of the financial condition of the firm by one partner will not bar a discharge of another partner, who did not participate therein, lends some indirect support to the position of the circuit court of appeals of the third circuit in GILPIN v. MERCHANTS' NAT. BANK, to the effect that the word

L. ed. 382, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 360; Wood v. State, 48 Ga. 192, 15 Am. Rep. 664; Hatcher v. Dunn, 102 Iowa, 411. 36 L.R.A. 689, 71 N. W. 343; Ratterman v. Ingalls, 48 Ohio St. 468, 28 N. E. 168; United States v. One Silk Rug, 86 C. C. A. 178, 158 Fed. 974.

Messrs. William T. Wheeler, Henry T. Dechert, and Potter, Dechert, & Norris, for appellee:

The word "false" means merely "untrue."

Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 32 L. ed. 1060, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; Newell v. People, 7 N. Y. 97; Hills v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 86; Denn ex dem. Scott v. Reid, 10 Pet. 524, 9 L. ed. 519; Leonard v. Wiseman, 31 Md. 204; People ex rel. Jackson v. Potter, 47 N. Y. 375; Cooley, Const. Lim. 57; Story, Const. 400; Beardstown v. Virginia, 76 Ill. 34; McGowan v. Larsen, 14 C. C. A. 178, 29

"false" imports a statement which is knowingly and intentionally untrue.

The decisions above cited seem to be the only ones directly in point as to the character of the statement which will bar a discharge under clause 3 of § 14 of the bankruptcy act, as amended by the act of Feb. 5, 1903.

The question considered in Re Dresser, 76 C. C. A. 655, 146 Fed. 383, is therefore not within the scope of this note. The following remark, quoted from the opinion, however, has some bearing on the subject under discussion: "The provisions of the section are not to receive the strict construction given to criminal statutes, but should receive a reasonable one, to effectuate the intention of Congress so far as it can be ascertained by the language employed."

The opinion in Re Greenberg, 8 Am. Bankr. Rep. 94, is merely to the effect that a written statement made by the bankrupt for the purpose of obtaining credit should be discredited only upon the clearest evidence.

The decision in Re Allendorf, 129 Fed. 981, that the statement there relied on would not bar a discharge, was upon the ground that the bill of goods which were first shipped in reliance upon the statement were paid for, and that there were no further dealings between the parties for several months: there being nothing in the statement or in the letter accompanying it importing that it was a continuing statement or representation.

The decision in Re Kaplan, 141 Fed. 463, overruling the objection to the discharge upon the ground of a false statement, was upon the ground that the evidence did not show that the creditor relied upon the statement in furnishing the goods.

The question as to what constitutes property within the meaning of the clause, or as to when the bankrupt may be regarded as having obtained property, and other questions not turning upon the character of the false statement, do not fall within the scope of this note.

U. S. App. 554, 66 Fed. 910; Torbett v. Eaton, 49 Hun, 209, 1 N. Y. Supp. 614, 113 N. Y. 623, 20 N. E. 876; Huntington v. Attrill, 118 N. Y. 365, 23 N. E. 544; Foot v. Ætna L. Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 571; Gerardo v. Brush, 120 Mich. 405, 79 N. W. 646.

Discharge should be refused because of the untruthful statements.

Re Petersen, 10 Am. Bankr. Rep. 355; Re Goodhile, 12 Am. Bankr. Rep. 383; Re Harr, 143 Fed. 423; Re Hardie, 143 Fed. 607; Re Collins, 157 Fed. 120.

Gray, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition by a bankrupt to revise, for error of law, the decree of the United States district court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, reversing the referee's report and sustaining one of the creditor-appellee's exceptions to his application for discharge. The sole exception thus sustained was to the effect that the referee had erroneously held that the "materially false statement" in writing, mentioned in clause (3) of § 14b of the bankruptcy act (act July 1, 1898, chap. 541, 30 Stat. at L. 550, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3427, amended by act Feb. 5, 1903, chap. 487, § 4, 32 Stat. at L. 797, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1907, p. 1026), must, in order to constitute a bar to the discharge of the bankrupt, be intentionally or knowingly untrue. The facts of the case as summarized from the findings made by the referee, and elsewhere disclosed in the record are as follows:

The bankrupt was engaged in the construction of buildings, at Baltimore, in places near New York city, and Philadelphia. His main office was in Philadelphia, where his books were kept by his bookkeeper. The bankrupt was chiefly engaged in the actual supervision of the building work he had in hand, and paid little or no attention to his books. He collected money, paid notes; and, in a general way, knew the condition and progress of each of his building contracts. He intrusted the keeping of his books to his bookkeeper, and in September, 1905, the posting of his books was some months behind. During that month, the bankrupt went to the Merchants' National Bank, at Philadelphia (the excepting creditor and appellee), and stated that he wished to open an account, and would require accommodations not to exceed $10,000. The bank informed him that they would like to have a statement, and gave him one of their blank forms to be filled out and signed by him. This form the bankrupt took to his office, and there signed the same in blank, instructing his bookkeeper to fill it out and send it to the bank. He signed it in blank before it was filled out for the reason that he was obliged to return to Baltimore without delay. He says he instructed the bookkeeper to make an exact statement for the bank, to which the bookkeeper replied that he could not, but that he would make an approximate statement and send it to the bank. The statement was made by the bookkeeper, and upon it was written the word "approximate," and it was sent by the bookkeeper to the bank. Upon this statement, and upon a note which the bankrupt was to obtain from one Stokes, of Baltimore, as collateral, the bank extended the accommodation desired. This note was never obtained for the bank from Stokes. About October 3, 1905, and after the said statement of September 28th had been filed by the bank, the note of the bankrupt for $7,500, due thirty days after date, was discounted. After two renewals and a payment of $1,000 on account, and the further discount of a ten days' note of $2,500, the bank, on the 9th of February, 1906, renewed the entire amount then due, viz., $9,000, for thirty days, which is still unpaid.

The adjudication of bankruptcy was entered February 26, 1906. The approximate statement sent by the bookkeeper to the bank was materially inconsistent with the bankrupt's books as they stood at the time the bankruptcy occurred. There is nothing in the referee's report to show how the books actually stood at the time the statement was prepared by the bookkeeper. There is no evidence that the bankrupt ever saw this statement after it was filled out, that the bank ever showed it to him, or interrogated him in regard to it, or that he ever asked to see it. This statement showed a net worth of $43,569.27. The bankrupt himself made up from his books, during the course of his examination, a statement showing that his net worth at that time was $45,698.09. This statement, however, in all its items fails to coincide with the statement made up by the bookkeeper and delivered to the bank.

The referee finds that, although the falsity of the statement sent to the bank has been proved, the fact that the bankrupt knew it to be false, or did not know it to be true, was not proved, and says: "There is no evidence to support the contention that the bankrupt knew, or had any reason to believe, that the statement sent to the bank by the bookkeeper was false, or that the bankrupt intended in any way to deceive the bank."

The referee, therefore, reported that a decree of discharge of the bankrupt should be entered. To the finding of the referee, as stated, the appellee filed its exception, and the court below, after considering the same, reversed the finding of the referee, and directed that an order be entered sustaining the said objection to the bankrupt's discharge.

Section 14 of the bankrupt act prescribed the conditions upon which a discharge may be granted to the bankrupt by the court of bankruptcy in which the proceedings are depending, and provides that the court shall hear and investigate the merit of the application, and discharge the bankrupt unless he has "(1) committed an offense punishable by imprisonment, as herein provided; or (2) with intent to conceal his financial condition, destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep books of account or records from which such condition might be ascertained; or (3) obtained property on credit from any person upon a materially false statement in writing made to such person for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit; or (4) at any time subsequent to the first day of the four months immediately preceding the filing of the petition, transferred, removed, destroyed, or concealed, or permitted to be removed, destroyed, or concealed, any of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors; or (5) in voluntary proceedings, been granted a discharge in bankruptcy within six years or (6) in the course of the proceedings in bankruptcy, refused to obey any lawful order of, or to answer any material question approved by, the court." [32 Stat. at L. 797, chap. 487, § 4.]

The single question of law presented for our consideration is clearly defined in the following extracts from the opinion of the court below: "I accept and shall act upon the finding of the referee that the bankrupt either did not actually know what the statement contained, or did not know that it was materially false, and that he did not have a conscious intention to deceive the bank."

In concluding, the court said as follows: "The other matter that may properly need a moment's consideration is the effect that should be given to the word 'false' in clause 3. In my opinion the argument for the bankrupt must rest wholly upon the construction that this word should bear. It is unquestionably a flexible word. Sometimes it means incorrect, or not true. Sometimes it includes the idea of wickedness or fraud, as in § 29, where a false oath is evidently a corruptly false oath, such as would subject the affiant to a prosecution for perjury. That 'false' means no more in clause 3 than 'not true.' I have tried to establish in the preceding pages of this opinion; and, if I have failed hitherto to give good reasons to my belief, I am sure that I shall not strengthen the argument by stating them again in somewhat different words.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"The decision of the referee is reversed, and the clerk is directed to enter an order sustaining the first objection of the Merchants' National Bank to the bankrupt's discharge."

Addressing ourselves to the question thus distinctly raised, it is to be remarked that, of the six reasons for refusing a discharge to the bankrupt, as set forth in § 14b of the bankrupt act, the five that relate to the conduct of the bankrupt, unless we exclude the third, with which we are here concerned, all imply a wilful and fraudulent act on the part of the bankrupt, or, as in the case of the sixth, a wilful and intentional defiance of a lawful order of the court. And they all imply conduct that is immoral, or at least unworthy in one seeking the reward of honesty that is intended to be conferred by a discharge. In the recent case, Re Carton (D. C.) 148 Fed. 63, 66, Judge Hough, in the district court for the southern district of New York, adopts as a terse statement of his views the following language: "The policy of the bankruptcy act is founded on equal right and privileges to all creditors; it is not intended as a means to punish the bankrupt at the option of the defrauded creditor only. Discharge from debts is a matter of favor, and not a matter of right. Honesty on the part of a bankrupt is rewarded by a discharge. Fraud and dishonesty are stamped with disapproval of a discharge. Contumacy on the witness stand, a previous discharge within six years, obtaining money upon false statements, and the commission of an offense punishable by imprisonment under the act, are all valid objections to a discharge, and are not limited to the defrauded creditors alone, but may be urged by any and all creditors. It is the fraudulent conduct that is aimed at, and not retaliation for the individual loss."

We fail to perceive any sufficient ground for denying to the third reason for refusing a discharge to the bankrupt the general characteristic of personal misconduct that attaches to all the others, as set forth in the said section of the bankrupt act. It would indeed be a harsh construction, and at variance with the general policy of the bankruptcy act, that would make the conduct described in clause 3 an exception in this respect to the whole category of acts which may severally deprive the bankrupt of his privilege of discharge. It is a construction which should not unnecessarily be made.

But, apart from the incongruity imported into this section of the bankruptcy act by such construction, it seems to us clear that the plain language of this third clause of § 14b requires that the written statement made by the bankrupt for the purpose of obtaining credit, etc., should be knowingly and intentionally untrue, in order to constitute a bar to the discharge of the bankrupt. In other words, "false statement" connotes a guilty scienter on the part of the bankrupt. This primary and ordinary meaning of the word "false" cannot be ignored. It is the primary meaning given in the ordinary lexicons of the English language. Webster gives as its primary meaning: "Uttering falsehood; untruthful; given to deceit; dishonest." As an adjective, it is correlative with the noun "falsehood." To charge a person with making a false statement is equivalent to charging him with uttering a falsehood, and imputes moral delinquency to the person so charged. It is true that the word may have a secondary meaning in certain collocations, and be merely equivalent to "untrue" or "incorrect." But this is not the ordinary or usual significance attached to the word. To charge a person with making false entries in books of account means something more than that incorrect or untrue entries have been made, and it has been so held by the courts in the consideration of offenses of that character. The last edition of Bouvier's Law Dictionary says of the word "false," that when "applied to the intentional act of a responsible being it implies a purpose to deceive." In Black's Law Dictionary, under the title "false," it is said: "In law, this word means something more than untrue; it means something designedly untrue and deceitful; and implies an intention to perpetrate some treachery or fraud." In a recent and well accepted publication called "Words and Phrases," the word "false" is thus defined: "False means that which is not true coupled with a lying intent." Wood v. State, 48 Ga. 192, 297, 15 Am. Rep. 664. "'False,' in jurisprudence, usually imports something more than the vernacular sense of 'erroneous' or 'untrue.'"

This and other citations in the petitioner's brief establish a jurisprudential meaning to the word "false" at variance with that adopted by the learned judge of the court below.

No good reason has been suggested why Congress should have made such an exception to the character of the acts enumerated as severally barring the discharge of the bankrupt, by using the word "false" in some other than its primary and obvious meaning.

But it is not without significance to inquire why an incorrect statement, innocently made to one creditor, should bar the discharge of the bankrupt as to all his other debts, whatever be its effect as to the debt of that particular creditor. In Re Carton, supra, the court says: "It is the act of issuing a materially false statement, and the fraudulent intent of the man who issues it, that the statute seeks to punish by refusing a discharge. It should not depend upon the whim or good nature of any particular creditor to whom the false statement was made, whether the offending bankrupt should be given or refused his discharge. Any 'party in interest' who chooses to bring the wrongful act to the attention of the court, and proves that it was wrong within the meaning of the statute, is entitled so to do."

We fully concur in the meaning thus attributed to the clause in question. The bankrupt who has made to a creditor, for the purpose of obtaining credit, a false statement,—that is, one intentionally and knowingly untrue,—is unworthy of the privilege of a discharge under the act, and the court will act upon information brought to it of such an act by any party in interest. It will be at once conceded on all hands that such a bankrupt is unworthy, and should not receive the favor accorded by the law to the honest but unfortunate debtor. Some of the cases cited by the appellee conflict with the view here stated, but the weight of authority, as of reason, supports it.

We think that the court below erred in finding that the word "false" means no more in clause 3 than "not true," and the order of the said court is hereby revised in matter of law by directing that the first specification of grounds of opposition to the discharge of the bankrupt, filed by the Merchants' National Bank, be dismissed, and that the bankrupt receive his discharge in accordance with the recommendation of the referee in that behalf.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

A. C. LYTTLE, Appt.,

v.

J. B. DENNY.

(222 Pa. 395, 71 Atl. 841.)

Innkeeper — negligence — defective bed.

1. An innkeeper has the burden of absolving himself from negligence when a guest shows a personal injury by the fall

Case Note. — Presumption of negligence of innkeeper from injury to guest or his property.

The ancient rule of the common law, still adhered to in England and in many of the states of the United States, that an innkeeper is the insurer of the safety of the property of his guests, has been so far modified in some states as to require negligence upon the part of the innkeeper to be shown before he can be held liable. In such jurisdictions the rule is almost universal that the mere upon him of the upper portion of a folding bed which he is occupying.

Evidence — depositions.

2. Depositions, the taking of which is not authorized by any rule of court, are not admissible in evidence.

(January 4, 1909.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Court of Common Pleas for Cambria County refusing to strike off a nonsuit in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Thomas H. Greevy, J. C. Davies, and E. G. Brotherlin for appellant.

Messrs. M. D. Kittell and H. H. Myers for appellee.

fact of the loss will raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the innkeeper, or, as it is phrased in many of the decisions, will make an innkeeper prima facie liable to the guest. Such was the conclusion reached in the following cases: Sasseen v. Clark, 37 Ga. 242; Coskery v. Nagle, 83 Ga. 696, 6 L.R.A. 483, 20 Am. St. Rep. 333, 10 S. E. 491; Watson v. Loughran, 112 Ga. 837, 38 S. E. 82; Metcalf v. Hess, 14 Ill. 129; Johnson v. Richardson, 17 Ill. 302, 63 Am. Dec. 369; Sheffer v. Willoughby, 163 Ill. 518, 34 L.R.A. 464, 54 Am. St. Rep. 483, 45 N. E. 253; Rockhill v. Congress Hotel Co. 237 Ill. 98, 86 N. E. 740; Eden v. Drey, 75 Ill. App. 102; Hulbert v. Hartman, 79 Ill. App. 289; Hill v. Owen, 5 Blackf. 323, 35 Am. Dec. 124; Laird v. Eichold, 10 Ind. 212, 71 Am. Dec. 323; Baker v. Dessauer, 49 Ind. 28; Bowell v. DeWald, 2 Ind. App. 303, 50 Am. St. Rep. 240, 28 N. E. 430; Fowler v. Dorlon, 24 Barb. 384; Murray v. Clarke, 2 Daly, 102; Van Wyck v. Howard, 12 How. Pr. 147; Hoyt v. Clinton Hotel Co. 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 297; McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316, 62 Am. Dec. 574; Howe Mach. Co. v. Pease, 49 Vt. 477; Watt v. Kilbury (Wash.) 102 Pac. 403; Jalie v. Cardinal, 35 Wis. 118; Dawson v. Chamney, 5 Q. B. 164.

To avoid a misapprehension, it should here be noted that while some cases have been cited from England, New York, and Pennsylvania in support of the presumption-of-negligence rule, the prevailing rule in those jurisdictions, as evidenced by other cases, is that the innkeeper is liable as an insurer.

The only case that throws any doubt upon this proposition of law, that the loss of the guest's goods raises a presumption of negligence on the part of the innkeeper, is Burnham v. Young, 72 Me. 273, in which the innkeeper was held not to be liable for the loss of the guest's goods by a fire which also destroyed the inn, where no want of 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Potter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

From the history of this case it appears that, in May, 1903, the plaintiff was a guest at the hotel of the defendant in Johnstown, Pennsylvania. In the room which was assigned to him there was an old-style folding bed, with a wardrobe in the back, and so arranged that the bed portion would fold up so as to leave the bed in an upright position when not in use. The top of the bed was heavy, weighing about 300 pounds. The plaintiff occupied the bed during the night, and, early the next morning, as he was about to rise, the top or upright portion of the bed fell forward upon him, crushing his head down upon his breast and inflicting severe injury. To recover damages for the injury thus caused, the plaintiff brought this suit against the proprietor of the hotel. Upon ordinary or reasonable care was shown. In this connection it is pertinent to say, however, that none of the other cases heretofore cited in support of the prevailing rule as to presumption of negligence involved the loss of the goods by a fire which also destroyed the inn, and it would seem reasonable that such a source of loss ought to be an exception to that rule.

And the case last cited finds support also in Weeks v. McNulty, 101 Tenn. 495, 43 L.R.A. 185, 70 Am. St. Rep. 693, 48 S. W. 809,—the only case other than LYTLE v. DENNY that could be found which involved the question of the presumption of negligence arising from an injury to the guest, rather than to his goods,—in which Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Manchester Mills, 88 Tenn. 659, 14 S. W. 314, a case not otherwise in point here, was cited to support the proposition that there was no natural presumption that a fire, the origin of which was unknown, was the result of the want of care of the owner or occupant of the premises of its origin. And it was held that, to recover for the death of a guest, due to the burning of the hotel where he was stopping, it must be shown that the negligence of the innkeeper was the proximate cause of the fire and its consequences.

In Johnson v. Chadbourn Finance Co. 89 Minn. 310, 99 Am. St. Rep. 571, 94 N. W. 874, it was held that all losses of property incurred by guests at a public inn by fire were prima facie due to the negligence of the proprietor, though he might discharge himself from liability by showing that the loss happened by irresistible force or unavoidable accident. But this may be only another way of stating the rule that an innkeeper is ordinarily an insurer of his guests' goods; since, in an earlier case (Lusk v. Belote, 22 Minn. 468), an innkeeper was held responsible as an insurer, and that decision was approved in the Johnson Case.

the trial, at the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony, the court entered judgment of compulsory nonsuit, and from the refusal to strike it off the plaintiff has appealed.

The main question raised is as to the liability of an innkeeper to his guests. We find the general rule of law in this respect is thus stated in Beale on Innkeepers & Hotels, §§ 162, 163: "The innkeeper is bound to provide reasonably safe premises.

Both in original safety of construction and in maintenance the premises must be such as reasonably to secure the safety of the guest. So the innkeeper has been held liable for injury to the guest by the ceiling falling upon him, owing to its defective condition; by the elevator falling with him, after having been negligently inspected, although the innkeeper himself had employed a proper inspector, and was not personally negligent; by the breaking of a defective railing, by reason of which the guest fell into an area; and by the guest falling off an unguarded stairway." The authorities are in substantial agreement that while the duty of an innkeeper requires him to take reasonable care of the persons of his guests, he is not to be regarded as an insurer of their safety. His liability has sometimes been declared to be similar to that of a common carrier, but the better opinion seems to be that the degree of care required of an innkeeper is not so great as that which is imposed upon those who carry passengers for hire. In discussing this question in Clancy v. Barker, 69 L.R.A. 653, 66 C. C. A. 469, 131 Fed. 161, Judge Sanborn says: "While there are many loose statements in the books to the effect that the liability of common carriers to their passengers and the liability of innkeepers to their guests are similar, and while that proposition may be conceded, it is certain that the limits of these liabilities are by no means the same. A railroad company is liable to its passengers for a failure to exercise the utmost care in the preparation of its road and the operation of its engines and trains upon it, because of the swift movement of its passenger trains is always fraught with extraordinary danger, which it requires extraordinary care to avert. But an innkeeper's liability for the condition and operation of his hotel is limited to the failure to exercise ordinary care, because his is an ordinary occupation, fraught with no extraordinary danger." It may be assumed, then, that the duty imposed by law upon an innkeeper requires him to furnish safe premises to his guests, and to provide necessary articles of furniture, which may be used by them in the ordinary and reasonable way without danger. Did the defendant, then, in this case, use such reasonable care in the discharge of this duty to the plaintiff, who was his guest? The testimony introduced showed the fact and manner of the accident, but stopped short of pointing out the exact defect in the bed which caused it to fall down upon and entrap the plaintiff. The trial judge thought it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show in detail just what was wrong with the bed, and the reason for its falling; and, because this did not appear from the testimony offered by the plaintiff, judgment of nonsuit was entered. We do not agree with his view in this respect. Bearing in mind the duty of the innkeeper to guard with reasonable care the safety of his guests, proof of the happening of such an extraordinary accident casts the burden of explanation at once upon the defendant. The accident was so far out of the usual course that no fair inference can arise that it could have resulted from anything less than negligence upon the part of the management of the hotel. Beds do not usually operate as spring traps, to close upon and catch the confiding guest. Yet the bed furnished by the defendant to the plaintiff in this case proved to be just such a dangerous trap. Without any apparent cause, the heavy head fell forward and down over the plaintiff, while he was quietly lying upon the bed, and injured him severely. This could not have occurred had the bed been in proper condition for use. We think the facts bring the case within the rule laid down in Scott v. London Dock Co. 3 Hurlst. & C. 596, and often applied by this court, as in DeLahunt v. United Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 215 Pa. 241, 114 Am. St. Rep. 958, 64 Atl. 515, where the principle is stated as follows (page 248 of 215 Pa.): "Where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanations by the defendants, that the accident arose from want of care." The circumstances under which this accident occurred were certainly such as to call for full explanation by the defendant. The facts indicate a lack of reasonable care upon his part, and it is for him to show why he should be relieved from liability.

Counsel for appellant also complain of the exclusion of certain depositions which were offered in evidence. But it appears that no rule of the lower court authorized the taking of the depositions of the witnesses in question, and they were therefore properly excluded. The rules of the court bria county court provide for taking the depositions of ancient, infirm, and going witnesses, but it was not shown that these witnesses were within this classification, or that their presence in court might not be obtained.

The first, second, and third assignments are overruled; but, as we deem the facts shown sufficient to take the case to the jury upon the question of the defendant's negligence, the fourth assignment of error is sustained, and the judgment is reversed with a procedendo.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

HAROLD RANN, by Next Friend,

v.

M. C. TWITCHELL et al.

(— Vt. —, 71 Atl. 1045.)

Physician — specialist — measure of duty.

1. A physician who, for twelve years, specializes his practice to treatment of diseases of the eye, and is placed in charge of the eye, ear, and throat department of a hospital of high standing, and is advertised by its literature as its ophthalmatist, will be held responsible as a specialist for treatment of the eye.

Same — measure of duty.

2. One who holds himself out as a specialist in the treatment of a certain organ, injury, or disease is bound to bring to the aid of one employing him as such that degree of skill and knowledge which is ordinarily possessed by those who devote special study and attention to that particular organ, injury, or disease, its diagnosis and its treatment, in the same general locality, having regard to the state of scientific knowledge at the time.

Case Note. — Physicians and surgeons; degree of skill and care required of specialist.

The decisions accord in imposing upon one who holds himself out to the public as a specialist the duty to exercise a higher degree of skill and care than is required of the ordinary practitioner.

Thus, in Baker v. Hancock, 29 Ind. App. 456, 63 N. E. 323, 64 N. E. 38, it was held that one holding himself out as a specialist in the treatment of cancer was bound to bring to the discharge of his duty to patients employing him, as such specialist, that degree of skill and knowledge which is ordinarily possessed by physicians who devote special attention and study to the disease, its diagnosis and treatment, having regard to the present state of scientific knowledge, — this being the degree of skill which, by holding himself out as a specialist, he represents himself to have. The court said: 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — negligence.

3. The question of the negligence of a specialist in the treatment of disease in making a diagnosis is to be determined by reference to the pertinent facts existing at the time of his examination, of which he knew, or, in the exercise of due care, should have known, his negligence depending upon the fact that, with an opportunity for examination, he failed to discover conditions which should have been discovered in the exercise of a reasonable degree of care and skill.

Same — question for jury.

4. Whether or not a specialist in the treatment of eye diseases exercises due care is for the jury, where, upon examination of a wound beneath an eye, he fails to discover therein a foreign substance of the presence of which he has been notified by other physicians, and which the evidence tends to show a probe would readily have disclosed.

(February 18, 1909.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to the direction by the Orleans County Court of a verdict in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages for malpractice. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cook & Williams, for plaintiff:

One who attempts to treat an eye as a specialist must have that degree of skill and knowledge which is ordinarily possessed by physicians who devote special attention and study to the treatment of the eye; and he must exercise his best judgment in the application of his skill, and use ordinary care in the performance of the operation.

Feeney v. Spalding, 89 Me. 111, 35 Atl. 1027; McMurdock v. Kimberlin, 23 Mo. App. 523; Whitesell v. Hill, 101 Iowa, 629, 37

"Scientific investigation and research have been extended and prosecuted so persistently and learnedly that the person affected by many forms of disease is, of necessity, compelled to seek the aid of a specialist in order to secure the results thereof. The local doctor, in many instances, himself suggests and selects the specialist whose learning and industry have given him a knowledge in the particular line which the general practitioner, in rural communities, especially, has neither time nor opportunity to acquire. . . . Being employed because of his peculiar learning and skill in the specialty practised by him, it follows that his duty to the patient cannot be measured by the average skill of general practitioners. If he possessed no greater skill in the line of his specialty than the average physician, there would be no reason for his employment; possessing such additional skill, it becomes his duty to give his patient the benefit of it."

L.R.A. 838, 70 N. W. 750; Landon v. Humphrey, 9 Conn. 209, 23 Am. Dec. 333; Lewis v. Dwinell, 84 Me. 497, 24 Atl. 945; Moratzky v. Wirth, 67 Minn. 46, 69 N. W. 480.

It is for the jury to say whether a physician, in making a diagnosis, uses ordinary care and skill; whether the omission of certain treatment was or was not negligence; whether or not there was such negligence or unskillfulness as to entitle the plaintiff to damages; whether the physician has exercised reasonable care in the case; whether or not the treatment was negligent and unskillful; and it is for the jury to decide, upon all the evidence, what treatment amounts to negligence under the rule of skill required.

Harriott v. Plimpton, 166 Mass. 585, 44 N. E. 992; Carpenter v. Blake, 60 Barb. 488; Barton v. Govan, 4 N. Y. S. R. 876; Rowe v. Lent, 42 N. Y. S. R. 483, 17 N. Y. Supp. 131; Olmsted v. Gere, 100 Pa. 127; Hewitt v. Eisenbart, 36 Neb. 794, 55 N. W. 252.

Messrs. Young & Young and A. G. Whittemore, for defendant:

A physician and surgeon is only responsible for reasonable or ordinary care and skill and for the exercise of his best judgment.

Wilmot v. Howard, 39 Vt. 447, 94 Am. Dec. 338; Hathorn v. Richmond, 48 Vt. 557; Mullin v. Flanders, 73 Vt. 99, 50 Atl. 813; Cayford v. Wilbur, 86 Me. 414, 29 Atl. 1117; Leighton v. Sargent, 27 N. H. 460, 59 Am. Dec. 388; Landon v. Humphrey, 9 Conn. 209, 23 Am. Dec. 333; Hallam v. Means, 82 Ill. 379, 25 Am. Rep. 328; Howard v. Grover, 28 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 478; Patten v. Wiggin, 51 Me. 594, 81 Am. Dec. 593; State use of Janney v. Housekeeper, 70 Md. 162, 2 L.R.A. 587, 14 Am. St. Rep. 340, 16 Atl. 382; Williams v. Poppleton, 3 Or.

139; Tefft v. Wilcox, 6 Kan. 46; Sims v. Parker, 41 Ill. App. 284; Pettigrew v. Lewis, 46 Kan. 78, 26 Pac. 458; Getchell v. Hill, 21 Minn. 464; Wurdemann v. Barnes, 92 Wis. 206, 66 N. W. 111; Wood v. Barker, 49 Mich. 295, 13 N. W. 597; Cooley, Torts, 777.

Mere failure on the part of the physician to effect a cure does not establish or raise a presumption of a want of care on his part; nor does the imperfect or only partial success of a surgical operation.

3 Wharton & S. Med. Jur. § 517, p. 521; Long v. Delaney, 206 Pa. 226, 55 Atl. 965; Barker v. Lane, 23 R. I. 224, 49 Atl. 963; Ewing v. Goode, 78 Fed. 442; Richards v. Willard, 176 Pa. 181, 35 Atl. 114.

Powers, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, a robust boy of thirteen years, found a railroad torpedo near his house in Derby. He laid it on a plank and threw a stone upon it and exploded it, whereupon a flying fragment struck him under the inner corner of the right eye, causing the injury concerned in this action. This was April 19, 1905. The cut made in the lower lid of the eye was approximately an inch long, and, at the upper end, next to the inner corner of the eye, the lid was cut off so that it hung down over the cheek, disclosing a wound under the eyeball into the socket of the eye. The boy was at once taken to Dr. Gaines, of Newport, who took medical charge of the case, and treated the injury for about a week. In the meantime Dr. Gaines became convinced that there was a foreign substance lodged in the eye or socket, and being uncertain whether or not or how far the eye itself might be involved, and not feeling competent to operate on the eye in these circumstances, he advised the

An oculist who treats a patient must exercise in that regard the care and skill usually exercised by oculists in good standing. Stern v. Lanng, 106 La. 738, 31 So. 303.

One who undertakes to treat an eye as a specialist must have that degree of care and skill which is ordinarily possessed by physicians who devote special attention and study to the treatment of the eye. Feeney v. Spalding, 89 Me. 111, 35 Atl. 1027.

In McMurdock v. Kimberlin, 23 Mo. App. 523, an instruction that, if the defendant held himself out to the public as a specialist in the treatment of the eye, and as possessing a degree of skill and diligence in the treatment of the human eye as high as that possessed by other good surgeons of the specialty to which defendant belonged, he would be liable for failure to exercise such a degree of care, skill, and diligence as would ordinarily be exercised and exhibited 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by good and careful surgeons and oculists when treating and operating in a similar case,—was held not to impose too high a degree of care and skill.

In Beadle v. Paine, 46 Or. 424, 80 Pac. 903, an instruction that specialists in the practice of surgery are bound to bring to the discharge of their duty as such specialists that degree of care, skill, and knowledge which is ordinarily possessed by practitioners devoting special attention and skill to the same branch in similar localities, having regard to the present state of medical science, seems to have been regarded by the supreme court as correct, although, no objection having been saved thereto, the question was not properly before it.

For discussion of the general question as to the degree of care and skill which a physician or surgeon must exercise, see note to Whitesell v. Hill, 37 L.R.A. 830, on that subject.

employment of an eye specialist. The boy was taken to Sherbrooke for the purpose of consulting an expert, but the latter was away, so he could not be seen. After his return to Derby, and on April 25th, Dr. Gaines and Dr. Lund, who had been called in to assist, and who agreed with Dr. Gaines that there was a foreign substance in the eye, made preparations to operate for its removal. When it came to the point of beginning the operation, Dr. Gaines telephoned the defendant that the plaintiff had been injured by an explosion, and that some foreign substance had entered the orbit of the eye, and that he did not feel competent to remove it, and he arranged with the defendant to send the plaintiff to him for treatment. The plaintiff was thereupon taken to the Mary Fletcher Hospital at Burlington, where the defendant undertook the treatment of the case. He made no effort to learn anything further of the history of the case or its prior treatment. He did not attempt to determine, by probe or otherwise, whether or not there was in fact a foreign body lodged in the eye or its orbit, beyond an external examination more or less cursory in character, according to the evidence, though it is plain that the use of a probe would have easily and safely discovered the presence of the piece of tin which was afterwards removed. He gave the eye attention for a few days, and then sent the plaintiff home, assuring him that there was nothing in the eye, and with instructions to Dr. Gaines as to its subsequent treatment. The eye grew steadily worse until July 18th, when Dr. Gaines operated upon it and removed from the orbit a piece of tin nearly an inch long and about one-half inch wide, which was buried in the tissue to such a depth that its nearest point was about a quarter of an inch from the surface. The action is case for malpractice. It was originally brought against the defendant and the Mary Fletcher Hospital jointly, but, during the progress of the trial, at the plaintiff's request, the court ordered a verdict for the hospital, and the trial proceeded against the defendant alone. At the close of the plaintiff's evidence the court ordered a verdict for the defendant. The propriety of this action of the court is the only question presented.

At the outset of the discussion the parties disagree as to the rule which is to be applied to this defendant to test the sufficiency of his diagnosis and treatment of this injury. The plaintiff claims that the evidence is such that the defendant must be judged as a specialist, while the defendant insists that there is no evidence to warrant the application of anything but the rule governing general practitioners. We quite agree with the court below that this defendant must be judged in this case by the more exacting rule which applies to specialists. Most of the evidence on this subject comes from the defendant himself. From him we learn that he is a physician and surgeon, and for the twelve years preceding the trial he has been a specialist in the medical and surgical treatment of the eye, practising at Burlington. As early as 1902 he was regularly appointed ophthalmatist of the Mary Fletcher Hospital, and then presumed that he would be, and later knew that he was, so named in a certain pamphlet issued by the hospital that year. At the time here involved, he had charge of the eye, ear, and throat department of that institution. He says that the term "ophthalmatist" means an eye specialist,—one who does everything that is required for the eye, medical or surgical. True, he says the term does not imply any special skill in such matters, but in this statement Dr. Twitchell is too modest. His twelve years of specialized practice, his selection by an institution of the high standing of the Mary Fletcher Hospital to take charge of the very important department named, imply special skill in the lines specified. Moreover, the very circumstances in which he was employed in this case unmistakably show that it was the special skill that he was understood to have in the surgical treatment of the eye which alone induced the plaintiff to seek his aid; and it is perfectly plain that the defendant so understood it when Dr. Gaines made the arrangement with him to treat this injury. So we must test his professional conduct in this matter, not by the standard applicable to general practitioners,—the oft-cited and recently approved rule of Hathorn v. Richmond, 48 Vt. 557,—but by the stricter rule applicable to specialists. Whether or not this is determinative of the case we do not say.

One who holds himself out as a specialist in the treatment of a certain organ, injury, or disease is bound to bring to the aid of one so employing him that degree of skill and knowledge which is ordinarily possessed by those who devote special study and attention to that particular organ, injury, or disease, its diagnosis, and its treatment, in the same general locality, having regard to the state of scientific knowledge at the time. 5 Thomp. Neg. § 6714; Feeney v. Spalding, 89 Me. 111, 35 Atl. 1027; Baker v. Hancock, 29 Ind. App. 456, 63 N. E. 323, 64 N. E. 38; note to Gillette v. Tucker, 93 Am. St. Rep. at page 664. The duty of exercising this degree of skill attached to this defendant at the time of his employment, and is the measure of his responsibility in the diagnosis of the case to determine the nature and condition of the injury, as well as the proper treatment to be applied. Thomp. Neg. § 6717; Ely v. Wilbur, 49 N. J. L. 685, 60 Am. Rep. 668, 10 Atl. 358, 441. He is not to be judged by the result, nor is he to be held liable for an error of judgment. His negligence is to be determined by reference to the pertinent facts existing at the time of his examination and treatment, of which he knew, or, in the exercise of due care, should have known. It may consist in a failure to apply the proper remedy upon a correct determination of existing physical conditions, or it may precede that, and result from a failure properly to inform himself of these conditions. If the latter, then it must appear that he had a reasonable opportunity for examination, and that the true physical conditions were so apparent that they could have been ascertained by the exercise of the required degree of care and skill; for, if a determination of these physical facts resolves itself into a question of judgment merely, he cannot be held liable for his error. Manser v. Collins, 69 Kan. 290, 76 Pac. 851; Langford v. Jones, 18 Or. 307, 22 Pac. 1064; Staloch v. Holm, 100 Minn. 276, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 712, 111 N. W. 264.

Tested by this rule, the evidence tended to show that the defendant's conduct did not measure up to its requirements. He had a fair chance to examine the eye, and, with the indications of the presence of the piece of tin so strong as the testimony of Dr. Gaines tends to show, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the defendant, in his preliminary examination to ascertain the essential data upon which to predicate a professional opinion, met the requirements of the rule above stated. The testimony tended to show that he did not, and the question should have been submitted to the jury; for the evidence shows that the tin ought to have been removed at the earliest possible moment.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

SCHOOL DISTRICT NUMBER 20, SPOKANE COUNTY, Resp.,
v.

R. B. BRYAN, Superintendent of Public Instruction, et al., Appts.

(— Wash. —, 99 Pac. 28.)

School — model training school — public funds.

1. Model training schools, to be conducted in connection with various normal schools, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the pupils of which are to be selected from the school districts within which the normal schools are located, by requisition of the authorities of the normal schools, are not common schools within a constitutional provision that the school moneys shall be applied exclusively to the support of common schools. Same — common school — definition.

2. A common school, within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring the school funds to be applied exclusively to such schools, is one which is common to all children of proper age and capacity, free and subject to, and under the control of, the qualified voters of the district.

(January 16, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Thurston County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to restrain the apportioning of any Case Note. — Use of common school funds for normal school or teachers' training school.

A thorough search has brought to light no cases upon this question other than those cited in the above opinion. State Female Normal School v. Auditors, 79 Va. 233, presented for decision the constitutionality of that part of an act providing for establishing a normal school, which appropriated an annual sum for salaries and incidental expenses, payable out of the public free school fund. The power of the legislature to appropriate from any fund for the purposes of the school in question was conceded by the court, with the proviso that the state Constitution contained nothing prohibitory thereof. The constitutional provisions applicable set apart the public free school fund for the equal benefit of all the people, to be distributed on the basis of the number of children in each free school district, and placed the fund under the management of the board of education. In view of these provisions in the Constitution, the court held that the public school fund was not subject to appropriation by the legislature for the support of normal schools, because they were not a part of the public free school system, and because the fund could not be withdrawn from the management provided for it by the Constitution.

The same point arose in Gordon v. Cornes, 47 N. Y. 608, where a statute establishing certain normal schools provided for their support an annual appropriation from the income of the common school fund. The Constitution of New York provided that the capital of the common school fund should be kept inviolate, and that its revenues should be applied to the support of common schools; and the court took the view that the application of these revenues to the support of any but common schools was thus impliedly prohibited, and held that normal schools differed so materially from common schools as to fall within the prohibition.

common school funds to the model training department of the State Normal School at Cheney. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John D. Atkinson, Attorney General, and William W. Manier, for appellants:

The model training school is a common school within the proper definition of that term.

Jenkins v. Andover, 103 Mass. 94; Merri-rick v. Amherst, 12 Allen, 509; Roach v.
St. Louis Public Schools, 77 Mo. 484; Collins v. Henderson, 11 Bush, 74; Irvin v.
Gregory, 86 Ga. 605, 13 S. E. 120; Roach
v. St. Louis Public Schools, 7 Mo. App. 567, Appx.; People ex rel. Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum Soc. v. Board of Education, 13 Barb. 400; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law,
p. 8.

Mr. W. H. Winfree, for respondent:

The common school fund cannot be used either directly or indirectly for normal schools.

State Female Normal School v. Auditors,
79 Va. 233; Gordon v. Cornes, 47 N. Y. 616;
State ex rel. Keith v. Westerfield, 23 Nev.
468, 49 Pac. 119; People ex rel. Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum Soc. v. Board of Education, 13 Barb. 410; Underwood v.
Wood, 93 Ky. 177, 15 L.R.A. 825, 19 S. W.
405; Hall's Free School v. Horne, 80 Va.
470; Halbert v. Sparks, 9 Bush, 259; Collins v. Henderson, 11 Bush, 74; Los Angeles County v. Kirk, 148 Cal. 385, 83 Pac. 250.

The act violates the constitutional provision prohibiting a special law authorizing the apportionment of any part of the school fund.

Terry v. King County, 43 Wash. 61, 86
Pac. 210, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1170; Louisville School Board v. Louisville, 103 Ky.
421, 45 S. W. 1047; Plummer v. Borsheim,
8 N. D. 565, 80 N. W. 690; Ellis v. Greaves,
82 Miss. 36, 34 So. 81; Sellers v. Cox, 127
Ga. 246, 56 S. E. 284.

Chadwick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In order to make effectual § 2550, Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes (Pierce's Code, § 7463), the legislature of this state, at its 1907 session, passed a law (Laws 1907, chap. 97, p. 181) providing for a model training school department to be established in the state normal schools. Its purpose is manifest. It is to provide material for the particular training of teachers, and to this end the boards of the several normal schools are authorized, and it is made their duty, to file, on or before the first Monday in September in each year, with the board of the school district in which the normal school is situate, a requisition for the estimated number of public school pupils necessary to make up a model training school.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It is thereupon made the duty of the local board to apportion a sufficient number of pupils to meet the requisition. It is also provided that the principal of the normal school may refuse to accept such pupils as, in his judgment, by reason of incorrigibility or mental defects, would tend to reduce the efficiency of the training department.
It is made the duty of the school clerk to keep a segregated list of those attending the model school, and, further, "that it shall be the duty of the superintendent of public instruction to apportion to the support of such normal training school, out of the funds available for the support of the common schools of the district in which each normal school is situated, such proportion of the funds to which such school district shall be entitled as the number of pupils in attendance upon each such model training school bears to the whole number of pupils upon which the apportionment was made for the common schools in the school district in which such normal school is situated, and the funds so apportioned shall be distributed by the board of trustees for the maintenance of such model training school."
Section 4. Plaintiff brought an action in the superior court of Thurston county to restrain the defendant, as superintendent of public instruction, from apportioning to the model training department of the state normal school located at Cheney, Washington, any of the funds available for the support of the common schools. From an order directing an injunction, and also holding "that so much of chapter 97, p. 180, Laws 1907, entitled 'An Act Relating to the Model Training School Department of Normal Schools,
Authorized by § 7463 of Pierce's Code §
2550 of Ballinger's Annotated Codes and Statutes of Washington, and Providing for Apportionment of Funds Therefor,' approved March 11, 1907, which seeks to apportion or appropriate any part of the common school fund or revenue therefrom or state tax for the support of the common schools is unconstitutional and void," the defendants have appealed.

The assignments of error, four in number, all go to the question, Does the act provide for a diversion of the common school fund in contravention of the following constitutional provisions: "The legislature shall provide for a general and uniform system of public schools. The public school system shall include common schools and such high schools, normal schools, and technical schools as may hereafter be established. But the entire revenue derived from the common school fund and the state tax for common schools shall be exclusively applied to the support of the common schools." Article 9, § 2.

"... The interest accruing on said fund, together with all rentals and other revenues derived therefrom and from lands and other property devoted to the common school fund, shall be exclusively applied to the current use of the common schools." Article 9, § 3.

Counsel for appellants have made an elaborate research of the authorities in order to arrive at a proper definition of the words "common school," and from them deduced the following: "The essential characteristics, therefore, of a common school are: (1) They must be maintained at public expense; (2) they must provide a course of elementary education for children of all classes and people." He concludes that the model training school comes within this definition, and is therefore a common school within the meaning of the Constitution. The word "definition" is in itself difficult to define. What would be proper under a given state of facts may be impossible under another. The word must be accepted with reference to its relation to other words and terms. The words "common school" cannot be arbitrarily defined, but must be considered in connection with the general scheme of education outlined in the Constitution of the state. When so considered, they have no uncertain meaning. In adopting a Constitution, the people of this state saw fit to devote a chapter to the subject of education. In it they were careful to emphasize the importance, as well as the distinct character, of the common school. They endeavored to protect and preserve the funds set apart by law for the support of the common school from invasion, so that they might be applied exclusively to the current uses of such schools. An ample provision for the education of children was made paramount, and the duty was imposed upon the legislature of providing a general and uniform system of public schools. The system provided differentiates between the common school and the normal school, as does the Constitution; and, when adopted, such system has the force of the constitutional provision which it elaborates. The system must be uniform, in that every child shall have the same advantages and be subject to the same discipline as every other child. A system of control through school boards and county superintendents is provided for, their duties defined, and a method supplied to secure, in theory, at least, efficient teachers and instructors. When considered in this way, it would seem that the definition arrived at by counsel is 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

too narrow. The words "common school," must measure up to every requirement of the Constitution and code of public instruction; and whenever, by any subterfuge, it is sought to qualify or enlarge their meaning beyond the intent and spirit of the Constitution, the attempt must fail.

The propriety and benefit of the scheme are urged by counsel. They say: "Here we have a model training school, which is a portion of a state normal, which has as principal a person chosen for that position because of his experience as an educator, who gives personal supervision to the instruction of a certain number of pupils who would otherwise be attending other graded schools of the district. This principal has under his charge a corps of teachers who are making a study, a science, of the art of schoolteaching. Experience will show the benefits to the pupils attending this department. The pupils are chosen in some way, mayhap by lot by the directors of the district; mayhap as being residents within a certain portion of the district in the vicinity of the normal school; mayhap as being pupils in a certain grade or grades. They are residents of the same district. They pursue the same studies; in all probability, receive better and more careful instruction than do the others who attend the other common schools within the district. Why is that not a common school within the meaning of the men who framed the Constitution? There are no essentials lacking." With these considerations we can have no concern. But, if it were otherwise, the argument meets itself, and furnishes abundant reason why the act in question cannot be sustained. The principal of the normal school, however accomplished, is not an officer recognized by the law creating the common school system, and is in no way answerable to those who are charged with the duty of executing it. The teachers under his charge may be devoted in their pursuit of the art of teaching, but they are not teachers within the meaning of the law, which has undertaken to insure that public school children shall be taught only by those who have met (not, seeking to attain) a certain standard of proficiency. In other words, the argument of counsel emphasizes the fact that, in its operation, the act of 1907 would break the uniformity of the common school system. To summarize: A common school, within the meaning of our Constitution, is one that is common to all children of proper age and capacity, free, and subject to, and under the control of, the qualified voters of the school district. The complete control of the schools is a most important feature, for it carries with it the right of the voters, through their chosen agents, to select qualified teachers, with power to discharge them if they are incompetent. Under the system proposed, instead of the voter employing a teacher with proper vouchers of worthiness, they are made recruiting officers to meet a draft for material that the apprentice may be employed. A normal school has been defined as a school, "not intended for the education of the children of the inhabitants of the districts where they are to be located, but for the training of teachers for all the common schools. They are not open to all, but only to such as may be selected at times and in a manner to be prescribed by the superintendent of public instruction. . . .

Applicants for admission are required to possess certain qualifications, which must be tested by preliminary examinations, and, on the completion of their studies, the pupils are to receive diplomas, which shall be evidence of their qualification to teach in common schools; but they are under no obligation to become teachers, and there is nothing to prevent their engaging in other pursuits." Gordon v. Cornes, 47 N. Y. 608. Nor can the legislature by any contrivance, designation, or definition make a common school a normal school, or a normal school a common school, within the meaning of the Constitution. "To say that the legislature can determine what institutions shall receive the proceeds of the school fund, and that whatever they determine to be entitled thereto becomes ipso facto a common school, is begging the whole question, and annulling the constitutional restriction." People ex rel. Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum Soc. v. Board of Education, 13 Barb. 400.

Admitting, for the sake of argument, that the act would result in benefit to the schools as a complete system, the benefit would be only incidental. The main purpose is to benefit the normal pupil, and would result in a diversion of the fund from the exclusive use proposed in the Constitution. That the common school and the normal school are distinct is further made certain by reference to the enabling act creating this state. The people have spoken this difference in the Constitution, and the legislature has maintained it in the code of public instruction. To take from the one and give to the other by indirect methods that which was designed for a special purpose would defeat the whole scheme of the law, and open a way for the ultimate transposition of funds held under a most sacred trust. Courts have been zealous in protecting the money set apart for the maintenance of the free schools of the country. They have turned a deaf ear to every enticement, and frowned upon every attempt, however subtle, to evade the Constitution. Promised benefit and greater gain have been alike urged as reasons, but without avail. They have endeavored to say in unmistakable terms that the common school fund is just what it purports to be,—a fund to be used for the sole purpose of supporting the graded schools of the commonwealth under the sanction of fixed and uniform laws. It follows that all experiments in education must be indulged, if at all, at the expense of the general fund. An attempt to divert a part of the common school fund to the education of children in certain orphanages was met by the supreme court of New York with the suggestion that, if it were accomplished, the legislature "might, by a simple enactment, convert all our colleges and academies and all our seminaries into common schools. This cannot be tolerated." People ex rel. Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum Soc. v. Board of Education, supra. The supreme court of Virginia, in defining the extent of legislative authority over these funds, said: "We think the Constitution has dedicated this fund to the public free schools of the state, and, intrenched behind its bulwarks, it is beyond the reach of the legislature for any other purposes whatever." State Female Normal School v. Auditors, 79 Va. 233. The supreme court of Kentucky, in several cases, has refused to countenance any diversion of the moneys set apart for the common schools, meeting a positive showing of economy to the public school system with the following: "The position that the school building is not sufficient in dimensions to accommodate all the children, and for that reason the legislature had the power to divide the fund, cannot be sustained. If not sufficient, those in charge of the common school should make it so; and to allow the legislative department of the government to divide the fund in such a mode when, in the opinion of those interested, the school buildings were insufficient, would be subversive of the whole school system. If a case could exist where such legislative action would be sanctioned, it is found in the case before us; but, when ample remedies are afforded by the law regulating common schools to prevent such results as is now attempted to justify this character of legislation, there is no reason for establishing a precedent that must, if followed, destroy the very existence of common schools." Underwood v. Wood, 93 Ky. 177, 15 L.R.A. 825, 19 S. W. 405. And the same court, in expressing its unwillingness to conjure and excuse for such legislation, said: "If the general assembly may appropriate the revenues of the school fund for any purpose which cannot be clearly shown to be in aid of common schools in any sense or in any degree, the whole fund may be dissipated and lost to the children of the state whenever the legislature [of the state] so wills it." Collins v. Henderson, 11 Bush, 74. Other cases having a direct bearing on the issue are Hull's Free School v. Horne, 80 Va. 470, and Halbert v. Sparks, 9 Bush, 259.

It is not that the legislature cannot make provision for the support of a model training school, but, in its attempt to do so, it has made provision for it out of the wrong fund. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to discuss the other questions raised by counsel for respondent as to the sufficiency of the title of the act.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

Rudkin, Ch. J., and Fullerton, Crow, and Mount, JJ., concur.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

ANNIE KNOEBEL, Respt.,

v.

NORTH AMERICAN ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.

(135 Wis. 424, 115 N. W. 1094.)

Insurance — premium — nonpayment — waiver.

Although a contract for accident insurance, the premiums on which are to be paid monthly, expressly provides that they must be paid on the first day of each month, without notice, yet, if for ten months the insured is sent notice of the maturity of the premium, with a request that it be sent in a self-addressed envelop, the insurer cannot suddenly, without warning, cease to send the notice, and forfeit the policy for nonpayment, which occurs because the assured has, in good faith, waited for the usual notice; especially where the payments were to be entered in a book which must always be presented with the payment, so that assured might well assume that the only safe way of preserving the book was in sending it as directed by the insurer, to a post-office address designated by it.

(April 17, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Waukesha County Court in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on an accident insurance policy. Affirmed.

Statement by Winslow, Ch. J.:

This is an action by the beneficiary in an accident insurance policy issued by the defendant October 26, 1905, to recover the death indemnity provided thereby. The plaintiff is the widow of Frank Knoebel, the assured, who was, at the time of the issuance of the policy, superintendent of a stone quarry near Waukesha, Wisconsin, and met with an accident resulting in his death within a few hours, on October 5, 1906. The policy was issued upon a written application, and provided for the payment of a premium of $1 on the first day of each month, and that the insurance should only continue in force so long as the monthly premiums were paid in advance

Case Note. — Effect of custom to give insured notice of maturity of premium where insured is not otherwise entitled to notice.

There is an irreconcilable conflict of authority upon this question, though the greater number of the decisions support the proposition that, even if the contract of insurance is silent as to the duty of giving the assured notice when the premiums fall due, yet, if the insurer has followed the custom of giving such notice, it cannot; by failing to give the customary notice, insist upon a forfeiture of the policy for the nonpayment of a premium promptly when due, if the assured was, in good faith, waiting for the usual notice and this was the sole reason for the nonpayment of the premium.

Thus, in New York L. Ins. Co. v. Eggleston, 96 U. S. 572, 24 L. ed. 841, in which it appeared that the insurer had been in the habit of giving the assured notice by mail from time to time as the premiums became due, where and to whom to pay the premiums.—sometimes to one agent at one place, and sometimes to another agent at another place.—it was held that no forfeiture was incurred because of the failure to pay a premium at maturity, which was solely due to want of such customary notice, the premium being ready and being tendered as soon as notice was given.

And in Mayer v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 38 Iowa, 304, 8 Am. Rep. 34, it was said that the majority of ordinarily prudent persons who had been customarily notified of the time when the premiums upon their insurance policies became due, and who had received no notice of an intention on the part of the insurer to abandon the customary course, would, in a particular case, expect and await a like notice; and, if such was a reasonable and natural result of the former dealings of the insurer, the latter must govern its future conduct so as to accord with the reasonable expectation so created. In other words, having given the policy holder reasonable ground for expecting that he was to be notified when his premium fell due, the insurer must continue to give such notice until it informs the assured that he must no longer expect it. "Any other construction would make the law a trap to ensnare the unwary." But see Mandego v. Centennial Mut. Life Assc. infra, a case from the same jurisdiction.

And in Gunther v. New Orleans Cotton

on the first day of each month without notice. It further provided that, in case of payment of a renewal premium after expiration, there could be no recovery for accidental injury happening between the date of the expiration and 12 o'clock noon of the day following such payment, and that the acceptance of any renewal premium should be optional with the company. The defense pleaded was that Knoebel did not pay the monthly premium falling due October 1, 1906, and that the policy had thereby lapsed and expired prior to and at the time of Knoebel's injury and death. The action was tried before a jury, and the facts were essentially undisputed. Knoebel paid an advance policy fee of $5 on October 25, 1905, at the time of making his application. The first monthly payment was due December 1, 1905. The policy provided that the monthly payments should be made to the company at its home office in Chicago, or to the person designated in writing by the company to receive them. The company gave the assured a small book, or folded card, containing a notice that, in order to keep the policy in force, all premiums must be paid in advance, without notice, to Geo. L. Forrest, collector, 88 La Salle street, Chicago; or, if he could not be reached, to A. E. Forrest, secretary, 217 La Salle street, Chicago, and that "this book must always be presented to the collector when paying premiums and receive his signature, which is a receipt for the same; if the collector cannot be found, send postoffice or express order or check with this book to A. E. Forrest, secretary, 217 La Salle street, Chicago." The book or card contained an appropriate space with blank lines in which the collector was to note the date and amount of each monthly payment.

At or about the close of each month, beginning with the close of November, 1905, and continuing until the close of August, 1906, the company caused to be mailed at Chicago from the collector's office, 88 La Salle street, a notice directed to the insured at Waukesha, stating that "the payment of your insurance is due the first day of the month. Please use the inclosed stamped en-

Exch. Mut. Aid Asso. 40 La. Ann. 776, 2 L.R.A. 118, 8 Am. St. Rep. 554, 5 So. 65, the rule was said to be established that, however positive the terms of the contract of insurance might be in requiring payment, unconditionally, of the premiums when due, yet, if the insurer pursued the practice of notifying its policy holder before the maturity of his premiums, the latter would have the right to expect and to rely on receiving such notice; and that, if the insurer failed to send it in a particular case, it would be estopped from claiming a forfeiture for nonpayment at the exact time.

So, in Kavanaugh v. Security Trust & L. Ins. Co. 117 Tenn. 33, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 253, 96 S. W. 499, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 680, it was held that, where, for eight years an insurance company had always permitted an assignee of one of its policies to pay the annual premiums by notes falling due quarterly, and always notified him when a note was to be due, the policy could not be forfeited for the nonpayment of a note unless the customary notice reached him.

This rule of law finds support in the following cases also: Equitable Acci. Ins. Co. v. Van Etten, 40 Ill. App. 232; Supreme Council C. K. A. v. Winters, 108 Ky. 141, 55 S. W. 908; Elgutter v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 52 La. Ann. 1733, 28 So. 289; Atty. Gen. v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 33 Hun, 138; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Pottker, 33 Ohio St. 459, 31 Am. Rep. 555; Helme v. Philadelphia L. Ins. Co. 61 Pa. 107, 100 Am. Dec. 621; Hartford L. Ins. Co. v. Hyde, 101 Tenn. 396, 48 S. W. 968.

But the insured will not, it seems, be allowed to sleep upon his rights, but must act with reasonable diligence to bestir himself to ascertain why the customary notice has not come. Thus, it was held in Grant 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. 76 Ga. 575, that, if the assured waited more than six months after a premium became due before taking any steps to inquire into the matter or to pay the premium, a custom on the part of the insurer to give notice of the maturity of the premiums could not be relied upon to avoid the forfeiture of the policy.

A similar rule has been applied to the custom of sending collectors to the residence of the assured to collect the premiums upon his policy; and, therefore, where the insurer is accustomed to send such collector, its failure so to do, which results in the nonpayment of a premium when due, will estop it from claiming a forfeiture for the nonpayment of the premium upon the date of its maturity (Stirling L. Ins. Co. v. Rapps, 130 Ill. App. 121; Carey v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 114 App. Div. 760, 100 N. Y. Supp. 289); or will be deemed to be a waiver of the forfeiture (Goedecke v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 30 Mo. App. 601).

On the other hand, in Meyer v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 6 Ohio N. P. 34, it was held, in an action upon a policy of life insurance which provided that the neglect of a collector to call would not be deemed an excuse for nonpayment of a premium, that the custom of the insurer of sending a collector did not constitute a waiver of such provision in the policy.

Opposed to the rule of law enunciated in KNOEBEL v. NORTH AMERICAN ACCI. INS. CO. is Thompson v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 252, 26 L. ed. 765, in which it was held that a usage on the part of an insurer of giving notice of the day of payment of notes given for premiums, and the reliance of the assured upon having such notice, was no excuse for the nonpayment of a premium under a policy which was to be velop in sending the same, and put your receipt book with your money. The book will be returned promptly." The inclosed stamped envelop was addressed to the collector's office, 88 La Salle street. In response to this notice, the assured each month at once mailed the monthly payment of $1 inclosed with the book in the stamped and addressed envelop, and the book was regularly returned duly receipted. The book was offered in evidence, and shows the payments to have been received as follows: December 1, 1905; January 2, February 1, March 1, April 2, April 30, May 31, July 3, July 31, and September 1, 1906. The remittances were uniformly mailed by Lena Knoebel, the daughter of the assured, who went to the postoffice a day or two before the close of each month with the necessary dollar, and received the notice, and immediately mailed the premium and the book in the stamped envelope. No notice was sent for the October premium. Lena went to the postoffice as usual with the premium money, as directed by her father, about October 1st, but found no notice.

avoided if the premium was not paid upon a designated date. This decision was distinguished from New York L. Ins. Co. v. Eggleston, supra, in that the customary notice, upon which the assured relied in that case, was a notice which designated the agent to whom payment was to be made, without which the assured could not make it, though he had the money ready; and, as soon as he ascertained the particular person to whom it was payable, he tendered this payment in due form; while, in the Thompson Case, the notice could contain nothing that the assured did not already know. For a criticism of this distinction, see Grant v. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. supra.

And in Mandego v. Centennial Mut. Life Assn. 64 Iowa, 134, 17 N. W. 656, 19 N. W. 877, it was held, under a policy which did not require the insurer to give notice to the assured of time of payment of his annual dues, that the fact that the company was accustomed to give such notice voluntarily did not bind it to continue to do so, and that its failure to do so was not a waiver of its right to declare the policy forfeited for the nonpayment of the annual dues.

And in Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Miller Lodge, I. O. O. F. 58 Md. 463, and in Webb v. Mutual F. Ins. Co. 63 Md. 213, it was held that, though an insurer was accustomed to give notice to its members of the amount of the annual interest upon their premium notes, and of the time of payment, yet, if no obligation to give such notice was created by the insurer's charter or by-laws, such custom would not impose an obligation upon the insurer to give such notice, so as to render a failure to give it an excuse for the nonpayment of the interest.

And in Gateman v. American L. Ins. Co. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

She went two or three times from the 1st to the 4th of October, prepared to send the money, but still received no notice. She and her father relied on receiving the notice, and did not send the dollar on account of not receiving it. The injury and death of the assured occurred October 5th, and on October 8th the company was notified of the assured's accidental death, but, on October 10th, denied all liability on account of failure to pay the October premium. The beneficiary tendered the premium by mail to the company October 20th, but it was returned with a denial of all liability. On these facts the trial court directed a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount of the death indemnity, with interest and costs, and the defendant appeals.

Messrs. Frame & Blackstone, for appellant:

A life insurance company is not bound to give notice to the insured when the annual premium is about to fall due, in the absence of an agreement, though it has

1 Mo. App. 300, evidence of the custom of an insurer to give notice of the premium becoming due was held to be immaterial, the court saying that such notice was always a mere voluntary courtesy, and that the omission to do it entailed no consequences. But see Goedecke v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. supra.

And Girard L. Ins. Annuity & T. Co. v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 97 Pa. 15, would also seem to be opposed to the proposition that the practice of an insurer of giving notice makes it incumbent upon it to continue to do so, since it was there held that evidence was properly excluded that it had been the custom of the insurer to send notices of the falling due of premiums, and that the assured received no notice of the maturity of the premium the nonpayment of which was relied upon to avoid the policy, where it was not shown that the notice was purposely omitted with the design of forfeiting the policy. But see Helme v. Philadelphia L. Ins. Co. supra.

This note does not include cases where the assured is entitled by his contract of insurance to have the dividends or profits earned by his policy applied to the reduction of his premiums, since, as he cannot know without notice the amount that may be due, he cannot be in default until he has notice, though the policy is silent in regard thereto; and therefore his right to receive such notice depends upon an implied term of his contract of insurance, rather than upon any custom of the insurer in sending it.

In many jurisdictions notice as condition of forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums is expressly required by statute, and in those jurisdictions the question herein considered does not arise.

been the practice of the company to give such notice.

Morey v. New York L. Ins. Co. 2 Woods, 663, Fed. Cas. No. 9,795; Thompson v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 252, 26 L. ed. 766; Girard L. Ins. Annuity & T. Co. v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 97 Pa. 15; Continental Ins. Co. v. Dorman, 125 Ind. 189, 25 N. E. 213; Gateman v. American L. Ins. Co. 1 Mo. App. 300; Mandego v. Centennial Mut. Life Asso. 64 Iowa, 134, 17 N. W. 656, 19 N. W. 877.

Where the policy provides that the insurance shall be suspended during the default in payment of any premium, the provision is good, and liability is suspended during such time.

Jefferson Mut. Ins. Co. v. Murry, 74 Ark. 507, 86 S. W. 813; Hayden v. Franklin L. Ins. Co. 69 C. C. A. 423, 136 Fed. 285; Spencer v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 Mo. App. 86, 86 S. W. 899; Letzler v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 119 Ky. 924, 85 S. W. 177; National L. Ins. Co. v. Reppond (Tex. Civ. App.) 81 S. W. 1012; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Hughes (Tex. Civ. App.) 70 S. W. 1010; Hagins v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 72 S. C. 216, 51 S. E. 683; Behling v. Northwestern Nat. L. Ins. Co. 117 Wis. 24, 93 N. W. 800; Thompson v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. supra.

Messrs. Ryan, Merton, & Newbury for respondent.

Winslow, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The conditions of the policy in question were very specific to the effect that the monthly payment must be made on the first day of the month, without notice; and, if not so made, then, that there should be no liability for an accident happening after the default took place, and before the premium was actually paid and accepted by the company. Unless there has been some material change made in these provisions by a subsequent agreement, or unless the company has in some way estopped itself from insisting upon them, there can be no recovery. It is not claimed that the parties made any formal change in their contract relations, but it is claimed that the company, by its uniform practice, for ten consecutive months, of sending a notice of the maturity of the monthly premium, with a request that it be sent in a self-addressed envelop, induced the assured to rely on the continuance of the custom, and to believe that the company desired that premiums be forwarded in response to the notice, and, hence, that the company could not suddenly and without warning discontinue the practice, and insist on a default occurring while the assured was, in good faith, waiting for the usual notice. It is claimed that there are present here all the elements of an estoppel resulting from reliance upon the continuance of an established course of action. The trial court so held as matter of law; and the question presented is whether this ruling is correct.

The general question has been frequently before the courts, and the decisions cannot be said to be entirely harmonious. The following proposition, taken from the opinion in the case of New York L. Ins. Co. v. Eggleston, 96 U. S. 572, 24 L. ed. 841, is believed to be an accurate and comprehensive expression of the fundamental principle involved: "Any agreement, declaration, or course of action on the part of an insurance company which leads a party insured honestly to believe that, by conforming thereto, a forfeiture of his policy will not be incurred, followed by due conformity on his part, will and ought to estop the company from insisting upon the forfeiture, though it might be claimed under the express letter of the contract." The difficulty, if any there be, lies manifestly in attempting to apply the general principle to a particular case. That the assurance company had established a course of action by voluntarily sending the monthly notices for ten consecutive months cannot be doubted; and that this custom was relied on by the assured, and that he delayed sending his premiums on account of his daily expectation that the notice with its accompanying stamped and addressed envelop would be received according to the custom, is made certain by the evidence. There can be no difference of opinion upon these questions. The method of payment was hedged about with rather unusual conditions. It could not be made at Waukesha, but must be sent by mail to Chicago. The small book or card furnished to the assured provided that the payment "must be made only" to the collector, Forrest, at 88 La Salle street, Chicago; but it further provided that the book itself "must always" be presented with the payment and receive the collector's signature, and it contained a provision that, if the collector could not be found, the assured must send the payment "with the book" to the secretary, Forrest, at 217 La Salle street, Chicago. So the assured was informed that he must at all hazards preserve the book, although the book must be sent monthly to Chicago to the collector, and there was a further intimation that the collector might not be always found. These directions, coupled with the repeated declaration that the presence of the book at the time of payment was an essential to effective payment, were certainly well calculated to induce a man unaccustomed to financial transactions to believe that considerable care must be exercised in committing his money and his book to the mails. If, by reason of removal of the collector's office, or by reason of misdirection, or for any other cause, the book went astray, there was apparently danger that the company would not receive his premium afterwards on account of the absence of the book. In this situation the practice of the company in sending a notice, with a request to send the premium in the addressed and stamped envelop inclosed, was undoubtedly peculiarly acceptable. It doubtless appealed to him at once as the only perfectly safe way to insure the safety of his remittances; and, when the practice was continued regularly from month to month, the premium in one instance being accepted on the third of the month without demur, the conclusion on his part would seem entirely justifiable, if not almost irresistible, that the company also appreciated the possibility of error or mistake, and desired that the assured should uniformly make his remittance and send his book in a properly addressed envelop furnished by it, and not attempt to send them forward himself without certain knowledge that the collector's postoffice address remained unchanged. A course better calculated to convince the assured that the company preferred that he wait for the notice could hardly be imagined.

This court has not yet met the exact question here presented, although the general principle that the insurance company may, by a course of conduct, waive exact performance of the conditions of the policy, or, to express it more exactly, be estopped from insisting on a forfeiture, has been frequently asserted. Reisz v. Supreme Council A. L. H. 103 Wis. 427, 79 N. W. 430, and cases cited. In 2 Joyce on Insurance, § 1332, the following principle is stated, which we regard as a substantially correct statement of the law: "If a life insurance company has been in the practice of notifying the insured of the time when the premium will fall due and of the amount, and the custom has been so uniform and so reasonably long in continuance as to induce the insured to believe that a clause for forfeiture for nonpayment will not be insisted on, but that the notice will precede the insistence upon the forfeiture, and the insured is, in consequence, put off his guard, such notice must be given; and, if not given, no advantage can be taken of any default in payment which it has thus encouraged, for the insured is entitled to expect the customary notification; and to mislead the insured by not giving such notice, and then insist upon a strict compliance with the conditions of forfeiture, constitutes, under such circumstances, a fraud upon the assured which the courts have refused in numerous cases to countenance." See also 2 May, Ins. § 356a. All the elements necessary to constitute estoppel by a long-continued course of conduct under the principles just stated seem to be shown by the evidence here, and they seem to us also to be shown beyond dispute. If there were any conflicting evidence as to the facts, or any room for different inferences of fact from the circumstances proven, the question would be one for the jury, and not for the court; but, in our opinion, there is no such room. The continued and uniform custom, its persuasive character, the reliance of the assured thereon, its sudden cessation without notice, and the default by reason of reliance upon the continuance of the custom, are all proven without dispute; and there are no circumstances in evidence even throwing doubt upon these essential facts, or justifying any inference to the contrary.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

There are no other contentions raised which merit discussion.

Judgment affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

PERE MARQUETTE RAILROAD COMPANY,
Appt.,
v.

JETER G. STRANGE.

(— Ind. —, 84 N. E. 819.)

Carrier — intending passenger — rights.

1. One who is upon the premises of a railroad company for the purpose of boarding a train in due course, and has purchased a ticket entitling him to transportation, is, while approaching the train upon which he is to be carried, a passenger.

Same — care.

2. A railroad company owes to a passenger, approaching a train which he intends Case Note. — Duty to guide or conduct passenger to or from train.

Cases involving the general duty of carriers to assist passengers in boarding or alighting from cars, or the general duty to keep the station premises safe by lighting and otherwise, have not been included in this note.

But few reported cases pass directly upon the question of the duty of a railroad company to guide or conduct a passenger between the waiting room and its trains. In some cases the court seems to require a higher degree of care than that suggested in PERE MARQUETTE R. CO. v. STRANGE, or at least do not make prominent the distinction between the degree of care owed to passengers being transported and those not being transported. The general rule appears to to board, the duty of exercising only reasonable care for his protection.

Same — train in station.

3. The negligence of a railroad company in the management of a train approaching a station at night is disproved, where the headlight is burning, the bell ringing, the train running slowly and under control, while the person complaining of the negligence was discovered the moment he stepped on the track, and the emergency brakes applied.

Carrier — guiding passenger.

4. A railroad company is not bound to guide a passenger from the waiting room to his train, even at night, where he is a mature, normal man of experience, and the platform is in good condition, lying between the waiting room and the train, and he discloses no circumstances requiring guidance.

Same — negligence.

5. An attempted guidance of passengers to a train by a station master, who, with a be that the carrier must use reasonable care to make the passageway to and from the train and the station safe, and must furnish guides to conduct the passengers back and forth if the passengers would not otherwise be safe.

Thus, in Peniston v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. 34 La. Ann. 777, 44 Am. Rep. 444, it was held that the defendant company was legally bound to furnish to its passengers an easy and safe mode of getting to and from its trains and such eating stations as it may have provided for the wants and conveniences of its passengers; and this obligation imposed upon the railroad company the duty of having ample and sufficient light, to safely guide their passengers to or from hotel or eating station, and, in case trains are removed from one track to another during the meal, to inform, by employees, the passengers on their egress from the eating or dining room of the exact location of their respective trains. And this decision was cited with approval and followed in Moses v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 39 La. Ann. 649, 4 Am. St. Rep. 231, 2 So. 567, where it was held that the company's omission to instruct, by servants or other employees, its passengers as to the safest course to pursue in order to reach the sleeping car of the train, was a violation of its duty to its passengers.

So, in Dieckmann v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Iowa) 121 N. W. 676, it was held that a carrier was bound to exercise the highest degree of care to protect passengers in making the passage from the depot to the train, and, if due care required the use of a light to illuminate the path, or the services of a guide or escort to conduct the passengers to the proper platform or train, the failure to provide these safeguards would be negligence.

So, in New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Doane, 115 Ind. 435, 1 L.R.A. 157, 7 Am. St. Rep. 451, 17 N. E. 913, it was held that 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

light in his hand, takes a proper place on the platform and calls to the passengers to come to him, is not rendered negligent by the fact that one of the passengers thinks that the call comes from the other side of the track, and is injured in attempting to cross it.

Same — contributory negligence.

6. A passenger cannot hold the railroad company liable for his injury, because of its failure properly to light its platform, if, being a stranger and going from the waiting room onto a safe platform, he approaches the track, half facing the approaching train, and, with the headlight in full view, needlessly attempts to cross the track directly in front of the engine under the erroneous impression that it had stopped.

On petition for rehearing.

New trial — amendment of motion.

7. Memoranda of the trial judge showing that appellant was given ninety days for bill of exceptions, made at the time of over-where passengers are discharged away from the platform, or where it is impracticable to reach it, the passengers must receive such care and attention as will enable them to reach the station in safety.

And where the station was a place of great activity, and incoming trains were being broken up, and new trains made up to go out, and two trains were leaving for the plaintiff's destination within five minutes of each other, on tracks side by side in the same station, and both under the defendant's control, it was held in Newcomb v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 182 Mo. 687, 81 S. W. 1069, that under such conditions the duty devolved upon the defendant to direct passengers to their proper trains.

In Laub v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 118 Mo. App. 488, 94 S. W. 550, there is an implication that, where a passenger is discharged in a dark and unsafe place, it is the duty of the railroad company to have a guide present to direct the passengers in safety.

In Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Curtis, 23 Wis. 152, 99 Am. Dec. 141, instructions were held erroneous which told the jury that, if they believed, from the evidence, that, if the company had had an agent wearing its badge, whose special duty it was to warn passengers not to go on board until the cars stopped, and to inform them what cars to enter, and to tell them there was room for all, etc., such agent would have prevented the injury; and if there was no such agent there, then the defendant was guilty of negligence and liable in the action. It will be seen that this instruction was much broader than the scope of this note.

As to duty of railroad company to assist infirm passenger, see case note to Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cruse, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 299.

As to liability of carrier for assistance negligently rendered passenger by employee, see case note to Hanlon v. Central R. Co. 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 411.

ruling a motion for new trial, are sufficient upon which to amend nunc pro tunc an order overruling the motion, so as to show the allowance of ninety days in which to present a general bill of exceptions.

Appeal — transcript of record — motion for new trial.

8. A motion for new trial is a part of the record without a bill of exceptions, and is covered by a præcipe for a complete transcript of record.

Same — præcipe.

9. Compliance with a statute directing the præcipe for a transcript of record to be copied in the transcript is sufficient to present the record to the reviewing court, although a former statute requires the præcipe to be appended to the transcript.

(May 26, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for La Porte County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John B. Elam, James W. Fessler, and Harvey J. Elam, for appellant:

Failure to direct did not cause the injury.

Indianapolis & V. R. Co. v. McClaren, 62 Ind. 566; Aufdenberg v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 132 Mo. 565, 34 S. W. 485.

Passengers are bound to exercise ordinary care for their own safety; and, since the railroad company had done nothing to indicate that it was safe to cross, appellee was required to use the same amount of care that is required of anyone else approaching a track.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Bell, 122 Pa. 58, 15 Atl. 561; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Whittle, 20 C. C. A. 196, 40 U. S. App. 23, 74 Fed. 296; Holmes v. South Pacific Coast R. Co. 97 Cal. 161, 31 Pac. 834; Gonzales v. New York & H. R. Co. 38 N. Y. 440, 98 Am. Dec. 58; Sanchez v. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 922; Roberts v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 175 Mass. 296, 56 N. E. 559; Flanagan v. Philadelphia W. & B. R. Co. 181 Pa. 237, 37 Atl. 341; Dotson v. Erie R. Co. 68 N. J. L. 679, 54 Atl. 827; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Mahara, 47 Ill. App. 208; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 33 Ind. App. 219, 71 N. E. 250; Matthews v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 148 Pa. 491, 24 Atl. 67; Bradley v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 107 Mich. 243, 65 N. W. 102.

It was, as matter of law, contributory negligence for the plaintiff to fail, as he did, to look at and watch the train while walking toward it, until he was just stepping onto the track.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Rich v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 31 Ind. App. 10, 66 N. E. 1028; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Reynolds, supra; Smith v. Wabash R. Co. 141 Ind. 92, 40 N. E. 270; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Pence, 24 Ind. App. 12, 55 N. E. 1036; Cadwallader v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 128 Ind. 518, 27 N. E. 161; Sutherland v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 148 Ind. 308, 47 N. E. 624; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Grames, 8 Ind. App. 112, 34 N. E. 613, 37 N. E. 421; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Greene, 106 Ind. 279, 55 Am. Rep. 736, 6 N. E. 603; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Graver, 23 Ind. App. 678, 55 N. E. 968; Hancock v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 21 Ind. App. 10, 51 N. E. 369; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Hedges, 118 Ind. 5, 20 N. E. 530; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Hill, 117 Ind. 56, 18 N. E. 461.

And for him to walk on the track, as he did, without listening for the train.

Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Clements, 32 Ind. App. 659, 70 N. E. 554; Smith v. Wabash R. Co. supra; Southern R. Co. v. Davis, 34 Ind. App. 377, 72 N. E. 1053; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Stommel, 126 Ind. 35, 25 N. E. 863; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Howard, 124 Ind. 280, 8 L.R.A. 593, 19 Am. St. Rep. 96, 24 N. E. 892; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Clark, 73 Ind. 168; Bellefontaine R. Co. v. Hunter, 33 Ind. 335, 5 Am. Rep. 201.

And, if his vision was so impaired that he could not see the engine, to step from his place of safety on the platform onto the track.

Quinn v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 162 Ind. 442, 70 N. E. 526; Oleson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 143 Ind. 405, 32 L.R.A. 149, 42 N. E. 736; Debbins v. Old Colony R. Co. 154 Mass. 402, 28 N. E. 274; Bradley v. Grand Trunk R. Co. supra; Keller v. Erie R. Co. 183 N. Y. 67, 75 N. E. 965.

And for him to disregard the instructions given him, and to attempt to cross the track as he did.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bisch, 120 Ind. 549, 22 N. E. 662; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Zebe, 37 Pa. 420; Tillett v. Lynchburg & D. R. Co. 115 N. C. 662, 20 S. E. 480; Aufdenberg v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. supra; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 63 Md. 135.

Any failure of the railroad company to provide lights or guides for the plaintiff was known to him before he undertook to go to the train, and hence, when, with full knowledge of these omissions, he undertook to go, he assumed any risk arising therefrom; and, if those risks were greater than a reasonable man would take, he was also guilty of contributory negligence.

Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Pence, supra.

Korrady v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 131 Ind. 261, 29 N. E. 1069; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Reed, 29 Ind. App. 94, 63 N. E. 878; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bisch, supra.

Messrs. Frank E. Osborn, W. A. McVey, and Theron F. Miller, for appellee:

The railroad company as under the obligation of exercising a very high degree of care to avoid injury to plaintiff.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Treat, 179 Ill. 576, 54 N. E. 290; Warren v. Fitchburg R. Co. 8 Allen, 227, 85 Am. Dec. 700; Gaynor v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 100 Mass. 215, 97 Am. Dec. 96; Jordan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 165 Mass. 346, 32 L.R.A. 101, 52 Am. St. Rep. 522, 43 N. E. 111; 6 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 611; Dodge v. Boston & B. S. S. Co. 148 Mass. 207, 2 L.R.A. 83, 12 Am. St. Rep. 541, 19 N. E. 377; Redhing v. Central R. Co. 68 N. J. L. 641, 54 Atl. 431.

The plaintiff, having purchased his ticket and started from the station for his train, was a passenger.

Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Cooper, 6 Ind. App. 206, 33 N. E. 219; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Treat, supra; Brien v. Bennett, 8 Car. & P. 724; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Treadway, 142 Ind. 482, 143 Ind. 689, 40 N. E. 807, 41 N. E. 794; Caswell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 98 Mass. 200, 93 Am. Dec. 151; Shannon v. Boston & A. R. Co. 78 Me. 52, 2 Atl. 678; Smith v. St. Paul City R. Co. 32 Minn. 1, 50 Am. Rep. 550, 18 N. W. 827; Carpenter v. Boston & A. R. Co. 97 N. Y. 497, 49 Am. Rep. 540; Stoner v. Pennsylvania Co. 98 Ind. 388, 49 Am. Rep. 764; Young v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 171 Mass. 33, 41 L.R.A. 193, 50 N. E. 455.

It is the duty of a railway carrier of passengers to keep its platforms and approaches connected therewith sufficiently lighted, or otherwise to provide lights to afford its passengers a safe ingress to, and egress from, its trains.

Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Treadway, 142 Ind. 481, 143 Ind. 689, 40 N. E. 807, 41 N. E. 794; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Arnold, 84 Ala. 159, 5 Am. St. Rep. 358, 4 So. 359; Moses v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 39 La. Ann. 649, 4 Am. St. Rep. 233, 2 So. 567; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas, 119 Ind. 590, 6 L.R.A. 193, 21 N. E. 968; Lucas v. Pennsylvania Co. 120 Ind. 206, 16 Am. St. Rep. 323, 21 N. E. 972; Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 123 Ind. 418, 7 L.R.A. 687, 18 Am. St. Rep. 330, 23 N. E. 973; Buenemann v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 32 Minn. 390, 20 N. W. 379; Wallace v. Wilmington & N. R. Co. 8 Houst. (Del.) 529, 18 Atl. 818; Fox v. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

New York, 5 App. Div. 349, 39 N. Y. Supp. 309.

The railway carrier owes to passengers the duty to point out to them the trains they should take, to warn them of special dangers, and otherwise, when needful, to direct their movements.

Bishop, Non-Contract Law, § 1089; 3 Thomp. Neg. §§ 2702, 2706; Ranney v. St. Johnsbury & L. C. R. Co. 67 Vt. 594, 32 Atl. 810; Hutchinson, Carr. § 637; Romine v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 24 Ind. App. 235, 56 N. E. 245; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Buck, 96 Ind. 357, 49 Am. Rep. 168; 6 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 600.

Where the law will not exact of the carrier's servants the duty of guidance and assistance, yet, if the same is attempted, the carrier will be held liable for any negligence of its servants in connection therewith.

6 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 611.

The jury must determine the standard of care required, and then determine whether the passenger has lived up to that standard.

Warren v. Fitchburg R. Co. 8 Allen, 231, 85 Am. Dec. 700; Terry v. Jewett, 78 N. Y. 344; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Coggin, 32 C. C. A. 1, 60 U. S. App. 140, 88 Fed. 455; Graven v. MacLeod, 35 C. C. A. 51, 92 Fed. 846; Brassell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 241; St. Louis & S. W. R. Co. v. Johnson, 59 Ark. 122, 26 S. W. 593; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. White, 88 Pa. 333; Union P. R. Co. v. Sue, 25 Neb. 772, 41 N. W. 801; Buenemann v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. supra; Gaynor v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 100 Mass. 214, 97 Am. Dec. 96; Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 339, 42 L. ed. 491, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 68, 71; Mayo v. Boston & M. R. Co. 104 Mass. 142; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Bean, 9 Ind. App. 240, 36 N. E. 443; Parsons v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 113 N. Y. 355, 3 L.R.A. 683, 10 Am. St. Rep. 450, 21 N. E. 145; Archer v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 589, 13 N. E. 318; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Stansberry, 132 Ind. 533, 32 N. E. 218; Wheelock v. Boston & A. R. Co. 105 Mass. 203; Redhing v. Central R. Co. supra; Shutt v. Cumberland Valley R. Co. 149 Pa. 266, 24 Atl. 305; Jones v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 128 U. S. 443, 32 L. ed. 478, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118.

The mere fact that one situated, as was plaintiff, did not look or listen for an approaching train, is not conclusive of a want of due care on his part.

Sonier v. Boston & A. R. Co. 141 Mass. 14, 6 N. E. 84; Brassell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co.; Terry v. Jewett; and Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co.,—supra; Beecher v. Long Island R. Co. 161 N. Y. 222, 55 N. E. 900; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 81 Md. 371, 32 Atl. 201; Pennsylvania Co. v. McCaffrey, 173 Ill. 169, 50 N. E. 713; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Peterson, 156 Ind. 373, 59 N. E. 1044; Shoner v. Pennsylvania Co. 130 Ind. 178, 28 N. E. 616, 29 N. E. 775; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Long, 112 Ind. 171, 13 N. E. 659; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cox, 8 Ind. App. 34, 35 N. E. 183; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Hedges, 105 Ind. 406, 7 N. E. 801; Palmer v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 112 N. Y. 234, 19 N. E. 678; Oldenburg v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 414, 26 N. E. 1021; Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Neubacher, 16 Ind. App. 41, 43 N. E. 576, 44 N. E. 669; Pennsylvania Co. v. Stegemeier, 118 Ind. 311, 10 Am. St. Rep. 136, 20 N. E. 843; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Williams, 20 Ind. App. 579, 51 N. E. 128.

A passenger has a right to assume that the company would not expose him to unnecessary danger; and, while he must himself exercise reasonable care, his watchfulness would be naturally diminished by his reliance upon the discharge, by the company, of its duty to provide a safe passage to and from the trains.

Palmer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co.; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Stanaberry; Brassell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co.,—supra.

One who does not act under an impulse, or upon a belief created by a sudden danger attributable to another's negligence, is not to be regarded as guilty of contributory fault, even though the act would be regarded as a negligent one if performed under circumstances not indicating sudden peril.

Indiana R. Co. v. Maurer, 160 Ind. 28, 66 N. E. 156; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Corson, 198 Ill. 98, 64 N. E. 740.

If it were a fact that plaintiff saw the identical train that injured him, but honestly believed it to be standing still, the fact that he saw it would not be conclusive of his contributory negligence.

Doyle v. Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co. 139 N. Y. 637, 34 N. E. 1063; Maginnis v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 52 N. Y. 215; Gratiot v. Missouri P. R. Co. 116 Mo. 450, 21 S. W. 1094; Henavie v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 166 N. Y. 280, 59 N. E. 903; Blaiser v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 110 N. Y. 638, 17 N. E. 692; Sherry v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 652, 10 N. E. 128.

The fact that a person about to cross a railroad track does not stop is not negligence per se.

Malott v. Haukins, 159 Ind. 134, 63 N. E. 308; Judson v. Central Vermont R. Co. 158 N. Y. 597, 53 N. E. 514.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Plaintiff was not guilty of negligence contributing to his injury.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Amato, 144 U. S. 465, 36 L. ed. 506, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 740; Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. and Jones v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. supra; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gentry, 163 U. S. 353-368, 41 L. ed. 186-193, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1104; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408-417, 36 L. ed. 485-489, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Griffith, 159 U. S. 603-611, 40 L. ed. 274-278, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105.

Montgomery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellee recovered a judgment of $10,000 against appellant for personal injuries inflicted through an alleged breach of its duty as a common carrier of passengers. The complaint is in a single paragraph, and the negligence charged against appellant was: (1) In failing to light its station grounds properly; (2) in carelessly running its train of cars; and (3) in negligently failing to guide and direct appellee. Appellant answered by general denial. Errors are properly assigned upon the overruling of appellant's motion for judgment upon the answer of the jury to special interrogatories, and in overruling appellant's motion for a new trial.

The facts shown by the evidence are substantially as follows: That appellee was a carpenter, twenty-eight years of age, and came from Nashville, Tennessee, to Michigan City, Indiana, on May 13, 1904. He had traveled considerably in his life, both by day and by nighttime, but had never been in Michigan City before. He reached appellant's station by means of an electric car about 11 o'clock p. m., and had with him two trunks, one tool chest, and two grips. The electric car stopped on the north side of appellant's tracks, and appellee's baggage was unloaded there. The night was windy, cloudy, and dark. The railroad station consisted of a combination passenger and baggage car, placed south of the tracks, and, between the station and main track, there was a switch track. The station agent used the west end of the car as an office, and the east end, separated by a partition, was used as a waiting room for passengers. The car was lighted on the inside by two lamps, and there was a signal light on the outside and on the south side of the car, which cast its rays east and west. Appellee was informed by the street car conductor that the railroad and depot grounds were new, the station unfinished, and that this car was used as a waiting room. A stranger pointed out the station car, and leaving his baggage on the north side of the tracks, he crossed over and entered at the east end of the car. Appellee was accompanied by a companion, and their train would not be due until 1:50 A. M. He bought two tickets for St. Joseph, Michigan. The agent agreed to look after the checking of the baggage, and promised to awaken appellee when his train arrived. Appellee had been traveling since noon of May 12th, and rode the night before in a day coach from Louisville, Kentucky, to Mono, Indiana, and slept some on the way, but was tired when he reached Michigan City. The agent having promised to wake him when the train arrived, he lay down on a bench and went to sleep. When the train was approaching, the agent woke him up. He spoke to his companion about the grips, and left the station car at the east end. The agent, with a white lantern in his hand, went out at the west end of the station car and went upon the platform. A stranger went out of the waiting room first, and appellee's companion next, and appellee last. Appellee knew the night was dark, and that there might be danger, but had asked no one for instructions or directions. The platform was on the south side of the main track, and between the main and side tracks, and was 110 feet long and 12 feet wide, made of planks fitted closely together and against the rails, and stood about flush with the top of the rails. The main track and the side track were ballasted with gravel and sand level with the ties. When appellee got outside the station car he stopped to button his coat, and thus dropped somewhat behind the other two men. He then saw the headlight upon the approaching engine, and started in a northwesterly direction toward the track. He did not see the agent's lantern, but heard a voice say: "Come up this way." The wind was blowing, and he thought the sound of the voice came from the north side of the track. He continued in the direction in which he was traveling. The engine bell was ringing, but he did not hear it or the noise of the train as it approached, or notice whether the engine had slowed up, stopped, or was moving. He saw the side track when he passed over it, and when he reached the main track he did not stop, because he heard the voice of the agent say, "Come on," and it sounded as though he was on the opposite side of the track. The train made no noise, and he thought it had stopped, and, as he started to cross the track, he thought the engine was no more than 7 feet distant, but perhaps it was 10 or 12 feet away. He looked at the engine before he started to cross, but did not while crossing. He was watching where he stepped, and could see the ground and rails, and, when about half way across the main track, he was struck by the engine and injured. The engine was equipped with an Edward's electric headlight of 2,000-candle power placed in front of a powerful reflector, and the light was burning brightly, and was such as to enable one upon the engine to see and distinguish objects from 2,000 feet to 3,000 feet away. The track west of the station was straight for 900 or 1,000 feet, and the rays of the headlight struck the track about 9 or 10 feet in front of the pilot. The engine was shut off about a mile west of the station, and was running of its own momentum, and at the rate of 5 or 6 miles an hour, when appellee was struck. The engineer saw appellee step upon the track, and immediately applied the emergency brake, and stopped the train within 50 or 60 feet. The station agent was at no time on north side of the track, but when he said, "Come up this way," he was on the platform, on the south side of the main track.

Appellant's motion for a new trial alleged that the verdict was not sustained by sufficient evidence, and was contrary to law, and that the court erred in denying appellant's request for a peremptory instruction.

Appellee's action is founded upon an alleged breach of duty owing to him in the character of a passenger, from appellant as a common carrier. The relation of carrier and passenger commences when a person, with the good-faith intention of taking passage, with the consent of the carrier, express or implied, assumes a situation to avail himself of the facilities for transportation which the carrier offers. Appellee having entered upon appellant's premises for the purpose of taking a train in due course, and purchased a ticket entitling him to transportation between designated points, was, while approaching the train upon which he was to be carried, and by which he was injured, clearly a passenger. 6 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 536; Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Jolly, 161 Ind. 80, 67 N. E. 935; Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. Hagblad, 72 Neb. 773, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 254, 101 N. W. 1033, 106 N. W. 1041, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1096; Exton v. Central R. Co. 63 N. J. L. 356, 56 L.R.A. 508, 46 Atl. 1099; Warren v. Fitchburg R. Co. 8 Allen, 227, 85 Am. Dec. 700; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Rector, 104 Ill. 296; Webster v. Fitchburg R. Co. 161 Mass. 298, 24 L.R.A. 521, 37 N. E. 165; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Treat, 75 Ill. App. 340; Young v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 171 Mass. 33, 41 L.R.A. 193, 50 N. E. 455; Barth v. Kansas City Elev. R. Co. 142 Mo. 535, 44

S. W. 778; Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 339, 42 L. ed. 491, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 68; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Holloway, 71 Kan. 1, 114 Am. St. Rep. 462, 80 Pac. 31; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Wainwright, 82 C. C. A. 16, 152 Fed. 624; Lake Street Elev. R. Co. v. Burgess, 200 Ill. 628, 66 N. E. 215; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Walker, 217 Ill. 605, 75 N. E. 520; Haselton v. Portsmouth, K. & Y. Street R. Co. 71 N. H. 589, 53 Atl. 1016; McBride v. Georgia R. & Electric Co. 125 Ga. 515, 54 S. E. 674; Shannon v. Boston & A. R. Co. 78 Me. 52, 2 Atl. 678; Gordon v. Grand Street & N. R. Co. 40 Barb. 550; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1402, 71 S. W. 516; Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Wise, 149 Ala. 492, 42 So. 821.

Appellant does not deny that the relation of passenger had been established before, and existed at the time of, the accident in which appellee was injured; but a sharp conflict is waged as to the measure of appellant's duty to him as such passenger while approaching one of its trains. The common law, for the purpose of determining questions of liability for injury, divided passengers into two classes,—(1) those being transported, and (2) those not being transported. The highest practical care and diligence were exacted of the carrier for the safety of passengers of the first class, and, in case of injury resulting from defective roadbed, equipment, or management, a presumption of the carrier's negligence was indulged by law in favor of the injured person. The carrier was bound only for the exercise of ordinary care with respect to passengers of the second class, and, in case of accidental injury, no presumption as to negligence existed in favor of either party. The common-law rule has not been rescinded or modified by statute in this state. The propriety and justice of the requirement that a high degree of care be exercised for the security of passengers of the first class, and the sound public policy upon which the presumption of negligence in case of accidental injury to one of that class from defective roadway or equipment is founded, are manifest. A passenger, being transported at a high rate of speed by powerful engines, is helplessly in charge of the carrier, required to obey its regulations, and to rely for his safety wholly upon the foresight, care, and prudence of its agents. All of its ways, instrumentalities, and methods of operation are exclusively within its control, and the slightest omission or neglect with respect to any of these things is likely to be followed by frightful consequences. This court, appreciating the grounds upon which the rule was founded, has consistently held that, when an injury is sustained by a passenger in transportation upon a railroad on account of the defective condition of roadbed, equipment, or management, the happening of the accident constitutes prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the operating company, and devolves upon it the duty of establishing such facts as will exempt it from the imputation of negligence. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hadley, 170 Ind. 204, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 527, 82 N. E. 1025, 84 N. E. 13; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Higgs, 165 Ind. 694, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1081, 76 N. E. 299; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Sheeks, 155 Ind. 74, 56 N. E. 434; Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Newell, 104 Ind. 264, 54 Am. Rep. 312, 3 N. E. 836.

The special circumstances and risks attending the actual transportation of passengers do not exist with respect to passengers before entering, or after leaving, the coaches of such carriers. The perils surrounding a passenger while about the waiting room, platform, and station grounds of a railroad company are not different in kind from those to be encountered by persons while upon the premises of numerous manufacturing and mercantile establishments, and to which they have come by invitation or inducement for the transaction of business. That high degree of diligence and care exacted, out of considerations of public policy, for the benefit of passengers in the actual progress of their journey, is accordingly relaxed in the case of passengers who are about the stations, platforms, and approaches of a railway company. The obligation resting upon the company in supplying and maintaining these accommodations, and, with respect to passengers using the same, is to exercise only ordinary care or care in proportion to the danger likely to be encountered. It is our holding, therefore, that appellant performed the full measure of its duty to appellee as a passenger in the circumstances shown, if, having regard to the nature of its business, it exercised ordinary and reasonable care for his safety and protection. Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 104 Ind. 239, 3 N. E. 874; Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co. v. Peters, 80 Ind. 168; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Harris, 38 Ind. App. 77, 77 N. E. 1051; Maxfield v. Maine C. R. Co. 100 Me. 79, 60 Atl. 710; Pendleton Street R. Co. v. Shires, 18 Ohio St. 255; McCormick v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 141 Mich. 17, 104 N. W. 390; Crowe v. Michigan C. R. Co. 142 Mich. 692, 106 N. W. 395; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Barnett, 65 Ark. 255, 45 S. W. 550; Moreland v. Boston & P. R. Corp. 141 Mass. 31, 6 N. E. 225; Fremont, E. & M.

Valley R. Co. v. Hagblad, supra; Kelly v. Manhattan R. Co. 112 N. Y. 443; 3 L.R.A. 74, 20 N. E. 383; Laffin v. Buffalo & S. W. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 136, 60 Am. Rep. 433, 12 N. E. 599; Falls v. San Francisco & N. P. R. Co. 97 Cal. 114, 31 Pac. 901; Conroy v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 96 Wis. 243, 38 L.R.A. 419, 70 N. W. 486; Exton v. Central R. Co. supra; Fullerton v. Fordyce, 121 Mo. 1, 42 Am. St. Rep. 516, 25 S. W. 587; Batton v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 77 Ala. 591, 54 Am. Rep. 80; Southern R. Co. v. Reeves, 116 Ga. 743, 42 S. E. 1015; Robertson v. Wabash R. Co. 152 Mo. 382, 53 S. W. 1082; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Giboney, 124 Ky. 806, 100 S. W. 216; Christie v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Minn. 161, 63 N. W. 482; Hayman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 118 Pa. 508, 11 Atl. 815; Taylor v. Pennsylvania Co. (C. C.) 50 Fed. 755; Elliott, Railroads, § 1590; 6 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 608. The case of Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas, 119 Ind. 583, 6 L.R.A. 193, 21 N. E. 968, involved an accident to a passenger on account of a defect in the station platform, and this court, speaking of the duty of the company, at page 590, said: "It is bound to use the highest degree of practical care to provide against accidents to passengers, that may be foreseen and prevented." This statement of the law is erroneous and disapproved in so far as it purports to define the duty of a railway company to provide and maintain instrumentalities and accommodations not directly employed in the transportation of passengers, such as platforms, waiting rooms, and appurtenances.

The complaint charged appellant with negligence in the management of its train. It was conclusively shown that the train approached the station with the headlight burning, the bell ringing, the steam shut off, running at a slow rate of speed and under control; that appellee was at once discovered on attempting to cross in front of the engine, the emergency brake applied, and the train stopped in the shortest possible distance. This charge of negligence was wholly disproved, and must be disregarded in the further consideration of the case.

It was further alleged that appellant negligently failed to guide appellee properly to his train. No facts were alleged or shown in evidence making it the duty of appellant to guide or assist appellee in reaching his train. He was a man of mature years, in good health, and in the full enjoyment of all his faculties, and had had considerable experience in traveling. The platform was situate between the waiting room and the track upon which his train would pass, and was a suitable structure for the purpose intended, and in good condition, so that no 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) danger would be encountered in passing from the waiting room to the place provided for entering upon trains. Appellee did not disclose the fact that he was a stranger and ignorant of his surroundings, or ask for any information or guidance. In such circumstances appellant was under no obligation to exercise special supervision and guidance over appellee while traveling from the station to his train. Appellee's counsel invoke the principle that, although no assistance be exacted under the law, if any be tendered, it must not be negligently rendered. Appellant's agent, with a white light in his hand, went out upon the platform and took a position at the proper point for receiving passengers upon the train, and, as appellee approached, called out, "Come up this way," or "Come on, boys; we will get on up here," or "Come up this way, boys; here's where you will get on your train." This guidance cannot be regarded as in any wise negligent, nor can it be made so by the circumstance that appellee erroneously thought the call to him came from the north side of the track, and was thereby induced to make an attempt to cross in front of the engine.

The most serious charge of negligence preferred against appellant is in failing to light adequately its station grounds. The duty imposed upon railway companies to exercise ordinary and reasonable care for the safety of their passengers includes an obligation to keep their stations, platforms, walks, and other approaches reasonably lighted at night for a sufficient time before the arrival and after the departure of trains, to enable passengers to avoid danger. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Treadway, 142 Ind. 475, 143 Ind. 689, 40 N. E. 807, 41 N. E. 794; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas, supra; Abbot v. Oregon R. Co. 46 Or. 549, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 851, 114 Am. St. Rep. 885, 80 Pac. 1012, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 961; Gerhart v. Wabash R. Co. 110 Mo. App. 105, 84 S. W. 100; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Arnold, 84 Ala. 159, 5 Am. St. Rep. 354, 4 So. 359; Ellis v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 120 Wis. 645, 98 N. W. 942; Heinlein v. Boston & P. R. Co. 147 Mass. 136, 9 Am. St. Rep. 676, 16 N. E. 698; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Neiswanger, 41 Kan. 621, 13 Am. St. Rep. 304, 21 Pac. 582; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cruise, 123 Ky. 463, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 299, 96 S. W. 821; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Calhoun, 18 Okla. 75, 89 Pac. 207, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 681; Elliott, Railroads, 2d ed. § 1590a; Thomp. Neg. § 2391; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 516; 6 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 609. The extent of lighting required under the law at any particular station must depend upon the amount and nature of the business to be transacted, and the character, situation, and surroundings of the station with reference to tracks and other physical conditions reasonably calculated to affect the security of persons in the proper use of the premises, and in the exercise of ordinary care. The adequacy of the lighting is ordinarily a question for the jury under proper instructions; and, if appellee's injury was the result of a fall from the unguarded edge of an elevated platform, or over an obstruction in his path, or on account of a hole into which he stepped because of the darkness, the general verdict of the jury finding, in effect, that appellant's premises were insufficiently lighted, and that appellee had used ordinary care for his own safety, would doubtless be conclusive. But the manner and circumstances of this accident are so unusual that, accepting as true the statement of facts most favorable to appellee, but one conclusion can be reasonably drawn therefrom by impartial minds, and that is that he was not in the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety when injured.

Conceding that appellant did not perform the full measure of its duty to the traveling public in the matter of supplying lights for its premises, and, taking conditions as they were, we are clearly of opinion that appellee's injury must be attributed, in part at least, to his lack of attention and indifference to his surroundings. He was a stranger, and unacquainted with the station grounds, but he did not disclose that fact or seek information. The station platform was low, 12 feet wide and 110 feet long, situated between the waiting room and the main track, in such a position as to require appellee to pass over it in going to his train, and to expose him to no danger. The agent walked ahead with a white lantern, and called out, "Come up this way," in a tone of voice which all heard. Appellee, falling behind the other passengers, says that he did not see the lantern and misunderstood the direction whence the voice came, but this mistake was his, and he must bear the consequence. He was told that his train was coming, and, going outside, he saw the headlight when probably 200 or 300 feet away. He traveled 25 or 30 feet in a northwesterly direction half facing the approaching train, and looked at the light again when it was 10 or 12 feet distant. He erroneously thought the train had stopped, and attempted to cross the main track directly in front of the engine. His ignorance of the premises, the absence of general lighting, and the attendant darkness, imposed upon him the duty of exercising greater vigil for his own safety. The absence of platform lights was not the sole cause of the accident, since the instrument with which he collided was distinctly visible at all times. He knew where the engine was, and its powerful headlight so lighted up his path as to enable him to know when he stepped upon the main track, and to see and distinguish the rails and ties, and to enable the engineer to see him. Appellee was a man of mature years and in full possession of his faculties, and it could hardly be anticipated that such a person, either in the daytime or at night, would pass over the platform and walk immediately in front of the train which he desired to board. An affirmance of a recovery upon these facts would relieve and excuse passengers of any concern and care for their own safety, and would exact of the carrier, not only the highest possible care, but an absolute insurance of the security, of persons rightfully upon its premises. Our conclusion is that appellee is shown by the evidence to have been guilty of contributory negligence, which precludes a recovery. Wabash R. Co. v. Keister, 163 Ind. 609, 67 N. E. 521; Smith v. Wabash R. Co. 141 Ind. 92, 40 N. E. 270; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Howard, 124 Ind. 280, 8 L.R.A. 593, 19 Am. St. Rep. 96, 24 N. E. 892; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Hedges, 118 Ind. 5, 20 N. E. 530; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Hill, 117 Ind. 56, 18 N. E. 461; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Greene, 106 Ind. 279, 55 Am. Rep. 736, 6 N. E. 603; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Hedges, 105 Ind. 398, 7 N. E. 801; Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Butler, 103 Ind. 31, 2 N. E. 138; Bellefontaine R. Co. v. Hunter, 33 Ind. 335, 5 Am. Rep. 201; Bancroft v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 97 Mass. 275; Young v. Old Colony R. Co. 156 Mass. 178, 30 N. E. 560; Judge v. Elkins, 183 Mass. 230, 66 N. E. 708; Adams v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 105 S. W. 526; Weeks v. New Orleans, S. F. & L. R. Co. 40 La. Ann. 800, 8 Am. St. Rep. 560, 5 So. 72.

We have considered appellant's motion for judgment upon the answers of the jury to special interrogatories, notwithstanding the general verdict, but are of opinion that such answers are not sufficiently full and conclusive to overthrow the general verdict, and therefore have determined the appeal upon the evidence.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to sustain appellant's motion for a new trial.

A petition for rehearing having been filed Montgomery, J., on November 18, 1908, handed down the following response:

In the original opinion appellant's bill of exceptions, containing the evidence, and motion for a new trial, were treated as properly in the record, without any discussion of the questions relating thereto made by appellee's counsel. On petition for a rehearing it is alleged that the court erred in holding such bill of exceptions and motion for a new trial to be in the record, and in holding that, upon the evidence, as a matter of law, appellee was guilty of contributory negligence.

Appellee assigned as cross-error that the circuit court erred in its order of November 6, 1905, amending and correcting nunc pro tunc its order of July 25, 1905, so as to show that appellant was given ninety days in which to prepare and present its general bill of exceptions. The memoranda of the trial judge, upon which the amendment nunc pro tunc was made, were as follows: "Mo. filed for N. T. Mo. for N. T. ov. and ex. Pray ap. to Sup. Ct. and granted. Bond sum $15,000.00 by Sept. 11, '05, Aetna Indemnity Co. as surety. Ninety days for bill of ex. Pltff obj. to surety, ov. and ex." These notes were clearly sufficient to justify the court in making the requested correction showing, in accordance with the fact, that appellant was given ninety days in which to prepare a bill of exceptions upon the overruling of its motion for a new trial.

On October 3, 1905, appellant filed a præcipe with the clerk of the circuit court, calling for a complete transcript of the entire record in the cause, except that the original bill of exceptions containing the evidence be certified, instead of a copy thereof; and on November 8, 1905, a further præcipe was filed, requesting a transcript of the proceedings relating to the nunc pro tunc entry. The argument of appellee's counsel is that time beyond the term for filing the bill of exceptions being given only by the nunc pro tunc order of court, and that action not being sustained by sufficient evidence, therefore the bill of exceptions is not properly a part of the record. We have already seen that the nunc pro tunc entry was fully justified by the notes of the judge introduced in evidence, and this ruling disposes of the objection under immediate consideration.

It is insisted that the motion for a new trial was not a part of the record on October 3, 1905, and could not be transcribed in obedience to the præcipe of that date: that it was not called for by the subsequent præcipe, and is accordingly no part of the record. The motion for a new trial was a part of the record without a bill of exceptions, and should have been transcribed as requested by the præcipe of October 3. But, if it were conceded that it was only brought into the record by the nunc pro tunc entry, it would still relate back to July 25, 1905, and become a part of the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) record as of that date, and be covered by the præcipe for a complete transcript.

It is further contended that the record is not sufficient to present any question, because the original præcipes have not been appended to the transcript, but only copied therein. Section 690, Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, requires the præcipe to be appended to the transcript. Section 667, Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908, being § 7 of the act of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 340), declares that the written præcipe shall constitute a part of the record and be copied in the transcript immediately before the certificate of the clerk. This transcript was prepared in compliance with the latter act, and is clearly sufficient; and we are not required to decide whether the former statute upon this point is in force or repealed.

We have again considered the merits of the case upon the evidence, and adhere to the holding that it appears, as a matter of law, that appellee failed to exercise that ordinary care for his safety which the law exacts of a mature person in the circumstances shown.

The petition for a rehearing is accordingly overruled.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF KANSAS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CITY OF CONCORDIA.

(— Kan. —, 96 Pac. 487.)

Municipal corporation — sewers — nuisance.

1. The power granted to cities of the second class to build and maintain sewers does not warrant the commission of a public nuisance through their agency.

Same — eminent domain.

2. The statute of 1887 (Sess. Laws 1887, p. 151, chap. 102), providing that cities of the second class may exercise the right of Headnotes by BURCH, J.

Case Note. — Right of municipality to create nuisance by pollution at the point where its sewers discharge.

The earlier cases on this subject will be found in the notes to Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury, 48 L.R.A. 691, and Georgetown v. Com. 61 L.R.A. 694. The present note is concerned only with the fundamental question whether a municipality may, in the absence of negligence in the construction or maintenance of its sewers, create either a public or private nuisance by pollution incident to the discharge of its sewers into a stream or elsewhere, with immunity from the liability or responsibility which would attach to a private individual under such eminent domain in order to connect sewers with creeks, rivers, and ravines, does not warrant the commission of a public nuisance as the result of such connection.

Same — plans.

3. In planning and in maintaining systems of sewerage, cities of the second class must make due provision against public nuisances resulting from occurrences naturally and reasonably to be anticipated.

(June 6, 1908.)

ERROR to the District Court for Cloud County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to restrain the defendant from committing a public nuisance by discharging sewage into an abandoned river channel. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

circumstances. The many subsidiary questions which arise in connection with actions to enjoin or abate such a nuisance, or to recover damages caused thereby, e. g., whether the nuisance is a permanent or a continuing one, the amount of damages, the effect of the fact that others contribute to the pollution of the stream, prescriptive rights, the propriety of an injunction assuming that the nuisance is wrongful, and the like, are not considered, as they are common to actions against private individuals who maintain such nuisances as well as to actions against municipal corporations.

As shown in the earlier notes, a large majority of the cases unite in holding that a municipal corporation may not, with immunity from the liability which attaches to private individuals under such circumstances, discharge sewage into a stream to the material damage of riparian proprietors, even though the municipality is free from negligence, and the damages are necessarily incident to the discharge of the sewage at the point in question. To the same effect are the following cases, decided since those notes: Birmingham v. Land, 137 Ala. 538, 34 So. 613; Waterbury v. Platt Bros. & Co. 76 Conn. 435, 56 Atl. 856; Dudley v. New Britain, 77 Conn. 322, 59 Atl. 89; Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury, 80 Conn. 179, 125 Am. St. Rep. 111, 67 Atl. 508; Kewanee v. Otley, 204 Ill. 402, 68 N. E. 388; Vogt v. Grinnell, 133 Iowa, 363, 110 N. W. 603; Harrington v. Worcester, 186 Mass. 594, 72 N. E. 326; Bennett v. Marion, 119 Iowa, 473, 93 N. W. 558; Kevil v. Princeton (Ky.) 118 S. W. 363; Smith v. Sedalia, 182 Mo. 1, 81 S. W. 105; Sammons v. Gloversville, 175 N. Y. 346, 67 N. E. 622; Sammons v. Gloversville, 81 App. Div. 332, 81 N. Y. Supp. 466; Markwardt v. Guthrie, 18 Okla. 32, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1150, 90 Pac. 26, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 581; Hobart v. Southend-on-Sea Corp. 94 L. T. N. S. 337; Gorham v. New Haven, 79 Conn. 670, 66 Atl. 505.

In some of the foregoing cases, the principle of municipal liability is announced and applied in express terms; in others, it is 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. Fred S. Jackson, Attorney General, Fred W. Sturges, Jr., and Homer Kennett, for plaintiff in error:

A city which has once condemned or obtained the right to discharge its sewage at a certain place cannot ever after, without reference to changed conditions, so continue, even where, by so doing, it endangers the health and lives of its citizens, and renders a large portion of the city uninhabitable.

Board of Health v. Copcutt, 140 N. Y. 12, 23 L.R.A. 485, 35 N. E. 443; Campbell v. Seaman, 2 Thomp. & C. 231; Rhodes v. Whitehead, 27 Tex. 304, 84 Am. Dec. 631; Mulligan v. Elias, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) 259; Mills v. Hall, 9 Wend. 315, 24 Am. Dec. 160; Burlington v. Stockwell, 5 Kan. App. 569, 47 Pac. 988; School Dist. No. 1 v. Neil, 36 Kan. 617, 59 Am. Rep. 575, 14 clearly assumed or presupposed, the opinions being devoted to the discussion of subsidiary questions.

The same principle is assumed in Augusta v. Marks, 124 Ga. 365, 52 S. E. 539, where the city sewer discharged at a point near the plaintiff's residence, but not into a stream.

Where a drain laid by property owners in a public street, under permission from the city, empties into a natural stream, and thereafter, without express license from the city, is used as a sewer to discharge sewage into the stream, to the injury of a lower riparian owner, the drain is a nuisance, and the city is liable for negligence in not abating it. Mansfield v. Bristol, 76 Ohio St. 270, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 806, 118 Am. St. Rep. 852, 81 N. E. 631, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 767.

A city is liable to a riparian owner where it negligently manages its sewers so that large quantities of filth and excrement are emptied into a stream, and allowed to become deposited on its bed and banks, rendering the plaintiff's premises unhealthful. Lockwood v. Dover, 73 N. H. 209, 61 Atl. 32.

A municipality which adopts a natural water course as an open sewer is bound to keep the channel of the stream open, and to prevent the accumulation of filth; and is liable to respond in damages for any injury which may be done to riparian owners in consequence of its failure in this respect. Glasgow v. Altoona, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 55.

As shown in the note in 48 L.R.A. 691, the New Jersey court of errors and appeals, in the case of Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Paterson, 48 L.R.A. 717, held that the pollution of the Passaic river above the ebb and flow of the tide, by sewage discharged from the sewers of the city of Paterson, constituted the taking of the property of riparian owners, which the legislature could not authorize except upon just compensation. This principle was recognized and assumed in the various stages of the case of Doremus v. Paterson (63 N. J. Eq. 605, 52 Atl. 1107, 65 N. J. Eq. 711, 55 Atl. 304, 69 N. J. Eq. 188, 57 Atl. 548, 69 N. J. Eq. 775, 61 Atl.

Pac. 253; Jones v. Chanute, 63 Kan. 243, 65 Pac. 243.

Mr. Theodore Laing, for defendant in error:

The discretion vested in the mayor and council of a city of the second class in the matter of a sewer cannot be abrogated, abridged, or controlled by the decree of a court.

Soden v. Emporia, 7 Kan. App. 583, 52 Pac. 461; King v. Kansas City, 58 Kan. 334, 49 Pac. 88; Wood, Nuisances, § 758; Gould v. Topeka, 32 Kan. 486, 49 Am. Rep. 496, 4 Pac. 822.

For the injury done to private rights the statute requires compensation to be made.

Long v. Emporia, 59 Kan. 46, 51 Pac. 897; Wood, Nuisances, § 757; High, Inj. § 523.

Burch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The state of Kansas brought an action for an injunction to restrain the city of Concordia from committing a public nuisance be discharging sewage into an abandoned channel of the Republican river, lying outside but near the city limits. The material portions of the petition are the following: "That said defendant for a long time past has discharged and now discharges its sewage and other noxious substances upon premises near or adjoining said city on the north, thereby producing noxious and disagreeable gases and odors injurious and dangerous to the health and lives of the inhabitants of said city, more especially to those in the north portion thereof, and rendering that portion of the city an un-396 (N. J. Ch.) 69 Atl. 225), which was practically a continuation of Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Paterson. The opinions are devoted mainly to the consideration of subsidiary questions as to measure of damages, evidence, and the like, with which this note is not particularly concerned.

In most of the foregoing cases the courts undoubtedly regarded the liability as resting fundamentally on the constitutional provision against taking private property for public use without compensation; and as thus attaching even upon the assumption that the municipality was authorized by statute to discharge the sewage into the stream. This, however, is not true of Vogt v. Grinnell, supra. In that case the decision is expressly placed upon the ground that the statute empowering the city to construct a system of sewers did not expressly authorize it to discharge the sewers into the stream, and that such authority could not be implied, and therefore the act of the city was unauthorized and unlawful, and no degree of care could purge it of its wrongful character. The court, however, said, upon the authority of Bowman v. Humphrey, 132 Iowa, 234, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1111, 109 N. W. 714, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 131, that, "where a nuisance results from the construction by a city of public work which is expressly or by necessary implication authorized by statute, the city is not liable in damages unless the nuisance is occasioned by some negligence on its part in the construction or maintenance of such work. In other words, an act which a statute, if constitutional, makes right, cannot be held to constitute an actionable wrong." While the decision is in harmony with the other cases which hold the city liable, the case differs materially in principle from those that regard the liability as based ultimately upon the constitutional provision against taking property without compensation, and, in the latter respect, is like Valparaiso v. Hagen, 48 L.R.A. 707, which, having held that the damages necessarily incident to the discharge of sewage into a stream by a municipality without negligence were consequential merely, and did not amount to the taking of property within the constitutional provision, also held that the city was impliedly authorized by statute to discharge the sewage into the stream, and was, therefore, in the absence of negligence, not liable to a riparian owner, since "what the law grants will not constitute a nuisance per se, public or private." The diversity of results reached in the Valparaiso Case and the Vogt Case is therefore due to a difference of opinion as to the implication of authority to discharge sewage into a stream from the power conferred by statute upon the municipality to construct a system of sewers. Possibly, even this difference of views as to statutory construction may have been due to a difference in the circumstances, as, in the Valparaiso Case, the physical conditions were such that it was impossible to carry out the legislative authority to construct a system of sewers without discharging the same into the stream, whereas that may not have been true in the Vogt Case. The court, in the latter case, however, would apparently have been disinclined under any circumstances to favor a construction of the statute which would lead to the immunity of the city. But, however this may be, it is apparent that the Vogt Case is not authority for the liability of the municipality, upon the assumption that the statute expressly authorizes the discharge of the sewage into the stream, or, as a matter of statutory construction, is held to imply such authority.

The decision in KANSAS v. CONCORDIA appears to rest upon the same ground as the Iowa Case, i. e., that the legislature, in authorizing the construction of a system of sewers, is not deemed to have intended to authorize the creation of a nuisance.

Even upon the hypothesis of the nonapplicability of the constitutional provision, and upon the assumption of an express provision in a statute authorizing the discharge of the sewage into the stream, the immunity of the municipality would perhaps not nechealthy and unsafe place to live. That said sewage and the place where the same is discharged, to wit, the old river bed, adjoining or near said city on the north, is a public nuisance; to wit, a nuisance to several hundred of the inhabitants of the north part of said city. That the said city has maintained, now maintains, threatens to maintain, and will maintain, said nuisance unless restrained. Wherefore plaintiff prays," etc. To this petition the defendant filed the following answer: "The said defendant, for answer to the petition of the plaintiff, says: (1) It admits that it is a corporation under the laws of the state, and is a city of the second class; that it did, at the time this action was begun, and a long time prior thereto, discharge its sewage at a place near to said city on the north thereof; that said place was, until the summer of 1903, the channel of the Republican river, but that, before the beginning of this action, the said Republican river had abandoned this channel at its ordinary stage, except that Wolf creek and Lost creek, two tributaries of said Republican river, have continued to flow therein. The defendant avers that in 1901 the said defendant, being then a city of the second class, by due process of law obtained the lawful right to and did construct a sewer and connect the same with the said Republican river at the place aforesaid, and has ever since maintained the same. (2) For further answer the defendant says that it denies each and every averment and allegation in said petition, except as hereinbefore admitted." The facts stated in essarily follow, since the court might take the view that the legislature did not intend to grant such authority to the city with immunity from liability for damages necessarily incident to its exercise. The case of Sammons v. Gloversville, 175 N. Y. 346, 67 N. E. 622, lends some color to that view. In that case, a judgment for a riparian owner in an action against a municipal corporation for an injunction, and damages for pollution of a stream by the discharge of sewage therein, was affirmed, although the charter expressly authorized the city to discharge the sewage into the stream. The court (referring to the charter provision) said: "This is a permission, and not a direction, and a legislative permission neither implies a right to appropriate property without compensation, nor confers a license to commit a nuisance. To base upon a legislative grant of power to do a thing an immunity from consequences which deprive, or tend to deprive, a person of that which is his property, there should, at least, be found a direction which is clear and quite unmistakably imperative. . . . The charter, in authorizing a system of sewers and drains discharging into the stream, neither conferred an unusual power nor a right to deposit sewage upon the plaintiff's lands, situated miles below the city. If the results complained of are unavoidable, then we may not assume a power implied from the permission of the charter to destroy the plaintiff's property without compensation." The language thus far quoted is consistent with the immunity of the city from liability if such immunity were expressly or by implication conferred by the charter. The view that the decision rested upon the ground that the legislature did not intend to grant immunity to the city, and not upon the ground that it would be beyond its power to do so, is further supported by the following language from the opinion: "We think that the legislative intent was, that the discretion of the municipal authorities in maintaining a system of sewage should be exercised in conformity with private rights; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) and, if their destruction be involved, that, in such a case, payment must be made." In this view the case would differ from the Valparaiso Case only on the point as to the existence of statutory authority; and would not differ from the Vogt Case at all, except, perhaps, that the latter case implies that an express grant of authority to discharge sewage into the stream would carry with it an indication of legislative intent to extend immunity to the municipality from liability for the damages necessarily resulting, whereas the Sammons Case apparently holds that the grant of immunity must be express, and cannot be inferred, even from such a provision. That the court in the Sammons Case meant to place the liability of the municipality upon the ground that the legislature had not attempted to extend immunity to the municipality, rather than upon the ground that the pollution of the stream as a necessary incident of the discharge of the sewage constituted a taking of property within the constitutional provision, so that the legislature could not have extended such immunity, is rendered more probable from the position taken in Atwater v. Canandaigua, 124 N. Y. 602, 27 N. E. 385, and other cases not falling within the scope of this note, with respect to the nonapplicability of the constitutional provision to consequential damages incident to public work. Opposed to this view, however, is one sentence in the opinion in the Sammons Case, to the effect that "the legislature could not authorize such an injury without requiring payment for the consequences; and it has not assumed to do so." If this sentence expresses the deliberate views of the court, it is apparent that the Sammons Case goes beyond the Vogt Case, and, like most of the other cases cited in this note, is authority for holding the municipality liable not only when the statute under which the municipality acts may be construed consistently with an intention on the part of the legislature not to extend immunity, but also when the legislature has, paragraph 1 of the answer being true, no reply was filed, and the defendant moved for judgment on the pleadings.

Concordia is a city of the second class. In 1887, the legislature passed an act (Sess. Laws 1887, chap. 102, p. 151 relating to sewerage and drainage in such cities, § 3 of which reads as follows: "Sec. 3. Such city shall have authority to lay sewer pipes and drains, and connect the same with any creek, ravine, or river at any point within 5 miles of the corporate limits of said city; and for this purpose the right of eminent domain is hereby granted to cities of the second class." Section 4 prescribes the method by which the right of eminent domain granted in § 3 may be exercised, and provides for the payment of damages to any person injured by the laying of pipes or drains to a creek, ravine, or river, whether the pipes or drains are laid through his land or he is otherwise damaged. Sess. Laws 1887, chap. 102, p. 152. The district court regarded the sewer connection with the river as a work specifically authorized by the statute referred to, and therefore lawful, whatever the consequences. In deciding the case, the learned district judge said: "Where the law by one rule authorizes the city to do what it has done, it will not, by some other rule of law, enjoin it from doing the same thing." Therefore the motion for judgment on the pleadings was sustained, an injunction denied, and judgment rendered against the state for costs.

The allegations of the petition are so general that a question might have been raised if facts and circumstances are pleaded with sufficient certainty to show the city to be guilty of maintaining a public nuisance. However, no motion was made for a more full and definite statement. The defendant treated the petition as setting forth a cause of action for an injunction against a public nuisance, and filed an answer. The district court treated the case as if a nuisance were charged unless the statute legalized what the city had done and was doing. Under these circumstances, this court will give in express terms, or by necessary implication, attempted to grant such immunity.

The latter position, which bases the liability upon a fundamental constitutional provision, and thus places it beyond the reach of legislative assault, seems, at least in the case of pollution of a stream to the material damage of the riparian proprietor, to be the only one consonant with justice, since the right of such riparian proprietor to have the water of the stream flow through his land unpolluted and uncontaminated by the discharge of the city sewage would seem, from a practical point of view at least, to be as real and tangible a property right, and as much entitled to the protection of the constitutional provision, as his right to have the soil remain in its place. In Kewanee v. Otley, 204 Ill. 402, 68 N. E. 388, the court said: "The right to a stream of water is as sacred as a right to the soil over which it flows. It is a part of the freehold, of which the owner cannot be dispossessed except by due process of law; and the pollution of a stream constitutes the taking of property, which may not be done without compensation." This, however, involves a question as to which there are many conflicting decisions, and which far transcends the scope of this note. It is apparent, however, that, in jurisdictions in which the infliction of damages of this kind as incident of a public work is not regarded as a taking of property, the question of municipal liability depends upon the legislative intent; at least, in the absence of any other constitutional provision applicable to the subject.

In Bailey v. New York, 38 Misc. 641, 78 N. Y. Supp. 210, holding that the owner of oyster beds in Jamaica bay was entitled to an injunction against the city of New York, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) and to damages on account of the discharge of sewage, the court refers to the statute authorizing the commissioners to build sewers and discharge the same into the bay, and says that the act did not give or purport to give the commissioners of the town of Plattsburgh (the city's predecessor) the right to discharge at such point or in such a manner as to injure plaintiff's property.

The doctrine of Valparaiso v. Hagen does not appear to have been applied in any subsequent cases with the result of relieving a municipality from liability. It was, however, recognized obiter in the subsequent case of Weston Paper Co. v. Pope, 155 Ind. 400, 56 L.R.A. 902, 57 N. E. 719.

The liability of a city to a riparian owner for the pollution of a stream by the discharge of sewage into it was denied in Atwood v. Biddeford, 99 Me. 78, 58 Atl. 417, upon the ground that the authority to construct sewers was conferred by statute, not upon the city in its corporate capacity, but upon the municipal officers,—an entirely distinct tribunal,—and that such officers acted in the performance of their duties in this respect in the exercise of the authority with which they are vested by general law, and not as agents of the municipality.

In Phillips v. Armada (Mich.) 15 Det. L. N. 983, 118 N. W. 941, the court held that a municipality has no right to discharge its sewage into an open ditch by a residence, where it gives forth noxious and offensive odors. It also appeared in this case that the ditch into which the sewer was discharged emptied into a creek. The court, referring to this condition, said that it was very doubtful whether the discharge into the creek was not, under the decisions, a reasonable use of the stream, remarking that it was not prepared to say that the the petition liberal interpretation against the city. The disposal of sewage in a city is frequently a serious problem. It may be practically impossible to devise a system adequate to the needs of the city, or within its ability to carry out, which will not occasion inconvenience and discomfort to somebody. The mayor and council must meet the situation as best they can. When their candid judgment has been deliberately exercised, and the work has been properly planned and skilfully executed, the rights of individuals must ordinarily be subordinated so far as all incidental disadvantage and loss is concerned. The city is, however, liable for negligence in the plan, construction, and maintenance of sewers as of other public works; and the right to build sewers and drains implies no right to create a nuisance, public or private. In the case of Leavenworth v. Casey, 1 Kan. Dasser's ed. 545, Appx., the syllabus reads: "It is the duty of a municipal corporation to build a sewer so that it will not be a nuisance to a neighborhood, as much as it is to avoid the same result by keeping it in repair after it is built." In the case of Atchison v. Challiss, 9 Kan. 603, 613, it is said: "Of course, cities have no power, discretionary or otherwise, to create nuisances. And they probably could not abandon or discontinue a sewer or drain so as to leave an individual in a worse condition than if no sewer or drain had ever been constructed." In the case of Gould v. Topeka, 32 Kan. 485, 490, 49 Am. Rep. 496, 4 Pac. 822, the opinion reads: "A city has no more right to plan or create an unsafe and dangerous condition of one of its public streets than it has to plan and create a public or common nuisance; and it is admitted that it has no right to do this." In the case of King v. Kansas City, 58 Kan. 334, 49 Pac. 88, the syllabus reads: "In devising a plan of sewerage, the municipal authorities of a city are vested with a large legislative discretion; and, if it is exercised in good faith, the city is ordinarily not liable for incidental injuries to property which are solely attributable to the plan. In such pollution of a stream by sewage from a municipality, which renders the water below unfit for the use of man or for domestic animals, is unreasonable and may be enjoined. The question, however, was not decided, since the evidence failed to show how much damage was done by the pollution of the water in the creek.

In District of Columbia v. Cromptley, 23 App. D. C. 232, it was held that the District of Columbia was not liable, as for a nuisance, to purchasers of water lots on the Potomac river from the commissioners of the District, for changing the point of the discharge of a sewer after the sale of the lots, there being no element of negligence nor any claim for alleged defective or insufficient construction of the sewers. The ground of contention that the District was liable, namely, that, by the sale of the lots, it had divested itself of control over the sewers, seems to imply that, independently at least of such surrender of control, there would have been no liability on the part of the District by reason of the discharge of the sewage into the stream, and that also seems to be assumed by the court, as it cites and approves the opinion in Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 14 Am. Rep. 592 (referred to in the note in 48 L.R.A. 691), which denies the right of a riparian owner to recover from a city damages caused by the pollution of a stream by city sewage, so far as the pollution is attributable to the plan of sewerage adopted by the city. It will be observed that, in the Cromptley Case, however, the sewage was discharged into a tidal navigable stream, and, as shown in the note in 48 L.R.A. 691, the general rule as to municipal liability to riparian owners does not apply to navigable waters. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The general principle that a municipality may be held to respond in damages or be subject to an injunction for discharging sewage into a stream to the damage of riparian owners has been recognized in some cases in which the facts were such as to take the case out of the operation of the rule. Thus, for example, Matheny v. Aiken, 68 S. C. 163, 47 S. E. 56, denied injunction and damages upon the ground that the owner had another and exclusive remedy.

And Cleveland v. Standard Bag & Paper Co. 72 Ohio St. 324, 106 Am. St. Rep. 613, 74 N. E. 206, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 21, denied the liability of the city on the ground that it had acquired the right by prescription.

While the question whether the city may not obtain such right by prescription is not within the scope of this note, it may be noted here that such right is denied in Birmingham v. Land, 137 Ala. 538, 34 So. 613.

So, Reese v. Johnstown, 45 Misc. 432, 92 N. Y. Supp. 728, denied an injunction because the plaintiffs and their predecessors had themselves discharged refuse into the stream.

Wharton v. Bradford City, 209 Pa. 319, 58 Atl. 621, denied the liability of a city for the death of a child from drinking water from a well contaminated by water percolating from a stream into which the city discharged its sewage, upon the ground that the injury was too remote, and not the proximate result of the city's act. These cases are referred to merely for the purpose of showing that they are not in conflict with the general rule that holds the municipality liable, and are, of course, not exhaustive as to the points upon which the decisions rested.

cases, however, if, through any negligence in carrying out the plan, or in constructing or maintaining the sewers, the property of a private owner is injured, a liability will arise. The collection and precipitation of water or sewage upon the private property of an owner, in such a way as to constitute a direct invasion of the owner's rights, and in the nature of a trespass upon his property, will create a liability against the city, regardless of the plan upon which the sewer is constructed."

Such conduct may perhaps be classed as an excess or abuse of corporate power rather than as the negligent exercise of it; but, whatever descriptive term may be used, the principle is sound, and there can be no doubt but that, if the same or similar acts should result in a public and common nuisance, instead of a private one merely, the public would have the same right to protect itself as an individual. The subject is summed up in 2 Dillon on Municipal Corporations, 4th ed. § 1047, p. 1330, as follows: "Although a municipality having the power to construct drains and sewers may lawfully cause them to be built so as to discharge their refuse matter into the sea, or natural stream of water, yet this right must be so exercised as not to create a nuisance, public or private. If a public nuisance is created, the public has a remedy by a public prosecution; and any individual who suffers special injury therefrom may recover therefor in a civil action." In Joyce on Nuisances, § 284, p. 373, it is said: "Where municipal, quasi-municipal, and public bodies generally proceed to exercise, or do exercise, their powers in constructing and maintaining great public works of a sanitary nature, such as a sewerage system, and the question of the extent of or limitations upon their powers has come before the courts, these powers, and the rights of the public and of private individuals in connection therewith, have occasioned much discussion. But, notwithstanding certain decisions not in harmony herewith, it may be stated that, even though a municipality or other body has power to construct and maintain a system of sewers, and although the work is one of great public benefit and necessity, nevertheless such public body is not justified in exercising its power in such a manner as to create, by a disposal of its sewage, a private nuisance, without making compensation for the injury inflicted, or being responsible in damages therefor, or liable to equitable restraint in a proper case; nor can these public bodies exercise their powers in such a manner as to create a public nuisance; for the grant presumes a lawful exercise of the power conferred, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) and the authority to create a nuisance will not be inferred."

The legislature may authorize many things to be done which create disturbance, annoyance, discomfort, and affect health, but which must be endured by private parties unless some constitutional mandate be violated. Thus, in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Armstrong, 71 Kan. 366, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 113, 114 Am. St. Rep. 474, 80 Pac. 978, the syllabus reads: "An authorized business, properly conducted at an authorized place, is not a nuisance, for whatever is lawful cannot be wrongful; and the owner of a railroad thus authorized and operated is not liable in damages to one whose residence is permeated by smoke, cinders, and gas emitted from the engines to such an extent as to be injurious to the health and comfort of the inhabitants." As against the public, the legislature may go further, and direct or permit that to be done free from liability to state prosecution, civil or criminal, which, without the statute, would be a public nuisance. The legislature is the judge of what the public good requires.

In any action attacking what is claimed to be a public nuisance, the first question must always be: Has the legislature authorized it? In determining this question, certain rules of interpretation are well established. In 2 Wood on Nuisances, 3d ed. §§ 757, 758, pp. 1057 et seq., it is said: "An individual or corporation acting strictly within the scope of legislative power cannot be indicted for a public nuisance. The legislative grant is a license to do the act, and operates as a complete and full immunity from prosecution, either civilly or criminally, on the part of the public. But it by no means follows that, because an act is done under legislative authority, that the person doing the act cannot be punished therefor by indictment if the act creates a public nuisance. If the act is in excess of the power given, or if it is done in a manner not within the reasonable contemplation of the legislature, to be gathered from a fair construction of the grant,—as, if it is not a necessary and probable result of the exercise of the power given,—the act will be no protection against liability, both civilly and criminally. It is only against such consequences as are fairly within the contemplation of the legislature in conferring the authority, and such results as are necessarily incident to its being done,—in other words, such results as are the natural and probable consequence of an exercise of the power at all,—that the grant operates as a protection. Beyond that it affords no protection whatever. . . . The right given, however, in order to warrant the erection of a public nuisance, must be clearly within the scope of the grant, and must fairly be within contemplation of the legislature in conferring the power."

In Joyce on Nuisances a stricter rule is derived from the decided cases: "In such cases the statutory sanction necessary to justify such act must be given either expressly or by clear and unquestionable implication from the powers conferred, so as to show that the legislature intended and contemplated the doing of the very act in question. Such statutes should receive a strict construction, and it will not be assumed that the legislature intended to authorize a nuisance unless this is the necessary result of the powers granted." § 72, p. 114.

In the case of Morse v. Worcester, 130 Mass. 389, 2 N. E. 694, the opinion reads: "When the legislature authorizes a city or town to construct sewers, or to use a natural stream as a sewer, it is not to be assumed that it intends to authorize the city or town so to construct its sewers, or so to use the stream, as to create a nuisance, unless this is the necessary result of the powers granted. On the contrary, if it is practicable to do the work authorized without creating a nuisance, it is to be presumed that the legislature intended that it should be so done. This principle has been recognized and applied in many cases."

... In the case at bar, the legislature authorized the city of Worcester to use Mill brook as a sewer; by necessary implication, the statute authorized it to empty its sewage into Blackstone river; but we cannot presume that it was the intention of the legislature to exempt the city from the obligation to use due care in the construction and management of its works, so as not to cause any unnecessarily injurious consequences to the rights of others. If it is practicable to use any methods of constructing the sewer, and, as a part of the construction, of purifying the sewage at its mouth, at an expense which is reasonable, having regard to the nature of the work and the magnitude and importance of the interests involved, it is the duty of the city to adopt such methods." The opinion in the Morse Case cites Atty. Gen. v. Leeds Corp. L. R. 5 Ch. 583. There an act of Parliament was interpreted to authorize the drainage of sewage into a river in such a manner as not to create a nuisance. In deciding the case, Lord Chancellor Hatherley said: "I think the true answer is that which had occurred to us before we called on Sir Roundell Palmer; namely, that when any person finds that the legislature has authorized a work to be done (and, of course, the force of this is increased by the view we have taken, that the true construction of the act is that it is to be done without creating a nuisance), he is not to assume it will create a nuisance. On the contrary, the presumption would be that the board would not do anything unlawful. It is lawful for them to make the sewers; it is lawful for them to conduct the sewage into the River Aire; but they are to do it in such a way as not to create a nuisance."

This seems to be a sensible view, and authorities need not be multiplied. If the legislature authorizes or directs something to be done by a city, it will be presumed no nuisance was intended, unless such as may be the natural and necessary result of the work. The act of 1887 conferred no new power on the city by declaring that it should have authority to lay sewer pipes and drains, and connect them with any creek, river, or ravine as an outlet. It had that power without the statute. 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 447. The declaration of the power was made merely for the purpose of attaching to it the right of eminent domain. The obligation to avoid committing a public nuisance was not weakened. It cannot be the law that this act authorizes a city to pour the contents of its sewer mains into any dry ravine it may find convenient to its borders, infect a populous neighborhood with disease, and then, in an action to abate the nuisance, exculpate itself by the simple answer: "The sewers were connected with a ravine." Perhaps some sewage may properly be emptied into a ravine, but manifestly the thought of the statute is that ravines may be utilized for drainage. Cities may lie in close proximity to each other on the banks of a river. It is impossible to believe that one city may empty all the filth of its sewers at the intake of another city's water supply, and then justify by saying: "The sewers were connected with the river." A city has no right arbitrarily to select the point of outlet for its sewers regardless of the public health and comfort. It may take its sewers to the river, but it must not be indifferent to the very interests to be subserved in building sewers. There is nothing unusual about the fact that the water of the Republican river changed to another channel. The valleys of Kansas are filled with channels old and new from which the water of the rivers has departed. The effect upon the sewer in question is the same as if a sand bar had blocked the mouth of the sewer, dammed up its contents, and caused them to overflow the streets; or as if a bar had formed opposite the mouth of the sewer in such a way as to form a foul and pestilence-breeding basin. In planning and in maintaining any sewer system, provision must be made for that which naturally and reasonably may be anticipated. The petition is such that the court does not know what facts may be relied upon to show that the city is at fault. Assuming that a public nuisance exists, the first count of the answer states no defense.

The judgment of the District Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded for trial.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

ELMER H. DUNTON

v.

WESTCHESTER FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(— Me. —, 71 Atl. 1037.)

Insurance — arbitrators — title.

No question as to the title of the insured can be considered by referees appointed in accordance with a clause in a standard insurance policy which provides that, upon failure of the parties to agree as to the amount of loss, it should be referred to arbitrators, the award of a majority of whom should be conclusive as to the amount of loss and damage.

(September 15, 1908.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to the direction by the Supreme Judicial Court for Somerset County of a verdict in plaintiff's favor and to rulings made during the trial of an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due under certain fire insurance policies. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Butler & Butler and Frederick W. Brown for defendant.

Messrs. Merrill & Merrill for plaintiff.

Whitehouse, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on two fire insurance policies issued by the defendant corporation in the standard form prescribed by Me. Rev. Stat. chap. 49, § 4, ¶ 7.

Among the provisions contained in this form of policy are the following stipulations respecting the loss or damage, and the method of ascertaining and estimating such damage by arbitration, viz.:

"The amount of said loss or damage to be estimated according to the actual value of the insured property at the time when such loss or damage happens, but not to include loss or damage caused by explosions," etc.

"In case of any loss or damage under this policy, a statement in writing, signed and sworn to by the insured, shall be within a reasonable time rendered to the company, setting forth the value of the property insured, the interest of the insured therein, all other insurance thereon, in detail," etc.

"In case of any loss or damage, the company, within sixty days after the assured shall have submitted a statement as provided in the preceding clause, shall either pay the amount for which it shall be liable, which amount, if not agreed upon, shall be ascertained by award of referees as herein-after provided, or replace the property with other of the same kind or goodness," etc.

"If there shall be any other insurance on the property, whether prior or subsequent, the insured shall recover on this policy no greater proportion of the loss sustained than the sum hereby insured bears to the whole amount insured thereon.

"In case of loss under this policy, and a failure of the parties to agree as to the amount of loss, it is mutually agreed that the amount of such loss shall be referred to three disinterested men, the company and the insured each choosing one out of the three persons to be named by the other, and the third being selected by the two so chosen; the award in writing by a majority of the referees shall be conclusive and final upon the parties as to the amount of loss and damage, and such reference, unless waived by the parties, shall be a condition precedent to any right of action in law or equity to recover for such loss."

It is admitted by the defendant that three referees were seasonably chosen in all respects in accordance with these stipulations in the policy and the statutes of the state providing for "a reference of the question of amount to three disinterested men . . . in case of a failure of the parties to agree

Note.—As intimated by the court, the above decision seems to be one of first impression upon the authority of arbitrators under standard policies of insurance to consider the assured's title to the insured property, as an extensive search has failed to disclose any other case involving that question.

Attention however may be called to Hogadone v. Grange Mut. F. Ins. Co. 133 Mich. 339, 94 N. W. 1045, in which it was held that the provision in a mutual fire policy 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that, in case of disagreement as to the amount of valuation, in whole or in part, the matter should be determined by the arbitration committee of the company, whose decision as to the validity of the claim should be final, and preclude any suit to fix the amount or valuation, related only to cases as to disagreement as to the amount of valuation, in whole or in part, and was not applicable to a controversy between the parties in which the disagreement related to the assured's title to the insured property.

as to the amount of loss." Thereupon the defendant contended before the board of referees, thus legally constituted, that at the time of the fire the plaintiff had no title to the property insured, and offered evidence to prove that, prior to that time, the plaintiff had no title to the property insured, and had sold the property to a third party. The referees excluded this evidence and ruled that they had no jurisdiction of the question of the plaintiff's title or insurable interest, and that the only question submitted to them was the amount of damage done by the fire.

The referees accordingly proceeded to take evidence upon the question of the amount of damage done by fire to the property described in the policies, and made their award determining the amount of damage on the merchandise insured to be $6,280, and on the tools and machinery, $350. The defendant declined to recognize this award as a compliance with the requirements of the policy, and denied its validity on the ground that the referees had refused to hear evidence upon, and determine the question of, the plaintiff's title to the property insured. The plaintiff thereupon commenced this action upon the policies, and at the trial the court received evidence, subject to the defendant's objection, to prove title in the plaintiff to the property insured, and also admitted the award of the referees as to the amount of damage done to the property by the fire.

The defendant requested the court to rule that, upon this evidence, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The court refused to rule as requested, and ordered a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,246.71. The case comes to the law court on exceptions to these rulings of the presiding justice.

The only question thus raised by the exceptions and argued by counsel is whether the stipulation in the Maine standard policy in regard to arbitration authorizes and requires the referees to take jurisdiction of one of the principal questions involved in the plaintiff's right to recover, and determine his title to the property insured, as well as the amount of the damage done to the property; or whether it contemplates only an appraisal by the referees of the value of the property described in the policy, and an estimate of the damage done by the fire to that property, leaving the question of the plaintiff's title and the general question of the defendant's liability to be judicially determined in the courts of law.

When this question is examined in the light of the uniform current of judicial opinion respecting such stipulations for arbitration in contracts of insurance made prior to the adoption of the Maine standard policy, and considered with reference to the provisions of the standard policy itself, specially involved in the inquiry, and the practical operation of the rule contended for by the defendant, the conclusion is irresistible that the ruling of the presiding justice was correct, and that the exceptions must be overruled.

It has been long established by authority, both in this country and in England, that, if parties stipulate in contracts of insurance and other similar contracts to submit to arbitration the question of the amount of damage or any similar matters that do not go to the root of the action, it is entirely competent for them to make such an agreement a condition precedent to the right of action; and, if it appears from the express terms of the contract, or from necessary implication, that such was the intention, it will be upheld by the courts, and no action can be maintained upon the contract without proof on the part of the plaintiff that he has fulfilled the stipulation in the contract, or made all reasonable effort to fulfil it. The effect of such an agreement is not to refer a cause of action, but to provide that a cause of action shall arise as soon as the amount to be paid has been determined, and not before. It does not deprive the courts of their jurisdiction, but simply provides a reasonable method of estimating and ascertaining the amount of the loss, and leaves the general question of liability to be determined by the judicial courts. Scott v. Avery, 8 Exch. 497, 5 H. L. Cas. 811; Elliott v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. L. R. 2 Exch. 237; Hamilton v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 242, 34 L. ed. 419, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 945; Wolff v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 50 N. J. L. 453, 14 Atl. 561.

It is equally well settled that, if an agreement to arbitrate is confined to an appraisal of value or an assessment of the amount of damages, and is, at the same time, only an independent stipulation, and not made by the policy a condition precedent to the right of action, the plaintiff may still have his action and establish his claim by other evidence without procuring an award from the arbitrators. Reed v. Washington F. & M. Ins. Co. 138 Mass. 572. In such a case the agreement to refer is not an essential term of the covenant, but a power which may be revoked at any time before it is fully executed. It is simply a collateral agreement to refer to arbitration, and not an agreement that only the adjusted loss shall be paid.

But there is a third proposition of paramount importance, which has undoubtedly been regarded as settled by judicial authority ever since the days of Lord Coke; and that is, that a general stipulation in such a contract to refer to arbitration all matters of difference that may arise respecting both the right to recover and the amount of damage will not be sanctioned or enforced so as to divest the courts of their established jurisdiction. Stephenson v. Piscataqua F. & M. Ins. Co. 54 Me. 55, and authorities cited. In this case the distinction between a valid and invalid agreement for arbitration in such a contract is thus stated by the court: "While the parties may impose, as a condition precedent to application to the courts, that they shall have first settled the amount to be recovered by an agreed mode, they cannot entirely close the access to the courts of law." See also Wood v. Humphrey, 114 Mass. 185; White v. Middlesex R. Co. 135 Mass. 216; Fisher v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 95 Me. 486, 85 Am. St. Rep. 428, 50 Atl. 282.

It does not appear from any of the decisions cited in support of the familiar propositions above stated, or from any other case to which the attention of the court has been called, that such a stipulation for the settlement of the question of damages by arbitration has ever been construed to require or authorize the referees to determine the question of the plaintiff's title to the property insured, as a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right of action on the policy. It has not been perceived that any judicial decision exists in which it has been held competent for the parties to stipulate that the determination of the question of the ownership of the property by arbitration should be a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right of action. No such doctrine has ever been suggested respecting stipulations for arbitration in policies of insurance not prescribed by legislative action, for the obvious reason that the question of the ownership of the property is not involved in the appraisal of the value of the property destroyed or the estimate of the damage done to the property insured, but goes directly and solely to the plaintiff's cause of action and the defendant's liability.

But the Maine standard policy, though its form is prescribed by statute, is not to be treated as a legislative enactment after it has been accepted by the parties, but as a voluntary contract, which, like any other contract, derives its force and efficacy from the consent of the parties. As stated by the court in Reed v. Washington F. & M. Ins. Co. supra, with reference to the standard policy then prescribed by their statute: "It is their contract; as such, it does not deprive the plaintiff of his action and his trial by jury. It is not to be presumed that the legislature intended, by prescribing the form of contract, and prohibiting any other, to give it effect in depriving a party of rights, which, as a contract, it would not have."

The fact, therefore, that the legislature put forward the Maine standard policy as a form for a contract to be executed by the parties affords no reason for giving to the arbitration clause any different construction from that heretofore given by the courts to all similar contracts made without legislative sanction. It has been seen that, unlike the form considered in Reed v. Washington F. & M. Ins. Co. supra, the arbitration clause in the Maine policy contains an express provision that the award of the referees "shall be conclusive and final upon the parties as to the amount of loss or damage, and such reference, unless waived by the parties, shall be a condition precedent to any right of action . . . to recover for such loss."

It will be noticed that, in the judicial treatment of this subject in all the cases cited and to be found relating to it, every allusion to a submission to ascertain the "amount of loss or damage" has uniformly been understood to signify a proceeding to appraise and estimate the damage to the property described, but not to embrace the question of ownership or any other matter which goes to the root of the cause of action. Stephenson v. Piscataqua F. & M. Ins. Co. supra; Bangor Sav. Bank v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 85 Me. 68, 20 L.R.A. 650, 35 Am. St. Rep. 341, 26 Atl. 991. There is no reason to suppose that it was in the contemplation of the parties or of the legislature that any other or different effect was to be given to those words in the Maine policy. All of the other terms of the policy and of the statutes relating to the subject are entirely consistent with this construction of the language of the arbitration clause in each of the policies in suit. There is nothing in any of the provisions of the policy prescribed, or of any of the statutes relating to it, which indicates, in the slightest degree, any purpose or desire to change the established doctrine of the courts in regard to the distinction above stated between valid and invalid agreements for arbitration in this class of contracts.

The case of Cassidy v. Royal Exch. Assurance, 99 Me. 399, 59 Atl. 549, differs toto cœlo from the case at bar, and is not an authority for the defendant's contention. The matter which was there deemed to be within the jurisdiction of the referees did not go to the cause of action, but to the amount of damages; and the only question of fact for the determination of the referees was whether certain piles of lumber were within 100 feet of each other.

Furthermore, the rule claimed by the defendant would not be a wise or beneficent one in its practical operation. The settlement of questions of title to real and personal property often involves the duty of examining a complex state of facts and important and difficult questions of law,—a duty which those not educated to the law would be wholly incompetent to perform; and yet it is a matter of common knowledge that, in a great majority of references under the arbitration clause of insurance policies, the referees are not selected from the legal profession for the reason that they are required to perform the functions of simple appraisers, and not of general arbitrators. Under the terms of the Maine policy, neither of the three persons named for the referees by each of the parties is required to be learned in the law.

Exceptions overruled.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

MAYNARD A. DAVIS

v.

NEW ENGLAND RAILROAD COMPANY et al.

JAMES MCKEON

v.

SAME.

(199 Mass. 292, 85 N. E. 475.)

Eminent domain—interference with light and air—compensation.

1. Recovery cannot be had by an abutting owner because of interference with the light, air, or prospect of his property through an elevation of railroad tracks, in the absence of any taking of his land or destruction of his easements, under a statute requiring compensation to be made for all damage caused by the taking of land or by the change or discontinuance of a private way or by the taking of an easement.

Trespass — railroad construction — remedy.

2. The remedy of one over whose property a temporary structure is erected for the running of trains pending an elevation of railroad tracks is an action for trespass, and not under the statutes allowing compensation for property taken by right of eminent domain.

(June 16, 1908.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of petitions for damages for injuries to petitioners' property by the elevation of certain railroad tracks after demurrers to the petitions had been overruled. Demurrers sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Benton & Clarke for respondents.

Messrs. Samuel M. Child and Malachi L. Jennings, for petitioners:

Part of the petitioner's land having been taken, he is entitled to damages.

Sheldon v. Boston & A. R. Co. 172 Mass. 180, 51 N. E. 1078; Sheehan v. Fall River, 187 Mass. 356, 73 N. E. 544; Hyde v. Fall River, 189 Mass. 439, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 269, 75 N. E. 953; Whitney v. Com. 190 Mass. 531, 77 N. E. 516; Hyde v. Boston & W. Street R. Co. 194 Mass. 80, 80 N. E. 517.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These are petitions for the assessment of damages alleged to have been caused by the abolition of the grade crossing on Dudley street, in Boston. The cases come here on report after a demurrer in each had been overruled, and the question is the same in both. They were argued together, and we proceed to consider them together. The McKeon petition, after describing the premises and after referring to the decree of the su-

Case Note.—Right of property owner to compensation for interference with light or air by railroad structure on the company's own property.

Although there are many cases passing on the question whether the interference with light or air is to be considered an element of damages where a railroad structure is built in the street, or on property taken by condemnation proceedings from the complaining party, there seems to be very little authority on the question presented by DAVIS v. NEW ENGLAND R. Co. whether the interference of light or air will constitute an independent cause of action for damages, where such structure is built on the company's own property. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Aside from the DAVIS CASE, the only American case found which presents that question is Egerer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 17 N. Y. S. R. 225, 2 N. Y. Supp. 69, where it was held that an action will not lie, by the owner of property, against a railroad company, for deprivation of light and air, occasioned by elevating its tracks so as to obstruct a street; such elevation being in pursuance of an act of the legislature, and the city commissioners having discontinued that portion of the street under authority given them by the act. The court said: "Here the injury, if any, results from a discontinuance of the street itself by action of the city authorities, and a consequent deprivation of the perior court under which the defendants have acted, alleges that the defendants "have caused and are causing great damage to the petitioner's property by the erection of retaining walls on Norfolk avenue, in front of and along the side of and in the rear of the plaintiff's property, causing him great and permanent loss in the value of the same, and that said defendant companies, in pursuance of said order and in doing the work thereunder, have caused your plaintiff great damage by the erection of the temporary bridges over said Norfolk avenue and upon and against your plaintiff's property, over which said bridges said companies have caused to be run during the prosecution of said work a great many trains daily; that the grade of the said road bed of said railroad has been raised a great height, shutting out your plaintiff's light and air and otherwise impairing the value of his property." The allegation in the Davis petition is that the defendants "have caused and are causing your plaintiff great damage to his property aforesaid by the building against his property of a high granite retaining wall impairing your plaintiff's right to light and air, and reducing the value of your plaintiff's property by a large amount."

The defendants contend that the remedy of the plaintiff McKeon, if any, for the erection of temporary bridges upon his property and running trains over the same, is in tort; that neither the plaintiff McKeon nor the plaintiff Davis has any remedy at common law for any damages caused by the building, by the defendants, of retaining walls upon their own premises, even though the result is to shut out light and air from the premises of the petitioners, and that neither has any remedy, under the statute, in regard to the abolition of grade crossings, for the reason that in neither case does the petition allege any taking of land or an easement therein or discontinuance of a private way.

easements formerly enjoyed therein. It is not contended that the plaintiff could acquire such easements by prescription over the lands of the defendant, an adjoining proprietor. The discontinuance of the street was within the authority expressly given to the commissioners of the city by the act of 1880, and the plaintiff had no cause of action against the defendant for damages caused thereby."

In England, however, the obstruction of light and air caused by the building of a structure by a railroad company on its own property is considered a damage to property, and therefore a property owner who is so injured may recover damages. Re London. T. & S. R. Co. L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 40; Eagle v. Charing Cross R. Co. L. R. 2 C. P. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It does not appear in either of the petitions when the proceedings for the abolition of the crossing were instituted. But it is said in the briefs for the petitioners, that the petition for the abolition of the crossing was filed under Rev. Laws, chap. 111, §§ 149-160, inclusive; and this is also stated in substance in the brief of the defendants, and we assume the fact to have been as both parties seem to agree that it was.

Rev. Laws, chap. 111, § 153, as amended by Stat. 1905, chap. 408, p. 351, § 3, and Stat. 1906, chap. 463, p. 495, pt. 1 § 37, which was the law in force at the time of the entry of the decree in the superior court, provides in regard to the liability of railroad corporations as follows: "All damages which may be caused by the taking of land for the railroad, or by the change or discontinuance of a private way, or by the taking of an easement in land adjoining a private way, or a railroad location in connection with the abolition of a grade crossing, shall primarily be paid by the railroad corporation; and all damages which may be sustained by any person by the abolition of private ways, except as hereinbefore provided, shall be entirely paid by the railroad corporation. If the parties interested cannot agree upon said damages, any party may have the damages determined by a jury in the superior court . . . in the same manner as damages may be determined which are caused by the taking of land for the locating of railroads and the laying out or discontinuance of public ways, respectively." The original grade crossing act provided for the determination of the damages "in the same manner and under like rules of law as damages may be determined when occasioned by the taking of land for the locating and laying out of railroads and public ways, respectively." The words, "and under like rules of law," were retained through all the various amendments that were made until the revision of 1902 when.

638; Turner v. Sheffield & R. R. Co. 10 Mees. & W. 425.

However, compensation cannot be allowed for deterioration in the value of property by reason of the premises being overlooked by persons on the railway. Re Penny, 7 El. & Bl. 660.

Right, under constitutional provisions against "damaging" private property for public use without compensation, to compensation for consequential damages to property, no part of which is taken, from smoke, noise, dust, etc., incident to ordinary operation of railroad, see case note to Tidewater R. Co. v. Shartzler, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1053.

for some reason, probably because they were deemed superfluous, they were omitted from the statute. Stat. 1890, chap. 428, p. 463, § 5; Stat. 1891, chap. 123, p. 734; Stat. 1894, chap. 216, p. 196; Stat. 1897, chap. 264, p. 234; Stat. 1898, chap. 200, p. 133; Stat. 1900, chap. 463, p. 460. Their omission does not, however, we think, affect the rules of law applicable to the cases before us. At common law the petitioners would have no remedy for any damages caused to their property through interference with light and air and prospect by the erection, by the defendants, of retaining walls upon their own land. Cassidy v. Old Colony R. Co. 141 Mass. 174, 5 N. E. 142. Their remedy, if they have any, is under the statute in relation to the abolition of grade crossings; and, in order to bring themselves within the remedy afforded by that statute, their petitions must contain the necessary allegations. It is plain that, under the recent decisions of this court, the petitioners have suffered special and peculiar damages in the abolition of the crossing (Whitney v. Com. 190 Mass. 531, 77 N. E. 516; Hyde v. Fall River, 189 Mass. 439, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 269, 75 N. E. 953; Sheehan v. Fall River, 187 Mass. 356, 73 N. E. 544; Sheldon v. Boston & A. R. Co. 172 Mass. 180, 51 N. E. 1078; Penney v. Com. 173 Mass. 507, 73 Am. St. Rep. 312, 53 N. E. 865), and that, if that were all that it was necessary to allege in order to entitle them to maintain their petitions, then the demurrers were rightly overruled. But we do not think that it is. As we construe the statute, the defendants were liable only in case there was a taking of land or of an easement in land by them, or a change or discontinuance of a private way. And it is not alleged in either petition that either one of those things was done by the defendants, and that damage to the premises of the petitioners was caused thereby. It is not necessary that land of the petitioners, or an easement therein, should have been taken. But no case has gone so far as to hold that damages, like those sustained in these cases, can be recovered, where no land or easement in land is taken. Interference with light, air, and prospect does not constitute the taking of an easement in the land so interfered with, though it may result in damage to the property interfered with, and is a proper element of damage where land is taken. It should be noted that in Rand v. Boston, 164 Mass. 354, 41 N. E. 484, which has since been overruled (Hyde v. Fall River, supra), and in which there was a dissenting opinion; land on the opposite side of the street was taken, and also in Hyde v. Fall River, supra.

20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The erection of temporary bridges on and over the property of the petitioner McKeon, and the running of trains over the same, was a trespass, not a taking, and the remedy, if any, for any damages caused thereby, is in tort. See Peabody v. Boston & P. R. Corp. 181 Mass. 76, 62 N. E. 1047; Dodge v. Essex County, 3 Met. 380.

It is stated in the briefs for the petitioners that land was taken, although it is not so alleged in the petitions. And the petitions can, perhaps, be so amended as to obviate the objections which are now urged to their maintenance. But that is a matter for the superior court to consider and pass upon.

The entry will accordingly be, demurrers sustained.

So ordered.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

HENRY TOMPKINS

v.

BOSTON ELEVATED RAILWAY COMPANY.

(201 Mass. 114, 87 N. E. 488.)

Passenger — platform — assumption of risk.

1. One voluntarily becoming a passenger on a street car so crowded that he is compelled to ride in the vestibule, with knowledge of a rule that persons riding on platforms do so at their own risk, assumes the risk of injury from being compelled temporarily to alight to enable other passengers to leave the car, including that of having the car negligently started before he resumes a safe position.

Street railway — passenger.

2. A passenger on a crowded street car does not cease to be such by momentarily stepping to the ground to enable other passengers to leave the car.

(February 25, 1900.)

Note. — A thorough search has brought to light no other cases upon the liability of a street railway company for injury to a passenger who alights temporarily for the convenience of other passengers.

An extensive note on the subject of riding on platform of street car as negligence will be found in connection with Capital Traction Co. v. Brown, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 831; and as to the contributory negligence of a passenger standing or riding on the running board of a street car, see the notes to Burns v. Johnstown Pass. R. Co. 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1191, and to Harding v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 352.

REPORT of the Superior Court for the Suffolk County for the opinion of the full bench of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James P. Magenis and J. B. Boland for plaintiff.

Messrs. Ralph A. Stewart and Henry J. Hart, for defendant:

The plaintiff, having voluntarily become a passenger, assumed all additional risks fairly incident to the crowded condition.

Meesel v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 8 Allen, 234; Jacobs v. West End Street R. Co. 178 Mass. 116, 59 N. E. 639; Burns v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 183 Mass. 96, 66 N. E. 418.

The passenger was not in the exercise of due care.

Tutein v. Hurley, 98 Mass. 211, 93 Am. Dec. 154; Larkin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 166 Mass. 110, 44 N. E. 122; Neylon v. Phillips, 179 Mass. 334, 60 N. E. 616; Moody v. Springfield Street R. Co. 182 Mass. 158, 65 N. E. 29; Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Wilkinson, 30 Md. 224; Worthington v. Central Vermont R. Co. 64 Vt. 107, 15 L.R.A. 326, 23 Atl. 590.

Rugg, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff became a passenger upon a surface electric car of the defendant, so crowded with passengers that he could not sit or stand inside, and took his place in the front vestibule. He knew of the rule of the defendant, printed on the car, that "persons riding on the platforms do so at their own risk." Before his journey's end, the plaintiff stepped off the car, in order to enable some ladies to alight, and, as he was trying to get on again, he was injured by the car's being started suddenly and with more than ordinary jerk. The rule referred to was a reasonable one, and within the power of the defendant to make. Burns v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 183 Mass. 96, 66 N. E. 418; Montgomery v. Buffalo R. Co. 165 N. Y. 139, 58 N. E. 770. The plaintiff, by voluntarily becoming a passenger upon a car so crowded that he could not get inside took the risks incident to transportation under these circumstances. One of these was that of temporarily alighting for the purpose of permitting other passengers to get off the car conveniently. Jacobs v. West End Street R. Co. 178 Mass. 116, 59 N. E. 639. It has been argued by the defendant that his relation as passenger thereby ended. If this should be held, then it did not become re-established, for there was no evidence from which it could be found that the plaintiff gave any notice of such intention on his part to those in charge of the car, or that they knew of any such intention or effort or offer on his part to that end, or that they accepted him as a passenger. Hogner v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 198 Mass. 260, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 960, 84 N. E. 464. But the plaintiff did not cease to be a passenger by leaving the car momentarily for this cause. He could not have been required to pay a new fare. The necessity or courtesy which prompted his action did not terminate his status as passenger. It is notorious that this is one of the common incidents of travel during rush hours. The acceptance of passengers upon cars so crowded already created an implication on the part of the defendant that, although some passengers might be obliged for an instant to step to the street for the accommodation of their fellows, the contract for carriage should not thereby be terminated. The plaintiff, by taking his position on the front platform of such a car, also impliedly contracted with reference to the same obligation resting on him. But he contracted subject to the rule of the defendant that he took all risks from riding on the front platform. One of these risks under the known conditions was that he might for a moment step off the car and get on again. Under the terms of his contract of carriage he took upon himself the consequences of injury ensuing from this act. Riding "at his own risk" could mean nothing less than at the risk of dangers resulting from the negligence of the defendant or its servants. The defendant was, in any event, apart from the rule, responsible for no other risks than those arising from its own failure or that of its agents to exercise the highest degree of care as to passengers consistent with the reasonable conduct of its business. It was not an insurer of the safety of its passengers. Hence, in order to give any effect to the rule, which, under the circumstances, became a term of the contract between the plaintiff and defendant, it must be held to exonerate the latter from all injuries which the plaintiff might receive while a passenger upon the front platform. A verdict should therefore have been ordered for the defendant. Hosmer v. Old Colony R. Co. 156 Mass. 506, 31 N. E. 652; McDonough v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 191 Mass. 509, 78 N. E. 141; Pike v. Boston Elevated R. Co. 192 Mass. 426, 78 N. E. 497.

In accordance with the terms of the report the entry must be:

Judgment for the defendant.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

MONITOR DRILL COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
MERCER, Trustee, etc., of Western Implement Company.

(— C. C. A. —, 163 Fed. 943.)

Conditional sale — construction.

1. The effect of a provision in a contract for the sale of personal property, that the title shall remain in the vendor until the property is fully paid for, in creating a conditional sale, is not destroyed by a clause which authorizes the vendor, under certain conditions, to retake all property unsold by the vendee.

Same — collateral security.

2. Taking notes and collateral security for the purchase price of chattels does not destroy features of the contract constituting the transaction a conditional sale.

Same — construction.

3. A provision in a contract of conditional sale of chattels, authorizing the vendor to take possession of property, of whatever nature, derived from sale of the chattels by the vendee, reduce it to cash, and apply the proceeds upon the amount due under the contract, does not qualify the title to the property remaining unsold by the vendee, which was retained by the vendor.

Same — settlement — notes.

4. A settlement between the parties to a contract of conditional sale in accordance with its terms, and the taking of notes from the vendee to cover such portions of the property as remained in his possession, or as he had sold and had not been paid for, is not a novation which will destroy the conditional sale features of the original contract; and it is immaterial that the settlement was not on the exact date provided for by the contract, and that a conditional sale agreement covering unsold articles was not given, if the original contract clearly reserved title in the vendor.

Same — failure to record — effect.

5. Failure to record a conditional sale contract will not make it ineffectual against trustees in bankruptcy of the vendee, if the recording acts make unrecorded sales voidable only against lien creditors, and the trustees represent no creditors having a prior lien on the bankruptcy proceedings.

(August 21, 1908.)

Case Note. — Effect of taking collateral security upon conditional sale.

The authorities are not in harmony on this question, although the weight of authority holds that subsequently taking additional collateral security to secure the amount due on a conditional sale is not sufficient to divest the seller of his title and transfer it to the buyer.

The leading case so holding is William W. Bierce v. Hutchins, 205 U. S. 340, 51 L. ed. 828, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524. It is one of the few cases wherein the question seems to have received more than passing consideration by the court. In holding that the taking of additional security, either contemporaneously with the execution of a contract of sale, or subsequently thereto, was not sufficient to divest the vendor of his title, expressly reserved in the contract, a distinction was made between an election of remedies, the waiver of a lien, and a transfer of title. The court recognized that a lien would be waived by taking an inconsistent position in reference thereto, and, as to a transfer of title, it was said that the assertion of a lien upon the property to which the title was reserved was inconsistent with asserting title to it, and would be assumed to be sufficient to manifest an election, if title could be so transferred. On this point the court said: "Election is simply what its name imports; a choice, shown by an overt act, between two inconsistent rights, either of which may be asserted at the will of the chooser alone. Thus, 'if a man maketh a lease, rendering a rent or robe, the lessee shall have the election.' . . . So a man may ratify or repudiate an unauthorized act done in his name. . . . He may take the goods, or the price, when he has been induced by fraud to sell. He may keep in force, or may avoid, a contract after the breach of a condition in his favor. . . . In all such cases the characteristic fact is that one party has a choice independent of the assent of anyone else. But if a man owns property he has no election to transfer it to another. He cannot make the transfer unless the other assents. And equally, if he owns property subject to be divested by the performance of a condition, he has no election to divest it without performance. The other party must assent. Transfer is very different from election, and requires acts of a different import on the part of the owner, and corresponding acts on the part of the transferee."

Other cases have reached the same result as that reached in the Bierce Case, but not upon the same theory. Thus, in Kimball v. Costa, 76 Vt. 289, 104 Am. St. Rep. 937, 56 Atl. 1009, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 610, it was held that the seller's lien under a conditional sale was not affected by his subsequently taking a mortgage upon other property, from a subsequent purchaser of the property conditionally sold, where the mortgage recited that the mortgagor had purchased the property described in the title-clause note, and that it was given as additional security for the payment thereof.

So, a mortgage of real estate subsequently executed as additional security for the amount due for property sold conditionally does not affect the seller's right under the contract as against a subsequent mortgagee, where at the time the mortgage was executed there was no pretense of any settlement between the buyer and the seller, and no APPEAL by claimant from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota affirming an order of a referee in bankruptcy refusing to recognize claimant's right to certain chattels found in possession of the bankrupt. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Sanborn and Van Devanter, Circuit Judges, and W. H. Munger, District Judge.

Mr. George W. Buffington, with Mr. George S. Grimes, for appellant.

Mr. M. H. Boutelle, with Mr. N. H. Chase, for appellees.

W. H. Munger, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the district court, affirming the order and findings of the referee in bankruptcy. By the facts as shown it appears that the Western Implement Company, a corporation, and the Monitor Drill Company, a corporation, in agreement to surrender the conditional sale notes. Cherry v. Arthur, 5 Wash. 787, 32 Pac. 744.

And in Pettyplace v. Groton Bridge & Mfg. Co. 103 Mich. 155, 61 N. W. 266, it was also held that taking a real-estate mortgage as additional security to conditional sale notes did not render the sale absolute.

So accepting additional security on extending the time for the payment of the amount due on a conditional sale contract is not a waiver by the vendor of his rights thereunder. Standard Steam Laundry v. Dole, 22 Utah, 311, 61 Pac. 1103.

Reservation of title in such a contract is not waived by the seller afterward asking for and being promised additional security, which, however, was never given. Sargent v. Metcalf, 5 Gray, 306, 66 Am. Dec. 368.

As against a mortgagee of real estate, machinery sold the mortgagor conditionally will not become a part of the realty, nor will the condition be deemed to be waived, by the seller subsequently taking a mortgage upon the property sold and other property, where the mortgage was taken as further security, as this fact rebuts the presumption of waiver if such a lien comes within the category of liens waivable in that way. Page v. Edwards, 64 Vt. 124, 23 Atl. 917.

And the fact that the seller of chattels conditionally subsequently took a mortgage on the property sold and other property of the buyer does not of itself amount to an election to treat the title as vested in the buyer, so as to give a prior mortgage executed by the buyer upon the property conditionally purchased precedence over the right of the seller under the contract. First Nat. Bank v. Reid, 122 Iowa, 280, 98 N. W. 107.

So, the mere fact that the attorneys for the seller, in ignorance of the reservation of title in the contract of sale, took from the January, 1906, entered into two certain contracts, by the terms of which the Monitor Drill Company, designated the first party, agreed to sell to the Western Implement Company, designated the second party, certain agricultural implements at certain prices, to be delivered f. o. b. at its factory in St. Louis Park, Minnesota. Provisions in each of said contracts, appearing in the following order, and the only ones necessary to be considered for the proper determination of the case, were as follows:

"Terms. Party of the second part agrees to settle with party of the first part for all goods purchased under this contract, on or before June 1, 1906, as follows: . . .

"Fourth. Settlement for each and all machines sold by party of the second part shall be made at or before delivery, either by cash or the purchaser's note, secured by chattel mortgage covering the property sold, and other personal property of equal value, if possible, which notes and chattel mortgages shall be taken upon blanks to buyer a mortgage on the same property to secure the balance due thereon, is not sufficient to divest the seller of his rights under the contract as to the other creditors of the buyer. Jones v. Albin, 53 Ga. 585.

Subsequently taking a trust deed covering property sold conditionally and other property does not, as against other creditors of the buyer, estop the seller from relying upon the reservation of title in an original contract of sale. Foster v. Briggs Machinery & Supply Co. 6 Ind. Terr. 342, 98 S. W. 120.

But in Anundsen v. Standard Printing Co. 129 Iowa, 200, 105 N. W. 424, the court, in disposing of the contention of the seller of property by conditional sale, that it was not subject to the debts of the buyer, said that, while it was true that the original contract was a conditional sale only, yet this was merged into an actual sale by the seller thereafter taking notes for the purchase price, secured by a mortgage upon the property sold, and by filing an intervening petition asking that the mortgage be held superior to other claims against the buyer.

And in McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Lewis, 52 Kan. 358, 35 Pac. 12, it was held that, where the possession of the property purchased on conditional sale was in the vendor, it was competent for the parties to treat the sale as absolute, and the title as having vested in the purchaser. Hence, the execution by the purchaser of a mortgage upon that and other property, and its acceptance by the seller, was inconsistent with ownership in the seller, as the purchaser assumed to have title by mortgaging the property to the seller, and, in applying for and accepting the mortgage, the seller recognized such title. It was accordingly held that the purchaser could not thereafter defend against a recovery on the original note be furnished party of the second part by party of the first part; and, at said settlement time, party of the second part shall pay to party of first part the proceeds of such sales made for cash in cash, and shall be entitled to the discount above mentioned therefor; and party of second part shall at said settlement time turn over and deliver to party of the first part each and all said notes and chattel mortgages securing the same, taken in settlement for machines sold by party of second part, as collateral security to the note of party of second part; the party of second part shall also, at said settlement time, give party of first part a special conditional sale agreement covering unsold machines at each of its local places of business.

"Conditions. It is specifically understood and agreed that the title to each, every, any, and all machines and parts thereof, delivered to party of the second part under the terms of this contract, is in, and shall continue to remain in, the party of the first until it shall receive full payment in cash therefor; that, if party of second part resells any of said machines, or parts thereof, then the full proceeds thereof, be such proceeds book accounts, notes, or cash, or other personal or real property, shall, in lieu of such machines or parts thereof so sold, immediately be, become, and remain the sole and exclusive property of party of the first part until the full indebtedness of party of second part to party of first part is paid in cash. And, until such indebtedness of party of the second part shall be paid in full to party of the first part, and until said proceeds and the whole thereof have been actually delivered to party of the first part, the possession and control thereof by party of the second part shall be that of a trustee for the use and benefit of the party of the first part, and not otherwise.

"Default. If party of second part fails, refuses, or neglects to make due and prompt settlement, or performs or permits given for the purchase price of the property, on the ground that he never obtained the ownership of the property, as it had thereafter been taken from him on the mortgage.

So, a mortgage by the buyer of chattels sold conditionally to the seller, covering such chattels, constitutes an admission by the parties to the mortgage that the title to the property was in the mortgagee at the time of its execution, and the loss of the property thereafter by fire falls on the buyer. American Soda Fountain Co. v. Blue, 146 Ala. 682, 40 So. 218; Blue v. American Soda Fountain Co. 150 Ala. 165, 43 So. 709.

A somewhat different question is presented as to the effect of taking a mortgage upon property conditionally sold, as well as other property, contemporaneously with the execution of a contract of sale, wherein title is reserved in the seller. While the Bierce Case held the fact that additional security was taken contemporaneously with the execution of the contract of sale did not affect the validity of the reservation of title, yet the specific question was not presented or considered as to whether the contemporaneous execution of a mortgage upon the property purchased would be so inconsistent with the theory of a conditional sale as to invalidate the reservation.

Champanois v. Tinsley, 90 Miss. 38, 42 So. 89, held that taking a contemporaneous trust deed upon property sold and other property did not operate to divest the seller of the title reserved by him, and vest it in the buyer. In reaching this conclusion, the court distinguished between waiving a lien, and a seller of chattels waiving his title expressly reserved by him, saying that the doctrine of implied waiver could only be invoked to defeat implied liens, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) but that, where there was an express contract that the title be retained in the vendor, it was not waived by him by implication, because he took the additional security of a trust deed.

So, the right of a buyer of chattels on conditional sale to take advantage of the statute requiring the seller to return a portion of the money paid on such a contract under certain circumstances is not affected by the fact that he executed to the seller a chattel mortgage on the goods purchased, contemporaneously with the purchase. Speyer v. Baker, 59 Ohio St. 11, 51 N. E. 442. To the same effect is Richcreek v. O'Donnell, 26 Ohio C. C. 528. The foregoing cases were influenced by the language of the statute referred to, and can hardly be said to be authority on the general question uninfluenced by statutory provisions.

This question was presented in Silver Bow Min. & Mill. Co. v. Lowry, 6 Mont. 288, 12 Pac. 652, and it was held that taking a mortgage on other property, to secure the payment of conditional sale notes of even date with the mortgage, was inconsistent with the theory of a conditional sale, since, if the sale was merely conditional, the taking of a mortgage on other property would be utterly useless. The sale was accordingly held to have been an absolute one.

And in C. Aultman & Co. v. Silha, 85 Wis. 359, 55 N. W. 711, citing the Lowry Case with approval, it was held that the contemporaneous execution of a mortgage upon the property purchased and other property to secure notes of even date, which contained a stipulation to pay the balance remaining after a foreclosure, was inconsistent with the idea of a conditional sale, although the purchase-price notes contained a reservation of title in the vendor.

a breach of this contract in any respect, or if party of first part receives information concerning party of second part derogatory to his credit, financial standing, or reputation, and upon the termination of this contract, through the lapse of time or otherwise, party of the first part may demand, and shall be entitled to receive forthwith from party of second part, the possession of all machines and parts thereof, and extras and repairs, and all proceeds, of whatsoever nature or kind, from the resale by party of second part of any machines or parts thereof, by him received under this contract, without reimbursing party of the second part for any claim for storage, handling, freight, express, insurance, or any other charge, of whatsoever nature or kind. Party of first part in such case shall reduce such proceeds to cash, and apply the same, after deducting actual expenses in so doing, to the payment of the indebtedness due it from the party of the second part, and shall deliver the surplus, if any, to party of the second part."

Subsequently, in August, 1906, the parties had a settlement, required by the terms of the contracts. The books of the parties agreed, and showed that the first party had delivered to second party, under the contracts, goods to the value of $15,653.07. At said settlement second party paid first party $2,048.92 in cash, being the cash received from the sale of goods. At the same time second party executed to first party four promissory notes,—one for $4,787.15, one for $2,456. (which notes represented goods sold by second party on credit), one note for $3,500, and one note for $2,861; said last two notes representing the value of goods on hand and unsold by second party. At the time of said settlement second party gave to first party, as collateral security for the two notes representing goods sold on credit by second party, notes and mortgages aggregating the sum of $5,322.84, of which amount $3,308.84 were notes and securities of second party, which were not taken and received by it for goods so sold. In October following, proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy were instituted against said Western Implement Company, and in December following it was duly adjudged a bankrupt, and defendants took appointed trustees. The trustees took possession of the goods unsold, and the Monitor, Drill Company demanded the delivery of said goods to it by the trustees. Being refused, it filed its petition with the referee in bankruptcy for an order upon the trustees to deliver the portion of the goods which it had delivered to the bankrupt under the provisions of said contracts,* and which remained unsold. A hearing was had, the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) referee held said contracts evidenced not conditional, but absolute, sales, the interest of petitioner being that of an equitable mortgagee, that as mortgages they were void under the laws of Minnesota, and denied the prayer of the petition. An appeal was taken to the district court, where the decision of the referee was affirmed. From the judgment of the district court this appeal has been prosecuted.

The principal question involved is whether said contracts constituted an absolute sale by the Monitor Drill Company to the Western Implement Company of the property in question, or whether said contracts evidenced a conditional sale only of the property. The chief features of the case were disposed of by this court in the case of Dunlop v. Mercer, 86 C. C. A. 435, 156 Fed. 545, where it was held that a contract nearly similar in its terms, entered into by the bankrupt with the Waterbury-Zimmer Implement Company, evidenced a conditional sale. In that case it was said: "The agreement has every element of a conditional sale,—a vendor, a vendee, agreed prices, an obligation of the vendee to pay them, an obligation of the vendor that upon condition that the vendee pays the agreed prices, but not otherwise, the title of the vendor shall vest in the purchaser. Thus it evidenced a sale in which the vesting of the title in the vendee was made subject to a condition precedent, and it became a contract of conditional sale."

So in this case there was a vendor, a vendee, agreed prices, obligation on the part of the defendant to pay them, obligation of the vendor that, upon condition that the vendee paid the agreed price, but not otherwise, the title of the vendor should vest in the purchaser.

It is said on the part of counsel for the trustees that, if the provision in the contracts in question above quoted under the title "Default" were eliminated, the contracts might, under the decision of this court, constitute conditional sales. It is claimed, however, on the part of the trustee, that such provision in the contracts qualifies the other provision quoted under the head "Conditions," so that, by construing the two provisions together, the contracts were not of conditional sale only, but constituted an absolute sale, giving to the vendor only an equitable lien. The portion of the contract above quoted under the heading "Conditions" is clear, specific, and unambiguous to the effect that the title to the property shall remain in vendor until fully paid for, and evidences clearly a contract of conditional sale only. The portion of the contracts quoted under the heading "Default," which authorizes the vendor under certain conditions to retake possession of the unsold portion of the property, in no way qualifies the conditional sale feature of the contract. The taking of the notes for the purchase price, and the taking of collateral security, did not in any way qualify the conditional sale features of the contracts. This was expressly held in William W. Bierce v. Hutchins, 205 U. S. 340, 51 L. ed. 828, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524.

The provision authorizing the vendor to take possession of proceeds of whatever nature derived from the sale of the portion of said property sold by said party of the second part, and reduce such proceeds to cash, and apply the same, after deducting the expenses of so doing, to the indebtedness due from the party of the second part, and deliver the surplus, if any, to second party, does not qualify in any respect the title to the portion of such property remaining unsold. This is fully established in Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 30 L. ed. 285, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 51, and William W. Bierce v. Hutchins, supra. If the taking of such collateral security did not destroy or qualify the conditional sale feature of the contracts, as was said in the last-cited case, then we fail to perceive how the converting into cash of the securities obtained upon sales, and applying the same upon the notes of second party, would have such effect.

It is to be borne in mind that the contracts before us do not provide that the portion of the property remaining unsold, if retaken by the party of the first part, shall be sold and the proceeds applied upon the notes given by the second party. There is no provision in the contracts requiring the first party to make a sale or other disposal of the portion of the property remaining unsold which it could retake. But it is urged that the effect of the settlement in August was a novation of contract. Such contention has no force, as it was provided in the contract that a settlement should be had and notes given as was done. It would only be natural for the parties, even when the sale was conditional, to provide that at the close of the sale season a settlement should be made and an account taken to determine what portion of the goods had been sold by second party, and an adjustment made with respect thereto.

It is true this settlement was not made on or before June 1 as stipulated in the contracts, but was made August 25 following, and that at such settlement a special conditional sale agreement, covering unsold machines, was not given as stipulated; but in view of the clear, specific, and unambiguous terms of the provision headed "Conditions," we think neither of these matters operated to take from the original contract the characteristics of a conditional sale, so clearly stamped upon it by that provision. Parties may modify parts of a contract without affecting the remainder.

It was alleged in the answer of the trustees that they were informed and believed that, at the time said contracts were executed, it was understood and agreed by the parties thereto that the same should have no force and effect except in the event of the financial embarrassment, insolvency, or bankruptcy of second party, in which latter event it was understood and agreed that the first party (petitioner) should claim said merchandise, or the proceeds thereof, under the purported claim of title evidenced by said agreements. Of this contention that the contracts were tainted with fraud, no allusion has been made in the briefs, and we would be warranted in concluding that the same was abandoned; but we have carefully examined the evidence and record, and think the contention not tenable. The contracts being conditional sales, the failure to properly acknowledge and record them is not fatal, because the state-recording statutes render such agreements voidable only against creditors who have a lien on the property, and here no creditor had a lien prior to the bankruptcy proceedings.

It follows that the decree of the District Court must be reversed, with directions to set aside the order of the referee and to direct the trustees to surrender to the Monitor Drill Company the property in question.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

HAROLD JOHNSON et al., Reapts.,

v.

JOHN FEHSEFELDT, Appt.

(106 Minn. 202, 118 N. W. 797.)

Entire contract—part performance—recovery.

1. Where a contract is entire, and one party, not in default, is willing to complete its performance, the other party, who abandons the contract or refuses to

Headnotes by JAGGARD, J.

Case Note.—Contract which fixes compensation at a certain amount per unit of work done, as entire or severable.

Cases involving contracts of sale have been excluded from this note. Although numerous cases seem to consider that such cases are governed by the same rules as cases of the character indicated in the title perform it, cannot recover, on the contract or on a quantum meruit, the value of the labor he has expended in its partial performance.

Severable contract—price per unit.

2. The mere fact that a price has been affixed to each bushel of a crop contracted to be threshed is not sufficient to make it severable.

Entire contract—abandonment—recovery.

3. In this case it is held that, whether an agreement to thresh grain for a specified price was to thresh an entire crop or an indefinite number of bushels was a question of fact; and that, if the contract should prove to be an entire one, the thresherman, who abandoned the contract before all the grain had been threshed, because it was being performed at a loss, cannot recover, on the contract or on a quantum meruit, the agreed price of the number of bushels actually threshed.

(December 11, 1908.)

to this note, yet it might well be argued that, where a portion of the goods under a contract of sale has been delivered, the failure to deliver the balance does not, necessarily at least, tend to render the portion delivered of less value, as would be the effect of the failure to complete the performance of some piece of work upon the portion of work already completed. For the same reason, contracts for a general work, for a specified period of time, but not for a specified piece of work, have been excluded.

Cases falling within the scope of this note are not harmonious,—some following the doctrine of JOHNSON v. FEHSEFELDT, and holding that such contracts are entire, while others follow the contrary doctrine, that such contracts are severable, and there may be a recovery upon a quantum meruit.

Frequently the cases may be distinguished by some particular provision of the contract in question, or some other peculiar feature of the case; but numerous cases have clearly enunciated contrary doctrines.

Thus, in McMillan v. Malloy, 10 Neb. 228, 35 Am. Rep. 471, 4 N. W. 1004, a contract very similar in all respects to the one in JOHNSON v. FEHSEFELDT was held to be severable, and the plaintiff recovered for the value of the services performed, less any damages sustained by the defendant by reason of the breach of contract. The court said: "We are aware that there are a large number of cases, most of them tried in courts having no equity powers, holding that no recovery can be had in such case. These decisions are placed upon the ground that the contract is entire, and that no recovery can be had on the contract until the plaintiff has performed his part of the same. And, where a contract is entire and indivisible, and payment is to be made only after full performance, no action can be maintained on part performance. But, when the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Grant County denying a motion for a new trial after verdict for plaintiffs in an action brought to recover for services rendered under a contract to thresh defendant's grain. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. N. J. Bothne and James B. Ormond, for appellant:

The agreement was an entire contract, requiring full performance before payment of the consideration was due.

Widman v. Gay, 104 Wis. 277, 80 N. W. 450; Prautsch v. Rasmussen, 133 Wis. 181, 113 N. W. 416; Hansell v. Erickson, 28 Ill. 257; Kopitz v. Powell, 56 Wis. 671, 14 N. W. 831; Lantry v. Parks, 8 Cow. 63; Badgley v. Heald, 9 Ill. 64.

Recovery cannot be had for services rendered in part performance of an entire contract unless a valid excuse for not fully performing is shown.

Griger v. Leppel, 42 Minn. 6, 43 N. W.

contract is susceptible of division, and its entirety has been destroyed by part performance, from which the other party has derived a benefit, the law raises an implied promise to pay to the extent of the benefit received; and an action may be maintained thereon after the time has expired for the completion of the contract." And to the same effect was the decision in Sawyer v. Brown, 17 Neb. 171, 22 N. W. 355, where the plaintiff agreed to plow a field for the defendant at a fixed amount per acre.

So, in Bianchi v. Maggini, 17 Nev. 322, 30 Pac. 1004, the plaintiff agreed to cut all the wood on defendant's premises and burn it into charcoal and deliver it to defendant at so much per bushel. In an action for the contract price, the court said: "If the respondents had not cut all the wood, this fact could have been pleaded, and damages, if any resulted from the failure, recovered as an offset; but it could not, under the circumstances of this case, be urged as an absolute defense to the action. The fourth instruction given by the court, at the request of plaintiffs, to wit: 'Even if you should believe, from the evidence in this case, that there was wood left upon the ranch where this coal was burned which the plaintiffs could have reduced into coal, this constitutes no defense in this action, brought to recover the contract price for the coal actually burned, unless the defendants have established, to your satisfaction, that the alleged failure of the plaintiffs damaged them, and then only to the extent of the damages'—was correct; and the court did not err in refusing to give the instructions asked upon this point by defendants."

And in Jordan v. Fitz, 63 N. H. 227, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for the timber hauled at the contract price, less the amount of defendant's damages for failure to haul the remainder.

A contract to haul all the wood from a 484; Von Heyne v. Tompkins, 89 Minn. 77, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 524, 93 N. W. 901; Elliott v. Caldwell, 43 Minn. 357, 9 L.R.A. 52, 45 N. W. 845; Peterson v. Mayer, 46 Minn. 468, 13 L.R.A. 72, 49 N. W. 245; Nelichka v. Esterly, 29 Minn. 146, 12 N. W. 457; Kohn v. Fandel, 29 Minn. 470, 13 N. W. 904.

The respondents cannot recover upon a quantum meruit because they failed fully to perform the contract.

Olmstead v. Beale, 19 Pick. 528; Cohn v. Plumer, 88 Wis. 622, 60 N. W. 1000; Elliott v. Caldwell and Kriger v. Leppel, supra; Galvin v. Prentice, 45 N. Y. 162, 6 Am. Rep. 58.

Messrs. F. W. Murphy and F. C. Anderson, for respondents:

The contract was severable, and recovery should be allowed on quantum meruit.

Katz v. Bedford, 77 Cal. 319, 1 L.R.A. 826, 19 Pac. 523; Parsons, Contr. 29; Cunningham v. Morrell, 10 Johns. 203, 6 Am. Dec.

lot, at so much per cord, was by implication held to be severable in Bailey v. Marden, 193 Mass. 277, 79 N. E. 257.

And in Katz v. Bedford, 77 Cal. 319, 1 L.R.A. 826, 19 Pac. 523, it was held that a contract is not entire, so as to prevent a recovery upon a quantum meruit, which provides for the laying of a sidewalk a specified number of feet wide, but does not state the number of feet in length. While it does not expressly appear that the work was to be done at so much per foot, it is clearly inferable from the language of the opinion that such was the fact.

Where the defendant contracted to run the plaintiff's sawmill in a workmanlike manner, and was to receive a certain amount per 1,000 feet for sawing the lumber, it was held, in Swift v. Harriman, 30 Vt. 607, that, in an action of assumpsit for a breach of contract to carry on the mill in a workmanlike manner, the defendant could claim in offset the balance due him for his earnings under the contract.

So, in Gilman v. Hall, 11 Vt. 510, 34 Am. Dec. 709, it was held that a plaintiff who contracted to build a wall of certain dimensions, at a fixed price per rod, could recover on a quantum meruit for the work done, although he did not complete the entire wall in the manner required by the contract.

And, in Voss v. Varden, 1 Cranch, C. C. 410, Fed. Cas. No. 17,016, in an action to recover for laying brick at so much per 1,000, the court refused to charge the jury that there could be no recovery at all if some of the brick were not laid in a workmanlike manner, as required by contract.

Where a piece of work was being done for the defendant by the plaintiff and another, and, when plaintiff came to quit work, the defendant treated the contract as severable, measured the work, and found what was due the plaintiff for his share of the work, and agreed to pay him as soon as the other con-

332; Andrews v. Durant, 11 N. Y. 35, 62 Am. Dec. 55; Goodspeed v. Fuller, 46 Me. 141, 71 Am. Dec. 572; Miner v. Bradley, 22 Pick. 457; Morse v. Brackett, 98 Mass. 205; Perkins v. Hart, 24 U. S. 237, 6 L. ed. 463; Hindrey v. Williams, 9 Colo. 371, 12 Pac. 436.

Where an employer actually receives benefit from the labor performed on the contract, over and above the damages occasioned by failure to complete, he should pay the reasonable worth for what has been done for his benefit.

Britton v. Turner, 6 N. H. 481, 26 Am. Dec. 713; Riech v. Bolch, 68 Iowa, 526, 27 N. W. 507; Clough v. Clough, 26 N. H. 24; McMillan v. Malloy, 10 Neb. 228, 35 Am. Rep. 471, 4 N. W. 1004; Pixler v. Nichols, 8 Iowa, 106, 74 Am. Dec. 298; White v. Gray, 4 Ill. App. 228; Cohen v. Stewart, 98 N. C. 98, 3 S. E. 716; Matthews v. Jenkins, 80 Va. 463; Scofield v. Grow, 63 Vt. 283, 22 Atl. 457; Baeder v. Carine, 44 N.

tractor finished the work, it was held, in Sullivan v. Grass Valley Quartz Mill. & Min. Co. 77 Cal. 418, 19 Pac. 757, that the plaintiff had a separate cause of action for the amount thus found due him, and the defendant could not shield himself from liability to him by payment to the other contractor, even though the original contract might have been entire.

In Spear v. Snider, 29 Minn. 463, 13 N. W. 910, the plaintiff and defendant entered into a written agreement whereby the former undertook to bore and curb five wells for the latter at a dollar per foot, and to furnish for the same pipe at 35 cents per foot and other appliances at prices specified for each; it was further stipulated in the agreement that, in case of failure to get a good supply of water, plaintiff should have no pay. The court held that the agreement was not an entire one, to be performed for a lump price, but it was an agreement for the performance of a part of which the plaintiff was entitled to recover; as, for instance, for the completion of a single well. The court, however, did not pass upon the question whether a recovery might be had by the plaintiff for labor in boring a portion of a well.

In Perkins v. Locke (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 783, a contract for the building of a railroad provided that, when any 5 miles were ready for the rolling stock, mortgage bonds were to be issued in payment thereof; and the contract was to be forfeited if any part thereof should not be completed and equipped. And it was held that the contract was severable, and the contractor could enforce the payment for each 5 miles completed, although the railroad had not been completed. And to the same effect was the decision in Wright v. Petrie, Smedes & M. Ch. 282.

But the contrary doctrine was upheld in Gruetznar v. Aude Furniture Co. 28 Mo. App. 263, where the plaintiff contracted to

J. L. 208; Leeds v. Little, 42 Minn. 414, 44 N. W. 309; Elliott v. Caldwell, 43 Minn. 357, 9 L.R.A. 52, 45 N. W. 845.

The party sued is fully protected by his claims for damage.

Brinkley v. Swicegood, 65 N. C. 626; Rogers v. Parham, 8 Ga. 190; Moulton v. Trask, 9 Met. 577; Madden v. Porterfield, 53 N. C. (8 Jones, L.) 166.

Jaggard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiffs and respondents, owners of a threshing outfit, entered into a verbal agreement with defendant and appellant to thresh defendant's grain, for which defendant agreed to pay the sum of 10 cents a bushel for wheat, 6 cents a bushel for oats, and 15 cents for flax. Plaintiffs contend that this case involved an agreement to thresh grain at so much per bushel; defendant, that it was to thresh all of his crop of grain. Upon the record, we are of the opinion that the question was one of fact. Pursuant to the agreement, the plaintiffs threshed a portion of the crop. Before the entire crop had been threshed, plaintiffs hauled their threshing machine away from defendant's premises and refused to thresh more, for the reason that they were losing money. There was testimony tending to show that there were some 300 acres of grain left in shock, which plaintiffs neglected and refused to thresh. Defendant then completed the threshing of his grain through other parties. Subsequently plaintiffs filed threshers' liens. The court directed a verdict in effect for the plaintiffs for the work and threshing they had done, at the agreed price per bushel. A motion for a new trial was denied, provided the plaintiffs stipulated for a reduction of the verdict. The stipulation was filed. The court thereupon denied the motion for a new trial, from which appellant appealed.

For present purposes, and for them only, it must and will be assumed, upon a construction most favorable to the defeated party, that plaintiffs agreed to thresh all of defendant's crop. The essential question is whether the contract was entire and indivisible, in the sense that plaintiffs could not recover upon a quantum meruit, or upon the contract to the extent to which it had been performed. On principle, we are of opinion that plaintiffs could not recover. When they found that they were operating at a loss, they had the option to complete the contract, recover the contract price, and submit to the loss, or to abandon the contract, lose the work they had done, and be subject to whatever damages might be recoverable for the breach of the contract. The fact that plaintiffs had rendered services, the value of which defendant retained, did not entitle plaintiffs to recover on quantum meruit, because of the contract and of the inability of defendant to return the services. "As said in Galvin v. Prentice, 45 N. Y. 162, 6 Am. Rep. 58: 'When the contract is entire, and one party is willing to complete the performance and is not in default, no promise can be implied on his part to compensate the other party for a part performance.' Certainly it ought to be so where the failure to fully perform is due wholly to the fault of such other party." Kriger v. Leppel, 42 Minn. 6, 43 N. W. 484. And see Nelichka v. Esterly, 29 Minn. 146, 12 N. W. 457; Kohn v. Fandel, 29 Minn. 470, 13 N. W. 904.

It would be obviously inconsistent with common justice that plaintiffs should recover pro tanto, on the contract which they had substantially violated. They were in the wrong. They were not in a position to say to defendant: "We will perform the contract we have agreed to if it prove profitable. If we find it unprofitable, we will abandon it." That would be to contradict the contract. Such reasoning is forbid-make a certain number of articles at a fixed price per piece, and it was held that, when the plaintiff abandoned the contract, leaving some of the pieces unfinished, he could not recover upon a quantum meruit.

So, in M'Millan v. Vanderlip, 12 Johns. 165, 7 Am. Dec. 299, it was held that a contract to work for a certain number of months, and spin yarn at so much per run, was an entire contract, and must be performed as a condition precedent before an action could be brought for the price of any labor performed.

And an agreement to clear a certain number of acres of land, at so much per acre, was held entire in Jennings v. Camp, 13 Johns. 94, 7 Am. Dec. 367.

And a contract to furnish three slaves, at a fixed sum per month, to work upon a 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

railroad until it was completed, was held to be entire in White v. Brown, 47 N. C. (2 Jones, L.) 403, where it contained no stipulation as to the time when the payments were to be made.

So, a contract to publish an advertisement, to appear in each issue of plaintiff's magazine for a year, at a fixed price per issue, was held an entire contract in Munsey v. Tadella Pen Co. 2 N. Y. Anno. Cas. 371, 38 N. Y. Supp. 169, and no recovery could be had for payment for any issue until the contract had been fulfilled.

A contract to dig a well at so much per foot for the first 500 feet, and for an increasing price as the depth became greater, the well to be put in a good finished order, was held to be entire in Stewart v. Weaver, 12 Ala. 538.

den by its terms. Defendant did not agree in advance to a breach of the contract, and to accept in lieu of performance the requirement that he pay plaintiffs for what they had done under the contract, and, for the balance, to accept the right to try damages before a jury. Such speculation on the part of the plaintiffs, it would be unreasonable to permit. It is well settled in this state that the failure to perform an entire contract ordinarily defeats the right to recover on the contract. Atwater, J., said in Mason v. Heyward, 3 Minn. 182, Gil. 116, 122: "Where a party wilfully, or without cause, refuses to complete a contract which he has made, and upon the execution of which he has entered, courts should never interfere to protect him from the consequences of his own wrong." It is true that where, as in building contracts, there is a substantial performance, the court will not permit the owner of the land to retain the fruits of the labor, and refuse to pay for it. Leeds v. Little, 42 Minn. 414, 44 N. W. 309. It is equally clear, however, that where there has been an intentional failure to complete the contract, or a departure so substantial as to be incapable of a remedy, there can be no partial recovery. Elliott v. Caldwell, 43 Minn. 357, 9 L.R.A. 32, 45 N. W. 845; Hoglund v. Sortedahl, 101 Minn. 359, 112 N. W. 408. This view accords with prevailing authority. "A partial performance may be a defense pro tanto, or it may sustain an action pro tanto; but this can be only in cases where the duty to be done consists of parts which are distinct and severable in their own nature, and are not bound together by expressions giving entirety to the contract. It is not enough that the duty to be done is in itself severable, if the contract contemplates it only as a whole." Parsons, Contr. * 658, *659. "The mere fact that . . . the value is ascertained by the price affixed to each pound or yard or bushel of the quantity contracted for will not be sufficient to render the contract severable." Parsons, Contr. *519.

Reversed, and a new trial granted.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

RE GEORGE W. HALL'S ESTATE.

C. R. DONALDSON, Exr., etc., of George W. Hall, Deceased,

v.

BOLT HALL et al., Respts.

MATILDA HALL, Intervener, Appt.

(106 Minn. 502, 119 N. W. 219.)

Will—implied revocation.

1. The common-law rule of implied revocation (N.S.)

ocation of wills by "changed conditions and circumstances" of the testator, arising subsequent to their execution, is affirmatively adopted as the law of this state by § 3665, Rev. Laws 1905.

Same—divorce settlement—effect.

2. A settlement of property rights between husband and wife, in anticipation of a divorce, by which the husband made over to the wife one third of all his property, coupled with the fact of divorce, revoked, by implication of law, a will theretofore executed by the husband, in and by which he devised and bequeathed to her the amount of property she so received on the settlement.

(January 15, 1909.)

APPEAL by intervener from a judgment of the District Court for McLeod County affirming a judgment of a probate court refusing to probate that part of the will of George W. Hall, deceased, under which intervener claims. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Daly & Barnard, for appellant:

The divorce of a testator from his wife after the making of his will does not revoke the will.

Re Brown (Iowa) 117 N. W. 263; Charlton v. Miller, 27 Ohio St. 298, 22 Am. Rep. 307; Jones's Estate, 211 Pa. 364, 69 L.R.A. 940, 107 Am. St. Rep. 581, 60 Atl. 915, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 221; Lindesmith v. Lindesmith, 96 Minn. 147, 104 N. W. 825.

Mr. W. C. Odell for respondents Hall et al.

Mr. F. R. Allen for respondent Donaldson.

Headnotes by BROWN, J.

Case Note — Settlement of property rights between husband and wife on account of divorce as implied revocation of will.

In adopting what would seem to be the better rule, namely, that a settlement between husband and wife in anticipation of a divorce impliedly revokes a will previously executed by the husband, the court, in RE HALL, cites and distinguishes what appear to be the only authorities coming properly within the scope of this note.

In Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545, 54 N. W. 699, the facts involved the execution by a husband and wife of mutual wills, each devising all property to the other; the wife took possession of both documents, and preserved them for several years, when a decree of divorce was rendered, and she destroyed her own will; at the time of the divorce a property settlement was had between them, and, in consideration of the husband's conveyance to her of certain personalty and realty, the wife released him from all demands of any

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts in this case, as disclosed by the findings of the trial court, are as follows: In 1893 George W. Hall, then a widower about fifty-six years of age, with several children, intermarried with Matilda Hall, appellant herein, who was about thirty years of age, and thereafter they continued to live together as husband and wife until some time in October, 1906, when a separation took place. No children were born to them. Subsequent to the marriage, in April, 1904, Hall duly made and executed his last will and testament, in and by which, after directing the payment of his just debts and funeral expenses, he granted, devised, and bequeathed "unto my wife, Matilda Hall, one third of the remainder of my property, both real and personal, which shall remain after the payment of my debts aforesaid," one sixth of what was left to certain daughters by his former wife, and the remainder, after the payment of certain specified legacies, to his sons of the former marriage. Thereafter, in October, 1906, Hall commenced an action for divorce, charging his wife with adultery, in which she answered, denying the charge made against her. During the pendency of this action the parties, guided by their attorneys, entered into certain negotiations for the settlement of their property rights in the event a divorce was granted in the pending action. By the arrangement then made Hall agreed to pay to his wife the sum of $4,225 in money, and to convey to her certain real estate in the city of Hutchinson, and the wife agreed to convey to him a small tract of land near Stewart, their place of residence. The deeds were duly executed, and the money so agreed to be paid delivered to a third person, to be by him delivered to the parties in accordance with the terms of the settlement immediately upon the entry of a decree of divorce. It was further understood and agreed, as a part of the settlement, that the wife should amend her answer in the divorce action by including therein a cross bill for a divorce against plaintiff on the general ground of his habitual drunkenness. Thereafter her answer was duly amended accordingly. The cause was brought on for trial, and resulted in a decree of divorce, based upon the allegations of defendant's cross bill. The settlement of the property rights was then completed by the payment to the wife of the money and the delivery of the deeds of the property referred to. This was completed on May 21, 1907. Mrs. Hall claimed no alimony on the final hearing of the divorce case, and the judgment therein awarded to her no pecuniary relief, not even the costs of the action. The amount received by Mrs. Hall on the settlement amounted to practically one third of the property then owned by Hall. Thereafter, on June 22, 1907, thirty days after the divorce and settlement, Hall, without having made any change or modification of his will, by which he gave to "my wife, Matilda Hall," one third of all his property, suddenly died. C. R. Donaldson was named in the will as executor, and he properly presented it to the probate court for allowance and probate. At the hearing of his petition certain of the children of deceased appeared and contested the allowance of that part of the will devising kind or nature, and it was stated in the agreement that the deeds executed were intended as a property settlement between them. In holding that the effect of the settlement was to revoke by implication the husband's will, the court said: "It is not, in my judgment, the natural presumption that, after the testator had settled with her, had conveyed to her a good share of his property, and they, by agreement, had terminated all their property, as well as their marital relations, the will executed nearly ten years before should remain in force, and operate, upon his death, as a conveyance of the remainder of his property to her, to the exclusion of his heirs."

But the Nebraska court, in Baacke v. Baacke, 50 Neb. 18, 69 N. W. 303, takes the opposite view, and holds that a settlement of a woman's property rights upon obtaining a divorce from her husband does not work a revocation of a will previously executed by the husband. The doctrine of revocation by implication of law was said by the court to be based upon a presumed alteration of intention, arising from the changed condition and circumstances of the testator, or on the presumption that the will would have been different had it been executed under altered circumstances. It was suggested that change of circumstances may work a partial revocation, but the court expressly refused to consider the effect of the settlement as a revocation of the wife's legacy because that question was not before it.

Again, in Re Brown (Iowa) 117 N. W. 260, there is a refusal to set aside a will on the theory of implied revocation, although there had been an agreement, in a divorce action, with respect to the property rights of the parties, providing that certain property awarded to the wife should be in full payment and satisfaction and discharge of all her interest in her husband's property. The Lansing Case, supra, is distinguished upon the ground that the decision reached in that instance was due to the peculiar circumstances of the case; viz., the making of two wills, the destruction of one, and the adjustment of property rights.

and bequeathing to Mrs. Hall one third of testator's property, on the ground that the will in that respect was, by the settlement and adjustment of the property rights of the parties in the divorce action, revoked and annulled by implication of law. Mrs. Hall also appeared as intervener, and claimed under the will. The probate court sustained the contention of contestants, holding that the provisions made for Mrs. Hall were revoked by operation of law; but admitted the balance of the will to probate. Mrs. Hall appealed to the district court, where the same conclusion was reached, and she then appealed to this court from an order of the district court denying her motion for a new trial.

The assignments of error challenge certain of the findings of the trial court, and raise the single question whether the divorce and property settlement operated by implication of law to revoke the provisions made in deceased's will for his wife. Our examination of the record leads to the conclusion that all the findings of fact are sustained by the evidence. It would serve no useful purpose to enter into an extended discussion of the evidence, and we therefore refrain.

We come, then, directly to the main question in the case; namely, whether Hall's will was, to the extent of the provisions therein made for his wife, revoked by implication of law. An express revocation of a will involves an inquiry into the intention of the testator, and generally the manner and what acts will constitute a revocation in fact are expressly prescribed by statute. Page, Wills, 272; 2 Current Law, p. 2091; Re Knapen, 75 Vt. 146, 98 Am. St. Rep. 808, 53 Atl. 1003. Rev. Laws, 1905, § 3665. At common law, certain changes in the condition and circumstances of the testator worked a revocation by implication; and it was formerly held that this was prima facie only, and open to rebuttal by proof that the testator intended his will to remain, notwithstanding the change in his circumstances. The rule, however, by all modern authorities, is that the presumption of law arising from the changed conditions is conclusive, and no evidence is admissible to rebut it. Mars-ton v. Roe, 8 Ad. & El. 14; Gay v. Gay, 84 Ala. 44, 4 So. 42; Hoitt v. Hoitt, 63 N. H. 498, 56 Am. Rep. 530, 3 Atl. 604; Hud-nall v. Ham, 183 Ill. 486, 48 L.R.A. 557, 75 Am. St. Rep. 124, 56 N. E. 172; 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 644, and cases cited. The rule had its origin with the ecclesiastical courts of England, and was later adopted as a part of the common law. 4 Kent, Com. 775; Brady v. Cubitt, 1 Dougl. K. B. 31. And it is the settled law in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

nearly all the states of this country, where not abrogated by statute. 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 643. Our statutes on the subject provide that no will shall be revoked, except in the manner there pointed out; namely, by some other writing executed by the testator with the same formalities with which the will itself is required to be executed, or by burning, obliterating, or destroying the same with the intention of revoking it, or by the destruction thereof by a third person at the request of the testator, and in the presence of witnesses. To these restrictions is added: "But nothing in this section shall prevent the revocation implied by law from subsequent change in the condition or circumstances of the testator,"—by which the common-law rule of implied revocation is affirmatively adopted as the law of this state. Rev. Laws 1905, § 3665.

Counsel for appellant do not contend that the common law is not in force in this state, but do claim that the facts here presented do not bring the case within the rule as properly understood and limited. There is much conflict in the adjudicated cases, both in England and in this country, as to the scope and limitations of the rule. In other words, authorities are not agreed respecting the character of the "change in the condition or circumstances of the testator" essential to give rise to the legal presumption of revocation. Some courts have restricted the rule to marriage and birth of issue in the case of a man, and mere marriage in the case of a woman. Wogan v. Small, 11 Serg. & R. 141; Jones's Estate, 211 Pa. 364, 69 L.R.A. 940, 107 Am. St. Rep. 581, 60 Atl. 915, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 221; Page, Wills, 280. Chancellor Kent gives a broad and comprehensive definition of the rule in the following language: Implied revocations "are founded upon the reasonable presumption of an alteration of the testator's mind, arising from circumstances since the making of the will, producing a change in his previous obligations and duties." 4 Kent, Com. 521. While cases involving a changed condition resulting from the marriage of the testator or testatrix have been before the courts most frequently, and new conditions so brought about have received the most attention, the authorities generally do not limit the application of the rule to a state of affairs thus created. To restrict the rule to such cases would narrow and unduly circumscribe its purpose. The different conditions which bring the rule into operation are fully given, and authorities cited, in a valuable note to Graham v. Burch, 28 Am. St. Rep. 344. It is there stated that a revocation by implication may result from a change in the property of the testator, or from a change in his family, as by marriage, or in the beneficiaries named in his will. See also 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 644 et seq. Of course, a change in respect to property or family relations, resulting from the act of the testator, should be of a nature to justify the inference, arbitrary though it be, that he intended to revoke his will, either in whole or in part, or that a moral or legal duty not only would require but prompt a change in the disposition of his property from that made in the will. In other words, the rule, if accorded substance and merit, must serve the purpose of doing by implication what the testator should, in justice to those entitled to his bounty, have done had his attention been directly called to the matter after the change of circumstances, and before his death. The rule, it is true, has not generally been extended so far. At least, the tendency of the reported cases has been to restrict, rather than enlarge, its scope. It was formerly held that the marriage of a man did not, at common law, revoke his will, whether executed before marriage or during the continuance of a previous marriage. Christopher v. Christopher, 4 Burr. 2182; Bowers v. Bowers, 53 Ind. 430; Goodsell's Appeal, 55 Conn. 171, 10 Atl. 557. But that doctrine has been modified, either by statute or decisions of the courts, both in England and the several states in this country. While, within the application of the rule, the marriage of a man did not of itself revoke his pre-existing will, his marriage and birth of issue did so operate. Note to Young's Appeal, 80 Am. Dec. 518. The marriage of a woman, however, has always been held to revoke her will, without reference to the birth of issue; and this because of her legal incapacity after marriage to dispose of her property. But this has also been changed by statute. Kelly v. Stevenson, 85 Minn. 247, 56 L.R.A. 754, 89 Am. St. Rep. 545, 88 N. W. 739. But, as already suggested, the courts are not in full harmony in defining the scope of the "changed conditions or circumstances" giving rise to the rule of implied revocation.

Counsel for appellant in the case at bar insist that it should be limited to such changes as arise from the marriage of the man and the subsequent birth of issue, and to that arising from the marriage of the woman with or without subsequent issue. If we adopt counsel's suggestion, and limit the rule to the instances mentioned, then the saving clause of the statute above quoted would have nothing whatever to act upon; for by § 3686, Rev. Laws 1905, it is expressly declared that the marriage of the testator—and this necessarily includes man or woman—shall revoke a previously executed will. No reference is made to the birth of issue. Simple marriage annuls a previous testamentary disposition of property. So that, if counsel's contention be sound, the clause in § 3685, reserving the common-law rule of revocation by implication, would serve no purpose. We must therefore look further, and inquire whether the facts here disclosed—the divorce and property settlement—bring the case within the rule.

Very few cases are found where the precise question has been presented or decided, though it seems to be settled that a divorce alone does not revoke a previously executed will. Re Brown (Iowa) 117 N. W. 260; Baacke v. Baacke, 50 Neb. 21, 69 N. W. 303; Charlton v. Miller, 27 Ohio St. 298, 22 Am. Rep. 307; Jones's Estate, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 221, and note; Card v. Alexander, 48 Conn. 492, 40 Am. Rep. 187; Re Boddington, L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 597, L. R. 25 Ch. Div. 685. It is probable that a divorce granted at the suit of the wife, with alimony expressly decreed to be in lieu of all her rights in the property of the husband, testamentary and otherwise, would, by implication of law, revoke the will of her husband in so far as it made provision for her (1 Underhill, Wills, 263, though Re Brown, supra, seems to hold otherwise. Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545, 54 N. W. 699, and Baacke v. Baacke, 50 Neb. 18, 69 N. W. 303, are the only cases to which our attention has been called where facts like those in the case at bar have been passed upon. In the Michigan case it was held that when, at the time a decree of divorce is granted, the parties to the action settle and adjust their property rights by mutual agreement, without mentioning wills theretofore made by them, the decree of divorce and settlement constituted an implied revocation of the will so theretofore made. The court there remarked that, by the decree of divorce and property settlement, the parties became strangers to each other, neither thereafter owing to the other either legal or moral obligations or duties; and that there was therefore a complete change in their relations, within the rule of implied revocation of wills. The Nebraska case holds to the contrary; but the decision is apparently upon the theory of a strict application of the rule; and the fact of the property settlement appears not to have been deemed of much consequence. Careful reflection and consideration of the subject leads us to the rule of the Michigan court. It appears to us more in accord with the reason and basis of the law, in harmony with the elementary rule of right and wrong, conflicts with no equitable or substantial right of the woman in such case, and is opposed only by a strict adherence to some of the older views on the subject, based, however, upon the commendable purpose of sustaining the directions of a person respecting the disposition of his property, left in the form of a solemnly executed will, who, by reason of his death, is no longer able to speak for himself, or give further orders or directions in that behalf.

We recognize the importance of upholding the last wills of deceased persons, and we recognize the wisdom, also, of the rule of implied revocations by a change in the condition and circumstances of the testator. If the rule can have any proper or legitimate application in any case, it would seem to cover a case of this kind. Here the testator brought suit against his wife, charging her with adultery. He was then an old man, seventy years of age; and, with a view to a severance of all relations with his wife, he entered into an agreement by which she was to procure a divorce without contest by him, upon the consummation of which he made over to her in property and money practically what she would have received under the previously executed will, had he then died, and precisely what she would have received under the statute had he died intestate. He in effect withdrew his charge of infidelity, and voluntarily settled upon her all she could or would have received under the will. He died within thirty days thereafter, without having changed his will, and the wife now comes into court asking for another third of his property, leaving the remainder, or one third, to his children by his first wife. If this is not a change of his condition and circumstances, within the meaning of the law, then the rule of implied revocation upon that ground is really without much substance or merit. His obligations to his wife, legal, moral, or otherwise, wholly ceased at the time of the divorce and settlement. By the settlement he fully discharged all legal duties; and the inference that he intended the allowance in full of all future rights ought, in justice and good conscience, to be the legal conclusion. We so hold. Whether the fact that the testator in such a case permits his will to remain unchanged by express revocation for a number of years after the divorce and settlement would militate against the conclusion of implied revocation we need not determine. Testator in this case died within thirty days after the settlement, and his failure expressly to revoke within that time certainly creates no inference that he intended his will to continue in force.

The case of Re Brown, supra, wherein the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Iowa supreme court held that a decree of divorce, with an award of alimony to the wife, was not an implied revocation of the will of the husband, is not in point. The court distinguishes that from the Michigan case on the ground that the property settlement was not the voluntary act of the husband, and therefore no legitimate basis for an inference of an intention on his part to revoke his former will.

Order affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

FRANK W. SHAW et al., Respts.,

v.

MILTON R. STAIGHT, Impleaded, etc.,
Appt.

(— Minn. —, 119 N. W. 951.)

Corporate stock — issuance below par — validity.

1. Shares of stock in a corporation, issued and sold as full paid stock, but for a sum less than its par value, are not void, but the agreement between the holder and the corporation, that it shall be considered and treated as paid in full, is voidable as to the creditors of the corporation.

Same — holders — rights.

2. The holder of such stock, though he paid therefor less than the par value, may maintain an action to protect such rights as accrue to him as a stockholder.

Same — fraudulent issue — action by stockholder.

3. A request of the managing officers of a corporation to institute an action to set

Headnotes by BROWN, J.

Case Note. — Effect upon one's rights as a stockholder of the fact that paid-up stock was wrongfully issued to him for a sum less than its par value.

This note is confined to cases in which the holder of paid-up stock issued to him for a sum less than its par value, or a transferee of such original stockholder, attempts to exercise some right of a stockholder as such; and cases which involve the rights of such a holder or his transferee, who is also a creditor of the corporation, and seeks to enforce his rights as creditor, have been excluded.

It will be noted in SHAW v. STAIGHT that the court expressly holds that the stock was not void, but voidable only; and the decision turns upon this distinction, the court holding, or implying, at least, that, were the stock void, the action could not be maintained. In a number of cases where such stock is absolutely void under the provisions of the Constitution or a statute, it has been held that the holder of such stock has no rights as a stockholder which a court of equity will enforce.

Thus, in Hinckley v. Pfister, 83 Wis. 64.

aside and cancel a fraudulent issue of corporate stock, and their refusal, is all that is necessary to enable an individual stockholder to maintain the suit.

Same — condition precedent — request of stockholders.

4. It is not necessary that he go further, and request other stockholders to commence the action.

Same — fraudulent issue — evidence — sufficiency.

5. Evidence held to justify the findings of the trial court to the effect that an issue of 28,000 shares of the stock of defendant corporation was fraudulent and void.

Same — knowledge of holder — evidence — sufficiency.

6. And that defendant Staight, the holder of a part of the stock so issued, had full knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud, and was not a good-faith holder thereof.

(February 19, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant, Milton R. Staight, from a judgment of the District Court for Hennepin County canceling certain shares of stock alleged to have been fraudulently issued and transferred to him. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. D. Irwin, for appellant:

The complaining stockholders' cause of action is based upon and arises out of contracts or transactions to which they were 53 N. W. 21, in an action for the appointment of a receiver, and to have certain indebtedness of the corporation to plaintiff declared a lien upon the corporate property, it was held that, as the plaintiff's stock fell under the condemnation of the statute, and was void, as not having been fully paid for to the amount of the par value, he could not make any claim by means of it or through it to the aid or protection of a court of equity, based upon the rights of a stockholder.

And in Arkansas River Land, Town, & Canal Co. v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 13 Colo. 587, 22 Pac. 954, it was held that, under a statute which declares all fictitious stock to be void, stockholders who did not pay or agree to pay anything for their stock could not, as stockholders, maintain an action to restrain the directors from transferring the property of the corporation, for a receiver, etc. The court said: "Plaintiffs could maintain this action only by showing that they were shareholders and vested with contract rights, of which the stock certificates issued to them were the evidence, which they could enforce against the corporation itself. This they have utterly failed to do. On the contrary, by the express allegations of the complaint, it appears that they acquired the stock not only in fraud of the rights of the corporation, but in express violation of the constitutional mandate of the state, and of the provisions of the law under which the corporation was organized. The stock held by them is fictitious, within the meaning of the Constitution, and no rights can be predicated upon it, either in law or equity. The bill was therefore properly dismissed as to them."

In Robinson v. Dolores No. 2 Land & Canal Co. 2 Colo. App. 17, 29 Pac. 750, there was an inference that one who has not given any value for his stock cannot come into equity for the appointment of a receiver, to restrain waste, etc.; but the complaint was dismissed upon various other grounds.

But where the stock is not absolutely void by law, a number of cases apply the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

doctrine adopted in SHAW v. STAIGHT, and hold that a stockholder is not deprived of his rights as such, merely by the fact that his stock was issued as fully paid up when in fact it was not.

Thus, in Stewart v. Erie & W. Transp. Co. 17 Minn. 372, Gil. 348, it was held that, if the plaintiff was a legal stockholder, although not holding upon a bona fide cash subscription, his right to defend his interests in the corporation did not depend upon the manner of his acquiring his stock.

So, in Barcus v. Gates, 32 C. C. A. 337, 61 U. S. App. 596, 89 Fed. 783, the court said: "In the absence of a statute inflicting a penalty of some sort for issuing or receiving, as fully paid and nonassessable, shares for which less than their face value had been paid, or prohibiting its being done, we are not aware of any general principle which holds such a transaction to be fraudulent, or of moral turpitude, so as to prevent a party to such an act from having any standing in a court of equity." In this case a holder of watered stock sought a dissolution of the corporation upon the ground that it was fraudulently promoted, and a demurrer to the complaint was overruled.

And in Central Land Co. v. Sullivan, 152 Ala. 360, 44 So. 644, a bill by the trustee of a minority stockholder, to have the assets of the corporation distributed among the several stockholders, was entertained, although all of the stock, including plaintiff's, was issued in payment for property of much less value than the face of the stock.

In a number of cases it has been held, upon the general doctrine of estoppel, that a stockholder who has received stock for less than its face value cannot thereafter complain of the transaction.

Thus, in Washburn v. National Wall-Paper Co. 26 C. C. A. 312, 51 U. S. App. 380, 81 Fed. 17, it was held that a stockholder who received stock for the good will of a business which he had sold to the corporation was in no position thereafter to say that the good will had been overvalued.

parties, which were illegal, fraudulent, and against public policy, in that they bought their stock at a price below par, in violation of statute; and they are not entitled to equitable relief, as they do not come into court with clean hands.

Unckles v. Colgate, 148 N. Y. 529, 43 N. E. 59; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 397; Hastings Malting Co. v. Iron Range Brewing Co. 65 Minn. 28, 67 N. W. 652; Clarke v. Lincoln Lumber Co. 59 Wis. 655, 18 N. W. 492; Sturges v. Stetson, 1 Biss. 246, Fed. Cas. No. 13,568; Gamble v. Queens County Water Co. 123 N. Y. 91, 9 L.R.A. 527, 25 N. E. 201; Zelaya Min. Co. v. Meyer, 28 N. Y. S. R. 759, 8 N. Y. Supp. 487; Knowlton v. Congress & E. Spring Co. 57 N. Y. 518; Kimball v. New England Roller Grate Co. 69

N. H. 485, 45 Atl. 253; Oliphant v. Woodburn Coal & Min. Co. 63 Iowa, 332, 19 N. W. 212; Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Knowlton. 103 U. S. 49, 26 L. ed. 347; Melchoir v. McCarty, 31 Wis. 252, 11 Am. Rep. 605; State v. Great Northern R. Co. 100 Minn. 474, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 250, 111 N. W. 289; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assn. v. Mason, 44 Minn. 318, 9 L.R.A. 506, 20 Am. St. Rep. 580, 40 N. W. 558; Tracy v. Talmage, 14 N. Y. 162, 67 Am. Dec. 132; Hill v. Spear, 50 N. H. 253, 9 Am. Rep. 205; Weed v. Little Falls & D. R. Co. 31 Minn. 154, 16 N. W. 851; 2 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 393; 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 546-550; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 940; 1 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 226; Bisbee v. McAllen, 39 Minn. 143, 39 N. W. 299; Ingersoll v. Randall, 14 Minn. 400, Gil. 304;

So, in Wood v. Corry Waterworks Co. 12 L.R.A. 168, 44 Fed. 146, it was held that a stockholder could not, by injunction, restrain the foreclosure of a mortgage given to secure bonds, upon the ground that the bonds represented a fictitious increase of the stock and indebtedness, where his own stock was a part of the same transaction.

And, in the absence of fraud, a stockholder cannot restrain the payment of dividends upon the ground that the stock was issued for property which was overvalued, when his own stock was a part of the same issue. Goodnow v. American Writing Paper Co. (N. J. Ch.) 66 Atl. 607.

In Green v. Abietine Medical Co. 96 Cal. 322, 31 Pac. 100, it was held that a stockholder who had sold property to a corporation, and had received therefor paid-up stock at a certain per cent of its par value, could not complain of an assessment upon his stock, where all the other stock of the company, issued at the same per cent of its value, was likewise assessed.

Nor is his transferee in any better position. Thus, in Clark v. American Coal Co. 86 Iowa, 436, 17 L.R.A. 557, 53 N. W. 291, in an action by the transferee of certain stock to cancel certain other shares of stock, issued without consideration, it was held that, as the plaintiff's transferrer had received his stock upon the same terms as the defendant, the action could not be maintained, as a bona fide purchaser of corporate stock acquired no greater equities than belonged to his assignor.

And, in Venner v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 Fed. 581, the court said that it would be an anomaly for the transferee of stock issued below par to deny the validity of the act which gave birth to the stock which he held.

So, in Church v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 78 Fed. 526, it was held that the plaintiffs, although purchasers in good faith of stock issued below par, had no other or greater rights than their transferrer, and could not maintain an action to cancel the illegal stock.

20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

A transferee of stock originally issued fraudulently, for a sum less than its par value, cannot complain of the fraud. Gumaer v. Cripple Creek Tunnel, Transp. & Min. Co. 40 Colo. 1, 122 Am. St. Rep. 1024, 90 Pac. 81. And to the same effect was the decision in Boldenweck v. Bullis, 40 Colo. 253, 90 Pac. 634, where it was held that stockholders who vote in favor of a transaction, and their transferees, cannot maintain a suit on behalf of the corporation and other stockholders to avoid such a transaction.

A transferee of stock acquires no rights not possessed by his transferrer, and cannot maintain an action to cancel stock on the ground of its being issued without adequate consideration, where his transferrer received his stock in a similar way. Drake v. New York Suburban Water Co. 26 App. Div. 499, 50 N. Y. Supp. 826.

In Sivin v. Mutual Match Co. (N. J. Ch.) 66 Atl. 921, it was held that, so long as a company is a going concern, the court will not interfere on behalf of a stockholder who is in the same default, simply to compel another stockholder to pay up his unpaid stock, although, upon the plaintiff's purchase of his shares, he was informed that the defendant's shares were fully paid up.

But, in United Electric Securities Co. v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 68 Fed. 673, although the question was not before the court, it was suggested that, while a holder of stock issued without consideration could not maintain an action for the appointment of a receiver, a bona fide transferee might.

As to issuance of stock at a discount as affecting stockholders' liability for debts, see case note to Security Trust Co. v. Ford, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 263.

As to effect of creditor's knowledge that stock was improperly issued as fully paid upon his right to resort to holder of the same, see case note to Easton Nat. Bank v. American Brick & Tile Co. 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 271.

Buckley v. Humason, 50 Minn. 195, 16 L.R.A. 423, 36 Am. St. Rep. 637, 52 N. W. 385; Lindgren v. Lindgren, 73 Minn. 90, 75 N. W. 1034; Hamilton v. Wood, 55 Minn. 482, 57 N. W. 208; Evans v. Folsom, 5 Minn. 422, Gil. 342; Gammons v. Johnson, 76 Minn. 76, 78 N. W. 1035; Arkansas River Land, Town, & Canal Co. v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 13 Colo. 587, 22 Pac. 954; Hinckley v. Pfister, 83 Wis. 64, 53 N. W. 21; Edgerton v. Electric Improv. & Constr. Co. 50 N. J. Eq. 354, 24 Atl. 540; Kinner v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Ohio St. 339, 69 N. E. 614; McIntosh v. Wilson, 81 Iowa, 339, 46 N. W. 1003; 2 Parsons, Contr. p. 746; 2 Addison, Contr. § 1412; Chitty, Contr. 944; Arnot v. Pittston & E. Coal Co. 68 N. Y. 558, 23 Am. Rep. 190; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 620; Barnes v. Starr, 64 Conn. 155, 28 Atl. 980; Fitzgerald v. Forristal, 4 Ill. 228; Bolt v. Rogers, 3 Paige, 154; McVey v. Brendel, 144 Pa. 235, 13 L.R.A. 377, 27 Am. St. Rep. 625, 22 Atl. 912; Edward Thompson Co. v. American Law Book Co. 62 L.R.A. 607, 59 C. C. A. 148, 122 Fed. 922; Brown v. Duluth, M. & M. R. Co. 53 Fed. 889; Coppel v. Hall, 7 Wall. 555, 19 L. ed. 247; Collins v. Blanton, 2 Wils. 341, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 630; Broom, Legal Maxims, 732; Myers v. Meinrath, 101 Mass. 366, 3 Am. Rep. 368; Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195, 20 N. E. 213.

The allegation that the stock was "fraudulently and unlawfully issued" for no consideration is not an allegation of fact constituting fraud, unless the want of consideration constitutes fraud or illegality, without other facts; and consideration being proven, cancellation is improper.

Kraemer v. Deustermann, 37 Minn. 469, 35 N. W. 276; Cummings v. Thompson, 18 Minn. 246, Gil. 228; Kelley v. Wallace, 14 Minn. 236, Gil. 173; Webb v. Bidwell, 15 Minn. 419, Gil. 399; Knudson v. Curley, 30 Minn. 433, 15 N. W. 873; Smith v. Prior, 58 Minn. 247, 59 N. W. 1016; Rand v. Hennepin County, 50 Minn. 391, 52 N. W. 901; Bliss, Code Pl. 3d ed. § 211; McKibbin v. Ellingson, 58 Minn. 212, 49 Am. St. Rep. 493, 59 N. W. 1003; Hodsdon v. Hodsdon, 69 Minn. 486, 72 N. W. 562; 18 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 809.

The issuance of this stock and the contract by which it was issued were ratified and acquiesced in by the corporation and the stockholders.

2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 916, 965; Carlton v. Hulett, 49 Minn. 320, 51 N. W. 1053; Tilly v. Wolverton, 54 Minn. 75, 55 N. W. 822; Negley v. Lindsay, 67 Pa. 217, 5 Am. Rep. 427; Edwards v. Roberts, 7 Smedes & M. 544; Doherty v. Bell, 55 Ind. 205; St. John v. Hendrickson, 81 Ind. 350; St. Croix Lumber Co. v. Mittlestadt, 43 Minn. 91, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

44 N. W. 1079; 3 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. §§ 760, 764; Thomas v. Brownville, Ft. K. & P. R. Co. 109 U. S. 522, 27 L. ed. 1018, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 315; Bjorngaard v. Goodhue County Bank, 49 Minn. 487, 52 N. W. 48; Jones v. Morrison, 31 Minn. 140, 16 N. W. 854; Currie v. School Dist. No. 26, 35 Minn. 164, 27 N. W. 922; Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 135, 25 L. ed. 807; Taylor v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 4 Woods, 575, 13 Fed. 153; Credit Co. v. Arkansas C. R. Co. 5 McCrary, 23, 15 Fed. 53; Hayward v. Eliot Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 611, 24 L. ed. 855; Evers v. Watson, 156 U. S. 527, 39 L. ed. 520, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 430.

The complaining shareholders cannot maintain this action, as the bringing of an action to cancel the stock is a matter within the discretion of the board of directors; and, in the absence of fraud or bad faith on their part, their refusal is final.

2 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 543; Morrill v. Little Falls Mfg. Co. 46 Minn. 260, 48 N. W. 1124; Hawes v. Oakland (Hawes v. Contra Costa Water Co.) 104 U. S. 450, 26 L. ed. 827; Hodgson v. Duluth, H. & D. R. Co. 46 Minn. 454, 49 N. W. 197; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1095; Leslie v. Lorillard, 110 N. Y. 519, 1 L.R.A. 456, 18 N. E. 363; Dunphy v. Traveller Newspaper Asso. 146 Mass. 495, 16 N. E. 426; Gamble v. Queens County Water Co. supra; Figge v. Bergenthal, 130 Wis. 594, 109 N. W. 589, 110 N. W. 798; Theis v. Durr, 125 Wis. 651, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 571, 110 Am. St. Rep. 880, 104 N. W. 985; Hawes v. Oakland (Hawes v. Contra Costa Water Co.) 104 U. S. 450, 26 L. ed. 827.

The complaining stockholders, before bringing suit, were bound to apply to the other stockholders, or show such circumstances as would make such application useless.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 98; Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 544; Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare, 461; Hawes v. Oakland, supra; Corbus v. Alaska Treadwell Gold Min. Co. 187 U. S. 455, 47 L. ed. 256, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 157; Kessler v. Ensley Land Co. 123 Fed. 546; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Neal, 128 Ala. 149, 29 So. 865; Miller v. Murray, 17 Colo. 408, 30 Pac. 46; Chicago v. Cameron, 22 Ill. App. 91; Brewer v. Boston Theatre, 104 Mass. 378; Dunphy v. Traveller Newspaper Asso. supra; Morrill v. Little Falls Mfg. Co. 46 Minn. 265, 48 N. W. 1124; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 4th ed. § 740.

Messrs. Benton, Molyneaux, & Morley, for respondents:

The only persons who could object to a sale of the stock of the corporation at less than par would be the state, nonparticipating stockholders, and creditors.

Olson v. State Bank, 67 Minn. 267, 69 N. W. 904; Dunn v. State Bank, 59 Minn.

221, 61 N. W. 27; Barcus v. Gates, 32 C. C. A. 337, 61 U. S. App. 596, 89 Fed. 783; DePuy v. Transportation & Terminal Co. 82 Md. 408, 33 Atl. 889, 34 Atl. 910.

The transaction was fraudulent, and the shares should be canceled at the suit of the complaining stockholders.

McDermont v. Anaheim Union Water Co. 124 Cal. 112, 56 Pac. 779; Stebbins v. Perry County, 167 Ill. 567, 47 N. E. 1048; Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 400.

Application to the stockholders, or a showing of such circumstances as would make such application useless, is not necessary where the action is for the cancellation of stock fraudulently issued.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 978; Stebbins v. Perry County, supra; Kimball v. New England Roller Grate Co. 69 N. H. 485, 45 Atl. 253; Miner v. Beekman, 50 N. Y. 337; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. pp. 2115, 2124, 2125; Luther v. C. J. Luther Co. 118 Wis. 112, 99 Am. St. Rep. 977, 94 N. W. 69; Doud v. Wisconsin, P. & S. R. Co. 65 Wis. 115, 56 Am. Rep. 620, 25 N. W. 533; Wood v. Union Gospel Church Bldg. Asso. 63 Wis. 9, 22 N. W. 756; 2 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. p. 1683, § 543; Pencille v. State Farmers' Mut. Hail Ins. Co. 74 Minn. 67, 73 Am. St. Rep. 326, 76 N. W. 1026.

The corporation could not ratify its fraudulent issue of stock so as to bind a non-participating stockholder.

Noble v. Blount, 77 Mo. 235; Newell v. Randall, 32 Minn. 171, 50 Am. Rep. 562, 19 N. W. 972; Moore v. St. Paul Ice Co. 59 Minn. 23, 60 N. W. 816; Dunnell, Pl. § 494.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts in this case are as follows: The defendant Pacific Coast & Norway Packing Company is a corporation duly created and existing under the laws of this state. It was incorporated in May, 1900, for manufacturing purposes, with authority to prepare, sell, and dispose of all kinds of canned goods, pickles, smoked and dried herring, fish, and other sea foods, and to acquire, own, and hold all property necessary to the conduct of its business. Its capital stock was placed at $1,000,000 divided into 100,000 shares of a par value of $10 each. At the first meeting of the board of directors, the sale of 150,000 shares of stock was authorized at $1 per share. William S. Laton purchased and became the owner of 300 shares at that price. Plaintiffs Nellie and Fannie Cooley also became the owners of 100 shares, each paying therefor the same consideration. Said plaintiffs Cooley have at all times since been the owners and holders of the stock so purchased by them. Subsequent to the commencement of the action, Laton died, and plaintiffs Shaw and Gillerson were substituted as parties to the action, they being the executors of his last will and testament. Laton, on his estate, has, at all times since the issuance of the stock to him, continued the owner thereof. In June, 1900, one Joseph Kildall, representing the Kildall Fish Company, a copartnership composed of himself, his father, and two brothers, made to the board of directors of defendant packing company the following proposition for the sale of certain rights and properties then claimed to be held and owned by the copartnership, namely:

Minneapolis, Minn., June 2, 1900.

Pacific Coast & Norway Packing Company, City.

Gentlemen:

We hereby offer to sell to you our certain fishing outfit, consisting principally of fishing nets, lines, floats, boats, and articles now stored in our storehouse at Marietta, Washington. This fishing outfit originally cost us about $1,800. Also all our right and title to certain fishing and packing locations which we have explored and decided upon in the territory of Alaska, main location at Killisno, between Sitka and Juneau, which we value at $20,000. These we agree to convey to you in consideration of 28,000 shares of the capital stock of your company, to be issued to Joseph Kildall. If this proposition is accepted, then, in consideration of its acceptance, we collectively and individually agree to give to your company the benefit of our knowledge and experience in the fishing and packing business, and give to your company our best advice in its affairs, and Joseph Kildall to be bound to generally supervise the affairs of your company for a period of two years without further compensation. It is further understood that if the services of P. C. Kildall and Michael Kildall should be required by your company in the fishing and packing business, they will hold themselves in readiness to serve your company for compensation to be agreed upon by the board of directors, covering the time actually engaged. It is further understood that, in addition to the above, Joseph Kildall, in the event this proposition is accepted, binds himself to continue the management of the company's affairs for an additional period of three years at a compensation to be agreed upon by the board of directors, and none of the Kildalls here mentioned shall exact or demand anything more than a fair compensation.

Respectfully submitted,

Kildall Fish Company,

Joseph Kildall.

Kildall was a promoter of the packing company and one of the incorporators, and, at the time of the submission of this proposition a director, and acted as secretary of the meeting at which it was accepted. So that he acted in the dual capacity of seller and buyer, selling for his copartnership, and participating in the purchase as one of the directors of the corporation. The proposition was accepted, and the 28,000 shares of stock, the purchase price of the property therein named, subsequently issued to Kildall. By the terms of the acceptance, 10,000 of the shares were, to prevent the Kildalls from controlling the corporation, transferred to a trustee, to be held and controlled by him for the term of five years, and then turned over to Kildall. But this fact is unimportant. Thereafter Kildall sold and transferred 4,000 shares of the stock issued to him to defendant Staight, who is now the owner and holder thereof. In September, 1903, plaintiffs, as stockholders, on the claim that the transaction by which the corporation accepted the Kildall proposition was a fraud, and that no consideration ever passed from Kildall to the corporation, demanded that the officers thereof bring an action to set the same aside, and to cancel and annul the stock so issued. The officers refused to comply with the demand, and this action followed, by which plaintiffs, as stockholders, seek to avoid the transaction on the ground of alleged fraud, and to cancel the stock held by Staight. The trial court found the facts substantially as stated; that the transaction was fraudulent; that the Kildall Fish Company had no fishing locations on the Pacific coast or elsewhere, and conveyed none to the corporation in consideration of the stock issued to Kildall; that the fishing tackle and other property offered to be transferred to the corporation by the written proposition heretofore set out was old, worn out, and of no value whatever; and, further, that the corporation received no consideration for the issuance of this stock save the value of Kildall's services as secretary for the corporation for two years, at $300 per year. The court also found that defendant Staight had full knowledge of all the facts, and of the fact that Kildall had no fishing locations to sell or convey to the corporation; that the corporation never acquired such rights from the Kildall copartnership; also that the 4,000 shares of the stock issued to Kildall and transferred to Staight were transferred to him wholly without consideration. The court also found that plaintiffs herein knew nothing of the merits of the transaction until about the time of the commencement of the action. Judgment was ordered and entered, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

canceling and annulling the stock so held by Staight, and he appealed.

Several questions are presented by the assignments of error which will be considered in their order. Three of them, viz., that the complaint fails to state a cause of action, that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings of fact, and that the findings of fact do not justify the conclusions of law, require no extended mention. Though the complaint is not so full and complete as perhaps it might have been made, it is sufficient in all essential respects, and sets forth facts entitling plaintiffs to the relief prayed for. With respect to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings, we have only to say that the record has been read with care, with the result that, in our opinion, all the findings of fact are fully supported by competent evidence. Whether the conclusions of law are supported by the findings of fact depends upon the result to be arrived at respecting the several contentions of defendant, presently to be considered. That the proper judgment was ordered by the trial court we have no doubt. We come, then, to the specific contentions of defendant.

1. Defendant contends that plaintiffs cannot maintain the action, for the reason that the stock held by them is void, and they do not come into court with clean hands. This is based upon the fact, about which there is no controversy, that plaintiffs purchased and paid for the stock held by them at the rate of $1 per share, the par value being $10, with the understanding and agreement that the amount so paid should be in full and entitle them to certificates of fully paid stock. Fully paid stock was accordingly issued to them. The point is that this agreement was in violation of § 2878, Rev. Laws 1905, prohibiting the issuance of corporate stock for less than its par value; and it is urged that the transaction was void, that plaintiffs are holders of stock illegally issued, and therefore without standing in a court of equity. The contention is not sound. It appears from the record that the stock of the corporation was divided into 100,000 shares of the par value of $10. But, at the time of the organization, the stock was placed on the market at $1 per share, at which price plaintiffs purchased the shares held by them. This was probably a violation of the statute above referred to, but the stock so issued was not necessarily so tainted with illegality as to render it void nor as fraudulent in the hands of the holders. The agreement that it should be fully paid stock was undoubtedly voidable, and could be so adjudged at the suit of creditors; but, until set aside and declared void at their instance, it is valid, not only between the corporation and stockholders, but as between the several stockholders as well. Olson v. State Bank, 67 Minn. 267, 89 N. W. 904; Dunn v. State Bank, 59 Minn. 221, 61 N. W. 27. As remarked in the case of Barcus v. Gates, 32 C. C. A. 337, 61 U. S. App. 596, 89 Fed. 783, it would be a new doctrine to hold that because a stockholder has bought stock from a corporation at a price less than its par value, under an agreement that it shall be treated as paid in full, his stock is void, and he without standing in court to protect rights accruing to stockholders by reason of the misconduct of the corporation or its managing officers. Such a doctrine would, as intimated by Judge Mitchell in the Olson Case, supra, convert the statute prohibiting such an issue of stock into a shield in the hands of the stockholders to defraud creditors who might trust the corporation. If the stock so issued is void, then, in proceedings by creditors to compel the holders thereof to pay into the corporation the unpaid value, the fact that the stock was void would be a complete defense, and relieve them from any and all obligations to creditors. The true doctrine in such cases is that the stock is not void, but the holder thereof may be compelled, at the suit of creditors, to pay into the corporation the full par value. The stock is valid, but the agreement that it shall be considered as paid in full is voidable. The authorities sustaining this view may be found collected in a note to Easton Nat. Bank v. American Brick & Tile Co. 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 271, and Security Trust Co. v. Ford, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 263. The Minnesota cases cited by appellant do not sustain the position that such stock is void, or tainted with illegality to such an extent as to deprive the stockholder of the rights incident to his relation to the corporation. Wallace v. Carpenter Electric Heating Mfg. Co. 70 Minn. 321, 68 Am. St. Rep. 530, 73 N. W. 189, and Hastings Malting Co. v. Iron Range Brewing Co. 65 Minn. 28, 67 N. W. 652, involved rights of creditors, while Rogers v. Gross, 67 Minn. 224, 69 N. W. 894, was an attempt to enforce an executory contract for the purchase of stock at less than its par value.

2. It is further contended by defendant that the action, as disclosed by the allegations of the complaint, is one to set aside the stock held by him on the sole ground that it was issued without consideration; and that the court erred in admitting evidence of and finding as a fact that the transaction was fraudulent. We do not construe the complaint in the light presented by counsel. Its allegations are broad enough squarely to present the issue whether the Kildall transaction was a fraud from beginning to end, to which the question of consideration or no consideration was a mere incident. It alleges that stock was unlawfully and fraudulently issued to Kildall, and that he paid no consideration therefor. If defendant desired more particular information in reference to the fraud, he should have moved seasonably for more definite and specific allegations. The objection that the complaint is indefinite or uncertain in this respect cannot be raised either by demurrer or objection at the trial. The evidence established beyond doubt that the transaction was a fraud. Kildall had no fishing locations to sell, and the fishing tackle and other items of property referred to in his offer to the corporation were worthless and of no value whatever. By his offer of sale he valued the "locations" at $20,000, yet he had no locations whatever, and conveyed no such rights to the corporation. At the time of the transaction, he was one of the directors of the corporation, and acted as secretary at the meeting at which the bargain and sale was consummated, and voted in favor of accepting his proposition, well knowing that the corporation would, in fact, receive no value for the stock to be issued to him. It is this fraud that plaintiffs seek to expose, and not a cancellation of the stock on the simple ground of no consideration, and the fact that the evidence disclosed, and the court found, that a small consideration did in fact pass to the corporation in the form of Kildall's services as secretary for the term of two years, which the court valued at $300 per year, and which services he agreed to render as a part of his proposition, does not defeat the main purpose of the action. If the case involved a mere question of legal title to the stock, the consideration stated would be sufficient to establish that legal right; but it is not such an action. On the contrary, it is one in equity, and is controlled by the rules and principles of law appropriate to that branch of jurisprudence. Defendant Staight was a party to the fraud; at least, had knowledge of all the facts, and is in no position to complain of the result; for, so far as disclosed by the record, he parted with nothing for the stock transferred to him by Kildall, and no rule of equity with which we are familiar will sustain his title to the stock so fraudulently obtained.

3. It is also contended that plaintiffs cannot maintain the action for the reasons (1) "that the bringing of an action to cancel the stock was a matter within the discretion of the board of directors; and, in the absence of fraud or bad faith on their part, their refusal is final; and (2) in any event, application should have been made to the stockholders, or such circumstances shown as would make such application useless." Neither of these points is well taken. The fact that the transaction complained of was fraudulent and operated to the damage and injury of the stockholders of the corporation made it the duty of the officers thereof to bring an action in compliance with the request of plaintiffs. This they refused to do for the apparent reason that it might involve some of the present directors, who were such at the time of the transaction, but were in fact guilty of no intentional wrongdoing. However, when the demand to sue was made upon them, at a meeting of the managing officers, they placed upon the records a resolution to the effect that the transaction was a fraud, but they declined to go further, anticipating, it is fair to assume from the evidence, the bringing of this particular action. It being the duty of the officers to protect the stockholders and the corporation from the fraud of others, it cannot well be said to be discretionary with them whether to perform that duty, and their refusal cannot bar an action by an interested stockholder. There is respectable authority for the proposition that, in cases of this kind, where stock of a corporation has been fraudulently issued by its officers, the stockholders may maintain an action for its cancellation without requesting that the action be brought by the corporation. The action in such case is not in the interests of the corporation, but in the interests of, and for the protection of, the individual rights of stockholders. 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 978; Stebbins v. Perry County, 167 Ill. 567, 47 N. E. 1048; Kimball v. New England Roller Grate Co. 69 N. H. 485, 45 Atl. 253; Luther v. C. J. Luther Co. 118 Wis. 112, 99 Am. St. Rep. 977, 94 N. W. 69. But we need not go so far in the case at bar. A demand was in fact made upon the officers of the corporation; they refused to bring the action; and we hold that their refusal was not final. In other words, they had no discretion in the premises whatever; at least, in so far as an exercise thereof would bar an action by individual stockholders. It is also clear that the demand upon the managing officers of the corporation was sufficient, and it was unnecessary that plaintiffs go further, and invoke the aid of other stockholders. 2 Clark & M. Priv. Corp. 543; Pencille v. State Farmers' Mut. Hail Ins. Co. 74 Minn. 67, 73 Am. St. Rep. 326, 76 N. W. 1026; Baldwin v. Canfield, 26 Minn. 43, 1 N. W. 261, 276; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. 1905, and cases cited. A different rule is applied by the Federal courts. 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 979. There is a class of cases, however, where the refusal of the corporation, through its officers, to proceed, is not sufficient to justify an action by an individual stockholder, and in which he must appeal to the other stockholders to join him. This includes such rights of action as accrue to the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

corporation itself, not those accruing to the stockholders. In such case, the refusal of the officers to bring suit if, in their judgment, the interests of the corporation require that they refrain, is final, and can be overcome only by a combination of a majority of the stockholders. Leslie v. Lorillard, 110 N. Y. 519, 1 L.R.A. 456, 18 N. E. 393; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 981. To this class belong nearly all the citations in appellant's brief in support of his contention on this branch of the case, within which the case at bar does not come. Here the injury complained of, and consequently the right of action, accrued to the stockholders, and not to the corporation as such.

4. Counsel also contend that the transaction, however fraudulent it may have been, was subsequently ratified by the corporation. This claim is without merit. In the first place, no facts are found which justify the contention, and there was no error in the refusal of the court to so find. Moreover, if the transaction was fraudulent as to the stockholders, it was incapable of ratification by the corporation without their acquiescence and consent. 2 Cook, Corp. 653. It may be that the record presents such acts on the part of some of the stockholders or officers of the corporation as would sustain the theory of ratification, if, at the time, they were aware of the fraud. But no such conduct, with notice of the fraud, was traced to these plaintiffs, or either of them; and a finding that they had ratified the fraud, had it been made, would find no support in the evidence.

This covers all questions requiring special mention. We discover no error in the refusal to amend the findings, nor in the action of the court directing, on its own motion, an amendment to the complaint (Briggs v. Rutherford, 94 Minn. 23, 101 N. W. 954; Adams v. Castle, 64 Minn. 505, 67 N. W. 637), and no reversible error in any of the other assignments.

Judgment affirmed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Resp't.,

v.

JOSEPH J. CAHILL, Appt.

(193 N. Y. 232, 86 N. E. 39.)

Perjury — election — self-crimination.

1. One who, having been subpoenaed in a proceeding against himself for illegal registration as a voter, makes oath that other persons against whom proceedings have also been instituted, who are registered from the same place, were properly registered cannot escape punishment for perjury with respect to the latter statement on the theory that he had been compelled to become a witness against himself, in violation of the provisions of the Constitution, although the information with respect to all cases was embodied in one affidavit.

Witness — self-crimination — statutory exemption.

2. One implicated in the illegal registration of another as a voter cannot avoid testifying as to the facts of such registration, on the theory that he would incriminate himself, where the statute provides that the testimony so given shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the person testifying, and that a person so testifying shall not thereafter be liable to indictment, prosecution, or punishment for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given.

Same — claiming privilege.

3. The privilege against self-crimination in testifying as to illegal registration of voters must be claimed; and, if it is not, a prosecution for perjury because of the testimony given cannot be defeated on the ground that the constitutional rights of the accused were violated.

Evidence — perjury — knowledge.

4. Upon the question of perjury in swearing that certain voters lived at the place from which they registered, evidence is admissible that, at the time accused instructed them to register, he told them that if any harm came he would see that they got out.

Same — admission — application.

5. Where one who a person on trial for perjury falsely swore was properly registered as a voter from a certain place was disqualified both because of nonage and nonresidence, evidence of an admission by accused, prior to his registry, that he was not qualified, may be considered by the jury as relating to either disqualification.

Same — motive.

6. Upon trial of one for perjury in falsely swearing that certain persons were properly registered as voters from a certain place, evidence is admissible that accused directed them to register, and promised to protect them from harm if they did so, as tending to establish a motive for the testimony as to their being properly registered.

Same — entire conversation.

7. Upon the question of perjury on the part of one who swore that certain persons were properly registered as voters from a certain place, the admission of evidence of a prior conversation tending to show that he knew that they could not properly register from that place is not prejudicial error, although it contains statements tending to show the commission of another crime, if the jury is cautioned to disregard that portion of it.

(Willard Bartlett and Chase, JJ., and Cullen, Ch. J., dissent from propositions 6 and 7.)

(October 23, 1908.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for Kings County convicting him of perjury. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Martin W. Littleton and Frederick Allis, with Mr. Luke O'Reilly, for appellant:

There was no perjury, because defendant was not lawfully under oath.

Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 20 L. ed. 746, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195; People ex rel. Taylor v. Forbes, 143 N. Y. 219, 38 N. E. 303; People v. Courtney, 94 N. Y. 490; People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 446, 1 Am. St. Rep. 851, 14 N. E. 319; 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1159; People ex rel. Hackley v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74; O'Reilly v. People, 86 N. Y. 154, 40 Am. Rep. 525; Case v. People, 76 N. Y. 242; Lambert v. People, 76 N. Y. 220, 32 Am. Rep. 293; Ortner v. People, 4 Hun, 323; People v. Albertson, 8 How. Pr. 363; People v. Tracy, 9 Wend. 265; People v. Lewis, 14 Misc. 266, 35 N. Y. Supp. 664; People ex rel. Weston v. McClave, 32 N. Y. S. R. 824, 10 N. Y. Supp. 764; Kellogg v. Sowerby, 32 Misc. 327, 66 N. Y. Supp. 542; Holman v. State, 72 Miss. 108, 16 So. 294.

The immunity given by the statute is not an adequate substitute for that of the Constitution.

Counselman v. Hitchcock and People v. Forbes, supra; People ex rel. Lewisohn v. O'Brien, 176 N. Y. 253, 68 N. E. 353; People v. Priori, 164 N. Y. 466, 58 N. E. 668; People ex rel. Lewisohn v. Court of General Sessions, 96 App. Div. 210, 89 N. Y. Supp. 364; Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644.

The testimony of the witnesses White and McKenna, relative to conversations had with the defendant in regard to their registration, admitted over defendant's objection, was incompetent.

Wharton, Ev. 8th ed. §§ 23, 29.

Messrs. James A. Donnelly and Wil-

Note.—On the question of false testimony given under statute promising immunity against its use in criminal proceedings, see case note to Edelstein v. United States, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 236, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

llam Schuyler Jackson, Attorney General, for respondent:

The statements sworn to by the defendant in the investigation conducted by the deputy state superintendent of elections were material.

People v. Courtney, 94 N. Y. 494; People v. Ellenbogen, 114 App. Div. 182, 99 N. Y. Supp. 897, affirmed in 186 N. Y. 603, 79 N. E. 1112.

The constitutional privileges and immunities of the defendant were not violated, nor was he in any sense compelled to be a witness against himself.

Burrell v. Montana, 194 U. S. 572, 48 L. ed. 1122, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787; Re Knickerbocker S. B. Co. 139 Fed. 713; Re Consolidated Rendering Co. 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1069; 3 Wigmore, Ev. §§ 2268, 2281; 5 Wigmore, Ev. § 2281a; Mackin v. People, 115 Ill. 312, 56 Am. Rep. 167, 3 N. E. 222; United States v. Kimball, 117 Fed. 165; People ex rel. Taylor v. Seaman, 8 Misc. 152, 29 N. Y. Supp. 329; Re Leich, 31 Misc. 671, 65 N. Y. Supp. 3; People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, 1 Am. St. Rep. 851, 14 N. E. 319; People ex rel. Lewisohn v. Court of General Sessions, 96 App. Div. 201, 89 N. Y. Supp. 364, affirmed in 179 N. Y. 594, 72 N. E. 1148; Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 48 L. ed. 860, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563; Ex parte Cohen, 104 Cal. 524, 26 L.R.A. 423, 43 Am. St. Rep. 127, 38 Pac. 364.

The immunity from prosecution guaranteed by § 41 did not include permission to the defendant to commit perjury in the investigation in which he made his affidavit.

People v. Courtney, 31 Hun, 199, affirmed in 94 N. Y. 490; State v. Hawkins, 115 N. C. 712, 20 S. E. 623; State v. Faulkner, 185 Mo. 673, 84 S. W. 967; Mackin v. People, supra; People v. Lewis, 14 Misc. 264, 35 N. Y. Supp. 664; People v. Bowe, 34 Hun, 533; Com. v. Turner, 98 Ky. 528, 33 S. W. 88.

The conversations between White, McKenna, and the defendant, with respect to the registration of the former, were relevant, material, and competent.

People v. Van Tassel, 156 N. Y. 561, 51 N. E. 274; People v. O'Neill, 112 N. Y. 361, 19 N. E. 796; People v. Doty, 175 N. Y. 164, 67 N. E. 303; People v. Mills, 91 App. Div. 331, 86 N. Y. Supp. 529, affirmed in 178 N. Y. 274, 67 L.R.A. 131, 70 N. E. 786; People v. Putnam, 90 App. Div. 125, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1056, affirmed in 179 N. Y. 518, 71 N. E. 1135; People v. Clark, 90 App. Div. 605, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1142, affirmed in 179 N. Y. 518, 71 N. E. 1135; People v. Summer- 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

field, 96 App. Div. 636, 89 N. Y. Supp. 1113, affirmed in 180 N. Y. 511, 72 N. E. 1147; People v. Weller, 98 App. Div. 623, 90 N. Y. Supp. 1109, affirmed in 180 N. Y. 556, 73 N. E. 1129; People v. Gaffey, 182 N. Y. 257; 74 N. E. 836; People v. Abeel, 182 N. Y. 415, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 730, 75 N. E. 307, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 287; People v. Dolan, 186 N. Y. 4, 116 Am. St. Rep. 521, 78 N. E. 569, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 453; People v. Weisenberger, 73 App. Div. 428, 77 N. Y. Supp. 71; People v. Ammon, 92 App. Div. 205, 87 N. Y. Supp. 358; People v. Shea, 147 N. Y. 80, 41 N. E. 505; People v. McKane, 143 N. Y. 455, 38 N. E. 950.

Hiscock, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Chapter 689, p. 1846, of the Laws of 1905, entitled, "An Act to Amend Chapter Six Hundred and Seventy-Six of the Laws of Eighteen Hundred and Ninety-Eight, Entitled 'An Act to Create a Metropolitan Elections District; Provide for the Appointment of a State Superintendent Therein, and to Prescribe His Powers and Duties,' Generally," amongst other things authorizes the state superintendent or his deputy to subpoena persons and examine them with reference to cases of suspected illegal registration. Said official having reason to suspect that the appellant and two other persons, named respectively McKenna and White, had illegally registered from a certain building in the borough of Brooklyn, caused the appellant to be subpoenaed for the purpose of giving information in regard to said cases. He appeared, and, without any objection, made an affidavit dated November 2, 1905, tending to show that he and each of said other individuals was entitled to register as he had. He has been convicted of perjury on the ground that the statements made with reference to the other individuals were false.

We regard as too clear to require discussion the propositions questioned by counsel for the appellant, that said chapter 689, p. 1846, of the Laws of 1905, is constitutional; that there was evidence permitting the jury to find as it did that the statements made by appellant in respect to McKenna and White were material and false, and that the appellant is not immune from punishment for giving such false testimony under the immunity statute hereafter to be referred to, or for any other reason, if his examination was legal.

Contenting ourselves with thus merely stating our conclusions upon these points, we pass to a consideration of the other questions which have been argued.

Appellant contends that the proceeding before the superintendent of elections in which he made his affidavit was a "criminal case" against him, and that, having been subpoenaed and examined under the compulsion of the statute, he has been compelled to become a witness against himself, in violation of the provisions of the Constitution both of the United States (U. S. Const. 5th Amend.) and of the state (N. Y. Const. art. 1, § 6), which provide that "no person . . . shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself;" and that therefore the whole proceeding, including his affidavit containing the alleged false statements, is absolutely null and void, and furnishes no basis for a charge of perjury.

It is answered with considerable force that the proceedings before the superintendent in which appellant was examined were not of such a character as to constitute a "case," and come within the purview of the constitutional provisions just quoted. An inspection of the statute creating and prescribing the duties of the office of superintendent of elections does give much weight to the argument that it creates a purely administrative official, who is empowered in various ways, including an examination of witnesses, to investigate, amongst other things, the subject of registration of voters, to the end that illegal registration may be discovered and voting thereon prevented. Such official, by the provisions of the statute, has no power to punish or entertain proceedings for the punishment of a person guilty of illegal registration. In this respect he differs from a grand jury, investigating and having the power to take action looking to the punishment of alleged crimes, and proceedings before which body have been held to come within the contemplation of the constitutional provision quoted. Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195; People ex rel. Lewisohn v. O'Brien, 176 N. Y. 253, 68 N. E. 353.

But, if we assume that an investigation by such official was a case or proceeding contemplated by the Constitution, we do not think that appellant's constitutional rights were violated in obtaining from him the testimony on account of which he has been convicted.

If the proceeding was more than a mere general investigation, then there were three separate cases or proceedings, and the alleged false testimony for which conviction has been had is to be regarded as given in cases against McKenna and White, rather than in any case against himself, and it was not harmful to him.

It appears without contradiction that, at the time when appellant appeared and made his affidavit, there was pending in the office of the superintendent an investigation of the registration of all three men, and subpoenas had been issued in the investigation of White and McKenna. The deputy superintendent testified as follows: "Mr. Cahill came in and was referred to me, and I told him we had received some information to the effect that there were three men registered from 413 Henry street who did not reside there, of whom he was one. . . . I asked him would he relate the facts with reference to these three cases, and give me the names of the other two registered persons besides himself, and he said that he would. We had first a general conversation. I asked him if he lived at that place himself, and he stated that he did. . . . I then asked him with reference to McKenna and White. . . . I then asked him if he would swear that that was true, and he said he would."

The information, including the alleged false statements with respect to the residence of McKenna and White, for which alone the appellant has been convicted, was then incorporated in the affidavit which has been made the basis of this prosecution, and the witness was sworn for the first time when he verified it.

While the deputy superintendent testifies that the affidavit was entitled "People v. Joseph J. Cahill," the affidavit itself shows that it was simply entitled "Case No. 354." We do not, however, regard the mere title of the affidavit as very material. As a matter of fact, the superintendent was endeavoring to secure information in regard to three cases, and the witness was brought in, and, in rather an informal manner, interrogated in regard to each, and then his statements as to all were embodied in one affidavit, and verified as they chanced to be applicable to one or the other. So far as the practical result was concerned, it was not different than it would have been had the witness verified separately the statements pertinent to each case.

Naturally, illegal registration is an individual crime. The illegal registration of the three men could not well constitute a joint offense, and there was nothing on the face of the proceedings then pending to indicate that Cahill was implicated in the illegal registration of White and McKenna, and that, therefore, he was constitutionally relieved from giving information in respect to them, or that such information in any way incriminated him. Apparently it was perfectly proper and legal to subpoena and examine him in respect to the others, and no one could say that, in so doing, he was being called on to give testimony against himself.

The real and precise question, therefore, seems to be whether the validity of his oath to statements relating to White and McKenna, which he could be compelled to make, is destroyed because, at the same time, he was required to verify other statements relating to himself, and which it will be assumed he could not have been forced to make.

We think that it was not, and that to hold otherwise under the circumstances of this case would be going beyond that which has been held in any of the cases called to our attention.

In People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, 1 Am. St. Rep. 851, 14 N. E. 319, the defendant had been examined before a legislative committee about certain acts of alleged bribery, and subsequently the attempt was made to use the evidence so given by him for the purpose of proving his complicity in the crime; and what was said with reference to compelling a person to be a witness against himself in a criminal case must be read in the light of those fundamental facts.

People ex rel. Lewisohn v. Court of General Sessions, 96 App. Div. 201, 89 N. Y. Supp. 364, involved contempt proceedings against the relator because of his refusal to answer certain questions before a grand jury on the ground that such answer would tend to incriminate him; and what was said upon the subject of the right of a person not to be a witness against himself was said in the discussion of that general question.

The case of Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195, also involved a discussion of questions arising in connection with the refusal of a witness to answer questions on the ground that they would tend to incriminate him.

In United States v. Edgerton (D. C.) 80 Fed. 374, it appeared that the defendant was required to appear before a grand jury without knowing that his own conduct was under investigation, and was called on to give evidence material to a charge for which he was subsequently indicted, and it was held that this was improper.

In People v. Singer, 18 Abb. N. C. 96, the defendant was indicted for murder, and it appeared that she had been brought before the grand jury and interrogated with reference to the charge against herself for which she was subsequently indicted, and this was held to be improper.

Boone v. People, 148 Ill. 440, 36 N. E. 99, presented substantially the same facts.

Thus it appears in each one of the cases that the question involved was as to compelting a person to give evidence in regard to an offense alleged to have been committed by the witness. Here, as already sufficiently appears, the statements related to apparently independent offenses, committed by other people.

If, in the light of what was subsequently testified to on the trial, it should be contended that appellant was in fact implicated in the illegal registration of White and McKenna, and that therefore he should not have been compelled to give evidence in their cases, two answers may be made:

In the first place, we have no doubt that he secured immunity against any harm from such testimony, which was as broad as the protection afforded by the constitutional provisions to which we have referred. Section 41q of the Penal Code, which is here applicable, provides as follows: "A person offending against any section of this title [which title relates, amongst other things, to illegal registration] is a competent witness against another person so offending, and may be compelled to attend and testify on any trial, hearing, or proceeding or investigation in the same manner as any other person. The testimony so given shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the person testifying. Any such person testifying shall not thereafter be liable to indictment, prosecution, or punishment for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given, and may plead or prove the giving of testimony accordingly, in bar of such an indictment or prosecution."

Secondly, if appellant felt that his testimony in regard to White and McKenna might disclose criminal conduct on his own part, from which he was not otherwise protected, it was his right and duty to decline to answer the questions, which he did not do. People v. Priori, 164 N. Y. 459, 58 N. E. 668; People ex rel. Lewisohn v. Court of General Sessions, supra.

Certain objections and exceptions to the admission of evidence are urged upon our consideration.

Both McKenna and White were sworn as witnesses for the prosecution to alleged statements by the appellant. Over objections and exceptions the former testified as follows:

Mr. Cahill told me to register. . . .

Q. What did he say to you about registering, and what did you say to him about registering first? (Objections.)

Mr. Jones: Answer this last question as to who spoke first.

A. Mr. Cahill asked me did I register, and I said no, I wasn't of age; he said: "How many months do you lack of twenty-one?" I said, "Six or seven." He said, "Go on and register anyway; I voted when I was sixteen years of age."

Mr. Littleton: I object, and move to strike out the answer on the ground that it is utterly and entirely without any issue in this case or to any conception of the indictment in this case.

The court: Standing by itself it may be, but he can have all the conversation as bearing on the defendant's knowledge when he swore the man slept there, if he knew he did not. . . .

Mr. Littleton: I object to it on the ground that the sole issue to be submitted to this jury is whether this man swore falsely when he swore this man slept there always; and that is no part of this issue, but does tend to prove another charge and another crime against this defendant.

The court: I think it is pertinent, and I will allow it. (Defendant excepted.)

Mr. Jones: Go on and tell what was said by you.

A. Mr. Cahill told me to go ahead and register, and I said I wasn't of age; and he said, "You go up; I will see no harm comes to you;" and I said, "I am kind of afraid," and he said, "Go on up, anyway;" and I came back. He told me where to register from,—413 Henry street. I didn't say anything about registering from 413 Henry street.

The witness White testified, over objection and exception:

Go on and tell the court and jury what the defendant said. How did you come to register from 413 Henry street, if you didn't sleep there?

A. I stood on the opposite corner, and Mr. Cahill came out with a cigar in his mouth, . . . and he said: "Mr. White, go up and register, and if any harm comes to you I will see that you get out."

It may be conceded at once that this evidence was material, and calculated to prejudice the appellant's case, and, if error was committed in its reception, he ought to have relief. The question is whether it tended, directly or indirectly, in any degree, great or small, legitimately to establish that the appellant was guilty of the crime of perjury which he was charged with having committed when he testified before the superintendent of elections in the following November: "I formerly resided at Henry street, . . . and took up my residence at 413 Henry street two or three months ago, . . . and both John White and Bernard McKenna have slept there almost every night during that time."

In determining this question it is well to bear in mind the circumstances under 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

which the appellant is charged with having committed perjury in making the statement which he did. The subject under investigation was the right of those two men to register from 413 Henry street, and the record makes it quite apparent that, on the hearing before the superintendent of elections, the questions whether they were entitled to register and whether they had slept at 413 Henry street, as testified to by appellant, were regarded as identical. If they had so slept at the place in question, as testified by appellant, it indicated that they were entitled to register; and, conversely, if they were not entitled to register, it would indicate that they had not been living at Henry street, as appellant testified.

If the appellant, at the time they registered, did or said anything which indicated appreciation of danger in their so doing, we think it was some evidence of an admission on his part that they had not been staying at Henry street for a sufficient length of time to permit their registry, and, therefore, that he was swearing falsely when he testified to facts establishing their right to register. This was certainly true in the case of White, whose only known lack of qualifications was lack of residence. We think it was also true in the case of McKenna. For while he gives nonage as an excuse for not registering, there is also evidence to show that he was not qualified by residence; and therefore anything in the way of an admission by appellant that he was not qualified to register might be considered by a jury as relating to either disqualification.

It remains, then, but to add in this connection that, in our opinion, appellant's direction to McKenna and White to register from Henry street, followed in each case by a promise to protect the man from harm if he did so, was susceptible of the construction by the jury that he knew that each man was liable to get into trouble if he registered, and that this trouble would arise from lack of that very residence in the district which appellant subsequently attempted to establish by false testimony.

But, further than this, evidence of these conversations, showing his direction to each man to register, and his promise to protect him from harm if he did so, both by reason of the express promise and by reason of his having become connected with the registry as he did, established a direct motive for his testimony before the superintendent, that each man was qualified, by staying at 413 Henry street, to make the registry which was then being investigated, and was competent for that purpose. Com. v. Hudson, 97 Mass. 565; Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 435. 35 Am. Rep. 524.

Much stress is laid on the fact that the evidence of McKenna tells of an admission by the appellant that he had voted before he was entitled to, and, therefore, had committed another crime than that for which he was being tried. Evidence of such admission by itself might have been entirely incompetent, and the court so indicated at the time of its reception. But the conversation detailed by each witness was an entire and connected one, relating to a single subject, and even if that question was raised, as it probably was not, neither authority nor good practice required counsel, by leading questions, to draw from the witness what he deemed a material sentence scattered here and there through the conversation. Under the circumstances he was entitled to ask for the conversation as an entirety. The court plainly laid down the rule that the object of the conversation was not to show the commission of some other crime by the appellant, and that it simply bore on his knowledge when he swore to the facts already detailed.

The judgment should be affirmed.

Haight, Vann, and Werner, JJ., concur.

Willard Bartlett, J., dissenting:

Under the act creating the metropolitan elections district, consisting of the counties of New York, Kings, Queens, Richmond, and Westchester, and providing for the appointment of a state superintendent therein, and prescribing his powers and duties, the deputy superintendents of elections are authorized, among other things, to investigate all questions relating to the registration of voters, and for that purpose they are empowered to visit and inspect any house, dwelling, building, inn, lodging house, or hotel within the metropolitan district, and to interrogate any inmate, house dweller, keeper, care taker, owner, proprietor, or landlord thereof or therein as to any person or persons residing or claiming to reside therein or thereat. Laws 1898, chap. 676, p. 1612, as amended by Laws 1905, chap. 689, p. 1846. See § 6, subd. 1, Laws 1905, chap. 689, p. 1849. The superintendent, his chief deputy, and not more than ten deputies, duly designated by the superintendent for that purpose, are authorized to administer oaths and affirmations to any person in any matter or proceeding authorized as aforesaid, and in all matters pertaining or relating to the elective franchise. Section 7. In November, 1905, a deputy thus designated, named Jesse Fuller, Jr., administered an oath in Kings county to the defendant, and took his examination under oath with regard to the residence of John White and Bernard McKenna.

McKenna, two men who had registered in the sixth election district of the third assembly district in Kings county for the purpose of voting at the ensuing election. The defendant made affidavit before Deputy Superintendent Fuller on the 2d day of November, 1905, as follows: "I reside at number 413 Henry street, Brooklyn; I formerly resided at the corner of Henry and Baltic streets, but took up my residence at 413 Henry street two or three months ago, and slept there on the second floor, the one just above the saloon, almost every night since, and both John White and Bernard McKenna have slept there also almost every night during that time." The indictment charged the defendant in the first count with the crime of feloniously making a false statement under oath before a deputy state superintendent of elections; and, in the second count, with the crime of perjury; and alleged that the sworn statement above quoted was false, and was known to be so by the defendant at the time when he made it.

Upon the trial there was no attempt to prove that the statement was false so far as it related to the residence of defendant himself. The learned trial judge instructed the jury that it was not claimed that the affidavit was false entirely, but that the people contended "that when Joseph J. Cahill swore that both John White and Bernard McKenna had slept there at 413 Henry street also almost every night during the past two or three months before the 2d day of November, 1905, he swore wilfully to that which he knew to be false; and that McKenna and White had not so slept there." It is apparent, therefore, that the verdict of guilty must have been based solely upon a finding by the jury that the defendant had knowingly sworn falsely in regard to the residence of these two men. Both McKenna and White testified as witnesses for the prosecution upon the trial.

After McKenna had stated that he registered as living at No. 413 Henry street at the instance of the defendant, his examination proceeded as follows:

Q. What did he say to you about registering, and what did you say to him about registering first?

Mr. Littleton: I object to the evidence upon the ground that the sole issue charged against this defendant is he made a false statement, not as to this man's age or qualifications, nor as to his residence; but that he made a false statement in that he said this man had slept almost always in 413 Henry street; and that is the sole issue of this affidavit.

The court: Bearing on whether or not he did, he has the right to ask this question.

(Objection overruled and defendant excepted.)

Mr. Jones: Answer this last question as to who spoke first.

A. Mr. Cahill asked me did I register, and I said no, I wasn't of age; he said, "How many months do you lack of twenty-one?" I said, "Six or seven." He said, "Go on and register anyway; I voted when I was sixteen years of age."

Mr. Littleton: I object, and move to strike out the answer on the ground that it is utterly and entirely without any issue in this case or to any conception of the indictment in this case.

The court: Standing by itself it may be, but he can have all the conversation as bearing on the defendant's knowledge when he swore the man slept there, if he knew he did not.

Mr. Littleton: Your honor doesn't seem to want to hear my objection.

The court: State your objection and don't think I do not, but I think it is perfectly competent.

Mr. Littleton: I object to it on the ground that the sole issue to be submitted to this jury is whether this man swore falsely when he swore this man slept there always; and that is no part of this issue, but does tend to prove another charge and another crime against this defendant.

The court: I think it is pertinent, and I will allow it.

(Defendant excepted.)

White also testified under appropriate objection, and exception, in answer to the question how he came to register from 413 Henry street if he did not sleep there: "I stood on the opposite corner, and Mr. Cahill came out with a cigar in his mouth—no, he did not have a cigar, he had his hands in his pockets. He came out and he said, 'Mr. White, go up and register, and if any harm comes to you I will see that you get out.'"

I think that the admission of this evidence was clearly erroneous; that it must have been exceedingly prejudicial to the defendant, and that the error in receiving it and in refusing to strike it out demands a reversal of this judgment, unless we are prepared to ignore, and, indeed, virtually repeal, the general rule of evidence in criminal cases which prohibits proof on the part of the prosecution of the commission of crimes other than that alleged in the indictment.

A conspicuous instance of the recent enforcement of this rule by this court is furnished by the case of People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 62 L.R.A. 193, 61 N. E. 286, in which its character and scope were fully discussed in the opinion of Werner, J., who reviewed the numerous authorities by which it 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

is supported in this and other states, and clearly classified the exceptions to it which have been recognized in the development of criminal procedure here and in other jurisdictions where the common law prevails. It is to be observed the defendant was indicted for false swearing and perjury; not for false registration or inducing others to commit that crime, and not for voting illegally. Yet the sole tendency of the testimony of McKenna and White, which has been quoted, was to establish the defendant's guilt of these other and different offenses. Upon no theory of the doctrine of relevancy does it seem to me that the fact that the defendant had voted when he was only sixteen years of age can be deemed relevant to any of the issues which were litigated under the indictment and plea in this case. The defendant's declaration to that effect, assuming that he made it, merely tended to show that years ago he had committed another crime. To hold that evidence of this sort was not harmful to a man upon trial for a crime relating to the elective franchise would be, in my judgment, to ignore those influences which common experience shows to be powerfully operative upon the human mind. The only question which the jury were called upon to determine upon the trial was whether the defendant had sworn falsely in stating under oath that these men slept for two or three months at 413 Henry street, in the borough of Brooklyn; and the fact, assuming it to be such, that he had once voted illegally, had no conceivable bearing on that question, nor was the evidence properly receivable under any of the exceptions to the general rule recognized and so well stated in the Molineux Case. It did not tend either to establish motive, intent, the absence of mistake or accident, a common scheme or plan embracing the commission of two or more related crimes, or the identity of the defendant. It had no relation to the crime charged, and its sole effect must have been to make the jury think that the defendant was a bad man, whose antecedents indicated a willingness to commit any offense against the election laws.

The objectionable character of the testimony of these two witnesses to the effect that the defendant urged them to register, and said he would take care of them if they did so, is almost equally manifest. As has been pointed out, he was not on trial for the crime of false registration or inducing others falsely to register, and this evidence had no relevancy to the charge that he knowingly state an untruth when he testified before the deputy superintendent of elections in reference to the sleeping place of these witnesses. I recognize to the fullest extent the wisdom of the statutory rule which prevails in this state, that, upon an appeal in criminal cases, the court must give judgment without regard to technical errors or defects, or to exceptions which do not affect the substantial rights of the party. Code Crim. Proc. § 542. It seems clear to my mind, however, that the errors which I have discussed cannot justly be deemed technical, and that they must have operated to the detriment of the defendant to such an extent as to deprive him of the fair trial to which he is entitled by law. Entertaining this view, I deem it my duty to vote for a reversal of the judgment. Upon the other question in the case I concur in the conclusions reached by Judge Hiscock.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Chase, J., concur with Willard Bartlett, J.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

ALMA COAL COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
COZAD, Treasurer.

(79 Ohio St. 348, 87 N. E. 172.)

Eminent domain — private benefit.

1. The provisions of the Constitution forbid not only the taking of the private property of one, but as well the laying of an imposition upon it, for the sole benefit of another.

Partition fence — cost of erection.

2. The act of April 18, 1904 (97 Ohio Laws, 138), may not be so construed and Headnotes by the COURT.

Case Note. — Applicability of statutory provision for joint construction of line or division fence, where lands of one of adjoining owners are otherwise uninclosed.

The reasoning of the court in ALMA COAL Co. v. COZAD leads naturally to the conclusion that an owner of uninclosed lands should not be burdened with the expense of constructing fences between himself and his neighbor, because the former, by reason of his property being uninclosed, derives no benefit from a division fence. This doctrine finds general support in the reported cases. Bouchereau v. Guilne, 116 La. 534, 40 So. 863; Wiggin v. Baptist Soc. 43 N. H. 260; Perkins v. Boody, 62 N. H. 452; James v. Tibbetts, 60 Me. 557; Kent v. Lix, 47 Mo. App. 567; Palmer v. Silverthorn, 32 Pa. 65.

The intention of legislatures which have specifically provided that owners of "inclosed" lands shall maintain partition fences between their own and the next adjoining inclosure has invariably been carried out by the court in holding that an owner was bound to charge an owner of lands which are, and are to remain, uninclosed, with any part of the expense of constructing and maintaining a line fence for the sole benefit of the adjoining proprietor.

(February 2, 1909.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Vinton County to review a judgment affirming an order of the Court of Common Pleas sustaining a demurrer to the petition in an action brought to restrain the collection of a certain tax alleged to have been unlawfully levied. Reversed.

Statement by Shauck, J.:

The coal company filed its petition in the court of common pleas, alleging, in substance, that it is the owner of a tract of land in Vinton township, Vinton county, Ohio, and that one W. H. Allen is the owner of an adjoining tract; that in the year 1906 said Allen, being desirous of having his lands inclosed, filed his application with the trustees of the township, asking them to view the line dividing his lands from those of the plaintiff, and assign to each the share of a partition fence to be constructed and maintained by him; that the trustees complied with that request, and ordered Allen to build one half of said fence and the plaintiff to build the other half; that the plaintiff refused to comply with that order, and that thereupon the portion so allotted to it was caused to be built, and the expense thereof certified to the auditor of the county to be charged upon the tax duplicate against the lands of the plaintiff; and that the defendant, the treasurer, said charge having been made, now threatens to collect owner was bound to contribute to the cost of a partition fence only where his own lands were actually inclosed. Bechtel v. Neilson, 19 Wis. 49; Hazard v. Wolfram, 31 Wis. 194; Whyte v. East Whiteland Twp. 2 Chester Co. Rep. 219; Farmer v. Young, 86 Iowa, 382, 53 N. W. 279; Fay v. Elliott, 154 Mass. 587, 28 N. E. 1052. Boenig v. Hornberg, 24 Minn. 307. This same rule is applied in Loeb v. Niesley, 2 Legal Chron. 149, where the lands in question were city lots.

See also Syas v. Peck, 58 Iowa, 256, 12 N. W. 304, where unfenced land in use for growing crops was said to be used in common because statutory restraint of stock made fences unnecessary.

It has also been held that one of adjoining owners whose lands have been inclosed, and who has borne his share of the cost of a partition fence, may relieve himself from maintaining the fence or a section of it by allowing his entire lands, or so much as he sees fit, to again lie in common. Jones v. Perry, 50 N. H. 134; Chamberlain v.

the same as a lien upon said lands. Plaintiff further alleges that its lands and all of them are wild, uncultivated, and unfenced, and that it has no desire or intention to improve, fence, or cultivate any portion thereof, and that said fence is of no value or benefit to it whatever. It alleges that there is no authority whatever for said imposition upon its lands or upon it, and prays that the defendant be enjoined from the collection thereof. To this petition a demurrer was sustained in the court of common pleas, and the petition dismissed. In the circuit court the judgment of the court of common pleas was affirmed.

Mr. J. M. McGillivray for plaintiff in error.

Mr. James W. Darby for defendant in error.

Shauck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Statutes regulating the construction and maintenance of fences between the lands of adjoining proprietors, when used by both for the purpose of inclosing their lands, have long been in operation in this state, and their provisions and effect have become quite familiar. But the judgment below in the present case implies the view that, by the act of April 18, 1904 (97 Ohio Laws, 138), the general assembly has thought itself empowered to enact that one must submit to an imposition for the construction of his neighbor's fence, even though his own lands are not otherwise inclosed, and he makes no use whatever of the fence to whose construction he is required to contribute, and has no intention whatever of making such use thereof; and that, by the act referred to, the general assembly has exercised that authority. Some doubt as to the intention of the legislature will survive a careful analysis of the statute. The first section, as amended by the act referred to, being § 4239, Rev. Stat., provides: "That the owners of adjoining lands shall build, keep up, and maintain in good repair all partition fences between them in equal shares, unless otherwise agreed upon between them, which agreement must be in writing and witnessed by two persons. . . ." Section 4242 provides that: "If any party neglects to build or repair a partition fence, or the portion thereof which he ought to build or maintain, the aggrieved party may complain to the township trustees," etc. Section 4243 provides that, if he fails upon notice to construct said portion, the trustees shall, upon the application of the aggrieved party, sell the contract to the lowest responsible bidder to furnish the labor and material, and build such fence according to the specifications to be proposed by the trustees, after advertising the same, etc. There are other provisions for reporting to the county auditor the cost of the proceeding, and the cost of the erection of the designated portion of the fence, for the record thereof, etc.; and an express provision that they shall be collected as other taxes are collected. The act contains no definition of a partition fence which would necessarily include a fence constructed and maintained by one proprietor for his sole use, and not used by the other in the inclosure of his lands. It would naturally be expected that an intention to inaugurate so radical a departure from previous legisla-

Reed, 14 Hun, 403; Boyd v. Lammert, 18 Ill. App. 632.

A statute providing that owners of adjoining lands shall each make and maintain a just proportion of the division fence between them unless either "shall choose to let such land lie open" is construed in Chrysler v. Westfall, 41 Barb. 159; and the exception in favor of those who choose to let their lands remain uninclosed is extended to the benefit of an owner who has not fenced his land, but finds it fully inclosed by reason of the action of others in fencing their land.

But an act requiring "that owners of adjoining lands shall build, keep up, and maintain partition fences between them, in equal shares, is held, in Nichols v. Turner, 10 Ohio C. C. N. S. 509, to apply to all owners of adjoining lands, whether the same are inclosed or not. It should be said that this decision was influenced by the fact that the act construed repealed former statutes whose language was specifically applicable to lands "inclosed."

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And the fact that land is unfenced does not bring it within an exception, granted by statute, to an adjoining owner who "shall choose to let his land lie open to a public common," releasing him from the duty imposed of making and maintaining his just proportion of a division fence. Perkins v. Perkins, 44 Barb. 134.

The theory that an owner should not be compelled to contribute to the cost of a fence from which he derives no benefit has also been applied where one builds a fence upon his own land, and back from the division line, so as to leave an uninclosed way or lane between his own and his neighbor's land. In these cases the owner of the lane is not liable to share the cost of a fence erected on the line. Lantis v. Reithmiller, 95 Mich. 45, 54 N. W. 713; Smith v. Johnson, 76 Pa. 191; Bills v. Belknap, 38 Iowa, 225; Bland v. Hixenbaugh, 39 Iowa, 536; Painter v. Reece, 2 Pa. St. 126; Rohrer v. Rohrer, 18 Pa. 367.

tive policies, and so manifest a disregard of the commonly accepted views as to the rights of landowners, would be indicated by the use of language of an unequivocal character. The statute of the state had long applied, by appropriate terms, to a partition fence "dividing the inclosures of two or more persons." But some purpose must have prompted the amendment of the statute now under consideration, and no conjecture as to that purpose seems more probable than that made by the courts below. No other explanation of the amendment occurs to us or is suggested by counsel. But whatever the intention in fact of the general assembly, as indicated by the terms of the act, may have been with respect to this question, constitutional considerations seem to forbid the interpretation of the act which is implied in the proceedings of the township trustees and in the judgment under review. The powers of the imagination will be exhausted in vain to find a member of society who will be benefited by the imposition which is sought to be made upon the plaintiff, except Allen, the adjoining proprietor, who desires to inclose his land. In pursuing inquiries of this character, we need not be seriously concerned about forms if we correctly comprehend the substance of things. In the contemplation of the Bill of Rights, a legislative act to transfer title to a portion of the plaintiff's lands to its neighbor by compulsion, and without consideration, would not differ from one to assess its lands to an equivalent extent for his exclusive benefit. It would be neither more reprehensible nor less availing.

Upon this aspect of the case, two propositions are urged in support of the judgment below. It is said that the act, construed as it was in the circuit court, is not an exercise of the right of eminent domain, but only the exercise of the power of levying a tax or assessment, and that these are essentially different powers. That differences between them exist is obvious, and that they are sometimes important is true; but that they are of no importance whatever in the present inquiry is made clear by three propositions which are elementary in constitutional law. In the exercise of the right of eminent domain property can be taken for a public use only. A special assessment can be made only in consideration of a special benefit conferred upon the owner of the property assessed or upon the property itself. The power to levy a general tax may be exercised only for the carrying out of governmental purposes, which constitute the only function of the state. Enough upon this subject has been said in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Reeves v. Wood County, 8 Ohio St. 333, and Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Keith, 67 Ohio St. 290, 60 L.R.A. 525, 65 N. E. 1020.

In support of the judgment below, we have the definite proposition that the act, as there construed, is a legitimate exercise of the police power, which is confessedly within the constitutional grant of legislative power to the general assembly. Again the vain longing for conceptual definition of the police power is intensified. Counsel are obviously embarrassed by the realization that, to the valid exercise of this power, it is indispensable that every invasion of a private right must be vindicated by a consideration of the public weal. To meet that requirement, it is suggested that the purpose of the amended legislation is to prevent the occurrence of "devils' lanes," which are supposed to provoke neighborhood animosities, and in which live stock, especially horned cattle, are liable to be restrained and injured. Such lanes, instead of being provocative of neighborhood animosities, are indicative of such animosities already in a very high state of development. It will be quite apparent that this conjecture falls far short of helpful suggestion when it is realized that such a lane cannot possibly occur when the lands of one of the adjoining proprietors remain wholly without fence.

We do not follow counsel in the present case, nor the circuit court, in a case cited, in a consideration of the extent of the lands within the state whose owners might be subjected to a like imposition, under like circumstances, in the view taken of this statute in the courts below. The larger it might appear to be, the more effectively it would divert attention from the really important aspect of the case. In the opinion of those who framed and adopted our Constitutions, and in accordance with the observation and experience of those who have happily enjoyed their protection, private rights in property are subject only to the limit of the public use or the public benefit. In determining the limits of the rights so vested and secured, surveyors' instruments cannot be profitably employed. The record informs us that the plaintiff, in the orderly mode appointed, seeks relief from a forbidden imposition. Further information is unnecessary. The experiences of courts which have departed from principles of obvious soundness, because the particular cases in which such departures were permitted were not otherwise important, have not been so happy as to invite repetition.

The judgments of the Circuit Court and Common Pleas Court will be reversed, and the demurrer to the petition will be overruled.

Crew, Ch. J., and Summers, Spear, Davis, and Price, JJ., concur.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

JAMES CUZNER, Resp't.,

v.

CALIFORNIA CLUB, a Corporation, Appt.

(— Cal. —, 100 Pac. 868.)

Intoxicating liquors — license — social club.

1. A clause in an ordinance providing for a license tax upon those conducting, managing, or carrying on the business of retail liquor dealers, which defines a "retail liquor establishment" to be any place where intoxicating liquors are sold, served, or given away in quantities less than 5 gallons, does not include a social club which serves liquors to its members at a slight advance on the cost, the profit being devoted to the maintenance of the club, where the purpose of the definition is to distinguish between retail and wholesale business and restaurants.

Same — construction.

2. An ordinance merely imposing a license tax upon the business of selling intoxicating liquors does not include a bona fide social club which merely distributes such liquor to its members at a slight ad-

Case Note. — Applicability of liquor laws to social club dispensing liquors to members.

Prior cases upon this question are gathered in the case note to South Shore Country Club v. People, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 519. From these it appears that the decisions are various and conflicting; that, with few exceptions, it has been held that, where the club is incorporated, it is amenable to the liquor laws; and all the authorities agree that it is amenable where it appears that the formation of the club was a mere device to evade the law. The following cases have appeared since the preparation of that note:

In State v. Warcholik, 80 Conn. 351, 68 Atl. 379, the trial court instructed the jury that, "while it is true that a member of a club, or an agent or servant of the club, can dispense liquors to a fellow member of the club, the club receiving the income from the sale, no member of the club has a right to sell liquors to one who is not a member." The latter part of the charge was held to be correct. Commenting, however, on the first part of this charge, the supreme court said: "The instruction that an unlicensed club or its agent can lawfully sell liquors to a fellow member for the benefit of the club was favorable to the defendant, and for this reason we have no occasion to de-vance over the cost, the profit being devoted to the expenses of the institution.

(March 6, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Los Angeles County enjoining the sale or serving of intoxicating liquors upon its grounds. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward E. Bacon, with Messrs. Gibson, Trask, Dunn, & Crutcher, for appellant:

The ordinance applies only to "retail liquor dealers" carrying on business as such.

Ex parte Braun, 141 Cal. 204, 74 Pac. 780.

The serving of liquors by a bona fide social club to a limited number of members and invited guests does not constitute "carrying on the business of a retail liquor dealer," and is not within the purview of the ordinance.

Manassas Club v. Mobile, 121 Ala. 561, 25 So. 628; Harris v. State, 50 Ala. 127; Weil v. State, 52 Ala. 19; Koenig v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 367, 47 Am. St. Rep. 35, 26 S. W. 835; State v. Austin Club, 89 Tex. 20, 30 L.R.A. 500, 33 S. W. 113; Tennessee Club v. Dwyer, 11 Lea, 452, 47 Am. Rep. 298; Piedmont Club v. Com. 87 Va. 540, 12 S. E. 963; Merced County v. Helm, 102 Cal. 159, 36 Pac. 399; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 142; People v. Adelphi side upon its correctness; without intending, however, any implication of opinion that the proposition, as advanced by the trial judge, can be sustained. In this case the question is purely academic."

In State v. Kline, 50 Or. 426, 93 Pac. 237, the court said that it was generally conceded that, where a social club is unincorporated, the dispensing to members only of liquors purchased by the club is not a sale in the strict sense of the term. It was held, however, that, where the liquors were purchased by an incorporated society, the corporation became the owner of the liquors, and when they were dispensed to a member with intent to pass the title in the goods, the act constituted a sale.

And, in State ex rel. Young v. Minnesota Club, 106 Minn. 516, 119 N. W. 494, it was held that the rule declared by some of the cases, that the distribution of intoxicating liquors to club members does not constitute a sale, for the reason that the members are the joint owners of the property, and are merely distributing to themselves property which they already own, has no application where the organization is a legally constituted corporation, and the statute prohibiting sales without a license makes no express exception in favor of such corporation.

Club, 149 N. Y. 5, 31 L.R.A. 510, 52 Am. St. Rep. 700, 43 N. E. 410; Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 224, 34 L.R.A. 94, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717, 35 Atl. 606; State ex rel. Bell v. St. Louis Club, 125 Mo. 308, 26 L.R.A. 573, 28 S. W. 664; Com. v. Smith, 102 Mass. 144; Com. v. Pomphret, 137 Mass. 564, 50 Am. Rep. 340; Barden v. Montana Club, 10 Mont. 330, 11 L.R.A. 593, 24 Am. St. Rep. 27, 23 Pac. 1042; State ex rel. Columbia Club v. McMaster, 35 S. C. 1, 28 Am. St. Rep. 826, 14 S. E. 290; Graff v. Evans, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 373; Davies v. Burnett [1902] 1 K. B. 666; Newell v. Hemingway, 60 L. T. N. S. 544; Seim v. State, 55 Md. 566, 39 Am. Rep. 419; State v. Maryland Club, 105 Md. 585, 66 Atl. 667; United States v. Cerecedo Hermanos y Compania, 209 U. S. 337, 52 L. ed. 821, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 532.

Messrs. Anderson & Anderson for respondent.

Messrs. Leslie R. Hewitt and Lewis R. Works, amici curia.

Angellotti, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by a member of the California Club, a bona fide social organization existing in the city of Los Angeles, to enjoin the selling or serving of liquors by the club to its members and their guests, upon the ground that, by making such sales, the club is violating the provisions of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles requiring the payment of a license fee by all persons engaged in the business of retail liquor dealers. The complaint charges that the defendant maintains a bar, at which its members and their guests are served with liquors at retail, and intoxicating liquors are also served to either members or guests at other places in the club; and it is contended by the plaintiff that, in so doing, the defendant is conducting a place for the sale of liquors within the meaning of said ordinance, and thereby lays itself liable to heavy fines, and also to a forfeiture of its charter if it persists in this conduct. A general demurrer to the complaint for want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action was overruled, and defendant declined to answer. Judgment was thereupon entered for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

It is assumed by the parties that such an action will lie on behalf of a member of the club. See Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 224, 34 L.R.A. 94, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717, 35 Atl. 606. The only question presented by the appeal is whether the provision of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, "providing for licensing and regulating the carrying on of certain professions, trades, callings, and occupations carried on within the limits of the city of Los Angeles," adopted January 27, 1908, that imposes a license tax of $100 per month upon "every person, firm, or corporation conducting, managing, or carrying on the business of a retail liquor dealer," is applicable to the defendant. The defendant is a bona fide social club, incorporated in December, 1888, under the laws of the state of California, solely "with a view to promote social intercourse among its members," and not for profit, and is without any capital stock. Its principal place of business, as stated in its articles of incorporation, is the city of Los Angeles, wherein it maintains a clubhouse for the use of its members and their guests. In this clubhouse are maintained all those conveniences for the use of such members and their guests as are ordinarily to be found in a social clubhouse, such as a library, parlors, and reception rooms, adequately furnished, dining rooms where meals are furnished, billiard rooms, and sleeping apartments. It owns its clubhouse building, and the furniture therein, and the land on which the building stands. The aggregate value thereof being in excess of $500,000. During the whole period of its existence, it has kept therein a stock of vinous, spirituous, and malt intoxicating liquors, in sufficient quantities to supply the wants of its members and their guests, and, "without any license whatever of any kind from the city of Los Angeles so to do," has furnished such members and guests with such quantities thereof as they ordered, receiving therefor from the parties taking the same more than the cost price thereof. The moneys so received by the club are, like the money received for dues, meals, etc., used solely for the maintenance of the club. The permanent membership of the club is limited in number to 850. No person who is a resident of Los Angeles, not a member of the club, is entitled to any of its privileges, except that he may be introduced once by a member; but, when so introduced, cannot purchase anything therefrom, and cannot remain in the clubhouse after the departure therefrom of the member introducing him. Persons not residing within 50 miles of Los Angeles may be introduced to said club by any member, and receive a card entitling them to the privileges thereof for a period of not more than thirty days in any period of twelve months. Such persons constitute the guests of whom we have spoken. The member introducing such a visitor is responsible for his conduct, and for any indebtedness which he may incur. The whole object of the club is to furnish to its members the conveniences and privileges of a social club, and everything that is done by it, in the way of furnishing meals, lodgings, and liquors, is merely incidental to this object, just as the furnishing of a library, parlors, and reception rooms, of the advantages of which all members may partake without charge, is incidental to that object. Whatever profit may be derived by the club from any of the transactions is used, and to be used, solely, for the main object above stated. In the way above stated only does the club engage in any business other than the conduct of a bona fide social club.

It must be conceded at the outset that the municipality of Los Angeles, in the exercise of the power to regulate traffic in intoxicating liquors that is a part of the police power conferred upon it by the Constitution, may enact prohibitory laws applicable not only to those engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors to the public, but also to such transactions in regard thereto as we have described above; and that they may regulate, by license tax or otherwise, any and all kinds of dealings with relation to such liquors, including such dealings as are had by the defendant with its members. It may also be conceded that the transactions above detailed are of such a nature that, in the exercise of the power to impose a license tax for revenue on any business, etc., the municipality may treat them as the carrying on of a business that may be taxed for revenue, and impose a license tax thereon for that purpose. This is apparently not disputed by learned counsel for defendant. The sole question, then, is whether it was the intention of the framers of the law or ordinance to include such clubs.

The ordinance of January 27, 1908, is, in all respects material here, a re-enactment of an ordinance adopted February 28, 1903, with a substantially similar title, viz., "An Ordinance Providing for Licensing and Regulating the Carrying on of Certain Professions, Trades, Callings, and Occupations Carried on Within the Limits of the City of Los Angeles." It makes it unlawful for any person to carry on "any trade, calling, profession, or occupation" specified in the ordinance, without having procured the license to do so. It imposes a license tax on a great variety of businesses and callings, over eighty in number, generally in terms providing that the tax is imposed on anyone "carrying on the business" named. The provisions in regard to the liquor business are as follows:

"Sec. 49. For every person, firm, or corporation conducting, managing, or carrying on the business of a retail liquor dealer, $100 per month.

"For every person, firm, or corporation conducting, managing, or carrying on the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) business of a wholesale liquor dealer, $75 per month.

"For every person, firm, or corporation carrying on the business of a restaurant or eating place where spirituous, vinous, malt, or mixed intoxicating liquors are sold, served, or given away, in original packages containing not less than 1 pint, to be consumed on the premises with bona fide meals, $75 per month, in addition to the regular restaurant license required by the ordinances of the city of Los Angeles.

"For the purpose of this ordinance, a retail liquor establishment is defined to be any place where spirituous, vinous, malt, or mixed intoxicating liquors are sold, served, or given away, in quantities of less than 5 gallons, to be drunk either upon the premises or elsewhere.

"Any person, firm, or corporation who, either as owner, agent, lessee, or otherwise, conducts or carries on a retail liquor establishment, as herein defined, is, for the purpose of this ordinance declared to be a retail liquor dealer; provided, however, that none of the definitions herein given shall apply to the sale, serving, or giving away, in a restaurant or eating place of spirituous, vinous, malt, or mixed intoxicating liquors, in original packages, containing not less than 1 pint, to be consumed on the premises with bona fide meals.

"For the purpose of this ordinance, a wholesale liquor establishment is defined to be any place where spirituous, vinous, malt, or mixed intoxicating liquors are sold, served, or given away in quantities of not less than one fifth of a gallon, and not to be drunk upon the premises where so sold, served, or given away; and any person, firm, or corporation who, as owner, agent, lessee, or otherwise, conducts or carries on a wholesale liquor establishment, as herein defined, is, for the purpose of this ordinance, declared to be a wholesale liquor dealer.

"For the purposes of this ordinance, a restaurant is defined to be a place fully equipped with modern conveniences for cooking and preparing victuals, and where hot meals are actually served at least three times a day, and at least six days in the week; and a bona fide meal is defined to be a meal consisting of such quantity and quality of food as is ordinarily served for a meal in hotels or restaurants. Merely sandwiches or lunches or crackers or cheese shall not be held nor considered to be a bona fide meal, within the provisions of this ordinance."

Reasonably construed, these provisions regarding liquor dealers must be held to have been intended to apply only to such persons, etc., as are engaged in the "business of selling liquor" in the sense in which the term

"business" is ordinarily used in that connection. We concede that it was entirely within the power of the city council to define in the ordinance what it meant by the term "business of a retail liquor dealer," upon the "managing or carrying on" of which it imposed the license tax by the first paragraph of § 49, and to define it in such a way as to include transactions of the character that we have detailed. But we see, in the definitions contained in the succeeding paragraphs, no intention to depart from the manifest policy of the whole ordinance, which was to impose a license tax upon the doing of various kinds of business; or, as put in the title, "upon the carrying on of certain professions, trades, callings, and occupations." The object of the definitions was to distinguish between the different classes of persons engaged in the business of selling liquor,—retail liquor dealers, wholesale liquor dealers, and restaurant keepers,—as to whom different rates of license tax were fixed, so as to make it clear and definite in which class any such person falls, and also to guard against evasions by persons really engaged in the business of liquor dealers, who might attempt to cloak their transactions as gifts; as, for instance, by selling a cracker and giving a drink,—a device not unknown in the past,—or to obtain the reduced rate of a restaurant keeper under the cloak of a sham restaurant. We think the ordinance clearly shows that these were the sole objects of the definitions, and that the idea of including acts that would not ordinarily be held to be included within the term "managing or carrying on a business" was not present. Taking the provision defining a "retail liquor establishment" by itself, and construing it literally and technically, it would include a man's home, if a man served or gave spirituous, vinous, malt, or mixed intoxicating liquors to his guests therein, for such home would then be a place where such liquors were served or given away in quantities of less than 5 gallons. Admittedly, this provision must be read in connection with the next following provision, which defines a "retail liquor dealer" as one who "conducts or carries on" such a place. These words, in the connection in which they are used, clearly imply a conducting or carrying on of a place as a business,—the conducting or carrying on of a place "where liquors are vended as a business." Ex parte Mansfield, 106 Cal. 405, 39 Pac. 775. As learned counsel for plaintiff suggests, in reply to the claim that any other construction would include a host serving liquors in his own house, the words indicate "a dealing or trafficking in liquors." As we read the various provisions, so far as retail liquor dealers are concerned, they simply impose the tax on the business of selling and disposing of, at a fixed place of business, spirituous, vinous, malt, or mixed intoxicating liquors, in less quantities than 5 gallons; and the words "sold, served, or given away" include only such disposition of liquors as may properly be held to be made in the conducting of a business. This we think to be the fair and reasonable construction of the language used, especially when the whole ordinance is considered together, and we see nothing in the charter provisions or other ordinances of the city that are before us under stipulation of the parties, to indicate otherwise. See Ex parte Seube, 115 Cal. 629, 632, 47 Pac. 596; Ex parte Mansfield, 106 Cal. 404, 39 Pac. 775.

The question, then, as it appears to us, is whether a bona fide social club, engaged in transactions of the character hereinbefore detailed, with the sole object, as we look at it, of distributing articles, provided for the use of the members, in such a way "that there shall not be unequal contributions to the treasury which purchases them" (Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 231, 34 L.R.A. 94, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717, 35 Atl. 608), is to be held to be within the purview of a law or ordinance which simply imposes a license tax upon the business of selling liquors, and does not contain other provisions that show a clear intent to include them. Upon this question, we are satisfied that the great weight of authority is in favor of the proposition that they are not so included. The matter is exhaustively discussed by Mr. Black in his valuable work on Intoxicating Liquors, and he sums up as follows: "Upon the whole, therefore, notwithstanding some conflicting rulings, the rational conclusion is that the intent must govern. On the one hand, if the object of the organization is merely to provide the members with a convenient method of obtaining a drink whenever they desire it, or if the form of membership is no more than a pretense, so that any person, without discrimination, can procure liquor by signing his name in a book or buying a ticket or a chip, thus enabling the proprietor to conduct an illicit traffic,—then it falls within the terms of the law. But, on the other hand, if the club is organized and conducted in good faith, with a limited and selected membership, really owning its property in common, and formed for social, literary, artistic, or other purposes, to which the furnishing of liquor to its members would be merely incidental, in the same way, and to the same extent, that the supplying of diners or daily papers might be,—then it cannot be considered as within either the purpose or letter of the law." Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 142.

The term "business," as used in a law imposing a license tax on business, trades, professions, and callings, ordinarily means a business in the trade or commercial sense, one carried on with a view to profit or livelihood. A bona fide social club, if permitted by its articles of incorporation or association, may, of course, so engage in business, either by transactions with its members, or members of the public; as, for instance, by letting for a consideration rooms not used for the ordinary purposes of the clubhouse, or by engaging in some outside enterprise for the purpose of realizing profits to be devoted to club purposes; and, so far as it does such things, even incidentally for the purpose of realizing profit to be devoted solely to club purposes, it would be engaged in business in the commercial sense as fully as any person could be. But, in its transactions with its members, in the carrying on of the clubhouse, looking simply to the giving to them such privileges in the property devoted to bona fide club purposes as they are all, in common, entitled to, under the constitution and rules of the club, it is not engaged in business at all in the commercial or trade sense, as ordinarily understood. Such property is beneficially owned in common by the members in equal shares, and is devoted to their common use. So far as such property can be actually used equally by all the members, as in the case of reading rooms, sitting rooms, etc., no special charge is made against any member for such use. All may actually use such things in common. But when, in the exercise of the common privilege, one member appropriates to his exclusive use food or drink, or a room for sleeping purposes,—things that cannot be actually used in common by all the members,—he pays therefor simply because it is the only fair and equitable way of apportioning the expense of the club among the members. As stated in Klein v. Livingston Club, supra: "The purpose of the whole system is to distribute the advantages, comforts, and luxuries of the club among the members so that there shall not be unequal contributions to the treasury which purchases them."

The following cases fully support the doctrine that transactions of the character here detailed do not bring a bona fide social club within the purview of a law or ordinance simply imposing a license tax upon the business of liquor selling: Manassas Club v. Mobile, 121 Ala. 561, 25 So. 628; State v. Austin Club, 89 Tex. 20, 30 L.R.A. 500, 33 S. W. 113; Koenig v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 367, 47 Am. St. Rep. 35, 26 S. W. 835; Tennessee Club v. Dwyer, 11 Lea, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

452, 47 Am. Rep. 298; Piedmont Club v. Com. 87 Va. 540, 12 S. E. 963; Barden v. Montana Club, 10 Mont. 330, 11 L.R.A. 593, 24 Am. St. Rep. 27, 25 Pac. 1042; People v. Adelphi Club, 149 N. Y. 5, 15, 31 L.R.A. 510, 52 Am. St. Rep. 700, 43 N. E. 410; Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 224, 34 L.R.A. 94, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717, 35 Atl. 606; State v. Boston Club, 45 La. Ann. 585, 20 L.R.A. 185, 12 So. 895; Com. v. Pomphret, 137 Mass. 564, 50 Am. Rep. 340; State ex rel. Bell v. St. Louis Club, 125 Mo. 308, 26 L.R.A. 573, 28 S. W. 604; State ex rel. Columbia Club v. McMaster, 35 S. C. 1, 23 Am. St. Rep. 826, 14 S. E. 290; Graff v. Evans, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 373, involving the Grosvenor Club; Davies v. Burnett [1902] 1 K. B. 666, involving the North Wolverhampton Workingmen's Club. It is perhaps true, as claimed by learned counsel for plaintiff, that some of these cases proceed upon the theory that such a transaction in no sense constitutes a sale, which theory we are inclined to believe is not entirely correct. But, as we read most of the cases which, it is said, approve the doctrine of no sale, the real point decided is that, while such transactions may technically constitute sales, they do not constitute sales within the meaning of the act under consideration,—are not sales of the commercial character contemplated by such act. If we were of the opinion that the ordinance before us should be construed as imposing a tax upon any and all sales, as distinguished from such sales as are made in the carrying on of the business of selling liquor in the ordinary sense, it is doubtful whether we could assent to the doctrine of some of the cases, that it was not intended to include transactions of the character under consideration. But, as we have said, we do not think that the ordinance before us means this, under any fair and reasonable construction. In some of these cases cited, as in People v. Adelphi Club, supra,—a case where the law apparently imposed a tax on the sale,—it is true the court, in part, based its conclusion upon another provision, or provisions, which it thought indicated that sales of this character were not contemplated; but we think that such provisions no more clearly indicated such intent than does the ordinance before us. In State v. Boston Club, supra, which holds that it is not the intention of such an ordinance to require a license of a social club, as being in business or in trade, it was also held that, by reason of special provisions as to liquor dealing, in some respects analogous to those in the ordinance before us, viewed in the light of the history of legislation in that state upon the subject, such transactions were intended to be included. The same conclusion has been reached by some other courts, in cases cited by learned counsel for plaintiff, upon special provisions as to liquor selling, which it was held showed such intention. We shall not attempt to analyze or distinguish these cases. The question is one which must be determined upon a construction of the ordinances and laws applicable to Los Angeles, in the light of the history of our own legislation on the subject.

Many of the cases relied on by learned counsel for plaintiff are cases involving the proper construction of prohibitory or local option laws, as applied to transactions of the character under discussion. As said by counsel for defendant, "such laws are not confined, either in terms or in purpose, to the business of selling liquors, but extend generally to all dealing therein," and they must be construed from a very different standpoint. Some of the other cases so cited are those where the alleged club is a mere form, adopted for the purpose of cloaking the operations of what was really a retail liquor business. In such cases the mere form will, of course, be disregarded, and the law held applicable. In other cases, such as Army & Navy Club v. District of Columbia, 8 App. D. C. 544, and Kentucky Club v. Louisville, 92 Ky. 309, 17 S. W. 743, there were special provisions in terms as to "clubs," "clubhouses," and "clubrooms," which it was thought specially showed the intent to include them. Eliminating these cases, it is true that there still remain cases that are in conflict with our conclusion upon the general proposition involved. Of these, People v. Soule, 74 Mich. 250, 2 L.R.A. 494, 41 N. W. 908—a practically analogous and well-considered case—is probably the most conspicuous example. It appears to us that the opinion in that case lays too much stress upon the fact that such transactions possess all the elements of legal sales, and apparently regards that fact as determinative of the controversy. We have already referred to State v. Boston Club, supra. The cases of South Shore Country Club v. People, 228 Ill. 75, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 519, 119 Am. St. Rep. 417, 81 N. E. 805, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 383, and State, Newark, Prosecutor, v. Essex Club, 53 N. J. L. 99, 20 Atl. 769, were cases where the tax was apparently imposed upon the sales; but the reasoning of the opinions probably places the cases among those opposed to the view heretofore quoted from Black on Intoxicating Liquors. The same is true of State v. Shumate, 44 W. Va. 490, 29 S. E. 1001. The decisions of the Federal courts (United States v. Wittig, 2 Low. Dec. 466, Fed. Cas. No. 16748; United States v. Alexis Club [D. C.] 98 Fed. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

725) are based upon a construction of the provisions of the internal revenue law, which, for the purposes of that act, must probably now be considered as settled for all time, that renders all persons selling liquor liable, whether or not they can properly be regarded as being engaged in the business of selling. It was expressly recognized in both the cases cited that there would be great doubt if the question was merely whether the club was "dealing" in liquors, or "engaged in the business of selling," within the common meaning of those words. The statute there provided: "Special taxes are imposed as follows: . . . Fourth. Retail dealers in liquors shall pay twenty-five dollars. Every person who sells, or offers for sale, foreign or domestic distilled spirits or wines, in less quantities than five wine gallons at the same time, shall be regarded as a retail dealer in liquors." U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3244, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2096. Section 3242, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2094, provided that "every person who carries on the business of a . . . retail liquor dealer . . . without having paid the special tax as required by law" shall be fined and imprisoned, etc. It will be observed, as stated by counsel for defendant, that while, in the ordinance before us, the limitation to persons "carrying on the business" is an integral part of the very provision which imposes the tax in the United States statute, the tax was imposed upon "retail dealers in liquor," and these were in terms defined in such a way, the courts held, as to exclude the idea of carrying on business. The construction given that it included all sales, without regard to whether the person was engaged in the business of selling in the ordinary sense, is based, in part, upon the rule declared in the Wittig Case, as follows: "This is a revenue law, and the decisions of the Supreme Court require us to construe it liberally in favor of the revenue, to prevent evasions." But, as said before, we shall not attempt to reconcile the cases. A full examination but demonstrates that there is a conflict in the views of the courts upon both the propositions we have discussed: viz., the proper construction of such an ordinance as the one before us, and, assuming the correctness of our construction, the question whether such transactions as we have detailed bring defendant within its operation. We believe our construction of the ordinance to be the only fair and reasonable construction of its various provisions; and, upon the proposition that a bona fide social club, engaged in transactions of the kind above set forth, is not engaged in the business of selling liquors, within the meaning of an ordinance simply imposing a tax upon such business, we are satisfied that the great weight of authority is in accord with our conclusion.

Upon the question of the proper construction of the ordinance, it may be added that it appears to us to be a material fact, in determining the intent of the council in adopting the ordinance of January, 1908, that although substantially similar ordinances have been in force during all of defendant's existence as a club, defendant has never been required to have a license from the city. The brief of amici curiæ, in support of plaintiff's position, in fact states that the license ordinances have never been enforced against clubs of this kind, but the record available to us contains no information on this subject except as to defendant. But this fact as to defendant is alleged. As to defendant, we have an administrative construction of many years of similar ordinances, in accord with views announced by many courts, upon a question which all must concede was at least debatable,—a construction as to which the city council could not be deemed ignorant when it enacted the ordinance before us. If it had been intended by that body, in enacting the ordinance of January, 1908, that a license tax should be imposed on a bona fide social club so engaged, it is reasonable to assume that it would have made some change in the law, as it previously existed, to clearly and unmistakably show that it was intended to include it. See People v. Adelphi Club and Klein v. Livingston Club, supra. If it be deemed proper by the city of Los Angeles that bona fide social clubs, engaged in the transactions of the kind here involved, should pay a license tax, or be in any way subjected to the operation of reasonable regulations relative to the sale or disposition of intoxicating liquor, it will be a very simple matter for it to so provide by the use of language that would clearly show such an intent. While the question is not entirely free from doubt, we do not believe that any such intent is shown by the existing laws of the city.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to sustain the demurrer of defendant, with leave to plaintiff to amend his complaint, if he so desires.

We concur: Sloss, J.; Melvin, J.; Henshaw, J.

Shaw, J., by reason of being a member of the defendant club, deeming himself disqualified, does not participate herein. Lorgan, J., by reason of sickness, does not participate herein.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Beatty, Ch. J., concurring:

I concur in the judgment, but not with that assured conviction of the validity of my conclusion which, in a matter so important, I should wish to feel. If the cause were to be decided with sole reference to the terms of the ordinance, unaffected by any extrinsic circumstance, it would be impossible for me to say, in view of the admitted facts, that the defendant is not carrying on the business of a retail liquor dealer. The numerous decisions cited by its counsel in support of the opposite view are either distinguishable on what appear to me substantial grounds, or, where strictly in point, rest upon reasoning which, to my mind, is not satisfactory. If we had been called upon, shortly after its adoption, to give a construction to the ordinance of 1903 (of which the existing ordinance is, in every material particular, a mere re-enactment), I should not have entertained a doubt that the California Club was clearly within its terms.

But it is conceded that, during the whole period of five years between the adoption of the ordinance of 1903 and its re-enactment in 1908, no demand was ever made upon the club for the payment of a license tax; and it seems to be an unavoidable inference from this circumstance that it was the common understanding of the municipal authorities that the course of dealing between the club and its members and guests was not the carrying on of the business of retailing liquors. It was, in other words, a contemporaneous construction of the ordinance by those who enacted it, and the fact that it was re-enacted in the same terms seems to justify the conclusion that the intention of its framers was that it should have no wider operation than that to which it had been so long restricted.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF MINNESOTA EX REL. EDWARD T. YOUNG, Attorney General, Appt.,

v.

MINNESOTA CLUB, Respt.

(106 Minn. 515, 119 N. W. 494.)

Intoxicating Liquors — social clubs — license — "person."

1. A social organization, or club, incorporated under the laws of this state, is a "person," within the meaning of § 1510, Rev. Laws, 1905.

Headnotes by LEWIS, J.

Note. — See note to preceding case.

Same — necessity of license.

2. The distribution of intoxicating liquors in less quantities than 5 gallons by such a club to its members, for a consideration, though without profit, constitutes a "sale" within the meaning of that section, and is prohibited, unless protected by license as provided by law.

(Elliott and Jaggard, JJ., dissent.)

(January 2, 1909.)

APPEAL by relator from a judgment of the District Court for Ramsey County in defendant's favor in an action brought to determine defendant's right to retail intoxicating liquors without a license. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Edward T. Young, Attorney General and C. Louis Weeks, for appellant:

The transaction was a sale.

State v. Lockyear, 95 N. C. 633, 59 Am. Dec. 287; People ex rel. Stevenson v. Law & Order Club, 203 Ill. 127, 62 L.R.A. 884, 67 N. E. 855; State, Newark, Prosecutor, v. Essex Club, 53 N. J. L. 99, 20 Atl. 769.

The statutes required the club to take out a license.

South Shore Country Club v. People, 228 Ill. 75, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 519, 119 Am. St. Rep. 417, 81 N. E. 805, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 383; State, Newark, Prosecutor, v. Essex Club, supra; People v. Soule, 74 Mich. 250, 2 L.R.A. 494, 41 N. W. 908; State v. Boston Club, 45 La. Ann. 585, 20 L.R.A. 186, 12 So. 895; Martin v. State, 59 Ala. 34; Mohrman v. State, 105 Ga. 716, 43 L.R.A. 398, 70 Am. St. Rep. 81, 32 S. E. 143; State v. Easton Social, Literary, & Musical Club, 73 Md. 97, 10 L.R.A. 64, 20 Atl. 783; State v. Neis, 108 N. C. 787, 12 L.R.A. 412, 13 S. E. 225; State v. Lockyear and People ex rel. Stevenson v. Law & Order Club, supra.

Messrs. C. D. O'Brien and W. H. Lightner, for respondent:

The statute is intended to regulate the retail business or traffic in intoxicating liquors conducted for a profit, and is not applicable to a bona fide social club.

People v. Bird, 138 Mich. 31, 67 L.R.A. 424, 110 Am. St. Rep. 299, 100 N. W. 1003, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1062; State v. Orth, 38 Minn. 150, 36 N. W. 103; State ex rel. Patterson v. Bates, 96 Minn. 110, 113 Am. St. Rep. 612, 104 N. W. 709; People v. Adelphi Club, 149 N. Y. 5, 31 L.R.A. 510, 52 Am. St. Rep. 700, 43 N. E. 410; Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 224, 34 L.R.A. 94, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717, 35 Atl. 606; Com. v. Pomphret, 137 Mass. 564, 50 Am. Rep. 340; Com. v. Ewig, 145 Mass. 119, 13 N. E. 365; Seim v. State, 55 Md. 566, 39 Am. Rep. 419; 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

State ex rel. Bell v. St. Louis Club, 125 Mo. 308, 26 L.R.A. 573, 28 S. W. 604; State ex rel. Columbia Club v. McMaster, 35 S. C. 1, 28 Am. St. Rep. 826, 14 S. E. 290; Piedmont Club v. Com. 87 Va. 541, 12 S. E. 963; Tennessee Club v. Dwyer, 11 Lea, 452, 47 Am. Rep. 298; Barden v. Montana Club, 10 Mont. 330, 11 L.R.A. 593, 24 Am. St. Rep. 27, 25 Pac. 1042; Koenig v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 367, 47 Am. St. Rep. 35, 26 S. W. 835; State v. Austin Club, 89 Tex. 20, 30 L.R.A. 500, 33 S. W. 113; Manassas Club v. Mobile, 121 Ala. 561, 25 So. 628; State v. Boston Club, 45 La. Ann. 585, 20 L.R.A. 185, 12 So. 895; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 142; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. 2d ed. p. 361; Brown v. United States, 113 U. S. 568, 28 L. ed. 1079, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648; Donald v. Scott, 76 Fed. 554; Hardy v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 298, 87 S. W. 1038; Graff v. Evans, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 373; Com. v. Smith, 102 Mass. 144.

Mr. Jared How also for respondent.

Lewis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Does the serving of liquors to its members by the Minnesota Club, of St. Paul, subject the club to the necessity of obtaining a license, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 16, Rev. Laws 1905? The cause was argued upon the following agreed statement of facts:

"The Minnesota Club is a corporation organized solely for social purposes, and not for pecuniary profit, under the statutes of the state applicable to such organizations. It was created and has existed ever since 1884. It maintains a clubhouse building, which it owns. The articles of incorporation, constitution, and by-laws of said club are hereby referred to for greater certainty, and may be used on presentation of the question herein involved by either party. Ever since its organization said corporation has maintained its clubhouse, and carried on therein a restaurant, and served its members with meals and wines and liquors upon their request. It always has and maintains certain rooms and sleeping apartments for the use of its members, and is conducted as a bona fide social club. Its membership consists of resident and non-resident members, each of whom is elected under the provisions touching membership found in the constitution and by-laws. No person not a member of such club can enter upon its premises, or be entertained therein, save that nonresidents of Ramsey county may be admitted to the privileges of said club for a period not exceeding ten days, upon a written invitation of a member in good standing and a written card issued to such visitor. During the period of such visit, such visitor is entitled to all the privileges of the club, but the person introducing him is responsible for him. Residents of Ramsey county not members of the club may be entertained in one of the private dining-rooms of said club, at a dinner given by some member for not less than four persons, and such persons attending such dinner as such guests are not entitled to any of the privileges of the club whatever; nor may they enter upon any part of said club, except such private dining-room, and the entrance to and egress therefrom. Each member of said club, besides his initiation fees, pays annual dues; resident members, $60 per annum, and nonresident members, $30 per annum. The club transacts all its business in its corporate name, through regularly chosen officers. It furnishes its members and their guests with meals to order, also with cigars, or any kind of intoxicating liquor to order, but only serves liquor within the club by the drink, and therefore in quantities of less than 5 gallons. The meals, cigars, or liquors so served are taken from the common stock of such articles owned by the club, and are charged to the member ordering the same, at such price as will reimburse the club for the cost of the article furnished and the expense of the service; the aim being to make the club self-sustaining, but not to make a profit on its gross business. Members are required to pay their accounts for meals, cigars, or liquors monthly. Up to this time, no license for the sale of liquor has been required of said club by the city of St. Paul, in which said club is situated; but said club has always paid the special tax imposed by the United States government for the sale of liquors."

The learned trial court was of opinion that the object of this class of legislation has always been to control the traffic in liquors as a business, and has no application to a purely private social club, where the dispensing of liquors is a mere incident to the main purpose of the organization. We believe this is the first time in the history of this state that the courts have been called upon to construe the statute with reference to such organizations, and the importance of the question demands that it be considered from the various points of view suggested at the argument. The Minnesota Club is a corporation duly created and existing under the laws of this state. It is a legal entity, and, within its corporate powers, transacts business in the commercial world and with its members with the same effect as any other corporation. As a corporation the club purchases liquors at wholesale, keeps them in stock, and, upon application, furnishes its members liquor in quantities less than 5 gallons to be drunk upon the premises.' The trial court was of opinion that the drastic measures of the statute could not have been intended to apply to social clubs, for the reason that it would be detrimental to the purpose of such institutions, and subject them to such espionage and restrictions as to practically interfere with the main object of their existence.

From territorial times one continuing purpose runs through the legislative expression on this subject, and that is to prohibit absolutely the sale or dispensing of intoxicating liquors, less than a certain quantity, unless duly licensed. By chapter 8, p. 43, Laws 1849, the sale of intoxicating liquors without a license in quantities less than one quart was prohibited. This remained unchanged until 1858, when the amount was increased to 5 gallons, at which time the language of the statute was: "If any person or persons shall sell or barter any spirituous, vinous, or fermented or malt liquors, in less quantity or quantities than 5 gallons, without first having obtained license therefor," etc. Pub. Stat. 1849-1858, chap. 18, § 20. In the revision of 1866 (Gen. Stat. 1866, chap. 16, § 4) the prohibition was expressed as follows: "Whoever sells or barter any spirituous, vinous, fermented, or malt liquors in a less quantity than 5 gallons, without first having obtained license therefor," etc. The same provision was carried into the statutes of 1878 (Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 16, § 4), and keepers of drug stores, dispensaries, apothecary shops, or other business houses in any manner dealing in spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, for whatever purpose, were brought within the provisions of the law (§ 16). In 1866 (Laws 1866, chap. 40, p. 84) for the first time the provision prohibiting the sale of liquors at the State Capitol, and the hour for closing saloons, was introduced, and chapter 16, § 10, Gen. Stat. 1878, prohibited the sale to minors. In 1887, the license fee was regulated (Laws 1887, chap. 5, p. 40), and what is known as the "blind pig" law was enacted (Laws 1887, chap. 7, p. 44), and it was provided that pharmacists and druggists might dispense liquors, in good faith, for medicinal purposes, upon a written prescription of a reputable and duly licensed physician (Laws 1887, chap. 8, p. 45). By Laws 1889, chap. 21, p. 67, the sale of liquor in the vicinity of the State Fair Grounds was prohibited. Section 4, chap. 16, Gen. Stat. 1878, was carried into § 1993, Gen. Stat. 1894; but the revisers of 1905 condensed the various provisions, and § 1519, Rev. Laws 1905, is the statute now in force. It reads: "Any person who shall sell any intoxicating liquors in quantities less than 5 gallons, or in any quantity to be drunk upon the premises, except as herein: after provided, is guilty of a misdemeanor," etc. Students in any educational institution in the state, intoxicated persons, habitual drunkards, spendthrifts, and improvident persons are all placed under the protection of the law. The line separating the retailing from the wholesaling of intoxication liquors is a certain quantity,—5 gallons,—and brewers and wholesalers are not required to take out a license so long as they do not sell at retail.

As a result of the evolution of public sentiment on this question, as voiced in the legislation above outlined, it is evident that the unrestrained sale of intoxication liquor has been regarded as an evil, and that the public good requires that it should be restrained. Absolute prohibition has not been adopted as the most effectual method, but prohibition to a certain extent is the principle now established as the most effective method of restraint. Up to the present time the people have been satisfied to apply the principle of prohibition to a limited extent; viz. (1) that no liquor in any quantity, under any conditions whatever, shall be sold to certain persons, and none shall be sold in any quantity to any person within certain specified districts; (2) that no liquor shall be sold in quantities less than 5 gallons, or in any quantity, to be drunk upon the premises, unless licensed according to law. "Any person," as used in the statute, includes all persons and parties, unless excepted. There are no express exceptions in favor of social clubs, and, considering the history and purpose of the law, we are of opinion that no such exception is implied.

There are many decisions from the different state courts bearing upon the subject, and in several instances the statutes differ in some essential feature. In one class of cases the question turned upon whether a commercial club was a public place, within the meaning of a statute prohibiting unlawful games of cards in public places. Grant v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 527, 27 S. W. 127. The court was of opinion that the commercial club under consideration was not open to the public generally, and hence was not a public place, within the meaning of the statute. Koenig v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 367, 47 Am. St. Rep. 35, 26 S. W. 835, is to the same effect. There the statute made it a misdemeanor for any person to play at any game of cards at any house for retailing spirituous liquors, storehouse, tavern, inn, or any other public house, or in any street, highway, or other public place. It was held that a clubroom of a private incorporated social club, in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) which liquors were sold to members only, was not a public house for retailing spirituous liquors, within the meaning of the statute. Again, in State v. Austin Club, 89 Tex. 20, 30 L.R.A. 500, 33 S. W. 113, a license tax was imposed upon persons engaged or engaging in the business of selling spirituous liquors; and it was held that the law did not apply to a social club where liquors were sold to its members only; and the decision is based upon the ground that the tax was not intended to apply to any one not engaged in the selling of spirituous liquors as a business. The club was not engaged in the retail business, and hence it was not within the act. To the same effect is Manassas Club v. Mobile, 121 Ala. 561, 25 So. 628, where the statute required a license tax to be paid by persons or corporations trading or carrying on any business, trade, or profession, and it was decided that the club was not within the act, upon the ground that the business intended to be taxed was one carried on for a livelihood or profit. However, in Martin v. State, 59 Ala. 34, it was held that a commercial club was engaged in retailing liquors, within the meaning of the statute which prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors without a license; and the court called attention to the difference between that statute, which was aimed at any sale, and statutes with reference to the business of retailing as such.

A case often referred to is that of Piedmont Club v. Com. 87 Va. 540, 12 S. E. 963, where it was held that liquors kept by a club in its rooms, and served only to its members and their invited guests, without profit, was not a sale of intoxicating liquors within the meaning of an act which provided that no person, corporation, company, firm, partnership, or association should engage in the business of selling liquors, etc., without obtaining a license. The same view was taken in Barden v. Montana Club, 10 Mont. 330, 11 L.R.A. 593, 24 Am. St. Rep. 27, 25 Pac. 1042. In Seim v. State, 55 Md. 566, 39 Am. Rep. 419, the court was of opinion that the disposing of beer on Sunday to members of a social club was not in violation of a statute which prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors on the Sabbath; but in the later case of State v. Easton Social, Literary, & Musical Club, 73 Md. 97, 10 L.R.A. 64, 20 Atl. 783, it was distinctly held that a social club was within the meaning of the statute, which prohibited any person from selling spirituous liquors in certain districts in a certain county, and the court referred to Seim v. State, supra, as follows: "In that case the party was indicted for selling and disposing of beer on Sunday; and it was supposed that because the license laws had never been construed to apply to social clubs, that therefore the law restraining the sale and disposition of liquor on Sunday was not intended to apply to them. But no such reasoning can apply in this case. Here the law is an unqualified prohibition to everyone within the districts mentioned; and there can be no pretense that social clubs, such as the defendants in this case, were intended to be exempted from the operation of the law."

The case of State ex rel. Bell v. St. Louis Club, 125 Mo. 308, 26 L.R.A. 573, 28 S. W. 604, was decided upon the ground that a social club was not a "person," within the meaning of the dramshop act, to take out a license as a dramshop keeper. The decision seems to have been based upon the peculiar wording of the law. A dramshop is not a place where liquor is sold by a club incidentally to its members. A dramshop is a place where a party is engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors as a business. A similar case is State ex rel. Columbia Club v. McMaster, 35 S. C. 1, 28 Am. St. Rep. 826, 14 S. E. 290. The statute prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors, except as the same might be licensed by incorporated cities, towns, and villages, and permitted such authorities to grant licenses at retail, inside incorporated limits, to keepers of drinking saloons and eating houses apart from taverns, and required all such persons to expose their license to public view in the chief place of making sales, and that all such sales should be in a room fronting the public street, without any screen, curtain, or other device for preventing the passing public from fully viewing what may be transpiring within. The court was of opinion that social clubs were not within the scope of the statute, because they were not organized for the purpose of engaging in the business of dispensing liquors for profit.

As we understand the case of State v. Boston Club, 45 La. Ann. 585, 20 L.R.A. 185, 12 So. 895, it was decided upon the same general ground. The statute construed in Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 224, 34 L.R.A. 94, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717, 35 Atl. 606, reads as follows: That "it shall be unlawful to keep or maintain any house, room or place, hotel, inn or tavern, where any vinous, spirituous, malt or brewed liquors, or any admixture thereof, are sold by retail, except a license therefor shall have been previously obtained as hereinafter provided." [1 Pepper & L. Dig. 1894, p. 2700. § 1] It was held that, where the steward of a social club was authorized to purchase and distribute intoxicating liquors to its members without profit, this did not constitute a sale within the meaning of the act. The New York and Massachusetts courts have passed upon statutes similar to our own, and came to conclusions directly adverse to the view we entertain. The leading New York case is People v. Adelphi Club, 149 N. Y. 5, 31 L.R.A. 510, 52 Am. St. Rep. 700, 43 N. E. 410, where the statute under consideration provided that any person who should sell intoxicating liquors in less quantity than 5 gallons, to be drunk or used upon the premises, without a license, should be guilty of a misdemeanor. The court squarely decided that the sale of liquors by the club to one of its members was not a sale within the meaning of the act. In Massachusetts the statute read that no person should sell, or expose or keep for sale, spirituous or intoxicating liquors, except as authorized by law; and in Com. v. Pomphret, 137 Mass. 564, 50 Am. Rep. 340, it was decided that incorporated social clubs were not within the statute. This ruling was adhered to in Com. v. Ewig, 145 Mass. 119, 13 N. E. 365, where the only question for trial was the good faith of the club.

In the following cases the statutes involved did not materially differ from our own; and the position was distinctly taken that clubs were within the statutes, and that the distribution of liquor by a club to its members constituted a sale. In State, Newark, Prosecutor, v. Essex Club, 53 N. J. L. 99, 20 Atl. 769, the statute prohibited the sale of spirituous liquors in quantities not less than 5 gallons at any time, at any place within the city of Newark, without having a license. The Essex Club was incorporated under the laws of the state, and liquors were kept and furnished to members by the steward upon order therefor. Settlements were made at the end of each month, and no one but a member paid for liquors. There was no intention to make any profit, and the club was conducted in good faith, not intending to violate the liquor laws. It was held that the liquor belonged to the club, and that, when furnished to a member to be drunk upon the premises, a sale was effected within the meaning of the law. A social club incorporated under the laws of the state of Michigan (Laws 1887, p. 446, No. 313, § 2) is within the scope of the liquor laws, which define "retail dealers" as follows: "Retail dealers of spirituous or intoxicating liquors, and brewed, malt, and fermented liquors, shall be held and deemed to include all persons who sell any of such liquors by the drink, and in quantities of 3 gallons or less, or 1 dozen quart bottles or less, at any one time, to any person or persons." People v. Soule, 74 Mich. 250, 2 L.R.A. 494, 41 N. W. 903.

The supreme court of North Carolina, in State v. Lockyear, 95 N. C. 633, 59 Am. Rep. 287, held that the furnishing of liquor to the members of a duly incorporated club by its steward, without profit, constituted a sale of such liquor. To the same effect is State v. Neis, 108 N. C. 787, 12 L.R.A. 412, 13 S. E. 225. In Georgia the statute provided a penalty for keeping open a tippling house on the Sabbath day, and in Mohrman v. State, 105 Ga. 709, 43 L.R.A. 398, 70 Am. St. Rep. 74, 32 S. E. 143, the supreme court held that an incorporated social club was subject to the provisions of the act. In Alabama the statute prohibited the keeping open of a barroom or other place for the sale of liquors on Sunday, and the supreme court of that state in Beauvoir Club v. State, 148 Ala. 643, 121 Am. St. Rep. 82, 42 So. 1040, held that an incorporated private social club was within the purview of the act. The Maryland Club, a duly incorporated social club, was held to be subject to the penalty imposed by statute for selling liquors to its members on the Sabbath day. State v. Maryland Club, 105 Md. 585, 66 Atl. 667. In South Dakota the statute required every person engaged in selling liquors to annually pay a certain sum for license; and the court held that an incorporated commercial club was subject to the provisions of the act; that the club was the owner of the liquor dispensed to its members; and that the method of distribution by means of checks, upon which settlement was made from time to time, constituted a sale, although the business was conducted without profit. State v. Mudie (S. D.) 115 N. W. 107. The supreme court of Illinois has also passed upon this question, and held that a similar arrangement for the distribution of liquor among the members of a duly incorporated social club constitutes a sale. People ex rel. Stevenson v. Law & Order Club, 203 Ill. 127, 62 L.R.A. 884, 67 N. E. 855. To the same effect is South Shore Country Club v. People, 228 Ill. 75, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 519, 119 Am. St. Rep. 417, 81 N. E. 805, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 383.

As we understand the Pennsylvania, New York, and Massachusetts decisions, they follow the principle first announced in the English case of Graff v. Evans, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 373, decided in 1882. From the meager report of the facts in that case it does not appear whether the Grosvenor Club was an incorporated organization or a partnership; but the court took the position that the liquor distributed by the club to its members did not belong to the club as a legal entity, but was the property of the members of the association in common, and hence, when the manager or steward delivered the liquor to one of the members, it did not constitute a sale, for the reason that a party cannot be charged with selling to himself property which he already owns. In a later English case, Newell v. Hemingway, 58 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 46, the club was a limited company organized for the purpose of providing a clubhouse, hotel, and other conveniences for the use of the club. Newell, not a member, furnished liquors to the members of the club, for which he was paid. Lord Coleridge, Ch. J., was of opinion that liquors constituted a part of the refreshments, one of the purposes for which the club was organized, and that Newell was merely acting as the agent or representative of the directors in distributing the liquor, and that such distribution did not constitute a sale by him. Manisty, J., concurred, upon the ground that the liquors belonged to the members of the club, and that the distribution thereof among the members, by a designated party, did not constitute a sale by the manager of the club to the members. In a still more recent case—Davies v. Burnett [1902] 1 K. B. 666—an attempt was made to hold a waiter of a working-men's club criminally liable for selling liquors to the members. The court followed Graff v. Evans, supra, and assumed that the liquor was owned in common by the members of the club, and the particular question under discussion was whether the waiter was entitled to furnish liquor to one of the members, through the agency of his wife, to be taken from the premises; and the court held that he was not liable for so doing. In the Pennsylvania, New York, and Massachusetts cases, the clubs were certain corporations, legally constituted under the state laws; and we cannot accept the conclusion that, under such circumstances, the liquor did not belong to the club, but was owned by the members in common. In People v. Adelphi Club, supra, it was stated that, while the property and supplies were technically owned by the club, yet each member was in equity an equal owner in common. We fail to see the force of this argument. If such a corporation is authorized to purchase and own the property necessary to carry on its business, the title thereto vests in the corporation to no less an extent than does title to property owned by any corporation engaged in any line of business.

It will thus be seen that the cases relied upon by respondent either follow the English rule, that the distribution of intoxicating liquors to club members does not constitute a sale, for the reason that the members are the joint owners of the property and are merely distributing to themselves property which they already own, or are based upon peculiar statutes which fairly indicate that the legislature only intended to make the license law apply to the retail of intoxicating liquors, where it was carried on as a business for profit as a means of livelihood. Whatever may be the proper application of the statute to voluntary associations, where property is held in common, the English rule has no application where the organization is a legally constituted corporation. The statute makes no express exception in favor of such corporations, and, considering the purpose sought to be accomplished in restraining the distribution of intoxicating liquors, as expressed in the plain terms of our statute, we fail to discover any implied exceptions.

Reversed.

Elliott, J., dissenting:

Instead of proceeding as in ordinary cases and charging a violation of the criminal law, the parties stipulated the facts, as authorized in civil cases by § 4286, Rev. Laws 1905. The proceeding, then, can be sustained only on the theory that the club is charged with maintaining an unlicensed drinking place, which may be abated as a nuisance by injunction or other legal proceedings. It follows that the judgment about to be entered determines that the Minnesota Club is conducting an unlicensed drinking place which is a public nuisance. The statute provides that every person who directly or indirectly, by himself or by combining with others, shall keep an unlicensed drinking place, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50, or imprisonment in the county jail for not less than thirty days. The Minnesota Club was authorized under the authority of the state for the purpose stated in its charter, and for twenty-four years it, like other social clubs of the same character, has existed without any one discovering that it was a public nuisance and all its members criminals. I feel very certain that the liquor license laws were never intended to apply to such a club. If the practical construction, which for more than a generation has been placed on the statute, is wrong, it is a very easy matter for the legislature so to declare.

The opinion of the court rests on a very narrow and literal construction of the language of a single section of a statute, which itself constitutes but a part of a body of legislation designed to regulate the retail liquor business. The United States government, for the purpose of raising revenue, levies a tax on all sales, and leaves the matter of the regulation thereof to the state. Minnesota has not made the drinking of liquor a crime. It does not even require a license from those who desire to sell intoxicating liquor at wholesale. Now, the sale of a pint of whisky can be no more inherently contrary to public policy than is the sale of five gallons of the same article. The reasons which justify freedom in one case and stringent regulation in the other are found in the different conditions under which the sales are made. Experience has shown that the unregulated sale of liquor at retail leads to the development of undesirable places, which become the resorts of evil-doers and centers of disorder. The state may, by virtue of its general police power, prohibit the traffic entirely, or attempt to control the evil by merely restricting and regulating it. In view of the divided sentiment of the community as to the extent of the evils which result from the traffic, it has been the policy of this state to allow the business to be carried on under carefully defined restrictions as to persons, places, times, and facilities for inspection and control.

Without proper police supervision, the retail liquor traffic would be intolerable. To be endurable, it must be conducted under the eyes of the authorities; and such supervision necessitates extra expense and trouble, the burden of which should be borne by the traffic instead of the general public. In order to cover this expense, those who engage in the business are required to secure a license and pay, for the privilege, an amount which will fairly reimburse the public for the extra expense and trouble incident to the regulation. From the concessions made in the record presented in this case, it is apparent that what the state is here seeking is revenue, and not regulation. But the Minnesota statute requiring a license for certain kinds of sales is a police, and not a tax, measure. Its purpose is regulation, not revenue. Claussen v. Luverne, 103 Minn. 491, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 698, 115 N. W. 643; Leavitt v. Morris, 105 Minn. 170, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 984, 117 N. W. 393; Rochester v. Upman, 19 Minn. 108, Gil. 78; State v. Cassidy, 22 Minn. 312, 21 Am. Rep. 765; State v. Deusting, 33 Minn. 102, 53 Am. Rep. 12, 22 N. W. 442; State v. Funk, 27 Minn. 318, 7 N. W. 359; State ex rel. Young v. Robinson, 101 Minn. 277, 112 N. W. 269. The license fee is imposed, not as a tax, but as an incident of the police power. Rochester v. Upman, supra. The justification of the exercise of the police power is found in the necessity for the regulation of the retail liquor business—not in the mere fact that A, sells to B, a gill, instead of 5 gallons, of whisky.

A study of the Minnesota legislation upon this matter makes it perfectly clear that the purpose was to frame a body of laws which should control and regulate the retail liquor traffic when conducted with a view to profit. That idea has always been in the mind of the court. As said in State v. Orth, 38 Minn. 150, 36 N. W. 103: "All the provisions of the laws in regard to procuring the license, the contents of the license, and the regulating the business, point unequivocally to the retail trade, . . . and, taking the laws as a whole, we conclude the legislature did not intend to depart from the former policy of the state, and require licenses for any but the retail trade." Similar language was used in State ex rel. Krebs v. Jones, 88 Minn. 27, 92 N. W. 468, and State ex rel. Patterson v. Bates, 96 Minn. 110, 113 Am. St. Rep. 612, 104 N. W. 709. Chapter 16, Rev. Laws. 1905, when read as a whole, cannot be considered in any other light. It contemplates that there are certain persons who desire to engage in the business of selling intoxicating liquors at retail. It opens with the general statement, that "any person who shall sell any intoxicating liquor in quantities less than 5 gallons, or in any quantity to be drunk on the premises, except as hereinafter provided, is guilty of a misdemeanor." The words "sell" and "sale" are declared to include all barter, gifts, and all means of furnishing liquor in violation or evasion of the law. The general prohibition must be read in the light of what follows in the same statute. A pharmacist may sell intoxicants on the prescription of a physician, and any other person who is duly licensed may sell at certain times and places to certain persons only. Certain persons only may be licensed. The conditions show that the legislature had in mind the selling of liquor at retail. Otherwise, why so carefully provide for an investigation into the character of the licensee? Why limit the right of the licensee to sell at any place other than that referred to in the license?

The applicant must file with the proper officer a written application, stating the place for which a license is desired and the date from which it is to run. The officer must then give two weeks' published notice of the application, specifying the applicant, a description of the room for which the license is desired, and a time for a hearing on the question whether the application shall be granted. Application for what? For the privilege of selling a pint of liquor? Certainly not. The applicant must file a bond in the sum of $2,000, conditioned that he will not do certain specified things, and generally observe the law. This contemplates that the applicant is going into the retail liquor business, and that the public is interested in the character of the applicant, as well as the place where the business is to be carried on. The character of the applicant is supposed to be of vital importance, and this can be so only on the theory that he is to be licensed to carry on a business. Hence it is provided that ". . . no license shall be granted to any person of known bad character, to the keeper of any house of prostitution, or place frequented by prostitutes or other disorderly persons, to the keeper of any gambling house or place where," etc. The places where sales may not be made are carefully defined, and the times when sales may be made are carefully limited. Sales may not be made on Sunday, or on special or general election days, or on any day between 11 o'clock P. M. and 5 o'clock A. M. The persons to whom sales are not to be made are also enumerated: "Any person duly licensed by the county board, or by the proper authorities of the municipality for which such license is issued, may sell such liquors in the room named in the license, . . . in the manner and to the persons allowed by law, but not otherwise." The form of the license is prescribed, in order that the holder may be able to claim no rights free from the restrictions imposed by the statute. Every such license shall be for one year from its date, unless sooner annulled, shall specify the room in which sales are allowed, and shall state that the person named is authorized to sell such liquor only in such place and at the time, in the manner, and to the persons allowed by law. That the legislature was thinking of saloons and the retail liquor business appears from the provision that, in cities of the first class, "not more than five such licenses for places on one side of any block within the patrol limits of such city, and fronting on such limits, shall be granted."

The Minnesota Club is a corporation, and cannot secure a license in its corporate name. A corporation cannot legally take a license in the name of an agent or employee. It follows that the club cannot legally secure a license, and must cease to supply liquor to its members. I can find no authority in the statute for granting a license to sell intoxicating liquors in private. The statute contemplated public sales at a designated place, which must at all times be open to police visitation. There can be no privacy in a saloon. The ordinance of the municipality with reference to hours of closing, arrangement of rooms, screens, etc., applies to all public drinking places. The very purpose of such legislation is to prohibit privacy and retirement. If social clubs are obliged to secure liquor licenses, they must comply with the statutes and ordinances enacted for the government and regulation of the holders of such licenses. They become public drinking places, and subject to the laws regulating the same. All this, it is true, is of no consequence, if the legislature intended that such clubs should not serve liquor to members or their guests; but, when seeking the legislative intention, it is proper to consider the consequences of any particular construction. The same legislature which enacted the license laws also authorized the incorporation of such clubs, and if the construction contended for by the state would produce results which are destructive of the clubs, it is fair to conclude that such a construction was not contemplated by the legislature.

The great weight of authority is contrary to the opinion expressed in the majority opinion. It is the established law in England that the distribution of liquors to club members does not constitute a sale within the meaning of the license laws. It is useless to try to explain the cases away by fine distinctions between the statutes. In Graff v. Evans (1882) L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 373, Graff, the steward of the Grosvenor Club, was indicted for selling liquor to a member of the club under a statute (License Act 1872 [Stat. 35 & 36 Vict. chap. 94] § 3) which provided that "no person shall sell, expose for sale, by retail, any intoxicating liquor without being duly licensed to sell the same." In holding that the transaction was not within the statute, Mr. Justice Field says: "The section must be construed by looking at the language used, and taking a large view of the . . . [language used]. The legislature has come to the conclusion that it is inadvisable that intoxicating liquors should be sold anywhere without a license. The enactment is limited to 'sales' of intoxicating liquors, and only seems aimed at sales by retail dealers, because the wholesale trade is not touched." In Newell v. Hemingway, 58 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 171, the manager of a limited company, the shareholders of which constituted the membership of the club, was held not liable criminally under the same statute for selling liquor to the members. In Davies v. Burnett [1902] 1 K. B. 666, it was held that "where intoxicating liquor is sold by a servant of a bona fide workman's club, not licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors, to the duly authorized agent of a member, for consumption by the member off the club premises, no offense is committed against § 3 of the licensing act 1872, and the seller cannot be convicted for selling intoxicating liquors by retail without a license."

The same conclusion was reached by the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts. The statute (Mass. Pub. Stat. 1882, chap. 100, § 1) contained the usual provision that "no person shall sell, or expose or keep for sale, spirituous or intoxicating liquor, except as authorized by this chapter." In Com. v. Pomphret, 137 Mass. 564, 50 Am. Rep. 340, it was held that the steward of a bona fide social club could not be convicted for selling liquors without a license. Mr. Justice Field said: "It is well known that clubs exist which limit the number of the members, and select them with great care, which own considerable property in common, and in which the furnishing of food and drink to the members for money is but one of the many conveniences which the members enjoy. . . . One inquiry always is whether the organization is bona fide a club with limited membership, into which admission cannot be obtained by any person at his pleasure, and in which the property is actually owned in common, with the mutual rights and obligations which belong to such common ownership, under the constitution and rules of the club, or whether either the form of a club has been adopted for other purpose, with the intention and understanding that the mutual rights and obligations of the members shall not be such as the organization purports to create, or a mere name has been assumed without any real organization behind it." Com. v. Ewig, 145 Mass. 119, 13 N. E. 365, was determined upon the question whether the club was a bona fide club, and not a mere device to cheat the government of a license fee.

In People v. Adelphi Club, 149 N. Y. 5, 31 L.R.A. 510, 52 Am. St. Rep. 700, 43 N. E. 410, it was held that the furnishing of liquor to its members upon their written orders, at a price designed to cover the purchase price and disbursements of service, by a bona fide social club regularly organized under the statute for a legitimate purpose, to which the furnishing of liquor to its members is merely incidental, and having a limited and selected membership, does not constitute a sale within the meaning of the liquor license law. So in Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 224, 34 L.R.A. 94, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717, 35 Atl. 606, it was held that an incorporated club, organized and conducted in good faith with a limited and selected membership, owning its property in common, formed for social purposes, to which the furnishing of liquor is merely incidental, may furnish liquor to its members without first procuring a license. The court quotes, with approval, the following statement from Black on Intoxicating Liquors, § 142: "Upon the whole, therefore, notwithstanding some conflicting rulings, the rational conclusion is that the intent must govern. On the one hand, if the object of the organization is merely to provide members with a convenient method of obtaining a drink whenever they desire it, or if the form of membership is no more than a pretense, so that any person, without discrimination, can procure liquor by signing his name in a book, or buying a ticket or chip, thus enabling the proprietor to conduct an illicit traffic, then it falls within the terms of the law. But, on the other hand, if the club is organized and conducted in good faith, with a limited and selected membership, really owning its property in common; and formed for social, literary, artistic, or other purposes, to which the furnishing of liquor to its members would be merely incidental, in the same way and to the same extent that the supplying of dinners or daily papers might be,—then it cannot be considered as within either the purpose or letter of the law."

The cases are reviewed in State ex rel. Bell v. St. Louis Club, 125 Mo. 308. 26 L.R.A. 573, 28 S. W. 604, where it was held that a corporate club is not a "person," within the meaning of the statute regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, and that the sale of liquor by a bona fide social club not incorporated for profit is not a sale within the meaning of the law. "It seems to us," said Gantt, P. J., "that, inasmuch as this club has been organized since 1878, it is not created for profit, and that the legislature must have been cognizant that many similar organizations had been created under the same statute, and, if it had been the intention to require them to take out a liquor license, it would have made some provision for it, or provided a license tax suitable to the case, as they cannot, under the dramshop act, exercise their other corporate rights. The club has pursued this method of providing refreshments for some fifteen years. Its right seems never to have been challenged before, although the dramshop act has remained substantially the same all these years."

Further discussion of the authorities is not possible with reasonable limitations of time and space. The views expressed in the cases cited from courts of the very highest standing are sustained in the following cases: Piedmont Club v. Com. 87 Va. 541, 12 S. E. 963; Seim v. State, 55 Md. 566, 39 Am. Rep. 419; State ex rel. Columbia Club v. McMaster, 35 S. C. 1, 28 Am. St. Rep. 826, 14 S. E. 290; Barden v. Montana Club, 10 Mont. 330, 11 L.R.A. 593, 24 Am. St. Rep. 27, 25 Pac. 1042; Koenig v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 367, 47 Am. St. Rep. 35, 26 S. W. 835; State v. Austin Club, 89 Tex. 20, 30 L.R.A. 500, 33 S. W. 113; and, in effect, State v. Boston Club, 45 La. Ann. 585, 20 L.R.A. 185, 12 So. 895. The courts of Illinois, Michigan, New Jersey, and North Carolina have reached a contrary conclusion. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The law as declared in England, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, and other states has prevailed in Minnesota since social clubs were known. The statutes have always, so far as my knowledge extends, been held not to apply to such organizations. This certainly has been the construction placed on them by the Executive Department. It is true that the exact question has not before been presented to this court; but the trial courts have generally, if not universally, held that the question is always as to the good faith of the club. I am not aware that it has been found particularly difficult to apply the law upon this theory. Judge Kelly's decision leaves the law as it has always been in this state. It seems to me that the change, if desirable, should be made by the legislature, and not by the court.

I therefore respectfully dissent.

Jaggard, J., dissenting:

I concur with the reasoning and result of the dissenting opinion.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

THOMAS F. HOUREN

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, & ST. PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(236 Ill. 620, 86 N. E. 611.)

Proximate cause — fire — interference with apparatus.

1. The wrongful act of a railroad company in permitting a train to stand across a street in a city cannot be held not to be the proximate cause of the burning of a dwelling house because the fire appa-

Case Note. — Duty of steam railroad or street railroad company to avoid interference with extinguishment of fires.

The earlier cases upon this subject are collected in the note appended to the case of American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 382.

In Phenix Ins. Co. v. New York C. & H. R.R. Co. 122 App. Div. 113, 106 N. Y. Supp. 696 (reported since that note), the court refused to disturb a verdict against a railway company, although it was a disputed question whether the engineer and fireman of a train were informed of the progress of a fire before arriving at the point where it was raging, it appearing that, as they approached a point where lines of fire hose were laid across the track, they failed to observe signals given them to stop the train, but ran over and cut the hose, and, in consequence thereof, the operations of the firemen were delayed so that the fire, which tus could not reach it on account of the obstruction because a prudent man would not have foreseen that the burning of that house would follow the wrongful act.

Same — spread.

2. Interference with the fire departments reaching the fire may be found to be the proximate cause of the burning of a building to which the fire was communicated from that in which it originated.

Same — official neglect.

3. A railroad company cannot avoid liability for loss of a building by fire on account of its delaying the fire department by maintaining a train across the street because the policemen might have cleared the crossing.

Evidence — extinguishment of fire — sufficiency.

4. That firemen would have been able to prevent the destruction of a building by fire had they not been interfered with may be found by the fact that the buildings on fire were small and burned slowly, and that, but for the interference, they would have reached the scene seventeen minutes before the building in question began to burn, and would have been fully equipped to fight the fire.

Appeal — variance.

5. A question of variance between pleading and proof cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

Railroad — obstruction of fire department — negligence.

6. The violation by a railroad company of a statute forbidding the obstruction of street crossings in cities is negligence, as was then under control, became unmanageable, and extended to and destroyed property that otherwise would have been saved.

But, where a freight train was stopped at a point where it was customary and necessary to obtain orders before proceeding further, without the train crew being aware of the fact that the plaintiff's building was burning, or of the intention of the fire department to lay hose across the track, and its journey was resumed immediately upon receiving orders to that effect, the liability of the railway company for the destruction of the plaintiff's building was denied, although it appeared that apparently the train crew refused to move the train sooner when requested by the fire department so to do. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scruggs & Echols (Ala.) 49 So. 390. The court said that: "in the legitimate use of its own tracks, in the orderly course of business, the defendant, under the evidence in this case, was not by law charged with the duty to move its train of cars otherwise than according to its own rules and regulations. . . . In respect to legal responsibility to a third person, there is, we think, a distinction to be drawn between an active and a passive use, in the enjoyment of one's property rights. To illustrate: If, in the present case, the fire hose had been laid from the hydrant, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

matter of law, as against the owner of a house destroyed by fire, because of failure of the fire department, whose progress was interfered with by the obstruction, to reach it in time to extinguish the fire.

Appeal — preliminary statement.

7. Objections to the time of making statements as to what counsel intended to prove cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

(December 15, 1908.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Branch Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Municipal Court of Chicago in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the value of plaintiff's house, which was alleged to have been destroyed through defendant's wrongful obstruction of the fire department. Affirmed.

Statement by Scott, J.:

This is an appeal by the Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Railway Company from a judgment of the branch appellate court for the first district, affirming a judgment for the sum of $600, recovered by Thomas F. Houren for his own use and for the use of the Buffalo Commercial Insurance Company, appellee, in the municipal court of Chicago, in an action for damages for the destruction of a dwelling house owned by appellee, by fire, which destruction is alleged to have been caused by the negligence of appellant. The branch appellate court across the tracks of the defendant, to the fire, and the defendant's servants, with knowledge of the existing conditions as to the fire and the laying of the hose, had wilfully or negligently run the train of cars over the hose, destroying it, and thereby prevented the extinguishing of the fire, a legal liability for such conduct would have arisen. That would have been an active use of one's property in violation of the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. On the other hand, if (as was the case here) the defendant's train of cars was already rightfully standing on its tracks intervening the hydrant and the plaintiff's burning house, and the defendant merely failed or refused to promptly move its train out of the way, when requested so to do, in order that the hose might be laid across its tracks, there would be no case for the application of the above-quoted legal maxim. In the latter instance the use would be merely passive. The law imposes no duty on one man to aid another in the preservation of the latter's property, but only the duty not to injure another's property in the use of his own." However, McClellan, J., dissented, saying that, in his opinion, none of the cases supported the conclusion of the majority of the court.

granted to appellant a certificate of importance. The negligence of appellant charged by appellee is set out in the following bill of particulars filed in the municipal court: "Plaintiff's claim is for loss and damage by fire sustained by him to his frame building, which formerly stood on rear of lot 12, block 21, being the northwest corner of Sixty-Third and Bloomingdale avenues, Chicago, Cook county, Illinois (Galewood), and which was destroyed by fire on the morning of October 3, 1906, through no fault or neglect of the plaintiff, but by reason of the negligence of the defendant in blocking and closing of the crossing at Sixty-Third avenue, and said defendant's railroad tracks, in the said city of Chicago, Cook county Illinois, by leaving and permitting to remain across said public highway, a train consisting of a large number of freight cars belonging to, or in the charge, custody, and control of, the defendant, whereby the fire department of the said city of Chicago were detained and prevented from passing over said public highway for a long space of time, and, in the meantime, the fire, which was in an adjacent building, was communicated to the plaintiff's building, and destroyed and damaged same, whereas, had the said fire department been able to pass over said crossing upon arriving there, the fire would have been extinguished before it was communicated to plaintiff's property, and by reason of such negligence," etc. Ad damnum, $950.

From the record it appears that the building in question was located about 150 feet west of Sixty-Third avenue, on the north side of Bloomingdale road, in the city of Chicago. It was a small frame cottage. On the west side of this cottage were two frame cottages, each of about the same size as this one. The three were separated by spaces of 6 feet. At about 1:40 o'clock, on the morning of October 3, 1906, the building west of the one here involved was discovered to be on fire. The nearest station of the fire department in this part of the city was located about 3 miles east. Within five minutes after the fire was discovered an alarm was received at this station, and the men of the department, with an engine, hose cart, truck, and other appliances started at once for the fire. Both the burning building and the station of the fire department were located on the south side of the railroad tracks of appellant, which ran east and west through this portion of the city. While the shortest route from the station to the fire would have been, at all times, on the south side of the railway tracks, in order to secure a better road, the firemen drove north on Grand avenue until they reached a street north of appellant's tracks, where they turned west. When they turned south, they came to a crossing of the appellant's tracks, a short distance north of the fire. They found this crossing blockaded by box cars to which no engine was attached, extending two blocks east and one block west of the crossing. The cars were coupled together and the brakes were set. Evidence was offered by appellant which tended to show that its track from this point east for some distance was considerably downgrade, and that, by uncoupling the train at the crossing and releasing the brakes on the cars, those upon the east of the crossing would have moved east without the aid of an engine and the crossing could have thus been opened. With the firemen at the crossing were two policemen, who testified that they knew of these facts, and had seen cars moved at this point in that way. The fire apparatus reached the crossing at ten minutes after 2 o'clock. The fireman immediately notified appellant to remove the cars from the crossing; and it was about thirty minutes later when the engine of the appellant arrived and made an opening at the crossing to let the firemen through. In the meantime, Houren's house had taken fire, and was entirely destroyed before the firemen could control the fire. This house took fire about 2:35 o'clock, and it is not disputed that, if the crossing had not been blockaded, the firemen would have reached the scene of the fire about 2:12 o'clock. It was a damp, foggy night, and there was no wind blowing. Immediately east of the burning buildings, on the corner of the same block, was located a two-way fire hydrant, to which the firemen attached hose after they arrived. At the close of all the evidence, the court denied the motion of appellant for a directed verdict. A number of errors have been assigned.

Mr. John A. Russell, with Mr. O. W. Dynes, for appellant:

A railway company is not liable to the owner of property for an interference by it with the efforts of a city fire department to extinguish fire, unless the railroad company is shown by the evidence to have had actual or constructive knowledge of the existence of the fire at the time it committed the act of interference.

American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 382, 75 C. C. A. 47, 143 Fed. 789, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 626; Bosch v. Burlington & M. R. Co. 44 Iowa, 402, 24 Am. Rep. 754; Mott v. Hudson River R. Co. 1 Robt. 585; Metallic Compression Casting Co. v. Fitchburg R. Co. 109 Mass. 277, 12 Am. Rep. 689; Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v. McCaskill, 75 Ark. 133, 70 L.R.A. 680, 112 Am. St.

Rep. 48, 86 S. W. 997; Dale v. Grant, 34 N. J. L. 142; Byrd v. English, 117 Ga. 191, 64 L.R.A. 94, 43 S. E. 419.

Messrs. Bates, Harding, & Atkins, for appellee:

The blockading of the street for a period greater than permitted by statute constituted negligence as matter of law.

Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Mochell, 193 Ill. 211, 86 Am. St. Rep. 318, 61 N. E. 1028; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Voelker, 129 Ill. 555, 22 N. E. 20; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Goyette, 133 Ill. 21, 24 N. E. 549; Morris v. Stanfield, 81 Ill. App. 270; Belleville v. Hoffman, 74 Ill. App. 503; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gunderson, 174 Ill. 495, 51 N. E. 708; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Then, 159 Ill. 537, 42 N. E. 971.

The negligent blockading of the street by the railroad company resulted in the destruction of the plaintiff's property, and for that destruction the railroad company is liable.

Rock Falls v. Wells, 65 Ill. App. 557; Rock Falls v. Wells, 169 Ill. 224, 48 N. E. 440; Joliet v. Shufeldt, 144 Ill. 408, 18 L.R.A. 760, 36 Am. St. Rep. 463, 32 N. E. 969; Metallic Compression Casting Co. v. Fitchburg R. Co. 109 Mass. 277, 12 Am. Rep. 689; Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v. McCaskill, 75 Ark. 133, 70 L.R.A. 680, 112 Am. St. Rep. 48, 86 S. W. 997; Kiernan v. Metropolitan Constr. Co. 170 Mass. 378, 49 N. E. 648; Scott v. Hunter, 46 Pa. 192, 84 Am. Dec. 542; Geo. C. Murphy Pottery Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. (C. C. N. D. Ohio); White v. Colorado C. R. Co. 5 Dill. 429, Fed. Cas. No. 17,543.

Scott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In support of the motion for a directed verdict, it is said that there is no evidence tending to show that the obstruction of the street by the appellant was the proximate cause of the destruction of the house owned by Houren. Section 77, chap. 114, Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1908, forbids a railroad company obstructing a public highway by stopping any train thereon, for a longer period than ten minutes. Appellant's train was standing over the street in violation of this statute. Appellant regards the damages as being too remote to be considered the proximate result of this violation of the law, and contends that a prudent and experienced man, fully acquainted with all the circumstances which existed at the time the train was left upon the street, would not have thought it reasonable that the house in question would have been destroyed by fire, as a consequence of the obstruction of the street; and that, for this reason, the damages are not such as could be recovered on account of 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the unlawful act in question. It is not necessary that the burning of this particular house could have been foreseen. It is only damages of the character of those which occurred, to wit, damages by fire, that must have been within the range of the consequences of the act reasonably to be expected. It seems clear to us that, if a prudent man of experience had reflected upon the probable consequences of entirely closing up this street in a great city, he would have foreseen, first, that to so close the street would obstruct and delay public travel thereon; second, that among the travel liable to be so obstructed and delayed would be the passage of teams, engines, and other appliances of the fire department; third, that, if the travel of the fire department was so obstructed and delayed, any fire which the men of that department were seeking to reach would be more extensive and do greater damage than if the obstruction and delay had not taken place.

It is then contended that the fire, and not the obstruction of the street, was the proximate cause of the destruction of the building. The fire began in the cottage next to the one here involved, and the fire, in fact, did destroy the Houren building; but, if the obstruction occasioned the delay, and if but for the obstruction the fire department would have been able to control and extinguish the fire before it reached this building, then the obstruction is to be regarded as an intervening and concurrent cause of the burning of the building, and in law would, with the fire itself, form the proximate cause, and appellant, under such circumstances, would be liable even though the fire might be regarded as the primary cause. Rock Falls v. Wells, 169 Ill. 224, 48 N. E. 440.

It is then said that the policemen who were present at the obstruction when the fire engine reached there knew that, by uncoupling the cars and releasing the brakes, the cars would, on account of the slope of the track, move off the crossing without any propelling force other than the force of gravity, and that appellant could not be expected to foresee that the policemen, in the event of the fire department's teams and vehicles approaching the crossing, would fail to adopt this measure to get the cars off the street. This is entirely too far-fetched. It was not the business of the police to keep the cars off the street; and, besides, there is nothing in this record to indicate that a reasonable man might not have supposed that the result of so setting the cars in motion would result in greater disaster than would the delay of the fire department. The evidence shows that, when the teams reached the obstruction, they had been running several miles, and were very much exhausted.

There is proof which tends to show that, passing to the east or west of the crossings obstructed by this train of cars, another railroad crossing, over which the men with the fire equipment could have passed to the south, would not have been reached until they had gone several blocks from the crossing at which they waited. The firemen might reasonably have expected to be able to obtain the assistance of an engine of appellant within a short time to remove the cars unlawfully upon the street.

It is next contended that there is no proof that the fireman would have been able to prevent the flames destroying the building had the delay not occurred. It is not possible to prove absolutely what the result of the fire department's efforts would have been had the progress of the men not been delayed. The proof is, however, that a fire hydrant belonging to the city was conveniently located, and that the department, had the delay not occurred, would have been fully equipped to fight the fire in the ordinary way. The men, with the engine and other appliances of the fire department, reached the blockade not later than 2:10 A. M., and, but for the obstruction they would have reached the fire in two or three minutes thereafter. The Houren cottage did not take fire earlier than 2:30 A. M., and, except for the unlawful act of appellant, the fire department would have been on the scene of the fire at least seventeen minutes before that cottage began to burn. On account of the weather conditions, the fire burned slowly. The cottages were small wooden buildings, 14 by 20 feet in dimensions, and a story and a half in height. We fail to see how it can be reasonably argued that this proof does not tend to show that the fire department would have been able to prevent the destruction of the building, had no delay occurred at the crossing. So far as this particular question is concerned, the case is not different from Kiernan v. Metropolitan Constr. Co. 170 Mass. 378, 49 N. E. 648, where the fire department, in attempting to attach a hose to a hydrant, were unable to do so on account of certain acts of the defendant. In that case a recovery was permitted for property which might have been saved had the firemen been able to promptly connect a hose with the hydrant, and there, as here, it could not be said with absolute certainty that they would have been able to prevent the destruction of plaintiff's property, had no interference occurred.

It is urged that there is a variance between the proof and the statement of the cause of action filed, in reference to the location of the property which was destroyed. No such variance was pointed out in the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

municipal court, where the difficulty, if it existed, could have been readily obviated by an amendment. The point will therefore not be considered here.

The violation of the statute was negligence as a matter of law. In this respect the case is distinguished from those upon which appellant principally relies. As was well said by the branch appellate court here, the case is "as if the defendant had, at the moment when the fire department was about to pour a flood of water on the original fire, interposed, by superior force directly applied, to prevent this being done until too late to save the plaintiff's cottage." The motion for a peremptory instruction was properly denied.

The action of the municipal court in taking judicial notice of the existence of an ordinance of the city, general in its nature, which prohibited appellant leaving these cars on this crossing for a period longer than five minutes, is challenged. Section 317, chap. 74, Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1908, provides that the municipal court shall take judicial notice of such ordinances. Any question that might otherwise arise as to the validity of this statute has been waived by appellant by taking the judgment of the appellate court upon other alleged errors.

Complaint is made of a statement of counsel for appellee in regard to what he would prove, which statement was made while he was conducting the examination of a witness. It does not appear that the trial court was given opportunity to act upon any objection in relation thereto.

The defendant's refused instruction No. 2 was, in substance, the same as defendant's given instruction No. 7. Defendant's refused instruction No. 3 was designed to advise the jury of the considerations to be given weight in determining whether the blockade of the street was the proximate cause of the injury. It was not in accord with the views which have been above expressed in this opinion, and was properly refused.

The judgment of the Appellate Court will be affirmed.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

MARTIN EMERICH OUTFITTING COMPANY, Piff. in Err.,

v.

SIEGEL, COOPER, & COMPANY.

(237 Ill. 610, 86 N. E. 1104.)

Contract — space in building — termination.

A contract for space, for a term of years, on a particular floor of a building occupied by a department store, in which to conduct a particular line of business in connection with the general enterprise, which is to be paid for by a monthly rental and a percentage of sales in excess of a certain amount, is terminated by the destruction of the building, and the beneficiary cannot insist on the allotment of space in the new building to which the department store business is moved.

(December 15, 1908.)

ERROR to the Appellate Court, First District, to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Chicago Municipal Court in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for breach of contract. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Newman, Northrup, Levinson, & Becker and Arthur B. Schaffner, for plaintiff in error:

The contract between the parties should be fairly and liberally construed with regard to all its stipulations, and in the light of the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time it was made, the objects which they had in view, and the construction which they have themselves given to it.

17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 18, 23; Merriam v. United States, 107 U. S. 437, 27 L. ed. 531, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 536; Russell v. Allerton, 108 N. Y. 288, 15 N. E. 391; Worcester Gaslight Co. v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 353; Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Eastern R. Co. 57 C. C. A. 635, 121 Fed. 609; A. B. Dick Co. v. Sherwood Letter File Co. 157 Ill. 325, 42 N. E. 440; Illinois Terra Cotta Lumber Co. v. Owen, 167 Ill. 360, 47 N. E. 722; Torrence v. Shedd, 156 Ill. 202, 41 N. E. 95, 42 N. E. 171; Fitzgerald v. First Nat. Bank, 52 C. C. A. 276, 114 Fed. 474; Work v. Welsh, 160 Ill. 468, 43 N. E. 719.

The subject-matter of the contract was not the particular space designated, but the right and duty of plaintiff to conduct the furniture department of defendant's business in a building occupied by it.

Dickinson v. Hart, 142 N. Y. 183, 36 N.

Note. — The general principle upon which the case above reported is based, that, under a contract which, by the intent of the parties, requires for its performance the continued existence of a specific subject-matter, the destruction of such subject-matter operates as a discharge where neither party has assumed such risk, is well established. A search has failed to reveal the existence of any other decision as to whether a contract for allotment of space in a department store is to be considered as necessarily contemplating the continued existence of the building in which the space is allotted, so that destruction of the building will operate to terminate the contract. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

E. 801; Corn v. Board of Education, 39 Ill. App. 446; Mayer v. Temple Beth El, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1013.

If the contract was susceptible of substantial performance by defendant, it was its duty to perform substantially if a literal performance became impossible.

Wald's Pollock, Contr. Williston's ed. 542; 2 Parsons, Contr. 8th ed. 786, 787; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 148; Bacon v. Cobb, 45 Ill. 47; Williams v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 217, 84 Am. Dec. 333; Turner v. Goldsmith [1891] 1 Q. B. 544; The Teutonia, L. R. 4 P. C. 171, 41 L. J. Prob. N. S. 57; White v. Mann, 26 Me. 361.

If the obstacle to the performance of the contract by defendant was only temporary, then, when such temporary obstacle was removed, defendant was obliged to perform, or respond in damages.

1 Wharton, Contr. § 313; Keystone Lumber & Salt Mfg. Co. v. Dole, 43 Mich. 370, 5 N. W. 412; Hadley v. Clarke, 8 T. R. 259; Baylies v. Fettyplace, 7 Mass. 325.

Mr. Augustus Binswanger, for defendant in error:

Defendant's contract to allot floor space was terminated by the destruction of the building then occupied.

Pollock, Contr. 263; 2 Chitty, Contr. 11 Am. ed. 1076; Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 Best & S. 826; Walker v. Tucker, 70 Ill. 527; Siegel, C. & Co. v. Eaton & P. Co. 165 Ill. 550, 46 N. E. 449; Huyett & S. Mfg. Co. v. Chicago Edison Co. 167 Ill. 233, 59 Am. St. Rep. 272, 47 N. E. 384; Smith v. Preston, 170 Ill. 179, 48 N. E. 688; Wells v. Calnan, 107 Mass. 516, 9 Am. Rep. 65; Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, 7 Am. Rep. 415; Shear v. Wright, 60 Mich. 159, 26 N. W. 871; Howell v. Coupland, L. R. 9 Q. B. 462; Appleby v. Myers, L. R. 2 C. P. 651; Anglo-Egyptian Nav. Co. v. Rennie, L. R. 10 C. P. 271; Kerr v. Merchants' Exch. Co. 3 Edw. Ch. 323; McMillan v. Solomon, 42 Ala. 364, 94 Am. Dec. 654; Stockwell v. Hunter, 11 Met. 456, 45 Am. Dec. 220; Winton v. Cornish, 5 Ohio, 477; Shawmut Nat. Bank v. Boston, 118 Mass. 131; Alexander v. Dorsey, 12 Ga. 12, 56 Am. Dec. 443; Waite v. O'Neil, 34 L.R.A. 550, 22 C. C. A. 248, 47 U. S. App. 19, 76 Fed. 408; Taylor, Land. & T. 7th ed. § 520.

Dunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In an action of assumpsit the court directed a verdict for the defendant, on which judgment was rendered in its favor, which was affirmed by the appellate court. A writ of error is prosecuted to reverse the judgment of affirmance.

In 1890 the Martin Emerich Outfitting Company, the plaintiff in error, was engaged in the retail furniture business at 261 and 263 State street, in Chicago, occupying six floors and the basement at those numbers. On July 12, 1890, it entered into a written contract with Siegel, Cooper, & Company, the defendant in error, whereby, after reciting that the plaintiff in error was desirous of offering for sale, in the premises of defendant in error, in the following described space, viz., the entire third floor of the buildings known as 211, 213, and 215 State street, and the south 25 feet front of the third floor of the main building, corner State and Adams streets, being 25x80 feet, more or less, a full line of furniture, mattresses, springs, and all articles strictly appertaining to such a business, and the defendant in error was willing to grant the use of said space to the said party of the second part on certain terms and conditions, it was agreed that the defendant in error should set apart for the use of the plaintiff in error the space above mentioned, for the sale, by the plaintiff in error, of furniture, mattresses, springs, and articles strictly appertaining to the furniture business; and that the plaintiff in error should use said space for said purpose; should keep it in like clean and good condition as other parts of the building at all times; should carry, at all times, a first-class stock of furniture, and sell the same for cash, and at as low a price as the same quality should be sold by any other merchant or dealer in the same line within a radius of 2 miles, but should not, at any time, be compelled to sell any article below cost price; should conduct the business in a business-like manner; should employ such help only as should be satisfactory to the defendant in error, which help must comply with, and be subject to, the regulations governing the general employees of defendant in error; should enter into no contracts nor incur any liabilities in the name of the defendant in error; should not erect any signs or make any display distasteful to the defendant in error; should report at the office of defendant in error each business day the gross sales of said department, should keep account of all the transactions of the department in books which should always be open to the inspection of defendant in error; should pay for all expenses of said furniture department, and furnish a cashier, who should receive all moneys for sales made in said furniture department, and should turn them over to the defendant in error at the close of each business day. Settlement was to be made each week for all sales during the preceding week, at which time a statement of receipts and expenses was to be rendered. Plaintiff in error agreed to furnish all wagons and horses needed in the delivery and handling of the goods sold in said furniture department, the wagons to be of uniform color and bear the name of "Siegel, Cooper, & Co.—Furniture Department." in lettering like that used on all the delivery wagons of the defendant in error; to deliver promptly and free of charge, within the city limits, all furniture sold in the department, and to advertise the department in the daily papers, in the name of Siegel, Cooper, & Company, to the extent of not less than $5,000 during the first year of the agreement, and a like amount, or more, during each year thereafter, all advertisements to be submitted to and approved by the defendant in error. The advertising was to be paid for with the advertising bills of the defendant in error, and charged to the plaintiff in error at same rate as paid by the defendant in error. The plaintiff in error agreed to pay the defendant in error for the use of said space, on the first day of each month, beginning with September 1, 1890, the sum of $500 per month. Should the gross sales in the department, after September 1, 1891, exceed $75,000 during any year, then the plaintiff in error agreed to pay, in addition to the monthly rental, 5 per cent of the amount of sales in excess of $75,000, at the end of the fiscal year. The plaintiff in error further agreed to purchase from the defendant in error all the furniture, and all articles pertaining to the furniture department, then in the premises of the said defendant in error. It was further agreed, that in case of death or the dissolution of the plaintiff in error, the defendant in error should have the right and power to cancel the agreement on giving thirty days' notice to the legal representative of the plaintiff in error. The defendant in error agreed to furnish, in connection with said space, like heat, light, and elevator service as it furnished, in the regular course of business, to its other departments. The agreement was to continue in force for five years from the 1st day of September, 1890, with the privilege, on the part of the defendant in error, to cancel it and retake possession of said space at any time when the plaintiff in error, in the opinion of the defendant in error, should fail to fulfil any of its agreements; but the agreement was not to be canceled nor possession of said premises taken by the defendant in error until after written notice, to the plaintiff in error, in what manner the agreement had been violated, in order to enable the plaintiff in error to rectify any act of omission or commission in or connected with said furniture department business. A failure, after such written notice, to immediately rectify such an act of omission or commission, or a wilful repetition of such or similar acts, should authorize the cancelation of the agreement by the defendant in error upon giving the plaintiff in error thirty days' notice of its intent to cancel this agreement. From September 1, 1890, the plaintiff in error occupied the space designated, for several months, at the expiration of which time a change was made, whereby the plaintiff in error gave up a part of the space on the north and received space on the south, somewhat greater, and the monthly payment of $500 was increased to $615. On August 3, 1891, the buildings mentioned in the contract were totally destroyed by fire. The defendant in error, in a few days, moved into other quarters, at the corner of Wabash avenue and Adams street, and later moved to the corner of State and Van Buren streets, where it continued to conduct its business. Plaintiff in error requested to be allowed to occupy space in the new location, but was refused, the defendant in error claiming that the destruction of the building had put an end to the contract; and this is the vital question in the case.

In contracts to whose performance the continued existence of a particular person or thing is necessary, a condition is always implied that the death or destruction of that person or thing shall excuse performance. Thus, contracts for the performance of personal services terminate upon the death of the party by whom the services are to be performed. Smith v. Preston, 170 Ill. 179, 48 N. E. 688. A covenant, by a lessee of a coal mine, to work the same, for the period of ten years, under his lease, is discharged by the exhaustion of the mine. Walker v. Tucker, 70 Ill. 527. Under a contract to place certain machinery in a particular building, the building and the machinery having been destroyed by accidental fire before the completion of the contract, it was held that both parties were excused from further performance of the contract. Appleby v. Myers, L. R. 2 C. P. 651; Siegel, C. & Co. v. Eaton & P. Co. 165 Ill. 550, 46 N. E. 449; Huyett & S. Mfg. Co. v. Chicago Edison Co. 167 Ill. 233, 59 Am. St. Rep. 272, 47 N. E. 384. A contract to let, at a stated daily price, a music hall for giving a series of concerts, was held to be conditional upon the continued existence of the hall, and was put an end to by the destruction of the hall by fire. Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 Best & S. 826. A lease of rooms in a building is terminated by the destruction of the building by fire (Kerr v. Merchants' Exch. Co. 3 Edw. Ch. 333; Alexander v. Dorsey, 12 Ga. 12. 56 Am. Dec. 443; Winton v. Cornish, 5 Ohio, 477), and, in case a new building is erected, having a similar space in the same location as 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) in the old building, the tenant is not entitled to occupy it (Stockwell v. Hunter, 11 Met. 456, 45 Am. Dec. 220).

The plaintiff in error contends, however, that this contract was not for the occupation of any particular space in a specified building, but was rather for the conducting of a department of the business of the defendant in error. It may be conceded that the relation of the parties was not that of landlord and tenant, but their agreement concerned the occupation of certain space in the building. The plaintiff in error had the right to occupy that space, and no other. The defendant in error had no right to demand that the plaintiff in error should conduct the business elsewhere. When the contract was entered into, Siegel, Cooper, & Company was engaged in business at the corner of State and Adams streets, and the plaintiff in error had a large store and warerooms not far away, on State street. The parties for their mutual benefit, contracted that the plaintiff in error should take charge of the furniture department of the defendant in error. Their motives and intentions can only be known from the writing to which the contract was reduced. By that writing it is recited that the plaintiff in error desired to offer for sale, in certain specified parts of the premises of the defendant in error, a line of furniture, etc.; and it was the use of these particular premises for this purpose which defendant in error granted. No other space in the building or in any other building was contemplated. The defendant in error would have had a no right to require plaintiff in error to change to the fourth floor or the second. The plaintiff in error had the right, for five years, to insist upon occupying that particular space, and the defendant in error had no right to require it to go to another. The parties, apparently, did not contemplate any change of location. The defendant could not voluntarily have removed to another location and required the plaintiff in error to carry on the furniture business in the new location.

The plaintiff in error insists that the contract must be construed in the light of the circumstances surrounding the parties and of the objects they had in view, and that the primary object in view was the carrying on the furniture business by the plaintiff as a part of the business of the defendant. This is an assumption contrary to the language of the instrument, which provides, in the last clause, only that the privilege of the plaintiff in error to conduct said furniture department should be exclusive of any other like department in said premises. It is manifest that the idea of a change of location was not in the minds of the parties in making the agreement. It was supposed the business would continue at the same place during the whole term of the agreement. The burning of the building, and its effect upon the rights of the parties, were not in their minds. The difficulties of providing either for such contingency or the case of a voluntary removal are manifest. If the building and the stock of defendant in error were totally destroyed, would it be required to start in business again? Could it start on a much smaller scale, or would it be required to carry as large a stock and occupy as extensive quarters as before the fire? Would the plaintiff in error be obliged to follow it wherever it might choose to go? Within what distance should it relocate its business, and how far would the plaintiff in error have to follow? What proportion of the reduced or increased space would the plaintiff in error be entitled to and would it be obliged to pay for? All these questions would necessarily have to be decided, but the contract made no provision for them. If they were thought of by the parties, they were intentionally omitted because of the difficulty of providing for them.

If the contract was, as we hold, a contract for the conduct of the business in a particular place, then it could not be substantially performed by carrying on the business in another place. To require the plaintiff in error to conduct the business, or to require the defendant in error to permit it to be conducted, at a place and under conditions different from those mentioned in the agreement, would not be a substantial performance of the contract they had entered into, but an imposition of terms to which they had not agreed. The continued existence of the building was a necessary condition to the performance of the agreement, and its destruction relieved the parties from further obligation to perform the contract.

The judgment of the Appellate Court is affirmed.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, the following additional opinion was handed down on February 4, 1909:

The plaintiff in error, in a petition for a rehearing, calls our attention to the statement, in the original opinion, that the vital question in the case is whether the destruction of the building put an end to the contract, in connection with the alleged fact that the principal building in which the plaintiff in error was conducting the furniture business, under its contract with the defendant in error, was not destroyed by the fire. The cause was decided here upon the record made in the trial court, and was 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

tried in that court upon the case made by the pleadings. The two original counts did not mention the fire, but declared upon the refusal of the defendant in error to set apart to the plaintiff in error, the portion of the premises described in the contract between them. Two additional counts, after averring the taking possession by the plaintiff in error of the premises described in the contract, alleged their destruction by fire, the occupation of other premises by the defendant in error, and its refusal thereafter to set apart, for the use of the plaintiff in error in carrying on said furniture business, any space in the premises then occupied by the defendant in error. No mention is made, in the pleadings, of any right of plaintiff in error, before the fire, to occupy any premises other than those mentioned in the contract, or of its occupation of any other premises; nor is any such right made the basis of any claim against the defendant in error. Naturally, therefore, no such right could be considered either by the trial court or by this court.

It is also said that the defendant in error collected and retains the payment, specified in the contract, for the month of August, 1891, though the fire occurred on the 3d day of that month, and that the defendant cannot retain this payment and the contract, at the same time, be regarded as canceled as of the date of the fire. The destruction of the building terminated the contract. Whether or not the plaintiff in error could recover the overpayment is a question which does not arise, as the declaration is not based upon such claim.

Rehearing denied.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES M. HINES, Plff. in Err.,
v.
FRANK M. STAHL.

(— Kan. —, 99 Pac. 273.)

Execution — property subject — intoxicating liquors.

1. Intoxicating liquor is not subject to seizure on execution, because the statute forbids its sale except by certain persons, for restricted purposes, and upon affidavit of the buyer showing the occasion for his purchase.

Headnotes by MASON, J.

Case Note. — Right to levy legal process upon intoxicating liquors.

This note is confined to the question of the right to levy legal process upon intoxicating liquors, excluding, however, the right

Intoxicating liquors — seizure — replevin — presumptions.

2. Where replevin was brought for intoxicating liquors, and, after obtaining possession thereof, the plaintiff dismissed his action, evidence that, at the commencement of the litigation, the defendant held the property as city marshal under a warrant issued by the police court, justifies a presumption, in the absence of anything to suggest the contrary, that he was acting under an ordinance passed in aid of the prohibitory law, authorizing the seizure and destruction of liquors kept for sale in violation of the statute.

Same — return — alternative remedy.

3. In such a case, if the defendant is found to be entitled to a return of the property, he is also entitled to a judgment for its full value in case a return cannot be had.

to search for and seize under process intoxicating liquors kept in violation of law.

Seizure and sale upon attachment or execution.

The right to levy legal process upon intoxicating liquors for the debts of the owner has been denied on the ground that, as the sale thereof is prohibited, except by those duly licensed, an officer of the law cannot make his seizure effectual by judicial sale, and, as such sale is forbidden by implication, the seizure is likewise prohibited. Nichols v. Valentine, 36 Me. 322; Ingalls v. Baker, 95 Mass. 449; Kiff v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 117 Mass. 591, 19 Am. Rep. 429; Barron v. Arnold, 16 R. I. 22, 11 Atl. 298. See, however, contra, Wildermuth v. Cole and Nutt v. Wheeler, infra, as well as the cases following them.

And, for the same reason, the right to attach such liquors for the owner's debts has been denied under a law declaring all liquors contraband, unless sold by a state dispensary, notwithstanding the liquor is seized in the original packages. Lanahan v. Bailey, 53 S. C. 489, 42 L.R.A. 297, 69 Am. St. Rep. 884, 31 S. E. 332.

Where it is declared by statute that "no action of any kind shall be maintained . . . for the recovery or possession" of intoxicating liquors, they cannot be seized on attachment for the owner's debts, when kept for sale in violation of law. Nichols v. Valentine, supra.

But it has been said that such statute applies only to actions for the recovery of possession of intoxicating liquors when liable to seizure or forfeiture, or intended for sale in violation of law. Dolan v. Buzzell, 41 Me. 473; Lord v. Chadbourne, 42 Me. 429, 66 Am. Dec. 290.

It was held in Standard Oil Co. v. Angeline, 6 Kan. App. 312, 51 Pac. 70, that the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors, except by a licensed pharmacist for medicinal, scientific, and mechanical purposes, prevents the levy of execution thereon in satisfaction of the owner's debts. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Office — expiration — effect.

4. In such a case a recovery by the defendant is not defeated by the fact that his term of office has expired.

(December 12, 1908.)

ERROR to the District Court for Shawnee County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover possession of a quantity of intoxicating liquors which had been seized by defendant as city marshal and chief of police of Topeka. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Otis E. Hungate and C. A. Magaw, for plaintiff in error:

The defendant has only a mere possessory interest in the liquors, and is not entitled to the full value thereof.

So, intoxicating liquors, when sold in a lawful manner in a prohibition state, may not be attached for the vendor's debts. Niles v. Fries, 35 Iowa, 41.

It was held in McCullough v. Large, 20 Fed. 309, that whisky in a government bonded warehouse cannot be seized on execution against its owner, even though the officer offers to pay the taxes due thereon, as, being held for the internal revenue tax by the government and in its possession, it cannot be disturbed by legal process. See, however, May v. Hoaglan, infra.

It was held in Equitable Loan & Secur. Co. v. Edwardsville, 143 Ala. 182, 111 Am. St. Rep. 34, 38 So. 1016, that a stock of intoxicating liquors owned by a municipality, and kept for sale in a public dispensary, being held for public purposes, is not subject to execution at the suit of a corporate creditor.

In holding that unfermented beer, which will require from four to five weeks time and the expenditure of labor to place it in a marketable condition, it not subject to levy under judicial process, the decision, in Herman Goepper & Co. v. Phoenix Brewing Co. 115 Ky. 708, 74 S. W. 726, was based upon the ground that property that has not a salable quality is not subject to seizure under judicial process.

But, on the other hand, it has been held that an officer may sell intoxicating liquors at a judicial sale by virtue of a writ of attachment or execution, and therefore it may be seized for the owner's debts. Wildermuth v. Cole, 77 Mich. 483, 43 N. W. 889; Nutt v. Wheeler, 30 Vt. 436, 73 Am. Dec. 316.

And he may do so without obtaining a license and paying the tax imposed upon the business of selling intoxicating liquors, as, in making such sale, he is not within the letter or spirit of the law. Wildermuth v. Cole, supra.

And it was said in Williams v. Troop, 17 Wis. 403, that an administrator might sell, in the course of administration, intoxicating liquors belonging to the intestate.

Guy v. Doak, 47 Kan. 366, 27 Pac. 968; Shahan v. Smith, 38 Kan. 474, 16 Pac. 749; Wolfley v. Rising, 12 Kan. 535; Friend v. Green, 43 Kan. 167, 23 Pac. 93; Moore v. Shaw, 1 Kan. App. 103, 40 Pac. 929.

Mr. W. H. Cowles, for defendant in error:

The defendant is entitled to judgment for the return of the property, or the full value thereof in case a return cannot be had.

Karr v. Stahl, 75 Kan. 387, 98 Pac. 669; Garrett v. Wood, 3 Kan. 231; Werner v. Graley, 54 Kan. 383; 38 Pac. 482; Edwards v. Bricker, 66 Kan. 241, 71 Pac. 587; Lemp v. Fullerton, 83 Iowa, 192, 13 L.R.A. 408, 48 N. W. 1034; Funk v. Israel, 5 Iowa, 438; P. Schoenhofen Brewing Co. v. Armstrong, 89 Iowa, 673, 57 N. W. 436; Central Nat. Bank v. Brooke, 71 Kan. 769, 81 Pac. 498; Burchett v. Purdy, 2 Okla. 391, 37 Pac. 1053; Irwin v. Walling, 4 Okla. 131, 44 Pac. 219; Rose v. Cash, 58 Ind. 278; Whitford v. Horn, 18 Kan. 455; State v. Harris, 38 Iowa, 242.

Mason, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Charles M. Hines brought an action against Frank M. Stahl to recover the possession of a quantity of intoxicating liquors. An order of delivery was procured, upon which the property was taken from the defendant and delivered to the plaintiff. Thereupon the plaintiff dismissed his action. A trial was then had in accordance with the statute (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 4618) to without first obtaining a license therefore, it not being any more necessary for him than it would be for a sheriff when selling liquors taken upon an execution.

So, a statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, except by those licensed to sell them for medicinal, mechanical, and chemical purposes, "and for no other use or purpose," does not prevent the seizure thereof upon mesne process in the same manner as other property of a debtor. State v. Johnson, 33 N. H. 441.

Where intoxicating liquors are shipped into a state, consigned to one selling them in violation of law, they may be seized upon attachment for debts while awaiting delivery in a freight warehouse, the statute regulating traffic in intoxicating liquor not affecting it as property subject to judicial sale. Howe v. Stewart, 40 Vt. 145.

And the right of creditors to attach intoxicating liquors, although kept for sale in violation of a prohibitory law, is recognized in Tucker v. Adams, 63 N. H. 361.

Notwithstanding it is declared unlawful to sell or barter for a valuable consideration, directly or indirectly, or to give away or furnish intoxicating liquor in a county where local option has been adopted, it is lawful for an officer to sell, upon a writ of fieri facias, liquors seized under a chattel mortgage. Fears v. State, 102 Ga. 274, 29 S. W. 463. The reasons given by the court for its decision being that the local-option law does not destroy the right of property in intoxicating liquors, therefore it remains subject to a judgment against the owner in like manner, and to the same extent, as other property; and neither does the act by its terms, or necessary implication, apply to sales under judicial process.

However the court further said if collusion to evade the law, existed between the mortgagor and mortgagee and, just before it went into effect, the former added large quantities of liquor to his stock, and then suffered a foreclosure of the mortgage and the issue of execution thereon, and, under the guise of a judicial sale, attempted to sell and continued the sale of small quantities of liquor from day to day, it would be re- 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) strained as an abuse of judicial process. Ibid.

Where a distiller has a large number of barrels of intoxicating liquors in a government warehouse, it may be seized under execution for his debts, where the government tax thereon has been paid by him and the lien of the government therefor been released. May v. Hoaglan, 9 Bush, 171. See McCullough v. Large, supra.

Notwithstanding intoxicating liquors are purchased with the intent to be sold in violation of law, they become the property of the purchaser, and, if in the possession of his agent, or another, cannot be attached for the latter's debts. Monty v. Arneson, 25 Iowa, 383; Priest v. Pinkham, 18 N. H. 520; Barron v. Arnold, 16 R. I. 22, 11 Atl. 298. Contra. Donohue v. Maloney, 49 Conn. 163.

Seizure on writ of replevin.

The case of HINES v. STAHL was followed and applied in Lake v. Stahl (Kan.) 99 Pac. 275.

It was held Cottonwood v. Austin (Ala.) 48 So. 345, under an Alabama public dispensary law prohibiting a municipality purchasing intoxicating liquors except "for cash only," that a vendor who sold a municipality liquors upon credit, with an understanding that, if any part thereof were not sold or not paid for, they might be returned upon the closing of the dispensary, could not recover, in an action of detinue, the remainder of the liquor on hand that was unpaid for.

Where the vendor of intoxicating liquors has knowledge of the vendee's purpose to sell in violation of the law, the former cannot exercise the right of stoppage in transit upon the vendee's insolvency, and replevin the liquors so sold, where the statute prohibits actions for the recovery of possession of intoxicating liquors. Howe v. Stewart, supra.

Under a statute prohibiting the maintenance of any action for the recovery of the possession of intoxicating liquors sold with an intent to enable any person to violate determine the defendant's right of possession. He testified that, when the action was begun, he was the city marshal and chief of police of the city of Topeka, and held the liquor under a warrant against Hines issued by the police court; that his term of office had since expired. This was substantially all the evidence. Judgment was rendered for the return of the property, and for its value, as fixed in the replevin affidavit, in case a return could not be had. The plaintiff prosecutes error.

The principal attack is made upon that part of the judgment allowing the plaintiff to recover the full value of the property in case a return could not be had. The argument is this: Even conceding that under the authority of Karr v. Stahl, 75 Kan.

387, 98 Pac. 669, the plaintiff was entitled to an order for a return of the goods, the measure of his recovery in case a return could not be had was the value, not of the property itself, but of his interest in it. He had the burden of proving the extent of his interest. His only evidence was that he held it under an ordinance. He did not introduce the ordinance, and the court cannot take judicial notice of its character. Therefore he failed to show that his interest, whatever it might have been, was of any value, and the judgment should have been limited to a return of the property. The fault of this reasoning lies in its ignoring the effect to be given to the presumptions that arise from the circumstances of the case. It must be presumed the law, it was held in Marienthal, Lehman & Co. v. Shafer, 6 Iowa, 226, that the vendor of liquor intended to be sold by the vendee in violation of a prohibitory law cannot recover possession by replevin, when seized on attachment for the vendee's debts, although the former claims title thereto.

Where intoxicating liquor has been seized for an agent's debt, the owner may recover possession thereof by replevin from the officer seizing it, notwithstanding it is provided by statute that no action of any kind shall be maintained for the possession of liquors held, purchased, or sold in violation of law. Barron v. Arnold, supra. The court based its decision upon the ground that it was not the intent of the law to strip intoxicating liquor of its character as property, and, although kept in violation of law, it cannot be taken to pay another's debt.

And, for the same reason, it was held in Monty v. Arneson, supra, that intoxicating liquors, although kept for sale in violation of law, when seized for the debt of its custodian, might be recovered by replevin by the owner, notwithstanding the statute forbids the maintainance of such action, except where the person owning or possessing such liquors with a lawful intent has been illegally deprived thereof.

The contrary, however, under similar circumstances, was held in Donohue v. Maloney, supra, where such actions were forbidden by statute.

The local option law of Texas, providing for the search and seizure of liquors held in violation of law, expressly permits the owner thereof, when so seized, to maintain replevin therefor at any time before trial, by giving a bond conditioned that, if such liquor is condemned as a nuisance, the value thereof, with costs and fees, will be paid to the state. Meyers v. State (Tex. Civ. App.) 105 S. W. 48.

Where a law, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, provides for the seizure and forfeiture thereof, as well as a full hearing before a court, after public notice of the proceedings, where all persons claiming an interest therein may show cause why the liquor should not be condemned, and, if not subject to forfeiture, that it shall be restored to the person entitled thereto,—the owner or claimant of liquors seized thereunder cannot recover possession by an action of replevin, the remedy provided being ample. O'Neal v. Parker, 83 Ark. 133, 103 S. W. 165; Funk v. Israel, 5 Iowa, 450; Weir v. Allen, 47 Iowa, 482; Fries v. Porch, 49 Iowa, 351; Lemp v. Fullerton, 83 Iowa, 192, 13 L.R.A. 406, 48 N. W. 1034; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v. Fullerton, 83 Iowa, 760, 50 N. W. 56; P. Schoenhofen Brewing Co. v. Armstrong, 89 Iowa, 673, 57 N. W. 436; Greentree v. Wallace, 77 Kan. 149, 93 Pac. 598; State v. Barrels of Liquor, 47 N. H. 369.

And the rule above stated has been applied notwithstanding liquors are shipped into the state and remain in the original packages, and, therefore, being an article of interstate commerce, the owner, a nonresident, is entitled to have them restored to his possession, as his rights are amply protected by the hearing provided for by the search and seizure act. Lemp v. Fullerton; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v. Fullerton; and P. Schoenhofen Brewing Co. v. Armstrong,—supra.

And, in Senior v. Pierce, 31 Fed. 625, the Federal court held, following the Iowa decisions, that an action of replevin would not lie to recover possession of intoxicating liquors seized under the Iowa prohibitory law, notwithstanding it is alleged they were imported in original packages for a lawful purpose, with no intent to evade the laws of the state.

And the doctrine that replevin will not lie to recover intoxicating liquors seized by an officer for violation of the law is recognized in State v. Harris, 38 Iowa, 242.

And in Ring v. Nichols, 91 Me. 478, 40 Atl. 329, the right to maintain replevin for intoxicating liquors so seized was denied, where it was provided by statute that liquor so seized "shall not be taken from the custody of the officer by a writ of replevin or other process while the proceedings . . . provided are pending; and [that a] final judgment in such proceedings is in all cases that the defendant's official conduct was regular and lawful, unless something is offered to indicate the contrary. The statute (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 2499) authorizes a city ordinance providing for the seizure and destruction of intoxicating liquors kept for sale in violation of law. And that is the only way, so far at least as now occurs to the court, or has been suggested, by which the city marshal could legally acquire the possession of intoxicating liquors in virtue of his office. Doubtless, if the officer had levied an execution on the property to satisfy a pecuniary demand (assuming that a police court may issue an execution as a means to enforce the collection of a fine or costs), he would have been required to show the amount of the claim, and, if he had a bar to all suits for the recovery of any liquors seized."

Where an officer is authorized by law, upon receiving a warrant to search for and seize liquors held in violation of law, to keep them until final action shall be had on the warrant, the owner thereof cannot recover possession from the officer by replevin while the process is pending. Allen v. Staples, 6 Gray, 491.

But where a law, authorizing the search for and seizure of liquor unlawfully held, fails to provide for notice of the hearing to declare it forfeited, one claiming title thereto may maintain replevin against an officer holding under a search warrant. Re Massey, 56 Kan. 120, 42 Pac. 365.

And where a prohibitory liquor law fails to provide a remedy for one from whom intoxicating liquor is taken by mistake, or which he rightfully held, he may replevin it from an officer seizing it in the honest discharge of his duty, notwithstanding the statute provides for public notice of the seizure, and requires any person claiming the liquor to appear and make such claim in a given time, but fails, however, to provide for the return of liquor improperly seized. Moore v. Ewbanks, 66 S. C. 374, 44 S. E. 971.

As it has been held that a statutory provision, that "no action of any kind shall be maintained . . . to recover possession" of intoxicating liquors, applies only when kept for an unlawful use (see Dolan v. Buzzell, 41 Me. 473, and Lord v. Chadbourn, 42 Me. 429, 66 Am. Dec. 290), when it does not appear that liquors shipped into, and stored within, a state for safe keeping are intended for unlawful use, the owner may recover possession by replevin from one who has seized it on the ground that it is kept in violation of law, as the prohibitory liquor law does not prevent one acquiring property in intoxicating liquors when kept for his own use, or transported through the state. Preston v. Drew, 33 Me. 558, 54 Am. Dec. 639.

It was held in Sullivan v. Stephenson, 62 Ill. 290, that intoxicating liquors, which have been seized under a void ordinance authorizing a search and seizure of the same, may be recovered by replevin. And intoxicating liquors which are seized under an unconstitutional law may be replevied from an officer, where the law permits such action to be maintained to recover property exempt from execution when unlawfully seized. Cooley v. Davis, 34 Iowa, 128.

But in Karr v. Stahl, 75 Kan. 387, 98 Pac. 669, the right of one from whom intoxicating liquor had been taken upon a search warrant issued under a void municipal ordinance providing for the seizure and destruction of liquor unlawfully kept, to replevin it from the officer making the seizure, was denied on the ground that the replevin statute did not apply to property taken "in execution on any order or judgment against the plaintiff . . . or any other mesne or final process" against him; it being said that ample remedy had been provided for testing the validity of any law, process, or judgment without recourse to an action of replevin.

And it was held in Musgrave v. Hall, 40 Me. 498, that, as neither by statute nor common law can the owner of property replevin it from an officer who seizes and distrains it upon a legal precept, intoxicating liquor which has been seized under a warrant because unlawfully kept cannot be recovered by the owner from the officer who executed the writ.

It was held in Easter v. Traylor, 41 Kan. 493, 21 Pac. 606, that the clerk of a court, being merely a ministerial officer, would not be justified in refusing to issue a writ of replevin against a sheriff, because it was sought to recover intoxicating liquors seized by him, as being kept in violation of the law, since it is for the defendant, if he has any defenses, to set them up in the replevin action; and intoxicating liquors are still property, in contemplation of law, and may be sold for certain purposes, and the fact that such property is in the possession of the sheriff, and, in one sense, in the custody of the law, is no defense to the clerk in refusing to issue the writ.

It was held in Easter v. Traylor, 41 Kan. 493, 21 Pac. 606, that the clerk of a court, being merely a ministerial officer, would not be justified in refusing to issue a writ of replevin against a sheriff, because it was sought to recover intoxicating liquors seized by him, as being kept in violation of the law, since it is for the defendant, if he has any defenses, to set them up in the replevin action; and intoxicating liquors are still property, in contemplation of law, and may be sold for certain purposes, and the fact that such property is in the possession of the sheriff, and, in one sense, in the custody of the law, is no defense to the clerk in refusing to issue the writ.

It was held in Easter v. Traylor, 41 Kan. 493, 21 Pac. 606, that the clerk of a court, being merely a ministerial officer, would not be justified in refusing to issue a writ of replevin against a sheriff, because it was sought to recover intoxicating liquors seized by him, as being kept in violation of the law, since it is for the defendant, if he has any defenses, to set them up in the replevin action; and intoxicating liquors are still property, in contemplation of law, and may be sold for certain purposes, and the fact that such property is in the possession of the sheriff, and, in one sense, in the custody of the law, is no defense to the clerk in refusing to issue the writ.

counties in which they are in force, do not, in the absence of special statutory provisions, apply to sales under judicial process, and that spirituous liquors are property, and as such under the protection of the law, and may be taken on meane process or execution." Whether the cases cited in support of this statement go to the extent indicated by the text, and whether, if so, they were well decided, need not be considered. Our statute not only forbids all sales except by certain persons and for restricted purposes, but provides that the buyer must make a showing as to the occasion of his purchase. It would manifestly be impracticable for an execution sale to be conducted according to that method, and, as said in Nichols v. Valentine, 36 Me. 322, "after thus prohibiting our citizens . . . from all general traffic in intoxicating liquors, it would be an absurdity to say that the officers of the law, under its forms and by its protection, may become the vendors of those inhibited articles, restrained only by the obligation to sell to the highest bidder."

Assuming, then, that the marshal held the liquors under an ordinance passed in aid of the prohibitory law, with the purpose of destroying them if found to be kept or used in violation of the statute, the measure of his interest was manifestly either their full value or nothing at all. No other test is possible. There is no way of compensating in dollars and cents the loss of the right to destroy contraband goods unless it be by restoring their full value. The question is one of statutory construction, and we cannot suppose that the legislature intended that the elaborate provisions of the statute for the seizure and destruction of property used for forbidden purposes could be nullified by the device of regaining possession by replevin, and then dismissing the action, making away with the goods, and leaving the public officers remediless. True, the situation presented by the substitution of a sum of money for property that is held only for destruction is anomalous, but any difficulty as to the proper disposition of the fund need not give present concern. However much anxiety and embarrassment the problem may cause those charged with the interpretation and execution of the law, it need occasion none to the defendant. He voluntarily assumed the burden of taking the property subject to the order of the court, under liability to account for its value if he should fail to produce it when ordered. That he is held to this measure of accountability affords him no just ground of complaint. We think there was no error in permitting a recovery by the defendant, in case a return of the liquor could not be had, of its full 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

value. This view was taken by the supreme court of Iowa in Funk & Hardman v. Israel, 5 Iowa, 438, 454, against a strong dissent, based mainly upon the difficulty of finding a proper beneficiary for the proceeds of the money judgment if collected. The case has since been followed. Fries v. Porch, 49 Iowa, 351, 357. The plaintiff mentions that in the answer the defendant designates the ordinance upon which his warrant was based as that numbered 2,211, and that in Re Van Tuyl, 71 Kan. 659, 81 Pac. 181, this court held an ordinance of the city of Topeka bearing that number to be in conflict with the statute. We cannot, however, take notice here of the proceedings in that case, or presume the identity of the ordinance there held void with the one referred to in the pleadings in this case.

The defendant's right of recovery is also questioned upon the ground that at the time of the trial his term of office had expired. Where a public officer is involved in litigation in his official capacity, the expiration of his term does not require a substitution of his successor. The public is conceived as being the real litigant. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Martin, 53 Ohio St. 386, 41 N. E. 690; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Mayer, 31 Ohio St. 317; Shull v. Gray County, 54 Kan. 101, 107, 37 Pac. 994. Moreover, there is express authority for permitting a recovery in the name of Stahl, notwithstanding he is no longer in office; for the statute provides that, "in case of any other transfer of interest [than by death or other disability], the action may be continued in the name of the original party." Gen. Stat. 1901, § 4468; Hegewisch v. Silver, 140 N. Y. 414, 35 N. E. 658.

The judgment is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied January 20, 1909.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

JOHN CARROL GOODFELLOW, by Next Friend, Plff. in Err.,
v.

DETROIT UNITED RAILWAY.

(— Mich. —, 119 N. W. 900.)

Street railway — boy passenger — injury — fault of conductor.

A street car company is not liable for injury to a boy who, upon being harshly told by the conductor to show him his father, who the boy asserts has paid his fare, attempts to go to the other end of the car, along the running board, and falls off to his injury, where there is nothing to lead the conductor to anticipate such action by the boy, who might have pointed out his father without changing his position.

(March 3, 1909.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. May & Dingeman, for plaintiff in error:

Any interference on the part of the conductor, from which injury would ensue constituted negligence, and plaintiff would be entitled to damages for such injury.

Bradley v. Ft. Wayne & E. R. Co. 94 Mich. 35, 53 N. W. 915; Etson v. Ft. Wayne & B. I. R. Co. 110 Mich. 494, 68 N. W. 298; Burgess v. Stowe, 134 Mich. 204, 96 N. W. 29; Hennessey v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co. 135 Mich. 29, 97 N. W. 36; Fox v. Michigan C. R. Co. 138 Mich. 433, 68 L.R.A. 336, 101 N. W. 624, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 68.

Messrs. Corliss, Leete, & Joslyn, for defendant in error:

The brusque or indecorous manner of conductor was not sufficient to warrant the complainant in going upon the running board. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ballard, 85 Ky. 307, 7 Am. St. Rep. 600, 3 S. W. 530.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, a boy over thirteen years of age at the time, and timekeeper in an amusement side show at the Belle Isle bridge, in Detroit, in company with his father, boarded one of defendant's open cars about 11 o'clock in the evening on June 15, 1908. The car had running boards. They took seats near the rear of the car. At a stop made by the car, the boy changed to the front seat, facing toward the rear. He was separated from the outside of the car by one or two persons. Facing him was a boy who had told him that he intended to "beat his fare." The plaintiff's father paid fares for both himself and plaintiff while the plaintiff sat with his father. After he had gone to the front of the car, plaintiff was asked twice for his fare, and each time he answered the conductor that his father had paid his fare. The conductor again approached from the rear of the car, this time on the left running board, and again asked plaintiff for his fare, and he again answered

Case Note. — Liability of carrier for injury to child passenger who exposes himself to danger in consequence of conduct of employee.

In McGehee v. McCarley, 33 C. C. A. 629, 63 U. S. App. 422, 91 Fed. 462, it was held that the trial court did not err in refusing to direct a verdict in favor of the carrier in an action against it for the death of a seven-year-old child, where there was evidence that, while the child and its mother were waiting in the carrier's station for a train at night, the depot agent, by making an assault upon the mother, so terrified the child that she ran out upon the track, and that, while there, because of her fright and the circumstances then surrounding her, she was run over and killed by a passing train. This ruling was affirmed upon rehearing in 44 C. C. A. 252, 103 Fed. 55.

In Gray v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 39 App. Div. 536, 57 N. Y. Supp. 587, the street railway was held guilty of negligence where the fall of a boy, sixteen years of age, from a crowded car, was caused by the act of the conductor in endeavoring to force his way upon the platform while the car was in motion. On appeal, the court said that there was no reversible error in the record, except that certain competent evidence was erroneously excluded, and, for this reason, the case was reversed in 165 N. Y. 457, 59 N. E. 262.

In Schiffer v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 96 Wis. 141, 65 Am. St. Rep. 35, 71 N. W. 97, it was held that a boy of ordinary intelligence, seventeen years of age, who, on several occasions, had made journeys by rail alone, assumed the risk of jumping from a moving train at a station at which the train was not scheduled to stop, although the conductor had accepted his fare to that station and promised to slow up for him, and the boy thought the promise was being kept, and jumped, when the train did not appear to be slowing up any more; the boy having no right to infer that the conductor had any power to bind the company by his promise to slow up, or to run the train otherwise than according to the published schedule.

In Moeller v. United R. Co. 133 Mo. App. 68, 112 S. W. 714, it was held that it was a question for the jury whether a twelve-year-old passenger was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to alight from an electric car, moving a little faster than a walk, where the conductor had told him that it would stop to let him off, and it did actually slow up in such a manner as probably to lead him to believe it would stop.

In Buck v. People's Street R. Electric Light & P. Co. 46 Mo. App. 555, it was held that the street railway company's negligence was for the jury where its driver permitted a six-year old boy to ride on the front platform of a car and to undertake to alight from the platform, and, while in the act of so alighting in the presence of the driver, he allowed the car to lurch forward so as to throw the boy off and under the car.

that his father had paid it. A boy said by some witnesses to have been sitting next to the plaintiff, and by plaintiff said to have been facing him, was the one who had said to others and to the plaintiff that he intended beating his fare, and that he generally did so; and there was testimony tending to show that he was dodging the conductor by going back upon one running board as the conductor went forward upon the other. After the plaintiff stated for the third time that his father had paid his fare, the conductor, who was distant 6 or 8 feet, on the opposite side of the car, said: "Show me your father." There was testimony that he spoke harshly and in a loud tone. Thereupon, the boy got up from his seat, and started along the running board, on his side of the car, toward the rear of the car, and, slipping off, was hurt.

This action was brought to recover damages, negligence being charged. The first count charged that "the said conductor, in charge of said car, rudely and menacingly insisted that the plaintiff herein show the said conductor where his father, said Willard H. Goodfellow, was, and required and forced, by his commanding, menacing, and threatening conduct the plaintiff herein to go out of his seat and place of safety in said vehicle, where he was then located, and go out and along the running board, or footboard, of said car while the said car was going at a high rate of speed." The second count alleged: "Its conductor rudely approached plaintiff herein while the said car was going at a high rate of speed, and demanded the payment of his fare; and when the plaintiff herein explained that Willard H. Goodfellow, his father aforesaid, had already paid plaintiff's fare, defendant's said servant rudely and menacingly denied that plaintiff's fare had been paid, and rudely and threateningly insisted that the plaintiff herein show the said conductor where his father, said Willard H. Goodfellow, was, and menacingly and threateningly reached for and attempted to grab the plaintiff herein, and put plaintiff in fear of bodily harm on the part of said conductor. That plaintiff herein, in attempting to avoid the apprehended danger from the said conductor, stepped out of his seat and on the running board, or footboard, of said car." The learned circuit judge directed a verdict for defendant, apparently upon the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove negligence on the part of the conductor.

The plaintiff testified on direct that:

After the fare was paid, and I had taken

In Cronan v. Crescent City R. Co. 49 La. Ann. 65, 21 So. 163, where it appeared that the conductor of a street car signaled a ten-year-old passenger to come to the platform, saying, "The next corner is yours," and he was injured by missing his footing on alighting from the car before it came to a full stop, it was held that the company could not be adjudged responsible for the accident.

The doctrine of the turntable cases, in which liability is fixed upon the owners of dangerous machinery because of enticements or invitations held out to children to expose themselves to the dangers incurred in being in or about such places, is not applicable to the mere act of allowing children to get upon cars fitted up and used for the conveyance of all classes of persons. Denison v. S. R. Co. v. Carter, 98 Tex. 196, 107 Am. St. Rep. 626, 82 S. W. 782.

But in 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 583, it is said to be the duty of passengers to obey the reasonable directions of the agents in charge of the train, unless there is knowledge on the part of the passengers that obedience to such directions will lead them into danger. In the following cases this rule appears to have been applied to infant passengers:

In Drew v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. 26 N. Y. 49, the street railway company was held liable where it appeared that an eight-year-old boy signaled the brakeman to stop the car, and the latter beckoned the boy to come toward the car; that the brakeman seized him by the coat to place him on the platform, but allowed him to slip out of his hands upon the track, where the front wheel passed over the boy's foot.

In Maher v. Central Park, N. & E. River R. Co. 67 N. Y. 52, it was held that the street railway company was negligent where it appeared that, upon being hailed by a ten-year-old boy, the driver stopped the car and told the boy to jump on in front; and, while he was on the first step, the driver struck the horses, the car gave a jerk, and the boy fell under the car.

In Murphy v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 43 Mo. App. 342, it was held not to be negligence per se for a passenger, between fourteen and fifteen years old, to attempt, in the daytime, at the invitation of the conductor, to board a train moving no faster than a walk; but, if the train was running 6 or 8 miles an hour, such attempt would be negligence as a matter of law.

In East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Hughes, 92 Ga. 388, 17 S. E. 949, it was held that, although the conductor ordered a seventeen-year-old girl passenger to jump from the moving train, and, in obeying the order, she was injured, there could be no recovery, if the order should have been disobeyed on account of the obvious danger.

In Dietrich v. Baltimore & H. S. R. Co. 58 Md. 347, it was held that the invitation of the driver of a street car to a boy fifteen years old to board the front platform of a moving street car from which the step had been broken, was no justification for incurring the risk that was open and apparent to his senses.

my seat in the front part of the car, the conductor came up the aisle, and said, "Give me your fare," and I said my fare was paid, and he went back, and, in a few minutes, he came up again and said, "Where is your fare?" and I said, "My fare is paid," and he came a third time and said, "Where is your fare?" and I said, "It is paid," and he said, "Who paid it?" and I said, "My father," and he said, "Show me your father," and I went down the aisle to show him my father, and I must have made a slip, for I fell off; and that is the last I know. When I speak of the aisle, I mean the outside board,—the running board.

Q. Now, what was—just explain to the jury what is the manner of the conductor, what was his manner with reference to what he said and did; did he say it in a gentle voice or did he say it—what did he say?

A. In a rough tone.

Q. What was his manner? Indicate, if you can, the tone of voice as far as you can, and anything that he did, or his actions, the actions or tone of voice on the part of the conductor, at the time he gave you those instructions.

A. He said: "Show me your father." The conductor was on the opposite side to what I was, and I was within 1 foot of the other side of the car.

Q. Now, state how you came to fall?

A. I must have missed my hold or slipped.

Q. Slipped?

A. Yes, sir.

On cross-examination, he testified:

Q. Do you know a boy that was riding on the car the night of the accident?

A. I didn't know him. I saw him trying to beat his fare.

Q. Who was he?

A. I don't know. I could not tell. He told me he was going to beat his fare before he got on. There was a boy up there that did not pay his fare, and the conductor was trying to locate that boy. I did not get up and go forward and sit next to that boy. He sat in front of me, I think. I cannot explain that exactly. I saw him go up to the back of the car when the conductor came up for my fare.

Q. He had been up in front of the car, and, when the conductor came up this time on the right-hand side, this boy went back on the other side, didn't he?

A. The conductor was on the left-hand side and the boy was on the right-hand side.

This was all of his testimony bearing on the conduct of the conductor.

Julius Suckert testified:

A. I was standing on the back of the car, and I heard a rather loud argument on the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

forward part of the car, and all of a sudden a boy came running along the running board on the left side of the car between the tracks, sideways, grabbing from seat to seat, to get back, and he was almost up to the rear when he lost his grip, and fell. There were a number of gentlemen back there. The general appearance of the boy indicated that he was very much frightened.

Charles Heck testified:

Q. What first attracted your attention to it with reference to the accident?

A. Why, I heard an argument in the front end of the car that attracted my attention that way naturally, and, about the time of the argument, or right shortly after that, it seems the boy got up from the seat. I didn't see him get from the seat, but I saw him step down on the running board. He probably went a foot or two back of that, and slipped by reaching one of those handles. He fell anyway.

On cross-examination he said:

I think that it is about between 7 and 8 feet from one running board to the other. The seats were all filled at the time to the best of my recollection. All were seated. There were some standing on the rear platform. There was nobody on the inside running board. Whether on the other running board, I do not remember. This running board is 10 to 12 inches wide, in the neighborhood of 12 inches wide, with handles on the posts. I didn't notice the boy at all before he got up and made the slip. I saw him just as he was stepping down on the running board. He stepped down all right and took hold with his hands of the bars, and apparently passed 2 or 3 feet towards the rear, and then fell. I think he had got about as far as the second or third seat. I would not be positive of that. I saw the conductor when I heard the argument in front. He was standing on the running board on the east side of the car. He was about the second seat. It may have been the third seat. He was close to the front. I would not say positively. I would not be positive about that. He might have been a little to the rear of the first seat.

Q. What was said at that time was said in such a tone of voice that at your distance you could not tell what was said?

A. No, sir.

Q. If the conductor was opposite the second or third seat when you heard the conversation or voices, he would have been perhaps 7 or 8 or 10 feet from the boy?

A. It depends upon where the boy was sitting. I don't know whether he was in the middle of the seat.

Q. He said he was sitting in the second seat from the west side of the car. That makes the conductor 8 or 10 feet away?

A. It would not be quite that far. The car is not that wide.

Q. But he was back opposite the second seat, you say?

A. Perhaps 6 feet or so.

Q. The noise of the car was as usual in the gearing and moving wheels?

A. The same as a car usually runs.

Q. Of course, in order to speak to a person 7 or 8 feet away, it would be necessary to raise your voice in order to be heard?

Martin Lang testified:

I saw the conductor go up there. The conductor asked the boy for his fare. The boy says, "My father has paid it." The conductor went to the rear of the car. He was gone two or three minutes perhaps. Then he came up, and asked the boy for his fare again. The boy said, "My father paid my fare."

Q. Tell us what the conductor said to the boy. Indicate it, as near as you can, his manner in doing it. Indicate what transpired there to the jury. Give us the conversation and his manner and tone.

A. The conductor asked the boy for his fare the second time, and he said, "My father paid my fare," and by that the conductor got harsh, and he said, "Show me"—

Q. Tell us, state the exact conversation that took place between the conductor and the boy on this last occasion, and, if there is anything done, any actions on the part of the conductor, I should like it if you would indicate those, those actions and the tone of voice on the part of the conductor.

A. The conductor leaned over in the aisle, and said, "Show me your father, who paid your fare," and by that the boy got up and started for his father. He said it louder than I said it. The boy got up and left his seat, and went towards the rear end of the car. The boy passed one boy that was sitting on the outside of the seat, and he went down on the running board and straight for the rear end of the car. The conductor started for the rear end of the car, too, on the opposite side.

On cross-examination he said: "I had known this boy for some time. He was a neighbor of ours once. He lived from 75 to 100 feet from where I was. I had seen another boy up with this boy. I had seen this other boy once or twice before. I seen him on the car. I was talking to the other boy the night the accident happened before I got on the car. Johnny Goodfellow was not with me at the time. This other boy said, 'I am going to beat my fare home. I most generally do.' That boy was up in front next to Johnny. I was three or four seats back from the front seat. . . . The conductor was there when I heard between the conductor and John Goodfellow occurred after I had changed my seat. I sat right next to the plaintiff. The conductor was standing on the running board at the time of the conversation. He was right in between the front two seats, both facing one another, on the running board. I was nearest the conductor. Johnny did not say to him, 'I will go back and show you my father.' The first time that I saw Johnny Goodfellow on the car was when I noticed him in the front seat of the car. I did not see him pass from the rear end of the car on the running board up to the front."

This is all of the testimony bearing upon the question of negligence. It justified the inference that the conductor had doubts of the payment of plaintiff's fare, and, when the boy reiterated that his father had paid it, he asked him to show him his father. There is nothing to sustain the allegation of the first count, that the conductor required and forced, by his commanding manner and threatening conduct, the plaintiff to go upon the running board. Nothing indicates that he expected him to do more than designate his father, which he could easily have done without leaving his place. The case is entirely wanting in proof of the allegation in the second count, that he menacingly and threateningly reached for, or attempted to grab, the plaintiff. The entire testimony goes no farther than to show a request or demand that he show him his father, said in a harsh and cross tone of voice. There was nothing to indicate to the conductor, or lead him to anticipate, the action of the plaintiff. It was his plain right and duty to ascertain whether this fare had been paid, and a right to have the plaintiff point out the person who paid it. That is all that he asked the plaintiff to do, and the plain implication of the question was that he would ask such person if the statement of the boy was true. There was nothing to cause the boy to attempt to escape from the conductor, and nothing which required the conductor to anticipate such action. Hence there was no negligence.

The judgment is affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF MINNESOTA EX REL. EDWARD T. YOUNG, Attorney General,

v.

JOHN E. C. ROBINSON, Appt.

(101 Minn. 277, 112 N. W. 289.)

Attorney general — powers.

1. The attorney general, as the chief law

Headnotes by BROWN, J.

officer of the state, possesses and may exercise, in addition to the authority expressly conferred upon him by statute, all common-law powers incident to and inherent in the office.

Municipal corporation — duties imposed by legislature.

2. Officers of municipal corporations organized under legislative authority are, in respect to all general laws having force and operating within their municipality, agents of the state, and may be charged with the performance of such duties in the enforcement of the same as the legislature may, from time to time, impose.

Intoxicating liquors — regulation by state.

3. The general statutes of the state regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors operate and have force uniformly throughout the state, anything contained in municipal charters or ordinances to the contrary notwithstanding.

Attorney general — removal of mayor.

4. The forfeiture of office and pecuniary penalty prescribed by Rev. Laws 1935, §§ 1561, 1562, for the failure of the mayor or other officer named therein to make complaint of known violations of the statutes regulating the sale of intoxicating liquor, may be enforced by the attorney general, through appropriate proceedings brought for that purpose.

Same — concurrent power with city council — effect.

5. The power conferred by the charter of St. Cloud upon the city council thereof, upon the subject of the removal of municipal officers for misconduct in office, does not exclude the power of the state, through Case Note. — Is power conferred upon municipality to remove its officers exclusive.

The conclusion reached in the above decision finds support in Coffey v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 525, 82 Pac. 75, in which it was held that a provision in a municipal charter for the removal of municipal officers by proceedings instituted by the mayor before the trustees of the municipality did not confer an exclusive power, but one concurrent with that given to the superior court to proceed for the removal of a municipal officer upon presentation by the grand jury, in accordance with the Penal Code. The court said that these different provisions simply provided several tribunals in which to administer the same remedy, and the remedies were cumulative.

In the case last cited and in STATE v. ROBINSON, the contention by the defendant was that the authority conferred upon a municipality to remove its officers was exclusive, and prevented any other proceeding for that purpose; but, in most of the cases, the opposite contention has been made, — that the municipality had no power to remove one of its officers where, either by general law or by a state Constitution, such authority was placed elsewhere. In all these cases such contention was overruled, and it was held that the remedy prescribed was merely concurrent with that conferred upon the municipality.

Thus, in State ex rel. Barnett v. Noblesville, 157 Ind. 31, 60 N. E. 704, it was held that where the general act for the incorporation of cities expressly authorized the common council to remove any city officer, and a subsequent statute provided that any officer might be removed for intoxication upon the complaint of any citizen, filed in the circuit court of the county in which he resided, and a still later act provided for the impeachment and removal of any municipal officer upon accusation in writing by the grand jury, such provisions were to be read as the several sections of a single act, and were all to stand. The court said that the various acts merely provided different remedies for such official misconduct as would have authorized the removal of the officer under the rules of the common law, and that, in their practical operation, the remedies they afforded were auxiliary and cumulative.

And the language of the court in Manker v. Faulhaber, 94 Mo. 430, 6 S. W. 372, would seem to bear the inference that the authority conferred by a city charter upon the mayor and the board of aldermen, to remove any municipal officer, was concurrent with that conferred upon the circuit courts by a later general act, though the specific holding was that the charter provision was not repealed by such general act.

And this view of the case just cited was taken by the same court in State ex rel. Reid v. Walbridge, 119 Mo. 383, 41 Am. St. Rep. 863, 24 S. W. 457, in which Manker v. Faulhaber was followed as to a similar provision in another city charter, and the later general act was regarded as simply furnishing a cumulative remedy to that of such charter.

To the same effect is State ex rel. Heimbürger v. Wells, 210 Mo. 601, 109 S. W. 758, in which the two cases last cited were followed.

So, in State ex rel. Whitaker v. Adams, 46 La. Ann. 830, 15 So. 490, it was held that the constitutional provision that, for certain causes, municipal officers should be removed by the judgment of the district court of the domicile of such officer, was not exclusive of all other methods by which such officers might be displaced, and that the power granted to a common council in a city charter, to remove officers by impeachment proceedings, was constitutionally granted. And this case was followed in State ex rel. Bezou v. Civil Dist. Judge, 50 La. Ann. 655, 23 So. 886.

And in Com. ex rel. Kelly v. Sanderson, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 593, it was held that the provisions of a city charter for the removal of municipal officers were simply additional to the methods and causes of removal mentioned in the Constitution, and might exist side by side with them.

the attorney general, to effect a removal for a violation of the statute above referred to. The power and authority of each is concurrent.

Same — concurrent power with county attorney — effect.

6. Nor is the authority of the attorney general taken away or superseded by the provisions of § 1561, by which the county attorney of each county is required to prosecute violations of the statute.

(June 7, 1907.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Stearns County overruling a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to remove defendant from the office of mayor of St. Cloud for alleged malfeasance in office, and to recover the statutory penalty. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Theodore Bruener for appellant.

Messrs. Edward T. Young, Attorney General, and George W. Peterson for the State.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by the attorney general, under the authority conferred by § 4545, Rev. Laws 1905, for the removal of defendant from the office of mayor of the city of St. Cloud for his alleged malfeasance in office, and to recover the penalty provided by § 1562. Defendant interposed a general demurrer to the complaint, and appealed from an order overruling it.

Section 1561, Rev. Laws 1905, makes it the duty of the mayor of every municipality in this state, and other public officers named therein, to make complaint to the proper magistrate of any known violation of the laws of the state on the subject of the sale of intoxicating liquors; and § 1562 declares a neglect of that duty malfeasance in office, subjecting the guilty officer to removal and a penalty of not less than $100, and not more than $500.

The complaint before us charges a violation of this statute. It alleges that the defendant is, and, at the time stated therein was, the mayor of the city of St. Cloud, an incorporated municipality of this state; that, long prior to the date mentioned, the city council thereof had duly licensed numerous persons to deal in intoxicating liquors within the city; that, for a period of four months immediately preceding the commencement of the action, the several holders of such licenses had openly, flagrantly, and continuously kept their saloons or places of business open for trade on Sunday, and often after the hour of 11 o'clock at night on other days, contrary to L.R.A. (N.S.)

to the provisions of the general statutes on the subject; that their business was so conducted and carried on with the full knowledge, approval, and consent of defendant, as mayor; and that he failed and refused to compel an observance of the law by making complaint of known violations thereof, or otherwise. Judgment is demanded that he be removed from his office, and that the state have and recover the penalty fixed by law for his neglect of duty.

It is contended by defendant (1) that the action cannot be maintained, for the reason that there is another exclusive remedy at law provided by the charter of the city of St. Cloud; and (2) that the attorney general cannot maintain an action to recover the penalty prescribed by § 1562, Rev. Laws 1905, for the reason that the duty of enforcing the same is imposed, by § 1561, upon the county attorney. The charter of the city of St. Cloud, on the subject of removal of municipal officers, provides as follows:

"Any person holding office under this charter may be removed from such office by the vote of two thirds of all the aldermen authorized to be elected. But no officer elected by the people shall be removed except for cause, nor unless first furnished with a written statement of the charges against him, nor unless he shall have a reasonable opportunity to be heard in his defense."

It further provides a course of procedure when charges are preferred seeking the removal of an officer, and empowers the council to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers, and to hear and determine the matter on its merits. Section 7. (subs. 14) provides that no general law shall be construed as repealing or modifying any of its provisions, unless that purpose be expressly set forth in such law. Rev. Laws 1905, § 747, continues in force all existing laws relative to municipal corporations. In view of these enactments applicable to the city of St. Cloud, it is urged by defendant that the remedy for the removal of delinquent city officers provided by the charter is exclusive, and that the state, through the attorney general, has no power to interfere.

We do not concur in this contention. A municipal corporation, on coming into existence, assumes a double character. As respects its business or proprietary functions, its local affairs, it is an independent corporation, in no way subject to the control or supervision of the state, and may manage its internal affairs free from legislative interference. State ex rel. Atty.

Gen. v. Moores (State ex rel. Smyth v. Moores) 55 Neb. 480, 41 L.R.A. 624, 76 N. W. 175. It may, within the limitations of its charter, contract and be contracted with, and is solely responsible for its obligations. It may install various public utilities, and provide generally for the comfort and convenience of its inhabitants. For default in any of its obligations in this respect, the state does not concern itself; but, in so far as the general laws of the state operate and have force and effect within the municipality, and the officers thereof are charged with their enforcement, the municipality and its officers are the agents, and subject to the command and control, of the state government at all times. The legislature may impose upon the local officers specific duties in the matter of the enforcement of the laws of the state, and prescribe penalties for a failure to perform the same. Indeed, the efficient administration of the law, adopted for the welfare of the state at large, renders it imperative that the state, as guardian for the people as a whole, should possess and exercise this unqualified control. Its absence would lead to a failure of law enforcement, so essential to the good order of society and the protection of property and property rights. That the state, when creating a municipal subdivision for local self-government, retains this general supervisory control over the affairs thereof, except so far as expressly or by fair implication surrendered, there can be no serious question.

The city of St. Cloud is no exception to the rule, nor was it granted by its charter any exclusive authority respecting the removal of its officers for causes other than a violation of municipal duties. Authorities sustain the suggestion of the attorney general to the effect that the power of removal conferred upon the city vested in the council thereof such powers only as exist at common law; viz., power of determination and removal for causes involving a violation of duties to the municipality. 2 Kent, Com. 297; Richards v. Clarksburg, 30 W. Va. 491, 4 S. E. 774; R. v. Richardson, 1 Burr. 517. In the last case cited it was laid down by Lord Mansfield that the power of removal vested in municipal corporations at common law, for causes other than misconduct toward the corporation, was dependent upon prior conviction of the offense charged by a court of competent jurisdiction; that while the corporation, through its governing body, has authority to hear and determine charges of official misconduct, it cannot hear and determine charges of other violations of law, and make its determination thereof the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) basis of an order of removal. That decision was rendered nearly one hundred years ago, and has since been followed both in England and in this country, particularly as applied to private corporations.

But we are not disposed to place our decision in this case upon that ground. Whether, in the many evolutionary changes of the law respecting local municipal government, the rule stated has come down unimpaired, is unnecessary to determine at this time. It may be conceded in the case at bar that, in view of the relation existing between municipal corporations, their officers, and the state, respecting the enforcement of the general laws, the power of a motion expressly conferred upon the city of St. Cloud authorizes a removal from office of any of its officers for any cause which would justify a like act by the state. But it does not necessarily follow that the power so conferred is exclusive. There was no purpose on the part of the legislature in so granting the power to surrender or divest the state of its superior authority in the premises, or to deprive it of the right to call to account, in its own way, those of its agents who fail in the performance of their official duties with respect to the general law. Indeed, it is questionable, on principle, whether the legislature could, within constitutional limitations, surrender the authority of the state in this respect. It is charged with the duty of enforcing all laws designed for the public welfare, and its obligation to the people can neither be surrendered nor contracted away. 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1219; Philadelphia v. Fox, 64 Pa. 169. Essential to the complete performance of this duty is the unrestricted control and authority over all officers who are charged with the enforcement of the laws. This control necessarily includes power of removal for official misconduct, a surrender of which by the legislature would disable the state in a large measure from performing fully its obligations to the people. Its command to the local officers to proceed with the enforcement of the law might or might not be complied with, depending upon the nature of the law sought to be enforced, and the temper and disposition toward it of the local removing power. This would result in the enforcement or the nonenforcement of wholesale regulations for the public weal, as suited the notions of those in local power. The fundamental principles of law will not justify a decision which would result in an indifferent administration of our laws naturally to follow from such a doctrine.

The section of the Revised Laws already referred to makes it the duty of the mayors of all municipalities of the state to enforce the liquor statutes, and declares a failure to perform that duty malfeasance in office, subjecting the delinquent to removal from office. Section 4545 expressly empowers the attorney general to enforce forfeitures of office, without restriction or limitation as to particular officers. No reason occurs to us why this authority may not be exercised concurrently with the power conferred upon the city council, conceding that its power extends to causes of removal other than those disclosing delinquency in the performance of duties to the city. The charter does not purport to confer the exclusive power upon the council and we are not justified in presuming that the legislature so intended. There is nothing in the charter so indicating, and, by the general rule applicable to the subject, all general laws and regulations remain unimpaired by municipal charters, except to the extent expressly declared to the contrary.

This rule is illustrated by the case of State v. Lee, 29 Minn. 445, 13 N. W. 913, where the court held that a prosecution under an ordinance of the city of St. Paul for keeping a house of ill fame was not a bar to a prosecution for the same act under the general statutes. In discussing the subject the court said: "The Constitution assumes and recognizes the existence and necessity of municipal corporations as bodies politic, having such powers of local self-government under grants from the legislature as are ordinarily conferred on them, and such as they have usually possessed and exercised in the past, both in England and this country. St. Paul v. Colter, 12 Minn. 41, Gil. 16, 90 Am. Dec. 278; People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 96, 9 Am. Rep. 103; Greenwood v. State, 6 Baxt. 567, 32 Am. Rep. 539. Though its authority is derivative and local, the municipal corporation may be considered a separate government under its charter, which, subject to the general laws, stands for its Constitution. The operation of the general laws remaining unimpaired, the local laws of the municipality are extra, and relate to matters which are properly of municipal cognizance. The local government simply enforces its own laws, for a purpose separate and distinct from that of the general laws, having special reference to the suppression and restraint of the elements of disorder and immorality. State v. Charles, 16 Minn. 474, Gil. 426. In view of the history, nature, and purposes of such corporations, it seems to be clear that the legislature has the power to grant such chartered privileges to them as bodies politic, without surrendering any of the jurisdiction of the state over offenses against it. State v. Oleson, 20 Minn. 507, 5 N. W. 959. It is essential to good government and the public welfare that the authority of the state and municipality should thus stand together." See also State v. Harris, 50 Minn. 128, 52 N. W. 387, 531. It is appropriate that the power of a motion be granted to all municipalities, to aid in the government and control of their local affairs; but the orderly administration of such affairs does not require that the power should be exclusively of the general supervisory control of the state. Both powers may stand together without conflict. We so dispose of the question. State ex rel. Hastings v. Smith, 35 Neb. 13, 16 L.R.A. 791, 52 N. W. 700.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It is further contended that the attorney general cannot maintain an action to recover the penalty imposed by § 1562, for the reason that the duty of enforcing all penalties resulting from a failure to observe the liquor statutes is cast upon the county attorney. In this we do not concur. The authority of the attorney general to maintain the action for a forfeiture under § 4545 is not questioned. The contention is that the county attorney alone may enforce the penalty provided for by § 1562. This question might be disposed of adversely to defendant on the ground that a misjoinder of causes of action is not raised by the demurrer. But we pass that point and dispose of the question upon its merits.

That the unrestrained traffic in intoxicating liquors is detrimental to the good order and welfare of the state and its citizens is conceded and declared by all courts where the subject has been under consideration, and statutes designed to restrain and regulate it are uniformly upheld. Such statutes find support in the police power, and the general subject is under the complete control of the legislature. Black, Intoxicating Liquors, 24; Winona v. Whipple, 24 Minn. 61.

For many years prior to 1887, the laws of this state upon the subject were in a condition of much confusion. The legislature had practically surrendered control of the traffic to the municipalities of the state, which had in turn enacted ordinances regulating the same in harmony with the varying notions of the numerous local municipal councils and governing boards. This resulted in a total lack of uniformity in administrative regulations, and induced extremely lax enforcement of such restrictions as were imposed, creating discontent in the public mind and a strong demand for exclusive control by the state. In 1887 the legislature laid hold of the subject, and asserted its authority in the premises by enacting the so-called "high license law." Laws of 1887, chaps. 5, 6, pp. 40, 41. These statutes were expressly made applicable to all cities, villages, and other municipal subdivisions to which the legislature had previously delegated the power of regulation, and all exclusive authority theretofore granted and delegated was thereby in effect repealed. Chapter 6 imposed many specific duties and obligations upon public officers in reference to the subject, including that which defendant is charged with neglecting, and prescribed severe penalties for a violation of any of its provisions. The prior statutes were enlarged and made more specific by chapter 90, p. 211, Laws 1895, and the legislature therein again declared that the provisions thereof should apply to all municipal corporations of the state, anything in the charters or ordinances thereof to the contrary notwithstanding. Other similar acts have since been placed upon the statute books, all of which lead to but one conclusion, viz., that the legislature intended thereby for the future to restore to the state its superior authority respecting the regulation and control of the liquor traffic. State v. Swanson, 85 Minn. 112, 88 N. W. 416. This necessarily included a restoration of the authority of the executive officers of the state, who are charged with the duty of enforcing the law, which the prior statutes had in effect taken away. It restored the authority of the attorney general in the premises, and he may maintain this action unless it be held that the legislature intended, by the provision of § 1561, imposing the duty of prosecuting violations of the statute upon the county attorney, to commit to that officer exclusive authority in respect to proceedings to enforce that particular statute.

In view of this attitude of the legislature, and its evident purpose of re-establishing the supreme authority of the state in reference to this subject, the contention that the attorney general has no authority to prosecute the action does not require extended discussion. The office of attorney general has existed from an early period, both in England and in this country; and is vested by the common law with a great variety of duties in the administration of the government. The duties are so numerous and varied that it has not been the policy of the legislatures of the states of this country to attempt specifically to enumerate them. Where the question has come up for consideration, it is generally held that the office is clothed, in addition to the duties expressly defined by statute, with all the power pertaining thereto at the common law. State ex rel. Young v. Kent, 96 Minn. 255, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 826, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 104 N. W. 948, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 905; 4 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1028; Hunt v. Chicago & D. R. Co. 20 Ill. App. 282; Parker v. May, 5 Cush. 336; People v. Miner, 2 Lans. 396; People v. Tweed, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 25. From this it follows that, as the chief law officer of the state, he may, in the absence of some express legislative restriction to the contrary, exercise all such power and authority as public interests may, from time to time, require. He may institute, conduct, and maintain all such suits and proceedings as he deems necessary for the enforcement of the laws of the state, the preservation of order, and the protection of public rights. We have no statutory restrictions in this state.

The statute under consideration, imposing specific duties upon county attorneys in the matter of its enforcement, is, in no proper view, a limitation upon, nor does it exclude, the general authority of the attorney general upon the same subject. We have numerous instances where particular duties are expressly imposed upon the county attorney, yet it is clear that the attorney general has the right, in virtue of his office, to co-operate with or act independently of that official in all cases where the public interests justify it. The purpose of this statute was not to confer special exclusive authority upon the county attorney, but rather specifically to require of him the performance of an existing official duty. The authority to conduct proceedings there required to be brought is incidental to his office, and the statute was in effect but a command of the state to perform his duty. If the command thus made were to be held a vesting of exclusive authority, then with equal propriety it could be held that the duty imposed by the same statute upon mayors and other municipal officers, to make complaint of known violations of the statutes, would necessarily preclude complaints by others. The reason for so holding would apply with the same force to both cases. But that is not the law; and it is manifest that the legislature did not intend, by the statute under consideration, to vest the exclusive power in the county attorney for enforcing its various provisions. The authority conferred upon that officer and the general power of the chief law officer of the state may stand together without conflict; and we so hold.

The question is not affected by § 4540, which provides that actions for fines and forfeitures may be prosecuted by certain designated persons. That statute is permissive, and does not exclude the attorney general.

Our conclusion, therefore, is that the attorney general is authorized by law to maintain the action to enforce the pecuniary penalty in question, notwithstanding the fact that the county attorney might also maintain proceedings to recover it. The commencement of the action by him is in complete harmony with the attitude of the legislature in restoring the exclusive authority of the state in the matter of regulating the liquor traffic, effected by the high license and other statutes on the subject, and the demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled.

Order affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

C. G. ANDERSON et al., Respts.,
v.

WISCONSIN CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(— Minn. —, 120 N. W. 39.)

Auction — bid — effect.

1. An announcement or advertisement that certain property will be sold at auction to the highest bidder is a mere declaration of intention to hold an auction at which bids will be received. It is not an Headnotes by ELLIOTT, J.

Case Note. — Right to withdraw property from an auction sale after it has been offered.

To the case of Tillman v. Dunman, 57 L.R.A. 784,—holding that an executor, offering land for sale at public outcry, may withdraw the same at any time before the hammer falls,—is appended a note collecting the earlier cases upon this subject.

It is said in 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 979 (title Judicial Sales), that in South Carolina it is considered that property offered at judicial sale may be withdrawn after a bid has been made (citing Miller v. Law, 10 Rich. Eq. 320, 73 Am. Dec. 92), but that the contrary has been held in Ontario (citing McAlpine v. Young, 2 Ch. Chamb. Rep. (U. C.) 85, 171; O'Connor v. Woodward, 6 Ont. Pr. 223).

It is provided by the uniform sales law, which has been adopted in Arizona, Connecticut, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Ohio, and Rhode Island, that goods offered for sale at auction may be withdrawn at any time before the fall of the hammer, unless the sale has been announced to be without reserve. See Williston, Sales, § 294.

The recent case of McPherson Bros. Co. v. Okanogan County 45 Wash. 285, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 748, 88 Pac. 199, which sustains the right of withdrawal is sufficiently set forth in the opinion of ANDERSON v. WISCONSIN C. R. Co.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

offer to sell, which becomes binding, even conditionally, on the owner when a bid is made.

Same — acceptance.

* 2. An acceptance asks for bids for the property, and a "bid" is an offer to purchase at the price named. Until the offer is accepted, no contract relations exist.

Same — withdrawal.

3. At any time before the bid is accepted, the bidder may withdraw his offer to purchase or the owner his offer to sell.

(March 5, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for St. Louis County denying an alternative motion for judgment notwithstanding a judgment in plaintiffs' favor or for a new trial in an action brought to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of refusal to accept a certain bid at a public sale. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Crassweller & Crassweller, for appellant:

An advertisement of a sale by auction is a mere declaration of intention, and does not bind the seller to sell at all, or to sell to any particular bidder, or to accept the highest bid.

Clark, Contr. pp. 41-43; 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 280; Addison, Contr. p. 12; Bate-

It was held in Bean v. Kirkpatrick, 105 Ga. 476, 30 S. E. 426, to be the right and duty of an administrator, in conducting a public sale of property belonging to the estate of his intestate, to withdraw it from sale when it is manifest that it is about to be sacrificed at a grossly inadequate price. And language to the same effect is to be found in Rogers v. Dickey, 117 Ga. 819, 45 S. E. 71.

It was said in Henderson v. Sublett, 21 Ala. 626, that, in making a judicial sale of property, an officer, if the price offered is grossly inadequate, should not proceed with the sale, but should return the fieri facias as levied, but that the property was not sold for want of buyers, and wait for a venditioni exponas.

And the court, in State Bank v. Brown, 128 Iowa, 665, 105 N. W. 49, said that a sheriff in making a judicial sale undoubtedly has some discretion, and, for reasons which appear good and satisfactory to him, may refuse a bid, or, having accepted it, may, before the transaction is closed, repudiate the same, or authorize its withdrawal and resell the property.

As a bidder at an auction is entitled to withdraw his bid at any time before the hammer falls, a corresponding right exists in the seller, within the same time, to withdraw the goods from sale. Fenwick v. Macdonald, F. & Co. 6 F. 850, Ct. of Sess. 1 Butterworths' Ten Years', Dig. p. 90.

man, Auctions, pp. 30-126; 1 Parsons, Contr. 8th ed. pp. 479, 480; Story, Sales, § 461; Benjamin, Sales, § 42; 1 Warvelle, Vendors, § 247; Sugden, Vendors, 8th Am. ed. 21; Williams, Vend. & P. 19; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 501; Payne v. Cave, 3 T. R. 148; Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. v. Behnke, 121 Cal. 339, 53 Pac. 812; Donaldson v. Kerr, 6 Pa. 486; Fisher v. Seltzer, 23 Pa. 308, 62 Am. Dec. 335; Kent, Com. 538; 4 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1044; Tillman v. Dunman, 114 Ga. 406, 57 L.R.A. 784, 88 Am. St. Rep. 28, 40 S. E. 244; Corryolles v. Mossy, 2 La. 504; Girardey v. Stone, 24 La. Ann. 286.

A bid is a mere offer, which binds nobody until accepted by the seller, and the bidder may retract his bid, or the owner withdraw his property, at any time before the hammer falls.

Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. 196, 18 L. ed. 43; Nebraska Loan & T. Co. v. Hamer, 40 Neb. 282, 58 N. W. 695; Grotenkemper v. Achtermeyer, 11 Bush, 222; Bateman, Auctions, 30; Leake, Contr. p. 21; Sugden, Vend. & P. 14th ed. p. 14; 1 Dart, Vend. & P. 6th ed. p. 139; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 501; Fisher v. Seltzer, supra; Harris v. Nickerson, L. R. 8 Q. B. 286; Cooke v. Oxley, 3 T. R. 653; Benjamin, Sales, 7th ed. §§ 41, 42; 1 Parsons, Contr. 8th ed. 491-496; Stensgaard v. Smith, 43 Minn. 11, 19 Am. St. Rep. 205, 44 N. W. 669; Bailey v. Austrian, 19 Minn. 535, Gil. 465; Tarbox v. Gotzian, 20 Minn. 139, Gil. 122; Ashcom v. Smith, 2 Penn. & W. 211, 21 Am. Dec. 437; Farr v. John, 23 Iowa, 286.

An auctioneer may exercise a reasonable discretion in refusing a bid which he believes to be detrimental to the interests of his employer and likely to depress the bidding.

Taylor v. Harnett, 26 Misc. 36, 55 N. Y. Supp. 988; Holder v. Jackson, 11 U. C. C. P. 546; Newman v. Vonderheide, 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 164; Warlow v. Harrison, 1 El. & El. 309; Payne v. Cave, supra; Bateman, Auctions, p. 139; Addison, Contr. 10th ed. 443; Mainprice v. Westley, 6 Best & S. 428; Boyd v. Greene, 162 Mass. 566, 39 N. E. 277.

Messrs. Jaques & Hudson, for respondents:

The refusal of the auctioneer to sell the building to the highest bidder constituted a breach of its contractual obligation.

Warlow v. Harrison, 1 El. & El. 308; Bowman v. McClenahan, 20 App. Div. 346, 46 N. Y. Supp. 945; Conolly v. Parsons, cited in Bramley v. Alt, 3 Ves. Jr. 620; Woodward v. Miller, 2 Colly. Ch. Cas. 279; Robinson v. Wall, 2 Phill. Ch. 372; Thornett v. Haines, 15 Mees. & W. 367; Harris v. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Nickerson, L. R. 8 Q. B. 286; Johnston v. Boyes [1899] 2 Ch. 73; Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co. [1893] 1 Q. B. 256; O'Connor v. Woodward, 6 Ont. Pr. Rep. 223.

Elliott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Wisconsin Central Railway Company, having acquired certain real property in the city of Duluth through condemnation proceedings, advertised that, at a time and place stated, the buildings thereon would be sold at public auction. Bids for a certain house had been made until the amount offered amounted to $675. Anderson then increased his bid $5, making his offer $680. The auctioneer refused to consider this bid, because, as he stated, the amount of the raise was too insignificant. After waiting for a time to give Anderson an opportunity to increase it, the auctioneer announced that the house was sold to the last previous bidder for $675. An entry of this sale was made by the auctioneer in his entry book, as required by § 2815, Rev. Laws 1905. Anderson demanded to know why the auctioneer had not accepted his bid, and on the same day he tendered the $680, and it was refused. Before this tender was made, a bill of sale of the building had been executed and delivered to the party to whom the building had been knocked down. Anderson then brought this action for damages, and recovered a verdict for $1,500. The defendant appealed from an order denying its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or for a new trial.

The conflicting contentions of the parties arise out of fundamentally different conceptions of the nature of an auction. The appellant contends that the advertisement of a sale at auction is a mere declaration of intention, which does not bind the owner to sell, or to sell to any particular bidder, and that the contract is not made until the bid is accepted. The complaint charges the defendant with liability for damages resulting to the plaintiffs from its unlawful refusal to sell the building to them, and to carry out the terms and conditions of the auction sale. It proceeds upon the theory that, notwithstanding the bid, no sale was in fact made to them, because the defendant refused to recognize their right to purchase. The claim, as stated in the brief, is that "the advertisement constitutes a complete memorandum of contract, not of sale, but to sell, to the person who shall comply with its conditions; i. e., becomes the highest bidder at the auction provided for in the writing. The proposal became a binding written contract to sell to that person the building at his bid." While the action was thus brought for the breach of an agreement to sell to the highest bidder, the argument proceeds upon the theory that, under such conditions, a contract has its inception in the announcement or advertisement of the owner's intention to sell the designated property at public auction to the highest bidder; that, unless the contrary is expressly stated in the announcement, the sale is to be without reserve; that the bid of the highest bidder is the acceptance of the offer; that the fall of the hammer is an announcement by the agent of the owner that he will wait no longer for a higher bid; and that the one whose bid was highest when the hammer fell is the purchaser without reference to the action of the auctioneer in announcing that some other bidder is the purchaser. Reduced to its lowest terms, this means that the offer to sell is made in the advertisement of intention to sell at auction, and that the contract is completed by the acceptance of that offer by the bidder. There is some ground for this theory, but the decided weight of authority sustains the view that the announcement is a mere statement of intention to hold an auction, and that no contract of any character is made until the offer to purchase is accepted by the auctioneer.

The jury, under proper instructions, found that the property was offered without express reservations as to the amount of the bids, that the bid of $5 was made in good faith, and that, under the circumstances, the amount was not so small as to justify the auctioneer in declining to consider it on that ground. No exceptions were taken to the instructions which submitted these questions to the jury, and on this appeal we accept the conclusions of the jury as final. The issue is also simplified by the fact that the case involves no question of puffing or by-bidding by the owner, or of fraud or misrepresentation in the announcement of the sale. For the purpose of the argument, we assume the correctness of the respondent's claim that an advertisement or announcement of an auction sale which does not state limitations and conditions is equivalent to the announcement that the sale will be without reserve. The issue of law is thus clearly defined.

The custom of selling goods at auction is as old as the law of sale. In Rome military spoils were disposed of at the foot of the spear—sub hastio—by auction, or increase. In later times we find a mode of auction called a "sale by the candle," or by the "inch of candle," which consisted of offering the property for sale for such a length of time as would suffice for the burning of an inch of candle. In Holland they inverted the usual process, and put the property up at a price usually greater than its value, and then gradually lowered the price until some one closed the sale by accepting the offer and thus becoming the purchaser. In ancient Babylon the young women were sold at a public auction according to a method which combined the features of the Dutch and ordinary kinds of auctions. The group of prospective wives would ordinarily contain some who, by reason of personal beauty, were thought more desirable than others. The attractive ones were first sold to the highest bidders. When the supply of this quality was exhausted, those less favored by nature were offered and sold to the bidders who would take them with the least dowry, which was payable out of the money received from the sale of the beauties. Herodotus considered this custom very commendable.

In view of the general prevalence of the custom of selling by auction, it is remarkable that no very early cases are found in the English reports. The parent case of Payne v. Cave, 3 T. R. 148, was decided by Lord Kenyon, Ch. J., sitting at Guildhall in 1788. The plaintiff offered a distilling apparatus for sale, including a pewter worm, at public auction, on the usual conditions that the highest bidder should be the purchaser. There were several bidders for the worm, of whom Cave, who bid £40, was the last. The auctioneer dwelt on this bid for some time, until Cave said: "Why do you dwell? You will not get more." The auctioneer stated that he was informed that the worm weighed at least 1,300 hundred-weight, and was worth more than £40. The bidder then asked him if he would warrant it to weigh so much, and, receiving an answer in the negative, he declared that he would not take it. The worm was then resold on a subsequent day for £30, and an action was brought against Cave for the difference. Lord Kenyon ruled that the bidder was at liberty to withdraw his bid at any time before the hammer fell, and nonsuited the plaintiff. On motion to set aside the nonsuit, it was contended that a bidder is bound by the conditions of the sale to abide by his bid, and could not retract; that the hammer is suspended, not for the benefit of the bidder, or to give him an opportunity for repenting, but for the benefit of the seller; and that in the meantime the person who bid last is a purchaser, conditional upon no one bidding higher. But the court thought otherwise, and held that the auctioneer was the agent of the vendor, and that the assent of both parties was necessary to make the contract binding, and "that is signified on the part of the seller by knocking down the hammer, which was not done here until the plaintiff had retracted." "An auction," said the court, "is not inaptly called a locus penitentie. Every bidding is nothing more than an offer on one side, which is not binding on either side until assented to."

The idea that an action will lie for the breach of an implied undertaking to sell to the highest bidder was advanced in Warlow v. Harrison (1859) 1 El. & El. 309, and dicta supporting it will be found in Harris v. Nickerson (1873) L. R. 8 Q. B. 288, Spencer v. Harding (1870) L. R. 5 C. P. 563, Re Agra & Masterman's Bank (1867) L. R. 2 Ch. 391, 397, and Johnston v. Boyes [1899] 2 Ch. 73. These cases assume that an offer to sell property at auction is indistinguishable from the case of an offer to the general public, such as a reward for the return of lost property, where it is held that contract rights are created in favor of one who complies with the conditions of the offer. Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co. [1893] 1 Q. B. 256; Anson, Contr. p. 52. Langdell seems to be the only text-writer who takes this view of what the law should be. In his Summary of the Law of Contracts (page 24) it is stated that the correct view is "that the seller makes the offer when the article is put up,—namely, to sell it to the highest bidder,—and that when a bid is made there is an actual sale, subject to the condition that no one else shall bid higher." See note to Tillman v. Dunman, in 57 L.R.A. 784, 789.

Warlow v. Harrison, the source of all the uncertainty, was an action against an auctioneer who had advertised that he would sell certain horses, "the property of a gentleman, without reserve," at auction. Warlow bid 60 guineas for one of the horses, whereupon the owner bid 61 guineas. Warlow refused to increase his bid, and the horse was announced as sold for 61 guineas to the owner. Warlow, claiming to be the highest good-faith bidder, tendered the amount of his bid to the auctioneer and demanded the horse, and, on this being refused, brought an action against the auctioneer, alleging that the defendant was his agent to complete the contract, that he had refused to do so, and that he had thereby lost certain money in attending the auction, and had been deprived of the benefit of his contract. The defendant pleaded: (1) Not guilty; (2) that the plaintiff was not the highest bidder; and (3) that the auctioneer did not become the bidder's agent to complete the sale. The plaintiff recovered a verdict, but the common pleas (Lord Campbell, Ch. J., Wightman, J., and Erle, J.) ordered a nonsuit on the ground that the plaintiff's allegation as to the agency of the defendant and the duty of the defendant to complete the contract on behalf of the plaintiff was not sustained. It was urged in argument that an auctioneer is the agent of the bidder to receive the bid; that the bidder is a conditional purchaser; that, when the sale by the conditions is without reserve, the bidder is absolutely the purchaser, unless there be a bona fide higher bidding; and that the auctioneer, in consideration of the bidding by which a commission will come to him, promises the highest bidder to knock down the article to him and to do all that is necessary to complete the sale. "But this reasoning," said Lord Campbell, "is wholly at variance with the case of Payne v. Cave, supra, which has been considered good law for nearly 70 years. That case decided that a bidding at an auction, instead of being a conditional purchase, is a mere offer, that the auctioneer is the agent of the vendor, that the assent of both parties is necessary to the contract, that this assent is signified by knocking down the hammer, and that till then either party may retract. This is quite inconsistent with the notion of a conditional purchase by a bidding, and with the notion of there being any personal promise by the auctioneer to the bidder that the bidding of an intending purchaser shall absolutely be accepted by the vendor. The vendor himself and the bidder being respectively free till the hammer is knocked down, the auctioneer cannot possibly be previously bound." Holding, thus, that no action would lie against the auctioneer, the court found it unnecessary to consider whether there was any remedy against a vendor who had violated a condition that the property would be sold to the highest bona fide bidder without reserve. In the Exchequer Chamber the decision was affirmed; but, as the plaintiff might amend his declaration, the court discussed the merits of the case which might be made. Barons Martin, Byles, and Watson were of the opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the auctioneer, because the auction was announced to be "without reserve," which meant that neither the owner nor any one in his behalf should bid at the auction, and that the property would be sold to the highest bidder, whether the sum bid was equivalent to the real value or not. On the principle which creates a contract between the loser of property who offers a reward for its return and the finder, or a railway company which advertises a time-table and one who purchases a ticket, it was said that an auctioneer who put the property up for sale upon such conditions pledges himself that the sale shall be without reserve, and that a contract is made with the highest bidder, who, in case of a breach thereof, has a right of action against the auctioneer. "We think," said Baron

Martin, "the auctioneer has contracted that the sale shall be without reserve, and that the contract is broken upon a bid being made by or on behalf of the owner, whether it be during the time when the property is under the hammer, or it be the last bid upon which the article is knocked down. In either case the sale is not 'without reserve,' and the contract of the auctioneer is broken. We entertain no doubt that the owner may, at any time before the contract is legally complete, interfere and revoke the auctioneer's authority; but he does so at his peril; and, if the auctioneer has contracted any liability in consequence of his employment and the subsequent revocation or conduct of the owner, he is entitled to be indemnified." Baron Bramwell and Willes, J., preferred to rest the judgment upon the ground that the auctioneer had undertaken to have, and yet there was evidence that he had not, authority to sell without reserve.

Mainprice v. Westley (1865) 6 Best & S. 420, was also an action against the auctioneer. The declaration averred that in handbills and circulars it was "stated and represented by him that he, the defendant, would offer the said message and shop for peremptory sale by public auction" at a day and place named; that the plaintiff, confiding in the statements, attended at the time and place; that the message and shop were offered according to the representation; that the plaintiff then bid a price which was the highest bid, except a sum which, to the knowledge of the defendant, was bid by an agent of the vendor contrary to the representation that the sale would be peremptory; and that the defendant refused the plaintiff's offer. It was said that if it had been alleged that any part of the representation had been false to the knowledge of the defendant, and that the plaintiff, by reason of the deceit, had been induced to incur expense by going to the place of auction, the count would have been good. But intentional deceit was not alleged, the plaintiff relying on the claim that there was a contract on the part of the auctioneer that, if the plaintiff was the highest bidder, the premises would be knocked down to him. It was held that no contract had been proven, because the handbills disclosed that the auctioneer was merely the agent of a principal, the name of whose solicitor was given. If any express contract was made, it was with this solicitor. The court declined to determine whether there was any liability on his part, and merely held that no case had been proven against the auctioneer. Cockburn, Ch. J., Shee, J., and Blackburn, J., dubitante, were of the opinion that when a auctioneer, without disclosing his principal, advertises a sale without reserve, he personally contracts that there shall be a sale without reserve. But the point was not decided. As to Warlow v. Harrison, Blackburn, J., said: "Three learned judges gave their opinion that, where an auctioneer advertised a sale without reserve, not disclosing in any way who his principal was, he personally contracted that there should be a sale without reserve. Two other learned judges did not agree in this view; and it appears that ultimately the court of exchequer chamber pronounced no other judgment than that the pleadings should be amended to enable the parties to raise the question, unless they consented to a stet processus, which they did. We do not think, therefore, that we are precluded by this as a judgment of the court of error; and, if necessary, we should be at liberty to consider the question whether, even in a case where the name of a principal is not disclosed by an auctioneer, there is a contract by the latter such as is now insisted on."

In Harris v. Nickerson (1875) L. R. 8 Q. B. 286, the nature of the advertisement was considered, and it was held that it should be construed as a mere declaration of intention, which did not amount to a contract with any one who might act upon it, or constitute a warranty that the articles advertised would be offered for sale. Certain articles were not offered, and a party who attended for the purpose of bidding brought an action to recover for his loss of time and expense. Blackburn, J., said: "This is certainly a startling proposition, and would be excessively inconvenient if carried out. It amounts to saying that any one who advertises a sale by publishing an advertisement becomes responsible to everybody who attends the sale, for his cab hire and traveling expenses." Referring to Warlow v. Harrison, the learned judge remarked that there the majority of the judges held that an action would lie for not knocking down the property to the highest bidder, when the sale was advertised as without reserve; that in such a case there is a contract to sell to the highest bidder, and, if the owner bids, there is a breach of the contract. Quinn, J., was also of the opinion that the particular action could not be maintained without going to the extent of saying that, where an auctioneer issues an advertisement of the sale of goods, if he withdraws any part of them without notice, the persons attending may all maintain actions against him. He was of the opinion, however, that when a sale is advertised without reserve, and a lot is put up and bid for, there is ground for saying, as was said in Warlow v. Harrison, that a contract is entered into between the auctioneer and the highest bona fide bidder. But that rule was not applicable to the case under consideration, as the property was never put up for sale, and it was impossible to say that there was a contract with everyone attending the sale. The real point in the case was brought out by Justice Archibald, who said: "This is an attempt on the part of the plaintiff to make a mere declaration of intention a binding contract. He has utterly failed to show authority or reason for the proposition. If a false and fraudulent representation had been made out, it would have been quite another matter. But to say that a mere advertisement that certain articles will be sold by auction amounts to a contract to indemnify all who attend, if the sale of any part of the articles does not take place, is a proposition without authority, or ground for supporting it."

Re Agra & Masterman's Bank (1867) L. R. 2 Ch. 391, held that the holder of a letter of credit is the agent of the writer, for the purpose of entering into a contract. Lord Cairns referred to Warlow v. Harrison and Denton v. Great Northern R. Co. 5 El. & Bl. 860, as analogous cases. In Spencer v. Harding, L. R. 5 C. P. 561, it appeared that the defendant had sent out circulars inviting offers for a stock of goods. Mr. Justice Willes said that, "if the circular had gone on, 'and we undertake to sell to the highest bidder,' the reward cases would have applied, and there would have been a good contract in respect of the persons. But the question is whether there is here any offer to enter into a contract at all, or whether the circular amounts to anything more than a mere proclamation that the defendants are ready to chaffer for the sale of the goods, and to receive offers for the purchase of them." It was held that the circular contained no words intimating that the highest bid would be accepted.

In Johnston v. Boyes [1899] 2 Ch. 73, it appeared that Boyes had advertised the freehold of a public house for sale at auction, under conditions providing that the highest bidder should be the purchaser. The plaintiff, a married woman of financial standing, sent her husband to bid for her, but did not supply him with the necessary funds. The property was knocked down to him; but the auctioneer, who knew that he was financially irresponsible, refused to accept his check for the amount of the required deposit, and sold the property to another person. The husband assured the auctioneer that his wife would furnish the money to make the check good, and the court found that his statement was true. The plaintiff sued the vendors for breach of the contract that the highest bidder should be the purchaser. It was held that the bidder had not complied with the conditions of sale, which required that the deposit should be in cash. This disposed of the case; but the court stated that the action could have been maintained, had the deposit been tendered in cash and the highest bidder been refused the property. "A vendor," said Cozens-Hardy, J., "who offers property for sale by auction on the terms of the printed conditions, can be made liable to a member of the public who accepts the offer, if those conditions be violated,"—citing Warlow v. Harrison, 1 El. & Bl. 295, and Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co. [1893] 1 Q. B. 256.

But the doctrine of Warlow v. Harrison was never generally acquiesced in, and in Lord Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. 1, p. 511 (n), doubt is expressed as to its correctness. In a recent English edition of Benjamin on Sales (1906) the learned editors say that "two points were involved in Warlow v. Harrison; viz. (1) Is an announcement that a sale will be without reserve, or will be made to the highest bidder, an offer of a contract with the highest bona fide bidder, and accepted by his bid? (2) When an auctioneer, acting for an undisclosed principal, makes such an announcement, does he thereby offer to contract personally? Although technically Warlow v. Harrison may not have been an actual decision upon these points, yet there was the strongest intimation of opinion in the affirmative on both points on the part of three judges, from which the other two did not dissent; and the case has been subsequently treated as actually deciding them. On the second point, however,—the personal liability of the auctioneer acting for an undisclosed principal,—the case was doubted by Cockburn, Ch. J., and Shee, J., in Mainprice v. Westley, because the employment of an auctioneer necessarily involves the character of agent only, and therefore, prima facie, he does not contract personally. . . . As pointed out by a learned writer [Pollock, Contr. pp. 17, 19], Warlow v. Harrison involves the theory that bidding at an auction advertised to be without reserve is not, as in other cases, a mere offer, but a conditional acceptance, the condition being that no higher bidder presents himself. But this theory cannot hold good under § 58 (2) of the Code, as the sale is not 'complete' until the fall of the hammer, so that, until then, neither party is bound. Yet, when once the goods are put up, there may, perhaps, be an implied contract not to withdraw them" [Benjamin, Sales, p. 487],—citing Johnston v. Boyes, supra.

In commenting on Warlow v. Harrison, Sir Frederick Pollock says that "the opinions expressed by the judges, therefore, are not equivalent to the actual judgment of a court of error, and have been, in fact, regarded with some doubt in a later case, where the court of Queen's bench decided that, at all events, an auctioneer whose principal is disclosed by the conditions of sale does not contract personally that the sale shall be without reserve." Pollock, Contr. (Williston ed.) p. 18, citing Mainprice v. Westley, supra. It is now settled that the fact of disclosure or nondisclosure of the principal is immaterial. Woolfe v. Thorne (1877) L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 355; Rainbow v. Howkins [1904] 2 K. B. 322.

Sale of Goods Act 1893 (Stat. 56 & 57 Vict. chap. 71) § 58 (2), provides that ". . . (2) a sale by auction is complete when the auctioneer announces its completion by the fall of the hammer, or in other customary manner. Until such announcement is made, any bidder may retract his bid." It was held in the Scotch case of Fenwick v. Macdonald, F. & Co. (1904) 6 F. 850, Ct. of Sess. 1 Butterworth's Ten Years' Dig. p. 90, that, whatever may have been the law formerly, this statute entitles a bidder to withdraw his bid at any time before the fall of the hammer, and the vendor must be equally free to withdraw his offer to sell, because one party cannot be bound while the other is free. But in the recent case of McManus v. Fortescue [1907] 2 K. B. 1, some support was again given to Warlow v. Harrison. It appeared that the property was actually knocked down to the highest bidder at a price below the reserve; and it was held that the bidder had no right of action against the auctioneer, either for breach of duty, or for refusing to sign a memorandum or otherwise complete the contract, or for breach of warranty of authority to accept the bid. Lord Justice Cozens-Hardy, in agreeing with this disposition of the case, said: "I am of the same opinion, and I only desire to add one remark. This action was really launched on the lines of Warlow v. Harrison, but in my opinion the attempt to set up an analogy between the two cases fails. The exchequer chamber had there to consider a case in which the sale was advertised to be without reserve, and the auctioneer was sued by a man who claimed to be the highest bidder, the only bid overtopping his being that of the vendor. The court decided that the defendant, the auctioneer, might be liable on the ground that he had contracted that the sale should be without reserve, and had broken that contract. Here the contract between the parties is subject to the reserve, and that contract has not been broken, and consequently the plaintiff has no cause of action."

The Canadian cases of McAlpine v. Young, 2 Ch. Chamb. Rep. (U. C.) 85, and O'Connor v. Woodward, 6 Ont. Pr. 223, seem to 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

approve the doctrine of Warlow v. Harrison; but Holder v. Jackson, 11 U. C. C. P. 543, is to the contrary. The plaintiff there rested his claim on the theory that an auctioneer at a public auction must receive the bid of any person present, and does a wrong to any person whose bid he refuses to receive. After conceding, on the authority of Warlow v. Harrison, that, when the sale is advertised to be without reserve, the auctioneer cannot receive a higher bid on the behalf of the owner, to the prejudice of the preceding bidder, the court said: "But, in such a sale as is stated in this count, I do not understand on what ground any person can claim as a right to be allowed to bid,—to offer to become a purchaser. It will be going beyond any authority I have seen to hold that, by holding an auction under such circumstances, there is an implied duty or contract to deal with any person who presents himself, and that the auctioneer, with due regard to his responsibilities to his principal, has not a right to refuse to deal with any particular person. The principal might refuse from mere caprice to sell to A, B, or C, and might direct the auctioneer to refuse to sell to certain parties; and I can see no reason why the auctioneer (the agent) is bound by law to accept offers or bids, any more than his principal would be." See Cull v. Wakefield, 6 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 178.

In the United States a distinction has sometimes been made between ordinary private and judicial and official sales, but the only difference seems to be that the latter may require the approval of the court. Clifford, J., in Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. 196, 18 L. ed. 43.

In Corryolles v. Mossy, 2 La. 504, the court approved the rule stated by Chancellor Kent (2 Com. 424), that a bid is no more than an offer on one side, which is not binding until accepted by the auctioneer; but the decision was rested on the construction of a provision of the Louisiana Code.

In Newman v. Vonderheide, 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 164, it was said that, "where property offered at public auction for sale is withdrawn before the acceptance of a bid, there is no contract of sale, and the highest bidder cannot compel a conveyance by an action for specific performance, or obtain damages for refusal to convey."

Miller v. Baynard, 2 Houst. (Del.) 559, 83 Am. Dec. 168, and Hartwell v. Gurney, 16 R. I. 78, 13 Atl. 113,—both cases of puffing,—give some support to the doctrine of Warlow v. Harrison. In the latter it was held that the vendor cannot hold the bidder when the price has been run up by means of puffing. The statement of the court that "an offer to sell at auction is an offer to sell to the highest bidder, and every bid is an inchoate acceptance, entitling the bidder to the property offered, if it turns out to be the highest, and there is no retraction on either side before the hammer falls," must be read in connection with the facts of the case which was under consideration.

Taylor v. Harnett, 26 Misc. 362, 55 N. Y. Supp. 988, holds that an auctioneer has the right to refuse to accept a bid which is a trifling advance, where the sum offered is not commensurate with the actual known value of the property. In the course of the decision the court said: "Their claim is that, as a matter of law, where an auctioneer advertises a sale at public auction, and, in response to this invitation, bidders attend, an implied contract arises between them that the property will be knocked down to the highest bidder, for a breach of which an action will lie against him at the suit of such bidder. There is no case in this state which is directly in point upon the proposition advanced. The question, however, seems to have been determined in England in the case of Warlow v. Harrison, 29 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 14, in the exchequer chamber, error from the Queen's bench. There it was held, as the headnote expresses it, that, if the auctioneer inserts in the condition of a sale by auction that the property is to be sold 'without reserve,' he, by so doing, contracts with the highest bona fide bidder that the sale shall be without reserve; and the contract is broken if, during the auction, a bid is made by or on behalf of the owner of the property sold; and in such case the auctioneer is liable to an action at the suit of the highest bona fide bidder."

It has been held that the highest bidder at a judicial sale is entitled, as a matter of law, to the property. State v. Johnson, 2 N. C. (1 Hayw.) 293; McLeod v. McCall, 48 N. C. (3 Jones, L.) 89; Gilbert v. Watts-DeGolyer-Co. 169 Ill. 129, 61 Am. St. Rep. 154, 48 N. E. 430; Morton v. Moore, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 717. But the decided weight of authority is otherwise. Knox v. Spratt, 19 Fla. 833; Rogers & B. Hardware Co. v. Cleveland Bldg. Co. 132 Mo. 458, 31 L.R.A. 335, 53 Am. St. Rep. 494, 34 S. W. 57; Davis v. McCann, 143 Mo. 178, 44 S. W. 795. See also Keightley v. Birch, 3 Campb. 521.

Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. supra, holds that the highest bidder at a judicial sale at public auction, whose bid has not been accepted, cannot require that the sale be confirmed to him. Mr. Justice Clifford said: "Biddings at an auction, says Mr. Addison, are mere offers, which may be retracted at any time before the hammer is down and the offer has been accepted. Addison, Contr. 1857 ed. 26. The leading case upon that subject is that of Payne v. Cave, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

3 T. R. 148, where it was expressly held that every bidding at an auction is nothing more than an offer on one side until it has received the assent of the auctioneer as the agent of the owner. The supreme court of Pennsylvania held, in the case of Fisher v. Seltzer, 23 Pa. 308, 62 Am. Dec. 335, that a bidder at a sheriff's sale has a right to retract his bid before the property is struck down to him, and that the sheriff has no right to prescribe conditions which will deprive him of such a right. Express ruling was that a bid at an auction before the hammer falls is like an offer before acceptance, and that, when the bid is withdrawn before it is accepted, there is no contract, and that such a bidder cannot be regarded in any sense as a purchaser. Rule, as laid down in the last edition of 'Story on Sales,' is substantially the same as that adopted in the preceding case. Speaking of ordinary sales at an auction, the author says that the seller may withdraw the goods, or the bidder may retract his bid, at any time before they are struck off; and the reason assigned for the rule is that, so long as the final consent of both parties is not signified by the blow of the hammer, there is no mutual agreement to a definite proposition. 1 Sugden, Vend. & P. 25. But as soon as the hammer is struck down, says the same author, the bargain is considered as concluded, and the seller has no right afterwards to accept a higher bid, nor the buyer to withdraw from the contract. Routledge v. Grant, 4 Bing. 653; Cooke v. Oxley, 3 T. R. 654; Adams v. Lindsell, 1 Barn. & Ald. 681; Story, Sales, 461. Same rules prevail upon a sale under common-law process as in other cases of sales at public auction, so far as respects the question now before the court. Until the property is actually struck off to the bidder, he may withdraw his bid as a mere offer or proposition. Judicial sales, made under the decretal orders of courts of chancery, are also, in this country, governed substantially by the same rules, except that such sales are usually made by the marshal, or master in chancery acting as an officer of the court, and are always regarded as under the control and subject to the power of the court to set the sale aside for good cause shown, or open it any time before it has been confirmed, if the circumstances of the case require the exercise of that power. . . . Subject to those qualifications, and perhaps some others which need not be noticed, the question of sale or no sale, when it arises under a state of facts such as are exhibited in this record, may be fully tested by substantially the same rules as those which apply in cases of sales under common-law process, or in other cases of sales at public auction. Tested by those rules, it is clear to a demonstration that there was no sale of the mortgaged premises in this case, because the property was never struck off to the appellant, nor was his bid, by act or word, or in any manner, ever accepted by the seller; and the record shows that, at the hearing in the court below, nothing of the kind was pretended by the appellant. Instead of setting up that pretense, his complaint was that the marshal erred in refusing to accept his bid, which, if possible, is less defensible upon the facts and circumstances of the case than the theory of the sale and purchase."

In Boyd v. Greene, 162 Mass. 566, 39 N. E. 277, an auction sale of certain real estate had been advertised to take place without reserve. The plaintiff bid $1,725 for the property, and the auctioneer told him that if he would bid $1,750 the property would be knocked down to him. The bid was made; but the auctioneer, after consulting with the owner, then announced that the property would not be sold for $1,750. After referring to Warlow v. Harrison, and the other English cases in which it had been cited, the court said: "The case at bar is not an action to recover for the trouble and expense of attending the auction under the inducement held out by the defendants in their advertisement. See Harris v. Nickerson, ubi supra. It is an action to recover damages because the defendants, through their agent, the auctioneer, did not sell the property to the plaintiff, and did not do what was necessary to make a valid sale . . . to him, as they had agreed to do." The court held that, even if the conversation between the auctioneer and bidder did amount to a contract, it was unenforceable, because within the statute of frauds. White v. Dahlquist, 179 Mass. 427, 60 N. E. 791.

The recent case of McPherson Bros. Co. v. Okanogan County, 45 Wash. 285, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 748, 88 Pac. 199, is very like the one at bar. The county advertised property for sale at public auction to the highest and best bidder. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff was the highest and best bidder, and that the defendant refused to knock down the property to it, and demanded that the defendant be required to convey the property to it. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained. On the appeal the appellant contended that, since its bid for the property when it was offered for sale was the highest and best bid, it was the duty of the auctioneer to strike off the property to it, and that the failure so to do could not affect its right to have the sale completed. After citing Blossom v. Milwaukee & C. R. Co. 3 Wall. 196, 18 L. ed. 43, and other cases, the court said: "Measured by the tests thought sufficient in these cases, the offer to sell the property, and a bid therefor by the appellant, did not create a contract of sale between the county and the appellant, . . . nor his bid accepted; and, there being no contract of sale between the parties, there is no contract capable of being specifically performed." It was also held that the officer making the sale was clothed with a certain discretion as to refusing a bid, when in his judgment it was not made in good faith, or was made in such a sum as would amount to a virtual sacrifice of the property. To the same effect is Warehime v. Graf, 83 Md. 98, 34 Atl. 364, which held that the contract was not complete until the property was knocked down to the highest bidder.

In Ives v. Trement, 29 Mich. 390, Mr. Justice Cooley said: "The assignees had put an auctioneer in charge of the sale, and must be understood to authorize him to speak for them. When he accepts a bid and knocks down the property, a bargain is closed." Tillman v. Dunman, 114 Ga. 406, 57 L.R.A. 784, 88 Am. St. Rep. 28, 40 S. E. 244, holds that it is the right of an executor offering land at sale at public auction to withdraw the same at any time before the hammer falls, which, of course, could not be done if the contract was complete when the bid was made.

The earnestness with which the respondent contends that the trial court was right in holding that the contract was complete when the bid was made, conditional on there being no higher bid, has induced us to make a somewhat extended examination of the authorities. The result discloses the fact that there has been running through some of the English cases a recognized, but never applied, principle which would sustain the right of action in such a case as the present. But all the cases in which the doctrine is recognized were decided on other grounds. No substantial support for the doctrine is found in the American cases. It is, in fact, utterly irreconcilable with principles which are universally recognized. Mutuality is an essential element of a contract. One party thereto cannot be bound, and the other remain free. If the announcement of an auction is an offer to sell to the highest good-faith bidder, and the contract is closed when the bid is made, both the vendor and the vendee must be bound thereby. But it is conceded by all the authorities that the bidder may withdraw his bid at any time before the hammer falls, and this means necessarily that the bid is a mere offer which is not binding until accepted. Grotenkemper v. Achtermeyer, 11 Bush, 222; Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. v. Behnke, 121 Cal. 339, 53

Pac. 812; Fisher v. Seltzer, 23 Pa. 308, 62 Am. Dec. 335; Dunham v. Hartman, 153 Mo. 625, 77 Am. St. Rep. 741, 55 S. W. 233; Payne v. Cave, 3 T. R. 148; Blossom v. Missouri P. R. Co. 3 Wall. 196, 18 L. ed. 43; Halsbury, Laws of England, § 1039; 1 Dart, Vend. & P. p. 200; 1 Benjamin, Sales, 5th Eng. ed. p. 66; Story, Sales, 4th ed. § 461; Baker, Sales, § 550; Bateman, Auctions, § 730; 1 Warvelle, Vend. & P. § 7; note to Tillman v. Dunman, 57 L.R.A. 784; 4 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1044; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 501; 1 Sugden, Vend. & P. 6th ed. 139; Williams, Vend. & P. 19; Auctions & Auctioneers, 8 Southern L. Rev. 555. 'English Sales of Goods Act 1893, § 58 (2), expressly provides that "every bidding being but an offer on one side, which is binding on neither until assented to." Similar provisions are found in the statutes of California, (Civ. Code, § 1794) and North Dakota (Rev. Codes 1905, § 5438).

On principle and authority the correct rule is that an announcement that a person will sell his property at public auction to the highest bidder is a mere declaration of intention to hold an auction at which bids will be received; that a bid is an offer which is accepted when the hammer falls; and until the acceptance of the bid is signified in some manner neither party assumes any legal obligation to the other. At any time before the highest bid is accepted, the bidder may withdraw his offer to purchase, or the auctioneer his offer to sell. The owner's offer to sell is made at the time through the auctioneer, and not when he advertises the auction sale. A merchant advertises that on a certain day he will sell his goods at bargain prices; but no one imagines that the prospective purchaser, who visits the store and is denied the right to purchase, has an action for damages against the merchant. He merely offers to purchase, and, if his offer is refused, he has no remedy, although he may have lost a bargain, and have incurred expense and lost time in visiting the store. The analogy between such a transaction and an auction is at least close. As the advertisement in this case was a mere statement of intention to offer the property for sale at public auction to the highest bidder, the respondent's bid did not complete either a contract of sale or a contract to make a sale.

The question of the application of the statute of frauds has been fully argued; but it disappears from the case when we reach the conclusion that no contract of any kind was entered into between the parties.

The order is therefore reversed, with directions to enter judgment for the defendant.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF MISSOURI, Resp.,

v.

JESSE B. WEBB, Appt.

(216 Mo. 378, 115 S. W. 998.)

Counseling suicide — repentance — effectiveness.

1. To relieve one from liability to punishment for counseling suicide who repents and endeavors to persuade the person so counseled not to do so, before he has committed the act, it is not necessary that deceased should have abandoned his purpose, and led accused in good faith to believe that he had done so.

Same — burden of proof.

2. One accused of counseling suicide has not the burden of showing that decedent acted of his own volition, and not under the advice and counsel of the accused.

Same — inability to escape.

3. One who, after agreeing with another that they should commit suicide together, and procuring a pistol for that purpose, afterward changes his mind and endeavors to escape from the consequences of his agreement, but is unable to do so because of physical weakness, is not liable for assisting the suicide, in case deceased refuses to permit him to escape, and proceeds to shoot him and then kill himself.

Evidence — admission — effect.

4. To make applicable to one suffering from a shot wound, and weakened by disease so that he was too weak to sign his name, and who is alleged to have made statements in answer to questions propounded to him, the rule as to presumptions arising against one accused of crime from statements made against himself, he must be found to have been in such condition of mind and body as to have been able to know the statement he was making, and to understand the questions propounded to him.

(February 2, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Clay County convicting defendant of manslaughter. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. B. A. Reed, W. J. Courtney, and Martin E. Lawson, for appellant:

It was the duty of the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was deliberately present, assisting, counseling,

Note. — The above case appears to be one of first impression upon the question of repentance and withdrawal from a suicide pact, or subsequent attempt to dissuade one from suicide after having counseled the same, as affecting the guilt of the penitent.

Upon the general subject of inciting or abetting suicide, see note to Burnett v. People, 66 L.R.A. 304.

and advising deceased to commit suicide; and the instruction placing the burden on defendant to show that deceased killed herself of her own volition was erroneous.

State v. Wingo, 66 Mo. 181, 27 Am. Rep. 329; State v. Hickam, 95 Mo. 329, 6 Am. St. Rep. 54, 8 S. W. 252; State v. Hardelein, 169 Mo. 585, 70 S. W. 130; Lillenthal v. United States, 97 U. S. 266, 24 L. ed. 905; State v. Thornton, 10 S. D. 349, 41 L.R.A. 542, 73 N. W. 196; State v. Schweitzer, 57 Conn. 532, 6 L.R.A. 125, 18 Atl. 787; Phillips v. State, 26 Tex. App. 228, 8 Am. St. Rep. 471, 9 S. W. 557; Tiffany v. Com. 121 Pa. 165, 6 Am. St. Rep. 775, 15 Atl. 462; 2 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. 4th ed. §§ 599, 600; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. 4th ed. § 1049.

Messrs. Elliott W. Major, Attorney General, and John M. Atkinson, for respondent:

The mere act of advising another to commit suicide is unlawful; and, if the latter acts on such advice, and kills himself, the former is guilty.

Com. v. Bowen, 13 Mass. 356, 7 Am. Dec. 154; Com. v. Mink, 123 Mass. 422, 25 Am. Rep. 109; R. v. Alison, 8 Car. & P. 418; Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 146; Burnett v. People, 204 Ill. 208, 66 L.R.A. 304, 98 Am. St. Rep. 206, 68 N. E. 505; State v. Ludwig, 70 Mo. 412; State v. Fitzgerald, 130 Mo. 407, 32 S. W. 1113.

The charge as to burden of proof was correct.

Dill v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 240, 60 Am. St. Rep. 37, 33 S. W. 126.

Gantt, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant has appealed to this court from the conviction of manslaughter in the first degree, at the November term, 1907, of the circuit court of Clay county.

The prosecution was begun on November 7, 1906, by the prosecuting attorney of Clay county filing an information in the circuit court, duly verified, wherein he charged the defendant with having, on the 11th day of October, 1906, feloniously, deliberately, premeditatedly, on purpose, and of his malice aforethought, shot and killed one Inez Webb. He was duly arraigned and entered his plea of not guilty, and the cause, as above stated, was tried at the November term, 1907.

The evidence tended to show that at the Peddicord Hotel, in Smithville, Clay county, on the morning of the 11th day of October, 1906, the defendant, Jesse Webb, and Inez Webb, or Walkup, were both shot. Defendant received a pistol bullet near the heart, and the deceased received three bullet wounds near the heart and one through the head. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

She died immediately. Prior to the shooting, for some months both the defendant and the deceased worked at the State Hospital for the Insane, at St. Joseph, Missouri. They had associated together for some time and the evidence tended to show that he was a consumptive. He quit work at the hospital October 1, 1906, and she quit work some two days later. They were both employed at the hospital as day nurses. He had been employed at the hospital about two years, and she had been employed there from seven to twelve months. They had been associated together for about two months. Dr. Woodson, the superintendent of the hospital, testified that Webb was run down and not strong, and he had prescribed malt and cod-liver oil for him. After leaving the hospital, defendant went down into the city of St. Joseph to live, and deceased followed him, and they remained together, holding themselves out as man and wife. After remaining a few days in St. Joseph, they went to Plattsburg to visit his relatives, where they remained a few days. While there he was very sick. They left Plattsburg, saying they were going to Hot Springs, Arkansas, for his health, and started, but went to Smithville, where they remained several days. At Plattsburg the deceased said that when the defendant died she wanted to die too. The defendant, in his testimony, stated that she suggested that they commit suicide, but he refused. After reaching Smithville, however, they agreed to commit suicide together, and wrote letters to their relatives indicative of their intention so to do. The deceased bought morphine, which they both took on Monday night, but they woke up about 1 o'clock on Tuesday. The deceased then said she would get some strychnine. She got it, and they took it Tuesday night. The strychnine did not kill them, and they woke up about 10 or 11 o'clock Wednesday morning. The defendant then got the deceased to telephone to a Mr. James Reed at Trimble, Missouri, to come to him at Smithville, and Reed, in response, arrived at Smithville that evening at 5 or 6 o'clock. Prior to Reed's arrival at Smithville, however, defendant purchased a revolver from a Mr. Dougherty, who was a clerk in a hardware store, and who loaded the revolver for him. When Reed arrived at Smithville, the deceased and the defendant were in bed. She represented herself as Mrs. Webb, and Reed sat down on the edge of the bed, and the defendant requested him to take defendant to Edgerton to his brother, Louis Webb. Reed started to get defendant's clothes for him, but the deceased got between Reed and the clothes, and told him that defendant was not going away from there; if he did, she would follow him and kill him. Reed then left them and told them he would be back in the morning; but before he reached the hotel the next morning both of them had been shot. Reed testified that the defendant was awfully weak and was spitting blood, and he could scarcely hear him talk. The defendant testified that the evening before the shooting he abandoned his purpose to destroy himself. And after Reed left the hotel that evening, he had a long talk with the deceased, endeavoring to persuade her to give up the idea of suicide, and he thought she had given it up, and they then agreed to take the pistol back to the store in the morning and get back what money they could; that the pistol was then put under the pillow until morning, and they went to sleep. He was awakened the next morning by something against his breast. As he opened his eyes, she said, "Here is where we die," and shot him. He testified that he knew no more until he heard the parties breaking into the room. The shooting occurred about 8:30 Friday morning. When the people broke into the room, they found the deceased dead and the defendant in a spasm. One of the witnesses testified that before they broke in the door he heard the man saying "Shoot me again." The other witness heard this statement, but he thought it was immediately after he got into the room. Defendant testified that he did not know in which hand the deceased held the revolver; that he had no recollection of her shooting herself.

The statement of the defendant was offered in evidence, which had been taken by the coroner, but the defendant testified that he had no remembrance of making any statement whatever. The statement was signed before the coroner by defendant's mark. In this statement the defendant said his wife did the shooting, and as soon as she shot him she laid down on the bed and shot herself two or three times. She put her arms around his neck, and said, "Oh, Jess, are you dead?" She said this, however, before she shot herself. He also stated that they were married a week before at Topeka, Kansas, and then went to St. Joseph and Plattsburg, and then came to Smithville; that he had a hemorrhage from his lungs, which caused him to get off at Smithville. They had started to Hot Springs. His reason for wanting to die was that he had tuberculosis and did not think he could live long anyway, and she said her reason for dying was because she loved him and did not want to live without him. He also testified that his wife wrote a letter to her father and one to a Mrs. Hart. And he wrote one to his sister and mother, and 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

they left a note requesting the landlady to mail the letters and notify his brother.

The court instructed the jury on murder in the first degree and on manslaughter in the first degree. As the jury found the defendant guilty of manslaughter only, the charge of murder is eliminated from the case. The fifth instruction is in the following words: "If the jury believe from the evidence that deceased committed suicide, and that defendant counseled, advised, and assisted deceased to do so, then, even though defendant may have changed his mind before the act was committed, and endeavored to dissuade her from such purpose, then the mere fact that defendant did change his mind and endeavor to dissuade her will not excuse defendant from such counsel, advice, and assistance, if any, unless you believe that deceased led defendant to believe in good faith that she had abandoned such idea, and then afterwards killed herself of her own volition, and not under the influence of his counsel, advice, and assistance, if any, to do so. And if he did counsel, advise, and assist her to commit suicide, and she afterwards killed herself, the burden is on defendant to show that such killing was done of her own volition, and not under the influence of his advice, counsel, or assistance, if any." The questions presented for our consideration relate entirely to the correctness of the instructions given and refused.

1. Under the common law, if one counseled another to commit suicide, and the other, by reason of the encouragement and advice, killed himself, the adviser was guilty of murder as an aider and abettor, provided he was present when his advice was carried out. It was ruled in R. v. Dyson, Russ. & R. C. C. 523, that, if two persons mutually agree to die together, and, in pursuance of the agreement, each attempts to kill himself, but the means employed to produce death takes effect on only one, the survivor is guilty of murder. But under the statute of this state (§ 1822, Rev. Stat. 1899 [Anno. Stat. 1906, p. 1266]), "Every person deliberately assisting another in the commission of self-murder shall be deemed guilty of manslaughter in the first degree." The crucial point in the case is as to the correctness of instruction No. 5, as above set out in the statement of the cause. It will be noted that this instruction required the jury to find, first, that the deceased committed suicide, and, second, that the defendant counseled, advised, and assisted her to do so; and then directed the jury that, even though the defendant changed his mind before the criminal act was committed, and endeavored to dissuade her from such purpose, then the fact that he did change his mind and endeavor to dissuade her will not excuse him from such counsel, advice, and assistance, unless the jury believe that the deceased led the defendant to believe in good faith that she had abandoned such idea, and then afterwards killed herself of her own volition, and not under the influence of his counsel, advice, and assistance, if any, to do so. The diligence of counsel has not availed to find a precedent for this instruction, and we have been unable to find any; and accordingly the correctness of this instruction must be determined upon reason and the analogies of the law. In effect we take it that this prosecution is based upon the theory of a conspiracy between the defendant and the deceased that each should commit suicide; and the instruction directs the jury, in effect, that, although the defendant withdrew from the conspiracy before the suicide was committed by deceased, and although he endeavored to dissuade her from her purpose to kill herself, these facts did not excuse the defendant from his previous agreement and advice to commit suicide, unless the deceased led the defendant to believe that she also had abandoned such idea, and then killed herself of her own volition. It is a general principle of the criminal law that, although several parties conspire to do a criminal act, there is a place of repentance, a locus penitentiae, so that, before the act is done, either one or all of the parties may abandon their design and thus avoid committing the criminal act. United States v. Britton, 108 U. S. loc. cit. 205, 27 L. ed. 700, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 531. This principle is familiar in the law of homicide. Thus it is said: "Though a man should be in the wrong in the first instance, yet a 'space for repentance is always open; and where a combatant in good faith withdraws as far as he can, really intending to abandon the conflict,' and his adversary still pursues him, then, if taking life becomes necessary to save his own, he will be justified." State v. Partlow, 90 Mo. loc. cit. 627, 59 Am. Rep. 31, 4 S. W. 14; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Law, § 871; Horrigan & T. Self-Defense, 227; 4 Bl. Com. 184. The instruction seems to concede this principle of permitting the defendant to abandon his previous intention of committing suicide, and agreeing that the deceased should also do so at the same time; but this right is made dependent upon the fact that the deceased also abandoned her purpose to commit suicide, and led the defendant to believe in good faith that she had done so. It seems to us that this qualification of the right is not reasonable or based upon a sound principle. If there is anything in the doctrine of a space for repentance, it seems to us, when the defendant abandoned his purpose of committing suicide, and endeavored to persuade the deceased to also abandon it, that he had done all that the law could exact of him. If, in spite of his announced intention to refuse to go further in the criminal purpose, and his persuasion and advice to also abandon such a purpose, the deceased proceeded to kill herself, then it was her own act, and one for which the defendant cannot, and ought not, in any way, in our opinion, be held responsible; and, under the circumstances, he could not properly be convicted of deliberately assisting her in the commission of self-murder. But the instruction is, in our opinion, also bad in that it places the burden on the defendant to show that the suicide of the deceased was committed of her own volition, and not under the influence of defendant's advice and counsel. We think this instruction violates the rule that, in a criminal prosecution, the burden is upon the state to establish the guilt of the defendant, and not upon the defendant to prove his innocence. State v. Hickam, 95 Mo. loc. cit. 329, 6 Am. St. Rep. 54, 8 S. W. 252; State v. Hardelein, 169 Mo. 579, 70 S. W. 130. In the last-cited case it is said: "Where a defendant pleads not guilty, and admits nothing against himself, as in the case at bar, the burden of proof is on the state to first make out a case against him which would entitle it to go to the jury; but this does not change the burden of proof, which remains with the state throughout the trial; and whether or not the evidence is sufficient to overcome the presumption of innocence of defendant, and to establish his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, when all of the evidence on both sides, including the presumptions, is considered, is for the consideration of the jury. 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. 4th ed. § 1050; State v. Darrah, 152 Mo. 522, 54 S. W. 226." Our best judgment is that, upon both of these grounds, this instruction was erroneous, and should not have been given in this form. It denied the defendant the right to repent of his ill-considered promise to commit suicide with the deceased, and erroneously placed the burden upon him of proving his innocence, instead of requiring the state to prove his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

2. Error is also assigned upon the refusal of the court to give instructions A, B, C, and D, requested by the defendant. Instruction D is in these words: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant procured a pistol with which he and the deceased intended to commit suicide, and afterwards changed his mind, and tried to escape from the consequences of such an agreement, but deceased refused to permit him to escape therefrom, and, on account of physical weakness, he could not, by force, leave her, and that she did the shooting, then defendant did not deliberately assist her to commit self-murder, and is not guilty of manslaughter in the first degree." This instruction contains the substance of instruction C requested, and announces the opposite of the instruction 5 given by the court, which we have just held erroneous. In our opinion, this instruction D was a proper one, and should have been given, and instruction No. 5, given by the court, should have been refused. We think there is no error in refusing instruction B, requested by the defendant, as the court had fully covered that proposition in its own instructions, and the same can be said as to instruction A.

3. Counsel complains also of instruction No. 11, given by the court, which is the ordinary instruction in regard to the presumption arising against the defendant from statements made against himself. Counsel concede that this instruction is ordinarily a correct one, but that it should not have been given in the peculiar circumstances of this case, because the alleged statement made by the defendant to the coroner was made, if at all, when the defendant was in a very critical condition, suffering from a pistol shot wound near the heart, and weakened by disease, and was too weak to sign his name, and that the instrument itself indicates that the writer of it himself was incapable of correctly taking the statement, as indicated by the misspelled words, both medical and common. There is much force in this objection. The evidence shows that the defendant could write his own name, and yet he did not sign this statement himself, and it was signed by the coroner and attested only by the mark of the defendant. The defendant testified that he had no recollection whatever of ever having made the statement, and denies making it. We think that, under the circumstances of the case, if this instruction should have been given at all, a qualification should have been added thereto, requiring the jury to find that the defendant was in such a condition of mind and body as to have been able to have known the answers he was making, and to fully understand the questions propounded to him by the coroner, and that the same was read over to him, and that he understood the statements contained in it. While the instruction No. 11 has often received the approval of this court, it has often been assailed as a comment on the testimony. This court has often ruled that, while an instruction may be correct in the abstract, it should always be applicable to the facts in evidence; and we think that the qualification 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

suggested by counsel, under the peculiar facts of this case, is one that should have been given along with the instruction, if given at all.

For the error in giving instruction No. 5 and the refusal of instruction D, the judgment should be, and is, reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial in accordance with the views herein expressed.

All of this division concur.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

JOHN A. LUTHER, Plff. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF NEBRASKA.

(— Neb. —, 120 N. W. 125.)

Intoxicating liquor — instruction — non-intoxicant.

1. The prohibition, by §§ 11 and 20 of chapter 50, Comp. Stat. 1907, of the sale, or keeping for the purpose of sale, of malt liquors, without a license so to do, applies to all malt liquors, sold or kept for sale, to be used as a beverage, whether intoxicating or not.

Same — illegal sale — prosecution — intoxicating qualities — proof.

2. In a criminal prosecution for the violation of such sections, or either of them, where the charge is of selling, or keeping for the purpose of sale, either "malt," "spirituous," or "vinous" liquors, and the Headnotes by REESE, Ch. J.

Case Note. — Do statutes forbidding the sale of a certain class or classes of liquor include nonintoxicating liquor.

This note is confined to cases in which the liquor sold was in fact, or was assumed to be, a nonintoxicating liquor; and cases which merely involve the question, what are intoxicating liquors, have been excluded. Nor does this note include cases which involve the question, what liquors are malt, fermented, etc. Upon the general question, what liquors are within statutory restrictions as to the sale of spirituous, vinous, fermented, and other intoxicating liquors, see note to Lemly v. State, 20 L.R.A. 645.

As to constitutional right of state to declare certain liquor intoxicating, irrespective of its intoxicating character as a matter of fact, see case note to State v. Frederickson, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 186.

The majority of the cases upon this point hold with LUTHER v. STATE, that a statute which prohibits or regulates the sale of a certain class of liquors, without qualification, includes nonintoxicating liquors of that class.

Thus, in State v. Spaulding, 61 Vt. 509, 17 Atl. 844, it was held that, where the statute provided that "no person shall sell or furnish cider," the prohibition was absolute, proof shows that either of said prohibited liquors was sold, or kept for sale, the state is not required to allege or prove that the liquors sold, or kept for the purpose of sale, are in fact intoxicating. It is sufficient to allege and prove the sale, or the keeping for the purpose of sale, of any of the prohibited liquors, in violation of the terms of said sections.

Criminal law — appeal — invited error.

3. The information alleged, in appropriate counts, that the accused kept for sale and sold "a certain malt and intoxicating liquor, to wit, malt tonic." The evidence showed that, upon analysis, the liquor was a malt liquor, containing 1 1/10 per cent alcohol, and that it belonged to the "class of beers." The trial court submitted to the jury the question of the intoxicating properties of the liquor by permitting the accused to call witnesses accustomed, in some degree, to the use of intoxicants, who testified that they had partaken of the beverage, and that it had no intoxicating effect upon them, and was not intoxicating. The state called a witness who testified that he had purchased and used the drink, and that it had the same effect upon him as produced by drinking beer, but to a less degree. The court instructed the jury, in substance, that, in order to convict the accused, they must find him guilty of selling, or keeping for the purpose of sale, the liquors as charged and described in the information. Held: First, that this submitted to the jury the question of the intoxicating properties of the liquor; and second, that the action of the court, in submitting the question of the intoxicating properties of the liquor, was erroneous, but without prejudice, as it was upon the procurement of the accused.

(Letton and Barnes, JJ., dissent.)

(February 20, 1909.)

regardless of the stage of fermentation or the intoxicating quality of the cider.

And in Eaves v. State, 113 Ga. 749, 39 S. E. 318, under a statute making penal the sale of malt liquors without a license, the appellate court sustained the charge to the jury that the state did not have to prove that the malt liquors sold were intoxicating, and that it made no difference whether the liquors were intoxicating or not.

And in Bradshaw v. State, 76 Ark. 562, 89 S. W. 1051, it was held that where a statute forbade the sale of certain liquors or any mixture thereof, without a license, the sale of any compound of a forbidden liquor was unlawful, whether such compound be intoxicating or not.

So, in Merkle v. State, 37 Ala. 139, it was held that it was not necessary to the conviction of the defendant that the liquor sold, delivered, or given to a student or minor should be intoxicating, as the prohibition of the statute extended to any fermented liquor used commonly as a beverage.

And in Eureka Vinegar Co. v. Gazette Printing Co. 35 Fed. 570, which was an action for libel in publishing the statement that persons selling the plaintiff's product in the prohibition districts of Arkansas were amenable to the laws of the state, the court held that, to bring the product under the operation of the liquor laws of the state, it was not essential that it should be an intoxicating liquor, but it was enough that it was a "vinous or fermented" liquor.

Where the charter of a city in express terms gave the city power to prohibit the sale of beer, without defining its quality or character, it was held, in Kettering v. Jacksonville, 50 Ill. 39, that the court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury that the prosecution must prove the beer sold to be of an intoxicating character.

And in People v. Adams, 95 Mich. 541, 55 N. W. 461, where the statute, in terms, prohibited the sale of fermented cider, the court said: "The statute prohibits the sale of fermented cider, and forecloses inquiry as to whether cider which is fermented is intoxicating, whatever the stage of fermentation." And to the same effect was the decision in People v. Kinney, 124 Mich. 486, 83 N. W. 147.

So, in State v. Jenkins, 64 N. H. 375, 10 Atl. 699, it was held that an indictment under a statute prohibiting the sale, or keeping for sale, of "lager beer or other malt liquors," need not allege that the malt liquor sold was intoxicating.

So there are numerous other decisions which hold that a statute prohibiting or regulating the sale of malt liquors includes both intoxicating and nonintoxicating malt liquors. State ex rel. Guilbert v. Kauffman, 68 Ohio St. 635, 67 N. E. 1062; United States v. Cohn, 2 Ind. Terr. 475, 52 S. W. 38; Marks v. State (Ala.) 48 So. 864; State v. Gill, 89 Minn. 502, 95 N. W. 449; Dinkins v. State, 149 Ala. 49, 43 So. 114; Lambie v. State, 151 Ala. 86, 44 So. 51; Feibelman v. State, 130 Ala. 122, 30 So. 384; Com v. Goodwin (Va.) 64 S. E. 54.

An indictment in the form prescribed by the statute, charging the accused with carrying on the business of a dealer in liquors, need not allege in terms that the liquors were intoxicating. Ladson v. State (Fla.) 47 So. 517; Hallbeck v. State (Fla.) 49 So. 153; Brass v. State, 45 Fla. 1, 34 So. 307; Crabb v. State, 47 Fla. 24, 36 So. 169; Nussbaumer v. State, 54 Fla. 87, 44 So. 712.

A number of decisions are to the contrary, but the greater number of these are clearly distinguishable, because of the terms of the statute.

In Texas, the law prohibits the sale of "spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, or medicated bitters capable of producing intoxication," and, in Ex parte Gray (Tex. Crim. App.) 83 S. W. 828, the phrase "capable of producing intoxication" was held to ERROR to the District Court for Harlan County to review a judgment convicting defendant of the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors. Affirmed.

The former opinion in this case, rendered by the commissioners of department No. 2. on December 18, 1907, 80 Neb. 432, 114 N. W. 411, is no longer of any importance, by reason of the action of the court in setting it aside. The district court instructed the jury, on its own motion, that the defendant was charged with selling malt liquors, omitting the word "intoxicating" in such instance. Under these circumstances, the defendant requested the following instructions: "(1) The court instructs the jury that one of the material allegations of the complaint is that the defendant sold malt and intoxicating liquors, and that the state must prove said allegations beyond any reason of doubt, before you would be justified in finding the defendant guilty of any one of the last four counts; that, unless you find from the evidence, beyond any reason of doubt, that the said malt tonic is intoxicating, you should acquit the defendant of said counts. (2) The court instructs the jury that, in the first count, the defendant is charged with keeping for sale certain malt and intoxicating liquors, to wit, malt tonic; that, before you would be justified in finding the defendant guilty on said count, it is incumbent upon the state to prove, beyond any reasonable doubt, that the said malt tonic is intoxicating; that, if the state fails to prove that said malt tonic is intoxicating, it is your duty to acquit the defendant on said count." The refusal to so instruct is assigned as error.

The other facts and alleged errors are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Messrs. M. H. Weiss and Berge, Morning, & Ledwith for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. W. T. Thompson, Attorney General, and Grant G. Martin, for defendant in error:

It is not necessary to submit to the jury the question as to whether malt liquor is intoxicating.

Kerkow v. Bauer, 15 Neb. 156, 18 N. W. 27; State v. Teissedre, 30 Kan. 476, 2 Pac. 650; Stout v. State, 96 Ind. 407; Briffitt v. State, 58 Wis. 39, 46 Am. Rep. 621, 16 N. W. 39; Peterson v. State, 63 Neb. 254, 88 N. W. 549; Sothman v. State, 66 Neb. 308, 92 N. W. 303.

Liquors need not necessarily be intoxicating to fall within a statute prohibiting the sale of malt liquors.

People v. Crilley, 20 Barb. 248; State v.

qualify the various liquors named, and not merely "medicated bitters."

Of course, under such a construction, mere proof of the sale of a malt liquor without proof of its capability of producing intoxication, would not be sufficient. Scales v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 294, 83 S. W. 380; Reisenberg v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 84 S. W. 585; Harris v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 86 S. W. 763; Sullivan v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 201, 87 S. W. 150.

But, in Hardwick v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 114 S. W. 832, the statute under which the defendant was prosecuted merely provided as follows: "Any person or association of persons who shall engage in the sale of spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, or medicated bitters, without having obtained a license therefor, etc.," and the court, upon the authority of Ex parte Gray, supra, held that it was essential to prove, before a conviction could be had, that such malt liquors were intoxicating. But it will be noted that the statute in Ex parte Gray, upon which the decision is based, contained a qualifying provision that the prohibited liquors should be capable of producing intoxication, while this qualifying provision is apparently lacking in Hardwick v. State.

The court, in Stoner v. State (Ga. App.) 63 S. E. 602, distinguishes between a statute which regulates the sale of liquor and one which entirely prohibits it, and holds that while, under a statute which merely regulates the traffic, it is not necessary to prove that the liquor is intoxicating, yet, as a statute which entirely prohibits the sale of liquors is intended as a crusade against intemperance, there could be no violation of the law without proof that the liquor in question was intoxicating. The court said. "The Eaves Case, supra, is authority for the position that, where the statute requires a license for the sale of all malt liquors, the intoxicating character of such liquors is irrelevant and immaterial; but this decision is not authority for the position that, in a prohibition statute, intended to prevent the evils of intemperance, the property of the liquor as an intoxicant is not material. To so hold is to lose sight of the great distinction between the right of the state to regulate a business and the right of the state to prohibit a business. Counsel also refers to the statute which makes it unlawful to furnish spirituous and malt liquors to minors (Penal Code, 1895, § 444); and it is contended that the legislature intended to make it unlawful to furnish to minors any kind of malt liquor, regardless of its intoxicating character. We think this construction of the statute in question is unquestionably correct; but we do not think that it affords any support to a similar contention as to the meaning of the prohibition statute."

While this argument is very plausible, it is against the weight of authority, even in those states in which the purpose of the law is prohibitory within the district in which it is applicable, and there is apparently no other decision which distinguishes, in this respect, between the construction to be given to a statute which is intended to regulate the liquor traffic and a statute which is intended to prohibit the traffic.

Giersch, 98 N. C. 720, 4 S. E. 193; Atty. Gen. v. Bailey, 1 Exch. 281; Worley v. Spurgeon, 38 Iowa, 467; Adler v. State, 55 Ala. 24; Allred v. State, 89 Ala. 113, 8 So. 56; Blankenship v. State, 93 Ga. 814. 21 S. E. 130; 23 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 57, 60, 299; State v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 76 Iowa, 243, 2 L.R.A. 408, 41 N. W. 6; Com. v. Timothy, 8 Gray, 480; State v. Wittmar, 12 Mo. 407; State v. Ely (S. D.) 118 N. W. 687; Com. v. Anthes, 12 Gray, 29; State v. Guinness, 16 R. I. 401, 16 Atl. 910; State v. Gravelin, 16 R. I. 407, 16 Atl. 914; Com. v. Brelsford, 161 Mass. 61, 36 N. E. 677; State v. O'Connell, 99 Me. 64, 58 Atl. 59; Eaves v. State, 113 Ga. 757, 39 S. E. 318; Mankato v. Arnold, 36 Minn. 62, 30 N. W. 305; State v. Gill, 89 Minn. 503, 95 N. W. 449; People v. Kinney, 124 Mich. 486, 83 N. W. 147; State v. Blaisdell, 33 N. H. 388; Com. v. Dean, 14 Gray, 99; Com. v. Chappel, 116 Mass. 7; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. 612; Bishop, Statutory Crimes, § 1038; State v. Thornton, 63 N. H. 114; Hatfield v. Com. 120 Pa. 395, 14 Atl. 151; State v. Jenkins, 64 N. H. 375, 10 Atl. 699.

Reese, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was decided at the September term, 1907, of this court, and the opinion is reported in 80 Neb. 432, 114 N. W. 411. The attorney general filed a motion for rehearing, which was sustained, and the case has been submitted to the court upon carefully prepared briefs and able oral arguments by counsel. The contention of the attorney general is: First, that the proof upon the trial was conclusive that the liquor sold and kept for sale was "malt liquor," and, therefore, the selling and keeping for sale of the liquors described was a violation of law, and the conviction should be sustained without any inquiry as to the intoxicating or nonintoxicating properties of the liquor. Second, that, should the court hold otherwise, the question of the intoxicating quality of the liquor kept for sale and sold was sufficiently submitted to the jury, and that, in that event, the judgment should be affirmed. It is contended by plaintiff in error: "First, it is not a violation of our liquor law to sell a malt extract, unless the same is shown to be of such an intoxicating character that it may be used as a beverage, and that, when used in practicable quantities, it will produce intoxication. Second, that the court will not take judicial notice that malt extract is an intoxicating liquor, but this question is one of fact to be submitted to the jury. Third, that the instructions requested by the defendant should have been given, and that the court erred in omitting from the instructions given the element of the intoxicating character of malt extract as one of the material issues to be tried." It is charged, in the first count of the information, that plaintiff in error unlawfully kept, for the purpose of sale, "certain malt and intoxicating liquor, to wit, malt tonic," with intent to sell the same; and, in the second count, that he unlawfully sold, to a person named, "certain malt and intoxicating liquor, to wit, malt tonic;" and, in the third count, that he sold of said liquor to another person, and, in the fourth count, that he sold the same to a person named, and, in the fifth count, that he sold the same to yet another person named. The jury returned a verdict finding plaintiff in error guilty on all the counts of the information. The court imposed a fine of $100 upon each count.

It was shown upon the trial that, upon the filing of the complaint before the magistrate, a search warrant was issued, and the sheriff, in making a search of the premises of plaintiff in error, found "four full barrels and about a half barrel" of the liquor. There was ample proof that the liquor was kept for sale, and sold to be drunk as a beverage, and that a considerable quantity of it had been sold and consumed. The liquor was in bottles, each bottle bearing an illuminated label, as follows, omitting names and locality of the brewing company: "—— Brewing Company's Non Intox. A nonintoxicating malt tonic. Guaranteed to contain less than 2 per cent of alcohol. Brewed and bottled by the —— Brewing Co., ——, Illinois. Western Branch ——, Mo." The state chemist was called as a witness on the part of the state, and testified: That samples of the liquor had been sent to and analyzed by him, and that the liquor was malt liquor; that all liquors that were brewed from malt were necessarily malt liquors; that the liquor contained in the bottles is classed "in the class of beers;" that the quantity of alcohol contained in the liquor was $1\frac{1}{10}$ per cent; that the quantity of alcohol usually contained in the lager beer of commerce is, on average, "around 3 per cent." There is no controversy as to the possession and sale of the liquors by plaintiff in error. nor that they were sold, and to be sold, to be drunk as a beverage. The only contentions are as outlined above. There was no effort to contradict the testimony of the state chemist to the effect that the liquor was a malt liquor, that it contained a percentage of alcohol named, and that it is classed as and among "the class of beers."

It is contended by the state that, under our statutes, it was not essential that the prosecution should go further with its proof, and that, if the liquor was a "malt liquor," and belonged to the class known as "beer," the statute having prohibited the sale of "malt liquor," and this court having so often decided that the courts will take judicial notice that beer is an intoxicant, the verdict was right and should be sustained. Chapter 50, Comp. Stat. 1907, commonly known as the "Clobum law," provides, in the first section, that licenses may be issued for the sale of "malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors." In § 6, the issuance of a license to sell "malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors" is prohibited, unless the applicant gives the bond required by the section. Section 10 prohibits any licensed person from selling intoxicating liquors to the classes of persons named therein. Section 11 provides that "all persons who shall sell, or give away, upon any pretext, malt, spirituous, or vinous liquors, or any intoxicating drinks," without having first complied with the provisions of the act and obtained a license, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished as prescribed in the section. Section 13 makes it a crime for any licensed person to sell or give away, either by himself or another in his employ, any "malt, spirituous, or vinous liquors" which shall be adulterated. Section 14 makes it a crime to sell or give away "any malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors on the day of any general or special election, or at any time during the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday." Section 20 renders it unlawful for any person to keep, for the purpose of sale without a license, "any malt, spirituous, or vinous liquors," and "any person or persons who shall be found in possession of any intoxicating liquors in this state, with the intention of disposing of the same without license," shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 25 confers upon the corporate authorities of cities and villages the power to license, regulate, and prohibit "the selling or giving away of any intoxicating, malt, spirituous, and vinous, mixed, or fermented liquors within the limits of such city or village." Section 29 renders it "the duty of all vendors of malt, spirituous, or vinous liquors" to keep the windows and doors of their places of business unobstructed.

We have thus quoted from the different sections of the law for the purpose of seeking light upon the legislative intent in the passage of the act under consideration. It is contended by counsel for plaintiff in error that it was the legislative intent to suppress the sale of intoxicating liquors, and that, although the term "malt liquors" is used in the act, yet it was not the purpose to prevent the sale of malt liquors or liquids, unless they contained a sufficient quantity of alcohol to produce intoxication; or, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) stated differently, that the language used in §§ 11 and 20 must be construed to mean as if it read "intoxicating malt liquor." I cannot read the statute in that light. As well might we apply the adjective to the words "spirituous" and "vinous." It is my opinion that the legislature realized and appreciated the fact that malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors are equally largely used as a beverage, and are alike injurious to the consumer, if not by producing immediate intoxication when taken in small quantities, by producing the same effect when more is taken, and, at the same time, creating an abnormal appetite which leads to dissipation and inebriety. At any rate, the law prohibits the sale of "malt liquors" without a license, and we must obey its plain mandate. Alcoholic beverages are under the ban of the law, in some form or other, in most civilized countries. They are known to be the cause of crime, destitution, and pauperism. Malt liquors used as beverages are known to contain that destructive ingredient. It was proven, upon the trial of this case, that the beverage kept and sold by plaintiff in error contained it. The liquor sold by him was simply an effort to evade the law. The title of the act is "An Act to Regulate the License and Sale of Malt, Spirituous, and Vinous Liquors," etc. Laws 1907, chap. 82, p. 297. The whole act is built upon that title. Malt liquors are as much within both the letter and spirit of the law as either of the other classes named. To say that the legislature intended to provide for the regulation and license of intoxicating malt liquors would require the same word to be used as defining the other classes, and would be legislating and reading into the statute a word which the legislature clearly intended should not be there. This is not the province of the courts. We are sustained in this view by many adjudicated cases, some of which we cite without quoting: Kerkow v. Bauer, 15 Neb. 150, 18 N. W. 27; Sothman v. State, 66 Neb. 302, 92 N. W. 303; Peterson v. State, 63 Neb. 251, 88 N. W. 549; State v. Teissedre, 30 Kan. 476, 2 Pac. 650; Stout v. State, 96 Ind. 407; Briffitt v. State, 53 Wis. 39, 46 Am. Rep. 621, 16 N. W. 39; Com. v. Timothy, 8 Gray, 480; Com. v. Anthes, 12 Gray, 29; Eaves v. State, 113 Ga. 749, 39 S. E. 318; State v. Gill, 89 Minn. 502, 95 N. W. 449; Com. v. Dean, 14 Gray, 99; State v. Jenkins, 64 N. H. 375, 10 Atl. 699; Hatfield v. Com. 120 Pa. 395, 14 Atl. 151; Com. v. Reyburg, 122 Pa. 299, 2 L.R.A. 415, 16 Atl. 351; Kettering v. Jacksonville, 50 Ill. 39; State v. Yager, 72 Iowa, 421, 34 N. W. 188; State v. O'Connell, 99 Me. 61, 58 Atl. 59; State v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 76 Iowa, 243, 2 L.R.A.

408, 41 N. W. 6. "But if the statute specifically forbids the unlicensed sale of 'malt liquor,' the question of the intoxicating properties of the liquor sold is immaterial; it is only necessary to determine whether it was a malt liquor." 23 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 60. "Any liquor which is named or plainly included in the statute must be held intoxicating as a matter of law, without inquiry into its actual properties, and even though, as a matter of fact, it is not capable of producing intoxication." 23 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 57.

It is claimed that the words "malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors" and "intoxicating drinks," as used in § 11, and "intoxicating liquors," as used in § 20, are used interchangeably, and all mean the same. To this we cannot agree. As we have seen, the statute prohibits the sale of either "malt," "spirituous," or "vinous" liquors, in specific term, by name. As said in many of the cases above cited, this is a specific and direct prohibition, but the legislature, recognizing the fact that there are other intoxicants which do not come strictly within the classes named, the words "or any intoxicating drinks," as in § 11, and "any intoxicating liquors," as in § 20, were used to cover all kinds not within the classes named. That, if the charge and proof are that any one of the classes were sold or kept for sale, no proof of the intoxicating property of the liquor was necessary, and that it is only necessary to prove that the liquor sold or kept for sale is one of the classes forbidden. But should the accusation refer to any other kind of liquor, it should be alleged and proven that the article was intoxicating. This, I think, is the correct interpretation of the statute, and, without further inquiry, the judgment of the district court should be affirmed.

However, there is another feature of this case upon which we all agree, and that is, whether correctly or incorrectly, the district court did submit the question of the intoxicating quality of the liquor to the jury, and that by their verdict the jury answered the question. The averments of the information are that, at the time and place named in the several counts, plaintiff in error kept for sale and sold "certain malt and intoxicating liquor, to wit, 'malt tonic,'" etc. The same language, descriptive of the article sold or kept for sale, is used in each of the five counts in the information. The widest latitude was allowed plaintiff in error in his efforts to prove that the drinks sold and kept for sale were not intoxicating. A number of witnesses who had partaken of the beverage were called, and testified to the fact of drinking the same, and that no intoxicating effect was felt by them, and that the drink was not intoxicating. One witness who was called by the state testified that he drank of the liquor, and it had the same effect upon him as beer, but in a less degree. The state chemist testified that the intoxicating ingredient was alcohol, and the effect depended upon the individual drinking the liquor, and the lower grade or per cent of alcohol would produce intoxication in a person who was not accustomed to drinking, while a higher grade would be necessary to intoxicate the individual who was in the habit of drinking the stronger liquors.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The court instructed the jury that the material allegations which the state must prove were that the plaintiff in error kept or sold liquors "as charged in the information," and that, in order to convict, it was necessary that the proof show that plaintiff in error had the liquors "described in the information," and sold the same. It is not deemed necessary to further refer to the instructions. It is sufficient to say that the instructions; while not as explicit as they might have been, had any upon that point been necessary, yet, when taken in connection with the evidence, were sufficient to submit the question of the intoxicating properties of the liquor to the jury. We are of the opinion, however, that the question was improperly submitted, and that no evidence should have been received upon that subject. The error, however, having been by the procurement of plaintiff in error, and in no sense to his prejudice, he cannot complain.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

Rose, J., not sitting.

Letton, J., dissenting:

I cannot agree to the main holding in the opinion. It seems to hold that the selling of all malt liquids or liquors, regardless of whether they contain intoxicating properties, is prohibited. I think that a holding that the sale of malt beverages, nonintoxicating in character, is a crime, unless a license has first been obtained under the provisions of the liquor law, is an entirely new doctrine in this state, and gives to the law such a new and radically changed interpretation from that which has been followed by administrative, executive, and judicial officers of the government for nearly forty years as to partake of the character of judicial legislation. I venture to say that it has been the uniform practice of public prosecutors, in liquor cases, ever since the law was enacted, to prove, or endeavor to prove, the intoxicating quality of malt beverages, other than beer, ale, or such liquors that are of such well-known ingredients and qualities that the court will take judicial notice that they are within the prohibition of the statute. When the legislature prohibited the sale of malt, spirituous, or vinous liquors, I think the word "liquors" was used in the ordinary acceptation of the term. The Century Dictionary defines "liquors:" (1) A liquid or fluid substance, as water, milk, blood, sap, etc. (2) A strong or active liquid of any sort, specifically an alcoholic or spirituous liquor, either distilled or fermented; an intoxicating beverage, especially a spirituous or distilled drink, as distinguished from fermented beverages as wine and beer. (b) A strong solution of a particular substance used in the industrial arts. Webster: (1) Any liquid or fluid substance, as water, milk, blood, sap, juice, and the like. (2) Especially alcoholic or spirituous fluid either distilled or fermented. A decoction, solution, or tincture.

There are many tonic preparations of malt combined with ingredients such as iron, phosphates, or other drugs, and other and nourishing preparations of malt combined with ingredients of food value, for the use of convalescents, which are in constant use by the medical profession, and which are sold in drug stores. This opinion, construed strictly, would drive all this class of preparations from the market, which I think was never intended by the legislature. The object of the law was to regulate the sale of malt "liquors," not malt "liquids." An examination of the liquor laws of this state, as a whole, confirms me in the belief that this is the reasonable and proper construction of the statute. The phraseology used in describing the liquors varies with the various sections of the liquor law. In the first section the county board is authorized to license the sale of "malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors." The word "intoxicating" does not appear in this section. Section 5 speaks of the thing to be licensed as "the liquor." It uses no other qualifying words. The form of the license prescribed by this section names "malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors," but does not contain the word "intoxicating." The 6th section says that no person shall be licensed to sell malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors by the county board, etc., unless a bond is given, and provides that a bond shall be given for the benefit of anyone who may be injured by the sale of "any intoxicating liquor." No one could recover damages under bond for sale of liquors unless they were intoxicating liquors. Section 8 prohibits the sale to any minor, apprentice, or servant under twenty-one years of age, of any "malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors or any intoxicating drinks." The 10th section prohibits the sale of "any intoxicating liquors" to any Indian, insane person, idiot, or habitual drunkard. Section 15 provides that the person licensed shall pay damages that result in consequence of "such traffic" and the expenses of all civil and criminal prosecutions growing out of, or justly attributed to, this traffic in intoxicating drinks, so that the words "such traffic" relate to the traffic forbidden in the chapter, and this section construes it to be traffic in intoxicating drinks. Section 16 gives an action to a married woman for damages on account of "such traffic," which we have seen by § 15 is characterized as being traffic in intoxicating drinks; and § 17 gives an action, by the county or city, on the bond of the person licensed, when a person shall become a county or city charge by reason of intemperance, against "any person licensed under this act who may have been in the habit of selling or giving intoxicating liquors" to such persons, and, in the proviso to this section, any person against whom a judgment shall be rendered under the provisions of the section, may recover from any other person who has "sold or given liquor to such person becoming a public charge." Section 18 provides that, in the trial of suits the cause or foundation of which shall be the acts done or injuries inflicted by a person "under the influence of liquor," it only shall be necessary, to sustain the action, to prove that the defendant sold or gave liquor to the person so intoxicated. Plainly the word "liquor" here, as in all places in the statute, should be read "intoxicating liquor." In the last part of § 18, the words "intoxicating drinks" are used as an exact equivalent of the word "liquor" where it twice occurs in the same section. Section 20 prohibits the keeping of any "malt, spirituous, or vinous liquors" for the purpose of selling without license, and it provides that anyone who is found in possession of "intoxicating" liquors with intention of disposing of the same, without license, shall be deemed guilty.

Unless we consider that the liquors kept for sale must be intoxicating liquors in order to make the act of keeping them unlawful, we have to presume that the legislature would forbid the keeping of inoffensive liquors, and, in the same section, provide that the person who was found keeping intoxicating liquors should be punished, without providing that the person keeping the other forbidden liquors should be punished; in other words, that the legislature would prohibit the keeping of liquors, but provide no punishment therefor, and then provide punishment for keeping intoxicating liquors, which it had not specifically prohibited. In this same section, the word "liquor" is used seven or eight times without any qualifying word, and twice used qualified by the word "intoxicating," and so, as in other places in the statute, the word "liquor" is used as meaning "intoxicating liquor." In § 21, the word "liquors" is used five times without any qualifying word, and in § 22, at least five times. In § 24, a permit is authorized to druggists to sell "liquors," without any qualifying word, but I think it clear that "intoxicating liquors" is meant. It is also provided further that no license shall be granted by a village for the sale of any "liquor," within $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles of a military post. By § 26, druggists who have permits are required to keep a register of "all liquors sold or given away by him." This is not limited to malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors, and the word "intoxicating" is not used. If the word "liquors" is to be construed in this section, as it is in the opinion, the report required of a druggist is much greater than anybody ever supposed, and all medicinal preparations of malt would have to be reported. Section 30a, chap. 50, Comp. Stat. 1907, being a part of the act of 1907, speaks of the liquor license authorized under the liquor law as "a license for the sale of intoxicating liquors," and the next section of the same act says that it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in the manufacture of malt, spirituous, or vinous liquors to aid or assist in procuring a license, for any person, for the sale at retail of malt, spirituous, or vinous liquors, and then speaks of these liquors so defined as "said intoxicating liquors," thereby expressly stating that the malt, spirituous, and vinous liquors named in the liquor law are intoxicating liquors, and, in § 30g (§ 7) of the same act, it speaks of all of the other acts as "acts relating to intoxicating liquors." The act against treating forbids the giving away of any intoxicating drink. Section 1 of the act of 1907, regulating the transportation of intoxicating liquors, makes it unlawful to consign intoxicating liquors from one point in the state to another. If the sale of malt liquors not intoxicating is forbidden by the statute, that should have been included in this provision, and § 4 of the same act forbids the bringing of any malt, spirituous, vinous, or intoxicating liquors into any city or incorporated village in which a license has not been granted, etc. It is manifest that the word "liquor" is used in this act also with the meaning of "intoxicating liquors," and that a malt preparation that is not intoxicating would not be included in the meaning given to the word "liquors." If this case had been presented nearly fifty years ago, as it might have been, since the main provisions of the statute were enacted in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

1858 (see Re Hastings Brewing Co. (Neb.) 119 N. W. 27), a holding that the sale of any malt liquor was prohibited unless the seller was licensed might perhaps have been justified, though this is questionable; but, after half a century of liquor legislation and official construction, it seems to me too late to take this view, and I am firmly of the opinion that the change, if made at all, should be made by the legislature.

Cases from other states throw but little light upon the question, since, in order to reach the true meaning of each opinion, the whole statute must be considered and compared with the statute in this state; but the courts of other states are not in harmony, the holding of the different states depending upon the interpretation and construction of the respective statutes. In Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Maine, the cases cited by Judge Reese hold specifically that proof of the intoxicating quality of malt liquor is unnecessary. In Minnesota, it seems to be held that a charge of selling malt liquor implies that the liquor has intoxicating qualities. It is said in State v. Gill, 89 Minn. 502, 95 N. W. 449, cited in the majority opinion, that whether or not the liquor was really intoxicating is a question of fact for the jury. See also State v. Story, 87 Minn. 5, 91 N. W. 26. If I understand the Minnesota holdings correctly, they are exactly in line with what is and has heretofore been considered to be the law in this state, and are not in harmony with the majority opinion here; but I think the cases cited from other states do not all support the opinion. The Massachusetts case cited in the opinion merely holds that, where a statute declares that lager beer shall be deemed intoxicating, it cannot be proved not to be intoxicating in a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors. The Kansas and Wisconsin cases merely hold, as does this court, that the courts will take judicial notice that beer is a malt liquor and intoxicating.

Further, the defendant was charged with selling "a malt and intoxicating liquor, to wit, malt tonic." To charge a sale of intoxicating malt liquor and prove nonintoxicating would be, I think, a fatal variance between the pleadings and the proof. The defendant requested instructions, which are set out in the original opinion (80 Neb. 432, 114 N. W. 412), that the state must prove that the malt tonic was intoxicating. Each side introduced testimony concerning the intoxicating character of the liquor in controversy, so that the state concluded that the intoxicating quality of the liquor was a material allegation necessary to be proved to entitle it to a conviction. The trial court therefore erred in refusing to give instructions 1 and 2 requested by the defendant. Perhaps inferentially the jury might conclude, from the 9th instruction given by the court, that "malt liquor" referred to intoxicating liquor, but it did not supply the instructions asked by defendant.

Under the charge, it was error to refuse these instructions, and the original judgment should be adhered to.

Barnes, J., concurs in this dissent.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

GRACE GEORGETTE DICKINSON, Appt..

v.

WILLIAM I. SEAMAN, Impleaded, etc.,
Resp't.

(193 N. Y. 18, 85 N. E. 818.)

Antenuptial contract—gift in violation.

1. A provision in an antenuptial contract, that the husband would adopt a child of the wife, and make her his heir, and bequeath and devise all his property to her, does not prevent his giving, in good faith, to his relatives, before death, a policy of Case Note.—Gift as a fraud on contract to will property.

This note is confined to cases involving gifts made during the lifetime of the contractor or covenantor, and therefore does not include testamentary dispositions or uses of fraudulent conveyances.

DICKINSON v. SEAMAN appears to be the only case in which the question involved has been discussed from the viewpoint of the reasonableness of the gift, in view of the entire property possessed by the contractor. However, in Bruce v. Moon, 57 S. C. 60, 35 S. E. 415, the contention was raised that the promisee was the owner of all the property owned by the promisor after the making of an agreement to will all his property in consideration of support for life, and therefore entitled to an accounting therefor; but the circuit judge before whom the point was raised refuted this contention, holding that the promisor was restricted only to a reasonable use, and denied the extreme relief demanded. The point was not raised on appeal, but the opinion of the circuit judge is reported and approved by the supreme court, as above cited.

The other decisions involving the validity of a gift made by a person under contract or covenant to will all his property to a certain person are practically uniform in holding that such an agreement does not prevent the making of absolute bona fide gifts during the lifetime of the contractor or covenantor. However, the gift must be absolute, and not in effect testamentary, and must not be made for the express purpose of defeating the contract or covenant.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

insurance upon his life, which amounts only to a reasonable gift, in view of the property possessed by him.

Judgment—specific performance—scope.

2. A judgment enforcing specific performance of a contract to devise all one's property to a particular person, so far as it relates to money or other property owned and left by the promisor at the time of his death, does not include the proceeds of a policy of insurance on his life, which he had given away in his lifetime.

(October 6, 1908.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of a Special Term, Part 3, for New York County, sustaining a demurrer to a complaint filed to recover the proceeds of a life insurance policy. Affirmed.

Statement by Vann, J.:

The facts alleged by the plaintiff in her complaint are in substance as follows: In 1875 George W. Kidd entered into an antenuptial agreement with Anna Estelle Slo-

The few cases revealed by an extended search follow:

In Logan v. Wienholt, 7 Bligh. N. R. 1, in construing a marriage bond whereby a person covenanted to give or bequeath so much of his estate to a certain beneficiary as he should by such will give or bequeath to any other person, and several gifts were made in alleged fraud of the beneficiary's rights under such agreement, the Lord Chancellor said: "If a person covenants or agrees, or in any manner validly binds himself, to give to A by his will as much as to any other, he may put it out of his power to do so by giving all in his lifetime; or, if he binds himself to give A as much as B by his will, he may, in his lifetime, give B what he pleases, so as his will shall give A as much as his will gives B; but then, the gifts which he makes in his lifetime to B must be out and out; for if, to defraud or to defeat the obligation which he has entered into, he gives to B any property, real or personal, over which he retains a control, or in which he reserves an interest to himself, then, in order to protect the agreement or obligation which he has entered into, and to defeat the fraud attempted upon that obligation, and to prevent his escaping, as it were, from his own contract, this gift to B shall be taken as testamentary.—shall be taken as if included in the will.—and the subject-matter of it shall be brought back and made the fund out of which to perform the obligation: at all events, it shall be made the measure for calculating and ordering the performance of, or dealing with the claim arising under, that obligation."

So, in Vanduyne v. Vreeland, 12 N. J.

cum. whereby, in consideration of the sum of $40,000 advanced to him by her, to be used in the business he was then carrying on, he agreed to marry her, and to adopt her daughter, the plaintiff in this action. As the complaint continues, he also agreed to make said daughter "his heir, and that, in case there should be issue of said marriage, he would by will bequeath and devise all his property equally to and among the said child and his other children, and in case there should be no issue of said marriage, then, in that case, he would bequeath and devise all his property" to the plaintiff herein. This contract was followed by the marriage of Mr. Kidd and Mrs. Slocum, the surrender by the latter to the former of the possession of the plaintiff, her daughter, and the payment of said sum of $40,000 to him, by the use of which in his business he "accumulated a large fortune, consisting of real and personal property, which he had at the time of and left at his death." "Among such property was a policy of life insurance" for $10,000 on his life, dated December 22, 1873, the premiums on which had all been paid by him. On the 22d of November, 1897, while said contract was in full force, and in due course of performance by his wife, he "attempted by an instrument purporting to be an assignment to transfer" said policy of insurance to "his brothers and sisters and a niece," who are defendants in this action, purely as a gift, and without other consideration than mutual love and affection. Said instrument contained a guaranty as to "the validity and sufficiency" thereof, and a covenant to warrant and defend the title of the assignees to said policy. The amount of the policy has been paid into court, and is now in the hands of the chamberlain of the city of New York, one of the defendants. After the death of Mr. Kidd, and on May 11, 1905, the plaintiff recovered judgment in the supreme court against his executors, the other defendants herein being also parties defendant to that action, requiring them to specifically perform said contract, and adjudging that the plaintiff was entitled to all his property and estate, subject only to the right of his wife to dower, and under the statute of distributions. The complaint herein contains no allegation that said assignment was made from evil motives, or with intent to defraud the plaintiff, and fraud is not alleged as a fact in connection

Eq. 142, it was held that a person who had agreed that all his property should belong to an adopted child at the time of the decease of himself and wife was under no restraint as to free and unrestricted use of his property during life, and that he could give it away while he lived; but that he could not make a testamentary disposition inconsistent with the agreement.

In Fortescue v. Hennah, 19 Ves. Jr. 67, where a father was under covenant for an equal division, at his death, of all the property he should die seised or possessed of, between his two daughters, it was held that during his lifetime he had full liberty to dispose of any personal property by absolute gift, but that he could not defeat the covenant by a disposition which reserved to himself an interest for life, as that would, in effect, be a testamentary disposition in fraud of the covenant.

In Jones v. Martin, 3 Anstr. 882, where a father covenanted on his daughter's marriage to leave her, at his death, a share of all his personalty equal with that of his son, it was held that an absolute and irrevocable gift of bank stock to the son, made during his life, did not constitute a breach of the covenant, even though he reserved to himself the annual dividend for his own life.

In Gregor v. Kemp, 3 Swanst. 404, note, in holding that a gift of 1,000 £, made three days before the death of a mother who had covenanted in marriage articles to give at her death a fourth part of all her real and personal property to a certain son, or his executor or administrator, which gift constituted nearly her entire estate, and which was made for the express purpose of preventing such a large portion of her estate from passing to strangers, constituted a disposition in fraud of the covenant, the Lord Chancellor said: "Notwithstanding the articles, Mrs. Kemp was not restrained from disposing of her estate any way in her lifetime, and had a full power over it, but with this single exception: viz., she was restrained from making a distribution on purpose to defeat the covenant, which it is here fully proved she did; for she was unwilling her estate should go to strangers; and the disposition is a plain fraud; it was the intent of the articles that it should be for strangers, for it is to him, his executors, etc.; therefore, if he should think proper to make his wife executrix, as he did, it was designed for her benefit."

And in Austin v. Davis, 128 Ind. 472, 12 L.R.A. 120, 25 Am. St. Rep. 456, 26 N. E. 890, it was held that a person is not prevented from transferring his property by gift by an agreement to leave all his property, at his death, to an adopted child, if the transfer is not made for the purpose of defrauding the latter.

And in Quinn v. Quinn, 5 S. D. 328, 49 Am. St. Rep. 875, 58 N. W. 808, where A, on adopting B, agreed that B should inherit and be entitled to a certain portion of A's property provided that B remained in A's family until B's majority, which contract was performed by B, it was held that A could not deprive B of his rights under the agreement by a gift of his property in his lifetime, or by will made for the express purpose of defeating B's right to share in the property.

therewith, although it is alleged, as a conclusion of law, that the assignment "was executed in derogation, in violation, and fraudulently as to the contract." The relief demanded was a judgment that the assignment is a violation of the antenuptial contract, and void as to the plaintiff; that she recover from the chamberlain the entire proceeds of the policy; and that he be enjoined from making payment thereof to anyone else. The defendant William I. Seaman demurred to the complaint upon the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained by the supreme court at special term, and final judgment was rendered against the plaintiff accordingly, which, on appeal to the appellate division, was unanimously affirmed. A further appeal was then taken by her to this court.

Mr. H. D. Luce, with Mr. Charles C. Dickinson, for appellant:

Specific performance will be decreed of a contract made before marriage, and in contemplation of it.

2 Parsons, Contr. 5th ed. p. 71; 2 Kent, Com. 14th ed. p. 165; Schouler, Dom. Rel. 5th ed. 176; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1297; Bright, Husband & Wife, p. 471; Tooke v. Hastings, 2 Vern. 97; Kramer v. Kramer, 90 App. Div. 176, 86 N. Y. Supp. 129; Borland v. Welch, 162 N. Y. 104, 56 N. E. 556; Todd v. Weber, 95 N. Y. 189, 47 Am. Rep. 20; Merritt v. Scott, 6 Ga. 563, 50 Am. Dec. 365; Stilley v. Folger, 14 Ohio, 610; Cartledge v. Outlift, 29 Ga. 758; Smith v. Chapell, 31 Conn. 589; Tarbell v. Tarbell, 10 Allen, 278; Hunter v. Bryant, 2 Wheat. 32, 4 L. ed. 177; Snyder v. Webb, 3 Cal. 83; Albert v. Winn, 5 Md. 66; English v. Foxall, 2 Pet. 595, 7 L. ed. 531; Vason v. Bell, 53 Ga. 416; Michael v. Morey, 26 Md. 239, 90 Am. Dec. 106; Wood v. Jackson, 8 Wend. 9, 22 Am. Dec. 603; Roberts v. Roberts, 22 Wend. 140; Re Demers, 41 Misc. 470, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1109; Re Baker, 83 App. Div. 530, 82 N. Y. Supp. 390, affirmed on opinion below in 178 N. Y. 575, 70 N. E. 1094; Re Craig, 97 App. Div. 289, 89 N. Y. Supp. 971, affirmed on opinion below in 181 N. Y. 551, 74 N. E. 1116; Re Miller, 77 App. Div. 473, 78 N. Y. Supp. 930; Phalen v. United States Trust Co. 186 N. Y. 178, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 734, 78 N. E. 943, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 595.

The antenuptial contract having been fully performed, it amounts to an actual purchase by the mother, for the benefit of her daughter, of all of the property which the deceased should accumulate during his lifetime; and a trust was thereby created in favor of the plaintiff, to the extent that he could not give it away during his lifetime or by will after his death.

3 Parsons, Contr. 5th ed. p. 362; 2 Kent, Com. p. 165; Re Young, 27 Hun, 54, affirmed in 92 N. Y. 235; Johnston v. Spicer, 107 N. Y. 185, 13 N. E. 753; Brown v. Wadsworth, 168 N. Y. 225, 61 N. E. 250; Poston v. Gillespie, 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 258, 75 Am. Dec. 437; Bank of Greensboro v. Chambers, 30 Gratt. 202, 32 Am. Rep. 661.

The instrument purporting to be an assignment was not a gift inter vivos, but a gift causa mortis.

Sullivan v. Sullivan, 161 N. Y. 554, 56 N. E. 116; Wills v. Evans, 8 N. Y. Week Dig. 368; Phelps v. Phelps, 28 Barb. 131; Wilson v. Baptist Education Soc. 10 Barb. 308; Hamer v. Sidway, 57 Hun, 229, 11 N. Y. Supp. 182; Dodge v. Pond, 23 N. Y. 69; Dimon v. Keery, 31 Misc. 231, 64 N. Y. Supp. 1091, affirmed 54 App. Div. 318, 66 N. Y. Supp. 817; Donovan v. Middlebrook, 95 App. Div. 365, 88 N. Y. Supp. 607; Re Bolin, 136 N. Y. 177, 32 N. E. 626.

Messrs. Baldwin, Wadhams, Bacon, & Fisher, for respondent:

The contract referred to property which decedent owned at the time of his death, only.

Re Kidd, 188 N. Y. 274, 80 N. E. 924; Roehl v. Haumesser, 114 Ind. 311, 15 N. E. 345; Johnston v. Spicer, 107 N. Y. 195, 13 N. E. 753; Austin v. Davis, 128 Ind. 472, 12 L.R.A. 120, 25 Am. St. Rep. 456, 26 N. E. 890; Phalen v. United States Trust Co. 186 N. Y. 178, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 734, 78 N. E. 943, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 595.

Deceased could dispose of his property by assignment or by gift during his lifetime.

Jones v. Martin, 3 Anstr. 882; Randall v. Willis, 5 Ves. Jr. 266; Gall v. Gall, 64 Hun, 600, 19 N. Y. Supp. 332; Johnston v. Spicer, 107 N. Y. 185, 13 N. E. 753; Austin v. Davis, supra.

The assignment was not a testamentary disposition of property, but passed a present right to the policy of insurance.

Lane v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 102 App. Div. 625, 92 N. Y. Supp. 1131; Lane v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 115 App. Div. 902, 100 N. Y. Supp. 1125; Matson v. Abbey, 70 Hun, 475, 24 N. Y. Supp. 284, affirmed in 141 N. Y. 179, 36 N. E. 11; Robb v. Washington & Jefferson College, 185 N. Y. 485, 78 N. E. 359; Re Parsons, 117 App. Div. 321, 102 N. Y. Supp. 168; Hurlbut v. Hurlbut, 49 Hun, 189, 1 N. Y. Supp. 854; Conyne v. Jones, 51 Ill. App. 17; Grafing v. Heilmann, 1 App. Div. 260, 37 N. Y. Supp. 253, affirmed in 153 N. Y. 673, 48 N. Y. Supp. 1104; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 88; Bohleber v. Waelden, 150 N. Y. 405, 44 N. E. 1041; Elsberg v. Sewarda, 66 Hun, 28, 21 N. Y. Supp. 10.

Vann, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint does not rest upon actual fraud, alleged as matter of fact, but on constructive fraud alleged as a conclusion of law. The theory of the pleader was that the plaintiff, by means of the antenuptial contract made between her mother and the decedent, became entitled to all the property of the latter at his death, without any reduction through gifts made in his lifetime; that, in the words of her counsel, "there was no option given to the decedent as to the sum or sums which he might give away," either in his lifetime or by last will and testament; and that he held his property as a quasi trustee, with power to use for the support of himself and family, but with no power to make a donation of any substantial amount to any person, or for any purpose. This construction of the contract is not required by the words used, and it would lead to such absurd results as to show that it was not within the intention of the parties. It would have prevented the decedent from dropping a "ten-dollar bill" in the contribution box as it was passed to him in church on Sunday; from giving a few dollars to relieve want or assuage pain; from making a Christmas present to a friend; and, regardless of the extent of his estate, from helping to build a church or support a hospital. What was the contract? The decedent agreed to adopt the plaintiff and make her his heir; to give her all his property by will, unless he should leave a child or children of his own, and, in that event, to divide his property equally between all the children, herself included. What was the effect of the contract, construed, as it should be, in the light of the circumstances surrounding the parties when it was made, with reference to the use by the decedent of his property while he lived? The answer to this question is not to be found in his promise to "bequeath and devise all his property" to the plaintiff, read by itself, but read in connection with the context, that he would adopt her and make her his heir. When thus read, the reasonable construction is that he intended to treat the plaintiff as his own child, and, when he died, to leave his property to her, or to her and his own children, if he had any. He did not intend to create a trust in her favor, or to deprive himself throughout his life of power to use his property as men with wife and children depending upon them ordinarily use their property. He intended to give the plaintiff the legal status of a child of his body, and to leave her his property after he was through with it. He did not intend to so fetter his estate for all time that he could not hold up his head among men, and do what others do with the property they accumulate. The lady whom he was about to marry, as in the nature of things, it must be presumed, could not have intended to belittle and humiliate him in advance by depriving him of power, as long as he lived, to make a gift to charity or a present to a friend, even if it was reasonable in amount, when the size of his estate was taken into account. Such a debasing covenant would dishonor both parties, and is inconceivable under such circumstances as the complaint discloses.

The intention of the plaintiff is not to be sought for, as she was not a party to the agreement except by indirection; but that of the two persons on the threshold of marriage, and presumed to be deeply attached to each other. The lady had been married before. She had a child and a substantial sum of money. In lending that money to her prospective husband, to use in his business, she made the same provision for her child as if it were a child of the marriage about to take place. By that provision her child was to be adopted by her husband as his own, and made his heir, and he was to leave it his property when he died. It would be unreasonable to hold that either party, by such an agreement, made under such circumstances, and for such a purpose, intended that the head of the family, although he might live to be an old man, and be worth millions, could never consider an application for charity without a blush, because, by agreement with his own wife, he could not give any substantial sum even to the most noble object. The intention of the parties may be doubtful when particular words used by them are considered by themselves, but it is clear when all their words are read together in the light of their mutual promises to marry. Regard must be paid, not only to their language, but also to what the law implies therefrom in view of their situation.

It is asked, however, whether the decedent could give away all his property to his own relatives, and thus defeat the antenuptial contract altogether. And, assuming that he could not do this, because it would be unreasonable, it is further asked where the line is to be drawn between the power to give away all and to give away nothing. That line is to be drawn where the courts always draw it when they can,—along the boundary of good faith. If the decedent had given away property with furtive intent, for the purpose of defeating the antenuptial contract, and of defrauding the plaintiff, the gift would have been void. No such fact is alleged in the complaint. No case of fraudulent intent or fraud, in fact, is presented by the plaintiff. Her theory is that any gift, or, at least, that any substantial gift, by the decedent, even if made with the best of intentions, was unauthorized and void. We do not so read the contract. Any gift made with actual intent to defraud would be void, but none made without such intent, unless so out of proportion to the rest of his estate as to attack the integrity of the contract, when it would be fraudulent as matter of law. The gift might be so large that, independent of intent or motive, fraud upon the contract would be imputed, or arise constructively by operation of law. Reasonable gifts were impliedly authorized. Unreasonable gifts were not, even if made without actual intent to defraud. In the absence of intentional fraud the question is one of degree, and depends upon the proportion that the value of the gift bears to the amount of the donor's estate. The plaintiff alleges that the decedent accumulated a large fortune, and had it at the time of his death; and, if so, a gift of $10,000, made in his lifetime to his brothers and sisters, would not be a fraud upon the contract as matter of law, for it would not be unusual or unreasonable for a man so situated to make a gift of that amount to near relatives.

The plaintiff can take nothing in this action by virtue of her judgment in the former action, for, as she expressly alleges, the decree for specific performance is confined to the "money or other property owned and left by the said George W. Kidd at the time of his death." The policy in question was property, but it was neither owned nor left by Mr. Kidd when he died, for, by his lawful act, it had become the property of others.

We think that the action of the courts below in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint was proper, and that the judgment appealed from should be affirmed, with costs.

Cullen, Ch., J., Haight, Werner, Willard Bartlett, Hiscock, and Chase, JJ., concur.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

JACK RODMAN

v.

WILLIAM P. MANNING et al., Appts.

(— Or. —, 99 Pac. 657.)

Broker — purchase — suppression of knowledge.

A real estate broker cannot, after accepting, in response to his request for price, the owner's offer to sell at a certain price less a commission to himself, enforce a conveyance to himself, if, to his knowledge, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the property was worth more than the price named, of which fact he failed to inform the owner.

(February 9, 1909.)

Case Note. — Right of broker to purchase real estate listed with him for sale.

It is not intended to cover herein the right of agents generally to sell real estate to themselves. So far as possible, the cases are limited to sales by brokers, although some cases are included in which the character of the agent in this respect is not clear.

Where agent's interest in purchase is concealed.

It is the general doctrine, to which there are but few exceptions, that a real estate broker, with whom real estate has been listed for sale, cannot become the purchaser of it, or be interested in the purchase of it, unless his interest is disclosed to the principal.

Thus, in Curry v. King, 6 Cal. App. 568, 92 Pac. 662, in referring to the rule applicable to such a sale, the court said that the animating principle of the proposition that such an agent was charged in full measure with the duty of good faith in his dealings with his principal touching the subject-matter of his authority as agent, was that no one should or would be permitted to enjoy the fruits of an advantage taken of a fiduciary relation, whose dominant characteristic was confidence reposed by one in another. That "the act of an agent, within the scope of his authority, is the act of his principal, and hence the authority of an agent is so fraught with responsibility and grave concern to his principal, dealing as it does with the property rights of the latter, that it proceeds out of the highest considerations of confidence, which the principles of equity demand, must be preserved to its utmost in transactions involving the exercise of such authority. Therefore an agent will not be allowed to deal in his own behalf with his principal with reference to the subject-matter of the agency, unless he makes full, complete, and honest disclosure of the truth of the transaction. He is bound to treat with his principal concerning the property over which he has been vested with authority in the utmost good faith; and so religiously does equity require adherence to this rule that a transaction between them as to the property whereby the agent acquires the ownership thereof is, upon its face, deemed by the law to be fraudulent."

And in Rich v. Black, 173 Pa. 92, 33 Atl. 880, Justice Sterrett, considering the relation created by listing property with a real estate agent for sale, remarked that the rule of public policy avoided, at the instance of the cestui que trust, all purchases made by such agents; and added that "courts of equity view such transactions with jealous eye; and it is only under special circumstances amounting to a dissolution of the

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lane County in complainant's favor in a suit to compel the specific performance of a contract to convey certain real property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. G. W. Stapleton for appellants.

Mr. John M. Williams for respondent.

Moore, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit to enforce the specific performance of a contract to convey real property. The facts are that the defendants William P. Manning and Mary, his wife, were the owners of 320 acres of timber land in Lane county, Oregon and while residing at Roy, Washington, received a telegram trust relation, when the parties have dealt at arms length, that their validity is recognized. . . . And the reasons are obvious. On the one hand, the relation which such agents bear is confidential, and disarms the vigilance of their principals; it affords peculiar facilities for obtaining exclusive information in respect of the property intrusted to them for sale; their employment implies that they have superior advantages for making sales, and that they will use every effort and means to obtain the highest price for the benefit of their principal. On the other hand, their individual interest is to purchase at the lowest price, and places them in a position which is inconsistent with the faithful and proper discharge of the duties of the trust."

Agents employed to sell real estate cannot themselves become purchasers, unless it appears that, with full knowledge of all the facts, the principal previously consented to, or subsequently ratified, the sale; as it is an inflexible rule, founded on public policy, that, where the interest of the agent is concealed from the principal, the transaction is voidable at his option; or, if the property has been subsequently sold by the agent, he may be held accountable to the principal for the profits he derived therefrom. Tilleny v. Wolverton, 46 Minn. 256, 48 N. W. 908; Forrester-Duncan Land Co. v. Evatt (Ark.) 119 S. W. 282.

Listing real estate with an agent to sell at a minimum price implies an expectation on the part of the principal, and an engagement on the part of the agent, that he will make an honest endeavor to obtain a higher price. And, where he makes no bona fide effort to perform this duty, and purchases the property at the minimum figure in the name of another, concealing his interest therein from the principal, equity will cancel the conveyance, or hold him for all profits derived by him from subsequent sales. Rich v. Black, supra.

In Clark v. Bird, 66 App. Div. 284, 72 N. Y. Supp. 769, the question as to the validity of a sale of land by a principal to her agent seemed to turn upon the question of whether the principal knew that she was selling to November 17, 1906, from the plaintiff, Jack Rodman, who, the defendants knew, was engaged in the real estate business at Eugene, inquiring if they owned such property, and, if so, what was the price thereof. Manning, not knowing the value of the land at that time, in reply to the message, wired as follows: "Yes; price $4,000 less 5 per cent commission." The plaintiff immediately telegraphed to Manning as follows: "Will take it; send deed to me, First Nat'l Bank." The deeds were made out and sent to the defendant bank as requested, with instructions that they be delivered upon the receipt of $3,800. Rodman on November 23, 1906, wrote Manning as follows: "Will you kindly instruct the First National Bank to accept a deposit of $200 the agent with whom she had listed the property. The holding of the lower court, that the principal did not understand that the sale was to her agent, and that it was therefore void and would be canceled, was held supported by evidence that the principal was a woman, advanced in years, physically weak, and of inferior mental capacity, and that the consideration for the sale was grossly inadequate, together with the fact that the agent seemed to act in the role of agent to the extent of charging commissions for investing himself with the ownership of the property.

The doctrine that an agent to sell cannot sell to himself was also applied in White v. Leach (Iowa) 96 N. W. 709, wherein the rescission of an exchange of land with an agent was granted where the exchange was procured through fraudulent representations by the agent as to the value of the land exchanged, and concealment of the fact that he and his partner were the real parties to the exchange, it having been made in the name of a third person.

And in Anderson v. Lawler, 46 Wash. 543, 90 Pac. 913, rescission was granted of a contract to sell real estate, made through a real estate agent interested in the purchase, where that fact was concealed from the owner.

Similar relief was given in Clark v. Bird, supra, where the interest of the agent in the purchase was concealed.

And in Curry v. King, supra, a sale by a real estate agent to himself through a "dummy" was canceled upon the application of the principal.

Also in Webb v. Marks, 10 Colo. App. 429, 51 Pac. 518, where an agent misrepresented the value of land listed with him for sale, and purchased it in the name of his mother-in-law, who was a member of his family, of which fact the principal had no knowledge.

In Leonard v. Omstead (Iowa) 119 N. W. 973, the principal was allowed to recover the profits made by his agent from a subsequent sale, where, unknown to his principal, he was interested in the original purchase negotiated by him.

So, where a purchaser of land by a con-as evidence of good faith, and to hold your deeds to me for two weeks, so as to give me a little time to get together some other pieces which I am endeavoring to collect, in order to make a sale of it all together? If this will not inconvenience you it will be an accommodation to me, and I will make the deposit as soon as I get word from you that you have so instructed the bank." Manning, in reply thereto, sent the plaintiff a postal card, stating that he had directed the bank as requested; but on November 26, 1906, he countermanded the order, and notified the bank not to deliver the deeds. Thereafter Rodman tendered to the bank $3,800, and demanded the deeds, but failed to obtain them. Prior to such tender, the plaintiff had agreed with certain persons to sell and convey to them the defendants' lands, for which he was to receive $6,500. The complaint herein is in the usual form. The answer alleges that the plaintiff was the defendants' agent in negotiating the sale of their property, and that, having concealed from them the value of the premises, they are not bound by their contract. The reply put in issue the allegations of new matter in the answer, and, the cause having been tried, resulted in a decree as prayed for in the complaint; and the defendants appeal.

The important question to be considered is whether or not the plaintiff was employed by the defendants to negotiate a sale of their real property. "A broker," says Mr. Hammon, "is one who is engaged for othtract, through real estate agents representing the owner, went to the agents before the completion of the purchase, and expressed regret at making the purchase, and offered to release the owner therefrom, which fact the agents concealed from their principal, and completed the contract in their own behalf, but in the name of such purchaser, such conduct on their part was a fraud upon the owner, which entitled him to recover from them the profits realized from a subsequent sale of the property. Moore v. Petty, 68 C. C. A. 306, 135 Fed. 688.

And where an agent to sell pilot warrants at the best price obtainable negotiated a sale to a partner in such deals, which fact was unknown to the principal, he was held accountable to him for his share of the profits derived from a subsequent sale. Segar v. Edwards, 11 Leigh, 213.

In Morgan v. Hardy, 16 Neb. 427, 20 N. W. 337, specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate made through an agent to his stepdaughter, a member of his family, was refused where it appeared that the principal did not know that the agent was selling to one related to him, and supposed he was acting entirely in his interest. The court said that, when a professional land agent acted as agent for both the seller and the buyer, with knowledge on their part of that fact, the law exacted the most perfect good faith, honesty, and fairness on his part, and would not adjudge a specific performance of the contract thus made, unless it was entered into with perfect fairness, without misapprehension or misrepresentation; and the rule would be more strictly observed in a case like the one before the court, where the vendor believed, and had the right to believe, that the agent was acting for him and in his interest alone, and added: "No one who reads the above correspondence can doubt that the agent was acting alone in the interest of his stepdaughter. Indeed, in all matters where her interest was at stake, it was his duty to protect it. Hence, in the transaction now being considered, he was morally, if not legally, incompetent to act as the agent of the defendant." 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So, a contract to sell real estate will not be specifically enforced where made by an agent with his partner, the owner having no knowledge of the partnership, or of any interest of his agent in the purchase. Fry v. Platt, 32 Kan. 62, 3 Pac. 781.

And in Foss Invest. Co. v. Ater, 49 Wash. 446, 95 Pac. 1017, specific performance of a contract to sell real estate was denied where the contract sought to be enforced was made by an agent with a corporation as purchaser, the stock of which was substantially all owned by him, although no representations as to the identity of the purchaser were made, and the agent's authority to sell was at a price net to the vendor.

Where the agent is interested in the purchase, and conceals his interest from the principal, he cannot recover his commission. This rule applies even where the employment is to sell at a fixed price; for it springs from the prohibitory policy of the law, adopted to prevent the abuse of confidence, and to remove temptation to duplicity. It requires a man to put off the character of agent when he assumes that of principal. Ruckman v. Bergholz, 37 N. J. L. 437.

The right of an agent to a commission was also denied in Salomons v. Bender, 3 Hurlst. & C. 639, on the ground that the agent negotiated the sale to third persons for the benefit of a company then being formed, for which the agent was then employed as an architect, and in which he intended to take shares of stock.

Real estate agents authorized to sell real estate at a stipulated price are not entitled to recover damages for an alleged breach of an agreement by the principal to convey to a purchaser when found by them, where the breach consists of a refusal to execute a deed to the agents. Colbert v. Shepherd, 89 Va. 401, 16 S. E. 246. This case involved an attempt by certain real estate agents to construe an authority to sell real estate located in Fredericksburg as covering the grave, monument, etc., of Mary, mother of Washington; and it contains an interesting account of that transaction, which at the time caused much comment.

ers on a commission negotiating contracts relative to property with the custody of which he has no concern." 19 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 186. The chief feature which distinguishes a broker from other classes of agents is that he is an intermediary or middleman, who, in effecting a sale or exchange of property, acts, in a certain sense, as the agent of both parties to the transaction. Vinton v. Baldwin, 88 Ind. 104, 45 Am. Rep. 447; Saladin v. Mitchell, 45 Ill. 79; Higgins v. Moore, 34 N. Y. 417. A person who is a salaried agent and not acting for a fee or rate per cent, for others, is not a broker. Portland v. O'Neill, 1 Or. 218. "When a broker," says Mr. Commissioner King, in Wolverton v. Tuttle (Or.) 94 Pac. 961, 963, "is notified by the vendor that he will pay no commissions, and, after receipt of such notice, the broker continues the negotiations for the sale, it is presumed that he is agent of the purchaser, and looking to him for his compensation." The converse of the legal principle thus asserted must be true, from which it follows that, when the owner of property offers to pay a person a commission for negotiating a sale or exchange thereof, the acceptance of the proposition necessarily creates the relation of agency between them. The defendants were aware that the plaintiff was engaged in the real estate business, and, when they received his first message, they had the right to infer, from the nature of his occupation, that he was acting as the agent of some person unknown. Baxter v.

The agency of a real estate broker for the sale of certain real estate, together with its sale by the broker to another, but for his benefit, virtually to himself, is sufficient to show that a contract between such broker and the nominal vendee, by which the vendee is to account to the broker for a share of the profits derived from the transaction, is violative of law, contrary to public policy, and unlawful under the Code, and hence will not be enforced in behalf of the broker. Butler v. Agnew (Cal.) 99 Pac. 395.

A distinction was made in Merriam v. Johnson, 86 Minn. 61, 90 N. W. 116, between a contract with a real estate agent to sell land at a given price net to the vendor, with full discretion as to the purchaser, with authority to sell even to himself, and also as to the price, so long as the net price was realized, and a contract by which the agent was to sell at the best price obtainable, with a reasonable commission to be paid by the purchaser. The court said that a sale of land by the agent to himself, under a contract of the first description, would be valid, although, at the time, the agent was concealing his interest in the purchase, and was selling to a third person at a greatly enhanced price; but a sale under such circumstances, if made by virtue of a contract of the latter description, the court said, would be voidable, to the extent, at least, that the owner would be entitled to recover from the agent the amount he received in excess of what he paid for it.

Spinks v. Clark, 147 Cal. 439, 82 Pac. 45, held the fact that real estate brokers were agents for the sale of a particular parcel of land, did not amount to a constructive fraud, authorizing a rescission of a contract made in their own behalf, with the owner, for its exchange for stock in a corporation, although the owner believed, and was led to believe, that the stock was not their property, and that the transaction was with a third person, where the transaction was a separate one, originating in the owner's offer to exchange, based upon his own investigations as to the value of the stock, and where the court found as a fact that, in making the exchange, the owner did not rely upon or believe the brokers were his agents, or that they were acting in his behalf in making the exchange.

A sale by a broker to himself is only voidable, and may be waived by laches or conduct tending to affirm the fraud. Thus, in Bassett v. Brown, 105 Mass. 551, the court, while recognizing that a principal may avoid a deed of land obtained from him by a real estate broker, with whom he had listed it for sale, and who, by fraudulent representations as to the value of the stock, induced him to exchange the land for stock, concealing his ownership in the stock, said that it was the duty of the principal to act with reasonable promptness upon learning of the fraud practised upon him; and a delay of over two years in taking steps to rescind, after full knowledge of the fraud, during which time he had disposed of a large portion of the stock, amounted to an affirmation of the fraud, and precluded a rescission.

Purchases by subagents, etc.

The rule that a real estate agent cannot purchase real estate listed with him for sale, applies with equal force to his clerks who obtained information in reference thereto through their employment, and a sale to them, where the principal has no knowledge of their identity and connection with his agent, will be canceled at his option. Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, 78 Am. Dec. 192.

A subagent's duties and obligations to the principal are of the same nature and extent as those of the agent; and a sale of the principal's real estate by the subagent to himself, without the consent of the principal, with knowledge of all the facts, is therefore voidable, and will be set aside at the option of the principal. Burke v. Bourne, 92 Cal. 108, 28 Pac. 57.

So, an agreement by a third person with a real estate dealer, with whom property had been listed for sale, whereby the former was to receive a part of the commissions in case he effected a sale of the property, makes him an agent of the principal, and hence, with Duren, 29 Me. 434, 50 Am. Dec. 602. When, under such circumstances, the defendants proposed to pay the plaintiff a stated commission for effecting a sale of their real property, the acceptance of such offer made him their agent. This seems to be the construction he first placed on the contract; for it will be remembered that in his letter written to Manning, November 23, 1906, he stated that he desired an extension of time in order that he might make a sale of other tracts of land at the same time. "An agent to sell land," says Mr. Justice Jaggard, in Kingsley v. Wheeler, 95 Minn. 360, 362, 104 N. W. 543, 544, "does not fulfil the measure of legal requirements by merely carrying out his specific instructions. He owes the duty of making a full, fair, and prompt disclosure of all facts affecting the principal's rights or interests, or pertaining to the sale of land by him. He is denied the right to profit at the expense of his principal by concealment of facts which he ought to have revealed." When an agent employed to sell land becomes himself the purchaser by making a contract with his principal, from whom he conceals the fact that a greater price may be obtained from another person, he is guilty of such fraud as will justify a violation of the agreement.

Believing that the facts hereinbefore stated bring the case within the principle adverted to, it follows that the decree should be reversed and the suit dismissed; and it is so ordered.

out a full disclosure of his interest and connection with the agent, precludes him from acquiring the property, and an agreement with the principal to purchase will not be specifically enforced in his behalf. Fisk v. Waite (Or.) 99 Pac. 283.

Subsequently acquired interest.

The mere fact that the relation of agency once existed between the parties does not disable them from dealing with each other in reference to the subject-matter of the agency, or from dealing with third persons in reference to the subject-matter of the agency, after the termination of the relation of principal and agent. This doctrine was in substance enunciated in Oberlin College v. Blair, 45 W. Va. 812, 32 S. E. 203, which held that the fact that an agent to sell real estate purchased an interest therein four days subsequently to the consummation of the sale thereof in behalf of his principal would not invalidate the sale, where the court was unable to find, from the evidence, that the agent had any understanding or agreement with the vendee before the sale was made, that he was to become the owner of any interest in the subject-matter of the sale after the sale. It was further held that, under such circumstances, the onus probandi was on the principal who alleged fraud, and, if the fraud was not strictly and clearly proved as alleged, relief would not be granted, although the party against whom relief was sought was not perfectly clear in his dealings.

So, in Walker v. Derby, 5 Biss. 134, Fed. Cas. No. 17,068, the court said that the fact that real estate agents had been engaged to act for the owner of land in negotiating its sale would not estop or preclude them from making an advantageous purchase of the property after they had effected a sale in behalf of the principal. It was also said that, where the principal attacked the sale on the ground of fraud, in that the original sale was secretly for the benefit of the agent, it devolved upon him to prove that fact. It was, however, admitted that a subsequently executed instrument for the sale of the premises, containing a statement that it was executed in consummation of an agreement between the vendee in the original sale and the agents, made at the time of the original sale, prima facie established fraud; but that this presumption was overcome by an explanation on the part of the agents, that the instrument did not correctly show the date of the oral agreement which it consummated, but that the date of the original sale had been fixed upon simply as a matter of convenience. This explanation, the court said, must be accepted as true.

And where the agent is not interested in an offer to purchase, made by the purchaser, and the latter purchases on his own account exclusively, without any understanding that the agent is to become interested with him or take his place in the purchase, a subsequent purchase by the agent will not be avoided. Robertson v. Chapman, 152 U. S. 683, 38 L. ed. 596, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 741.

To the same effect, also, is Bookwalter v. Lansing, 23 Neb. 291, 36 N. W. 549, which held that it did not invalidate a sale for the agent, upon the failure, of the purchaser in a sale negotiated by him to make the payments, to himself advance the money and have the purchaser transfer the property to him, where the original purchase was found not to have been made for his own use, and the sale to the third person was not a device or means for the agent to obtain title to the property without the principal knowing the real nature of the transaction.

The fact that the agent's wife, some years after, became the owner of land with reference to which her husband had, at a prior time, been an agent in negotiating a sale to his brother-in-law, is not sufficient to invalidate the sale, where its validity was not attacked for over twenty years, and an explanation of the wife's title was made, which, at least, was as consistent with honesty on the part of the agent as with dishonesty, and it did not appear that the property sold was worth substantially more at the time of the original sale than the principal received for it. Walker v. Carrington, 74 Ill. 446.

Where interest disclosed.

Where the fact is disclosed that the agent is either purchasing for himself, or is interested in the purchase, and the purchase is otherwise free from all fraud, concealment, misrepresentation, or undue influence on his part, it will be sustained.

This doctrine finds support in Stewart v. Mather, 32 Wis. 344, which held that an agent was entitled to his commission for finding a purchaser of certain land, even though he purchased the land himself, if the purchase was made with full knowledge of all the facts on the part of the principal, and with an understanding that he was to have a commission. Referring to the right of an agent to buy of his principal, the court said: "The general principle will at once be acknowledged, that a person cannot, at the same time, be both agent for the seller to make the sale, and purchaser of the property to be sold. The relations are wholly incompatible with each other, and cannot be combined in the same person. The law will not permit it. Assuming the character of purchaser, the person so acting necessarily abandons that of agent, and can claim nothing in the latter capacity in his negotiations with his former principal. Such is the undoubted general rule. But the question presents itself, whether there may not be exceptions growing out of the peculiar nature of the agency, or certain special or limited agencies not falling within the reason of the rule, and so not within the rule itself. The reason of the rule is very plain. It is, that the interest of the party as purchaser, being adverse to that of his principal, supposing the agency still to continue, might and most naturally and ordinarily would lead to a violation of his duty as agent. If a case can be presented, however, not within the reason of the rule, as of an agency limited to a time anterior to the purchase, or where the agency may be said to have expired, or the duties to have been performed, before the purchase takes place, to such a case it is presumed the rule would be held inapplicable."

Rathke v. Tyler, 136 Iowa, 284, 111 N. W. 435, sustained a sale of land by a principal to his agent, although on the following day he sold the land to another for a substantially larger amount. It appeared, however, that he had never met the subsequent purchaser until the day following his purchase of the land from his principal.

And where a real estate agent is given no discretion, and no special confidence is placed in him, and there is no reliance upon his judgment or skill, and no authority is vested in him to bind his principal, and there is no obligation on his part to advise, the mere existence of an agency to sell does not, in the absence of actual fraud on his part, disable the parties from dealing with each other with reference to the subject-matter of the agency; and if the principal, with full knowledge of all the material facts concerning the transaction, enters into negotiations with the agent and consummates a deal with him, the transaction is valid, and will not be set aside. Pomeroy v. Wimer, 167 Ind. 440, 78 N. E. 233, 79 N. E. 446.

But if the broker in making a sale is given a discretion as to the terms of sale, or the price, or if he procures the sale to himself by fraud, misrepresentation, concealment, or undue influence, the sale may be avoided by the principal, although entered into by him with knowledge that the agent was an interested party in the purchase.

Thus, in Kingsley v. Wheeler, 95 Minn. 360, 104 N. W. 543, in holding that the owner of land, who sold it to real estate brokers, with whom he had previously listed it for sale, could recover their profits from a subsequent sale, the court said: "Real estate agents enjoy no exemption from the ordinary rules which govern the relationship of principal and agent. An agent owes a high degree of faithfulness for the protection and advancement of the interest of his principal. He must act solely for that interest, and not for his own or another's benefit; and must not, and is not allowed to, put himself in a position of conflicting interest with his principal. The principal has a right to repose confidence in the most perfect good faith of his agent, and to rely upon his consistent loyalty. The agent is not entitled to enjoy the fruits of any abuse of his position, or failure in consistent performance of legal duties. An agent to sell land does not fulfil the measure of legal requirements by merely carrying out his specific instructions. He owes the duty of making a full, fair, and prompt disclosure of all facts affecting the principal's rights or interests, or pertaining to the sale of land by him. He is denied the right to profit at the expense of his principal by concealment of facts which he ought to have revealed. Whatever advantage accrues to him by violation of his duties, he must make good to his principal whom he has wronged."

An agency to sell real estate gives rise to a duty on the part of the agent to disclose all facts known to him in reference to the value of the land before buying it himself, and, although he may not be guilty of any false or fraudulent statements in procuring the property, yet if he conceals facts affecting its value, as the fact that he had a better offer from a third person, the conveyance to him will be rescinded at the election of the principal. Van Dusen v. Bigelow, 13 N. D. 277, 67 L.R.A. 288, 100 N. W. 723.

So, in Cornwell v. Foord, 96 Ill. App. 366, the vendors in a contract to sell real estate to their agent were allowed the amount subsequently received by the agent for the property, in excess of the amount paid by him, although the sale was made directly to him, where, however, he concealed from his principals the fact that he had received other offers larger than the amount that he had paid them for the property.

Rescission of a sale of land to an agent was also granted in Green v. Peeso, 92 Iowa, 261, 60 N. W. 531, where the agent concealed the fact that he had received offers from third persons for a larger amount than he paid.

So, where a real estate agent, employed to sell certain real estate, concealed from his principal information gained by him in the course of his employment, which would have been of value to the principal before parting with his title, and took advantage of this knowledge to procure a conveyance to himself, the conveyance is voidable, and will be canceled at the instance of the principal, or his subsequent vendee. Prince v. Dupuy, 163 Ill. 417, 45 N. E. 298.

A mere proposition by the owner of land residing some distance therefrom, to a person residing near it, to act as his agent in selling it, although the relation of principal and agent is not consummated, places the parties in such a relation each to the other as to demand open and fair dealing; and a court of equity will not enforce a contract made between the parties for the sale of the land, where the purchaser suppresses facts which materially affect the present and prospective value of the land. Byars v. Stubbs, 85 Ala. 256, 4 So. 755.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF UTAH, Resp.,
v.

JAMES DONALDSON, Appt.

(— Utah, —, 99 Pac. 447.)

Larceny—card game—fraud—amount.

1. One who obtains from another a sum of money by a fraudulent use of cards is guilty of larceny of the whole amount, although he intends to divide it with others who are confederated with him in the transaction.

Case Note.—Larceny by fraudulent race or game.

The earlier cases upon this subject are treated in a note to State v. Ryan, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 862, or are sufficiently set out in that opinion. A number of decisions upon this subject have been handed down since the preparation of that note.

Some authorities divide the cases of this character into two classes: First, those in which the complainant intended to part with title to the money or property which he put into the game, although, by some trick or device, he had no possible chance of winning; second, cases in which the complainant had no intention to part with title to his money or property. This distinction is clearly set out in Johnson v. State, 75 Ark. 427, 88 S. W. 905, where the complainant gave the defendant an amount of money to bet upon a race which was alleged to be a "sure thing," the money to be returned, together with a share of the winnings. The court held that these facts brought the case within the authority of Hindman v. State, 72 Ark. 516, 81 S. W. 838 (which is cited in the earlier note), where the court laid down the following L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same—guilt.

2. If one takes from a card table, without consent of his opponent, money belonging to the latter, under the pretense that he has won it in the game, which was in fact fraudulently conducted by him, so that the owner of the money had no chance to win, and was the only one who risked anything, with intent to appropriate it to his own use, he is guilty of larceny.

Evidence—erroneous admission—absence of prejudice.

3. It is not prejudicial error to permit a witness by whom the defendant in a criminal case is attempting to prove good character to be asked if witness and defendant had not smoked opium together in a disreputable resort, if the answer is no.

(January 6, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Salt Lake County convicting him of grand larceny. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. A. King for appellant.

Messrs. M. A. Breeden, Attorney General, and A. R. Barnes, for respondent:

Where one is induced, by means of a game where he has no chance to win, to part with his property, he does not part with the title to his property, but merely parts with the possession; and larceny may be maintained for such unlawful taking.

Hall v. State, 6 Baxt. 522; United States v. Murphy, MacArth. & M. 375, 48 Am. Rep. 754; R. v. Robson, Russ. & R. C. C. 413; State v. Skilbrick, 25 Wash. 555, 87 Am. St. Rep. 784, 66 Pac. 53; People v. Shaw, 57 Mich. 403, 58 Am. Rep. 372, 24

ing rule: "Where persons conspire to cheat a man under color of a bet, and he simply deposits his money as a stake with one of them, not meaning thereby to part with the ownership therein, they, by taking the money, commit larceny; and not the less so though afterwards they are by fraud made to appear to win." The court, however, upheld the charge of the trial judge to the effect that, no matter how fraudulent or dishonest the inducements might have been, if the complainant bet his money intending to part with its title and possession, the taking of it, so fraudulently acquired, would not constitute larceny.

So, in Glasgow v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 635, 100 S. W. 933, where the facts were very similar, the transaction was held to be a theft. The court said: "The evidence of the witness Guess, as above detailed, and other portions of same in the record, shows that he did not intend to part with his money; that he was to receive it back at all hazards,—either the exact money, or the exact amount of money. This being true, the facts constitute theft, and there was no error in the court so charging."

N. W. 121; State v. Smith, 82 Minn. 345, 85 N. W. 12; Smith v. People, 53 N. Y. 111, 13 Am. Rep. 474; People v. Miller, 169 N. Y. 339, 88 Am. St. Rep. 546, 62 N. E. 418; Defrese v. State, 3 Heisk. 53, 8 Am. Rep. 1; Crum v. State, 148 Ind. 401, 47 N. E. 835; Fleming v. State, 136 Ind. 149, 36 N. E. 154; People v. Rae, 66 Cal. 423, 56 Am. Rep. 102, 6 Pac. 1; People v. Frigerio, 107 Cal. 152, 40 Pac. 107; 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 40, 57; People v. Shaughnessy, 110 Cal. 602, 43 Pac. 2.

All acts done by the conspirators or any one of them, in furtherance of the common design, including the attempt to escape detection and the division of the fruits of the crime, were admissible.

3 Enc. Ev. 432; People v. Leong Quong, 60 Cal. 107; People v. Smith, 112 Cal. 333, 44 Pac. 663; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 866; Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898; People v. Dixon, 94 Cal. 255, 29 Pac. 504; 8 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 679; State v. Coella, 3 Wash. 99, 28 Pac. 28; State v. Grant, 79 Mo. 113, 49 Am. Rep. 218; State v. Kent (State v. Pancoast) 7 N. D. 516, 35 L.R.A. 518, 67 N. W. 1052.

Frick, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The defendant was charged, tried, convicted, and sentenced for the crime of grand larceny, and now presents the record on appeal.

The evidence, stated in condensed form, tended to establish the following facts:

That the alleged crime arose out of an alleged conspiracy entered into by several individuals, hereafter referred to, by means of which two young Scotchmen, while on their way from Scotland to Los Angeles, on the day of the alleged crime, while stopping off at Salt Lake City, were deprived of $10,423. In passing along the streets of the city, they met a stranger of whom they made some inquiry with regard to the location of some point in the city, when he informed them that he was likewise a stranger in the city, but at once seemed to take an interest in them. He introduced himself as "Mr. Morris," and, after giving them somewhat of his history, invited them to go with him to a certain room where he said he expected to meet a friend of his uncle. The two brothers went with him, and, when they arrived at the room, Morris knocked at the door, and, after some delay, both he and the two young men were admitted into the room in which the defendant and another (as they said) had been engaged in a game of cards. Morris introduced the two brothers by their names to the other two who were in the room, but gave these two fictitious names. The defendant was titled "Doctor," and the other, who was in fact a brother of Morris, was introduced as a mining expert. The mining expert entered into a conversation with the two brothers about mines and precious ores for a short time, after which he and the defendant asked permission to continue their game of cards, which was given. Morris soon joined the game. After he had played some time, he asked the elder of the two brothers to take his (Morris's) place in the game. The Scotchman declined to play, protesting that he knew nothing about the game. Morris, however, urged

And in State v. Copeman, 186 Mo. 108, 84 S. W. 942, where the defendant and his accomplice obtained possession of the prosecutor's money while discussing the proposed bet, but the prosecutor did not intend to part with title thereto, the court said: "If, by deception and fraud, or any trick or confidence game, a party should part with the absolute title as well as the possession of his property, it may well be said there was no trespass in the taking and conversion of the property, for the reason that the victim consented to the taking of the title and possession, as well as the conversion; and hence there would be no larceny, for the reason there was no trespass. . . . In other words, where the ownership of the property is not parted with, and, by a fraud or trick, the possession of the property alone is obtained, and is converted to the use of the taker without the consent of the owner, and, at the time of resorting to the trick or fraud to obtain the possession, it was intended to convert the property, and permanently deprive the owner of it, this would constitute larceny at common law, as well as under the statute."

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And the same rule was applied in Williams v. State, 34 Tex. 558, where the prosecutor was a willing party to a wager upon a fraudulent device by which he could not win, and the court held that, as the defendant secured possession of the money with the consent of the owner, one of the essential elements of larceny was lacking.

In People v. Simmons, 125 App. Div. 234, 109 N. Y. Supp. 190, a judgment of conviction of larceny was sustained where the evidence offered by the people showed that two or more confederates, by gaining the confidence of a stranger on the ground of professed acquaintance with him or his friends, lured him to a place where he was afterwards fleeced at some game.

And in Defrese v. State, 3 Heisk. 53, 8 Am. Rep. 1, the prosecutor was induced to hand his watch to the defendant as a wager upon a fraudulent card trick. It did not appear that any money was wagered against it, but the defendant's confederate claimed that he won, snatched the watch, and walked away with it, and the defendant was held guilty of larceny for his part in the transaction.

him to play, stating that he (Morris) would show him how, and for that purpose offered the Scotchman the "chips" which Morris claimed he had won, amounting, as he said, to the value of $40. The elder brother thus entered the game. He was asked to deal the cards, and did as directed by dealing one card at a time to each player, and, as soon as the first card had been dealt, the betting was started by the defendant. Neither the defendant nor the mining expert displayed any money, and, when the bets had exceeded the amount of the chips which Morris had given to the elder brother, he was urged by Morris to meet the bets of the defendant and the mining expert by putting up money. When the Scotchman demurred to this, he was told by Morris that this was necessary in order to avoid losing the amount that had been staked, and that, if it were not done, Morris's winnings would be taken up by the other two players. When the Scotchman further demurred, because he alone was required to put up money, Morris pretended that he would put up his own money. To this the others objected, insisting that, inasmuch as the Scotchman played the hand, he should put up his own money.

He was finally persuaded to do so upon the assurance by Morris that it was necessary in order to protect what was already at stake, and that the Scotchman in all events would win in the end if he continued to meet the bets as made by the other two, since he held the winning hand. In this way the bets were raised from time to time until the Scotchman had $2,050 on the table. After that amount of money was on the table, and five cards had been dealt to each player, the defendant claimed that he had won, and took the money from the table and put it in his pocket. The Scotchman protested, and claimed that he was being robbed of his money, and asked his brother, who was in the room all of the time, to call a policeman. Morris at once said that he himself would go for a policeman, and left the room. Within a few minutes thereafter he came back with two others, who represented themselves to be policemen. As soon as the alleged policemen arrived in the room, the Scotchman told them his troubles, and claimed that he was being robbed. After some parley, the alleged policemen pretended that it was necessary for them to search the players, and all who were engaged in the game, including the Scotchman, were searched. The $2,050 was given up by the defendant to one of the alleged policemen, who also demanded from the elder brother the balance of his money, which, after some protest, was given to the alleged policeman, amounting to $8.373, and which had been displayed by the Scotchman in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) making the bets as aforesaid. The alleged policeman gave the Scotchman a receipt therefor, stating at the time that the money so taken, including the $2,050, would all be accounted for when they should arrive at the police station, where all were to be taken forthwith. This receipt was produced at the trial and introduced in evidence. The two alleged policemen, however, did not take any of the parties to the police station, but the two brothers were placed in charge of a so-called deputy policeman, who trailed them around the city, first under one and then under some other pretext, while the others went with the alleged policeman who had the money, and the defendant and the mining expert were not seen thereafter by the two Scotchmen. After this plans were at once adopted to get the two brothers out of the city, which, after considerable parley was accomplished, after returning to them $1,000 out of the $10,423 all of which had been taken from the Scotchman, as aforesaid. The two brothers then took the train and went on their way to Los Angeles, from whence they thereafter returned to Sale Lake City. The $9,423 was afterwards divided among the two alleged policemen, the defendant, and the mining expert. The division, however, was not made in equal proportions, but this fact is not deemed material.

It further appeared from the evidence that, if the three players had risked equally in the game, the whole amount of money staked would have amounted to $6,150, all of which the defendant claimed to have won. He, however, never asked for nor received any amount from the mining expert, who, like the Scotchman, would have been loser in the game to the amount of $2,050. It further appeared that the defendant, the mining expert, Morris, and the two alleged policemen were all gamblers, following that vocation for a livelihood. The defendant, however, claimed that he only knew Morris and the mining expert, and that he did not know the two alleged policemen, and did not know that they were coming to the room, or know anything with regard to what was contemplated by them. The two brothers also testified that, out of the whole amount of money taken as aforesaid, upwards of $1,200 belonged to the younger brother, but that the older one was the custodian of all of it, and that it was all kept together as one entire sum.

We have omitted very many details from the evidence from which inferences might be deduced, some of which could be said as being favorable to, while others might be taken as making strongly against, the defendant. Other inferences tended strongly to establish the alleged conspiracy.

It is asserted by appellant that the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction for the crime of grand larceny, and that it is likewise insufficient to establish the conspiracy which the state claimed existed between the defendant and the other four individuals to whom we have referred. The entire evidence is preserved in the bill of exceptions, and covers over 870 pages of typewritten legal cap. We cannot set it forth even in condensed form, and shall not attempt to do so any further than we have already done. From a careful perusal of the record, we are convinced that there was ample evidence to sustain every element of the crime charged. The jury were authorized to infer from the facts and circumstances proved that the defendant obtained the $2,050, which he claimed to have won either by fraud, trick, device, or artifice, with the intention, at the time he obtained the money, to appropriate it to his own use, and to deprive the owners permanently of the money. But, if it were true that he did not intend to keep all of it, and to divide with those who were connected with him in the alleged game, it would still be larceny of the whole amount. The jury were further justified in finding that the right to the money never passed to the defendant, for the reason that the consent of the owners that it should pass was lacking; but rather that the defendant obtained and took it against their consent. Under such circumstances it is elementary that money, or any other thing of value thus obtained, constitutes larceny at common law. While the authorities are very numerous, we shall cite but a few in which the principle involved is illustrated, namely: People v. Shaw, 57 Mich. 403, 58 Am. Rep. 372, 24 N. W. 121; People v. Shaughnessy, 110 Cal. 598, 43 Pac. 2; People v. Berlin, 9 Utah, 383, 35 Pac. 498; People v. Miller, 169 N. Y. 339, 88 Am. St. Rep. 546, 62 N. E. 418. In the latter case the authorities are in part collated. Our statute (§ 4355, Comp. Laws 1907) is, in effect, no more than a definition of larceny at common law. In view of the authorities, the jury were also justified in finding that there was a conspiracy entered into among the five individuals who were concerned in the taking of the money belonging to the brothers. 4 Elliott, Ev. §§ 2937, 2938, and 3 Enc. Ev. 427-432. While we cannot devote the space to refer specifically to the multiplicity of facts bearing upon the alleged conspiracy, we have no hesitancy in stating that, in view of the whole evidence, no other conclusion than that of the guilt of the defendant could well have been arrived at by any impartial jury; nor could they, for the same reasons, have arrived at any other conclusion than that a conspiracy existed. To say that the taking of the money, under the circumstances of this case, does not constitute larceny, would be to say that the commandment "thou shalt not steal" is a delusion, and our statute upon the subject a farce. As was said by Mr. Justice Campbell in a similar case, namely, People v. Shaw, 57 Mich. 406, 58 Am. Rep. 372, 24 N. W. 122: "We do not think it profitable to draw overnice metaphysical distinctions to save thieves from punishment. If rogues conspire to get away a man's money by such tricks as those which were played here, it is not going beyond the settled rules of law to hold that the fraud will supply the place of trespass in the taking, and so make the conversion felonious." So, in this case, we would, indeed, lose sight of substance, and follow a mere shadow, if we held that the money was won by the defendant at a game of cards in which all the players risked their money and the best hand won. It is clear to us that the Scotchman never had a chance to win, that it was not intended that he should win; and that he was the only one of all the players that actually risked anything or could lose a farthing. To hold, therefore, that such a game constitutes merely gambling, and that the offenders are punishable only for that offense, would be to hold that the intent with which an act is done is not to be looked to to determine its criminality, but that the name by which it is known alone controls. We are not prepared to hold any such doctrine. The objection that the acts proved did not constitute the crime of grand larceny, and that no conspiracy was proved to have existed between the gamblers, cannot be sustained.

In addition to the foregoing, there are 169 other errors assigned. While we always endeavor to pass upon all the errors that are assigned and argued, and to comply with the constitutional requirement of giving the reasons for our conclusions, we nevertheless must limit the discussion to assignments that contain merit. After a careful perusal of the record, we are fully convinced that, while a very few of the assignments may constitute what is termed as technical errors, not a single one of all those that are assigned, in view of the whole record, constitutes prejudicial error. The defendant was in no way prejudiced in any substantial right by any of the court's rulings upon the trial, nor by any instruction given or refused, nor by the conduct of the attorney general, of which complaint is made. As an illustration of one of the numerous rulings of the court in admitting evidence, the admission of which it is now strenuously insisted constituted error, both with regard to the evidence admitted and as to the misconduct of the prosecuting attorney in propounding a question, the following will serve as a sample: At the trial the defendant put in issue his general reputation for honesty, integrity, and fairness as a gambler. To prove such reputation, he called another gambler, who testified of his acquaintance and long association with the defendant, and that the defendant's reputation as an honest and fair gambler among his associates and the gambling fraternity generally was good. On cross-examination the witness was questioned at some length with regard to his association with the defendant, and was, among other things, in substance, asked the following question, which was permitted to be answered over defendant's objections, namely: Whether it was not true that the only association the witness had with the defendant for the three months preceding the acts in question was that they smoked opium together in Plum alley, a disreputable resort in Salt Lake City. To this the witness answered "No." The question was again asked in another form, and the objection thereto was sustained. It will be observed that the only fact inquired about by the prosecuting attorney was thus said not to exist; that is, instead of establishing the fact, the testimony was to the effect that such fact did not exist. Suppose the witness had been asked whether it were not true that the defendant was a thief, and the answer had been "No," would it have been prejudicial error to have admitted the answer? No one would so seriously contend, although it were conceded that the question was wholly improper; but we cannot pause to give further illustrations, and will not devote either time or space to a further discussion of the errors assigned. We will add, however, that the instructions were fair, and covered every phase of the case, and the defendant's rights were guarded at all points. In the trial of the case, if any errors were committed in the admission or exclusion of evidence, the state had far more grounds for complaint than the defendant. The rulings upon material points of the evidence were all in favor of the defendant where there was any question at all with regard to the admissibility of the proffered evidence. If the objection was to the form of the question, the defendant's objection usually prevailed, as well as when it related to the substance, unless the objection was wholly without merit. The state, in many instances, was not permitted to ask leading questions when nothing was sought by them except to establish a negative.

The whole record satisfies us that the defendant has had a full and fair trial, that 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) he has not been prejudiced in any substantial right, and that the judgment of conviction ought to be, and accordingly is, affirmed.

Straup, Ch. J., and McCarty, J., concur.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

J. H. MOORE, Appt.,

v.

D. C. IRVIN.

(— Ark. —, 116 S. W. 662.)

Broker — commission — inability of customer.

The financial inability of the purchaser to perform his contract to purchase real estate does not deprive the broker of his commission where a binding contract for sale is effected through his agency, in the absence of fraud or warranty, on his part, of the customer's financial ability.

(February 8, 1909.)

Case Note. — Broker's right to commission where purchaser procured by him is financially unable to perform his contract.

This note is limited to cases wherein the question is presented as to the validity of the defense that a purchaser produced by a broker to sell real estate has, because of financial inability, failed to complete the contract of purchase, where such default is offered as a defense to an action by the broker for his stipulated commissions for procuring the sale. Among other cases which this limitation excludes are those wherein the broker has sued for his commission because the vendor failed to carry out his agreement to sell, and the defense was made that the purchaser produced by the broker was financially unable to complete his purchase. Although not always recognized, there is a valid distinction between the two classes of cases.

The distinction between this defense in an action by a broker for his commissions where the contract of sale fails for some fault of the vendor, and an action by him for his commissions where the contract of sale fails because of the financial irresponsibility of the purchaser, is clearly pointed out in Alt v. Doscher, 102 App. Div. 344, 92 N. Y. Supp. 439, affirmed on opinion of the lower court in 186 N. Y. 566, 79 N. E. 1,100, wherein, in considering this distinction and referring to the rule requiring a broker, suing for his commissions, to show that he produced a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase, where the sale fails for some fault on the part of the vendor, the court said: "The reason for requiring proof of the responsibility of the intending purchaser, in such a case, as a condition of re-

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Howard County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover back a commission paid defendant for selling certain real property, which was alleged to have been unearned. Reversed.

Statement by Wood, J.:

Appellee and appellant entered into a contract whereby the latter, who was a real estate broker, should have the exclusive sale, for the former, of a certain tract of land, on certain terms. Appellee was to give appellant, "in consideration of his services in making a sale or transfer," sending appellee "a buyer, or being instrumental in any manner whatever in selling or transferring the property," a certain per cent commission, to be paid "out of the first money collected." No change in the price or terms of sale made by appellee should work a forfeiture of appellant's commission. Appellee entered into a contract with one Humphries for the sale of the land. Humphries paid to appellee $200 on the purchase money, and executed his note for a balance, payable at a future date. Time was of the essence of the contract of sale, and, in the event of a failure to pay or perform other conditions named, "strictly and literally" all the rights of the purchaser ceased. In case of default to comply with the condition as to payment, the relation of landlord and tenant was to exist from the first of January preceding to the date of the default. Upon compliance with the conditions by Humphries, is plain, and rests not upon the proposition that the broker undertakes to guarantee the responsibility of the purchaser, but because his contract is to effect a bargain, and, if he produces a responsible purchaser, ready to contract, his principal cannot defeat his right to commissions by capriciously refusing to make the contract. Such proof is required, not because he contracts to guarantee responsibility, but because he must prove, before he can recover, that the failure to make a contract was the fault of his principal and not his own."

Reverting to the question under consideration, it may fairly be said that the weight of authority supports the doctrine of MOORE v. IRVIN that, in the absence of fraud on the part of the broker, he is entitled to his commissions for the sale of real estate where, through his instrumentality, a valid, enforceable contract of sale has been entered into between his principal and a person produced by him, without reference to the solvency or financial ability of the purchaser to complete his contract of purchase. There are, however, well-considered cases which refuse to adhere to this doctrine, but require a contract of sale to be merged into an actual sale to entitle a broker to his commissions. These cases hold that, if a purchaser fails to perform his contract to purchase because of financial inability to do so, the broker is not entitled to his full commission unless it appears that the owner did not expressly or impliedly rely on the judgment of the broker as to the financial ability of the purchaser to perform his contract. These two doctrines are based on different views as to the nature of the relation existing between principal and broker and the duty of the broker to his principal. In the class of cases which hold that a broker employed to secure a customer for real estate earns his commission upon bringing the buyer and seller together, with a resultant, valid, and enforceable contract of sale, a broker is regarded merely as an agent to make bargains. Alt v. Doscher, infra.

Thus, in Travis v. Graham, 23 App. Div. 214, 48 N. Y. Supp. 736, in holding that an owner of real estate who employed a real estate broker to negotiate a sale of his land could not escape paying the agreed commission, on the ground that the customer produced by the broker was not able to pay for the premises, where he had accepted the purchaser as satisfactory, and conveyed the premises to him. The court said that a broker undertakes to bring the minds of the seller and buyer together in an agreement to sell and purchase wherein the price and terms should be satisfactory to both. There can be no more conclusive evidence that he has done this than the execution and delivery of a deed of the land by the seller to the purchaser.

Following this doctrine, it has been held that a broker, under a general contract of employment for the sale of real estate, is entitled to his commission where he obtains a purchaser satisfactory to his principal, and with whom the principal makes an enforceable contract of purchase and sale without being induced so to do by any representations of the broker as to the ability of the proposed purchaser to perform the contract, and without any bad faith on the part of the broker, although, without any fault of the principal, the vendee fails to perform this contract solely because of the lack of financial responsibility at the time of making the contract. Alt v. Doscher, 102 App. Div. 344, 92 N. Y. Supp. 439, affirmed on opinion of lower court in 186 N. Y. 566, 79 N. E. 1100.

To the same effect is Brady v. Foster, 72 App. Div. 416, 75 N. Y. Supp. 994.

And where, after negotiations for the sale of land had been entered into between the broker employed to sell it and the prospective purchaser; the latter was turned over to the owner for the completion of the trade, and the owner entered into an agreement with him for the sale of the land, with as full knowledge of his financial condition as had the broker, it is no defense to the broker's claim for commission on the sale, that the purchaser produced by him was not financially able to buy. Leuschner v. Patrick (Tex. Civ. App.) 103 S. W. 664.

So a commission will accrue under a writphries, appellee was to make him a warranty deed to the land. Appellee testified that, when the $200 was paid him by Humphries, appellant demanded his commission. Appellee told him that, "if he thought the other (money) was safe and all right, he could have his commission." He said it would be perfectly all right; that he had arranged to borrow the money for Mr. Humphries; that all Humphries would have to do was to sign a mortgage. Appellee says he let appellant have the $150, which he "would not have done without this representation." Appellee further testified that he "accepted this Humphries contract and signed this agreement upon defendant's [appellant's] judgment," that "his representations caused plaintiff [appellee] to believe that it was all right."

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The testimony of appellant tended to show that he had made a contract to sell appellee's place to one Barefield, for cash; that the trade was not closed on account of the sale by appellee to Humphries; that appellee and Humphries had reached an agreement as to the terms of payment, and he, appellant, wrote the contract for them; that, when Humphries paid appellee the $200 and appellant received $150 commission, his contract with appellee terminated. Appellant denied that the commission was paid him upon the understanding that the balance of the purchase money would be paid by Humphries, also denied that he represented to appellee "that Humphries was all right," said that he knew nothing of Humphries' financial standing, and that he did ten contract to pay a commission to a broker on his finding a purchaser for a tract of land, or upon a sale by the owner during the life of the contract, where a contract of sale is made by the owner by which it is placed beyond his power to make any other transfer of the property for a period of three years, during which time the buyers may sell, and where a portion of the purchase price is paid down and the purchaser enters into possession, although he thereafter fails to meet deferred payments and surrenders possession to the owner. Shainwald v. Cady, 92 Cal. 83, 28 Pac. 101.

Where a sale of land to a purchaser produced by a broker is actually completed, the owner will be held to have considered, and favorably determined, the purchaser's financial responsibility, and the broker is entitled to his commission, even though it may afterward transpire that the purchaser is financially unable to meet deferred payments as they fall due. Wray v. Carpenter, 16 Colo. 271, 25 Am. St. Rep. 265, 27 Pac. 248.

But, where land was listed with a broker for sale, and he introduced a purchaser who entered into a contract for the purchase of the land, and made a deposit thereon, and a deed was executed and placed in escrow, to be delivered on payment of the balance, which, however, the purchaser failed to pay, and forfeited the deposit, and left the state, leaving no property therein subject to execution, the broker was held not entitled to a commission. Hildenbrand v. Lillis, 10 Colo. App. 522, 51 Pac. 1008.

A mining broker, employed to secure purchasers for mining claims, for which he is to receive a lump sum as a commission, is entitled to the commission where he procures and introduces to his principal a purchaser with whom a sale is, in fact, consummated, even though such purchaser should thereafter fail to meet deferred payments. Hallack v. Hinckley, 19 Colo. 38, 34 Pac. 479.

A person, not a broker, employed to find a customer for real estate, is entitled to the stipulated compensation upon finding a customer who enters into a contract with 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the owner; and it is not error to exclude evidence that the purchaser thereafter defaulted on some of his payments where it is offered as a defense to the claim for the commission. Coles v. Meade, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 334.

In Parker v. Eastabrook, 68 N. H. 349, 44 Atl. 484, it was said that, when a vendor accepted a purchaser produced by a broker, and entered into a contract with him for the sale of the real estate the broker was employed to sell, the solvency of the purchaser was to be presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary.

In Stewart v. Fowler, 37 Kan. 677, 15 Pac. 918, it was held that, if a broker agreed and undertook to sell land for a commission on the price realized, the commission was not earned by merely procuring a person to enter into a contract with the owner to purchase, unless such person was ready, willing, and able to purchase according to the terms of the contract entered into by him with the vendor, by which he was to make an immediate cash payment, and also a further payment in cash, and execute a mortgage for the balance, when he was to be given possession of the land; and that, if the purchaser was not financially able to carry out this contract, and did not carry it out, although making a cash payment, the commission was not earned, even though the owner never made any effort to enforce the contract, but exercised an option, contained therein, to forfeit it and retain what he had received thereunder. A distinction was made between a contract to sell and a sale, and a contract of the character of the foregoing was said to be a mere contract to sell, and the production by a broker of a person who entered into such a contract was said not to be a sufficient compliance with his contract of employment to entitle him to his commission where the person afterward failed to perform.

But this doctrine was disapproved when the case was again before the court in 53 Kan. 537, 36 Pac. 1002, wherein the court treated the contract of employment as an ordinary contract to pay a commission for the sale of land when the brokers had pro-not guarantee appellee that Humphries would pay for the place. There was nothing to show that the farm was not worth the money that Humphries agreed to pay for it. This suit was begun by appellee, in justice court, against appellant, to recover the $150. Appellee, among other things, alleged that appellant sold the land to Humphries, and that appellee allowed appellant to take the sum of $150 as his commission, relying upon appellant's representation that Humphries was able to and would consummate the purchase; that Humphries had failed to do so, and that he was insolvent, and therefore appellant had not earned the commission. Appellant denied orally all the material allegations of the complaint. The testimony, at the trial, developed substantially the above facts.

The court, at the request of appellee, in effect, instructed the jury, that appellant, under the contract with appellee, would not be entitled to any compensation for his services in procuring a purchaser, unless there was a consummation of the contract of purchase made by such purchaser with the appellee, i. e., unless the purchase money was paid by the purchaser, and the title transferred to him. The court further instructed the jury that, if appellant made the representation to appellee that Humphries would perform his contract of purchase, and that appellee acted upon such representation in paying over the money in suit to appellant,—in such case, if Hum-cured an acceptable purchaser, who was then willing and able to buy the property upon the terms fixed by the owner. Under such a contract, a broker was held to be entitled to his commission when he produced a purchaser who entered into the contract as set forth, and who, at that time, was ready, willing, and able to carry it out, although after its execution the purchaser made default, and the contract was forfeited by the vendor.

The doctrine that, where a broker introduces a purchaser who enters into an enforceable contract with the vendor, his commission is earned in the absence of fraud on his part in inducing the acceptance of the purchaser, although the purchaser afterward turns out to be financially unable to complete his contract of purchase, was also stated in Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 195, and Jenkins v. Hollingsworth, 83 Ill. App. 139. The court, however, in these cases, was not considering the question as here presented.

It is to be noted, however, that the foregoing cases sustaining this doctrine were all cases wherein it appeared that the contract of sale was executed directly between the principal and the vendee. This doctrine does not apply where the broker, as a part of his employment, assumes to execute for his principal an executory contract of sale. Under such circumstances, he is not entitled to his commission unless the other contracting party is able to perform the contract on his part. Inge v. McCreery, 60 App. Div. 557, 69 N. Y. Supp. 1052.

As already stated, there are well-considered cases wherein the doctrine is enunciated that a broker is not entitled to his commissions where a contract to sell procured through him, although made by his principal, fails because of the financial inability of the purchaser produced by him to perform his contract. Thus, in Butler v. Baker, 17 R. I. 582, 33 Am. St. Rep. 897, 23 Atl. 1019, the doctrine was enunciated that it was not enough to entitle a broker to his commission that he has produced a person as a purchaser of an estate who was ready and willing to purchase upon the seller's terms, and the contract has been entered into to that effect between the seller and the person produced, but it must also appear that the person produced is of sufficient pecuniary ability to make the purchase, and the mere signing of a receipt by the vendor's agent, setting forth the terms of the sale, is not a sufficient acceptance of the purchaser by the vendor to entitle the broker to his commissions without reference to the purchaser's ability to perform the contract of purchase. In reaching this conclusion, the court said that the production of a person as a purchaser was an implied representation by the broker to the vendor that the purchaser was able financially, as well as ready and willing, to purchase, and added that the case did not show that the vendor had any previous knowledge of the purchaser, or exercised any independent judgment of his own concerning the purchaser's ability to purchase, but rather that, in signing the receipt and thereby accepting the person produced as purchaser, he relied, as he had a right to rely, upon the implied representation arising out of the plaintiff's duty under the contract.

One of the leading cases supporting this view is Riggs v. Turnbull, 105 Md. 135, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 824, 66 Atl. 13, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 783, which holds that, to entitle a broker to his commission, he must produce a party capable of becoming, and who ultimately becomes, the purchaser; and it is not sufficient that a contract of sale is executed between the principal and such party, and a small portion of the purchase price paid thereon, where the contract is afterward forfeited by the purchaser because of his financial inability to carry it out. Among the cases cited as authority for this conclusion, which the court regarded as against the weight of authority, was Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512, which held that a broker was not entitled to his commission where the vendee was financially unable to perform a contract of purchase which provided that the vendee could relieve himself of the obligation to complete the purchase by paying a stipulated amount.

The English cases seem also to support phries failed to perform his contract, appellee should recover.

The following instructions asked by appellant were modified by inserting the words in italics.

"(2) The court instructs the jury that, if they believe, from the evidence, that the plaintiff, Irvin, employed the defendant, Moore, to sell his farm for him, at a designated price, and the defendant procured a purchaser who was willing and ready, acceptable to Irvin, replying upon his own judgment, to purchase upon the terms of plaintiff, and who did enter into a written contract with plaintiff, expressing the terms of the sale, defendant, Moore, was then entitled to his commission, although the purchaser may afterwards refuse to perform his part of the contract, without any fault on the part of the plaintiff; and your verdict will be for defendant.

"(3) The court instructs the jury that, if they believe, from the evidence, that the plaintiff, Irvin, employed the defendant, Moore, to sell his farm for him, under written contract whereby defendant's commissions were to be paid out of the first money paid by the purchaser, and the defendant did procure a purchaser who made a cash payment, and then entered into a written agreement with the plaintiff for the purchase of his farm, and that plaintiff paid the defendant his commission and took up the option given the defendant for the sale of said land, your verdict will be for the defendant, provided Irvin relied upon his own this doctrine, although no English case has been found wherein it has been squarely applied. In Passingham v. King, 14 Times L. R. 392, although a broker was held entitled to his commission to be paid him if he found a purchaser for a public house, even though the purchaser, after having entered into the contract of purchase with the principal, made default in his payments and did not complete the contract of purchase, yet, in so holding, it was said that the plaintiff had not done everything to entitle him to a commission, but that the owner, by dealing directly with the purchaser, with equal knowledge as to his financial condition as had the broker, and by extending the time to him in which to complete his purchase, in consideration of an additional deposit, had waived the right to call upon the broker to produce a purchaser who would complete his purchase as a condition precedent to his commission becoming payable.

And in Beale v. Bond, 84 L. T. N. S. 313, where the owner agreed to pay an agent all over a stipulated amount for which he might be able to sell certain premises, the commission was held not earned where the purchaser with whom the agent contracted in behalf of his principal made default in completing the purchase, after having made a deposit thereon. This decision was, however, based on the ground that the principal had never agreed to personally pay the agent a commission, but it was to be paid by the purchaser paying more than a stipulated amount for the property.

The tendency of the English cases to require full performance by the purchaser as a condition precedent to the accrual of a commission to the broker, is also illustrated in Chapman v. Winson; Lott v. Outhwaite; and Beningfield v. Kynaston, —infra. (See right to compensation as affected by the terms of employment.)

A broker to sell street railway bonds does not earn his commission where the purchaser produced by him made the contract to purchase for the purpose of speculation, and did not intend to take the bonds and pay for them unless he could negotiate a sale, to other parties, for a price greater than he contracted to pay, although the refusal to carry out the contract of purchase was based on the invalidity of the bonds rather than on the inability to meet the payments. Berg v. San Antonio Street R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 49 S. W. 921.

But, where the terms of employment provide for a sale of land partly on time and partly for cash, it is sufficient, to entitle the broker to his commission, if he produces a purchaser able to make the required cash payment; and it is not necessary that the purchaser should be of such financial responsibility that his notes for the balance would be good and collectable, irrespective of the vendor's lien on the land. Clark v. Wilson, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 450, 91 S. W. 627.

Right to compensation as affected by terms of employment.

In the foregoing cases, the question was raised where the contract of employment was the ordinary contract, by which a broker was to be paid a stipulated commission for effecting a sale of real estate listed with him for sale. It is, of course, possible for a broker, by special contract, to make his compensation contingent upon the actual payment of the purchase price. Thus, where, by special contract a broker's commission depends upon fulfillment by the purchaser of his contract to purchase, he cannot recover his commission where the purchaser does not perform because of financial inability, although, after his default, the contract was canceled by mutual agreement of the parties. Seymour v. St. Luke's Hospital, 28 App. Div. 119, 50 N. Y. Supp. 989.

And where, by the terms of a contract of employment, a broker's commission for the sale of land is to be partly paid when a purchaser produced by him pays a certain portion of the purchase price, and the balance when one half is paid, a contract of sale by which the owner accepts a note for a smaller amount in lieu of a cash payment, and two notes for the balance, is not such a sale as will entitle a broker to his commission where the purchaser failed to pay judgment as to the ability of the purchaser to comply with his contract of purchase."

The appellant saved his exceptions to the modifications, and the giving of the instructions as modified. A verdict was returned in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $150, and judgment was entered accordingly. A motion for new trial assigning, as error, the rulings to which exceptions were saved, and the further assignment, that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, was made and overruled. This appeal was duly prosecuted.

Messrs. Sain & Sain and T. D. Crawford, for appellant:

If the principal and the customer found by the broker enter into a valid contract, and the broker acts in good faith, the broker is not deprived of his right to a commission any of the notes, and was irresponsible, although the owner received a cash consideration for releasing the purchaser from the contract after, however, he had made diligent effort to enforce it. Boysen v. Frink, 80 Ark. 254, 96 S. W. 1056.

So, where the contract of employment makes the payment of the purchase price the ultimate object to be obtained, and compensation is made dependent and contingent thereon, the insolvency of the purchaser without completing his purchase is a defense to an action by the broker for any part of the agreed compensation, although a valid contract for the sale of the land which the broker was employed to sell was executed, and a portion of the purchase price was paid. Cobb v. Kenner (Tenn. Ch. App.) 42 S. W. 277.

Van Norman v. Fitchette, 100 Minn. 145, 110 N. W. 851, also holds that, where a contract of employment expressly provides that the commission should not be paid until deferred payments were made, the vendor does not become liable to pay same by exercising an option, contained in the contract, to forfeit it, and retain the payments made thereon, where the vendee is in default in making further payments.

So, where the contract employing a broker to sell real estate provides that he is to be paid his commissions as payments are made on the purchase price of the lands sold by him, he is not entitled to his entire commission where the purchaser paid a portion of the purchase price and executed a trust deed to secure the balance, which he failed to pay, and from which he was afterward released by the owner, at a time, however, when he was insolvent, and where the contract of sale provided that, upon default in payment, he could forfeit the amount, and by surrendering the premises, be entitled to the return of the obligation for the payment of the balance. Murray v. Rickard, 103 Va. 132, 48 S. E. 871.

And in Chapman v. Winsor, 91 L. T. N. S. 17, it was held that an agreement to pay an agent a commission if a party introduced by the agent became the purchaser of certain real estate, the commission to be paid 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by the fact that the customer fails to carry out the contract by reason of financial inability.

19 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 270; Francis v. Baker, 45 Minn. 83, 47 N. W. 452; Conkling v. Krakauer, 70 Tex. 739, 11 S. W. 117; Friestedt v. Dietrich, 84 Ill. App. 604; Jenkins v. Hollingsworth, 83 Ill. App. 139; Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550; Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358; Burns v. Oliphant, 78 Iowa, 459, 43 N. W. 289; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145; Bach v. Emerich, 3 Jones & S. 548; Seabury v. Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. 205 Pa. 234, 54 Atl. 898; Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192; Wray v. Carpenter, 16 Colo. 271, 25 Am. St. Rep. 265, 27 Pac. 248; Hallack v. Hinckley, 19 Colo. 38, 34 Pac. 479; Brady

"when and if the purchase is completed by a private treaty," was not sufficiently performed by the agent, to entitle him to the commission, until the purchase money was actually paid, and the court said it was not sufficient that a contract of sale was executed between the parties, and a deposit made, where the purchaser made default in further payments because of insolvency.

To the same effect also is Lott v. Outhwaite, 10 Times L. R. 76, where commission was to be paid "on completion of the purchase." Also Beningfield v. Kynaston, 3 Times L. R. 279, where the agreement was to pay a commission out of the purchase money.

But in Bush v. Abraham, 25 Or. 336, 35 Pac. 1066, a broker who was to be paid a commission for procuring a purchaser for a tract of land was held entitled to recover on a note given him by the vendor for a portion of his commissions, which contained a condition that it was to be null and void unless a certain note, covering a portion of the purchase price of the land which the broker had sold, was actually paid, although the purchaser was unable to pay the note when due, and settled a foreclosure proceeding thereon by reconveying the land upon a surrender of the note. This conclusion was reached on the theory that the surrender of the note, under these circumstances, was a payment within the meaning of the condition in the note.

In Holbrook v. Investment Co. 30 Or. 259, 47 Pac. 920, the doctrine of the Bush Case was said to have no application where the contract employing the brokers to sell real estate impliedly stipulated for a forfeiture of sales made by the brokers, and provided that their commissions were not to be paid except as payments were collected from purchasers. Under such circumstances, the court said that actual payment, unless waived by the vendor, was necessary before the commission was earned.

In Webber v. Holmes, 174 Mass. 410, 54 N. E. 872, a note given brokers as a payment of their commissions for selling real estate was held to be enforceable, although it contained a clause that it would be void if

v. Foster, 72 App. Div. 418, 75 N. Y. Supp. 994; Hipple v. Laird, 189 Pa. 472, 42 Atl. 46; Kalley v. Baker, 132 N. Y. 1, 28 Am. St. Rep. 542, 29 N. E. 1091; Gilder v. Davis, 137 N. Y. 506, 20 L.R.A. 398, 33 N. E. 599; Pearson v. Mason, 120 Mass. 53; Willson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304, 49 Am. St. Rep. 162, 42 N. E. 134; Micks v. Stevenson, 22 Ind. App. 475, 51 N. E. 492; Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 198; Ward v. Cobb, 148 Mass. 518, 12 Am. St. Rep. 587, 20 N. E. 174; Folinsbee v. Sawyer, 15 Misc. 293, 36 N. Y. Supp. 405; Alt v. Doscher, 102 App. Div. 344, 92 N. Y. Supp. 439; Story, Agency, 9th ed. § 28; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 381, 38 Am. Rep. 441; Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238; Travis v. Graham, 23 App. Div. 214, 48 N. Y. Supp. 736; Leete v. Norton, 43 Conn. 219; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497, 47 N. W. 816; Barnard v. Monnot, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 108; Duclos v. Cunningham, 102 N. Y. 678, 6 N. E. 790; Simonson v. Kissick, 4 Daly, 145; Davis v. Morgan, 96 Ga. 520, 23 S. E. 417; Hart v. Hoffman, 44 How. Pr. 168; Goss v. Broom, 31 Minn. 484, 18 N. W. 290; Grosse v. Cooley, 43 Minn. 188, 45 N. W. 15.

Messrs. W. P. Feazel and W. C. Rodgers, for appellee:

A broker does not earn his commission when he procures a purchaser whom his principal accepts only upon the assurance of the broker that he could make the payment, where it turns out that the customer could not.

Butler v. Baker, 17 R. I. 582, 33 Am. St. Rep. 897, 23 Atl. 1019; Boyson v. Frink, 80 Ark. 258, 96 S. W. 1056; Cook v. Forst, 116 Ala. 395, 22 So. 540; Runyon v. Wilkinson, G. & Co. 57 N. J. L. 420, 31 Atl. 390; 19 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 246, 267.

Wood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The parties as indicated by the requests for instructions, treated appellant as the procuring cause of the contract, between appellee and Humphries, as to the sale of the land; but appellee contends appellant was not entitled to his commission under the contract with appellee until the executory contract of sale and purchase had been completed by the payment of the purchase money and the transfer of the title. He also contends that he paid the commission to appellant, relying upon certain representations made by him which were not true, and were not carried out by appellant, and the sale fell through before a specified date, where default was made prior to that time, and the claim of the vendor was thereafter foreclosed because of such default. The court said that the vendors had either collected the purchase price by the foreclosure of a mortgage for the same, or they had collected part of it and held a claim for the balance as a personal debt of the mortgagor.

Crane v. Eddy, 191 Ill. 645, 85 Am. St. Rep. 284, 61 N. E. 431, also holds that a broker may recover on notes given him in payment of his commission for effecting a sale of real estate, although they contained a provision that they were to be paid out of the purchase price pro rata as paid to the vendor, and the only manner of payment was the foreclosure of a deed of trust securing the purchase price notes, and the bidding in of the property, on such foreclosure, by the vendor.

Necessity of good faith on part of broker.

Many of the cases already considered recognize the doctrine that a broker must deal fairly with his principal in presenting to him a purchaser, and, if he presents a person whom he knows or has reason to believe cannot perform his contract of purchase, he is not entitled to his commissions. This rule was applied in Burnham v. Upton, 174 Mass. 408, 54 N. E. 873, where a broker was denied his commission for a sale and exchange of property to a person produced by him whom he knew was unable to perform his contract.

The relation existing between a broker and his principal was said, in Butler v. Baker, 17 R. I. 582, 33 Am. St. Rep. 897, 23 Atl. 1019, to be of a confidential nature, requiring the utmost good faith on the part of the former to the latter, and entitling the latter to the benefit of the former's skill, knowledge, and advice. The court said that the duty of a broker to his employer requires him to give to his principal, before his principal enters into a contract with the person produced by him as a purchaser, such knowledge as he may possess in relation to the proposed purchaser's financial responsibility; and, if he has no knowledge concerning it, it is his duty to, at least, notify his principal in order to give him an opportunity to investigate the matter for himself. If he fails to do either, he is not entitled to compensation if the purchaser proves to be irresponsible financially, notwithstanding the fact that the principal entered into a valid contract with the purchaser for the sale of the property.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The good faith which the court requires a broker to exercise towards his principal is well illustrated in the case of Little v. Herzinger, 34 Utah, 337, 97 Pac. 639, where in the court denied the right of brokers to their commission for the sale of real estate where the purchaser did not actually purchase in accordance with the terms of a written option, although he made a so-called tender to the brokers for the balance due under the option, and demanded a deed. But this "tender," however, the court found to have been colorable merely.

therefore (appellee) was entitled to recover the commission. Appellant on the other hand, contended that he was entitled to his commission as soon as he had procured a purchaser who entered into the contract for the purchase of the land upon the terms expressed therein, as prescribed by appellee, and who paid a part of the purchase money.

In Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550, it is held that: "A written contract for the purchase of an estate, binding both vendor and purchaser, is a sale, within the meaning of an agreement to pay a commission to a broker upon sale of the estate." In note to Lunney v. Healey, 44 L.R.A. 593, it is said: "The business of a real estate broker or agent generally is only to find a purchaser; and the settled rule, as stated by the courts is that, in the absence of an express contract between the broker and his principal, the implication generally is that the broker becomes entitled to the usual commissions whenever he brings to his principal, a party who is able and willing to take the property, and enter into a valid contract upon the terms then named by the principal, although the particulars may be arranged, and the matter negotiated and completed between the principal and the purchaser directly." In Pinkerton v. Hudson, 87 Ark. 506, 113 S. W. 35, we quoted the above and the syllabus, that, "where a real estate broker contracts to produce a purchaser who shall actually buy, he has performed his contract by the production of one financially able, and with whom the owner actually makes an enforceable contract of sale. The failure to carry out that contract, even if the default be that of the purchaser, does not deprive the broker of his right to commissions." Appellee relies upon this case to sustain his contention that the broker must present a purchaser financially able to carry out his contract of purchase. But the question here did not arise in that case, nor in any case (and they are numerous) where the financial ability of the purchaser is not questioned. In the absence of an express contract by which the broker warrants the financial ability of the purchaser procured by him, or in the absence of fraud on his part, he does not lose his commission where a binding contract of sale is effected through his agency, because the purchaser procured by him is financially unable, or, for any other reason, fails to carry out his contract of purchase. The broker, having presented a proposed purchaser who is capable of entering into a contract of purchase, and willing to do so, has earned his commission when the vendor accepts him, and enters into a valid contract with him, for the sale of his land, even though the sale is never, in fact, consummated, by reason of the failure of the proposed purchaser to perform his part of the contract. Where the broker does not expressly warrant the financial ability of the purchaser procured by him, nor agree to see that the purchase money is paid, and is guilty of no fraud upon his principal, the latter takes the responsibility of accepting the proposed purchaser. If he does, and enters upon an executory contract for the sale of the land upon his own terms, the broker is entitled to the commissions agreed upon, whether the contract is ever fully executed or not. In the absence of contract, it is not the business of the broker to see that the purchase money is paid, or to enforce the contract of sale. That is the business of his principal, the vendor. These principles are sound, and, we think, are supported by the weight of authority. 19 Cyc. Law & Proc. title "Factors and Brokers," p. 270, and cases cited in note. See also Pinkerton v. Hudson, supra; Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 358; Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. 145; Alt v. Doscher, 102 App. Div. 344, 92 N. Y. Supp. 439.

There is nothing in Boysen v. Frink, 80 Ark. 254, 96 S. W. 1056, in conflict with the doctrine here announced. There the commission was "conditioned on payment of the price." It follows that, under the contract between appellee and appellant, the rulings of the court in modifying appellant's requests for instructions were erroneous. The requests as asked were correct. The court should not have left it to the jury to determine whether appellee relied on his own judgment, as to the financial ability of Humphries, in ascertaining whether or not Humphries was an acceptable purchaser. The court should have declared this to be his duty under the evidence in this case as matter of law. The allegations and the proof were not sufficient to sustain a recovery for deceit. See Louisiana Molasses Co. v. Ft. Smith Wholesale Grocery Co. 73 Ark. 542, 84 S. W. 1047.

No exceptions were saved to the rulings of the court in giving or refusing other requests for instructions. For the error indicated the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for new trial.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF WISCONSIN EX REL. WILLIAM McMANUS, Resp't.,

v.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF POLICEMEN'S PENSION FUND

and

MARY T. SULLIVAN et al., Appts.

(— Wis. —, 119 N. W. 806.)

Police — pension — disease.

1. Pneumonia contracted by a policeman in the line of his duty is an injury within the meaning of a statute providing for a police pension fund, notwithstanding the legislature, in amending a former statute, omitted the words, "or any disease contracted by reason of his occupation."

Certiorari — police commissioners — determination of fact.

2. The determination of trustees of a police pension fund that an injury was contracted by a policeman in the line of his duty is one of fact, which cannot be reviewed by the courts on certiorari.

(Marshall, J., dissents.)

(February 16, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendants Mary T. Sullivan et al., from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County in relator's favor upon a writ of certiorari brought to review the action of the Board of Trustees of the Policemen's Pension Fund in awarding a certain pension. Reversed.

Statement by Dodge, J.:

Certiorari brought by relator, who had long been a contributor to the policemen's pension fund of Milwaukee, and, at the time of the relation, was retired and pensioner thereon, to review the action of the board of trustees in awarding a pension to the appellant Mary T. Sullivan and her children, as the widow and children of the deceased, William L. Sullivan, at the time of his death a member of the police force. The board made due return, from which it appears that the pension was claimed on the ground that Policeman Sullivan contracted pneumonia by reason of exposure to which he was subjected in the course of a trip to New York to make an arrest. The return presents the record, which merely mentions the names of certain witnesses on behalf of the applicant, and specifies the subjects on which they testified, but fails to contain such testimony. The testimony of certain other witnesses, apparently called in opposition to the application, is set forth in full, and the return shows a decision by the board, by majority vote, that the applicants are entitled to the pension, according to the statute. After the return an application was made by the three appellants to be admitted as parties defendant, because a reversal of the board's action would affect their interests, and they were so admitted, and attempted to raise various objections Case Note. — Nature and circumstances of injury as affecting right to share in pension or insurance fund for policemen and firemen.

In Slevin v. Police Fund Comrs. 123 Cal. 130, 44 L.R.A. 114, 55 Pac. 785, it is held that death caused by accident is not from natural causes, within the meaning of a statute providing an insurance fund for families of policemen who die from natural causes.

In Hutchens v. Covert, 39 Ind. App. 382, 78 N. E. 1061, it was held that a policeman who, while on duty, committed suicide because of insanity, did not lose his life "while in the line of duty," within the meaning of that phrase as used in a statute providing for a pension for members of the family of a policeman, upon his death, "while in the line of his duty, or from natural causes," where it is not shown that the insanity was the result of the performance of any duty.

In McAuliffe v. Policemen's Pension Fund (Ky.) 115 S. W. 808, it was held that where a policeman, while at his home, and not on duty, undertook to clean his pistol, and in so doing accidentally killed himself, his widow was not entitled to a pension under a statute providing for pensioning the widow or children of any officer, member, or employee of the police department who "shall, while in the performance of his duty, be killed or die as the result of an injury received in the line of his duty."

In Scott v. Jersey City, 68 N. J. 689, 54 Atl. 441, it was held that the widow of a fireman killed by falling from a trolley car 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

while on his way home to supper, under leave for that purpose, was not entitled to a pension under a statute providing for the allowance of a pension to the widow of any officer or man permanently employed in the fire department, who should be fatally injured while in the performance of, or attempting to discharge, his duty. A preceding section of the act provided for a like pension to a fireman "whose duty requires active service in the extinguishment of fires," and who should become incapacitated for further duty as the result of injury received or sickness contracted in the discharge, or attempt to discharge, such duty. The two sections, read in conjunction, were held clearly to show that what the legislature intended was that the principle upon which the municipal body should dispense its bounty should be the same under both sections,—and that was the recognition of the extra hazard that comes to the members of the department while discharging, or attempting to discharge the duties required in the active service of extinguishing fires.

In Gummerson v. Toronto Police Benefit Fund, 11 Ont. L. Rep. 194, it was held that an injury sustained by a policeman while vaulting over a wooden horse in a gymnasium, this being part of a manual exercise prescribed by an inspector in the police force, was received while engaged in the execution of his duty, within the meaning of a rule of a police benefit fund, providing for pensioning policemen who receive injuries in the execution of duty.

to the right of the relator to question the action of the board by certiorari. Such objections were overruled, and the trial court held that, even though it appeared by the record that the board had found that Sullivan died as the result of pneumonia contracted by him by reason of exposure to which he was subjected in the actual and active performance of duty as a policeman, the board were not authorized by law to grant him a pension, and accordingly entered judgment reversing their decision, from which judgment Mary T. Sullivan and her two children bring this appeal.

Messrs. John Toohey and Walter H. Bender, for appellants:

Pneumonia is an injury within the meaning of the statute.

Eddy v. People, 218 Ill. 611, 75 N. E. 1073; Cary v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. 127 Wis. 67, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 926, 115 Am. St. Rep. 997, 106 N. W. 1055, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 484; Kortendick v. Waterford, 135 Wis. 77, 115 N. W. 331.

Mr. J. L. O'Connor also for appellants.

Messrs. Doe & Ballhorn for respondent.

Dodge, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Brushing aside various obstacles of practice or procedure which are urged by the interveners to maintenance of this action as between the original parties, we proceed at once to a consideration of the real question involving the merits of the action; that is, whether pneumonia suffered and contracted in the line of, and by reason of, the active performance of duties assigned to a policeman, is such an injury as entitles his widow to a pension if death results therefrom. The answer must be found by construction of §§ 8 and 9, chap. 397, pp. 642, 643, of the Laws of 1903. That act, after making provision for the creation of a fund, partly by deduction from policemen's salaries and partly from other sources, and creating a board of trustees for the administration thereof, provides, in §§ 8 and 9:

"Sec. 8. If any member of the police department, while engaged in the performance of his active duty as such policeman, be injured, and found, upon an examination by a medical officer, ordered by said board, to be physically or mentally permanently disabled by reason of such injury, so as to render necessary his retirement from service in such department, such board shall retire such disabled members from service; provided no such retirement on account of disability shall occur unless the member has contracted such disability within the hours of each day or night when he is required to be on active duty by the rules of the department, or while he is engaged in the performance of 'emergency duty' during his regular 'off hours.' . . .

"Sec. 9. If any member of the police department shall, while in the performance of his duty, be killed, or die as the result of an injury received while in the line of his duty, as described in the preceding section, . . . his widow and minor children, if any, shall receive a pension.

It will be observed that the right to retirement, under § 8, and the right to a pension in case of death, under § 9, are dependent on the condition, under § 8, that the policeman "be injured," and, under § 9, that he die as the result of "an injury;" and the question raised by relator is whether the contracting of disease is being injured and is the suffering of an injury within the meaning of this act. Section 9, by the italicized words, evidently refers back to § 8 for whatever of definition of "injury" may there be found. The word "injury," in ordinary modern usage, is one of very broad designation. In the strict sense of the law, especially the common law, its meaning corresponded with its etymology. It meant a wrongful invasion of legal rights, and was not concerned with the hurt or damage resulting from such invasion. It is thus used in the familiar phrase, damnum absque injuria. In common parlance, however, it is used broadly enough to cover both the damnum and the injuria of the common law, and, indeed, is more commonly used to express the idea belonging to the former word; namely, the effect on the recipient in the way of hurt or damage; and we cannot doubt that at this day its common and approved usage extends to and includes any hurtful or damaging effect which may be suffered by anyone. Hence, unless some reason to the contrary is presented, it should be so understood in these statutes. Section 4971, subd. 1, Stat. 1898. The respondent contends that, nevertheless, the word should be limited to the results of external violence. By itself the word "injury" or "injure" has no more application to the result of violence than to the result of any other injurious influence. A disease resulting from negligence of a physician in failing to give treatment is just as much an injury in common phrase as if it resulted from affirmative maltreatment or external violence. Therefore there is nothing inherent in the word to limit the injuries to which this statute applies to those from physical or external violence. If one be tortiously exposed to extreme cold, he may suffer the freezing and consequent loss of a limb, or the chill of an internal membrane or tissue, and resultant congestion or disease. No reason is apparent why either is more or less an injury than the other. In examining § 8 we find some suggestions in the context of the mental conception of the legislators in the use of the word "injured." In one phrase it is used in context and collocation with physical or mental permanent disability, and in another the legislators speak of such disability as one to be "contracted." These both point strongly to a conception of something other than external violence, which would ordinarily be said to be suffered or inflicted rather than contracted. The purpose of the act, too, would seem to require the broader meaning of the word. Why is not the policeman who, in the faithful performance of his duty, exposes himself to a danger like smallpox or diphtheria infection, as worthy of provision for his disability or for his widow as one who exposes himself to the knife or the club of a lawbreaker? Why is it not as promotive of the efficiency of the force for the protection of public welfare that he be encouraged in the one case as in the other? These considerations, and many others like them, which might be mentioned, constrain us to the conclusion that the word "injury" is used in this statute in a sense broad enough to include the contracting of a disease; provided, of course, that such injury is suffered in the course of and by reason of the performance of the distinctive duties imposed upon the sufferer as a policeman (Hutchens v. Covert, 39 Ind. App. 382, 78 N. E. 1061),—a fact which we deem to have been ascertained and decided upon sufficient showing by the board of trustees, although their record is not as full as it might be in its disclosure of the class of evidence which was submitted for their consideration. A provision in § 9 for a pension upon death for any cause after fifteen years' service marks a contrast or antithesis to this last requirement of causal connection between the active service and the injury, and does not signify a limited meaning in the word "injury" caused by the service.

In reaching the conclusion that disease is included, we have not overlooked the fact, urged by relator, that an earlier statute (chapter 265, p. 443, Laws 1899, of which the law of 1903 was in effect an amendment) contained, in § 9, both expressions, "an injury received in the line of his duty" "or any disease contracted by reason of his occupation;" and that the latter words were eliminated in the law of 1903, having substituted therefor the words "as described in the preceding section." Notwithstanding this change, which doubtless is of some significance, it still seems to us that the injury described and provided for in § 8 was intended to include the inoculation with or contraction of disease; and that the new expression in § 9 was inserted in the act of 1903 for the purpose of perpetuating that meaning for the word "injury" in the latter section. Our view as to the legislative intent results in the conclusion that it was within the power of the board of trustees to award the pension in question if they found that the pneumonia from which Sullivan died was contracted in the actual performance of his duties, and caused thereby. Their resolution of that question of fact from the evidence before them was within their jurisdiction, and cannot be reviewed upon certiorari. State ex rel. Manitowoc v. County Clerk, 59 Wis. 15, 20, 16 N. W. 617; State ex rel. Cook v. Houser, 122 Wis. 534, 561, 100 N. W. 964.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to affirm the action of the board of trustees in granting pension to appellants.

Marshall, J., dissenting:

I cannot bring myself to concur in the decision of this case, and will state briefly my reasons therefor.

The right result of the controversy here presented depends upon the familiar principles for statutory construction:

First. A legislative enactment should not be construed where there is no need for construction.

Second. There is no need for construction when the meaning of the enactment, in its plain, every-day sense, looking to words therein used, or looking at them in the light of the subject dealt with, is not involved in uncertainty.

Third. Where the meaning of an enactment is evident, and leads to no absurd conclusion, there can be no reason for refusing to attribute the meaning which the words signify; to go elsewhere in search of conjecture, in order to restrict or extend the act, would be to attempt to elude it. Such a method, if once admitted, would be extremely dangerous, for there would be no law, however definite in its language, which might not, by interpretation, be rendered useless.

Fourth. Judicial construction takes hold only when there is obscurity of meaning. So we must look first for uncertainty, not commencing to construe in advance of uncertainty appearing.

Fifth. All the words of an enactment should be regarded as having been used in respect to some particular purpose.

Sixth. The plain, ordinary meaning of words should be regarded as having been the one intended, unless it appears reasonably certain from the enactment that some other meaning was intended.

Seventh. The legislative purpose, when discovered, expressed within the reasonable scope of the language in an enactment, must prevail regardless of consequences, and must be taken to be a part of the enactment, the same as if expressed in the ordinary sense of words.

Let us now apply those rules to the enactment in question.

The original law is chapter 265, p. 413, Laws 1899. Section 8 was as follows:

"If any member of the police department, while engaged in the performance of his active duty as such policeman, be injured, and found upon examination by a medical officer, ordered by said board, to be physically or mentally permanently disabled by reason of such injury, so as to render necessary his retirement from service in such department, such board shall retire such disabled member from service; provided no such retirement on account of disability shall occur unless the member has contracted such disability while in the active service of such department."

That was changed by chapter 397, p. 640, Laws 1903, by dropping these last of the quoted words, "while in the active service of such department," and in place thereof adding the words, "within the hours of each day or night when he is required to be on active duty by the rules of the department, or while he is engaged in the performance of 'emergency duty' during his regular off hours."

Section 9 of the original enactment was this:

"If any member of such police department shall, while in the performance of his duty, be killed or die as a result of an injury received in the line of his duty, or any disease contracted by reason of his occupation, or if any member of such department, after fifteen years' service in such department, shall die from any cause whatever while in said service, or if any member of such department shall die from any cause whatever after having been retired upon a pension under the provisions of this act, and shall leave a widow or minor child or children under sixteen years of age surviving. . . ."

Note particularly that this section provides only for death while in the performance of his duty (a) by injury so received in the line of his duty, (b) disease contracted by reason of his occupation, (c) death in the service from "any cause," or (d) death from "any cause" after retirement upon a pension, leaving a widow or minor child or children under sixteen years of age.

The section was changed, in the Laws of 1903, to this:
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"If any member of such police department shall, while in the performance of his duty, be killed, or die as a result of an injury received in the line of his duty, as described in the preceding section, or if any member of such department, after fifteen years' service in such department, shall die from any cause whatever while in said service, or if any member shall die from any cause whatever after having been retired upon a pension under the provisions of this act, and shall leave a widow or minor child or children under the age of sixteen years surviving, the said board shall direct the payment from said pension fund of the following sums, monthly, to-wit: . . ."

It will be noted that the changes were, first, by striking out after the words "in the line of his duty" the words "or any disease contracted by reason of his occupation;" and second, by interpolating in place thereof the words "as described in the preceding section."

Thus, the later act, unmistakably radically restricts the original laws. Whereas, formerly, relief was afforded for disability occurring during the official term while the officer was in a service, on or off actual duty, unless on a vacation for some reason, now it is restricted to disability occurring within hours, when, under the rules of the department, he is required to be actually on duty, or in case of an emergency. Formerly a pension was grantable to a dependent widow in case of death of the officer, her husband, from an injury in the line of duty as well as from death by disease contracted by reason of his occupation. Now the latter is not possible, the condition giving competency to the dependent for a pension being confined to death of the officer resulting from an injury occurring in the line of his duty, as prescribed in § 8. The elimination of death from disease as creating such competency would seem to leave no reasonable ground whatever for holding that death from pneumonia, the circumstance relied on in this case, is retained.

I will not pay so little heed to what I believe to be ordinary understanding of ordinary persons, as to spend time demonstrating that, while a disease as well as an injury may create damage, it is false logic to urge that an injury, in the ordinary sense, is a disease, or a disease is an injury in any other sense than that it injuriously affects the afflicted one, causing damage.

It would seem that the mere fact of legislative dropping out of "disease" as a cause of death creating competency of a dependent for a pension, under one of the rules for construction we have named, precludes the court from resorting to construction for the purpose of retaining it. It further would seem that such resort flies in the face of rule 3, that to construe that which has no need for construction is to use the function to construe to defeat the legislative intent, rather than to discover and give effect to it.

Again, since the amended section only leaves death from injury sufficient to create competency of a dependent for a pension an "injury" as that term is used in § 8, there can be no fair question but that it means a physical hurt, such as is commonly understood by the term "injury" when it is applied to a misfortune to a person engaged in an occupation involving extraordinary hazard as to receiving bodily wounds.

When we speak of a person as having been injured in the army or in railroad employment, or in the performance of duty of keeping the peace, or protecting society from criminal offenders, or apprehending such offenders, or in any other occupation exposing one to peculiar dangers as to bodily injuries, what do we mean by the term "injury?" In other words, what is its plain, ordinary meaning as applied to such situations? I venture to say the universal answer must be a physical hurt,—a wounding of the body.

If the preceding be correct, to go beyond such common meaning into the field of broad general, or that of technical, sense, violates the first, second, third, and fourth rules, and particularly the sixth that the plain, ordinary meaning of words should be taken unless it appears reasonably certain some other was intended; and also the fifth, that all words of an enactment should be regarded as having been used in respect to some particularly indicated purpose. The latter, because the element of elimination of the cause "disease" shows, manifestly, a purpose to exclude it, and restrict the term "injury" to the particular purpose of providing relief to the dependent or dependents in case of death from "injury" as distinguished from death by "disease," as death from pneumonia.

The striking feature of the elimination of "disease" as a cause of death creating competency for a beneficial participation of a dependent in the pension funds seems to me to have been entirely nullified by the result of this case, rendering the whole manifest purpose of the amendatory act nugatory.

True, the term "injury" is broad enough to include anything which causes damage, but is that a warrant for departing from the common-sense, ordinary meaning as applied to the particular situation? The broad sense includes injury to reputation, injury to property, and injury to rights, as well as injury to the person in the sense of a bodily wounding; but cannot one see, very clearly, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that only in the latter sense is the term "injury" to a policeman in the course of his active duties as such contemplated when the term is used in regard to such a person engaged in such service? If so, by what warrant can the court, merely because of the broader signification of the word, go into the boundless field, especially in view of there not only being nothing in the situation to suggest it, but such a purpose being expressly negated by the legislative restriction by elimination of the very words which formerly included circumstances somewhat within such broad field? In my judgment there is no such warrant; and so, in my opinion, the death involved here by "disease" should be regarded not only as not being within the act, but as being expressly excluded from it, and so the order appealed from should be affirmed.

Winslow, Ch. J., took no part.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

JOSEPH RANKEL, Appt.,

v.

BUCKSTAFF-EDWARDS COMPANY,
Respt.

(— Wis. —, 120 N. W. 269.)

Master — independent contract — existence.

1. An independent contract for the erection of a building, so as to relieve the owner from liability for negligent injuries to workmen, is not shown by the employment of one at a certain salary to attend to its construction and hire the men, where the owner pays them and furnishes the ma-

Case Note. — Common laborers and persons engaged in blasting as fellow servants.

This note does not assume to include cases in which the plaintiff was employed in drilling, or other work immediately connected with the preparation and firing of blasts, but is limited to decisions in which the person injured was engaged, as in the case reported, in some unrelated form of labor.

In Ongaro v. Twoby, 49 Wash. 93, 94 Pac. 916, an action for personal injuries by one employed in the construction of a railway cut as a laborer in shoveling rock and earth into cars, who was injured by an explosion of dynamite while being tamped into place by persons in charge of the work of blasting, it was held that the question of fellow servant was properly for the jury, the court saying: "In the first place, the powder man and the shift boss, who had charge of the blasting and drilling operations, and who were claimed by appellants to have been fellow servants with the respondent, were enterials, directing the progress, course of procedure, and general management of the work.

Same — employment of servant — negligence.

2. A master is not negligent towards his servants in employing one to do blasting, if he secured him upon recommendation as to his competence of the owner of a quarry where he had been employed in such duties.

Same — fellow servants — blasting.

3. An employee engaged in removing earth for the foundation of a building is not a fellow servant of an expert employed for a short time to break up frozen ground by blasting, where the former has nothing to do with the placing, packing, or discharging of the explosives, although he drills the holes to contain them.

Same — assumption of risk.

4. A servant engaged in removing earth for the foundation of a building does not assume the risk of injury from unexploded dynamite used in breaking up a frozen crust, where he had no reason to apprehend that explosives would be left in the earth which he was required to remove, and which he had been led to believe was safe.

(Marshall, J., dissents.)

(March 9, 1909.)

gaged in an entirely different class of work from the respondent. They were handling an extremely dangerous agency, viz., dynamite, requiring skill and great care, while the respondent was in the cut below, engaged as a common laborer shoveling earth into cars. In the next place, it was the special duty of the shift boss and the powder man to keep the place safe so as to protect the respondent, who had no means of knowing what they were doing and no means of guarding against their acts. Under these circumstances, it seems clear that the respondent was not a fellow servant with either the shift boss or the powder man, but that these two men necessarily represented the master, and were bound to notify laborers in places made dangerous by their work."

In the greater number of cases, however, persons engaged as common laborers in the work of excavation have been held to be fellow servants of other employees engaged in blasting.

Thus in McMahon v. Bangs, 5 Penn. (Del.) 178, 62 Atl. 1098, the relation of fellow servant was held to exist between an employee whose negligence in discharging a blast in a stone quarry resulted in injury, and the person injured, who was engaged in hauling away soil cleared from the top of the rocks.

One engaged in hauling rock, by means of a team, out of a railway cut, is a fellow servant of persons engaged in blasting rock in the cut, being engaged, although in a different branch, in the same general undertaking. Bogard v. Louisville. E. & St. L. R. Co. 100 Ind. 491.

One employed in a gypsum mine to do blasting is a fellow servant of one employed to remove the rock, both being engaged on an equal footing in doing the master's work. Hendrickson v. United States Gypsum Co. (Iowa) 105 N. W. 503.

One employed in charging and exploding blasts in laying a car track is, in doing such work, a fellow servant of employees working with pick and shovel on the mass of earth and rocks dislodged for the blast; though he is not such in determining whether any part of the charge remains unexploded. Hoe v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. 187 Mass. 67, 72 N. E. 341.

One employed to do the blasting required to be done in excavating a railway cut in a fellow servant of one employed to haul away the materials excavated, he being as much engaged in the same general service when blasting as he would have been in detaching the material to be removed with a pick and shovel. Marshall v. Schricker, 63 Mo. 308.

A member of a gang of workmen employed to remove from a trench material dislodged by a blast is a fellow servant with those engaged in blasting, being engaged in effecting a common purpose, though the work is done in successive stages, different parts thereof being devolved upon different persons, and the labor performed by one set of employees being prior in time to that performed by another set. Citrone v. O'Rourke Engineering Constr. Co. 188 N. Y. 339, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 340, 80 N. E. 1092.

A laborer engaged in digging at the bottom of a caisson is a fellow servant with one engaged in blasting. Gallagher v. McMullin, 25 App. Div. 571, 49 N. Y. Supp. 734.

Persons engaged in a quarry in blasting stone off the ledges, and one employed in breaking up that blasted off, neither being in a position of subordination to, and subject to the order and control of, the other, but being under the immediate control and authority of the same foreman, are fellow servants, since, although working in different parts of the same quarry, their work is in connection with each other and has relation to the same common end,— that of getting out the stone. Kelley Island Lime & Transport Co. v. Pachuta, 69 Ohio St. 462, 100 Am. St. Rep. 706, 69 N. E. 988.

Persons engaged in breaking down the ore in a mine by blasting, and those engaged in hauling it away, are fellow servants, being engaged in a common employment, and a work tending to a common object, one common end, and in connection with each other, each having a relation to the object, and to the common end. Kieley v. Belcher Silver Min. Co. 3 Sawy. 500, Fed. Cas. No. 7,761.

As to duty to warn a servant engaged in blasting of the dangers therefrom, see case note to Hardy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 997.

Other recent decisions upon the question, Who is an independent contractor? may be found in a case note to Knically v. West Virginia Midland R. Co. 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 370.

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Winnebago County upon a verdict directed by the court in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Siebecker, J.:

This is an action for the recovery of damages for personal injuries alleged to be due to the negligence of the defendant.

The defendant conducts a manufacturing plant for the production of chairs, caskets, etc. In 1907 it was determined to add a sawmill to the defendant's plant. The mill was to be built upon a marshy ground into which spiles were to be driven as a foundation for the structure. The construction of the sawmill required the removal of certain old structures as well as the building of the new one. The defendant company negotiated with one Heidlinger for the removal of the old structures and the construction of the new mill. Heidlinger stated that he could not figure upon the work and undertake it, because it involved the destruction of the old and the construction of the new structures; and they arranged that Heidlinger was to receive $5 per day for his time and services. He was to procure whatever workmen might be needed, keep account of their time and their wages, present defendant with a statement showing the amount of money needed to pay the wages of such workmen, receive this amount, with his own wages, from the defendant, and therefrom pay the men. All the materials to be used in the construction were to be furnished by the defendant. Heidlinger prepared the plans for the mill. The work was started in the early part of the year, when the surface of the ground was frozen to the depth of about 2 feet. It was necessary to remove the frozen earth in order to be able to drive the spiles for the foundation. Heidlinger procured laborers to excavate and remove the frozen earth, among them the plaintiff. For a few days they worked with crowbars, picks, and shovels. To expedite the work, Heidlinger consulted with an officer of the defendant, and suggested that the frozen earth might be removed more rapidly and easily if it were broken with dynamite. The officer desired to send for dynamite, but Heidlinger stated that he did not know anything about dynamite, and how to set and explode it. He was then directed to consult the owner of a stone quarry outside the city of Oshkosh, in order to procure a competent man to do the blasting. Heidlinger consulted the owner of the quarry, and, on his recommendation, engaged a man in his employ, one Span-bauer, to do the blasting. Spanbauer had worked for the owner of the quarry for five or six years at breaking stone. He had observed the way in which blasting was done at the quarry, and had done some blasting there.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Preparatory to the blasting of the frozen earth, the workmen engaged in breaking up the ground drove an iron bar into the ground with a sledge hammer. When the iron had been driven into the ground to the desired depth, the bar was withdrawn, and the workmen retired and took no part in the blasting operation. Spanbauer was the only man at work on the grounds of the defendant who had had any experience with dynamite, and, when the hole had been made, he charged it by placing the dynamite in the hole, placing the exploding cap on it, making the necessary electrical connections, filling the hole with earth, and tamping it down, and he then exploded the charge. Several charges of dynamite were exploded at the same time by having a series of charged holes connected with the one electrical instrument used to discharge the exploding caps. Four charged holes were connected for the last blast made by Spanbauer. About one of the holes the earth was not thrown up as about the other three, and Spanbauer then again connected the wires from this hole with his electrical apparatus, and ran a current through the wires. No explosion followed, and Spanbauer made an examination of the ground in the vicinity of the hole and saw a crack about 1½ feet from the hole. He attributed the crack to the supposed explosion of the charge in the hole, and told the men to proceed with the digging, that everything was all right. Subsequently plaintiff, while working in this vicinity, struck the unexploded charge of dynamite with a pick, and, by the ensuing explosion, lost the sight of both his eyes and suffered other injuries.

There was evidence in the case that a careful workman, with a knowledge of how to blast in frozen ground, in case of doubt as to whether or not a charge had been exploded, with a wooden spoon, would carefully remove the earth which had been tamped into the hole, and thus assure himself that the charge had been exploded. When several charges of dynamite are discharged by the same electrical discharge, the several explosions occur simultaneously, and it is impossible to tell from the sound whether all have been exploded. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence, the court refused to grant a nonsuit; but, at the conclusion of the defendant's testimony, the court directed a verdict for the defendant on the ground that the plaintiff was not in the employ of the defendant at the time of the injury, and because the plaintiff was a fellow servant of the blaster, Spanbauer. This is an appeal from the judgment on the verdict as directed.

Mr. H. B. Jackson, with Messrs. Eaton & Eaton, for appellant:

Heidlinger was not an independent contractor.

Thomp. Neg. § 39; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 167; Blake v. Thirst, 2 Hurlst. & C. 20; Morgan v. Bowman, 22 Mo. 538; Charles v. Taylor, L. R. 3 C. P. Div. 492; Tiffin v. McCormack, 34 Ohio St. 638, 32 Am. Rep. 408; Carlson v. Stocking, 91 Wis. 432, 65 N. W. 58; Hughbanks v. Boston Invest. Co. 92 Iowa, 267, 60 N. W. 640; Walker v. Simmons Mfg. Co. 131 Wis. 542, 111 N. W. 694; Cunningham v. International R. Co. 51 Tex. 503, 32 Am. Rep. 632; Neimeyer v. Weyerhaeuser, 95 Iowa, 497, 64 N. W. 416; Barg v. Bousfield, 65 Minn. 355, 68 N. W. 45; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Powers, 149 U. S. 43, 37 L. ed. 642, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 748; Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. McCue, 17 Wall. 508, 21 L. ed. 705.

The employee had no knowledge of the danger, and did not assume the risk.

Holloway v. H. W. Johns-Manville Co. 135 Wis. 629, 116 N. W. 635; Denning v. Gould, 157 Mass. 564, 32 N. E. 862; Burnside v. Novelty Mfg. Co. 121 Mich. 115, 79 N. W. 1108; Hoffman v. Dickinson, 31 W. Va. 142, 6 S. E. 53; Polaski v. Pittsburgh Coal Dock Co. 134 Wis. 259, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 952, 114 N. W. 437; Rummell v. Dilworth, P. & Co. 111 Pa. 350, 2 Atl. 355, 363; Cooley, Torts, 661.

Defendant negligently failed to warn the employee of the dangers attending such a use of dynamite, and to avoid them.

Luebke v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 59 Wis. 128, 48 Am. Rep. 483, 17 N. W. 870; Boelter v. Ross Lumber Co. 103 Wis. 324; 79 N. W. 243; McMahon v. Ida Min. Co. 95 Wis. 308, 60 Am. St. Rep. 117, 70 N. W. 478; Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Ingraham, 17 C. C. A. 71, 36 U. S. App. 1, 70 Fed. 219; Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Berberich, 36 C. C. A. 364, 94 Fed. 329; Froeber v. Smith, 106 Minn. 72, 118 N. W. 57; Bjorklund v. Gray, 106 Minn. 42, 118 N. W. 59; Myham v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 41 La. Ann. 964, 7 L.R.A. 172, 17 Am. St. Rep. 436, 6 So. 799; Blackwell v. Lynchburg & D. R. Co. 111 N. C. 151, 17 L.R.A. 729, 32 Am. St. Rep. 786, 16 S. E. 12; Newark Electric Light & P. Co. v. Garden, 37 L.R.A. 725, 23 C. C. A. 649, 39 U. S. App. 416, 78 Fed. 74; Peters v. George, 83 C. C. A. 408, 154 Fed. 639; Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin, 93 Va. 791, 70 L.R.A. 999, 22 S. E. 869; Zoesch v. Flambeau Paper Co. 134 Wis. 270, 114 N. W. 485; Kiser v. Suppe, 133 Mo. App. 19, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.)

112 S. W. 1005; Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. ed. 605, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 185; Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co. 127 Wis. 273, 106 N. W. 1077; Yess v. Chicago Brass Co. 124 Wis. 414, 102 N. W. 932; Smith v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 42 Wis. 525; Hocking v. Windsor Spring Co. 125 Wis. 581, 104 N. W. 705; Welch v. Bath Iron Works, 98 Me. 361, 57 Atl. 88; Hamann v. Milwaukee Bridge Co. 136 Wis. 39, 116 N. W. 854; Burke v. Anderson, 16 C. C. A. 442, 34 U. S. App. 132, 69 Fed. 814; Wheeler v. Mason Mfg. Co. 135 Mass. 294; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Gray, 50 L.R.A. 47, 41 C. C. A. 535, 101 Fed. 623; Euting v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 116 Wis. 13, 60 L.R.A. 158, 96 Am. St. Rep. 936, 92 N. W. 358; Baumann v. C. Reiss Coal Co. 118 Wis. 330, 95 N. W. 139; Sherman v. Menominee River Lumber Co. 72 Wis. 122, 1 L.R.A. 173, 39 N. W. 365; Grant v. Keystone Lumber Co. 119 Wis. 229, 100 Am. St. Rep. 883, 96 N. W. 535; Kroeger v. Marsh Bridge Co. 138 Iowa, 376, 116 N. W. 125; Boyce v. Wilbur Lumber Co. 119 Wis. 642, 97 N. W. 563; Mather v. Rillston, 156 U. S. 391, 39 L. ed. 464, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464; Schultz v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 48 Wis. 379; 4 N. W. 399; Grams v. C. Reiss Coal Co. 125 Wis. 1, 102 N. W. 586; Leary v. Boston & A. R. Co. 139 Mass. 580, 52 Am. Rep. 733, 2 N. E. 115; O'Connor v. Adams, 120 Mass. 427.

Spanbauer was the defendant's representative, and not a coemployee of plaintiff.

Schultz v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. and Grams v. C. Reiss Coal Co. supra; Smith v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 42 Wis. 520; Promer v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 90 Wis. 215, 48 Am. St. Rep. 905, 63 N. W. 90; Cadden v. American Steel Barge Co. 88 Wis. 409, 60 N. W. 800; McMahon v. Ida Min. Co. 95 Wis. 308, 60 Am. St. Rep. 117, 70 N. W. 478; North Chicago Rolling Mill Co. v. Johnson, 114 Ill. 57, 29 N. E. 186; Salmons v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 162 Fed. 722; Paine v. Eastern R. Co. 91 Wis. 340, 62 N. W. 1005; Goodrich v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 116 N. Y. 398, 5 L.R.A. 750, 15 Am. St. Rep. 410, 22 N. E. 397; Euting v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. supra; Wood, Mast. & S. 681, 738, 739, 749, 751, 763; Thomp. Neg. 975; Burke v. Anderson, 16 C. C. A. 442, 34 U. S. App. 132, 69 Fed. 814; Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Ingraham, supra.

Messrs. Barbers & Beglinger, with Messrs. Williams & Williams, for respondent:

Where one person employs another to do a specific job of work, as an independent contractor, and retains no control over the petty details thereof, such employer does not become liable for injuries caused by the sole negligence of such contractor or his servants.

Hailey v. Jump River Lumber Co. 81 Wis. 412, 51 N. W. 321, 956; Hackett v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 80 Wis. 187, 49 N. W. 822; Smith v. Milwaukee Builders' & T. Exchange, 91 Wis. 360, 30 L.R.A. 504, 51 Am. St. Rep. 912, 64 N. W. 1041; Carlson v. Stocking, 91 Wis. 432, 65 N. W. 58; Kuehn v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 263, 65 N. W. 1030; Bauer v. Richter, 103 Wis. 412, 79 N. W. 404; Hiroux v. Baum (Wis.) 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 332, 118 N. W. 533; 2 Thomp. Neg. 892, 909, §§ 12, 35, 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. pp. 240-248, §§ 164, 169, 181; Michael v. Stanton, 3 Hun, 462; Curtis v. Dinneen, 4 Dak. 245, 30 N. W. 148; Corbin v. American Mills, 27 Conn. 274, 71 Am. Dec. 63; Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 54 Am. Rep. 703, 4 N. E. 755; Felton v. Deall, 22 Vt. 171, 54 Am. Dec. 61; Salliotte v. King Bridge Co. 65 L.R.A. 620, 58 C. C. A. 466, 122 Fed. 378; Bailey v. Troy & B. R. Co. 57 Vt. 252, 52 Am. Rep. 129; King v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 66 N. Y. 181, 23 Am. Rep. 37; Cunningham v. International R. Co. 51 Tex. 503, 32 Am. Rep. 632; Robinson v. Webb, 11 Bush, 464; Bennett v. Truebody, 66 Cal. 509, 56 Am. Rep. 117, 6 Pac. 329; Du Pratt v. Lick, 38 Cal. 691; Forsyth v. Hooper, 11 Allen, 419; Martin v. Tribune Assn. 30 Hun, 391; Roemer v. Striker, 142 N. Y. 134, 36 N. E. 808; Bauer v. Richter, 103 Wis. 418, 79 N. W. 404.

The retention by defendant of the right to inspect the work, and to see that it was being done according to the plan, and the fact that he would have had the right to stop it, if it did not conform to the plan, or, if any changes in the plan had been made, to the altered plan, was consistent with Heidlinger's status as an independent contractor.

Casement v. Brown, 148 U. S. 615, 37 L. ed. 582, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 672; Bibb v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 87 Va. 711, 14 S. E. 163; Kuehn v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 263, 65 N. W. 1030; Charlock v. Freel, 125 N. Y. 357, 26 N. E. 262; Crenshaw v. Ullman, 113 Mo. 633, 20 S. W. 1077; Kelly v. New York, 11 N. Y. 432.

In order that one may be held to be a servant, the contract of employment must give the employer the right to dictate the details as to the mode and manner of performing the work.

Forsyth v. Hooper, 11 Allen, 419; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. pp. 248, 249; Kuehn v. Milwaukee, supra.

One hired for a specific job, even though paid by the day, is an independent contractor.

Geer v. Darrow, 61 Conn. 220, 23 Atl. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

1087; Corbin v. American Mills, 27 Conn. 274, 71 Am. Dec. 63; Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 54 Am. Rep. 703, 4 N. E. 755; Felton v. Deall, 22 Vt. 171, 54 Am. Dec. 61; Sadler v. Henlock, 4 El. & Bl. 570.

Blasting is not per se an unlawful or injurious operation, and the failure of the contractor or his servants to give warning does not make the defendant liable.

Herrington v. Lansingburgh, 110 N. Y. 145, 6 Am. St. Rep. 348, 17 N. E. 728; McCafferty v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. 61 N. Y. 178, 19 Am. Rep. 267.

Rankel, Spanbauer, and Heidlinger were all in the employ of defendant, and were fellow servants.

Wiskie v. Montello Granite Co. 111 Wis. 443, 87 Am. St. Rep. 885, 87 N. W. 461; Okonski v. Pennsylvania & O. Fuel Co. 114 Wis. 448, 90 N. W. 429; Hamann v. Milwaukee Bridge Co. 127 Wis. 550, 106 N. W. 1081, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 458; Gereg v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 128 Wis. 35, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 367, 107 N. W. 289; Dahlke v. Illinois Steel Co. 100 Wis. 431, 76 N. W. 362; Peschel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 62 Wis. 338, 21 N. W. 269; Williams v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co. 124 Wis. 328, 102 N. W. 589; Alaska Treadwell Gold Min. Co. v. Whalen, 168 U. S. 86, 42 L. ed. 390, 18 Sup. St. Rep. 40; Petaja v. Aurora Iron Min. Co. 106 Mich. 463, 32 L.R.A. 435, 58 Am. St. Rep. 505, 64 N. W. 335, 66 N. W. 951.

Defendant was not bound to warn his servants of the unexpected and unforeseen danger, and is not liable for the injuries caused by the explosion of the dynamite.

Dahlke v. Illinois Steel Co. 100 Wis. 431, 76 N. W. 362; Deisenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Malting Co. 92 Wis. 164, 66 N. W. 112; Andrews v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 96 Wis. 357, 71 N. W. 372; Block v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. 89 Wis. 378, 27 L.R.A. 365, 46 Am. St. Rep. 849, 61 N. W. 1101; Atkinson v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 60 Wis. 144, 50 Am. Rep. 352, 18 N. W. 764; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256; Sladky v. Marinette Lumber Co. 107 Wis. 250, 83 N. W. 514; Musbach v. Wisconsin Chair Co. 108 Wis. 67, 84 N. W. 36; Wiskie v. Montello Granite Co. 111 Wis. 449, 87 Am. St. Rep. 885, 87 N. W. 461.

The situation was changing as the work progressed, and plaintiff knew the dangers, as well as defendant, and, under such circumstances, they were ordinary incidents of the service.

Showalter v. Fairbanks, M. & Co. 88 Wis. 377, 60 N. W. 257; Larsson v. McClure, 95 Wis. 533, 70 N. W. 662; Mielke v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 103 Wis. 1, 74 Am. St. Rep. 834, 79 N. W. 22; Paule v. Florence Min. Co. 80 Wis. 350, 50 N. W. 189; Capas- so v. Woolfolk, 163 N. Y. 472, 57 N. E. 760; Cullen v. Norton, 126 N. Y. 1, 26 N. E. 905; Perry v. Rogers, 157 N. Y. 251, 51 N. E. 1021; Minneapolis v. Lundin, 7 C. C. A. 344, 19 U. S. App. 245, 58 Fed. 525; Corneilson v. Eastern R. Co. 50 Minn. 23, 52 N. W. 224; Houston v. Culver, 88 Ga. 34, 13 S. E. 953.

Stebecker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff challenges the correctness of the trial court's ruling as to all the questions involved, in directing a verdict for the defendant. We will examine them as presented.

The first contention is that the plaintiff was in the employ of the defendant as its servant at the time of the accident. This is denied by the defendant, and it asserts that he was in the employ of one Heidlinger, who, it claims, had contracted to erect the mill for the defendant. The facts adduced establish that Heidlinger was employed by the defendant to attend to the construction of the mill, the defendant to pay him a compensation at the rate of $5 per day for the time he was so engaged. It also appears that the defendant was to furnish all the materials for the structure and for the preparation of the grounds, and that it was to pay the daily wages of all the men needed in erecting the structure. The men were hired by Heidlinger, and he took account of their time and presented it to the defendant's officers, received the amounts due him for wages, and due the men whom he had engaged, and paid them, retaining out of the sum so paid him by the defendant the amount due him as compensation for his time, at the rate agreed upon by him and the defendant. It is also shown that the defendant's officers exercised a control over the undertaking, to the extent of directing its progress, course of procedure, and general management. The evidence does not establish that defendant and Heidlinger agreed that Heidlinger was to have the right to control the erection of the structure, and was to be responsible for the cost of the work and the wages of the men employed. It is manifest that the defendant was responsible to all persons engaged on the job, and that Heidlinger merely acted as its agent in securing their services. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said that Heidlinger had contracted with defendant to erect the mill according to his own method and without being subject to the control of the defendant, except as to the result of the work. Upon the evidence it must be held that the plaintiff was in defendant's employ at the time of the accident. From the foregoing conclusion, it follows that Spanbauer was in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) defendant's employ when he was conducting the operation of blasting the earth at the mill site.

We are persuaded that the defendant exercised reasonable care in selecting Spanbauer as one competent to do the blasting. Whether or not Spanbauer proved to be competent to perform this highly dangerous service does not determine this question. The inquiry is: Did the defendant act upon such information respecting Spanbauer's skill and competency in this regard as that upon which ordinarily prudent men will act under the same or similar circumstances? If so it fulfilled its measure of duty to its other servants in the selection of employees. It is shown that Heidlinger apprised the defendant's officer in charge of the construction, that he had not the knowledge and skill to set the loads of dynamite, and explode them. Thereupon he was directed by defendant to obtain for this purpose a competent blaster from among the men engaged in this service in a neighboring quarry. Pursuant to this direction, Heidlinger applied to the person operating the quarry, and was informed that Spanbauer was engaged at the quarry and understood the business. It is manifest that the officers of the defendant and Heidlinger knew that persons were engaged in blasting in the quarry, and understood, from the representations of the person operating, that Spanbauer had performed this service and was skilled in it. Their conduct in this respect was that of reasonable and careful men, and acquits them of the charge of negligence in this respect.

It is insisted by respondent that, if the plaintiff was in defendant's employ in performing the service at which he was injured, then defendant is not liable therefor, because it was caused by the negligence of Spanbauer, who was a fellow servant of the plaintiff in the work of blasting. The trial court held this contention of the defendant to be sustained by the facts of the case, under the ruling in Wiskie v. Montello Granite Co. 111 Wis. 443, 87 Am. St. Rep. 885, 87 N. W. 461. In the Wiskie Case the plaintiff, while assisting the foreman of the quarry in conducting the blasting, was injured through the unexpected explosion of part of a powder blast which the foreman had negligently permitted to remain, and near which he had set the plaintiff at work. The facts of the case show that Wiskie and the foreman had jointly placed the blast, that they worked together under the foreman's direction at raising and blasting rocks, and that they had been so engaged for a long time before the accident. It was held, upon these facts, that Wiskie and the foreman were engaged in a common service of blasting rocks when Wiskie was injured. From an examination of the facts of that case, it is manifest that Wiskie and the foreman were jointly performing the same task, and were engaged in a common service; but we do not find a like state of facts in the instant case. Here the defendant had employed the plaintiff to help remove the earth for the foundation of the mill. The defendant, in the course of the prosecution of such work, decided to employ a blaster to break the frozen ground so as to expedite the work. Spanbauer was engaged for this purpose, and was employed at this special work for two days. The work was conducted as follows: Plaintiff and the other workmen at the excavation drove holes with iron bars into the earth for setting dynamite charges in. Spanbauer then took charge of the work. He placed the dynamite charges in the holes, packed them with earth, connected them by wire with an electric battery, and discharged them by turning on the electric current. Neither the plaintiff nor the other workmen took part in setting and packing in the charges, or in connecting them by fire with the battery, or in discharging them. All of this was under the control of, and was performed by, Spanbauer in the capacity of blaster. From this it appears that the setting and exploding of the blast was exclusively intrusted to the expert, and that plaintiff took no part in performing this service. It is obvious, from the dangerous character of this service, that it was treated as separate and distinct from the service plaintiff and the other workmen were performing, in excavating the earth for the foundation of the mill. In the Wiskie Case the plaintiff assisted the expert in performing the work of blasting. In the instant case the plaintiff did not assist or engage in the work of blasting, and herein the two cases are widely distinguished. In the former the plaintiff and expert were engaged in the common service of blasting. In the latter the plaintiff and the expert were engaged in separate and distinct services, which were different in nature, and in the hazards and dangers incident thereto. True they both served a common master and occupied the same place while performing their respective duties, but the operation of blasting was wholly different, distinct, and independent of the employment of the excavator engaged in the construction of the mill. The risks and dangers of blasting are not ordinarily incident to the service plaintiff was performing. These features and conditions of the instant case clearly differentiate it from the Wiskie Case. Upon these considerations the ruling of the trial court, that plaintiff and Spanbauer were fellow servants, cannot be approved. The case must be treated from the standpoint that plaintiff was not the servant of the defendant, and was not engaged in the operation of blasting with Spanbauer, who acted alone for the defendant in using and handling highly explosive and dangerous agencies for blasting the earth.

Nor can the plaintiff be treated as one informed of the dangers which are incident to the want of a proper conduct of the blasting operation. The nature of plaintiff's work, and his relation to the blasting, did not inform him of the unsafe condition of the place where he was directed to proceed with the work of excavating after Spanbauer had exploded the blast, and had pronounced the place safe for continuing the work of excavating. While the plaintiff knew that an explosive was being used by Spanbauer to expedite the work, he was not informed of the particular danger to him from a failure to discharge part of the dynamite charges. He had no reason to apprehend that an undischarged load was hidden in the earth where he was put to work. He was in fact led to believe by the expert that the place was safe.

It does not appear that plaintiff was instructed or warned of the extraordinary hazards and dangers incident to the use of dynamite, and he cannot be held to have assumed the risks thereof as dangers ordinarily incident to his employment. It devolves on the master, who finds it necessary and expedient to use hazardous agencies in the conduct of his business, to inform his servants, not informed on the subject, of the extraordinary risks and dangers attending their use, in order that they may avoid them by refusing to continue in the service, or may otherwise protect themselves against them. The evidence in the case, bearing on the question of defendant's negligence, was such as to present questions for solution by a jury; and it was error to direct a verdict for the defendant.

Judgment reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court for a new trial.

Winslow, Ch. J., took no part.

Marshall, J., dissenting (filed March 13, 1909):

In my opinion this case is clearly ruled in favor of respondent by Wiskie v. Montello Granite Co. 111 Wis. 443, 87 Am. St. Rep. 885, 87 N. W. 461, and the principle there referred to, exempting the master from the consequences to one servant from the negligence of his fellow servant. The trial judge doubtless supposed, as well in my opinion he might, that there was no fair way of distinguishing the two cases, or escaping the effect of the principle.

The logic indulged in, by my brethren, has support in some jurisdictions, but was repudiated by this court at quite an early day, and such repudiation has been uniformly adhered to.

I will say, in passing, that I have not the slightest idea the court now intends to adopt the doctrine which its opinion, as it seems, will be regarded as promulgating. At some future time the apparent departure from the long traveled road will be corrected. This case goes upon the theory that employment in a general enterprise may be, or, to put it stronger, is necessarily, divided up into different tasks, services, or departments, according to character, grade, and degree of danger; and that, in the law of negligence, fellowship in one branch of a general employment does not extend to those employed in the other.

How wide the doctrine stated is from the rule prevailing in this state, which is so familiar that it hardly need be stated, must be apparent at once.

Neither grade of work, particularity of group, within a broad general class of employees in a particular proprietor's business, nor degree of danger, nor rank of employment, is the test of fellowship between servants, in the law of negligence. The sole test is whether the persons concerned are employed in the same general enterprise, to accomplish the same general purpose, by the same master under the same general control, regardless of whether they are, at the particular time, engaged in the same branch of the work or not. Toner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 69 Wis. 188-198, 31 N. W. 104, 33 N. W. 433.

A station agent employed in a widely different branch of the business of operating a railroad from a train crew, the latter from a track crew, and that one from the roundhouse crew, all being in the common employment of operating the railroad, the engineer on the locomotive and the most humble trainman, the trackman wielding his shovel, the station agent, the most common workman moving freight about the depot,—are fellow servants. Toner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. supra; Cooper v. Milwaukee & P. du Ch. R. Co. 23 Wis. 668; Howland v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 230, 11 N. W. 529; Pease v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 61 Wis. 163, 20 N. W. 908; Peschel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 62 Wis. 349, 21 N. W. 269; Albrecht v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 108 Wis. 530, 53 L.R.A. 653, 84 N. W. 882; MacCarthy v. Whitcomb, 110 Wis. 113, 85 N. W. 707. These cases amply illustrate all I have said. All these are held fellow servants: A shoveler in a gravel pit and a train conductor. Naylor v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 53 Wis. 661, 11 N. W. 24. A snow shoveler and a member of a train crew. Howland v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Co. supra. The foreman and men engaged under him, whom he has full power to direct. Peschel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. supra. The track repair crew and the members of a crew on a passing train. Toner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. supra. The train crew on one train with the train crew on another. MacCarthy v. Whitcomb, supra. The men who load coal on locomotive tenders and the track walker injured by coal dropping from the tender. Schultz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Wis. 616, 58 Am. Rep. 881, 31 N. W. 321.

Perhaps as striking an illustration as any case that can be cited is Cooper v. Milwaukee & P. du Ch. R. Co. supra. It has been many, many times approved. The person injured, as said in Heine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 525, 17 N. W. 420, was engaged in a branch of the service not in any way connected with that in which the negligent employee causing the injury was engaged. The particular work of the one had no connection whatever with the particular work of the other, except the two services were in departments of the general business of operating the railroad.

It seems useless to pursue the matter further. Here, at the best for appellant, he was engaged in one branch and the blaster in another of the general business of a common employment of preparing the ground for the foundation of a mill. They came much nearer being engaged in the same particular work, if that was a legitimate test, than the injured and the injurer in any of the cases referred to.

The idea that an industrial operation under an employer is subject to be divided into specific tasks or departments according to kind of work, whether of common or expert character, so as to make corresponding divisions as to fellowship, has no support in our jurisprudence.

Let it be conceded, for the purposes of the case, that the specific work of doing the blasting was delegated wholly to Spanbauer, while the work of making the holes for him to place the dynamite in, and of excavating after the blasts were discharged, was delegated to others, including appellant. Concede, if we may, as my brethren say, that the two kinds of work were widely different, one being of a common and the other of an expert character. Also concede, for now, that the particular service of one was distinct from that of the other and that they were different in nature and hazards and dangers. If those features, under the rule prevailing here, suggest want of fellowship, I do not understand the rule.

True, say my brethren, "they (Spanbauer and appellant) both served a common master, and occupied the same place while performing their respective duties, but they were engaged in independent employments in the construction of the mill." That is, as I understand it, they were engaged in different tasks of the general work of construction. That concession, within all our cases, instead of indicating want of fellowship, indicates right the contrary, as I understand our decisions.

As the opinion goes: "Plaintiff was . . . not the servant of defendant, engaged in the operation of blasting with Spanbauer, who, alone, was the blaster." Thus suggesting, as before indicated, that a general employment is divisible into numerous special tasks as to fellowships. Where there is warrant for that suggestion I do not know.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

I think the ruling of the learned trial court was right and the judgment should be affirmed.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The General Index follows this.)

Abatement.

Of nuisance, see NUISANCE.

Action.

Right in action at law to attack release for fraud (Case Note) 915

Air.

Right of property owner to compensation for interference with light or air by railroad structure on company's own property (Case Note) 1061

Alimony.

See DIVORCE.

Architect.

Right to mechanic's lien for labor or material furnished on order of architect before abandonment of contract by contractor (Case Note) 89

Arms.

Constitutionality of right to bear arms (Case Note) 1007

Arrest.

See also FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Arrest under civil process for breach of warranty (Case Note) 844

Assault.

Effect of fact that combat was by agreement or mutual consent of parties upon civil liability for assault (Case Note) 907

Assignment for creditors.

Right of assignee for creditors to maintain partition (Case Note) 105

Attachment.

Validity of pledge or other transfer of stock of corporation when not made in the books of the company as against attachment (Case Note) 996

Attorneys.

Right of client to maintain trover or case for money collected by attorney (Case Note) 35

Auction.

As a nuisance (Case Note) 972

Right to withdraw property from an auction sale after it has been offered (Case Note) 1133

Automobiles.

Duty of pedestrian in street to watch for automobiles (Case Note) 232

Awnings.

Municipal liability for injury by overhanging awnings (Subject Note) 645

Power of municipal corporation to compel removal of awnings encroaching on street (Case Note) 146

Bail.

Validity of agreement to indemnify bail in a criminal case (Case Note) 58

Effect of granting new trial after a conviction, to extend the liability of accused's bond (Case Note) 861

What constitutes breach of re exeat bond (Case Note) 76

Bankruptcy.

Engaging in other business as affecting exemption of farmer from involuntary proceedings (Case Note) 148

Right of trustee to maintain partition (Case Note) 105

Set-off by bank against bankrupt's deposit as a preference within the bankruptcy law (Case Note) 863

Character of false statement which will prevent a discharge (Case Note) 1023

Omission of bankrupt to keep books as ground for refusing discharge (Case Note) 246

Right of bankrupt to discharge as affected by act of partner or agent (Case Note) 785

Banks.

See also CHECKS.

Set-off by bank against bankrupt's deposit as a preference within the bankruptcy law (Case Note) 863

Loss or prejudice to bank resulting from negligent failure on part of depositor or correspondent bank to give prompt notice of forgery, as a condition of its right to charge forged checks to latter's account (Case Note) 79

When is a bank insolvent within statute making it an offense to receive further deposits (Case Note) 444

Barriers.

In highway, see HIGHWAYS.

Bill board.
Municipal liability for injury by (Subject Note)	646		Duty of carrier to furnish cars of a type not owned by it (Case Note) 310
Blasting.			Cars.
Common laborers and persons engaged in blasting as fellow servants (Case Note)	1180		See CARRIERS.
Body execution.			Case.
Arrest under civil process for breach of warranty (Case Note)	844		Right of principal to maintain case for money collected by agent or attorney (Case Note) 35
Bonds.			Certified check.
As to bail bonds, see BAIL.			See CHECKS.
What constitutes breach of re exeat bond (Case Note)	76		Chattel mortgage.
Books.			Attempt to enforce lien under clause in a lease giving landlord a lien on crops and chattels as election preventing its enforcement as a chattel mortgage (Case Note) 259
Omission of bankrupt to keep books as ground for refusing to discharge (Case Note)	246		Validity of chattel mortgage of future earnings of threshing outfit (Case Note) 505
Brokers.			Checks.
Right of broker to purchase real estate listed with him for sale (Case Note)	1158		As to payment of, by bank, see BANKS.
Broker's right to commission where purchaser procured by him is financially unable to perform his contract (Case Note)	1168		Right of drawer to stop payment of certified check (Case Note) 290
Bucket shop.			Club.
As "place for gaming" (Case Note)	347		Applicability of liquor law to social club dispensing liquor to members (Case Note) 1095
Building and loan associations.			Collateral security.
Power of building and loan association to borrow money to pay withdrawing members (Case Note)	393		See PLEDGE.
Buildings.			Community.
Taking possession of building with knowledge of defects as waiver thereof as against contractor (Case Note)	872		Liability of community property to succession tax (Case Note) 208
Bulk sale law.			Compounding felony.
Constitutionality of (Case Note)	160		Contract procured by threats of prosecution of a relative (Case Note) 484
Business.			Conditional sale.
Contracts not to engage in rival business, see CONTRACTS.			See SALES.
Carriers.			Conflict of laws.
Termination of passenger's relation as such upon reaching destination (Case Note)	1019		Place of payment of debt as affecting jurisdiction to garnish same (Case Note) 264
Liability of carrier for injury to child passenger who exposes himself to danger in consequence of conduct of employee (Case Note)	1124		Consent.
Duty to guide or conduct passenger to or from train (Case Note)	1041		As affecting civil liability for assault (Case Note) 907
Duty of carrier to person at station for business consultation with individual passenger (Case Note)	837		Constitutional law.
Duty of carrier to persons who accompany passengers to, or wait for them at, station (Case Note)	833		As to use of school funds, see SCHOOLS.
Constitutionality of legislation affecting amount of liability or penalty for delay in delivery or for destruction of freight (Case Note)	126		Constitutional right to bear arms (Case Note) 1007
			Constitutionality of legislation affecting the amount of liability or penalty for delay in delivery, or for destruction of freight (Case Note) 126
			Constitutionality of statute making license, occupation, or privilege tax a lien on real property owned by one other than person assessed (Case Note) 42
			Constitutionality of "bulk sale" legislation (Case Note) 160

Contempt.

Summoning biased or otherwise improper jurors or talesman as a contempt (Case Note) 1018

Continuing offense.

Violation of Sunday law as (Case Note) 783

Contractor.

Taking possession of building with knowledge of defects as waiver thereof as against contractor (Case Note) 872

Contracts.

As to effect of duress, see DURESS.
With municipality, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.
For sale of real property, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.
Mutuality of contract of employment which by its terms is binding upon only one of the parties for the time designated (Case Note) 899
Parol agreement to take title to real property, sell the same, and account for the proceeds, as affected by the statute of frauds (Case Note) 298
Contract which fixes compensation at a certain amount per unit of work done, as entire or severable (Case Note) 1069
Applicability of provision for stipulated damages or penalty for delay in the completion of a contract, where the entire contract is abandoned or repudiated (Case Note) 350
Validity of agreement to indemnify bail in a criminal case (Case Note) 58
Entering another's employment as breach of covenant not to engage in rival business (Case Note) 769
Gift as a fraud on contract to will property (Case Note) 1154
Taking possession of building with knowledge of defects as waiver thereof, as against contractor (Case Note) 872
Effect of provision in deed for benefit of stranger thereto (Case Note) 221

Conversion.

As to equitable conversion, see WILLS.

Corporations.

As to building and loan associations, see BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.
Validity of pledge or other transfer of stock of corporation when not made in the books of the company as against attachments, executions, or subsequent transfers (Case Note) 998
Effect upon one's rights as a stockholder of the fact that paid-up stock was wrongfully issued to him for a sum less than its par value (Case Note) 1077
Right of stockholder to inspect books of corporation (Case Note) 185

Courts.

Place of payment of debt as affecting jurisdiction to garnish same (Case Note) 264
Superintending control of civil courts over courts-martial (Case Note) 413
Superintending control over inferior tribunals (Case Note) 942

Courts martial.

Superintending control of civil courts over courts martial (Case Note) 413

Covenant.

Against engaging in rival business, see CONTRACTS.

Criminal law.

Various particular crimes, see ASSAULT; BANKS; GAMBLING; LARCENY; SUNDAY.
As to bail, see BAIL.
As to evidence in criminal prosecution, see EVIDENCE.
Plea of guilty as affecting action for illegal arrest, false imprisonment, or malicious prosecution (Case Note) 295

Curtsey.

Right of curtesy in determinable fee (Case Note) 858
Curtsey in equity of redemption (Case Note) 454
Effect upon curtesy of death of issue before seisin by wife (Case Note) 825

Custom.

Effect of custom to give insured notice of maturity of premium where insured is not otherwise entitled to notice (Case Note) 1057

Damages.

Necessity of jury to compute damages on default judgment (Case Note) 1
Right of purchaser of goods to recover costs and other expenses incurred by him in defending a collateral action, as damages for breach of the seller's warranty (Case Note) 492
Applicability of provision for stipulated damages or penalty for delay in completion of a contract where the entire contract is abandoned or repudiated (Case Note) 350
Constitutionality of legislation affecting amount of liability or penalty for delay in delivery or for destruction of freight (Case Note) 126
Against municipality for injury from defect or obstruction in street (Subject Note) 763
Right of married woman to recover for loss of time, services, wages, or impaired capacity (Case Note) 125
Apprehension of injury to health as basis of recovery for mental anguish (Case Note) 458

Death.

Effect upon curtesy of death of issue before seisin by wife (Case Note) 825

Of parent to whom custody of child was awarded as affecting right of surviving parent (Case Note)	171	Electricity.
Effect of death of principal contractor on right of subcontractor or materialman to a lien or to payment by owner (Case Note)	45	Municipal liability for injuries by electric wires and appliances (Subject Note)	648
Deeds.		Eminent domain.
Replevin to recover deed of real property (Case Note)	507	Right of property owner to compensation for interference with light or air by railroad structure on company's own property (Case Note)	1061
Effect of provision in deed for benefit of stranger thereto (Case Note)	221	Equitable conversion.
Default.		See WILLS.
As to judgment by, see JUDGMENT.		Equity.
Effect of tender by vendee of purchase price before due to put other party in default (Case Note)	388	Power of equity to take jurisdiction because of multiplicity of actions at law for personal injuries growing out of a single tort (Case Note)	848
Depot.		Equity of redemption.
See CARRIERS.		Curtsey in equity of redemption (Case Note)	454
Determinable fee.		Escape.
Right of curtesy in (Case Note)	858	Admissibility of evidence of defendant's voluntary surrender or refusal to embrace an opportunity to escape (Case Note)	409
Discharge.		Estoppel.
In bankruptcy, see BANKRUPTCY.		Taking possession of building with knowledge of defects as waiver thereof as against contractor (Case Note)	872
Discovery and inspection.		Evidence.
Right of stockholder to inspect books of corporation (Case Note)	185	Receipt as, see RECEIPT.
Divorce and separation.		May incompetence of a minor to perform the duties of a particular employment be inferred from his minority alone (Case Note)	831
Settlement of property rights between husband and wife on account of divorce as implied revocation of will (Case Note)	1073	May breach of duty to employ or retain none but competent servants be inferred from the fact of their incompetence (Case Note)	322
Right of wife against whom an absolute divorce is granted to permanent alimony (Case Note)	421	Presumption of negligence of innkeeper from injury to guest or his property (Case Note)	1027
Effect of death of parent to whom custody of child was awarded upon rights of surviving parent (Case Note)	171	Right of plaintiff in action for malpractice to avail himself of privilege as against testimony of defendant or other physicians (Case Note)	1003
Drains and sewers.		Admissibility of evidence of defendant's voluntary surrender or refusal to embrace an opportunity to escape (Case Note)	409
Right of municipality to create nuisance by pollution at a point where its sewers discharge (Case Note)	1050	Does the fact that one was not a participant or actor in an accident or affray render his statements or exclamations inadmissible as res gestæ (Case Note)	133
Duress.		General condition and other accidents as evidence on negligence on part of municipality in respect of highway (Subject Note)	665
Contracts procured by threats of prosecution of a relative (Case Note)	484	Execution.
Ejectment.		Validity of pledge or other transfer of stock of corporation when not made in the books of the company as against execution (Case Note)	996
See IMPROVEMENTS.		Arrest under civil process for breach of warranty (Case Note)	844 Election.
Effect of insurer's election to rebuild, repair, or replace insured property after a loss (Case Note)	960
Election of remedies.
Attempt to enforce lien under clause in a lease giving landlord lien on crops and chattels, as election preventing its enforcement as a chattel mortgage (Case Note)	259

Exemplary damages.

See DAMAGES.

False imprisonment.

May false imprisonment be predicated of a partial or conditional restraint (Case Note)

968

Plea of guilty as affecting action for illegal arrest, false imprisonment, or malicious prosecution (Case Note)

295

Farmer.

See BANKRUPTCY.

Fees.

Of officers, see OFFICERS.

Fellow servant.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Fences.

Applicability of statutory provision for joint construction of line or division fence, where lands of one of adjoining owners are otherwise uninclosed (Case Note)

1092

Fight.

Effect of fact that combat was by agreement or mutual consent of parties upon civil liability for assault (Case Note)

907

Firemen.

Nature and circumstances of injury as affecting right to share in pension or insurance fund for policemen and firemen (Case Note)

1176

Fires.

Duty of railroad company to avoid interference with extinguishment of fires (Case Note)

1110

Foreman.

As fellow servant, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Forgery.

Payment of forged checks, see BANKS.

Fraud and deceit.

See also FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Gift as a fraud on contract to will property (Case Note)

1154

Right, in an action at law, to attack release for fraud (Case Note)

915

Fraudulent conveyances.

Validity of pledge or other transfer of stock of corporation when not made in books of company as against attachments, executions, or subsequent transfers (Case Note)

996

Game.

Larceny by fraudulent race or game (Case Note)

1164

Gaming.

Operation of slot machine as gambling (Case Note)

239

Bucket shop as "place for gaming" (Case Note)

347

Garnishment.

Garnishment of unearned salary (Case Note)

912

Place of payment of debt as affecting jurisdiction to garnish the same (Case Note)

264

Gas.

Gas plant as a nuisance (Case Note)

466

Gift.

Gift as a fraud on contract to will property (Case Note)

1154

Health.

Apprehension of injury to health as basis of recovery for mental anguish (Case Note)

458

Highways.

As to negligent acts in street not relating to the condition of streets, see NEGLIGENCE.

As to injury by automobile, see AUTOMOBILES.

Right of municipal corporation to cut or trim trees within limits of highway (Case Note)

809

Authority of municipal officers to cut or trim tree on private property to facilitate use of street (Case Note)

814

Power of municipal corporation to compel removal of awnings or signs encroaching on streets (Case Note)

146

Duty of abutting owner to preserve lateral support to highway (Case Note)

287

Obstruction of surface water in street (Case Note)

155

Liability of municipality for injuries caused by freezing of water accumulated on walk by reason of artificial conditions (Case Note)

201

Liability of municipal corporation for defects or obstructions in streets (Subject Note)

513

I. Scope

516

II. Different general rules as to liability.

a. The common-law rule

516

b. Rule of liability based on control and duty to keep in safe condition

518

c. Liability under statutes

523

d. Exemption from liability by statute

526

III. Power to perform duty as affecting liability.

a. Generally

529

b. Insufficiency of funds

529

c. Insufficient time or opportunity 531

IV. Application of rule as to nonliability for governmental and discretionary acts.

a. Generally

532

b. In particular classes of cases

535

V. Delegation of duty.		IX.—continued.
a. Right and effect of generally	538	b. As affected by locality and uses	585
b. Imposition on railway in street	539	c. With reference to whole width of street
c. Imposition on abutting owner	540	1. The roadway	588
VI. Cause of obstruction or defect as affecting liability.		2. The sidewalk	591
a. Generally	541	3. Use of sides of street
b. By act of city itself	542	(a) Generally	592
c. By act of agent or servant	544	(b) Objects outside of traveled track
d. By permission or license of city	547	(1) General rules	592
e. By independent contractor.		(2) Park strips	593
1. General rules where contract calls for obstruction	547	(3) Obstructions, excavations, etc., outside the right of way	595
2. Application in particular cases	548	(4) Obstructions in proximity to sidewalks	597
3. Injury collateral to contract work	549	d. What obstructions or defects impose liability
4. Effect of retention of control	550	1. Generally	598
5. Particular contract required by law	552	2. Obstructions authorized by law	600
f. By wrongdoer	552	3. Obstructions for general public convenience	600
g. By abutting owner	553	4. Obstructions for private or individual convenience	602
h. By act of railroad occupying street	553	5. Obstructions for improvement or repair
VII. Ways as to which the duty exists		(a) Generally	602
a. Generally	553	(b) Barriers, lights, etc.	604
b. The question of title, locality, etc.	554	(c) By abutting owner	606
c. Opening and improvement of ways	556	6. Particular obstructions and classes of obstructions
d. Dedication and acceptance	558	(a) Poles, posts, stumps, trees, etc.	607
e. Improvement, repair, and other acts of recognition as affecting		(b) Rubbish, refuse, etc.	610
1. Generally	560	(c) Storage of vehicles, lumber, etc.	612
2. Sufficiency of recognition	562	(d) Machines, tools, etc.	613
f. Particular ways and classes of ways		(e) Markets and other business or individual enterprises	614
1. Sidewalks		(f) Stones and other similar articles	615
(a) Generally	565	(g) Unevenness, inequalities	618
(b) Sidewalks made by citizens	568	(h) Slopes or grades	619
(c) Walks outside of highway	569	(i) Hydrants and other appliances pertaining to municipal waterworks	620
2. Bridges	571
3. Crossings	572
4. Alleys, tunnels, and passageways in public buildings	573
5. Park paths, bicycle paths, etc.	574
g. Streets in annexed territory	575
h. Abandonment and closing	575
VIII. The degree of diligence or care as affecting liability
a. General rules	577
b. Necessity of negligence to liability	579
c. What constitutes reasonable diligence	581
d. Reasonable diligence, how determined	583
IX. The degree of perfection required.
a. General rules	583

IX., d, 6—continued.

(j) Cellar ways, stairways, and other projections	622
(k) Railways in streets,	624
(l) Embankments	626
(m) Gutters and drains	627
(n) Holes and openings
(1) Generally	629
(2) For sewer purposes	631
(o) Defects and obstructions in side walks and crossings
(1) Breaks, excavations, and depressions	632
(2) Holes	634
(3) Hatchways, areas, and other openings	635
(4) Steps	637
(5) Unevenness, inequalities	640
(6) Holes in cross walks	641
(p) Decay and wear	642
7. Overhanging and falling objects
(a) Generally	644
(b) Awnings, sheds, etc.	645
(c) Signs, billboards, etc.	646
(d) Electric wires, appliances, etc.	648
(e) Trees, poles, etc.	649
(f) Other objects or structures in and over streets generally	650
(g) Objects and structures adjacent to streets	651
8. Objects calculated to frighten horses
(a) Generally	652
(b) Steam rollers, etc.	654
(c) Building material and other objects	655
9. Snow and ice
(a) Limitation to recent cases	656
(b) General rules	656
(c) Mere slipperiness	657
(d) Ordinary falls of snow	657
(e) Rough accumulations of snow and ice	658
(f) Time and opportunity for removal	661
(g) Snow and ice combined with defect in street	662

IX.—continued.

e. General condition and other accidents as evidence of negligence
1. General condition of street	665
2. Subsequent repair or removal of defect or obstruction	667
3. Other accidents	668
f. Sufficiency of way, how determined	670
X. Failure to prevent improper conduct in streets as affecting liability	671
XI. Precautions against injury
a. Warning of obstruction
1. General rules	671
2. Necessity of	673
3. Nature and sufficiency of barrier	676
4. Application to particular classes of obstructions
(a) Excavations, embankments, etc.	678
(b) Defective bridges	681
(c) Elevated streets and sidewalks	682
(d) Objects outside of way	684
b. Lighting streets	686
XII. Knowledge or notice of obstruction
a. Necessity of, to liability
1. General rules	689
2. Effect of special statutory provisions	692
b. Actual knowledge or notice
1. General rules	694
2. How established	695
3. Officers or agents whose knowledge or notice is binding	697
4. Creation of obstruction as affecting
(a) By act of city itself	701
(b) By officers, agents, or servants	703
(c) By contractor	704
(d) Under permit or license	705
c. Constructive or implied notice
1. General rules	705
2. Duration of existence of obstruction as affecting
(a) Generally	708
(b) Visible and notorious defects as distinguished from latent ones	711
3. Cause naturally calculated to produce obstruction	714
4. General defectiveness or obstruction as affecting particular defect	717

XII. c—continued.
5. Other accidents	721
6. Place, circumstances, etc.	721
7. Removal of safeguard by unlooked-for event	723
8. The duty to inspect	725
9. Time to remove	728
d. Question for the jury	730
XIII. Injury as result of obstruction or defect
a. Generally	732
b. Proximate cause
1. General rules	732
2. Immediate contact with obstruction	735
3. The primary or original cause as the proximate one	737
4. Active as distinguished from passive agency of obstruction	739
5. Fright of horses as affecting	742
XIV. Right to redress of the person injured
a. With reference to the person
1. Nature of the injury	746
2. Character, capacity, and condition	748
b. With reference to the use of the street
1. General rules	750
2. Loitering deviation	751
3. Play	753
4. Relative use of footways and carriage ways	754
5. Use of bicycles and automobiles	756
XV. Notice of claim and cause of injury	757
XVI. Effect of concurrent liability of third person	760
XVII. Contributory negligence	763
XVIII. Damages.
a. Generally	763
b. Exemplary damages	764
XIX. Conclusion	765
Duty of town or municipality to provide barriers to protect traveler from obstructions outside the highway (Case Note)		980
May injured person's place of residence be required to be stated in notice of accident or injury as condition of liability of municipality (Case Note)		938
Sufficiency of description of injury in notice given thereof as a condition of municipal liability (Case Note)		804 Horse.
Negligence in leaving horse unhitched in highway (Case Note)		958
Hotel.
What constitutes, within liquor license law (Case Note)		107
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)
Husband and wife.
As to estate by curtesy, see CURTESY.
As to divorce, see DIVORCE.
Liability of community property to succession tax (Case Note)		208
Right of married woman to recover for loss of time, services, wages, or impaired capacity to labor (Case Note)		215
Settlement of property rights between husband and wife on account of divorce as implied revocation of will (Case Note)		1073
Ice.
On sidewalk, see HIGHWAYS.
Improvements.
Plowing and cultivating land as an "improvement" (Case Note)		378
Incompetent persons.
Effect upon liability of surety of principal's incapacity to contract (Case Note)		1000
Independent contractor.
Liability of municipality for obstruction or defect in street caused by independent contract (Subject Note)		547
Infants.
As to custody of child in case of divorce, see DIVORCE.
Liability of carrier for injury to, see CARRIER.
Liability of master for injury to, see MASTER AND SERVANT.
Injunction.
Power of equity to take jurisdiction because of multiplicity of actions at law for personal injuries growing out of a single tort (Case Note)		848
Innkeepers.
What constitutes hotel or tavern within liquor license law (Case Note)		107
Presumption of negligence of innkeeper from injury to guest or his property (Case Note)		1027
Insane persons.
See INCOMPETENT PERSONS.
Insolvency.
When is a bank insolvent within statute making it an offense to receive further deposits (Case Note)		444
Insurance.
Misrepresentation as to dimensions of insured building (Case Note)		340
Vendee under executory contract as owner, where vendor holds legal title (Case Note)		775
Effect of custom to give insured notice of maturity of premium where insured is not otherwise entitled to notice (Case Note)		1037
Liability of insurer for property destroyed by mob or during riot (Case Note)		277

Liability of insurer for value of party wall (Case Note)	226	Constitutionality of statute making license occupation, or privilege tax a lien on real property owned by one other than the person assessed (Case Note)	42
Effect of insurer's election to rebuild, repair, or replace the insured property after a loss (Case Note)	960
Right of insurance company, in making payment of proceeds of life policy, to rely on clause giving company option as to payee, and making receipt conclusive evidence of payment to proper person (Case Note)	928	Liens.
Intoxicating liquor.		As to mechanics' liens, see MECHANICS' LIENS.
Do statutes forbidding the sale of a certain class or classes of liquor include nonintoxicating liquor (Case Note)	1146	Of landlord's lien, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.
What constitutes hotel or tavern within liquor-license law (Case Note)	107	Of vendor or purchaser, see VENDOR AND PURCHASER.
Applicability of liquor laws to social club dispensing liquors to members (Case Note)	1095	As to lien of taxes, see TAXES.
Right to levy legal process upon intoxicating liquors (Case Note)	1118	Light.
Judgment.		Right of property owner to compensation for interference with light or air by railroad structure on company's own property (Case Note)	1061
Necessity of jury to compute damages on default judgment (Subject Note)	1	Limitation of actions.
I. American cases	1	When does statute commence to run against action for damages for the flooding of land caused by the digging of a ditch or drain (Case Note)	894
II. English cases	33	When does statute begin to run against action for damages to land on account of obstructing stream or surface water (Case Note)	886
III. Summary	35	Malicious prosecution.
Jury.		Plea of guilty as affecting action for malicious prosecution (Case Note)	295
Summoning biased or otherwise improper jurors or talesmen as a contempt (Case Note)	1018	Malpractice.
Necessity of, to compute damages on default judgment (Subject Note)	1	See PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.
Landlord and tenant.		Mandamus.
Attempt to enforce lien under clause in a lease giving landlord a lien on crops and chattels as election preventing its enforcement as a chattel mortgage (Case Note)	259	Mandamus to compel municipal or other public officer or board to perform duty resting in contract alone (Case Note)	801
Larceny.		Markets.
Larceny by fraudulent race or game (Case Note)	1164	Liability of municipality for obstruction or defect in street by market (Subject Note)	614
Lateral support.		Master and servant.
Duty of abutting owner to preserve lateral support to highway (Case Note)	287	Mutuality of contract of employment which, by its terms, is binding upon only one of the parties for the time designated (Case Note)	899
Levy and seizure.		Garnishment of unearned salary (Case Note)	912
Validity of pledge or other transfer of stock of corporation when not made in the books of the company as against attachments or executions (Case Note)	996	Liability of master for injury to employee under statutory age of employment as affected by misrepresentations as to his age by himself or his parents (Case Note)	500
Right to levy legal process upon intoxicating liquors (Case Note)	1118	Effect on master's liability to servant of delegation of personal duty to independent contractor (Case Note)	798
Libel and slander.		Duty and liability under Federal and state railway safety-appliance acts (Case Note)	473
Privilege as affected by extent of publication (Case Note)	361	May breach of duty to employ or retain none but competent servants be inferred in fact from their incompetence (Case Note)	822
License.
Municipal liability for defect or obstruction in street by person under a license from the city (Subject Note)	547

- May incompetence of minor to perform duties of a particular employment be inferred from his minority alone (Case Note) 381
- May one employing child under statutory age rely on contributory negligence or assumption of risk to defeat liability for personal injuries sustained by the latter (Case Note) 876
- Liability of master as affected by inability of fellow servant to understand English (Case Note) 39
- Common laborers and persons engaged in blasting as fellow servants (Case Note) 1180
- Operatives employed in industrial plant as fellow servants of employees engaged in operation of private railroad conducted in connection therewith (Case Note) 354
- Section foreman as a fellow servant of the members of the crew with respect to operation of hand car (Case Note) 434
- Liability of municipal corporation for defect or obstruction in street caused by servants (Subject Note) 544
- Materialman.
As to lien of, see MECHANICS' LIENS.
- Mechanics' liens.
As to liens generally, see LIENS.
Mechanics' lien on public buildings (Case Note) 261
Right to mechanics' lien for labor or material furnished on order of architect before abandonment of contract by contractor (Case Note) 89
Effect of death of principal contractor on rights of subcontractor or materialman to a lien, or to payment by owner (Case Note) 45
- Mental anguish.
See DAMAGES.
- Mob.
Liability of insurer for property destroyed by mob or during riot (Case Note) 277
- Mortgage.
As to chattel mortgage, see CHATTEL MORTGAGE.
Curtesy in equity of redemption (Case Note) 454
Right of junior mortgagee as to surplus upon a foreclosure sale under a senior mortgage, in a proceeding to which he was not a party (Case Note) 47
- Multiplicity of actions.
See EQUITY.
- Municipal corporations.
As to powers or liability in respect of highway, see HIGHWAYS.
As to municipal officers generally, see OFFICERS.
- Power of municipal corporation to compel removal of awnings or signs encroaching on street (Case Note) 146
- Right of seller of property to municipal corporation under invalid contract to retake or remove the property upon refusal of payment (Case Note) 110
- Right of municipality to create nuisance by pollution at a point where its sewers discharge (Case Note) 1050
- Mutuality.
See CONTRACTS.
- Necessity.
Justifying entry on another's land (Case Note) 152
- Ne exeat.
What constitutes breach of ne exeat bond (Case Note) 76
- Negligence.
As to proximate cause, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.
As to automobiles, see AUTOMOBILES.
Of master or servant, see MASTER AND SERVANT.
Of or toward person at railroad crossing, see RAILROADS.
Of street railway company, see STREET RAILWAYS.
Negligence in leaving horse unhitched in highway (Case Note) 958
- New trial.
Effect of granting new trial after conviction to extend liability on accused's bond (Case Note) 861
- Normal school.
Use of common school or teachers' training school (Case Note) 1033
- Notice.
See also INSURANCE.
As condition of municipal liability for injury on highway, see HIGHWAYS.
- Nuisance.
Auction as a nuisance (Case Note) 972
Gas plant as a nuisance (Case Note) 466
Right of municipality to create nuisance by pollution at the point where its sewers discharge (Case Note) 1050
- Occupation.
See LICENSE.
- Occupying claimants' acts.
See IMPROVEMENTS.
- Officer.
Effect of detachment from a political division, of territory in which an officer resides, upon his tenure of the office (Case Note) 358
Is power conferred upon municipality to remove its officers exclusive (Case Note) 1128

Mandamus to compel municipal or other public officer or board to perform duty resting in contract alone (Case Note)	801	Plowing.
Right of public to fees unlawfully collected by officer for his own benefit (Case Note)	1015	Plowing and cultivating land as an "improvement" (Case Note)	378
Parent and child.		Poles.
As to custody of child, see DIVORCE.		Municipal liability for injury by poles in highway (Subject Note)	649
Parties.		Police.
Effect of provision in deed for benefit of stranger thereto (Case Note)	221	Nature and circumstances of injury as affecting right to share in pension or insurance fund for policemen and firemen (Case Note)	1176
Partition.		Political division.
Right of trustee in bankruptcy, or assignee for creditors, to maintain partition (Case Note)	105	Effect of detachment from a political division of territory in which an officer resides upon his tenure of office (Case Note)	358
Partnership.		Preference.
See BANKRUPTCY.		As affected by bankruptcy, see BANKRUPTCY.
Party wall.		Principal and agent.
Liability of insurer for value of party wall (Case Note)	223	As to brokers, see BROKERS.
Right of one party to raise height of party wall (Case Note)	386	Right of principal to maintain trover or case for money collected by agent or attorney (Case Note)	35
Passengers.		Principal and surety.
See CARRIERS.		Effect upon liability of surety of principal's incapacity to contract (Case Note)	1000
Payment.		Privilege.
Place where debt payable as affecting jurisdiction to garnish same (Case Note)	264	As to libel or slander, see LIBEL AND SLANDER.
Penalty.		As to evidence, see EVIDENCE.
Constitutionality of legislation affecting amount of liability or penalty for delay in delivery or for destruction of freight (Case Note)	123	See also LICENSE.
Applicability of provision for stipulated damages or penalty for delay in completion of a contract where the entire contract is abandoned or repudiated (Case Note)	350	Privileged communications.
Pension.		See EVIDENCE; LIBEL AND SLANDER.
Nature and circumstances of injury as affecting right to share in pension or insurance fund for policemen and firemen (Case Note)	1176	Protection.
Physician and surgeon.		Of trade secrets, see TRADE SECRETS.
Right of plaintiff in action for malpractice to avail himself of privilege as against testimony of defendant or other physicians (Case Note)	1003	Proximate cause.
Degree of skill and care required of specialist (Case Note)	1030	Weather conditions as an independent intervening, efficient cause (Case Note)	92
Pledge.		Defect or obstruction in street as proximate cause of injury (Subject Note)	732
Validity of pledge or other transfer of stock of corporation when not made in the books of the company, as against attachments, executions, or subsequent transfers (Case Note)	996	Publication.
Effect of taking collateral security upon conditional sale (Case Note)	1065	As affecting libel or slander, see LIBEL AND SLANDER.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)		Public buildings.
		As to mechanics' liens on, see, MECHANICS' LIENS.
		Public lands.
		See IMPROVEMENTS.
		Public money.
		As to use of school funds, see SCHOOLS.
		Race.
		Larceny by fraudulent race or game (Case Note)	1164

Railroads.

As to liability for injury to servant,
see MASTER AND SERVANT.

As to street railways, see STREET RAIL-WAYS.

Right of property owner to compensation for interference with light or air by railroad structure on the company's own property (Case Note) 1061

Liability of municipality for defect or obstruction in street by railroad (Subject Note) 553

Duty of railroad company to avoid interference with extinguishment of fires
(Case Note) 1110

Right of one crossing railway tracks to assume that approaching train will stop at intervening station (Case Note) 380

Real property.

Deeds of, see DEEDS.

As to curtesy in, see CURTESY.

Receipt.

Right of insurance company in making payment of proceeds of life policy to rely on clause giving company option as to pay and making receipt conclusive evidence of payment to proper persons (Case Note) 928

Relatives.

Contract procured by threats of prosecution of a relative (Case Note) 484

Release.

Right in action at law to attack release for fraud (Case Note) 915

Replevin.

Replevin to recover deed of real property (Case Note) 507

Res geste.

See EVIDENCE.

Residence.

Requiring one's residence to be stated in notice of accident or injury as condition of municipal liability (Case Note) 938

Res ipsa loquitur.

See EVIDENCE.

Riot.

Liability of insurer for property destroyed by mob or during riot (Case Note) 277

Runaway.

Negligence in leaving horse unhitched in highway (Case Note) 958

Safety appliance acts.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Salary.

Garnishment of unearned salary (Case
Note) 912

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Sale.

As to damage for breach of warranty,
see DAMAGES.

At auction, see AUCTION.

Constitutionality of bulk sale legislation (Case Note) 160

Delivery on week day pursuant to contract made on Sunday (Case Note) 88

Effect of taking collateral security upon conditional sale (Case Note) 1065

Right of seller of property to municipal corporation under invalid contract to take or remove property upon refusal of payment (Case Note) 110

Arrest under civil process for breach of warranty (Case Note) 844.

Schools.

Use of common school funds for normal school or teachers' training school (Case Note) 1033

Secrets.

See TRADE SECRETS.

Set-off.

By bank against bankrupt's deposit as a preference within bankruptcy law (Case Note) 863

Settlement.

Between husband and wife, see HUS-BAND AND WIFE.

Sidewalk.

See HIGHWAYS.

Signs.

Power of municipal corporation to compel removal of signs encroaching on street (Case Note) 146

Municipal liability for injury by falling signs (Subject Note) 646

Slot machine.

Operation of, as gambling (Case Note) 239

Snow.

Municipal liability for injury by snow in street, see HIGHWAYS.

Specialists.

Degree of care and skill required of specialists (Case Note) 1030

Station.

See CARRIERS.

Statute of frauds.

See CONTRACTS.

Steam roller.

Municipal liability for injury caused by (Subject Note) 654

Street railways.

Duty of steam railroad or street railroad company to avoid interference with extinguishment of fires (Case
Note) 1110

Duty of person in charge of street car upon perceiving an object the character of which is unknown, but which is in fact a person helpless on or near the track (Case Note)	987	Trespass. May entry upon land which would otherwise constitute a trespass be justified by private necessity (Case Note)	152
Subcontractor. Lien of, see MECHANICS' LIENS.		Trial. See also JURY.
Sunday. Violation of Sunday law as a continuing offense (Case Note)	783	Trover. Right of principal to maintain trover or case for money collected by agent or attorney (Case Note)	85
Delivery on week day pursuant to contract made on Sunday (Case Note)	86	Vendor and purchaser. As to statute of frauds, see CONTRACTS. Vendee under executory contract as owner for purposes of insurance where vendor holds legal title (Case Note)	775
Superintending control. Over inferior tribunals (Case Note)	942	Effect of tender by vendee of purchase price before due to put other party in default (Case Note)	338
Of civil courts over courts martial (Case Note)	413	Right of vendee under executory contract to a lien on the land for the amount paid thereon where the contract fails or is rescinded (Case Note)	175
Surplus. On mortgage foreclosure, see MORTGAGE.		Wages. Garnishment of unearned salary (Case Note)	912
Talesmen. Summoning biased talesmen as a contempt (Case Note)	1013	Right of married woman to recover for loss of (Case Note)	215
Tavern. Generally, see INNKEEPER. What constitutes, within liquor license law (Case Note)	107	Waiver. Taking possession of building with knowledge of defects as waiver thereof as against contractor (Case Note)	872
Taxes. Constitutionality of statute making a license, occupation or privilege tax a lien on real property owned by one other than the person assessed (Case Note)	42	Warranty. On sale of goods generally, see SALE. Damages for breach of warranty on sale of goods, see DAMAGES.
Liability of community property to succession (Case Note)	208	Waters. When does statute of limitations commence to run against action for damages for flooding of land caused by the digging of a ditch or drain (Case Note)	894
Tender. Effect of tender by vendee of purchase price before due, to put other party in default (Case Note)	388	Right of municipality to create nuisance by pollution at a point where its sewers discharge (Case Note)	1050
Thrashing machine. Validity of chattel mortgage of future earnings of (Case Note)	505	Obstruction of surface water in city (Case Note)	155
Tort. Power of equity to take jurisdiction because of multiplicity of actions at law for personal injuries growing out of a single tort (Case Note)	848	Weather. Weather conditions as an independent intervening efficient cause (Case Note)	92
Town. Duty of, with respect to highways, see HIGHWAYS.		Wills. Gift as a fraud on contract to will property (Case Note)	1154
Trade secrets. Protection of trade secrets (Case Note)	933	Settlement of property rights between husband and wife on account of divorce as implied revocation of will (Case Note)	1078
Trees. Authority of municipal officers to cut or trim trees on private property to facilitate use of highway (Case Note)	814	When is there such a failure of testator's purpose or object as to preclude the application of the doctrine of equitable conversion (Case Note)	117
Right of municipal corporation to cut or trim trees within limits of highway (Case Note)	809	As of what time does conversion take place under a direction to sell real property, which postpones the sale to a definitely ascertainable time subsequent to the testator's death (Case Note)
Municipal liability for injury by trees in highway (Subject Note)	649

GENERAL INDEX

NOTES ARE INDEXED BY THE WORD "ANNOTATED" AFTER THE PARAGRAPHS TO WHICH THEY APPLY.

(Separate Index to Notes Precedes this.)

ABANDONMENT.

Of logs placed in river, see Logs, 4.

ABUTTING OWNERS.

Right of owners of land abutting on park to cut grass in park, see Parks.

On highways, see Highways.

ACCEPTANCE.

Of goods purchased, see Sale 6.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

ACTION OR SUIT.

By stockholder, see Corporations, 7, 8.

Premature; conditions precedent.

One who, because of the unlawful suspension of his child from a public school, becomes liable for board and tuition in another district, cannot maintain an action for damages against those responsible for the suspension, as soon as he has arranged for accommodation in such district and before he has paid his money. Douglas v. Campbell, 20: 205, 116 S. W. 211, — Ark. —.

ACT OF GOD.

Where a cover is put over growing plants and fruit to protect them from ordinary and usual cold and frost, and the cover is burned by the negligence of another, injury to the growing plants and fruit by ordinary and usual cold and frost that should have been expected at the time and place of the negligence is not such an act of God as will relieve from liability the party who negligently burned the cover. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

ADMINISTRATORS.

See Executors and Administrators.

ADMISSIONS.

See Evidence.

ADVERTISING.

Power of state to forbid publication of advertisements of liquors kept for sale in other states, see Commerce, 1; Statutes, 3.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

AGENCY.

See Principal and Agent.

AIR.

Compensation for interference with, see Eminent Domain, 1.

ALIMONY.

See Divorce and Separation, 1, 2.

AMENDMENT.

Of order overruling motion for new trial, see Motions and Orders, 2.

Of pleading, see Pleading, 1.

AMUSEMENTS.

False imprisonment by restraint upon person refusing to pay entrance fee, see False Imprisonment, 1.

ANIMALS.

Constitutionality of statute levying per capita tax on dogs, see Constitutional Law, 9.

Liability for injuries due to frightening of horse by obstruction in highway, see Highways, 3.

Pleading in complaint for injuries by frightening of horse on highway, see Pleading, 6, 7.

Liability of master for injury by horse in hands of servant, see Master and Servant, 23.

Liability for injury done by horse left unattended in street, see Negligence, 10.

Contributory negligence of one injured by runaway horse, see Negligence, 11.

ANTENUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

See Husband and Wife, 3.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

Record on appeal.

1. The filing of the necessary papers to make or complete a record on appeal during the months of July and August is not prevented by a statutory provision that all proceedings to make or complete the record on appeal shall be suspended during those months. Young v. Lemieux, 20: 160, 65 Atl. 426, 79 Conn. 434.

2. Compliance with a statute directing the præcipe for a transcript of record to be copied in the transcript is sufficient to present the record to the reviewing court, although a former statute requires the præcipe to be appended to the transcript. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Strange, 20: 1041, 84 N. E. 819, — Ind. —.

3. The alleged erroneous refusal of a trial court to sustain a motion to re-fer a case to a master for further findings will not be considered upon appeal, where the record does not affirmatively show that the motion was ever acted upon by the court and exceptions taken thereto by the complaining party. Ecker v. Ecker, 20: 421, 98 Pac. 918, — Okla. —.

4. A motion for new trial is a part of the record without a bill of exceptions, and is covered by a præcipe for a complete transcript of record. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Strange, 20: 1041, 84 N. E. 819, — Ind. —.

Hearing and determination; presumptions.

5. Where a record is silent upon the question of a referee having taken an oath as required by law, the presumption will be indulged that such oath was taken; and, even though omitted it will be held an irregularity only, and waived by a party who proceeds to trial without objection on this point. Logan v. Brown, 20: 298, 95 Pac. 441, — Okla. —.

Objections as to which party is estopped.

6. An accused who erroneously procures the introduction of nonprejudicial testimony as to the intoxicating properties of malt liquor alleged to have been unlawfully sold cannot complain thereof upon appeal. Luther v. State, 20: 1146, 120 N. W. 125, — Neb. —.

Discretionary matters.

7. The ruling of a trial court that proof of insolvency at a particular date is not too remote to be of evidentiary significance as circumstantially bearing on the question of like insolvency at an earlier date is a decision as to the competency of such evidence, and should not be disturbed on appeal unless clearly wrong. Ellis v. State, 20: 444, 119 N. W. 1110, — Wis. —.

Questions not raised below.

8. The objection that defendant, an unincorporated voluntary association, was sued in its common name, cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Iron Moulders' Union No. 125 v. Allis-Chalmers Co. 20: 315, 166 Fed. 45, — C. C. A. —.

9. Objections to the time of making statements as to what counsel intended to prove cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Houren v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 20: 1110, 86 N. E. 611, 236 Ill. 620.

10. The question of the effect of vacancy of a building without knowledge of the insurer, prior to the issuance of a vacancy permit, upon the validity of the policy, cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —.

11. A question of variance between pleading and proof cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Houren v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 20: 1110, 86 N. E. 611, 236 Ill. 620.

Errors waived or cured below.

12. The admission of incompetent evidence is not reversible error if the objecting party elicited on cross-examination evidence to the same effect. Stewart & Co. v. Harman, 20: 228, 70 Atl. 333, 108 Md. 446.

Review of facts.

13. Where, in a suit, defendant denies any liability to plaintiff and any foundation for the suit, but agrees for a reference of the same for trial before a referee, it is not error for the court, in its order, to state, "it appearing to the court that this is a case involving an accounting," etc., in the absence of any evidence that the referee was influenced in his findings thereby. Logan v. Brown, 20: 298, 95 Pac. 441, — Okla. —.

14. Technical errors which do not affect the substantial right of the defendant will not be considered upon appeal, where the record shows that a conviction was fairly obtained. United States v. Hargo, 20: 1013, 98 Pac. 1021, — Okla. —.

Grounds for reversal.

15. Admitting expert testimony upon the question of the dangerous character of a machine at which a minor is set at work, in an action by him to hold his employer liable for an injury, is not reversible error where the machinery is so dangerous that the court will take judicial notice of the danger. Braasch v. Michigan Stove Co. 20: 500, 118 N. W. 366, 153 Mich. 652.

16. The erroneous admission, in an action against a street car company to recover damages for the death of a person killed on the track, of evidence of a statement by the conductor at the time of the accident admonishing the motorman to make no statement, is not sufficiently prejudicial to require a reversal of a judgment against the company. Louisville R. Co. v. Johnson, 20: 133, 115 S. W. 207, — Ky. —.

17. In an action for the price of hay which was to be of a certain quality an error in the admission of evidence that an intending purchaser from the buyer would not take it is rendered nonprejudicial by his testifying fully as a witness as to its quality. Eaton v. Blackburn, 20: 53, 96 Pa. 870, — Or. —.

18. It is not prejudicial error to permit a witness by whom the defendant in a criminal case is attempting to prove good character to be asked if witness and defendant had not smoked opium together in a disreputable resort, if the answer is no. State v. Donaldson, 20: 1164, 99 Pac. 447, — Utah, —.

19. Upon the question of perjury on the part of one who swore that certain persons were properly registered as voters from a certain place, the admission of evidence of a prior conversation tending to show that he knew that they could not properly register from that place is not prejudicial error, although it contains statements tending to show the commission of another crime, if the jury is cautioned to disregard that portion of it. People v. Cahill, 20: 1084, 86 N. E. 39, 193 N. Y. 232.

20. The exclusion of evidence of an assistant surgeon at an operation, tending to corroborate the evidence of the one who performed the operation, as to conditions found which bear upon the liability of another physician for malpractice, cannot, where the verdict was against defendant, be held non-prejudicial, if it was properly admissible, on the theory that it was merely cumulative. Capron v. Douglass, 20: 1003, 85 N. E. 827, 193 N. Y. 11.

21. The question whether instructions given on the trial of a suit for libel regarding particular questions in the case, not related to that of damages, misstate the law, becomes immaterial as not affecting the plaintiff's substantial rights, where the jury finds specially from the evidence that the plaintiff suffered no damage, since it will not be presumed that such finding was induced by instructions regarding points not related to damages. Coleman v. MacLennan, 20: 361, 98 Pac. 281, — Kan. —.

22. A reviewing court will not reverse a judgment for error in an instruction in an action by a minor to recover damages for personal injuries, which does not expressly deny a recovery for reduced earning capacity during minority, to which no exception was taken at the time, although the statute permits the assignment of errors upon the charge after judgment, where, from the whole instruction, the jury must have understood that such damages could not be allowed, they having been instructed that he could not recover for lost time. Braasch v. Michigan Stove Co. 20: 500, 118 N. W. 366, 153 Mich. 652.

23. Mere failure to instruct the jury on a particular issue is not reversible error, unless a specific instruction, good in point of law, covering the omission, is requested. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —.

24. It is reversible error for the judge to communicate with the jury otherwise than as provided by law, as by holding conferences with the foreman not in open court. Texas Midland R. Co. v. Byrd, 20: 429, 115 S. W. 1163, — Tex. —.

25. A judgment of conviction of murder will be reversed where the record shows that, after the regular panel of jurors had been exhausted, the deputy marshal, in summoning additional talesmen, improperly discriminated against men acquainted with defendant's counsel, for the purpose of obtaining the conviction. United States v. Hargo, 20: 1013, 98 Pac. 1021, — Okla. —.

26. The taking of a hat which had been introduced in evidence in an action for damages for an assault and battery, to the jury room, constitutes an unprejudicial irregularity not affording ground for a reversal, where the evidence adduced upon a motion for a new trial showed beyond question that the act was an innocent mistake of one of the jurors, and that no use was made of the hat by the jury which could in any way affect or influence the minds of the jurors or work any injury to the defendant. Morris v. Miller, 20: 907, 119 N. W. 458, — Neb. —.

27. A trial court which deems the verdict in an action for damages to be excessive may impose upon the successful party the alternative of accepting a reduced amount or of submitting to a new trial; but it has no power to render judgment for a smaller sum against the plaintiff's objection, after refusal to remit, and such action is error as to both parties. Cogswell v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 20: 837, 99 Pac. 923, — Okla. —.

Judgment.
28. A judgment will not be reversed because of an instruction which, although not affecting the real controversy between the parties, allows damages to one party to which he is not entitled, where the amount found under it can be segregated from the rest of the verdict if the successful party will remit such amount. Eaton v. Blackburn, 20: 53, 96 Pac. 870, — Or. —.

29. A creditor upon whose objection a bankrupt is denied his discharge for failure to disclose assets will not be required to pay the costs of appeal, although the decision is reversed, where the bankrupt refused to furnish information necessary to a proper disposition of the case. Re McCrea, 20: 246, 161 Fed. 246, 88 C. C. A. 282.

APPORTIONMENT.

Of costs where both parties obtain judgment, see Costs.

ARBITRATION.

Of loss of insured property, see Insurance, 19.

ARREST.

By police officer without warrant, see False Imprisonment, 2, 3.

Ne exeat bond to secure release from arrest, see Ne Exeat.

A warrant describing defendant as of a certain municipality in a certain county located within the state is sufficient to determine his residence within the United States, so as to entitle him to the benefit of a statutory exemption from arrest for debt. Caldbeck v. Simanton, 20: 844, 71 Atl. 881, — Vt. —.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

Taking object in evidence in action for, into jury room as prejudicial error, see Appeal and Error, 26.

Evidence in action for, see Evidence, 34.
Instruction as to right of self defense in action for assault, see Trial, 15.

1. A policeman on an Indian reservation who assaults and imprisons a person of Indian blood who, upon going to a train to meet his wife and children, disregards his directions to keep back from the entrance to the train, is liable therefor in damages. Deragon v. Sero, 20: 842, 118 N. W. 839.

2. Where two persons engage voluntarily in a fight, either can maintain an action against the other to recover the actual damages for the injuries he may receive; and the fact that the combat was by agreement or mutual consent of the parties to it is no defense. Morris v. Miller, 20: 907, 119 N. W. 458, — Neb. —. (Annotated)

ASSIGNMENT.

Of stock, see Corporations, 2, 3.
Burden of proving fraud in assignment of legacy, see Evidence, 5.

ASSOCIATIONS.

Objecting for first time on appeal that association was sued in its common name, see Appeal and Error, 8.
See also Building and Loan Associations.

ASSUMPSIT.

Right of state manager to maintain action to recover from agent premiums collected and not paid in, see Parties.

ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

By passenger, see Carriers, 12.
By servant, see Master and Servant, 12.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Power of, to remove municipal officers, see Officers, 1, 2.

1. A statute requiring county attorneys to prosecute violations of statutes regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors does not limit or exclude the power of the state, through the attorney general, to prosecute such violations. State ex rel. Young v. Robinson, 20: 1127, 112 N. W. 269, 101 Minn. 277.

2. The attorney general of a state possesses, in addition to the authority expressly conferred upon him by statute, all common-law powers incident to and inherent in the office. State ex rel. Young v. Robinson, 20: 1127, 112 N. W. 269, 101 Minn. 277.

ATTRACTIVE NUISANCE.

Injury to children by, see Negligence, 8, 9.

AUCTION.

Forfeiture of auctioneer's license as penalty in civil suit by other merchant, see License.

As nuisance, see Nuisances, 5.

1. A bidder at a public auction may withdraw his offer to purchase, or the owner his offer to sell, at any time before the bid is accepted by the fall of the hammer. Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 20: 1133, 120 N. W. 39, — Minn. —.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

2. A bid for property at public auction is merely an offer to purchase at the price named, and no contractual relation arises until acceptance of the bid. Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 20: 1133, 120 N. W. 39 — Minn. —.

3. An announcement or advertisement that certain property will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder is not an offer to sell which becomes binding, even conditionally, on the owner when a bid is made, but is a mere declaration of an intention to hold an auction at which bids will be received. Anderson v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 20: 1133, 120 N. W. 39, — Minn. —. (Annotated)

AUTOMOBILES.

Contributory negligence of person injured by, as question for jury, see Trial, 4.

Cross-examination of plaintiff in action for injuries by, see Witnesses, 1.

A pedestrian is not bound, as matter of law, when lawfully using the public highways, to be continuously looking or listening to ascertain if auto cars are approaching, under penalty that, upon his failure to do so, if he is injured his own negligence must be conclusively presumed. Gerhard v. Ford Motor Co. 20: 232, 119 N. W. 904, — Mich. —. (Annotated)

AWNINGS.

Requiring removal of stationary awnings, see Municipal Corporations, 1, 2; Trial, 2.

BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Validity of bond to indemnify bail, see Contracts, 11.

Right of bailor to whom bond for indemnity has been given to have deed by obligor in bond set aside, see Fraudulent Conveyances, 4.

Ne exeat bond to secure release from arrest, see Ne Exeat.

After conviction of an accused, for whose enlargement bail had been given, when he was present in court and his passing into custody of the sheriff, the court cannot, without the knowledge of the sureties, upon granting him a new trial, permit him to go at large under the former bond. Miller v. State, 20: 861, 48 So. 360, — Ala. —. (Annotated)

BANKING.

See Banks.

BANKRUPTCY.

Ne exeat bond to secure release of bankrupt, see Ne Exeat.

Right of trustee in bankruptcy to maintain partition, see Partition.

Effect of failure to record conditional sale to make it ineffectual against trustees in bankruptcy of vendee, see Sale 5.

1. The release of the honest, unfortunate, and insolvent debtor from the burden of his debts, and his restoration to business activity in the interest of his family and the general public, is one of the main objects of the bankruptcy law of 1898. Hardie v. Swofford Bros Dry Goods Co. 20: 785, 165 Fed. 588, — C. C. A. —.

Who may be adjudged bankrupt.

2. A farmer is not taken out of the class engaged principally in farming, which cannot, under the provisions of the bankruptcy act, be subjected to involuntary bankruptcy proceedings, by the fact that he maintains cows from the produce of his farm and that bought elsewhere, and sells the milk at retail, although he also purchases and distributes milk of other producers. Gregg v. Mitchell, 20: 148, 166 Fed. 725, — C. C. A. —. (Annotated)

Preferences.

3. The set-off by a bank against a depositor's account of a note which it bona fide holds against him is not a transfer or preference within the provisions of the bankruptcy act; and it will therefore be upheld in favor of both the bank and the indorser from whom the note was received, although made within four months of the time the depositor becomes bankrupt. Booth v. Prete, 20: 863, 71 Atl. 938, 81 Conn. 638. (Annotated)

Discharge.

Costs of appeal from denial of discharge in bankruptcy, see Appeal and Error, 29.

4. Failure of one employed as a mine superintendent to keep books of his personal financial affairs shows no fraudulent intent which will deprive him of the privilege of discharge in bankruptcy. Re McCrea, 20: 246, 161 Fed. 246, 88 C. C. A. 232. (Annotated)

5. The materially false statement the use of which in obtaining credit will prevent one's receiving his discharge in bankruptcy must be intentionally or knowingly untrue; and therefore a statement by the bookkeeper of the applicant for discharge prepared from books not fully posted, which is believed to be approximately true, but which the actual state of the business proved to be untrue, will not prevent a discharge. Gilpin v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 20: 1023, 165 Fed. 607, — C. C. A. —. (Annotated)

6. A bankrupt cannot be deprived of his discharge for failure to include in his schedule stock in a corporation which he had pledged as collateral for a debt, the property of the corporation itself having been disposed of by foreclosure of a mortgage. Re McCrea, 20: 246, 161 Fed. 246, 88 C. C. A. 282.

7. A bankrupt cannot be said to have fraudulently or knowingly made a false oath, which will deprive him of the right to discharge, in not including in his schedule an interest in his deceased father's estate, where it is not obvious what interest belonged to him, or that it was transferable, while he claims to have transferred it, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

even though the transfer was so informal as not to have been effective. Re McCrea, 20: 246, 161 Fed. 246, 88 C. C. A. 282.

8. A bankrupt cannot be denied his discharge for wilfully refusing to obey an order to produce his books, if they were lost or destroyed by fire. Re McCrea, 20: 246, 161 Fed. 246, 88 C. C. A. 282.

9. That goods were procured by a partnership on credit through false representations in writing of one partner as to the condition of the concern will not prevent the discharge in bankruptcy of his copartner, who had no knowledge of the wrongdoing. Hardie v. Swofford Bros. Dry Goods Co. 20: 785, 165 Fed. 588, — C. C. A. —. (Annotated)

BANKS.

Set-off by, against depositor's account of note against him as preference, see Bankruptcy, 3.

Rights and liabilities as to certified checks, see Checks.

Payment of checks; forgeries.

1. That a bank which has paid checks upon forged indorsements cannot show that it could have protected itself had it received prompt notice of the forgery will not prevent the failure to give such notice from depriving the depositor of his right to require the bank to make good to his account the amount of payment so made. McNeely Co. v. Bank of North America, 20: 79, 70 Atl. 891, 221 Pa. 588. (Annotated)

Receiving deposit when insolvent.

Sufficiency of indictment for receiving deposit while insolvent, see Indictment, etc.

2. The status of an officer of a bank who receives money on deposit for the credit of the depositor, and which is subject to withdrawal by him at his pleasure, as regards a statute making it an offense punishable by imprisonment to receive money on deposit in a bank, where the one receiving it knows, or has good cause to know, that the bank is unsafe or insolvent, is fixed, as regards guilt under such statute, as of the time of the deposit; and is not affected by the fact that the depositor is indebted to the bank on an indebtedness not then due, but which, in fact, does mature shortly, so as to absorb the deposit, in part, before the bank is forced to suspend, as such deposit, being at the disposal of the depositor, cannot be regarded as having been made to apply upon an undue indebtedness. Ellis v. State, 20: 444, 119 N. W. 1110, — Wis. —.

3. The call of a statute making it an offense punishable by imprisonment to receive money on deposit in a bank, where the one receiving it knows, or has good cause to know, that the bank is unsafe or insolvent, as regards the act constituting a criminal fraud, is a deposit such as will create the relation of debtor and creditor, and not one which, in practical effect, is only payment of an indebtedness to the bank. Ellis v. State, 20: 444, 119 N. W. 1110, — Wis. —.

4. A bank is "unsafe or insolvent" within the meaning of a statute making it an offense punishable by imprisonment to receive money on deposit in a bank, where the one receiving it knows, or has good cause to know, that the bank is unsafe or insolvent, when the cash value of its assets, realizable in a reasonable time, in case of liquidation by its proprietors as ordinarily prudent persons would ordinarily close up their business, is not equal to its liabilities, exclusive of stock liabilities; and such term does not mean insolvent in the limited sense of inability to pay indebtedness in the ordinary course of business. Ellis v. State, 20: 444, 119 N. W. 1110, — Wis. —. (Annotated)

5. Where bank officers are largely indebted thereto and possess property to a very considerable amount as compared to such indebtedness, the fact that some of the officers, equally interested in the bank and such property, are not debtors of the bank, but, nevertheless, agreed to join in conveying the property to strengthen the bank as to paper on which they were not liable, thereby creating a moral obligation only so to join, which obligation the other officers believed would be, and in fact was, redeemed, does not militate against the outside interests of such nondebtor officers being considered by the others before the transfer, on the question of whether the bank is insolvent within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the receipt of deposits after the one receiving them knows, or has good cause to know, that the bank is unsafe or insolvent. Ellis v. State, 20: 444, 119 N. W. 1110, — Wis. —.

6. The deposit of a check in a bank, where it is treated as money subject to withdrawal by the depositor at his pleasure, constitutes a deposit of money within the meaning of a statute making it an offense punishable by imprisonment to receive money on deposit in a bank, where the one receiving it knows, or has good cause to know, that the bank is unsafe or insolvent. Ellis v. State, 20: 444, 119 N. W. 1110, — Wis. —.

7. In case officers of a bank are largely indebted thereto, and possess property interests in a corporation to a very significant amount, as compared to such indebtedness, and they convey such property to the bank on account of such indebtedness, pursuant to an understanding of long standing, the situation before the conveyance should be regarded substantially the same as that thereafter, as regards the mental state of the officers respecting the condition of the bank as to solvency, in a prosecution against them for accepting deposits while insolvent. Ellis v. State, 20: 444, 119 N. W. 1110, — Wis. —.

BATTERY.

See Assault and Battery.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

BID.

At auction, see Auctions.

BILLS AND NOTES.

Effect of taking collateral security on conditional sale, see Sale, 2.

Sufficiency of draft as tender for rent, see Tender.

BLASTING.

Injury to servant by, see Master and Servant, 11, 12, 19.

BONDS.

Validity of bond to indemnify bail, see Contracts, 11.

Right of bailor to whom bond for indemnity has been given to have deed by obligor in bond set aside, see Fraudulent Conveyances, 4.

Ne exeat bonds, see Ne Exeat.

Right of surety on indemnity bond to compel principal to pay in exoneration before payment by surety, see Principal and Surety, 3.

Exemption from taxation of money and interest bearing securities in sinking fund accumulated by municipality to retire bonds, see Taxes, 2.

BOYCOTT.

Injunction against, see Injunction, 2.

BROKERS.

1. A real estate broker cannot, after accepting, in response to his request for price, the owner's offer to sell at a certain price less a commission to himself, enforce a conveyance to himself, if, to his knowledge, the property was worth more than the price named, of which fact he failed to inform the owner. Rodman v. Manning, 20: 1158, 99 Pac. 657, — Or. —. (Annotated)

2. The financial inability of the purchaser to perform his contract to purchase real estate does not deprive the broker of his commission where a binding contract for sale is effected through his agency, in the absence of fraud or warranty, on his part, of the customer's financial ability. Moore v. Irvin, 20: 1168, 116 S. W. 682, — Ark. —. (Annotated)

BUCKET SHOP.

As place for gaming, see Gaming, 3.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

1. One lending money to a building association with knowledge that it was borrowed for the purpose of paying withdrawing members cannot compel a repayment on the ground of estoppel to deny the power to borrow. Standard Sav. & L. Asso. v. Aldrich, 20: 393, 163 Fed. 216, 89 C. C. A. 646.

2. One loaning money to a building association with knowledge that it was borrowing money and assigning securities for an illegal purpose cannot claim the standing of an innocent party. Standard Sav. &

L. Asso. v. Aldrich, 20: 393, 163 Fed. 216, 89 C. C. A. 646.

3. One lending money to a building association with knowledge of its intention to use it for an illegal purpose can recover the money only to the extent that he shows that the association has been benefited by it. Standard Sav. & L. Asso. v. Aldrich, 20: 393, 163 Fed. 216, 89 C. C. A. 646.

4. A building and loan association has no implied power to borrow money to pay a withdrawing stockholder. Standard Sav. & L. Asso. v. Aldrich, 20: 393, 163 Fed. 216, 89 C. C. A. 646. (Annotated)

5. One loaning money to a building association to satisfy the claims of withdrawing members, taking an assignment of mortgages of borrowing members as security, cannot hold the mortgages against the claims of a receiver of the association, since he is charged with knowledge of the want of power of the association to make the assignment. Standard Sav. & L. Asso. v. Aldrich, 20: 393, 163 Fed. 216, 89 C. C. A. 646, Insolvency.

6. One loaning money for an illegal purpose, to an insolvent building association, may recover what remains in its hands, and what it has expended for legitimate purposes, on the theory that ex aequo et bono it ought not to retain it. Standard Sav. & L. Asso. v. Aldrich, 20: 393, 163 Fed. 216, 89 C. C. A. 646.

7. The insolvency of a building and loan association suspends the power of the directors to apply funds to the payment of withdrawing shareholders. Standard Sav. & L. Asso. v. Aldrich, 20: 393, 163 Fed. 216, 89 C. C. A. 646.

BUILDING CONTRACT.

Damages for breach of, see Damages, 6. Discrimination by owner completing building after contractor's abandonment in payment of materialmen, see Mechanics' Liens, 4.

In general, see Contracts.

BUILDINGS.

Moving along highway see Highways, 1.

BULK.

Statute regulating sales of stock of goods in bulk, see Constitutional Law, 6, 7, 10; Fraudulent Conveyances, 1, 2.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

See Evidence, 1-17.

BY-LAWS.

Estoppel of insurer to claim that by-laws have been violated, see Insurance, 17.

CANCELTATION.

Of stock fraudulently issued, see Corporations, 6.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CARDS.

Larceny by obtaining money by fraud in card game, see Larceny.

CARRIERS.

Who are passengers.

Question for jury as to existence of relation of passenger, see Trial, 3.

1. One who is upon the premises of a railroad company for the purpose of boarding a train in due course, and has purchased a ticket entitling him to transportation, is, while approaching the train upon which he is to be carried, a passenger. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Strange, 20: 1041, 84 N. E. 819, — Ind. —.

2. A passenger on a crowded street car does not cease to be such by momentarily stepping to the ground to enable other passengers to leave the car. Tompkins v. Boston Elevated R. Co. 20: 1063, 87 N. E. 488, 201 Mass. 114.

3. A passenger alighting from a railroad train has a right to remain in the railroad waiting room a reasonable time, awaiting the arrival of friends who are to meet him, without losing his rights as a passenger. Powell v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 20: 1019, 70 Atl. 268, 220 Pa. 638. (Annotated)

4. A passenger who, upon alighting from a train, goes to the station, which is some distance from the place where he left the train, simply to await the arrival of a street car upon which he intends to become a passenger, and which could have been boarded from points less distant, cannot claim the rights of a passenger if injured by the negligence of the railroad company. Powell v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 20: 1019, 70 Atl. 268, 220 Pa. 638.

5. The mere use, by a passenger who has alighted from a train, of a public crossing, in getting to a station on the opposite side of the track, which is nearest his destination, does not per se terminate his relation to the carrier. Powell v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 20: 1019, 70 Atl. 268, 220 Pa. 638.

Duty to passenger; negligence.

Damages for negligent injury to passenger causing miscarriage, see Damages, 10.

Mental anguish as element of damages for injury to passenger, see Damages, 13.

Presumption of negligence from injury to passenger, see Evidence, 9.

6. A railroad company owes to a passenger, approaching a train which he intends to board, the duty of exercising only reasonable care for his protection. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Strange, 20: 1041, 84 N. E. 819, — Ind. —.

7. An attempted guidance of passengers to a train by a station master, who, with a light in his hand, takes a proper place on the platform, and calls to the passengers to come to him, is not rendered negligent by the fact that one of the passengers thinks that the call comes from the other side of the track, and is injured in attempting to cross it. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Strange, 20: 1041, 84 N. E. 819, — Ind. —.

8. A railroad company is not bound to guide a passenger from the waiting room to his train, even at night, where he is a mature, normal man of experience, and the platform is in good condition, lying between the waiting room and the train, and he discloses no circumstances requiring guidance. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Strange, 20: 1041, 84 N. E. 819, — Ind. —.

(Annotated)

Negligence of passenger.

See also supra, 8.

9. It is not necessarily negligence per se for a passenger to rest his hand on the door jamb while attempting to leave a car, so as to prevent his holding the carrier liable in case the door slams shut, catching and crushing his fingers. Christensen v. Oregon S. L. R. Co. 20: 255, 99 Pac. 676, — Utah, —.

10. A passenger cannot hold the railroad company liable for his injury, because of its failure properly to light its platform, if, being a stranger and going from the waiting room onto a safe platform, he approaches the track, half facing the approaching train, and, with the headlight in full view, needlessly attempts to cross the track directly in front of the engine under the erroneous impression that it had stopped. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Strange, 20: 1041, 84 N. E. 819, — Ind. —.

11. A street car company is not liable for injury to a boy who, upon being harshly told by the conductor to show him his father, who the boy asserts has paid his fare, attempts to go to the other end of the car, along the running board, and falls off to his injury, where there is nothing to lead the conductor to anticipate such action by the boy, who might have pointed out his father without changing his position. Goodfellow v. Detroit United R. Co. 20: 1123, 119 N. W. 900, — Mich. —. (Annotated)

12. One voluntarily becoming a passenger on a street car so crowded that he is compelled to ride in the vestibule, with knowledge of a rule that persons riding on platforms do so at their own risk, assumes the risk of injury from being compelled temporarily to alight to enable other passengers to leave the car, including that of having the car negligently started before he resumes a safe position. Tompkins v. Boston Elevated R. Co. 20: 1063, 87 N. E. 488, 201 Mass. 114.

Safety of approaches and platforms.

13. A railroad company is liable to a passenger who, because of obstructions on the path providing egress from its station, is compelled to walk so close to tracks used by trains that, without negligence on his part, he is struck by a train passing along the track. Powell v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 20: 1019, 70 Atl. 268, 220 Pa. 638.

14. A railway company is liable to a person who goes to its depot to meet an 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

incoming passenger for the purpose of continuing, after meeting him, a business negotiation between them, for injuries received by him because of the negligence of the company in permitting its station platform to remain in a dangerous condition, on account of which such person falls and is injured. Cogswell v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 20: 837, 99 Pac. 923, — Okla. —.

(Annotated)

15. A railway company is bound to exercise ordinary care for the safety of a person who is upon its premises for the purpose of meeting an incoming passenger, and is liable to such person for injuries sustained on account of the railway company's failure to exercise such care. Cogswell v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 20: 837, 99 Pac. 923, — Okla. —.

16. A railroad company is not bound to keep its station safe as for invited guests, for a mere friend or acquaintance of an intending passenger who resorts to it to see him begin his journey. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Matzdorff, 20: 833, 112 S. W. 1036, — Tex. —.

(Annotated)

17. A railroad company is liable for injury to a passenger through failure to light the path providing egress from its station sufficiently to enable the passenger to avoid collision with a train on an adjoining track. Powell v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 20: 1019, 70 Atl. 268, 220 Pa. 638.

Of freight; generally.

Imposing on carrier additional charge for goods lost in transit in case of failure to pay within certain time, see Constitutional Law, 4.

Ad interim injunction to restrain carrier from discrimination against shipper, see Injunction, 11.

Damages for failure to supply refrigerator cars, see Damages, 7.

18. The carrier's common-law obligation indifferently to serve the public in the receipt and transportation of goods does not inhibit a carrier by sea from making specific arrangements in advance for the transportation of certain goods by a particular vessel, provided that privilege is indifferently extended to all patrons, or if the grant of such privilege to shippers of that commodity does not interfere with the carrier's discharge of duty to the shippers of other commodities with respect to the receipt and transportation of their goods. Ocean Steamship Co. v. Savannah Locomotive Works & S. Co. 20: 867, 63 S. E. 577, — Ga. —.

19. A common carrier by sea cannot lawfully reject lumber, a commodity which it professes to carry, and afterwards receive and transport cotton and other goods, where, at the time of the tender, there was room in the vessel for the rejected lumber, and the safety of the vessel would in no wise be imperiled. Ocean Steamship Co. v. Savannah Locomotive Works & S. Co. 20: 867, 63 S. E. 577, — Ga. —.

20. The common-law obligation of a carrier by sea is to receive goods which it is able and accustomed to carry in the order of their tender, without discrimination as between shippers of the same or of different commodities. Ocean Steamship Co. v. Savannah Locomotive Works & S. Co. 20: 867, 63 S. E. 577, — Ga. —.

21. A navigation company whose charter confers no power of eminent domain, nor imposes any public duties, may decline to receive goods in excess of its carriage capacity, and may select the character of goods it proposes to carry, or discontinue to carry any particular commodity, since it is a public carrier only as to the goods it proposes to carry. Ocean Steamship Co. v. Savannah Locomotive Works & S. Co. 20: 867, 63 S. E. 577, — Ga. —.

Contract or duty to furnish cars.

22. A railroad company which has obligated itself to furnish refrigerator cars to transport garden truck to market cannot escape liability for breach of that duty upon the ground that the crop was unusually large, if it was no larger than might reasonably have been expected from the acreage planted, knowledge of which the railroad company either had, or had the means of obtaining. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. v. Geraty, 20: 310, 166 Fed. 10, — C. C. A. —.

23. A railroad company which owns no refrigerator cars may be held liable for not furnishing them to shippers of garden truck, if it led them to expect that, if they raised the truck, the refrigerator cars necessary for its proper transportation would be furnished. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. v. Geraty, 20: 310, 166 Fed. 10, — C. C. A. —. (Annotated)

CARRYING WEAPONS.

The provisions of Wilson's Okla. Rev. & Ann. Stat. of 1903, §§ 2502, 2503, prohibiting the carrying of certain weapons not recognized in civil warfare, are not repugnant to each other or violative of article 2, § 26 of the Bill of Rights of the Oklahoma Constitution, granting citizens the right to keep and carry arms, subject to legislative control of the carrying of weapons, but are valid provisions under the enabling act and § 2 of the schedule of the Constitution, extending territorial laws to the state of Oklahoma, Ex parte Thomas, 20: 1007, 97 Pac. 260, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

CARS.

Carrier's duty to furnish, see Carriers, 22, 23; Damages, 7.

CERTIFICATION.

Of check, see Checks.

CERTIORARI.

The determination of trustees of a police pension fund that an injury was contracted by a policeman in the line of his duty is one of fact, which cannot be reviewed by the courts on certiorari. State ex rel. McManus v. Board of Trustees, 20: 1175, 119 N. W. 806, — Wis. —. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CHARITIES.

1. The superintendent of a state lunatic asylum is not, under the doctrine of respondeat superior, responsible for injuries inflicted upon inmates of the asylum by employees whom he appointed. Ketterer v. Kentucky State Bd. of Control, 20: 274, 115 S. W. 200, — Ky. —.

2. A state board having control of a lunatic asylum which is supported by state funds is not liable for injuries inflicted by its employee on an inmate of the asylum, although it knew, or might have known, that he was in the habit of mistreating such inmates. Ketterer v. Kentucky State Bd. of Control, 20: 274, 115 S. W. 200, — Ky. —.

CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

A chattel mortgage which purports to assign, to secure a specified debt, all the future earnings of a specified threshing machine, also of any other threshing machines operated by the mortgagor and of the men and teams operating them, which may accrue for threshing during the then-ensuing two years within three designated townships, is void against creditors who had no actual notice thereof. Dyer v. Schneider, 20: 505, 118 N. W. 1011, — Minn. —. (Annotated)

CHECKS.

See also Banks.

1. The transfer of a certified check is an assignment of money to meet it; and the bank making the certification is liable therefore to the holder. Blake v. Hamilton Dime Sav. Bank, 20: 290, 87 N. E. 73, 79 Ohio, 189.

2. The certificate by a bank that a check is good is equivalent to acceptance, and raises an implication that it is drawn upon sufficient funds in the hands of the drawee, that they have been set apart for its satisfaction, and that they shall be so applied whenever the check is presented for payment. Blake v. Hamilton Dime Sav. Bank, 20: 290, 87 N. E. 73, 79 Ohio, 189.

3. The drawer or indorser of a certified check cannot, after its delivery, revoke it or stop payment upon it by notice to the drawee not to pay; and a bank that has received a certified check for deposit, and has credited the depositor with the amount of it, is a bona fide holder, and may enforce payment of it, notwithstanding it may, before payment to the depositor, have received notice that the check was fraudulently obtained by the depositor. Blake v. Hamilton Dime Sav. Bank, 20: 290, 87 N. E. 73, 79 Ohio, 189. (Annotated)

CLUBS.

Dispensing of intoxicating liquors by, see Intoxicating Liquors, 6-8.

C. O. D.

C. O. D. sale of intoxicating liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors, 10.

COLLATERAL ATTACK.

On order changing boundaries of school district, see Schools, 2.

COMMERCE.

Transportation of liquor as interstate commerce, see Intoxicating Liquors.

3.

1. Since the passage by Congress of the Wilson act, a state may forbid the publication, within its limits, of advertisements of the keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors at places in other states. State v. J. P. Bass Publishing Co. 20: 495, 71 Atl. 894, — Me. —

Regulating railroad companies.

2. Requiring an interstate railroad company to light its crossings in a city does not interfere with its rights as an interstate road, although the effect will be to compel those in charge of the engine to run slowly and cautiously in approaching the light to prevent its interfering with their duty to keep a lookout along the track by obscuring vision past it. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hartford City, 20: 461, 82 N. E. 787, 170 Ind. 674.

COMMERCIAL PAPER.

See Bills and Notes.

COMMISSIONS.

Of brokers, see Brokers.

COMMON CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

See Husband and Wife.

COMPENSATION.

Of brokers, see Brokers, 2.

Of officer, see Officers, 5, 6.

CONDITIONAL SALE.

See Sale, 2-5.

CONFESSIONS.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 20.

CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

See Evidence, 21.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. Whether residence within a state for the statutory period of limitation will prevail as a plea in bar upon a written contract, made in another state, depends upon the nature of the contract, its maturity, and the date from which the statute begins to run. Sterrett v. Sweeney, 20: 963, 98 Pac. 418, 15 Idaho, 416.

2. Where a resident of Idaho goes into the state of Washington, and makes a partial payment upon a Washington contract, after its maturity, and before such contract is barred by the statute of limitations of that state, upon his return to Idaho, the contract follows him as made, and is enforceable under the laws of that state, and the statute of limitations of Idaho continues to run upon his re-entry into that state after such payment. Sterrett v. Sweeney, 20: 963, 98 Pac. 418, 15 Idaho, 416.

3. In order to determine the application of the statute of limitations of one state to a contract entered into in another state, it is necessary to examine the contract and the laws of such other state for the purpose of determining the date from which the statute runs. Sterrett v. Sweeney, 20: 963, 98 Pac. 418, 15 Idaho, 416.

CONSIDERATION.

For contracts, see Contracts, 1.

CONSOLIDATION.

Of corporations, see Corporations, 1.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.Delegation of power.

1. The legislature may delegate to a municipality the selection of the character of light which it will require a railroad company to maintain at its street crossings. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hartford City, 20: 461, 82 N. E. 787, 170 Ind. 674.

Property rights; due process of law; freedom of contract.

2. A state constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law, and the provisions of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution as to property rights, extend to the property held and used by a railroad corporation, since the beneficial use of such property is in natural persons, and the law forbids the doing by indirection that which is forbidden to be done directly. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. v. Simon, 20: 126, 47 So. 1001, — Fla. —

3. The provisions of the Ohio Constitution forbid the laying of an imposition upon the private property of one for the sole benefit of another. Alma Coal Co. v. Cozad, 20: 1092, 87 N. E. 172, 79 Ohio St. 348.

4. A statute imposing on railroads alone an additional charge for goods lost in transit in case of failure to pay any claim within a certain time is inoperative, as it provides for an unreasonable classification that in effect denies to those operating railroads the constitutional guaranty of due process of law and the equal protection of the law; since, as the duty of a common carrier to pay for goods lost in transit is one that applies to all common carriers alike, there is no just basis for the classification. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. v. Simon, 20: 126, 47 So. 1001, — Fla. — (Annotated)

5. A statute providing for the punishment of any person who shall keep open any playhouse or theater on Sunday does not apply to the opening of such place for religious and other quiet, legitimate, and orderly exercise, and, therefore, unconstitutionally interfere with property rights of the owner as forbidding legitimate use of his property on that day. State v. Herald, 20: 433, 92 Pac. 376, 47 Wash. 538.

6. No unconstitutional interference with property rights is affected by requiring retail merchants to file notice of intention to sell the whole or a large part of their stocks, seven days before the sale, under penalty of the sale being voidable at the instance of creditors. Young v. Lemieux, 20: 160, 65 Atl. 436, 79 Conn. 434. (Annotated)

7. A statute requiring, under penalty of having the sale presumed fraudulent as to the creditors, one about to sell a stock of merchandise in gross or in a manner out of the due course of business to make an inventory and list of his creditors and notify them of the proposed sale, which is not required of persons selling other kinds of property under similar circumstances, unconstitutionally deprives him of liberty and property. Off v. Morehead, 20: 167, 85 N. E. 264, 235 Ill. 40.

8. A railroad company is not entitled to a hearing upon the question of the passage of an ordinance requiring it to light its street crossings. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hartford City, 20: 461, 82 N. E. 787, 170 Ind. 674.

Police power.

9. A statute requiring the levy and collection, as of other taxes, of a per capita tax on dogs upon the real estate upon which the dogs may have been kept and harbored, notwithstanding the owner of such real estate had no knowledge that the dogs had been harbored thereon, and was not consenting thereto, is unconstitutional and void, it being an arbitrary and unreasonable exercise of police power, not required by the general welfare. Mirick v. Gims, 20: 42, 86 N. E. 880, 79 Ohio, 174. (Annotated)

10. Requiring a retail merchant to file notice of intention to sell the whole or a large part of his stock seven days prior to the sale, under penalty of the sale being voidable at the instance of creditors, is within the police power of the state. Young v. Lemieux, 20: 160, 65 Atl. 436, 79 Conn. 434. (Annotated)

CONSTRUCTION.

Of contracts, see Contracts, 8, 9.

Of statutes, see Statutes, 3.

CONTEMPT.

Unlawful, impartial, or improper conduct on the part of any officer whose duty it is to summon a jury or to select and summon talesmen when the regular panel has been exhausted, in selecting or summoning such juries or talesmen, constitutes gross contempt of court, meriting severe punishment. United States v. Hargo, 20: 1013, 98 Pac. 1921, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

CONTRACTS.

As to damages, see Damages.

As to antenuptial contract, see Husband and Wife, 3.

Mandamus to compel city engineer to furnish monthly estimates of completion of work under public contract, see Mandamus, 3, 4.

Architect contracting for labor or material before abandonment of contract by contractor as agent of owner, see Mechanics' Liens, 5.

Discrimination by owner completing building after contractor's abandonment in payment of materialmen, see Mechanics' Liens, 4.

Liquidated damages for failure to complete building, see Damages, 6.

Injunction against interference with contracts, see Injunction, 5.

Sufficiency of allegation of damages in action for breach, see Pleading, 2.

As to termination of contract of agency, see Principal and Agent.

Damages for improper termination of agency contract, see Damages, 5, 14.

Specific performance of, see Specific Performance.

Delivery on week day pursuant to contract made on Sunday, see Sunday.

Consideration.

1. A contract entered into between copartners upon dissolution of the copartnership, whereby one of the partners, in consideration of being paid in cash the full value of his interest therein, agreed with the purchasing partner "not to engage for the next two years" in the same business theretofore conducted by the firm, in the same city, "in the manner aforesaid, or with any partner, partners, firm, company, or corporation," for such period, is based upon a sufficient consideration, as there was no legal duty resting upon either partner to purchase the interest of the other. Siegel v. Marcus, 20: 769, 119 N. W. 358, — N. D. —.

Mutuality.

Specific performance of unilateral contract, see Specific Performance.

2. The mere physical acceptance and attempted enforcement by one party of a contract unilateral in form, executed by another, does not make the former a party to the contract so as to bind him to its performance. Levin v. Dietz, 20: 251, 87 N. E. 454, 194 N. Y. 376.

3. A contract for employment is not lacking in mutuality because the party employed does not bind himself to continue in the employment for a definite period. Newhall v. Journal Printing Co. 20: 899, 117 N. W. 228, 105 Minn. 44. (Annotated)

Offers and their acceptance.

4. Failure of one who has made a void parol offer to purchase chattels in his possession to reply to a letter accepting the offer, does not effect a contract binding upon him. Godkin v. Weber, 20: 498, 117 N. W. 628, 154 Mich. 207.

Statute of frauds.

Creation of trust by one taking title to real property to sell it for benefit of real owner, see Pleading, 20; Trusts.

5. The provisions of the statute of frauds, or of uses and trusts, have no application where an agreement to take title to real property and sell it as an agent of the real owner, to whom the proceeds are to be turned over, has been completely performed as to the part thereof which comes within the statute, and the part remaining to be performed is merely a payment of the money, the promise to do which is not required to be in writing. Logan v. Brown, 20: 298, 95 Pac. 441, — Okla. —.

6. That personal property is in possession of an intending purchaser at the time he makes a verbal offer for it which is duly accepted is not sufficient to comply with a statute providing that no contract for the sale of goods of the value of $50 or more shall be valid unless the purchaser shall accept and receive part of the goods sold. Godkin v. Weber, 20: 498, 117 N. W. 628, 154 Mich. 207.

7. A binding contract to purchase mill culls is not effected by the fact that one making a verbal offer for them accepted and paid for merchantable lumber which was cut from them, claiming that this timber was not part of the culls. Godkin v. Weber, 20: 498, 117 N. W. 628, 154 Mich. 207.

Construction.
8. The mere affixing of a price to each bushel of a crop contracted to be threshed is not sufficient to make the contract severable. Johnson v. Fehsefeldt, 20: 1069, 118 N. W. 797, 106 Minn. 202. (Annotated)

9. An agreement by a retiring partner "not to engage for the next two years" in the same city in competition with a business sold, in "the manner aforesaid, or with any partner, partners, firm, company, or corporation for the period aforesaid," is violated by the entering of such partner into the employ, as a managing clerk, of a third person, whom such retiring partner was instrumental in procuring to open a rival business adjacent to that of the original firm, and such violation should be enjoined at the suit of the purchasing partner. Siegel v. Marcus, 20: 769, 119 N. W. 358, — N. D. —. (Annotated)

Validity; public policy.

10. A contract entered into between copartners upon dissolution of the copartnership, whereby one of the partners, for a valuable consideration, agrees not to engage for the next two years in the same business theretofore conducted by the firm in the same city, is not violative of N. D. Const. art. 1, p. 23, which provides that any citizen of the state shall be free to obtain employment wherever possible, and that any person who shall maliciously interfere therewith or hinder any citizen from obtaining employment shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Siegel v. Marcus, 20: 769, 119 N. W. 358, — N. D. —.

11. A bond of indemnity, given by a person under charge of felony, to indemnify his bail in a recognizance for his appearance to answer the charge, is not void as against public policy. Carr v. Davis, 20: 58, 63 S. E. 326, — W. Va. —.

(Annotated)

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Incomplete performance.

12. Where a contract is entire, and one party, not in default, is willing to complete its performance, the other party, who abandons the contract or refuses to perform it, cannot recover, on the contract or on a quantum meruit, the value of the labor he has expended in its partial performance. Johnson v. Fehsefeldt, 20: 1069, 118 N. W. 797, 106 Minn. 202.

Termination.

Rescission of contract for purchase of land, see Vendor and Purchaser, 1-4.

13. A contract for space, for a term of years, on a particular floor of a building occupied by a department store, in which to conduct a particular line of business in connection with the general enterprise, which is to be paid for by a monthly rental and a percentage of sales in excess of a certain amount, is terminated by the destruction of the building, and the beneficiary cannot insist on the allotment of space in the new building to which the department store business is moved. Martin Emerich Outfitting Co. v. Siegel, Cooper, & Co. 20: 1114, 86 N. E. 1104, 237 Ill. 610.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

See Negligence, 11.

CONVERSION.

As to equitable conversion, see Equitable Conversion.

CORPORATIONS.

Ultra vires acts of building association, see Building and Loan Associations.

Presumption that corporation will renew franchise. see Evidence, 7.

Garnishment of foreign insurance company, see Garnishment, 2.

Injunction by purchaser of stock to restrain sheriff from selling on execution against vendor, see Injunction, 9.

Notice to agent as notice to company, see Notice.

Consolidation.

Amendment of pleading in action against consolidated company, see Pleading, 1.

1. A corporation formed by consolidation of others may assert the rights, equities and defenses of one of the constituent companies when sued on a liability existing against it prior to the consolidation. Southern Steel Co. v. Hopkins, 20: 848, 47 So. 274, — Ala. —.

Transfer of stock.

2. A purchaser of the capital stock of a corporation for a valuable consideration, in the absence of fraud or a controlling statute, is protected against subsequent attachment or execution issued against his grantor, although he failed to have his assignment recorded upon the books of the corporation. Everett v. Farmers & M. Bank, 20: 996, 117 N. W. 401, — Neb. —.

(Annotated)

3. A bona fide purchaser of the capital stock of a corporation may sue in equity to compel the corporation to enter the assignment upon its books, and to issue a new certificate therefor. Everett v. Farmers & M. Bank, 20: 996, 117 N. W. 401, — Neb. —.

Fraudulent issue of stock.

4. A corporation which has been induced fraudulently to issue corporate stock cannot, by subsequent ratification, bind stockholders who had no notice of the fraud. Shaw v. Staight, 20: 1077, 119 N. W. 951, — Minn. —.

5. An issue of 28,000 shares of stock of a packing company, selling in the market at $1 per share, in consideration of certain fishing paraphernalia and locations represented as worth $21,800, but which in fact were worthless, to a director who acted as secretary of the corporation, and who had full knowledge that it would receive no value therefrom for the stock, is fraudulent and void, and will be set aside at the suit in equity of a stockholder, notwithstanding, as a part of the consideration, such director agreed to act as secretary of the corporation for two years, without compensation, the reasonable value of which services would be $600. Shaw v. Staight, 20: 1077, 119 N. W. 951, — Minn. —.

6. A holder of corporate stock who has full knowledge of the fraudulent dealings by which his transferrer obtained the issue of the stock, and who pays no consideration therefor, is not such a good-faith holder as can complain of the cancelation of the stock at the suit of a bona fide shareholder. Shaw v. Staight, 20: 1077, 119 N. W. 951, — Minn. —.

Action by stockholders.

7. The holder of shares of stock in a corporation, issued and sold as full-paid stock, though for a sum less than its par value, may maintain an action to protect such rights as accrue to him as a stockholder by reason of the fraudulent issue and transfer of corporate stock, since the agreement between the holder and the corporation that his stock shall be considered and treated as paid in full is not void, but voidable only as to creditors of the corporation. Shaw v. Staight, 20: 1077, 119 N. W. 951, — Minn. —. (Annotated)

8. A request of the managing officers of a corporation to institute an action to set aside and cancel a fraudulent issue of corporate stock, and their refusal, is sufficient, without a request to other stockholders to commence such a suit, to enable an individual stockholder to maintain a suit therefor, since such injury and the consequent cause of action is one that accrues to the stockholders, and not to the corporation as such. Shaw v. Staight, 20: 1077, 119 N. W. 951, — Minn. —.

Right to inspect books.

Mandamus to enforce stockholder's right to inspect books, see Mandamus, 5, 9.

9. That a stockholder seeking to compel the corporation to permit him to examine its books to protect his interests is also a stockholder in a rival corporation is not sufficient to deprive him of the right to the relief sought. Kuhback v. Irving Cut Glass Co. 20: 185, 69 Atl. 981, 220 Pa. 427.

(Annotated)

10. A corporation cannot deprive its stockholder of the right to inspect its books by offering to furnish him abstracts of them or to permit an inspection by an expert to be selected by it and him. Kuhback v. Irving Cut Glass Co. 20: 185, 69 Atl. 981, 220 Pa. 427.

11. A corporation cannot deprive its stockholder of the right to inspect its books for the protection of his interests by offering to purchase his stock at a price fixed by it. Kuhback v. Irving Cut Glass Co. 20: 185, 69 Atl. 981, 220 Pa. 427.

COSTS.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 29.

When plaintiff obtains judgment on his demand, and defendant obtains judgment on his demand in re-convention, each of the parties should pay the costs incurred in obtaining the judgment against him. Gilly v. Hirsh, 20: 972, 48 So. 442, 122 La. 966.

COURTS.

As to contempt, see Contempt.

Jurisdiction of garnishment proceedings against nonresident, see Garnishment, 1.

Power to issue writ of prohibition, see Prohibition.

Relation to other departments of government.

1. A railroad company directed by municipal ordinance to light its street crossings has no right to question in the courts the necessity of the ordinance, or the fairness, honesty, or propriety of the exercise of the power. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hartford City, 20: 461, 82 N. E. 787, 170 Ind. 674.

Superintending control.

2. The superintending control extends to reviewing the decision of the trial court that a grand juror was incompetent to act, which results in its refusal to proceed with the trial, and to requiring it to do so by mandamus if the decision was erroneous. State ex rel. McGovern v. Williams, 20: 947, 116 N. W. 225, 136 Wis. 1. (Annotated)

3. A court-martial is not an inferior court within the meaning of a constitutional provision giving a supreme court appellate jurisdiction over inferior courts, since such court, although exercising judicial functions, belongs to the executive department of the government, and not to the judicial. State ex rel. Poole v. Nuchols, 20: 473, 119 N. W. 632, — N. D. —. (Annotated)

COURTS-MARTIAL.

Review of action of, under power of superintending control, see Courts, 3.

COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

As to conditions in insurance policy, see Insurance.

CRIMINAL LAW.

As to bail, see Bail and Recognizance.
Receipt of deposit by bank while insolvent, see Banks, 2-7.

Presumption against one accused of crime arising from statements made against himself, see Evidence, 17.

Evidence that one on trial for crime refused to escape, see Evidence, 29.

As to indictment, see Indictment, etc.
Liability of master for wrongful sale of liquor by servant, see Intoxicating Liquors, 9.

As to jury, see Jury.

New trial for newly discovered evidence, see New Trial.

See also Embezzlement; Perjury; Suicide.

1. Only one conviction can be secured for giving several performances in the theater on Sunday, under a statute providing that any proprietor of any place of amusement who shall permit it to be open on that day shall be fined. Muckenfuss v. State, 20: 783, 116 S. W. 51, — Tex. Crim. App. —. (Annotated)

Crimination of self.

Privilege of witness against self-crimination, see Witnesses, 2, 3.

2. One on trial for a capital offense cannot waive his right to be present when the verdict is rendered, even by voluntarily absenting himself from the court room in case he is on bond; and it is immaterial that the verdict actually returned is for an offense not capital. Sherrod v. State, 20: 509, 47 So. 554, — Miss. —.

Procedure.

3. When a motion is made, supported by affidavit, to withdraw a criminal case from the consideration of, and to discharge, a jury, on account of improper action of the officer who selected and summoned the jury or talesmen, and such motion is made as soon as the facts stated therein come to the knowledge of the defendant or his counsel, and the matters of fact therein stated are not denied under oath, they will be taken as confessed, and will be construed most strongly against the prosecution, and in favor of the defendant. United States v. Hargo, 20: 1013, 98 Pac. 1021, — Okla. —.

Sentence and imprisonment.

4. Where a person who has been convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for one felony appeals from the judgment, and, while enjoying his liberty under a bond given to stay the execution thereof, commits a second felony, for which he is convicted and sentenced to a term to begin upon the expiration of the former term, such second sentence is valid. State v. Finch, 20: 273, 89 Pac. 922, 75 Kan. 582. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Pardon.

5. The expiration of the term for which a convict was sentenced does not make inoperative a provision in a conditional pardon that, if he is subsequently convicted of crime, he shall serve the unexpired time in addition to that imposed by the new sentence; but he may be compelled to serve out such unexpired term, although his subsequent conviction does not occur until after the expiration of the term of the original sentence. Re Kelly, 20: 337, 99 Pac. 368, — Cal. —.

CRIMINATION OF SELF.

See Criminal Law, 2; Perjury; Witnesses, 2, 3.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Of witnesses, see Witnesses, 1.

CUMULATIVE SENTENCE.

See Criminal Law, 4.

CURTESY.

1. That an estate purchased by funds from the wife's separate estate is conveyed to husband and wife jointly does not deprive him of his curtesy in the property. Donovan v. Griffith, 20: 825, 114 S. W. 621, 215 Mo. 149.

2. The conveyance to a man of land purchased with funds from the separate estate of his wife, and his holding the legal title at the time of her death, will not prevent his having curtesy in the property. Donovan v. Griffith, 20: 825, 114 S. W. 621, 215 Mo. 149.

3. That the wife's title to real estate is not acquired until after the death of the only child of the marriage will not deprive the husband of curtesy in the property. Donovan v. Griffith, 20: 825, 114 S. W. 621, 215 Mo. 149. (Annotated)

4. A surviving husband is entitled to curtesy out of a determinable fee owned by his wife with issue born alive; notwithstanding the contingency upon which the fee is to terminate exists at the time of her death. Carter v. Couch, 20: 858, 47 So. 1006, — Ala. —. (Annotated)

5. Curtesy exists in the equity of redemption of the wife's lands. Jackson v. Becktold Printing & B. Mfg. Co. 20: 454, 112 S. W. 161, 86 Ark. 591. (Annotated)

CUSTODY.

Of infants, see Infants, 1-3.

CUSTOM.

To send notice of maturity of insurance premium, see Insurance, 10.

DAMAGES.

Error in rendering judgment for small sum in case of excessive verdict, see Appeal and Error, 27.

Right to recover expense of preparing for suit in case of dismissal by plaintiff, see Dismissal and Discontinuance.

Evidence on question of, see Evidence.
 Right to jury to assess damages on default judgment, see Jury, 1.
 Sufficiency of allegations as to, see Pleading, 2, 3, 10.

Duty to keep down.

1. Damages resulting from the breach of a contract to lease lands and tenements cannot be recovered in so far as plaintiff could have prevented them by the exercise of reasonable exertion or care. Moses v. Autuono, 20: 350, 47 So. 925, — Fla. —.

Exemplary damages.

2. Punitive damages may be awarded against a railroad company for killing a person at a railroad crossing which was manifestly dangerous, if it had failed to comply with warnings by the public officials to make it safe. Thompson v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. 20: 426, 62 S. E. 396, 81 S. C. 333.

Contracts as to real property.

3. For breach of a contract to lease lands and tenements the measure of damages is generally the difference between the stipulated rent and the value of the use of the premises; though, under special circumstances, damages may also be recovered for losses that are the natural, direct, and necessary consequence of the breach, when they are capable of being estimated by reliable data. Moses v. Autuono, 20: 350, 47 So. 925, — Fla. —.

Sales of personality; warranty.

4. Damages for loss of time, expenses, and attorneys' fees incurred in preparing a defense to an action on a promissory note for the purchase price of a threshing machine, which action was afterwards dismissed by plaintiff, with prejudice, upon payment of all legal costs, cannot be recovered in an action for breach of warranty upon which the machine was purchased, no malice, want of probable cause, or bad faith having been alleged, since the dismissed suit, and not the breach of warranty, was the proximate cause of such damages. John Deere Plow Co. v. Spatz, 20: 492, 99 Pac. 221, — Kan. —.

5. A corporation is not liable in damages for the improper termination by it, as principal, of an agency contract, beyond the period for which it was organized, where no definite period was fixed by the contract itself, and no offer was made to show that the corporation intended to extend its artificial existence beyond such period. Newhall v. Journal Printing Co. 20: 899, 117 N. W. 228, 105 Minn. 44.

Liquidated damages.

6. Where a contract expressly provides stipulated or liquidated damages for failure to complete a building within a specified time, and the breach alleged is a refusal to perform any part of the contract, and it appears that the parties, in stipulating for liquidated damages, did not contemplate such refusal, but only a failure to complete within the specified time, the damages sustained by the plaintiff are not recoverable. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) tained by the alleged breach of the contract should be determined not by the stipulation contained in the contract, but by proper rules of law. Moses v. Autuono, 20: 350, 47 So. 925, — Fla. —.

(Annotated)

In respect to freight.

7. A railroad company which refuses to supply refrigerator cars for shipping garden truck to market according to its obligation to do so may be liable for the value of truck not gathered and tendered for shipment, where the failure to gather it was for the purpose of avoiding useless expense, and it was to be sold free on board at point of shipment. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. v. Geraty, 20: 320, 166 Fed. 10, — C. C. A. —.

Torts generally.

8. One whose son is unlawfully suspended from a public school for a period of only twenty days cannot hold those responsible for the suspension liable for the cost of his tuition in another district for a whole term. Douglas v. Campbell, 20: 205, 116 S. W. 211, — Ark. —.

Personal injuries.

Error in instruction as to, in action for injury to servant, see Appeal and Error, 22.

9. A married woman may recover from one who negligently injures her, damages for impairment of her ability to labor, independently of her husband's right to recover for her loss of time. Colorado Springs & I. R. Co. v. Nichols, 20: 215, 92 Pac. 691, 41 Colo. 272. (Annotated)

10. A carrier by whose negligence a pregnant woman who is its passenger is thrown violently to the floor and injured, so that she suffers a miscarriage, cannot escape liability to her in damages for her injuries because they would not have occurred had she not been pregnant. Colorado Springs & I. R. Co. v. Nichols, 20: 215, 92 Pac. 691, 41 Colo. 272.

Injury to real property.

11. Where the owner of the legal title to wild lands dispossesses a holder under a void tax deed who has reduced such lands to cultivation, the rent allowable for the use of the premises during such wrongful possession is to be determined from the cash price usually paid for the use of wild lands during the same time and in the same locality. Gibson v. Fields, 20: 378, 98 Pac. 1112, — Kan. —.

Nuisance.

12. The owner of property which is to be let as a dwelling cannot recover damages for the temporary operation near it of a manufactory in such a manner as to constitute a nuisance, unless he shows a diminution in the rental value of the property because of the manner in which the manufactory is conducted. McGill v. Pintach Compressing Co. 20: 466, 118 N. W. 786, — Iowa, —.

Mental anguish.

13. Mental anguish for fear of going into consumption is not an element of damage to be allowed against a railroad company because of whose neglect to heat its passenger station a passenger is made ill with cold and fever. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Buckner, 20: 458, 115 S. W. 923, — Ark. —. (Annotated)

Loss of profits.

14. Prospective profits during the remainder of the period for which a newspaper was incorporated may be recovered as damages for the improper breach, by the corporation, of its contract granting the exclusive right to sell its publication within certain specified territory, where no contract period was fixed by the contract itself. Newhall v. Journal Printing Co. 20 899, 117 N. W. 228, 105 Minn. 44.

DEATH.

Power of administrator to settle claim for negligent killing of intestate, see Executors and Administrators.

Effect of death of beneficiary within lifetime of insured, see Insurance, 12.

Effect of death of principal contractor before completion of contract on subcontractors' lien, see Mechanics' Liens, 3.

DEBT.

Arrest for, see Arrest.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Arrest for debt, see Arrest.

Validity as against creditors of chattel mortgage on future earnings of threshing machine, see Chattel Mortgage.

DECLARATION OR COMPLAINT.

See Pleading, 2-15.

DEDICATION.

A dedication of land for a park is effected by the exhibition of a plat on which the space is designated as a park when selling lots bordering thereon, followed by permitting the public to use the tract generally as it pleases. Northport Wesleyan Grove Campmeeting Asso. v. Andrews, 20: 976, 71 Atl. 1027, — Me. —.

DEEDS.

Right of bailor to whom bond for indemnity has been given to have deed by obligor in bond set aside, see Fraudulent Conveyances, 4.

Replevin to recover possession of title deed, see Replevin, 1.

An exception in a deed conveying real estate, of "a certain lot of timber" growing on a portion of the land granted, for the benefit of a stranger to the instrument, is an exception of the timber rather than of the land itself, for the benefit of the person named personally, and terminates with his death, the fee then being in the grantee in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the deed. Stone v. Stone, 20: 221, 119 N. W. 712, — Iowa, —. (Annotated)

DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

See Judgment, 1.

DEFENSE.

To action on insurance policy, see Insurance, 22, 23.

DEFINITIONS.

Riot, see Riot.

DELEGATION OF POWER.

See Constitutional Law, 1.

DEMURRER.

See Pleading, 18-20.

DEPOSITIONS.

Use in evidence, see Evidence, 18, 19.

DIKES.

Deflecting current of river by, see Limitation of Actions, 4.

DISCHARGE.

In bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy, 4-9.

DISCRETION.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 7.

DISMISSAL.

The defendant in an action on a note dismissed by the plaintiff before trial, with prejudice, after payment of all legal costs incurred therein, cannot, in the absence of malice, want of probable cause, or bad faith, recover damages in a subsequent action for loss of time, expenses, or attorney fees incurred by him in preparing for the trial of the dismissed case. John Deere Plow Co. v. Spatz, 20: 492, 99 Pac. 221, — Kan. —. (Annotated)

DISORDERLY HOUSES.

The keeping of a disorderly house by a man of good character who has been a tavern keeper for thirty years is not shown by the fact that a few negroes congregated about his place, that drunken people have been seen on a neighboring highway, and that in two cases liquor had been sold to minors. Schneider v. Com. 20: 107, 111 S. W. 303, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 770.

DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Revocation of will by settlement of property rights in anticipation of divorce, see Wills, 2.

Alimony.

1. Alimony may be decreed to a wife against whom a divorce is granted under a statute providing that, where a divorce is granted, the court shall make such order touching the alimony of the wife as, under the circumstances and nature of the case, shall be reasonable. Ecker v. Ecker, 20: 421, 98 Pac. 918, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

2. A court is without authority, under a statute providing that, when a decree of divorce is granted, the court shall make such order touching the alimony of the wife as shall be reasonable, to decree absolutely a certain and specific sum of money, or a certain specific portion of the property, as alimony, but may decree alimony in a continuous allotment of sums, payable at regular intervals. Ecker v. Ecker, 20: 421, 98 Pac. 918, — Okla. —.

Custody of children.

3. A father is not deprived of the natural right to the custody of his minor children against any person except the mother by a decree in a divorce proceeding, awarding her temporary custody of them, in the absence of a finding that the father is unfit; and, upon her death, such right ceases to be affected by the award. Ex parte Clarke, 20: 171, 118 N. W. 472, — Neb. —. (Annotated)

4. The courts of a state of which a mother who has been granted a divorce and awarded the custody of minor children by the courts of a sister state becomes a resident, dying there, and leaving such children in the hands of relatives, who are appointed guardians, are not deprived of jurisdiction to determine the merits of a controversy between the divorced father and such guardians for the custody of the children by the fact that the court rendering the divorce retained jurisdiction for the purpose of making further orders, that court having refused to determine the merits of the material question in issue. Ex parte Clarke, 20: 171, 118 N. W. 472, — Neb. —.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 18, 19,

DOGS.

See Animals.

DRAINS AND SEWERS.

Nuisance resulting from, see Municipal Corporations, 10-12.

DRUNKENNESS.

Suspension of pupil from school because of, see Schools, 1.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See Constitutional Law, 2-8.

DURESS.

Instructions in action to set aside mortgage for, see Trial, 11.

1. A mortgage which a father is coerced into executing to secure the payment of a defalcation of his son by threats of his arrest and prosecution for embezzlement if such security is not given may be avoided on the ground of duress. Williamson-Halsell Frazier Co. v. Ackerman, 20: 484, 94 Pac. 807, 77 Kan. 502. (Annotated)

2. If the threats of the arrest and prosecution, for embezzlement, of a son, operated to deprive a father of his free will, and to constrain the execution of a mortgage to secure the payment of a defalcation by the son, the actual guilt or innocence of the son is not a material question in determining whether there was duress. Williamson-Halsell Frazier Co. v. Ackerman, 20: 484, 94 Pac. 807, 77 Kan. 502.

3. The test, in determining whether there was duress in securing the execution by a father of a mortgage to secure the payment of a defalcation of his son, in order to prevent his prosecution for embezzlement, is not so much the means by which the father was compelled to execute the mortgage as the state of mind induced by the means employed,—the fear which made it impossible for him to exercise his own free will. Williamson-Halsell Frazier Co. v. Ackerman, 20: 484, 94 Pac. 807, 77 Kan. 502.

EASEMENTS.

Right to compensation for interference with light, air, and view, see Eminent Domain, 1.

In party wall, see Party Walls.

EJECTMENT.

Damages for wrongful holding of lands in action of ejectment, see Damages, 11.

1. The breaking and reducing of wild lands to cultivation constitutes a "permanent improvement" for which compensation may be claimed by one in possession of lands under a tax deed, who has been defeated of the possession by the holder of the legal title. Gibson v. Fields, 20: 378, 98 Pac. 1112, — Kan. —. (Annotated)

2. Upon the adjudication of the counterclaims where one in possession of land under a tax deed has been defeated of the possession by the holder of the legal title, and claims compensation for permanent improvements and taxes paid, only the reasonable rent of the premises without the improvements should be offset, and not rent for the premises as increased by the improvements, since the one dispossessed should not be made to pay rent for improvements made by himself. Gibson v. Fields, 20: 378, 98 Pac. 1112, — Kan. —.

ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

1. Obtaining a judgment and execution to enforce the alleged lien under a clause in a lease giving the landlord the first lien on all crops and chattels of the lessee for rent and damages precludes the maintenance of a replevin suit to obtain possession of the property on the theory that the contract was a chattel mortgage, in the absence of anything to show that the property could not be secured by the sheriff under an execution. Wilmore v. Mintz, 20: 259, 95 Pac. 536, 42 Colo. 328. (Annotated)

2. One who has sold and transferred personal property to another, and received a portion of the price, has no right to sue him and others to whom he has transferred the property, for conspiracy to defraud her of her property, alleging the sale and transfer in the complaint; and such attempted action will not, therefore, on the theory of election of remedies, bar her right to sue her vendee for the unpaid purchase money. Henry v. Herrington, 20: 249, 86 N. E. 29, 193 N. Y. 218.

ELECTIONS.

Evidence in prosecution for perjury for false swearing as to qualifications of voters, see Evidence, 28, 30, 31.

Perjury in swearing to qualifications of voters, see Perjury.

ELECTRICITY.

Presumption of negligence from happening of accident, see Evidence, 8.

1. A company furnishing electricity for the lighting of a shop, the inside wiring of which was done under an independent contract with the owner thereof, and accepted by him and approved by the city inspector, is not liable for injury to a person who is in such building as a mere licensee, caused by reason of such inside wiring having become imperfectly insulated by the act of the owner, without notice thereof to the electric company. Minnesota General Elec. Co. v. Cronon, 20: 816, 186 Fed. 651, — C. C. A. —.

2. A disinterested person who voluntarily and uninvited enters a building to ascertain the cause of, and to extinguish, a fire therein, is a mere licensee, to whom a company furnishing the electric current for the lighting thereof owes no obligation other than not wantonly or knowingly to injure him. Minnesota General Elec. Co. v. Cronon, 20: 816, 186 Fed. 651, — C. C. A. —.

ELEVATORS.

As dangerous machine on which children may not be employed, see Master and Servant, 4.

EMBEZZLEMENT.

Mortgage to prevent prosecution for, see Duress.

Instructions in action to set aside mortgage given to prevent prosecution for, see Trial, 11.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

What constitutes a taking.

1. Recovery cannot be had by an abutting owner because of interference with the light, air, or prospect of his property through an elevation of railroad tracks, in the absence of any taking of his land or destruction of his easements, under a statute requiring compensation to be made for all damage caused by the taking of land or by the change or discontinuance of a private way or by the taking of an easement. Davis v. New England R. Co. 20: 1061, 85 N. E. 475, 199 Mass. 292. (Annotated)

2. The remedy of one over whose property a temporary structure is erected for the running of trains pending an elevation of railroad tracks is an action for trespass, and not under the statutes allowing compensation for property taken by right of eminent domain. (N.S.)

inent domain. Davis v. New England R. Co. 20: 1061, 85 N. E. 475, 199 Mass. 292.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY INSURANCE.

See Insurance, 25.

ENTIRETIES.

Estate by, see Husband and Wife, 1.

ENTIRETY.

Of contract, see Contracts, 8.

EQUITABLE CONVERSION.

By will, see Wills, 4, 5.

Equity never enforces the doctrine of equitable conversion for the benefit of creditors. Painter v. Painter, 20: 117, 69 Atl. 323, 220 Pa. 82.

EQUITY.

Injunction to prevent multiplicity of suits, see Injunction, 8.

Injunction to avoid multiplicity of suits as infringement of right to trial by jury, see Jury, 2.

See also Equitable Conversion.

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

Curtsey in equity of redemption of wife's lands, see Curtsey, 5.

ERROR.

See Appeal and Error.

ESCAPE.

Evidence that one on trial for crime refused to escape, see Evidence, 23.

ESTOPPEL.

Of building association to deny power to borrow money, see Building and Loan Associations, 1.

Of insurance company, see Insurance.

Of infant falsely representing age to recover damages for personal injuries against master, see Master and Servant, 2.

EVIDENCE.

Estoppel to complain of evidence introduction of which one has procured, see Appeal and Error, 6.

Review on appeal of discretion as to admitting, see Appeal and Error, 7.

Waiver of error in admission of, see Appeal and Error, 12.

Reversible error in admission or exclusion of, see Appeal and Error, 15-20.

Error in admission of expert testimony as to dangerous character of machine, see Appeal and Error, 15.

New trial for newly discovered evidence, see New Trial.

Reception of, on trial, see Trial, 1.

Judicial notice that January is in the winter season, see Pleading, 11.

Presumptions and burden of proof.

Sufficiency of evidence to rebut presumption, see infra, 38.

As to presumptions on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 5.

Presumption of negligence from injury to servant, see Trial. 7.

Seal as prima facie evidence of consideration, see Seal.

1. In a criminal prosecution for the violation of a statute prohibiting the sale or keeping for sale of "malt, spirituous, or vinous liquors or any intoxicating drinks" without a license, where the charge is for selling or keeping for the purpose of sale "certain malt and intoxicating liquor," and the proof shows that malt liquor was sold and kept for sale, the state is not required to allege or prove that the liquors sold or kept for the purpose of sale are in fact intoxicating, as it is sufficient to allege and prove the sale, or the keeping for the purpose of sale, of any prohibited liquors, in violation of the terms of such statute. Luther v. State, 20: 1146, 120 N. W. 125, — Neb. —.

2. One accused of counseling suicide has not the burden of showing that decedent acted of his own volition, and not under the advice and counsel of the accused. State v. Webb, 20: 1142, 115 S. W. 998, 216 Mo. 378.

3. Proof of insolvency at a particular time does not create a presumption that the same condition existed at any considerable time anterior thereto, nor is it evidentiary of such condition at a time very remote to that to which the evidence is directed. Ellis v. State, 20: 444, 119 N. W. 1110, — Wis. —.

4. As a general rule, after a boy has reached the age of fourteen years, courts do not permit juries to presume him incompetent for the duties of a particular employment, because of minority alone; and, when over that age, the burden of proof is upon the one alleging incompetence. Wilkinson v. Kanawha & H. Coal & C. Co. 20: 331, 61 S. E. 875, — W. Va. —.

(Annotated)

5. A judgment creditor of a legatee, who attempts to set aside an assignment of the legacy as in fraud of his rights, has the burden of showing the fraud. Beaver v. Ross, 20: 65, 118 N. W. 287, — Iowa, —.

6. That the consideration for a transfer of corporate stock between persons not related was paid to the grantor's near relative, upon assignment thereof, does not change the rule imposing on the party assailing the transaction the burden of proving it fraudulent. Everitt v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 20: 996, 117 N. W. 401, — Neb. —.

7. There is no presumption of law that a corporation organized for a definite period will prolong its artificial existence by availing itself of statutory provisions for renewal of its franchise. Newhall v. Journal Printing Co. 20: 899, 117 N. W. 228, 105 Minn. 44.

8. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur cannot be invoked to hold liable an electric company furnishing a current of electricity 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to a private building, connected with inside wiring owned by, and under the exclusive control of, the owner of the building, for an injury resulting directly from the imperfect insulation and condition of such inside wiring, merely because the electric company is producing and furnishing the dangerous and subtle element of electricity under a contract with such owner. Minnesota General Elec. Co. v. Cronon, 20: 816, 166 Fed. 651, — C. C. A. —.

9. Negligence on the part of a railroad company will not be inferred from the mere fact that a car door slammed shut, catching and crushing the hand of a passenger, who, while attempting to pass through it, rested his hand on the door jamb. Christensen v. Oregon S. L. R. Co. 20: 255, 99 Pac. 676, — Utah, —.

10. Where a car is received from another company to be switched to its destination within a city without any inspection as to its condition, it cannot be inferred, when it is discovered that the coupling apparatus is so defective as not to meet the requirements of the safety-appliance act of Congress, which fact is discovered en route, that the break in the apparatus occurred at the time it was discovered to be out of order. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. United States, 20: 473, 165 Fed. 423, — C. C. A. —.

11. Actionable negligence on the part of the owner of a building in maintaining a window the glass of which broke and injured an employee whose duty was to open and close the window, is not shown by the mere happening of the accident, where there is nothing to show the efficient cause of the accident. Stewart & Co. v. Harman, 20: 228, 70 Atl. 333, 108 Md. 446.

12. Under certain circumstances, the maxim, Res ipsa loquitur may apply in an action brought by a servant against his master for injury caused by an agency of the master, since the application of the maxim does not ordinarily depend upon the relation between the parties, except indirectly, so far as that relation defines the measure of duty imposed on the defendant. Jenkins v. St. Paul City R. Co. 20: 401, 117 N. W. 928, 105 Minn. 504.

13. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies in case of injury to a servant through the alleged negligence of the master, where the facts eliminate blame on the part of the servant or his fellow servants, but show prima facie negligence on the part of someone. La Bee v. Sultan Logging Co. 20: 405, 91 Pac. 560, 47 Wash. 57.

14. Evidence that an appliance furnished by a master for a particular purpose breaks while being used in a proper manner for that purpose is sufficient to establish a prima facie case of negligence against the master. La Bee v. Sultan Logging Co. 20: 405, 91 Pac. 560, 47 Wash. 57.

15. An innkeeper has the burden of absolving himself from negligence when a guest shows a personal injury by the fall upon him of the upper portion of a folding bed which he is occupying. Lyttle v. Denny, 20: 1027, 71 Atl. 841, 222 Pa. 395.

(Annotated)

16. In a trial following the replevying of intoxicating liquors, to determine the right of possession thereof, evidence that, at the commencement of the litigation, the defendant held the property as city marshal, under a warrant issued by a police court, justifies a presumption, in the absence of anything to indicate the contrary, that he was acting under an ordinance passed in aid of a prohibitory law, authorizing the seizure and destruction of liquors kept for sale in violation of the statute. Hines v. Stahl, 20: 1118, 99 Pac. 273, — Kan. —.

17. To make applicable to one suffering from a shot wound, and weakened by disease so that he was too weak to sign his name, and who is alleged to have made statements in answer to questions propounded to him, the rule as to presumptions arising against one accused of crime from statements made against himself, he must be found to have been in such condition of mind and body as to have been able to know the statement he was making, and to understand the questions propounded to him. State v. Webb, 20: 1142, 115 S. W. 998, 216 Mo. 378.

Documentary evidence.

18. That a decree was rendered in vacation may be shown by deposition. Jackson v. Becktold Printing & B. Mfg. Co. 20: 454, 112 S. W. 161, 86 Ark. 591.

19. Depositions, the taking of which is not authorized by any rule of court, are not admissible in evidence. Lyttle v. Denny, 20: 1027, 71 Atl. 841, 222 Pa. 395.

Confessions.

20. Where a sheriff having the custody of a person accused of murder obtains a confession from him by promises of assistance, and statements that he would do all he could to save accused from being hung, other confessions subsequently made to different persons, but in the presence of such sheriff, must be regarded as tainted with the same improper influence, and are inadmissible against accused, though he was warned before making them that, if made, they would be used against him. State v. Wood, 20: 392, 48 So. 438, 122 La. 1014.

Hearsay; declarations; res gestæ.

21. The plaintiff in a suit for malpractice, who fully describes his injury and the operation to which he was compelled to submit because of the defendant's alleged failure properly to care for it, waives the statutory privilege of excluding from evidence the testimony of the surgeon performing the operation. Capron v. Douglass, 20: 1003, 85 N. E. 827, 193 N. Y. 11. (Annotated)

22. Statements of bystanders at the time of the killing of a person by a street car are not admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ in an action to hold the street car company liable for the death. Louisville R. Co. v. Johnson, 20: 133, 115 S. W. 207. — Ky. —. (Annotated)
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

23. The statement by the conductor of a car which kills a man on the track, made when he and the motorman had reached deceased, admonishing the motorman to make no statements, is not admissible as res gestæ in an action against the street car company to recover damages for the death, since it does not tend to throw light upon any phase of the controversy. Louisville R. Co. v. Johnson, 20: 133, 115 S. W. 207. — Ky. —.

24. The statement of a motorman in charge of a car which killed a person on the track, immediately after the accident when he had reached the body of deceased, that he saw the man and tried to stop, but could not, is admissible in an action against the street car company to recover damages for the death as part of the res gestæ, when one controversy in the case is whether deceased was struck by the front of the car, or fell, or was pushed against the side of it. Louisville R. Co. v. Johnson, 20: 133, 115 S. W. 207. — Ky. —.

Relevancy and materiality.

25. Evidence of the general reputation of a person for financial responsibility is relevant on the question of his solvency. Ellis v. State, 20: 444, 119 N. W. 1110. — Wis. —.

26. Upon trial of one for perjury in falsely swearing that certain persons were properly registered as voters from a certain place, evidence is admissible that accused directed them to register, and promised to protect them from harm if they did so, as tending to establish a motive for the testimony as to their being properly registered. People v. Cahill, 20: 1084, 96 N. E. 39, 193 N. Y. 232.

27. Upon the question of damages to be awarded a married woman for negligent injury to her person, witnesses may state that before her injury she performed certain household duties, and what she was able or not able to do after the injury, for the purpose of showing the extent of the injury. Colorado Spring & I. R. Co. v. Nichols, 20: 215, 92 Pac. 691, 41 Colo. 272.

28. Evidence that, after the breaking of a pane of glass causing an injury, new beading or strips to hold the pane in place were placed in the sash, is not admissible to prove negligence on the part of the owner in the maintenance of the window. Stewart & Co. v. Harman, 20: 228, 70 Atl. 333. 108 Md. 446.

29. Evidence that one on trial for crime refused to embrace an opportunity to escape from prison is not admissible in his favor, although the state has proved his flight immediately after the crime was committed, where the two occurrences are entirely distinct and independent. Bailey v. State, 20: 409, 48 So. 227. — Miss. —.

(Annotated)

30. Where one who a person on trial for perjury falsely swore was properly registered as a voter from a certain place was disqualified both because of nonage and non-residence, evidence of an admission by accused, prior to the other's registry, that he was not qualified, may be considered by the jury as relating to either disqualification. People v. Cahill, 20: 1084, 86 N. E. 39, 193 N. Y. 232.

31. Upon the question of perjury in swearing that certain voters lived at the place from which they registered, evidence is admissible that, at the time accused instructed them to register, he told them that if any harm came he would see that they got out. People v. Cahill, 20: 1084, 86 N. E. 39, 193 N. Y. 232.

32. Evidence of the value of specific pieces of commercial paper, based wholly on ignorance of the witness as to whether the maker possesses any property liable to execution, is not relevant on the subject of the solvency of the maker thereof. Ellis v. State, 20: 444, 119 N. W. 1110, — Wis. —.

33. Proof that a person was insolvent at a particular time, by means of judgments against him, shown at such time to be uncollectable, is not relevant as circumstantial evidence that he was insolvent six months or more prior thereto, especially where, shortly after the earlier date, he transferred his property for the payment of his obligations. Ellis v. State, 20: 444, 119 N. W. 1110, — Wis. —.

34. In an action for damages for an assault and battery, a hat showing a break or rent at a place which, when worn, would be over or near the point of injury upon plaintiff's head, is admissible in evidence, where the evidence preliminary to its introduction showed that it was worn by plaintiff at the time of the alleged assault, that it was picked up immediately after the encounter near where he fell, and that it was presented in the same condition as when found, the contention of plaintiff being that the break could not have been made by defendant's fist, and that therefore some heavy and dangerous instrument was used by defendant in striking the blow complained of. Morris v. Miller, 20: 907, 119 N. W. 458, — Neb. —.

Weight and sufficiency.

Sufficiency of evidence to establish necessity of existence of hotel, see Innkeepers, 1.

Sufficiency of evidence to show that one is not a bona fide tavern keeper, see Innkeepers, 2.

Sufficiency to show keeping of disorderly house, see Disorderly Houses.

35. That firemen would have been able to prevent the destruction of a building by fire had they not been interfered with may be found by the fact that the buildings on fire were small and burned slowly, and that, but for the interference, they would have reached the scene seventeen minutes before the building in question began to burn, and would have been fully equipped to fight the fire. Houren v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 20: 1110, 86 N. E. 611, 236 Ill. 620.

36. The inability of a helper on a complicated machine to understand the language of his superior may be found to be the cause of the latter's loss of fingers, cut off by the machinery, where they were caught in such a way as to be fastened, but not injured, and the superior directed the helper, whose duty it was to do so, to put the power off from the machine, but the latter, not knowing the situation, and not understanding the directions, started the machine, cutting off the fingers. Beers v. Prouty, 20: 39, 85 N. E. 864, 200 Mass. 19.

37. That a release of liability for negligently killing a person was induced by fraud may be found from the fact that the responsible person represented that his attorney, having full knowledge of the circumstances and cause of action, said that there was no liability for the death, and that the person signing the release need not go to the expense of looking up the facts and seeking advice, but might settle the case upon the opinion of such attorney. Olston v. Oregon Water Power & R. Co. 20: 915, 96 Pac. 1095, — Or. —.

38. In an action by a motorman of an electric street car for damages for personal injuries caused by his car running upon a curve with such speed as to derail and capsize it, thereby causing the injuries complained of, where the issue is whether a shock of electricity passing through him from his hand on the controller, and through his foot, resting upon the metallic dog of the hand brake produced temporary paralysis, by reason of which he was deprived of control of the car, any presumption of negligence arising from the application of the maxim, Res ipsa loquitur, is rebutted by affirmative testimony, inter alia, that the car had been used without similar trouble for twenty days before, and months after, the occurrence of the accident, during which time the car was shown to have been in the same condition as at the time of the accident, that it was of standard type, and made by a reputable manufacturer, and that it had been subjected to all reasonable, practical, and usual inspection. Jenkins v. St. Paul City R. Co. 20: 401, 117 N. W. 928, 105 Minn. 504.

39. One sent to help operate a complicated machine may be found incompetent, so as to render the master liable for injury to his superior through his act, where he could not understand the language of his superior, and the operation of the machine required two men and the frequent stopping, cleaning, and starting of it, in the accomplishment of which directions to him from the superior were necessary. Beers v. Prouty, 20: 39, 85 N. E. 864, 200 Mass. 19.

(Annotated.)

40. A jury cannot decide a person unfit for his employment on account of what they see, or suppose they see, or can read, in his face and manner while testifying before them. Wilkinson v. Kanawha & H. Coal & C. Co. 20: 331, 61 S. E. 875. — W. Va. —.

41. The incompetence of a railroad conductor may be found from evidence that, although he had worked in several capacities on the railroad for some time, he had only recently been placed in charge of a scheduled train, with nothing to show that he was instructed, or knew, that, when directed to pass an inferior train at a particular point by special order, he was bound to await its arrival; and that, upon arriving at the meeting place under such order, and not finding the other train there, he directed the engineer to go forward, under the general rule that trains moving in the direction that his train was going had the right of way, and inferior trains from the opposite direction must keep out of the way. Still v. San Francisco & N. W. R. Co. 20: 322, 98 Pac. 672, — Cal. —.

Admissibility under pleadings.

42. An allegation in a complaint by a servant against his master for personal injuries, of failure to provide a safe place in which to work, which is a mere deduction from specific acts of negligence alleged, does not widen the scope of the inquiry so as to admit evidence of negligence not covered in the specific allegations. La Bee v. Sultan Logging Co. 20: 405, 91 Pac. 560, 47 Wash. 57.

Variance.

Raising question of variance for first time on Appeal, see Appeal and Error, 11.

43. There is no material variance between the pleading and proof in an action for the death of an employee in a mine, caused by the negligence of one employed to assist in lowering cars from the mine to a tippie at a railroad below, where the declaration charged that it was defendant's duty to have a careful and competent person to operate the knuckle where the cars were let down from the mine entry to the tippie, but that, not regarding that duty, it employed an irresponsible boy of the age of fifteen years to operate the knuckle and levers necessary to operate the knuckle in letting down the cars, while the evidence showed that the word "knuckle" was sometimes used as an inclusive term, to embrace the drum house and all the appurtenances at the head of the incline, but that the boy was employed simply to operate the chock blocks immediately at the knuckle, and also that he was fifteen years and four months old. Wilkinson v. Kanawha & H. Coal & C. Co. 20: 331, 61 S. E. 875, — W. Va. —.

EXCEPTIONS.

Necessity of, see Appeal and Error, 3, 4.

Bill of exceptions, see Appeal and Error, 4.

In deed of growing timber, see Deeds.

EXECUTION.

Obtaining judgment in execution to enforce lien as bar to maintenance of replevin suit, see Election of Remedies, 1.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Exemption from, see Exemptions.

Levy on intoxicating liquors, see Evidence, 16.

Injunction by purchaser of stock to restrain sheriff from selling on execution against vendor, see Injunction, 9.

As to what property is subject to seizure on execution, see Levy and Seizure.

Mandamus to compel issuance of, see Mandamus, 1.

Right of officer from whom property levied on has been replevied to continue litigation after expiration of term of office, see Officers, 4.

Intoxicating liquors seized by officer under warrant, see Replevin, 2.

The clerk cannot issue an execution on a judgment which has been set aside by the court. State ex rel. Spratlin v. Thompson, 20: 1, 102 S. W. 349, 118 Tenn. 571.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

An administrator may settle a claim for the negligent killing of his intestate without authority from the court. Olston v. Oregon Water Power & R. Co. 20: 915, 96 Pac. 1095, — Or. —.

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

See Damages, 2.

EXEMPTIONS.

Statutory exemption from arrest for debt, see Arrest.

From taxation, see Taxes, 2.

A homestead purchased with pension money belonging to a man, and, by his direction, conveyed to his wife, is not subject to execution upon a judgment against her, although it is based on a claim antedating the acquisition of the homestead, if the purchase was made without the intention of making her the real owner of the property. Ratliff v. Elwell, 20: 223, 119 N. W. 740, — Iowa, —.

EXPLOSION.

Injury by explosion of stove polish, see Negligence, 5-7.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

1. A person who enters upon grounds lawfully in possession of boys giving a free picnic, notice having been given in advance that later in the day a baseball game would be played, to which admission would be charged, and who, when the game was about to commence, refused to pay the fee or go out, and was thereupon taken by the arm by a citizen,—one of the assembled patrons,—acting in behalf of the boys, though without special authority, and led in the direction of the gate, always with the privilege of paying and staying, and the alternative of not paying and going, and who, before reaching the gate, did pay, and thereafter stay, is thereby afforded, as against such citizen, no ground for an action in damages for false imprisonment, since the restraint imposed was not total, and was imposed merely as a means of his ejection until he elected to pay the lawfully charged fee, and was therefore the result of his voluntary persistence in an unlawful act. Crossett v. Campbell, 20: 967, 48 So. 141, 122 La. 659. (Annotated)

2. The arrest without warrant, by one clothed with the authority of a police officer, of a person found by him in a public place in a state of intoxication and acting in a disorderly manner, is not a false arrest; nor is his detention for the action of the proper police authorities a false imprisonment. Erie R. Co. v. Reicherd, 20: 295, 166 Fed. 247, — C. C. A. —.

3. One who, upon being arrested for intoxication and disorderly conduct, to secure his release, enters a plea of guilty and waives the reading of the affidavit and the right to be present in court upon trial, waives any claim he may have against the officer who arrested him, for false arrest or imprisonment. Erie R. Co. v. Reicherd, 20: 295, 166 Fed. 247, — C. C. A. —.

(Annotated)

FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.

In insurance policy, see Insurance.

FARMERS.

Exemption of, from involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy, 2.

FELLOW SERVANTS.

See Master and Servant, 16-22.

FENCES.

A statute providing that the owners of adjacent lands shall build and maintain the partition fences between them in equal shares unless otherwise agreed upon, and that, if any party neglects to build or repair a partition fence, or the portion thereof which he ought to build, the aggrieved party may complain to the township trustees, who, if, upon notice, he fails to construct, may order it built, and the costs collected as other taxes, cannot be so construed and administered as to charge the owner of lands which are, and are to remain, uninclosed, with any part of the expense of constructing and maintaining such a line fence for the sole benefit of the adjoining proprietor. Alma Coal Co. v. Cozad, 20: 1092, 87 N. E. 172, 79 Ohio St. 348.

(Annotated)

FIRE INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

FIRES.

Injury to growing plants from frost by negligent burning of protecting cover as act of God, see Act of God.

Interference with firemen in reaching burning building, see Evidence, 35.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Proximate cause of loss by, see Proximate Cause, 3, 4.

Set by sparks from railroad locomotives, see Railroads, 6.

1. The violation by a railroad company of a statute forbidding the obstruction of street crossings in cities is negligence, as matter of law, as against the owner of a house destroyed by fire, because of failure of the fire department, whose progress was interfered with by the obstruction, to reach it in time to extinguish the fire. Houren v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 20: 1110, 86 N. E. 611, 236 Ill. 620. (Annotated)

2. A railroad company cannot avoid liability for loss of a building by fire on account of its delaying the fire department by maintaining a train across the street because the policeman might have cleared the crossing. Houren v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 20: 1110, 86 N. E. 611, 236 Ill. 620.

FORFEITURE.

Of insurance policy, see Insurance, 10, 11.

Waiver of forfeiture of insurance policies, see Insurance, 16.

Forfeiture of auctioneer's license as penalty in civil suit by other merchant, see License.

FORGERY.

Payment of forged check, see Banks, 1.

FRAUD AND DECEIT.

Effect of, on right to discharge in bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy, 4, 5, 7, 9.

In issue of stock, see Corporations, 4, 5.

Burden of proving fraud in assignment of legacy, see Evidence, 5.

Sufficiency of evidence to show that release was secured by fraud, see Evidence, 37.

As to fraudulent conveyances, see Fraudulent Conveyances.

As defeating liability on insurance policy, see Insurance, 23.

When action for relief on ground of, is barred, see Limitation of Actions, 5.

Larceny of money obtained by, see Larceny.

Right to attack for fraud release under sale, see Sale.

Rescission for, of executory contract for purchase of land; vendee's right to lien for advance payment, see Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Burden of proof, see Evidence, 6.

1. The sale by a merchant of a drug store which he conducts in a separate building and under a separate name from that in and under which his general business is conducted must comply with the statutes providing for the sale by a merchant of the whole or a large part of his stock in trade.

since it is to be regarded as the sale of an independent business. Young v. Lemieux, 20: 160, 65 Atl. 436, 79 Conn. 434.

2. One who purchases a retail stock of goods from a merchant who has not complied with the statutory requirement as to notice of sale is not entitled to retain against creditors of the merchant articles placed in the stock by him after the purchase, if they merely replace the goods sold, and are purchased with the avails of such sales. Young v. Lemieux, 20: 160, 65 Atl. 436, 79 Conn. 434.

Liability of purchaser.

3. The rule that a vendee is not a bona fide purchaser for value until he has actually paid the purchase price, or become irrevocably bound for its payment, cannot be invoked against one who has promised to give a consideration for the transfer assailed, unless it appears that the transfer will hinder or delay the vendor's creditors. Everitt v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 20: 996, 117 N. W. 401. — Neb. —.

Remedies.

4. A bail in a criminal recognizance, against whom an award of execution upon the recognizance has been made, and to whom a bond has been given to indemnify him against all loss or damage which he might sustain on account of having signed the recognizance, may file a bill in equity, before payment of the recognizance debt, to set aside a deed made by the obligor in such indemnity bond, as made with intent to defraud him as a creditor. Carr v. Davis, 20: 58, 63 S. E. 326. — W. Va. —.

5. Anyone who, but for a deed made to defraud creditors, would have a right to subject the property to his demand is a "creditor," entitled to sue in equity to set it aside, under W. Va. Code 1906, §§ 3099-3108. Carr v. Davis, 20: 58, 63 S. E. 326. — W. Va. —.

FREIGHT CARRIERS.

See Carriers, 18-23.

FUTURES.

Dealing in, as gaming, see Gaming, 3.

GAMING.

1. A slot machine known as a percentage game of chance, in which a fund is constantly kept, against which the player plays, and to which the losings are added, and from which his winnings are taken, the chances being unequal in favor of the owner of the machine, is a banking game within the inhibition of N. M. Laws 1907, chap. 64, p. 25, § 1, making it unlawful to run and operate any banking games of chance such as faro, etc., or any other banking games or games of chance played with dice or cards, by whatsoever name known. Territory v. Jones, 20: 239, 99 Pac. 338. — N. M. —.

2. Slot machines, where the chances are unequal in favor of the machine, are ejusdem generis with faro, monte, roulette, fan tan, poker, craps, etc., specifically enumerated in, and prohibited by N. M. Laws 1907, chap. 64, p. 25, § 1, and are unlawful. Territory v. Jones, 20: 239, 99 Pac. 338. — N. M. —. (Annotated)

3. The keeping of a bucket shop is within the provisions of a statute providing for the punishment of one who shall keep any place for the purpose of gaming. Wade v. United States, 20: 347. — App. D. C. —. (Annotated)

GARNISHMENT.

Against whom.

1. The courts of a state have jurisdiction to entertain garnishment proceedings against nonresident parties in all cases where the defendant and garnishee are both personally served with process while within that state. McShane v. Knox, 20: 271, 114 N. W. 955, 103 Minn. 268.

2. A foreign insurance company authorized to do business within the state is chargeable there as trustee for money due its agent for commissions on business done there, under a statute providing that a person doing business in the state and residing outside may be charged as trustee, as if he were an inhabitant of the state, for any credits of the defendant by reason of contracts performed within the state. Steer v. Dow, 20: 263, 71 Atl. 217, 75 N. H. 95.

What subject to.

3. Renewal commissions due by an insurance company to its general agent under contract are subject to garnishment in the hands of the company in favor of his creditor, although they accrued partly from the efforts of subagents and, under the contract, were payable at his residence in another state. Steer v. Dow, 20: 263, 71 Atl. 217, 75 N. H. 95. (Annotated)

4. A writ of garnishment does not reach salary unearned at the date of service thereof, as it applies only to property in esse at such date. Humphrey v. Midkiff, 20: 912, 48 So. 331, 122 La. 939. (Annotated)

5. A garnishee cannot be penalized for false answers made to interrogatories regarding the amount of salary paid, and the amount of his indebtedness to a judgment debtor, by the rendering of a judgment for a larger amount than that due at the date of service thereof, since unearned salary cannot be reached by anticipation through process of garnishment. Humphrey v. Midkiff, 20: 912, 48 So. 331, 122 La. 939.

Situs of debts.

6. A debt due by a resident of this state to a nonresident may be reached by garnishment proceeding sued out upon a tax execution issued by a tax collector for a special tax due the state by such nonresident, notwithstanding the debt due the nonresident may have been payable in the state where the creditor of the garnishee resided. A. B. Baxter & Co. v. Andrews, 20: 268, 62 S. E. 42. — Ga. —.

7. The situs of property, as determined by the residence of the parties, which is sought to be reached by garnishment, is immaterial, where personal service is had upon both defendant and garnishee. McShane v. Knox, 20: 271, 114 N. W. 955, 103 Minn. 268.

8. In garnishment, the place of payment of a debt is immaterial where the garnishee interposes no claim that he cannot be compelled to make payment at a place other than that agreed upon with the creditor. McShane v. Knox, 20: 271, 114 N. W. 955, 103 Minn. 268.

GRAND JURY.

Exercise of superintending control in reviewing decision as to competency of grand juror, see Courts, 2.

Mandamus to compel court to hear cause; where this would require overruling of order, quashing indictment, or disqualification of grand juror, see Mandamus, 2.

The presence upon the grand jury of the man intended by the jury commissioners is shown by the fact that although, in placing his name in the box, an initial was misplaced, and the statute did not require his residence to be designated on the paper slip, yet they substituted for the residence of the man bearing the name so written on the slip that of the one who served on the jury. State ex rel. McGovern v. Williams, 20: 941, 116 N. W. 225, 136 Wis. 1.

GUARANTY INSURANCE.

See Insurance, 25.

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

Effect of appointment of guardian on parent's right to custody of children, see Infants, 3.

HARMLESS ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 15-27.

HIGHWAYS.

Use of automobiles on, see Automobiles.

Injunction to restrain injury to lateral support of highway, see Injunction, 10.

Right to lateral support for, see Lateral Support.

Requiring removal of stationary awnings from, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

Negligent injuries on, generally, see Negligence, 10.

Uses.

Pleading in complaint for injuries by frightening of horse on highway, see Pleading, 6, 7.

Sufficiency of declaration in action for injuries because of defective highway, see Pleading, 8.

1. A permit to move a building along a street will not justify the moving of a building larger than the one described therein. Com. v. Byard, 20: 814, 86 N. E. 285, 200 Mass. 175.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Trees in.

2. A municipal corporation acting in good faith may, under its charter authority to repair the streets and remove nuisances, remove without compensation or notice the trees of an abutting owner which are within the limits of the highway, the roots of which interfere with the operation of a municipal sewer. Rosenthal v. Goldsboro, 20: 809, 62 S. E. 905, 149 N. C. 128.

(Annotated)

Liability of municipality as to.

3. A city cannot be held liable for injuries due to the frightening of a horse by stones which, for the purpose of repairing a highway, it had piled along the curb out of that traveled path, if it has used due care in their location, although they may be of such a nature that horses of ordinary gentleness are occasionally frightened by them, though they are permitted to remain longer than is absolutely necessary before the injury occurs. Elam v. Mt. Sterling, 20: 512, 117 S. W. 250, — Ky. —.

(Annotated)

4. A town is not bound as matter of law to place a barrier in every case between a highway and a stone lying immediately adjacent thereto, which, if within the limits of the highway, would constitute an obstruction, falling over which might injure a traveler; and it is immaterial that there is nothing to mark the line of the highway. Shea v. Whitman, 20: 980, 83 N. E. 1096, 197 Mass. 374.

(Annotated)

5. A municipal corporation which maintains, without drainage, a sidewalk along a street crossing a railroad below grade in such a manner that, by reason of its grade and formation, ice accumulates and remains on it in freezing weather so as to be unsafe for pedestrians using it, without any attempt to remove the ice, will be held liable for injuries to a pedestrian who falls thereon, if the jury finds that the conditions existing at the time of the accident are due to the city's negligence. Holbert v. Philadelphia, 20: 201, 70 Atl. 746, 221 Pa. 266.

(Annotated)

Contributory negligence of pedestrian.

Contributory negligence of one injured by runaway horse on, see Negligence, 11.

Contributory negligence of pedestrian on, as question for jury, see Trial, 5.

6. The mere presence of ice on a sidewalk is not sufficient to admonish a pedestrian that, by the exercise of proper care, he cannot pass over it in safety. Holbert v. Philadelphia, 20: 201, 70 Atl. 746, 221 Pa. 266.

7. Mere knowledge of the icy condition of a sidewalk leading under a railroad track which is kept open and maintained for travel by the municipality will not preclude one from using the walk without assuming the risk of its dangerous condition. Holbert v. Philadelphia, 20: 201, 70 Atl. 746, 221 Pa. 266.

Notice of injury.

8. A statement in a notice of claim for an injury alleged to have been due to the negligence of a municipal corporation, that it was caused by falling through a defective sidewalk, the location of which is stated, is a sufficient compliance with a requirement that the notice must describe the defect that caused the injury. Hase v. Seattle, 20: 938, 98 Pac. 370, — Wash. —.

HOMESTEAD.

Exemption of homestead purchased with pension money, see Exemptions.

HOMICIDE.

Reversal of conviction for improper conduct of officer in selecting jurors, see Appeal and Error, 25.

HORSES.

See Animals.

HOTEL.

See Innkeepers.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

As to curtesy, see Curtesy.

As to divorce, see Divorce and Separation.

Measure of damages to married woman for negligent injury, see Damages, 9, 10.

Evidence on question of damages to married woman for negligent injuries, see Evidence, 27.

Exemption of homestead purchased with pension money and conveyed to wife from liability for claim against her, see Exemptions.

Release of surety for married woman incapable of contracting by discharge of principal, see Principal and Surety, 1.

Instruction as to damages in action by married woman for injury, see Trial, 13.

Revocation of will by settlement of property rights in anticipation of divorce, see Wills, 2.

Liability of community property to succession tax, see Taxes, 3, 4.

Estate by entirety.

1. A conveyance to a man and wife jointly of real estate purchased by him with funds partly his own and partly belonging to his wife's separate estate, without her written authority to do so, does not create an estate by entirety, but equity will protect her interest in favor of her heirs. Donovan v. Griffith, 20: 825, 114 S. W. 621, 215 Mo. 149.

Wife's separate estate.

2. In a proceeding by heirs of a wife for partition of real estate purchased wholly or partly with funds from her separate estate and standing in the name of her husband or in their joint names at the time of her death, he is not chargeable for rents accruing on the property before her death, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

whether it was occupied by him or rented to others, where the parties were living together and there is nothing to show that both did not enjoy the benefits and products of the land. Donovan v. Griffith, 20: 825, 114 S. W. 621, 215 Mo. 149.

Antenuptial agreement.

3. A provision in an antenuptial contract, that the husband would adopt a child of the wife, and make her his heir, and bequeath and devise all his property to her, does not prevent his giving, in good faith, to his relatives, before death, a policy of insurance upon his life, which amounts only to a reasonable gift, in view of the property possessed by him. Dickinson v. Seaman, 20: 1154, 85 N. E. 818, 193 N. Y. 18. (Annotated)

ICE.

Injury by ice on sidewalk, see Highways, 5-7.

IMPROVEMENTS.

Allowance for, to one ejected from premises, see Ejectment.

IMPUTED NOTICE.

See Notice.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Liability of state lunatic asylum for acts of employees, see Charities.

INDEFINITENESS.

Of ordinance as to lighting of street crossings by railroad companies, see Municipal Corporations, 4.

INDEMNITY INSURANCE.

See Insurance, 25.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.

Who is, see Master and Servant, 1.

Delegation of master's duty to, see Master and Servant, 16-18.

INDIANS.

Assault on Indian by policeman on Indian reservation, see Assault and Battery, 1.

1. State laws for the peace and good order of the people within its borders extend over Indian reservations, and apply to the infraction of such laws by persons of Indian blood. Deragon v. Sero, 20: 842, 118 N. W. 839, — Wis. —.

2. An Indian agent cannot authorize policemen on a reservation to require persons of Indian blood, going to meet relatives on an incoming train, to keep away from the entrances to the cars. Deragon v. Sero, 20: 842, 118 N. W. 839, — Wis. —.

3. A direction of an Indian agent to policemen on the reservation to keep people back from car entrances when persons are getting on and off cars does not apply to a person of Indian blood who goes in an orderly manner to meet his wife and children who are arriving on a train. Deragon v. Sero, 20: 842, 118 N. W. 839, — Wis. —.

INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

A charge in an indictment under a statute making it an offense punishable by imprisonment for any officer to receive money on deposit in a bank, where the one receiving it knows, or has good cause to know, that the bank is unsafe or insolvent, that a particular person deposited in a specified bank, for his credit, a check on another bank, and that it was received for the bank by its president, naming him, and accepted on deposit, satisfies all the essentials of such statute as to an officer of a bank accepting or receiving money on deposit. Ellis v. State, 20: 444, 119 N. W. 1110, — Wis. —.

INFANTS.

Presumption of incompetence because of minority of servant, see Evidence, 4.

Unlawful employment of, see Master and Servant, 2-4.

Negligence toward trespassing children, see Negligence, 8, 9.

Custody.

Effect of divorce on custody of, see Divorce and Separation, 3, 4.

1. The degree of unfitness which will deprive a parent of the natural right to the custody of his children, while it must be positive, and not comparative, must be considered in relation to the attending circumstances, such as the concern he has shown for them in the past, the suitability of his domestic surroundings to receive them, and the question of their general welfare. Ex parte Clarke, 20: 171, 118 N. W. 472, — Neb. —.

2. The unfitness which deprives a parent of the right to the custody of his children must be positive, and not comparative; and the mere fact that the children would be better nurtured or cared for by a stranger is not sufficient to deprive the parent of his right to their custody. Ex parte Clarke, 20: 171, 118 N. W. 472, — Neb. —.

3. The appointment of a guardian by a county court is not conclusive as against a parent's right to the custody of his children, unless it appears that he had notice of the proceeding, and that the question of his competency and suitability was adjudicated. Ex parte Clarke, 20: 171, 118 N. W. 472, — Neb. —.

INHERITANCE TAX.

See Taxes, 3, 4.

INJUNCTION.

Infringement of right to trial by jury by, see Jury, 2.

Against nuisance, see Nuisance, 5.

Appropriation of secret information.

1. One employed by an optician to examine the eyes of patients and prescribe lenses will, after leaving his employment, be enjoined from making use of names, addresses, and prescriptions which he copied from his employer's records, although his contract did not expressly forbid his making use of such knowledge, and the information he is attempting to use relates exclusively to persons examined by him and the records of whose cases he himself made. Stevens & Co. v. Stiles, 20: 933, 71 Atl. 802, — R. I. —.
20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(Annotated)

Against boycott; acts of strikers.

2. Striking employees cannot be enjoined from inducing employees in factories by which their former employer is attempting to get the work done to fill his contracts, to refuse to work on it, although it results in the owners of such factories breaking their contracts. Iron Molders' Union No. 125 v. Allis-Chalmers Co. 20: 315, 166 Fed. 45, — C. C. A. —.

3. Striking employees cannot be enjoined from using persuasion to prevent other workmen from taking their places, or to induce those who have done so without making a definite contract from quitting work. Iron Molders' Union No. 125 v. Allis-Chalmers Co. 20: 315, 166 Fed. 45, — C. C. A. —.

4. Striking employees cannot be enjoined from picketing if the efforts of the pickets are limited to getting into communication with candidates for employment for the purpose of presenting arguments and appeals to their free judgments to persuade them not to supply the places of the strikers. Iron Molders' Union No. 125 v. Allis-Chalmers Co. 20: 315, 166 Fed. 45, — C. C. A. —.

5. Striking employees may be enjoined from using persuasion to force apprentices to break their contracts to serve for definite times. Iron Molders' Union No. 125 v. Allis-Chalmers Co. 20: 315, 166 Fed. 45, — C. C. A. —.

6. An employer is entitled to an injunction to restrain its striking workmen from keeping other workmen away from his plant by the use of vile and abusive language, threats of violence and assaults. Iron Molders' Union No. 125 v. Allis-Chalmers Co. 20: 315, 166 Fed. 45, — C. C. A. —.

As to offices, elections.

7. Quo warranto, and not injunction, is the proper remedy for an illegal holding of a public office. School Dist. No. 116 v. Wolf, 20: 358, 98 Pac. 237, — Kan. —.

Legal proceedings.

8. A corporation having a perfect defense applicable alike to more than one hundred cases brought against it by employees injured by an accident in its works may, to avoid a multiplicity of suits, maintain a bill to enjoin prosecutions of the actions at law until the defense can be established. Southern Steel Co. v. Hopkins, 20: 848, 47 So. 274, — Ala. —.

(Annotated)

9. A bona fide purchaser of corporate stock is entitled to an injunction to restrain the sheriff from selling the stock upon an execution against the vendor. by Everitt v.

Farmers & M. Bank, 20: 996, 117 N. W. 401, — Neb. —.

As to parks, highways, and railroads.

10. An incorporated village having exclusive control of its highways may maintain a suit in equity to restrain excavation of adjacent lands so as to affect the lateral support and cause or threaten the subsidence of a highway. Haverstraw v. Eckerson, 20: 287, 84 N. E. 578, 192 N. Y. 54.

Preliminary and interlocutory injunctions.

11. An ad interim injunction is properly granted to restrain a common carrier from further discriminations against a shipper of lumber, where the evidence shows that discriminations have been made in favor of shippers of cotton by giving them advance bookings for particular vessels, and refusing like privileges to the shipper of lumber. Ocean Steamship Co. v. Savannah Locomotive Works & S. Co. 20: 867, 63 S. E. 577, — Ga. —.

INNKEEPERS.

Presumption of negligence from injury to guest, see Evidence, 15.

1. The existence of hotels in a city a mile away does not establish the non-necessity of a tavern at a river landing where one has existed for thirty years, and the receipts from it, exclusive of the bar, amount to from $16 to $20 per week, and a number of reputable citizens testify to its necessity, although there is testimony to the contrary. Schneider v. Com. 20: 107, 111 S. W. 303, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 770.

2. One is not shown not to be a bona fide tavern keeper by the fact that the receipts from his bar are in excess of those from the tavern proper. Schneider v. Com. 20: 107, 111 S. W. 303, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 770. (Annotated)

INSOLVENCY.

Receipt of deposit by bank while insolvent, see Banks, 2-7.

Presumption of, see Evidence, 3.

Evidence to show, see Evidence, 25, 32, 33.

Of building association, see Building and Loan Associations, 6, 7.

INSPECTION.

Of books by stockholders, see Corporations, 9-11; Mandamus, 5, 9.

Master's duty of inspection, see Master and Servant, 8, 16.

Right to reasonable time for, upon purchase of articles, see Sale, 1.

INSTRUCTIONS.

See Trial, 10-16.

INSURANCE.

Garnishment of foreign insurance company, see Garnishment, 2.

Garnishment of renewal commissions due general insurance agent, see Garnishment, 3.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Right of state manager to maintain action to recover from agent premiums collected and not paid in, see Parties.

Trover by state manager to recover premium collected by agent and not paid over, see Trover, 1.

Conditions; warranties; representations.

Raising question of effect of vacancy for first time on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 10.

1. A statement regarding the dimensions of a building, in an application for insurance, is not warranted correct by a warranty that the description and statement of the condition, situation, value, occupancy, and title of the property are true. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —.

2. The valuation at $1,500, in an application for insurance of a building which is worth only $200, cannot be regarded as so approximately correct as to comply with a warranty of the statement of value. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —.

3. Statements in an application for insurance that the value of the property is estimated by applicant does not prevent a gross overvaluation from avoiding the policy, where the statement of value is warranted. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —.

4. A statement of the dimensions of the building in an application for insurance is not within a provision of the policy that it shall be void for misrepresentation of any material fact, if it does not appear that the insured was influenced in issuing the policy because of the statement regarding the dimensions of the building. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —. (Annotated)

5. A substantially true statement of the value of a building, in an application of insurance, is a compliance with the warranty of the statement of value. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —.

6. A vendee of land, occupying the same under an executory contract of purchase, on which he has paid a portion of the purchase price, is an "unconditional and sole owner" in fee simple of the equitable title, within the condition of the insurance policy providing that it shall be void if the interest of the insured is other than unconditional and sole ownership of the fee-simple title. Arkansas Ins. Co. v. Cox, 20: 775, 98 Pac. 552, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

7. A provision in an insurance policy which is to become void if the building becomes and remains vacant for five days, unless continued by consent of the insurer, that it shall be the duty of the owner to report a vacancy within five days of such occurrence and as often as every ten days thereafter, applies only when no permit for vacancy has been issued. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —.

8. An application for additional insurance will not avoid a policy under a provision therein that it shall be void if assured shall procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on the property, if both the owner and the company to which the application for additional insurance is made understand that no risk is assumed under it. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —.

9. An insurance policy covering different classes of property, each class being separated from the others, and insured for a specific amount, is separable, and recovery may be had for one or more classes without regard to the other items, where there is a breach of a condition of the contract as to one class of property insured, provided the contract is not affected by any question of fraud, act condemned by public policy, or any increase in the risk of the property insured. Arkansas Ins. Co. v. Cox, 20: 775, 98 Pac. 552, — Okla. —.

Forfeiture.

10. Although a contract for accident insurance, the premiums on which are to be paid monthly, expressly provides that they must be paid on the first day of each month, without notice, yet, if for ten months the insured is sent notice of the maturity of the premium, with a request that it be sent in a self-addressed envelop, the insurer cannot suddenly, without warning, cease to send the notice, and forfeit the policy for nonpayment, which occurs because the assured has, in good faith, waited for the usual notice; especially where the payments were to be entered in a book which must always be presented with the payment, so that assured might well assume that the only safe way of preserving the book was in sending it as directed by the insurer, to a post-office address designated by it. Knoebel v. North American Acci. Ins. Co. 20: 1037, 115 N. W. 1094, 135 Wis. 424. (Annotated)

11. A fire insurance policy is not invalidated by nonpayment of premium notes at maturity, where no reference is made to them in the policy, and its validity is in no way made contingent upon their payment. Arkansas Ins. Co. v. Cox, 20: 775, 98 Pac. 552, — Okla. —.

Transfer of policy or interest therein.

12. Death within the lifetime of the insured terminates the interest of the beneficiary of life insurance policies, and leaves the insured free to make other disposition of the policy. Smith v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 20: 928, 71 Atl. 11, 222 Pa. 226.

Waiver and estoppel.

See also infra, 18.

13. Breach of warranty of a statement of title in an application for insurance is waived if the facts are presented to the agent, and he concludes that the facts establish the title stated, upon which conclusion the statement is inserted in the application. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —.

14. An insured who truthfully and correctly stated the nature and condition of his title in making an application for insurance is not precluded from recovery after loss by a different title being stated in the policy. Arkansas Ins. Co. v. Cox, 20: 775, 98 Pac. 552, — Okla. —.

15. A policy issued upon an application stating the title to the land on which the building is situated to be a lease is not avoided by a provision in the policy that it shall be void if the land is not owned by the insured in fee simple. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —.

16. Issuance by an insurer of a vacancy permit with knowledge that the building has been vacant waives a forfeiture because of such vacancy. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —.

17. An insurance company which furnishes blanks for change of beneficiary, and accepts and recognizes a designated change for a period of years, is estopped to claim that the change was not made in strict accordance with its by-laws. Smith v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 20: 928, 71 Atl. 11, 222 Pa. 226.

18. Failure to notify an insured within a reasonable time after the filing of proofs of loss, which are defective, in that the notary public before whom the same was sworn to did not designate his official title nor attach his seal, of the defect therein, estops the insurer from afterward objecting thereto. Arkansas Ins. Co. v. Cox, 20: 775, 98 Pac. 552, — Okla. —.

The loss, arbitration.

19. No question as to the title of the insured can be considered by referees appointed in accordance with a clause in a standard insurance policy which provides that, upon failure of the parties to agree as to the amount of loss, it should be referred to arbitrators, the award of a majority of whom should be conclusive as to the amount of loss and damage. Dunton v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 20: 1058, 71 Atl. 1037, — Me. —.

Cause of loss.

20. One who has insured property against all direct loss or damage by fire, except as hereafter provided, among which exceptions is loss caused directly or indirectly by riot, is not liable for property burned by an armed and masked body of men who overawe and terrorize the civil authorities and inhabitants of a town, and proceed to burn the property, because they think it is intended to be put to a use detrimental to their interests. Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Imperial Tobacco Co. 20: 277, 116 S. W. 234, — Ky. —. (Annotated)

Extent of loss or recovery.

21. The owner of a building supported by a party wall which is injured by the burning of the adjoining building may recover, under the insurance policy on his building, diminution in its value because of the injuries to the party wall, which may include the full value of the wall. Citizens' F. Ins. Co. v. Lochridge, 20: 226, 116 S. W. 303, — Ky. — (Annotated)

Defenses.

22. A life insurance company cannot absolve itself from liability to the beneficiary duly designated by the insured for the proceeds of the policy by paying them to the administrator of the insured, although the policy provides that the production by the corporation of the policy and of a receipt signed by any person furnishing satisfactory proof that he is executor of insured shall be conclusive proof that the sum had been paid to the person lawfully entitled to receive the same. Smith v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 20: 928, 71 Atl. 11, 222 Pa. 226. (Annotated)

23. To entitle an insurance company to defeat liability on a policy because of fraud, it is not required to tender back the premium received. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 340, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —

Actions; enforcing payment.

24. A stipulation in an insurance policy that no suit shall be brought on a contract unless within twelve months next after the damage occurs does not apply to a suit for damages because of the defective character of repairs which the insurer elects to make after the loss in accordance with its rights under the contract. Winston v. Arlington F. Ins. Co. 20: 960, 32 App. D. C. 61. (Annotated)

Indemnity insurance.

See also Motions and Orders, 1.

25. The giving to the employee of his note by a receiver appointed in supplementary proceedings to collect a judgment against an insolvent employer for injury to his employee is not a satisfaction of the claim within the meaning of an indemnity insurance policy, that no action shall lie against the insurer unless brought by the assured himself, to reimburse him for actual loss sustained and paid by him in satisfaction of a judgment, and gives the receiver no standing to enforce the policy. Stenbom v. Brown-Corliss Engine Co. 20: 956, 119 N. W. 308, — Wis. —

INTERLOCUTORY DECREE.

Time for setting aside, see Judgment, 3.

INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION.

See Injunction, 11.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

See Commerce.

INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

Power of state to forbid publication of advertisements of liquors kept for sale in other states, see Commerce, 1; Statutes, 3.

Levy on, see Levy and Seizure; Replevin, 2.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Power of attorney general to remove municipal officers for failure to make complaint of violation of statute regulating sale of, see Officers, 1, 2.

1. General statutes of a state, regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, operate and have force uniformly throughout that state, notwithstanding anything in municipal charters or ordinances to the contrary. State ex rel. Young v. Robinson, 20: 1127, 112 N. W. 269, 101 Minn. 277.

Licenses.

2. The owner of the fee of a street at the point where it abuts on property, to sell liquor upon which an application has been made for license, is within the provisions of a statute authorizing owners of real estate within 25 feet of such property to object to the granting of the license. Moran v. Gallagher, 20: 116, 85 N. E. 579, 199 Mass. 486.

Unlawful sales.

Prosecution by attorney general for unlawful sales, see Attorney General, 1.

Burden of proof in criminal prosecution for wrongful sale, see Evidence, 1.

3. Whether or not the transportation of liquor from one county, where the sale is lawful, into another in the same state, by a route leading through another state, is interstate commerce, is immaterial to any issue presented by a prosecution for an alleged unlawful sale in the latter county. State v. Rosenberger, 20: 284, 111 S. W. 509, 212 Mo. 648.

4. A statute prohibiting the sale, or keeping for the purpose of sale, of malt liquors, without a license, applies to all malt liquors sold or kept for sale, to be used as a beverage, whether intoxicating or not. Luther v. State, 20: 1146, 120 N. W. 125, — Neb. — (Annotated)

5. The distribution of intoxicating liquors in less quantities than 5 gallons by a bona fide incorporated social club to its members for a consideration, though without profit, constitutes a "sale" within the meaning of Minn. Rev. Laws 1905, § 1519, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to be drunk upon the premises, and is prohibited unless protected by license, as provided by law. State ex rel. Young v. Minnesota Club, 20: 1101, 119 N. W. 494, 106 Minn. 515.

6. An ordinance merely imposing a license tax upon the business of selling intoxicating liquors does not include a bona fide social club which merely distributes such liquor to its members at a slight advance over the cost, the profit being devoted to the expenses of the institution. Cuzner v. California Club, 20: 1095, 100 Pac. 868, — Cal. — (Annotated)

7. An incorporated social club is a "person" within the meaning of Minn. Rev. Laws 1905, § 1519, prohibiting "any person" from retailing intoxicating liquors without a license. State ex rel. Young v. Minnesota Club, 20: 1107, 119 N. W. 494, 106 Minn. 515.

8. A clause in an ordinance providing for a license tax upon those conducting, managing, or carrying on the business of retail liquor dealers, which defines a "retail liquor establishment" to be any place where intoxicating liquors are sold, served, or given away in quantities less than 5 gallons, does not include a social club which serves liquors to its members at a slight advance on the cost, the profit being devoted to the maintenance of the club, where the purpose of the definition is to distinguish between retail and wholesale business and restaurants. Cuzner v. California Club, 20: 1095, 100 Pac. 868, — Cal. —.

9. The proprietor of a stand where soft drinks are sold is not guilty of selling or being interested in the sale of intoxicating liquors without a license, contrary to the provisions of the statute, because an adult employee, in his absence, sells a bottle of beer which he had provided for his own use and which he gave no authority to anyone to sell. Partridge v. State, 20: 321, 114 S. W. 215, — Ark. —.

10. Upon the filling of an order for liquor sent from a prohibition county to one where the sale is lawful, by delivering it to a carrier to be transported C. O. D., the sale is complete at the place where the order is filled, and lawful. State v. Rosenberger, 20: 284, 111 S. W. 509, 212 Mo. 648.

JUDGMENT.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 28.
Personal judgment against nonresident constructively served, see Writ and Process.

Effect of judgment of foreclosure on junior mortgagee not made party, see Mortgage, 1.

Collateral attack on order changing boundaries of school district, see Schools, 2.

By default.

Right to jury to assess damages on default judgment, see Jury, 1.

1. Failure to call out defendant prior to the entry of a default judgment will not render the judgment void. State ex rel. Spratlin v. Thompson, 20: 1, 102 S. W. 349, 118 Tenn. 571.

Form; substance.

2. A judgment enforcing specific performance of a contract to devise all one's property to a particular person, so far as it relates to money or other property owned and left by the promisor at the time of his death, does not include the proceeds of a policy of insurance on his life, which he had given away in his lifetime. Dickinson v. Seaman, 20: 1154, 85 N. E. 818, 193 N. Y. 18.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Relief against.

Issuing execution on judgment set aside by court, see Execution.

Laches in applying for setting aside of, see Limitation of Actions, 2.

Mandamus to compel issuance of execution where not proper remedy for questioning propriety of setting aside judgment, see Mandamus, 1.

3. A decree fixing the amount of indebtedness of a loan association in the hands of a receiver to a claimant is merely interlocutory, and, upon good cause shown, may be set aside at any time before the close of the trial at which the final decree in the cause is enrolled, although it is subsequent to the term at which the interlocutory decree is passed. Standard Sav. & L. Assn. v. Aldrich, 20: 393, 163 Fed. 216, 89 C. C. A. 646.

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

That January is in the winter season, see Pleading, 11.

JURY.

Motion to withdraw criminal case from consideration of, and discharge jury, see Criminal Law, 3.

As to grand jury, see Grand Jury.

Right to trial by.

1. Failure to file in court the insurance policy on which suit is brought will preclude the entry of a substantial judgment by the court on default without the intervention of a jury. State ex rel. Spratlin v. Thompson, 20: 1, 102 S. W. 349, 118 Tenn. 571.

(Annotated)

2. The right of trial by jury is not infringed by entertaining a bill in equity in favor of one sued by numerous persons against whose actions he has a common defense, to enjoin prosecution of the actions to enable him to establish his defense so as to avoid a multiplicity of suits. Southern Steel Co. v. Hopkins, 20: 848, 47 So. 274, — Ala. —.

Impanelling; selection; competency.

Improper conduct of officer in selecting, see Appeal and Error, 25; Contempt.

As to competency of grand juror, see Grand Jury.

3. In a criminal prosecution it is the duty of an officer who summons jurors, or who selects and summons talesmen, to use his best efforts to secure men of intelligence, courage, and good moral character; but, in so doing, he should act with entire impartiality between the prosecution and the defendant. United States v. Hargo, 20: 1013, 98 Pac. 1021, — Okla. —.

4. A challenge to the array or panel in a criminal prosecution will lie for bias, partiality, or irregular action of the summoning officer. United States v. Hargo, 20: 1013, 98 Pac. 1021, — Okla. —.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

The employment of assault and duress by members of labor unions in furthering a strike undertaken against the representatives of a certain line of business in a certain city to enforce demands with respect to wages, time, work, apprentices, etc., will not be regarded as within the terms of a statute making it illegal to combine for the purpose of "doing harm maliciously for the sake of the harm as an end in itself," so as to make illegal the whole strike. Iron Molders' Union No. 125 v. Allis-Chalmers Co. 20: 315, 166 Fed. 45, — C. C. A. —.

LACHES.

See Limitation of Actions, 2.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Termination of lease by destruction of building, see Contracts, 11.

Damages for breach of contract to lease lands and tenements, see Damages, 1.

Attempt to enforce lien under lease giving landlord lien on crops and chattels as election preventing its enforcement as a chattel mortgage, see Election of Remedies, 1.

Taxation of oil lease, see Taxes, 1.

Sufficiency of draft as tender for rent, see Tender.

LARCENY.

1. If one takes from a card table, without consent of his opponent, money belonging to the latter, under the pretense that he has won it in the game, which was in fact fraudulently conducted by him, so that the owner of the money had no chance to win, and was the only one who risked anything, with intent to appropriate it to his own use, he is guilty of larceny. State v. Donaldson, 20: 1164, 99 Pac. 447, — Utah, —. (Annotated)

2. One who obtains from another a sum of money by a fraudulent use of cards is guilty of larceny of the whole amount, although he intends to divide it with others who are confederated with him in the transaction. State v. Donaldson, 20: 1164, 99 Pac. 447, — Utah, —.

LATERAL SUPPORT.

Injunction to restrain injury to lateral support of highway, see Injunction, 10.

The owner of land abutting on a highway is burdened with the duty of preserving lateral support to the highway as constructed and operated for public use. Haverstraw v. Eckerson, 20: 287, 84 N. E. 578, 192 N. Y. 54. (Annotated)

LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.

Injunction against, see Injunction, 8, 9.

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Obtaining judgment in execution to enforce lien as bar to maintenance of replevin suit, see Election of Remedies, 1.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Levy on intoxicating liquors, see Evidence, 16.

Intoxicating liquors are not subject to seizure upon execution, where a statute forbids its sale except by certain persons, for restricted purposes, and upon affidavit of the buyer, showing the occasion for the purchase. Hines v. Stahl, 20: 1118, 99 Pac. 273, — Kan. —. (Annotated)

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

Immaterial error in instructions on suit for, see Appeal and Error, 21.

Privileged communications.

1. A state newspaper published primarily for a state constituency is not deprived of its privilege in the discussion of subjects of state-wide concern by a small circulation elsewhere. Coleman v. MacLennan, 20: 361, 98 Pac. 281, — Kan. —.

2. A newspaper publication, to be privileged, should be no wider than the moral or social duty to publish; and, if it be designedly or unnecessarily or negligently excessive, the privilege is lost. Coleman v. MacLennan, 20: 361, 98 Pac. 281, — Kan. —. (Annotated)

3. A publication reciting facts and making comment relating to the official conduct and character of a state officer who is a candidate for re-election, made in good faith, and for the sole purpose of giving to the people what the publisher honestly believes to be true information, in order that the voters may be enabled to cast their ballots more intelligently, is privileged, although the matters contained in the article may be untrue in fact, and derogatory to the character of the candidate. Coleman v. MacLennan, 20: 361, 98 Pac. 281, — Kan. —.

LICENSE.

For sale of intoxicating liquor, see Intoxicating Liquors.

Forfeiture of an auctioneer's license cannot be imposed as a penalty in the civil suit of an adjoining merchant for unfair dealings in the conduct of his business, nor can the latter put the auctioneer out of business by signs or publications reflecting upon the character of his business. Gilly v. Hirsh, 20: 972, 48 So. 442, 122 La. 966.

LICENSEES.

Injury to, by electricity, see Electricity, 2.

LIENS.

Obtaining judgment in execution to enforce lien as bar to maintenance of replevin suit, see Election of Remedies, 1.

As to mechanics' liens, see Mechanics' Liens.

Of vendee for advance payment on rescission for fraud of executory contract for purchase of land, see Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

LIFE INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

LIGHT.

Compensation for interference with, see Eminent Domain, 1.

Duty of carrier to light stations and platforms, see Carriers, 17.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Conflict of laws as to, see Conflict of Laws.

Limitation of time for action on insurance policy, see Insurance, 24.

1. The statute of limitations does not mean that the debt has been paid, but is a personal privilege which the law gives to the debtor, whereby he may say that the debt is stale, and for that reason should not be enforced. Sterrett v. Sweeney, 20: 963, 98 Pac. 418, 15 Idaho, 416.

Laches.

2. Unexplained delay for five years to apply for the setting aside of a decree foreclosing a mortgage, void because rendered in vacation, during which time purchasers at the sale and their grantees had sold timber, changed fences, and in all respects used the property as their own, is such laches as will defeat relief. Jackson v. Beckettold Printing & B. Mfg. Co. 20: 454, 112 S. W. 161, 86 Ark. 591.

When statute runs.

3. The statute of limitations begins to run upon a right of action against a railroad company which, without authority, straightens the bed of a stream so as to accelerate the flow in such manner that its future injurious effect on the riparian land is certain from the time of the completion of the work, although the actual injury is done only by gradual erosion and the overflow of the property in times of freshet. Turner v. Overton, 20: 894, 111 S. W. 270, 86 Ark. 406. (Annotated)

4. The limitation period for injury to land on the opposite shore by deflection of the current of a river by the construction of a permanent dike to protect one shore begins to run from the completion of the structure, although the injury occurs by the washing away of the shore during periods of high water in successive years thereafter, a process as certain to continue as the annual rains and the flow of the water of a large river. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moseley, 20: 885, 161 Fed. 72, 88 C. C. A. 236. (Annotated)

When action is barred.

5. The statutory limitation of the time within which "an action for relief on the ground of fraud" must be commenced only applies when the party against whom the bar of the statute is interposed is required to allege fraud in pleading his cause of action, or to prove fraud to entitle him to relief. Logan v. Brown, 20: 298, 95 Pac. 441, — Okla. —.

Interruption of statute.

6. Under the statute of Washington, a 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

partial payment made upon a promissory note after maturity, and before the statute of limitations has run, is an acknowledgment that the debt is recognized as in existence, that the privilege to claim the maturity of the note as the date from which the statute begins to run is waived, and that the date of payment is fixed as a new date from which the statute begins to run. Sterrett v. Sweeney, 20: 963, 98 Pac. 418, 15 Idaho, 416.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

See Damages, 6.

LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

See Building and Loan Associations.

LOGGING RAILROAD.

Servants engaged in operating as fellow servants of other employees, see Master and Servant, 20.

Sufficiency of petition in action by servant for personal injuries, see Pleading, 12.

LOGS AND LOGGING.

Failure to record marks placed on logs, see Records and Recording Laws.

1. The rights of the riparian owner are not unlawfully interfered with by the reclamation, from the bed of the stream, of logs placed in it to be floated to market, which sink and become partly embedded in the soil, so long as there is no injury to the banks or unlawful trespass thereon. Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & O. Co. 20: 984, 116 N. W. 614, 152 Mich. 645.

2. The mere fact that the marks upon the logs placed in a river, to be floated to market, and which sink and become embedded in the soil, have become obliterated, does not destroy the title of their original owners or prevent an assignment of the property to a salvage company. Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & O. Co. 20: 984, 116 N. W. 614, 152 Mich. 645.

3. The title of logs taken from the bed of a stream is not changed by the unlawful trespass of the owner in piling them on the property of the riparian owner. Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & O. Co. 20: 984, 116 N. W. 614, 152 Mich. 645.

4. The mere fact that the logs placed in a river, to be floated to market, sink to the bottom and cease to float, is not sufficient to show abandonment of them. Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & O. Co. 20: 984, 116 N. W. 614, 152 Mich. 645.

LOOKOUT.

Duty of motorman on street car to keep, see Street Railways, 3.

MALPRACTICE.

See Physicians and Surgeons.

MALT LIQUOR.

Statute prohibiting sale of, see Intoxicating Liquors, 4.

MANDAMUS.

1. Mandamus to compel the issuance of an execution is not the proper remedy to question the propriety of the court's action in setting aside a judgment. State ex rel. Spratlin v. Thompson, 20: 1, 102 S. W. 349, 118 Tenn. 571.

To court or judge.

2. The issuance of a writ of mandamus to compel a court to proceed to hear a cause is not prevented by the fact that the effect of so doing will result in requiring the overruling of an order quashing an indictment for disqualification of a member of the grand jury. State ex rel. McGovern v. Williams, 20: 941, 116 N. W. 225, 136 Wis. 1.

To county, town, or municipal officers.

3. Mandamus will not lie to compel a city engineer to furnish monthly estimates of the completion of work under a public contract in accordance with a provision in that contract that they shall be furnished. State ex rel. Fire & R. P. C. Constr. Co. v. Icke, 20: 800, 118 N. W. 196, 136 Wis. 583. (Annotated)

4. Mandamus will not lie to compel performance of a duty under a statute giving public officers discretion to grant contractors for public work estimates of work completed from time to time, which shall entitle them to payment therefor. State ex rel. Fire & R. P. Constr. Co. v. Icke, 20: 800, 118 N. W. 196, 136 Wis. 583.

To corporations.

5. That a corporation, prior to a certain time, was paying dividends, and that it then ceased, and, three years afterwards, owed its directors large sums of money, and was otherwise in debt, are sufficient to entitle a stockholder to a writ of mandamus to compel the corporation to permit him to inspect its books and papers for the purpose of securing information upon which to base a proceeding against the directors for mismanagement. Kuhback v. Irving Cut Glass Co. 20: 185, 69 Atl. 981, 220 Pa. 427.

To school officers.

6. In the absence of direct pecuniary injury, the remedy of a parent whose child is wrongfully suspended from a school is mandamus to secure his restoration, and not an action for damages. Douglas v. Campbell, 20: 205, 116 S. W. 211, — Ark. —.

Procedure; parties.

7. Filing a return in pursuance of an agreement that papers served by the one making a return shall be regarded as an alternative writ of mandamus waives all irregularity in the proceedings prior thereto. Kuhback v. Irving Cut Glass Co. 20: 185, 69 Atl. 981, 220 Pa. 427.

8. That, in the absence of an agreement by a corporation that papers served in a mandamus proceeding shall be regarded as an alternative writ, its president would be subject to attachment, will not relieve it from the agreement. Kuhback v. Irving Cut Glass Co. 20: 185, 69 Atl. 981, 220 Pa. 427. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

9. The answer of the president of a corporation on behalf of himself and all other officers in a mandamus proceeding to compel the inspection of the corporate books subjects the other officers to the orders of the court, although they were not served with the papers in the proceeding. Kuhback v. Irving Cut Glass Co. 20: 185, 69 Atl. 981, 220 Pa. 427.

10. An insurance company against which a judgment has been rendered by default is a necessary party to a mandamus proceeding to compel the issuance of a fieri facias thereon. State ex rel. Spratlin v. Thompson, 20: 1, 102 S. W. 349, 118 Tenn. 571.

MARKS.

On logs, see Logs and Logging, 2.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Error in instruction in action against master for injuries to minor servant, see Appeal and Error, 22.

Error in admitting expert testimony as to dangerous character of machine at which minor is set to work, see Appeal and Error, 15,

Mutuality of contract for employment, see Contracts, 3.

Variance in action for death of employee, see Evidence, 43.

Presumption of negligence from injury to servant, see Evidence, 11-14.

Presumption of negligence from breaking of appliance, see Evidence, 14.

Presumption as to time of break in defective apparatus, see Evidence, 10.

Sufficiency of pleadings to justify admission of evidence in action for injury to servant, see Evidence, 42.

Sufficiency of evidence to rebut presumption of negligence in case of injury to servant, see Evidence, 38.

Sufficiency of evidence to show cause of injury to servant, see Evidence, 36.

Picketing by employees, see Injunction, 4.

Injunction against prosecution at law of actions by servants, see Injunction, 8.

Validity of strike of employees, see Labor Organizations.

Sufficiency of petition in action by servant for personal injuries, see Pleading, 12.

Question for jury as to negligence of master, see Trial, 7.

When relation exists.

1. An independent contract for the erection of a building, so as to relieve the owner from liability for negligent injuries to workmen, is not shown by the employment of one at a certain salary to attend to its construction and hire the men, where the owner pays them and furnishes the materials, directing the progress, course of procedure, and general management of the work. Rankel v. Buckstaff-Edwards Co. 20: 1180, 120 N. W. 209, 200 Wis. —.

Unlawful employment of children.

2. A minor whose age is falsely represented with his knowledge and acquiescence, for the purpose of securing employment for him, is not estopped, in an action against his employer to recover damages for personal injuries, from showing that he was under the age at which the statute permitted him to be employed. Braasch v. Michigan Stove Co. 20: 500, 118 N. W. 366, 153 Mich. 652. (Annotated)

3. A master is not relieved from liability for injury to a child employed in violation of the terms of a statute because the statute does not in express terms provide for such liability. Strafford v. Republic Iron & S. Co. 20: 876, 87 N. E. 358, 238 Ill. 371.

4. A freight elevator which passes floors is a dangerous machine, within the meaning of a statute forbidding employment of children under sixteen years of age upon such machines. Braasch v. Michigan Stove Co. 20: 500, 118 N. W. 366, 153 Mich. 652.

Duty as to place and appliances.

5. In the absence of any rule or custom for independent inspection by the owner of a building of the windows in it, he is not liable for injury to an employee whose duty is to open and close the windows, by the breaking of a glass caused by some defect in the setting, which arose after the original construction of the building. Stewart & Co. v. Harman. 20: 228, 70 Atl. 333, 103 Md. 446.

6. The switching from an exchange track, where it had been left by another carrier, of a loaded car from another state to its destination a few blocks away within the city, which is so defective as not to comply with the requirements of the safety-appliance act of Congress, is a violation of the provisions of that act. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. United States. 20: 473, 165 Fed. 423. — C. C. A. —

7. Hauling to the repair shops in another state, as part of a regular train engaged in interstate commerce, a foreign empty car which has been damaged in a wreck so as to be defective under the safety-appliance act of Congress, is a violation of the provisions of that act, although the damaged end of the car is chained to another car, from which it is not intended to be separated until it reaches its destination. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. United States. 20: 473, 165 Fed. 423. — C. C. A. —

(Annotated)

Inspection.

8. An electric passenger carrier fulfils its duty to its servants, so far as the controller of an electric car is concerned, if the controller is shown to have been of standard type, made by a reputable manufacturer, in good condition, and to have been subjected to such inspection as is reasonable, practicable, and usual; and in such case the carrier's duty does not require him to dismantle the controller in order visually to examine the grounding wire. Jenkins 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. St. Paul City R. Co. 20: 401, 117 N. W. 928, 105 Minn. 504.

Selection and retention of employees.

Presumption of incompetence because of minority of servant, see Evidence, 4.

Sufficiency of evidence to show incompetency of servant, see Evidence, 39-41.

Question for jury as to negligence of master in employing servants, see Trial, 8.

9. The fact that other servants are competent will not excuse a master in employing an incompetent person to perform a particular service, although in conjunction with such competent fellow servants. Wilkinson v. Kanawha & H. Coal & C. Co. 20: 331, 61 S. E. 875. — W. Va. —

10. A railroad company which, without proper investigation as to his qualification, places in charge of a scheduled train a conductor who has not the requisite knowledge of the meaning of orders for meeting and passing trains, is liable for the death of a fireman on another train with which the train in charge of such conductor collides because of his failure to obey, through ignorance of its meaning, an order requiring him to pass the other train at a certain point. Still v. San Francisco & N. W. R. Co. 20: 322, 98 Pac. 672. — Cal. —

11. A master is not negligent towards his servants in employing one to do blasting, if he secured him upon recommendation as to his competence of the owner of a quarry where he had been employed in such duties. Rankel v. Buckstaff-Edwards Co. 20: 1180, 120 N. W. 269. — Wis. —

Assumption of risk.

12. A servant engaged in removing earth for the foundation of a building does not assume the risk of injury from unexploded dynamite used in breaking up a frozen crust, where he had no reason to apprehend that explosives would be left in the earth which he was required to remove, and which he had been led to believe was safe. Rankel v. Buckstaff-Edwards Co. 20: 1180, 120 N. W. 269. — Wis. —

Contributory negligence of servant.

13. The provisions of a statute regulating the employment of servants are not to be so construed as to abrogate the ordinary rules relating to contributory negligence, which is available as a defense, notwithstanding the statute, unless such defense is expressly excluded thereby, although a violation of the statute by a master is negligence per se, and actionable, if injuries are sustained by a servant in consequence thereof. Darsam v. Kohlmann. 20: 881, 48 So. 781. — La. —

14. The owner of a factory is not liable in damages to a boy twelve years of age, who was employed by the factory foreman in the belief, superinduced by the boy's representations and his appearance, and by the acquiescence of his family, that he was over the age prescribed by a statute regulating the employment of minors, and assigned to a safe place to work, with instructions to stay there, and not go near or meddle with any of the machinery, notwithstanding that the employment of boys of that age in a factory is a penal offense, for injuries received by the boy whilst unnecessarily, and in violation of his instructions, subjecting himself to an obvious risk, the danger of which he was capable of understanding. Darsam v. Kohlmann, 20: 881, 48 So. 781, — La. —.

15. The contributory negligence of a child employed in violation of the terms of a statute is no defense to an action against the master for personal injuries received by him in consequence of such employment, although he had temporarily abandoned the work he was employed to do and was attempting to perform work which he had been forbidden to do. Strafford v. Republic Iron & S. Co. 20: 876, 87 N. E. 358, 238 Ill. 371. (Annotated)

Fellow servants.

16. A railroad company is not relieved from liability for injuries resulting to a servant by reason of the negligent performance, by an independent contractor, of the nondelegable duty of the master to furnish and maintain a reasonably safe place for its servants to work, by lack of actual notice of such negligence in time to have avoided the resulting injury to the servant, since, in such case, the law imposes the duty upon the master of inspections and tests adequate to avoid the dangers. Vickers v. Kanawha & W. V. R. Co. 20: 793, 63 S. E. 367, — W. Va. —.

17. The nonassignable duty of a railroad company to provide its servants a reasonably safe place to work extends to the entire track over which the servants are required to pass in the discharge of their duties, and the master will not be absolved from liability for the nonperformance thereof by intrusting such positive duty to an independent contractor. Vickers v. Kanawha & W. V. R. Co. 20: 793, 63 S. E. 367, — W. Va. —. (Annotated)

18. A person employed by a railroad company as an independent contractor to build certain abutments, with permission to construct guy ropes across the track, does not stand in the relation of an independent contractor with respect to the operation of the railroad and the furnishing of the company's employees with a safe place to work, since the effect of such contract with respect to such ropes is simply to delegate to such independent contractor performance of the nonassignable duty of the company to maintain a reasonably safe place for its servants to work, rendering it liable for his negligent performance thereof. Vickers v. Kanawha & W. V. R. Co. 20: 793, 63 S. E. 367, — W. Va. —.

Who are fellow servants.

19. An employee engaged in removing earth for the foundation of a building is not a fellow servant of an expert employed for 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a short time to break up frozen ground by blasting, where the former has nothing to do with the placing, packing, or discharging of the explosives, although he drills the holes to contain them. Rinkel v. Buckstaff-Edwards Co. 20: 1180, 120 N. W. 269. — Wis. —. (Annotated)

20. Servants engaged in operating a private railroad used for hauling logs to a sawmill and for transporting other employees to their work in the woods are fellow servants with such other employees, and the owner of the mill is not liable to one of the servants, injured in the operation of the train by the negligence of his co servants. Roland v. Tift, 20: 354, 63 S. E. 133, — Ga. —. (Annotated)

Vice principal.

21. An independent contractor to whom a railroad company intrusts the performance of its positive duty to provide its servants a reasonably safe place to work thereby becomes a vice principal, and his negligent performance of those duties becomes notice to the company, rendering it liable for injuries to its servants resulting therefrom. Vickers v. Kanawha & W. V. R. Co. 20: 793, 63 S. E. 367, — W. Va. —.

22. A section foreman on a railroad, having direction of the movement of a hand car used by the men, is a vice principal in having the car propelled at a reckless speed on down grade in the face of an approaching train of which he has knowledge, and suddenly applying the brake without warning when the train comes into view, so as to throw a section man from the car to his injury. Tillis v. Great Northern R. Co. 20: 434, 97 Pac. 737, 50 Wash. 536. (Annotated)

Liability to third person.

Liability of superintendent of state lunatic asylum for acts of employees, see Charities, 1.

Liability of owner of horse left by servant unhitched in street for injury done by, see Negligence, 10.

Liability of master for wrongful sale of liquor by servant, see Intoxicating Liquors, 9.

Sufficiency of allegation as to authority of servant in suit against master for damages, see Pleading, 14.

23. A coal dealer whose team is under the control of his servant all the time, whether he is hauling coal or not, to feed and care for, cannot escape liability for injury caused by its running away when left unattended by the servant, because, at the time, he has gone to move a trunk which was not within the scope of his duty to do, since it was his duty to see that the team was not left unattended in the street. Corona Coal & I. Co. v. White, 20: 958, 48 So. 362, — Ala. —.

MAXIMS.

1. Equity regards that done which ought to be done. Beaver v. Ross, 20: 65, 118 N. W. 287. — Iowa, —.

2. Res ipsa loquitur. Stewart & Co. v. Harman, 20: 228, 70 Atl. 333, 108 Md. 446; Christensen v. Oregon Short Line, 20: 255, 99 Pac. 676, — Utah, —; Jenkins v. St. Paul City R. Co. 20: 401, 117 N. W. 928, 105 Minn. 504; La Bee v. Sultan Logging Co. 20: 405, 91 Pac. 560, 47 Wash. 57; Minnesota General Elec. Co. v. Cronon, 20: 816, 166 Fed. 651, — C. C. A. —.

3. Respondeat superior. Ketterer v. Kentucky State Bd. of Control, 20: 274, 115 S. W. 200, — Ky. —.

4. Volenti non fit injuria. Minnesota General Elec. Co. v. Cronon, 20: 816, 166 Fed. 651, — C. C. A. —.

5. What ought to be done will be considered or treated as already done. Painter v. Painter, 20: 120, 69 Atl. 323, 220 Pa. 82.

6. Where two rights meet in the same person, they are to be viewed as if they existed in different persons. Beaver v. Ross, 20: 65, 118 N. W. 287, — Iowa, —.

MECHANIC'S LIENS.

Necessity of affirmatively pleading set-off, see Pleading, 16.

For what work or materials.

1. Every person performing labor or furnishing material for a building, who files notice as required by Idaho Lien Laws, § 6, is entitled to a lien therefore under § 1 of such laws, and the amount to be recovered under such lien is the amount due under his contract. Steltz v. Armory Co. 20: 872, 99 Pac. 98, 15 Idaho, 551.

To what property attaches.

2. A statute providing for a mechanics' lien, or any building does not include a building belonging to the public, such as a school-house. National Fire Proofing Co. v. Huntington, 20: 261, 71 Atl. 911, 81 Conn. 632. (Annotated)

Of subcontractors and materialmen.

3. The death of the principal contractor during the completion of a contract for the improvement of a village street, which contract was thereafter completed by the administrator, does not deprive a subcontractor, who has furnished material which has gone into the work, of his statutory right to a lien upon the fund arising from the contract. Vernon v. Harper, 20: 44, 86 N. E. 882, 79 Ohio, 181. (Annotated)

4. Where the owner of a building, after the contractor's abandonment of the contract for its construction, completes it at a cost in excess of the original contract price, and pays the amount due under the contract to some materialmen to the exclusion of others, he may be compelled to pay the latter their pro rata share of the original contract price, less the extra cost of completing the building. Sternberg v. Fort Smith Refrigerator Works, 20: 89, 112 S. W. 174, 87 Ark. 56.

5. A provision in a building contract that, upon neglect of the contractor, the architect will have power to provide materials, the expense of which shall be deducted from 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the contract price, does not make the architect the agent of the owner, so that his act in procuring materials will create a lien on the property in excess of the original contract price, to which extent a lien is allowed by statute. Sternberg v. Fort Smith Refrigerator Works, 20: 89, 112 S. W. 174, 87 Ark. 56. (Annotated)

Enforcement; set-off.

6. The owner of a building, who has entered into possession thereof on the theory that it is a completed structure, may recover damages caused by the front falling out, by reason of the building being latently defective, in that it was not properly tied to the adjoining wall, as an offset against the contractor, who is seeking to foreclose his mechanics' lien for the construction of the building. Steltz v. Armory Co. 20: 872, 99 Pac. 98, 15 Idaho, 551.

7. The fact that the owner of a building went into possession thereof with knowledge that the building contained latent defects in its construction and inferior material will not prevent his claiming damages for such defects as an offset against the contractor's action to recover the contract price therefor, unless an express waiver is shown, or such other facts and circumstances as would amount to a waiver of damages. Steltz v. Armory Co. 20: 872, 99 Pac. 98, 15 Idaho, 551. (Annotated)

MENTAL ANGUISH.

Damages for, see Damages, 13.

MINES.

Taxation of oil lease, see Taxes, 1.

MINORS.

See Infants.

MISCARRIAGE.

Damages for negligence causing, see Damages, 10.

MOB.

Liability of insurer for destruction of property by, see Insurance, 20.

MONEY.

Trover to recover, see Trover, 2.

MORTGAGE.

Obtained by duress, see Duress.

Laches in application to set aside decree of foreclosure, see Limitation of Actions, 2.

Instruction in action on mortgage given to prevent prosecution for crime, see Trial, 11.

See also Chattel Mortgage.

Parties.

1. A junior mortgage is not affected by a judgment and decree foreclosing a first mortgage, where he is not made a party to the suit, but the foreclosure is effectual against those persons who were made parties, and a sale vests the estate in the purchaser subject to the rights therein of the junior mortgagee. Horr v. Herrington, 20: 47, 98 Pac. 443, — Okla. —.

Relief; decree.

2. A decree of foreclosure of mortgaged premises merges the interests of the parties to the suit in the decree, and transfers and vests such interests in the purchaser at the sale. Horr v. Herrington, 20: 47, 98 Pac. 443, — Okla. —.

Sale; purchaser's rights.

3. A purchaser of mortgaged premises on a foreclosure rendered on a senior mortgage will be presumed to have bid and purchased with reference to the junior mortgage, which had been duly recorded, and with knowledge of the rights of the holder of that mortgage to redeem. Horr v. Herrington, 20: 47, 98 Pac. 443, — Okla. —.

Surplus.

4. A junior mortgagee has no claim, by virtue of his mortgage, upon the surplus money arising from a sale under a suit to foreclose a senior mortgage, to which he was not made a party. Horr v. Herrington, 20: 47, 98 Pac. 443, — Okla. —.

(Annotated)

Redemption.

Curtsey in equity of redemption of wife's lands, see Curtsey, 5.

5. The holder of a junior encumbrance waives his right to redeem by purchasing the lands upon the foreclosure of the senior mortgage, he not having been made a party to the foreclosure suit. Horr v. Herrington, 20: 47, 98 Pac. 443, — Okla. —.

6. An inferior lienholder has a right to redeem the property in the same manner as its owner might, from the superior lien, and the right to be subrogated to all the benefits of the superior lien when necessary for the protection of his interests, upon satisfying the claim secured thereby. Horr v. Herrington, 20: 47, 98 Pac. 443, — Okla. —.

MOTIONS AND ORDERS.

Motion to withdraw criminal case from jury, see Criminal Law, 3.

1. A court which has entered an ex parte order in a supplementary proceeding to enforce a judgment against an insolvent employer in favor of an injured employee, empowering the receiver appointed in such proceeding to execute his note in satisfaction of the judgment, and bring an action for reimbursement upon a policy of indemnity insurance held by the employer, which is indefensible in character, may set the order aside as soon as its attention is called thereto, although the motion is made by the judgment debtor, who had no right to complain thereof. Stenbom v. Brown-Corliss Engine Co. 20: 956, 119 N. W. 308, — Wis. —.

2. Memoranda of the trial judge showing that appellant was given ninety days for bill of exceptions, made at the time of overruling a motion for new trial, are sufficient upon which to amend nunc pro tunc an order overruling the motion, so as to show the allowance of ninety days in which to present a general bill of exceptions. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Strange, 20: 1041, 84 N. E. 819, — Ind. —.

MOTIVE.

Evidence to show, see Evidence, 26.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Delegation of legislative power to, see Constitutional Law, 1.

Mandamus to compel city engineer to furnish monthly estimates of completion of work under public contract, see Mandamus, 3, 4.

Power of attorney general to remove municipal officers, see Officers, 1, 2.

Exemption from taxation of money and interest bearing securities in sinking fund accumulated by municipality to retire bonds, see Taxes, 2.

Ordinances.

Right of courts to review ordinance, see Courts, 1.

Violation of statute forbidding obstructing of street crossings as negligence, see Fires, 1.

Reasonableness of ordinance as question for jury, see Trial, 2.

Requiring interstate railroad to light crossings in city, see Commerce, 2.

Right of railroad company to hearing on question of ordinance as to lighting of street crossing, see Constitutional Law, 8.

1. A municipal ordinance requiring the removal of stationary awnings from over its sidewalks is reasonable. Small v. Edenton, 20: 145, 60 S. E. 413, 146 N. C. 527.

2. The power of a municipal corporation to remove stationary awnings from over its sidewalks is not dependent upon their being found to be nuisances, but upon the power of the municipality to make such a requirement under its authority over its streets, and upon the reasonableness of the requirement. Small v. Edenton, 20: 145, 60 S. E. 413, 146 N. C. 527. (Annotated)

3. An ordinance requiring railroad companies to light street crossings is so far a reasonable exercise of the police power that the court will not declare it an unconstitutional interference with property rights of the railroad company. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hartford City, 20: 461, 82 N. E. 787, 170 Ind. 674.

4. An ordinance requiring railroad companies to light street crossings with lights of sufficient power to light the entire crossing is not invalid because of a provision that the power shall not exceed that of the lights used by the city, on the ground that the requirement is indefinite. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hartford City, 20: 461, 82 N. E. 787, 170 Ind. 674.

5. An ordinance requiring a railroad company to maintain at street crossings lights of sufficient power to light the entire crossing, not exceeding in power the light used by the city, requires a light sufficient to enable a traveler with good sight in the nighttime to perceive, before getting into the crossing, the tracks at the point of intersection and the character of the way across the same. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hartford City, 20: 461, 82 N. E. 787, 170 Ind. 674.

6. Statutory authority to a municipality to prescribe the kind of lights a railroad company shall maintain at street crossings empowers it to direct a light to be located there. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hartford City, 20: 461, 82 N. E. 787, 170 Ind. 674.

7. A municipal corporation may require a light maintained by a railroad company at a street crossing to be burning for five minutes before the passage of a train. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hartford City, 20: 461, 82 N. E. 787, 170 Ind. 674.

Indebtedness: Limitation of amount.

8. One selling machinery to a municipal corporation for use in its public affairs at a time when the contract for purchase is unenforceable because exceeding the constitutional debt limit, but who retains a lien on the machinery for the purchase price, may enforce his lien by sale of the machinery for satisfaction of the purchase money debt. Bardwell v. Southern Engine & B. Works, 20: 110, 113 S. W. 97, — Ky. — (Annotated)

Liability for damages.

Liability for injuries on highways, see Highways, 3-5.

Notice of claim for injury from defective sidewalk, see Highways, 8.

Right to remove trees in highway, see Highways, 2.

9. A notice to a municipal corporation of an injury through its alleged negligence, stating that the injured person sustained an injury to his person, badly bruising himself, and sustaining other bodily injury of a serious nature, does not comply with a statute requiring the notice to specify the nature of the injuries. Spear v. Westbrook, 20: 804, 72 Atl. 311, — Me. — (Annotated)

9a. A provision in a municipal ordinance making notice a prerequisite to suit against the municipality for damages caused by its negligence, that the notice must state the injured person's place of residence for a year past, is unreasonable, and omission of such statement from the notice will not defeat an action. Hase v. Seattle, 20: 938, 98 Pac. 370, — Wash. — (Annotated)

10. Municipalities, in planning and maintaining systems of sewerage, must make provision against public nuisances resulting from occurrences naturally and reasonably to be anticipated. State v. Concordia, 20: 1050, 96 Pac. 487, — Kan. —

11. A statute authorizing municipalities to exercise the right of eminent domain in order to connect sewers with creeks, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

rivers, and ravines does not warrant the commission of a public nuisance as a result of such connection. State v. Concordia, 20: 1050, 96 Pac. 487, — Kan. —

12. Legislative power vested in municipalities to build and maintain sewers does not warrant the commission by such cities of a public nuisance. State v. Concordia, 20: 1050, 96 Pac. 487, — Kan. — (Annotated)

MUTUALITY.

Of contract, see Contracts, 2, 3.

NE EXEAT.

1. A bankrupt court may relieve a surety from liability on a bond executed to secure the release of a bankrupt who has been arrested under a writ of ne exeat after it has been broken by the departure of the bankrupt from the jurisdiction, if he has returned and is ready to abide the decrees of the court so that the result sought by the obligation has not failed. Re Appel, 20: 76, 163 Fed. 1002, — C. C. A. —

2. A bond filed by a bankrupt to secure his release from arrest under a writ of ne exeat, and conditioned to be void if he will not go or attempt to go into parts beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and not depart from the district without leave, is not a mere bail bond, but is broken by an attempt to go beyond the jurisdiction without leave. Re Appel, 20: 76, 163 Fed. 1002, — C. C. A. — (Annotated)

NEGLIGENCE.

As to act of God, see Act of God.

As to damages for negligent injury, see Damages.

Sufficiency of pleading in action for negligent injuries, see Pleading.

Sufficiency of allegation in action for negligent injuries to property, see Pleading, 5.

As to proximate cause, see Proximate Cause.

Instruction as to, see Trial.

As question for jury, see Trial.

See also Automobiles; Carriers; Electricity; Fires; Physicians and Surgeons; Railroads; Street Railways.

1. An injury that, under the circumstances, is the natural, probable, and ordinary result of a negligent act of omission, is in law held to have been contemplated by the negligent party as a probable and proximate result of the negligence when he is informed, or, by ordinary observation, would have been informed, of the facts and circumstances attending the negligence. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co., 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

2. Where one has provided a cover to protect his property from injury that will probably occur, and such cover is, without the fault of the owner, injured or destroyed by the negligence of another who knew, or should have known, of the use to which the cover was applied, and of the injury that would probably result from its destruction, and the destruction of the cover defeats the sole purpose for which it was used, damages may be recovered for injuries to the property that was so protected, which proximately follow or result from the destruction of the cover provided for the protection of the property injured. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

3. The negligent act or omission for which a party is liable in damages is one that, in ordinary, natural sequence, causes, or contributes to causing, an injury to another when no independent, efficient cause intervenes, and the injured party is not at fault. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

4. Those who are negligent are held in law to know the usual effect of ordinary, natural conditions and forces upon a negligent act of omission, and to have contemplated the probable effect of such conditions and forces upon their negligence or upon its proximate results, and to be liable in damages for the natural and probable proximate results of the negligence. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

Dangerous agencies.

5. To entitle a purchaser of stove polish to hold the seller liable for its explosion because of his negligently selling it as safe for use, the purchaser must show that the seller's negligence was the sole cause of the injury. Cunningham v. C. R. Pease House Furnishing Co. 20: 236, 69 Atl. 120, 74 N. H. 435.

6. One selling stove polish which explodes to the injury of the purchaser, when the latter attempts to use it, is liable for such injury if he knew that his statement, made to induce its purchase, that it was safe for the intended use, was false, or if he negligently made the statement believing it to be true, when the ordinary man having no more knowledge of the danger than he had would not have done so. Cunningham v. C. R. Pease House Furnishing Co. 20: 236, 69 Atl. 120, 74 N. H. 435.

7. A merchant selling stove blacking which explodes in use under such circumstances as to render him liable to the purchaser for injuries thereby caused is liable also to a member of the purchaser's family so injured, although he did not have him in mind when the blacking was sold, if he knew that the blacking was to be used on a stove, and that other members of the family were likely to use it. Cunningham v. C. R. Pease House Furnishing Co. 20: 236, 69 Atl. 120, 74 N. H. 435.

Children; dangerous attractions.

8. No invitation to children to play in one's lumber yard can be implied from the fact that he does not always drive them away when they enter it. Kelly v. Benas. 20: 903, 116 S. W. 557, — Mo. —. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

9. A landowner is not liable for injury to a trespassing child by the fall of a pile of lumber on which he was playing, on the theory that it was an attractive nuisance. Kelly v. Benas. 20: 903, 116 S. W. 557, — Mo. —.

On highway.

10. The owner of a horse left by his servant unhitched and unattended in a public street is liable for injury done to others by its running away. Corona Coal & I. Co. v. White. 20: 958, 48 So. 362, — Ala. —.

(Annotated)

Contributory.

Duty of pedestrian to look out for automobiles. see Automobiles.

Contributory negligence of person injured on railroad track, see Railroads, 7-9.

Contributory negligence of passenger, see Carriers, 9-12.

Contributory negligence of pedestrian on sidewalk, see Highways, 6, 7.

Contributory negligence of servant, see Master and Servant, 13-15.

As question for jury, see Trial, 4, 5.

11. One walking on the sidewalks or cross walks of a municipality is not negligent in failing to look to see whether or not a team which he hears approaching is running away, so as to preclude his holding the owner of the team liable for injuries caused by being struck by it, since he has a right to assume that the team is under control, and will not be driven over him. Corona Coal & I. Co. v. White. 20: 958, 48 So. 362, — Ala. —.

NEWSPAPER.

Power of state to forbid publication of advertisements of liquors kept for sale in other states, see Commerce, 1; Statutes, 3.

Effect of extent of publication on privilege, see Libel and Slander.

NEW TRIAL.

Effect of granting new trial after conviction to extend liability on accused's bond, see Bail and Recognizance.

Amendment of order overruling motion for, see Motions and Orders, 2.

A new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence in a criminal case, the only effect of which is to impeach the credibility of a witness for the state. Bailey v. State. 20: 409, 48 So. 227, — Miss. —.

NOISE.

As nuisance, see Nuisances, 1, 2.

NONINTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Statute prohibiting sale of, see Intoxicating Liquors, 4.

NOTICE.

Requiring notice of intention to sell stock of goods in bulk, see Constitutional Law, 6, 10; Conveyances, 2.

Of claim for injury from defective highway, see Highways, 8.

Of injury as condition of recovery for, against municipality, see Municipal Corporations, 9, 9a.

A corporation which places one of its directors upon the board of directors of another corporation for the purpose of ascertaining its financial condition is chargeable with knowledge which he could not escape without wilfully shutting his eyes. Standard Sav. & L. Asso. v. Aldrich, 20: 393, 163 Fed. 216, 89 C. C. A. 646.

NOVATION.

A settlement between the parties to a contract of conditional sale in accordance with its terms, and the taking of notes from the vendee to cover such portions of the property as remained in his possession, or as he had sold and had not been paid for, is not a novation which will destroy the conditional sale features of the original contract; and it is immaterial that the settlement was not on the exact date provided for by the contract, and that a conditional sale agreement covering unsold articles was not given, if the original contract clearly reserved title in the vendor. Monitor Drill Co. v. Mercer, 20: 1065, 163 Fed. 943, — C. C. A. —.

NUISANCES.

Liability of municipality for maintaining, see Municipal Corporations, 10-12.

Legislative authority for maintenance of nuisance by municipality, see Municipal Corporations, 11, 12.

To health or comfort.

Diminution in rental value as measure of damages for, see Damages, 12.

1. To render noise a nuisance, it must be of such a character as to be of actual physical discomfort to persons of ordinary sensibilities. McGill v. Pintsch Compressing Co. 20: 466, 118 N. W. 786, — Iowa, —.

2. The operation of a gas manufacturing plant in such a manner that the noise from the engine exhaust shakes neighboring houses and the smoke from the chimneys requires the keeping of windows and doors closed in warm weather and blackens everything exposed constitutes a nuisance. McGill v. Pintsch Compressing Co. 20: 466, 118 N. W. 786, — Iowa, —. (Annotated)

3. The owner of property cannot recover damages because of a diminution of its rental value because of the erection of a manufacturing plant near it. McGill v. Pintsch Compressing Co. 20: 466, 118 N. W. 786, — Iowa, —.

4. To constitute the imparting of smoke to the atmosphere a nuisance to neighboring property, it must have been emitted in unreasonable amounts or in an unreasonable manner in view of the locality and surroundings, and must be such as to render the occupancy of such property physically uncomfortable to a person of ordinary sensibilities for the purpose to which it is devoted. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

voted. McGill v. Pintsch Compressing Co. 20: 466, 118 N. W. 786, — Iowa, —.

Abatement.

5. The auction business is not a nuisance per se, but may be so conducted as to become one, and an auctioneer engaged in selling goods similar to those dealt in by a merchant next door, who keeps a number of employees standing about to molest and interfere with actual and prospective customers who are looking in the neighbor's show window, and who represent that the two places conduct one and the same business, may be restrained at the suit of such adjoining owner from so doing, but he cannot complain because the auctioneer undersells or oversells him, or sells inferior goods unfairly to his customers. Gilly v. Hirsh, 20: 972, 48 So. 442, 122 La. 966. (Annotated)

OATH.

Presumption that referee took oath required by law, see Appeal and Error, 5.

OBSTRUCTION.

Of surface water, see Waters.

OFFICERS.

Presumption that officer levying on liquors acted according to law, see Evidence, 16.

Libel by criticism of candidate for election, see Libel and Slander, 1, 3.

Mandamus to compel city engineer to furnish monthly estimates of completion of work under public contract, see Mandamus, 3, 4.

Injunction as remedy for illegal holding of office, see Injunction, 7.

Effect of detachment of political division of territory in which an officer resides upon his tenure of office, see Schools, 3.

Removal.

1. The power to remove municipal officers for misconduct in office, conferred by a city charter upon the city council thereof, does not exclude the powers of the state, through the attorney general, to effect a removal for violation of a statute subjecting the mayor to forfeiture of office and pecuniary penalty upon failure to make complaint of known violations of a statute regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, since the powers of the state and the city council are concurrent. State ex rel. Young v. Robinson, 20: 1127, 112 N. W. 269, 101 Minn. 277. (Annotated)

2. The forfeiture of office and pecuniary penalty prescribed by Minn. Rev. Laws 1905, §§ 1561 and 1562, for the failure of a mayor to make complaint of known violations of statutes regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, may be enforced by the attorney general under Rev. Laws 1905, § 4545, which expressly empowers the attorney general to enforce forfeitures of office without restriction or limitations as to particular officers.

State ex rel. Young v. Robinson, 20: 1127, 112 N. W. 269, 101 Minn. 277.

Rights: powers; liabilities.

Liability of superintendent of state lunatic asylum for acts of employees, see Charities, 1.

Liability for false imprisonment, see False Imprisonment, 2, 3.

3. Officers of municipal corporations organized under legislative authority are, in respect to all general laws having force and operating within their municipality, agents of the state, and may be charged with the performance of such duties in the enforcement of the same as the legislature may, from time to time, impose. State ex rel. Young v. Robinson, 20: 1127, 112 N. W. 269, 101 Minn. 277.

4. A public officer involved in litigation in his official capacity as to the right to the possession of intoxicating liquor which he had seized in pursuance of a warrant, and which had been subsequently replevied, is not defeated of the right to recover the possession thereof by the fact that his term of office has expired during the litigation. Hines v. Stahl, 20: 1118, 99 Pac. 273, — Kan. —.

5. A public official who has collected fees under statutory authority, in violation of the Constitution, cannot be compelled to turn them over to the state, where the legislature has made no provision therefor. State ex rel. McNary v. Dunbar, 20: 1015, 98 Pac. 878, — Or. —. (Annotated)

6. A constitutional provision that the secretary of state shall be paid a salary, and receive no fees or perquisites whatever for the performance of any duties, does not prevent the allowance to him of the necessary cost of procuring copies of laws and resolutions, which he is required to deliver to the state printer. State ex rel. McNary v. Dunbar, 20: 1015, 98 Pac. 878, — Or. —.

OIL.

Taxation of oil lease, see Taxes 1.

ORDER.

See Motions and Orders.

ORDINANCES.

See Municipal Corporations.

PARDON.

See Criminal Law, 5.

PARENT AND CHILD.

Mortgage by father to prevent prosecution of son, see Duress.

Right of parents to custody of child, see Infants.

PARKS.

Dedication of land for, see Dedication.

Persons who have bought lots bordering on a tract of land dedicated for park purposes may, as against the owner of the fee, cut the grass thereon if the authorities have not assumed jurisdiction over the park, and the removal of the grass will render the 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) park more suitable for the use for which it was intended. Northport Wesleyan Grove Campmeeting Asso. v. Andrews, 20: 976, 71 Atl. 1027, — Me. —.

PARTIES.

Action by stockholders, see Corporations, 7, 8.

Parties defendant to mandamus proceeding, see Mandamus, 10.

To foreclosure of mortgage, see Mortgage, 1.

A state manager of an insurance company may maintain an action to recover from an agent, whom he has appointed to canvass for applications and collect premiums and pay them over to himself or the company, money so collected in payment of premiums. Hazelton v. Locke, 20: 35, 71 Atl. 661, — Me. —.

PARTITION.

Partition of wife's separate estate after her death, see Husband and Wife, 2.

1. A trustee in bankruptcy, having legal title to and no beneficial interest in, undivided property, is not such a tenant in common as authorizes him to sue for partition, where title and possession are not denied him, and it is not shown that a reduction of the property to money is necessary for the purpose of paying debts, or that the bankruptcy court has authorized the proceeding, or that it will be advantageous to the interests of creditors. Hobbs v. Frazier, 20: 105, 47 So. 929, — Fla. —. (Annotated)

2. The Federal bankruptcy act contains no express authority to a trustee in bankruptcy to sue for partition for the bankrupt's property, the title to which is by law vested in such trustee for the purpose of paying the debts of the bankrupt, and the nature of the trustee's powers and duties does not necessarily make the right to sue for partition exist by implication, since a sale of the bankrupt's interests may be had without partition, and that may be sufficient for debt-paying purposes. Hobbs v. Frazier, 20: 105, 47 So. 929, — Fla. —.

3. An allegation by a trustee in bankruptcy who is suing for the partition of property, that he is desirous of obtaining a partition and division of the premises, is not sufficient to establish the right of such trustee so to sue, where it does not in any way appear that partition is essential to the statutory duties of such trustee, or that the bankruptcy court has authorized the proceeding, or that it is necessary to fully protect the rights of those interested in the bankrupt's estate. Hobbs v. Frazier, 20: 105, 47 So. 929, — Fla. —.

PARTNERSHIP.

Right of bankrupt to discharge as affected by act of partner, see Bankruptcy, 9.

Retiring partner's agreement not to re-engage in same business, see Contracts, 1, 9, 10.

PARTY WALL.

Right of owner of building supported by, to recover under insurance policy on building where party wall is injured by burning of adjoining building, see Insurance, 21.

1. The right to maintain a wall resting on each side of a boundary line as a party wall can never rest upon prescription, but must always be founded in contract, express or implied. Bright v. Bacon, 20: 386, 116 S. W. 268, — Ky. —.

2. A wall is not made a party wall by a trespasser obtaining in it an easement by long-continued use, except to the extent that the use of the encroacher has become a right. Bright v. Bacon, 20: 386, 116 S. W. 268, — Ky. —.

3. Every joint owner of a party wall standing across a boundary line, and which has stood so long that the original agreement under which it was erected cannot be established, has a right to add to its height to its whole width for the benefit of additions to the building on his property, so long as it does not unnecessarily interfere with the other's use as it was begun or has developed. Bright v. Bacon, 20: 386, 116 S. W. 268, — Ky. —. (Annotated)

PASSENGER CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

PAYMENT.

Payment of insurance policy to wrong person, see Insurance, 22.

PENALTY.

Forfeiture of auctioneer's license as penalty in civil suit by other merchant, see License.

PENSIONS.

Review on certiorari of determination of trustees of police pension fund. see Certiorari.

Exemption of homestead purchased with pension money, see Exemptions.

Pneumonia contracted by a policeman in the line of his duty is an injury within the meaning of a statute providing for a police pension fund, notwithstanding the legislature, in amending a former statute, omitted the words, "or any disease contracted by reason of his occupation." State ex rel. McManus v. Board of Trustees, 20: 1175, 119 N. W. 806, — Wis. —. (Annotated)

PERJURY.

Error in admission of evidence in prosecution for, see Appeal and Error, 19.

Evidence in prosecution for, see Evidence, 26, 30, 31.

One who, having been subpoenaed in a proceeding against himself for illegal registration as a voter, makes oath that other persons against whom proceedings have also been instituted, who are registered from 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the same place, were properly registered, cannot escape punishment for perjury with respect to the latter statement on the theory that he had been compelled to become a witness against himself, in violation of the provisions of the Constitution, although the information with respect to all cases was embodied in one affidavit. People v. Cahill, 20: 1084, 86 N. E. 39, 193 N. Y. 232.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Confidential communications to, see Evidence, 21.

Liability for injuries.

Error in exclusion of evidence in action against, for malpractice see Appeal and Error, 20.

Negligence of, as question for jury, see Trial, 9.

1. A physician who, for twelve years, specializes his practice to treatment of diseases of the eye, and is placed in charge of the eye, ear, and throat department of a hospital of high standing, and is advertised by its literature as its ophthalmatist, will be held responsible as a specialist for treatment of the eye. Rann v. Twitchell, 20: 1030, 71 Atl. 1045, — Vt. —.

2. One who holds himself out as a specialist in the treatment of a certain organ, injury, or disease is bound to bring to the aid of one employing him as such that degree of skill and knowledge which is ordinarily possessed by those who devote special study and attention to that particular organ, injury, or disease, its diagnosis and its treatment, in the same general locality, having regard to the state of scientific knowledge at the time. Rann v. Twitchell, 20: 1030, 71 Atl. 1045, — Vt. —. (Annotated)

3. The question of the negligence of a specialist in the treatment of disease in making a diagnosis is to be determined by reference to the pertinent facts existing at the time of his examination, of which he knew, or, in the exercise of due care, should have known, his negligence depending upon the fact that, with an opportunity for examination, he failed to discover conditions which should have been discovered in the exercise of a reasonable degree of care and skill. Rann v. Twitchell, 20: 1030, 71 Atl. 1045, — Vt. —.

PLEADING.

Variance between pleading and proof, see Evidence, 43.

Admissibility of evidence under, see Evidence, 42.

Amendment.

A motion to dismiss an action against a consolidated corporation for a liability which arose against one of the constituent companies before the consolidation cannot prevail because the name of the original defendant was necessary and not used in the cause, since the defect might have been cured by amendment. Southern Steel Co. v. Hopkins, 20: 848, 47 So. 274, — Ala. —.

Declaration as complaint.

2. Under a general allegation of damages in an action on a contract, such damages as the law holds to be the direct, natural, and necessary result of the breach may be recovered; special damages may be recovered only on sufficient allegations and proofs. Moses v. Autuono, 20: 350, 47 So. 925, — Fla. —.

3. Under a complaint setting out breach of a contract whereby the plaintiff was granted the exclusive right to sell defendants' publication within a certain territory, and which provided for daily delivery, "Sundays excepted," recovery cannot be had for breach of a contract to sell and deliver a Sunday edition subsequently issued. Newhall v. Journal Printing Co. 20: 899, 117 N. W. 228, 105 Minn. 44.

4. An allegation in a declaration for breach of warranty, that defendant "falsely and fraudulently warranted the property," is not sufficient to charge knowledge of the falsity on his part. Caldbeck v. Simanton, 20: 844, 71 Atl. 881, — Vt. —.

5. An allegation that injury to growing plants and fruit by frost and cold occurred after, and as a result of, the negligent burning of the cover used to protect the plants and fruit from frost and cold, sufficiently connects, by ordinary, natural sequence, the negligence and the injury. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

6. A complaint seeking to hold a city liable for injuries caused by its piling stones in a street in such a manner as to be likely to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness must allege that they would naturally do so, where the mere placing of the stones in the street was not in and of itself negligence. Elam v. Mt. Sterling, 20: 512, 117 S. W. 250, — Ky. —.

7. A complaint in an action to hold a city liable for injuries caused by its placing in the street an object calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness should allege that the horse which was in fact frightened was of ordinary gentleness. Elam v. Mt. Sterling, 20: 512, 117 S. W. 250, — Ky. —.

8. A declaration in an action against a town for injuries caused by a defective highway, which alleges that the highway was negligently permitted to become out of repair to the injury of plaintiff, is sufficient to cover a defect consisting of want of suitable rail or barrier to protect travelers from perils which would be encountered immediately adjacent to the limits of the highway. Shea v. Whitman, 20: 980, 83 N. E. 1096, 197 Mass. 374.

9. A declaration based upon negligence should contain allegations of the negligent act or omission of the defendant, and also allegations of facts to show injury to the plaintiff, and that such injury was a proximate result of the negligence alleged. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

10. A declaration which states that the defendant railroad company so carelessly and negligently managed and operated one of its locomotives that fire escaped therefrom and set fire to and burned the canvass with which a pinery belonging to the plaintiff, and situated near the track of the defendant, was covered, and alleges damages in a stated amount, is sufficient to authorize recovery of general damages, or such as necessarily result from the burning of the canvass cover, to the extent of its value within the amount stated. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

11. In an action for damages, where it is in effect alleged that, in the month of January, the defendant negligently burned the cover used to protect growing plants and fruit from injury by ordinary cold and frost usual "in the winter season" at the place of the negligence, of which use, to prevent probable injury, the defendant knew, or should have known, that shortly after the burning of the cover the plants and fruit were injured by frost and cold, which injury defendant should have anticipated, and that the injury "was caused by the negligence of the defendant in burning part of the cover, as aforesaid," and damages are claimed, it is not necessary to allege "that, at the time of the occurrence of the fire, the weather was such that cold and frost could be anticipated by the defendant," or "that, in the month of January, cold and frost of such character as to damage growing plants ordinarily occurred," since the court takes judicial notice that January is in the winter season, and, if frost or cold of any degree injured the plants and fruit as a proximate result of the defendant's negligence, under such circumstances, the extent of the cold or the condition of the weather at the time of the negligence are not material. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

12. A petition by a servant against his master for personal injuries sustained in his service, which alleges that the master operated a sawmill, and, in connection therewith, a private railroad for the purpose of transporting his employees from the mill to their work in the woods, and hauling logs to the mill, and that, while being transported on a log train to his work, he was injured in the wreck of the train, caused by its collision with a tree which had fallen on the track; that the negligence of the master consisted in knowingly permitting the tree, which was dead and in such a bad and defective condition that it was liable at any time to fall upon the track, to remain in such close proximity that it might and did fall on the track,—is defective because of the failure to allege that the servant did not know of the location of the tree and its defective condition, or could not have known thereof by the exercise of ordinary care. Roland v. Tift, 20: 354, 63 S. E. 133, — Ga. —.

13. An action in tort for breach of warranty that an article sold was perfect, which may be begun by arresting defendant, will not lie unless scienter is alleged. Caldbeck v. Simanton, 20: 844, 71 Atl. 881, — Vt. —. (Annotated)

14. That the servant of the owner of a wharf was acting within the scope of his employment in casting off a vessel moored there is sufficiently alleged in a declaration for damages for injuries thereby caused, by allegation that the wharf was in charge of the servant, and that defendant, by his servant, wilfully and designedly, negligently, carelessly, and wrongfully unmoored the vessel. Ploof v. Putnam, 20: 152, 71 Atl. 188, — Vt. —.

15. The absence of other available mooring place is sufficiently pleaded by a declaration in an action to recover damages for casting off a vessel necessarily moored to defendant's wharf, by an averment that a tempest compelled mooring to the defendant's wharf. Ploof v. Putnam, 20: 152, 71 Atl. 188, — Vt. —.

Pleas and answers.

16. The owner of a building, who is kept out of possession thereof after the day fixed by contract for its completion, cannot recover the per diem forfeiture as provided for in the contract, in an action by the contractor to foreclose his mechanics' lien for the construction of the building, unless the same is affirmatively pleaded by way of defense or cross complaint. Steltz v. Armory Co. 20: 872, 99 Pac. 98, 15 Idaho, 551.

17. A statement in a paragraph of defense to an action on an insurance policy that applicant represented the value of the property to be a certain amount, is not insufficient to raise the question of breach of warranty if, from the defense as a whole, it appears that the statement of value was warranted to be true. Duncan v. National Mut. F. Ins. Co. 20: 40, 98 Pac. 634, — Colo. —.

Demurrer.

18. A demurrer, or a ground thereof, that in effect merely states that a declaration, or a count therein, is bad in substance, or fails to allege a cause of action, does not comply with the statute requiring the substantial matters of law intended to be argued to be stated, and will not avail as a demurrer, unless it plainly appears, from a reading of the declaration or count, that it does not, by direct statements, or by fair inference drawn therefrom, contain all the essentials of a cause of action. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

19. A demurrer to a declaration which states a cause of action for any recovery should be overruled. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

20. A petition for an accounting for the proceeds of the sale of certain real estate, title to which was placed in defendant under L.R.A. (N.S.)

der a verbal promise for this purpose, is not vulnerable on demurrer on the ground that a parol trust in real estate is declared on. Logan v. Brown, 20: 298, 95 Pac. 441, — Okla. —.

POLICE.

Review on certiorari of determination of trustees of police pension fund, see Certiorari.

Right of policemen to payment from pension fund, see Pensions.

POLICE POWER.

See Constitutional Law, 9, 10.

POLICE REGULATIONS.

On Indian reservations, see Indians.

PRÆCIPLE.

Necessity of appending to transcript of record, see Appeal and Error, 2.

PREFERENCES.

By bankrupt, see Bankruptcy, 3.

PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 15-27.

PREMATURITY.

Of action, see Action or Suit.

PREMIUM.

Forfeiture for nonpayment of insurance premium, see Insurance, 10, 11.

PRESCRIPTION.

As foundation for rights in party wall, see Party Wall, 1, 2.

PRESUMPTIONS.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 5.

In general, see Evidence, 1-17.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Agreement to take title to real property and sell as agent of real owner, see Contracts, 5.

Garnishment of renewal commissions due general insurance agent, see Garnishment, 3.

Architect contracting for labor or material before abandonment of contract by contractor as agent of owner, see Mechanics' Liens, 5.

Notice to agent as notice to principal, see Notice.

Creation of trust by one taking title to real property to sell it for benefit of real owner, see Pleading, 20.

Creation of trust by taking title to property under parol agreement to sell and deliver proceeds to owner, see Trusts.

Damage for improper termination of agency contract, see Damages, 5, 14.

A contract of agency which leaves the agent free to terminate the agency on specified notice confers the same right upon the principal unless provisions to the contrary are stipulated. Newhall v. Journal Printing Co. 20: 899, 117 N. W. 228, 105 Minn. 44.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Surety on ne exeat bond as release from arrest, see Ne Exeat.

1. A surety for a married woman incapable of contracting is not released by the discharge of the principal. Gates v. Tebbetts, 20: 1000, 119 N. W. 1120, — Neb. — (Annotated)

2. A surety upon a contract is not released because the plaintiff in an action thereon fails to inform the court that another party to the contract is the principal debtor. Gates v. Tebbetts, 20: 1000, 119 N. W. 1120, — Neb. —.

3. A surety on an indemnity bond may, before payment, in equity compel the principal to pay in exoneration. Carr v. Davis, 20: 58, 63 S. E. 326, — W. Va. —.

PRIVATE RAILROAD.

Servants engaged in operating, as fellow servants of other employees, see Master and Servant, 20.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

See Libel and Slander, 1, 2.

PROFITS.

Loss of, as element of damages, see Damages, 14.

PROHIBITION.

As the North Dakota supreme court has only such jurisdiction as is expressly or by necessary implication granted by North Dakota Constitution, § 86, granting appellate jurisdiction only, together with a general superintending control over all inferior courts, except as provided by § 87, which grants power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, injunction, and such other original writs and remedial writs as may be necessary to the proper exercise of its jurisdiction, it cannot issue a writ of prohibition, that not being one of the enumerated writs, except where its issuance is necessary to the proper exercise of its jurisdiction in a pending cause, or to effectuate its general superintending control over inferior courts. State ex rel. Poole v. Nuchols, 20: 413, 119 N. W. 632, — N. D. —.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Of damages, see Damages, 4.

1. The ordinary conditions or forces of nature, such as ordinary wind, cold, heat, and the like, that are usual at the time and place and under the circumstances, and that reasonably should have been expected or foreseen as probably to occur, are not, in general, independent, efficient causes when they effect or operate upon a negligent act of omission in causing an injurious result. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514. (Annotated)

2. Where an action is brought for an injury that is the result of the negligence of the defendant and of some other contributing cause, not an independent efficient cause, and the result could not have been produced in the absence of either contributing cause, the defendant's negligence is a proximate cause of the injury if, under the circumstances attending the defendant's negligence, the injury was a probable, natural, and usual result of the two contributing causes, that the defendant is held to have contemplated, and the plaintiff, or those for whom he is responsible, did not contribute proximately to the injury. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

Of loss by fire.

3. The wrongful act of a railroad company in permitting a train to stand across a street in a city cannot be held not to be the proximate cause of the burning of a dwelling house because the fire apparatus could not reach it on account of the obstruction because a prudent man would not have foreseen that the burning of that house would follow the wrongful act. Houren v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 20: 1110, 86 N. E. 611, 236 Ill. 620.

4. Interference with the fire departments reaching the fire may be found to be the proximate cause of the burning of a building to which the fire was communicated from that in which it originated. Houren v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 20: 1110, 86 N. E. 611, 236 Ill. 620.

Of injury by carrier or railroad company.

5. The act of one desiring to meet an approaching train at a station, in attempting to cross the track in front of it, which resulted in his being hit by the train, and not the negligence of the railroad company in running a special at greater speed past the station on the time of the regular train, which was to stop, was the cause of the accident, where the train is visible and its speed obvious, although he may have been misled as to the character of the train, and relied on the supposed fact that it was going to stop according to schedule. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. James, 20: 380, 115 S. W. 719, — Ky. — (Annotated)

6. The negligence of a railroad company in maintaining the approach to its tracks in an unsafe condition so that a wagon is caught, holding the team on the tracks, may be found to be the proximate cause of the death of the driver, who was struck by a train in attempting to signal it to stop before striking the team. Thompson v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. 20: 426, 62 S. E. 396, 81 S. C. 333. Digitized by Google

PUBLIC MONEY.

Exemption from taxation of money and interest bearing securities in sinking fund accumulated by municipality to retire bonds, see Taxes, 2.

I. A common school, within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring the school funds to be applied exclusively to such schools, is one which is common to all children of proper age and capacity, free and subject to, and under the control of, the qualified voters of the district. School Dist. No. 20 v. Bryan, 20: 1033, 99 Pac. 28, — Wash. —.

2. Model training schools, to be conducted in connection with various normal schools, the pupils of which are to be selected from the school districts within which the normal schools are located by requisition of the authorities of the normal schools, are not common schools within the constitutional provision that the school moneys shall be applied exclusively to the support of common schools. School Dist. No. 20 v. Bryan, 20: 1033, 99 Pac. 28, — Wash. —.

(Annotated)

PUBLIC POLICY.

See Contracts, 11.

PUBLIC PROPERTY.

Mechanics' liens on, see Mechanics' Liens, 2.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

See Damages, 2.

QUANTUM MERUIT.

Right to recover on, on partial performance of contract, see Contracts, 12.

QUO WARRANTO.

As remedy for illegal holding of public office, see Injunction, 7.

RAILROADS.

Requiring interstate railroad to light crossings in city, see Commerce, 2; Constitutional Law, 1, 8; Courts, 1; Municipal Corporations, 3-7; Statutes, 2.

Interference with light, air, and prospect by elevation of track, see Eminent Domain, 1.

Statute requiring safety appliances on cars, see Evidence, 10; Master and Servant, 6, 7.

Running of limitations upon action against, for accelerating flow of stream, see Limitation of Actions, 3.

See also Master and Servant.

1. The right of a railroad company to run its engines and trains over its tracks is coupled with a duty arising by implication of law out of the relation of the parties to each other, so to operate its engines as not negligently to injure the property of others. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

near the track. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

2. Under statutes providing that railroad companies shall be liable for any damages to property by the running of trains unless the companies shall make it appear that their agents have exercised all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence, the presumption in all cases being against the companies, and that, if the complainant and the agents of the companies are both at fault, the former may recover, but the damages shall be diminished or increased in proportion to the amount of default attributable to the complainant, a complainant has a right of action for the negligence of a railroad company even if he has also been negligent; but the amount of the recovery is affected by the complainant's negligence. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

Injury to persons on or near track.

Proximate cause of injury to persons met by train in crossing tracks, see Proximate Cause, 5.

Punitive damages for killing of person at crossing, see Damages, 2.

Proximate cause of injuries on crossing, see Proximate Cause, 6.

Question for jury whether failure to give signals caused accident, see Trial, 6.

3. The mere fact that those in charge of an engine on a misty night failed to observe one attempting to signal it to stop because of an obstruction on the track, in time to stop the train before striking him, is not sufficient to establish negligence on the part of the railroad company. Thompson v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. 20: 426, 62 S. E. 396, 81 S. C. 333.

4. The negligence of a railroad company in the management of a train approaching a station at night is disproved, where the headlight is burning, the bell ringing, the train running slowly and under control, while the person complaining of the negligence was discovered the moment he stepped on the track, and the emergency brakes, applied. Pere Marquette R. Co. v. Strange, 20: 1041, 84 N. E. 819, — Ind. —.

5. One entering upon a railroad track to attempt to stop a train approaching a crossing on which a team is stalled is not a trespasser, since the consent of the railroad company to his act will be presumed. Thompson v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. 20: 426, 62 S. E. 396, 81 S. C. 333.

Liability for fires.

Obstructing fire department on way to burning building, see Fires; Proximate Cause, 3.

6. Owners of property having land near a railroad track have a right to place a canvass cover over plants growing on the land, and the mere fact that the cover is within the reach of sparks of fire emitted from locomotive engines passing on the track nearby does not relieve the railroad company from liability for its negligence in permitting sparks to escape from the engine and burn the cover. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 20: 92, 46 So. 732, 55 Fla. 514.

Contributory negligence.

7. A licensee who unnecessarily selects a railroad bridge as a route to his destination is negligent so that he cannot hold the railroad company liable for an injury received, when compelled to jump therefrom, by an approaching train. Texas Midland R. Co. v. Byrd, 20: 429, 115 S. W. 1163, — Tex. —.

8. It cannot be said to be negligence per se for the driver of a team caught on a railroad track by the negligence of the railroad company, to go onto the track for the purpose of attempting to stop an approaching train. Thompson v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. 20: 426, 62 S. E. 396, 81 S. C. 333.

9. The fact that one who rightfully goes upon a railroad track to attempt to stop an approaching train which is carrying a powerful headlight cannot be said to have been negligent per se merely because he did not get off in time to avoid being struck by the train. Thompson v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. 20: 426, 62 S. E. 396, 81 S. C. 333.

RATIFICATION.

By corporation of fraudulent issue of stock, see Corporations, 4.

REAL ESTATE BROKERS.

See Brokers.

REASONABLENESS.

Of ordinance, see Municipal Corporations, 1, 3, 9a; Trial, 2.

RECOGNIZANCE.

See Bail and Recognizance.

RECORDS AND RECORDING LAWS.

Records on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 1-4.

Duty to record transfer of stock on books of company, see Corporations, 2.

Failure of the owner of logs to record as required by statute, the mark which he places upon them does not deprive him of his property in the logs or the privilege of proving property by the mark. Whitman v. Muskegon Log Lifting & O. Co. 20: 984, 116 N. W. 614, 152 Mich. 645.

REDEMPTION.

Of mortgaged premises, see Mortgage, 3, 5, 6.

REFERENCE.

Necessity of exception to refusal to sustain motion to refer case to master, see Appeal and Error, 3.

Presumption that referee took oath required by law, see Appeal and Error, 5.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Harmless error in order of court for reference, see Appeal and Error, 13.

To determine rights under insurance policy, see Insurance, 19.

REFRIGERATOR CARS.

Duty of carrier to furnish, see Carriers, 22, 23; Damages, 7.

RELEASE.

Of surety on contract, see Principal and Surety, 1, 2.

Sufficiency of evidence to show that release was secured by fraud, see Evidence, 37.

Right to attack for fraud release under sale, see Sale.

REMEDIES.

Election of, see Election of Remedies.

REMITTITUR.

Of damages on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 28.

REPLEVIN.

Replevy of intoxicating liquors seized under execution, see Evidence, 16.

Right of officer from whom property levied on has been replevined to continue litigation after expiration of term of office, see Officers, 4.

1. Replevin will not lie to recover possession of a title deed where the real controversy is as to whether or not there had been such a delivery of it as to pass title to the property. Campbell v. Brooks, 20: 507, 47 So. 545, — Miss. —.

(Annotated)

2. An officer who is found, upon the trial of a cause to determine the right to the possession of certain intoxicating liquors which he had seized under a warrant and which were subsequently replevined, to be entitled to the return thereof, is also entitled to a judgment for their full value in case the return cannot be had. Hines v. Stahl, 20: 1118, 99 Pac. 273, — Kan. —.

RESCISSION.

On contract for purchase of land, see Vendor and Purchaser, 1-4.

RES GESTÆ.

See Evidence, 22-24.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

See Evidence, 8, 12, 13, 38; Maxims, 2.

REVERSIBLE ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 15-27.

REVOCATION.

Of wills, see Wills, 1, 2.

RIOT.

Liability for destruction of property during riot, see Insurance, 20.

A riot exists where a hundred or more armed and masked men overawe and terrorize the civil authorities and the inhabitants of a town, and burn and otherwise destroy property of private citizens, which they assume is intended for a use detrimental to their interests. Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Imperial Tobacco Co. 20: 277, 116 S. W. 234, — Ky. —.

SAFETY APPLIANCE.

Requiring placing of, on cars, see Evidence, 10; Master and Servant, 6, 7.

SALE.

Of stock of goods in bulk, see Constitutional Law, 6, 7, 10.

Election of remedies in case of purchaser's failure to pay, see Election of Remedies, 2.

Delivery on week day pursuant to contract made on Sunday, see Sunday.

C. O. D. sale of intoxicating liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors, 10.

When title passes.

1. Upon sale of articles of certain quality free on board at point of shipment, to be transported to another place, the buyer has a reasonable time for inspection after they arrive at destination, where the contract is silent as to time and place of inspection and acceptance, or of payment of purchase price. Eaton v. Blackburn, 20: 53, 96 Pac. 870, — Or. —.

Conditional.

Settlement between parties to, as novation, see Novation.

2. Taking notes and collateral security for the purchase price of chattels does not destroy features of the contract constituting the transaction a conditional sale. Monitor Drill Co. v. Mercer, 20: 1065, 163 Fed. 943, — C. C. A. —. (Annotated)

3. The effect of a provision in a contract for the sale of personal property, that the title shall remain in the vendor until the property is fully paid for, in creating a conditional sale, is not destroyed by a clause which authorizes the vendor, under certain conditions, to retake all property unsold by the vendee. Monitor Drill Co. v. Mercer, 20: 1065, 163 Fed. 943, — C. C. A. —.

4. A provision in a contract of conditional sale of chattels, authorizing the vendor to take possession of property, of whatever nature, derived from sale of the chattels by the vendee, reduce it to cash, and apply the proceeds upon the amount due under the contract, does not qualify the title to the property remaining unsold by the vendee, which was retained by the vendor. Monitor Drill Co. v. Mercer, 20: 1065, 163 Fed. 943, — C. C. A. —.

5. Failure to record a conditional sale contract will not make it ineffectual against trustees in bankruptcy of the vendee, if the recording acts make unrecorded sales voidable only against lien creditors, and the trustees represent no creditors having a prior lien on the bankruptcy proceedings. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Monitor Drill Co. v. Mercer, 20: 1065, 163 Fed. 943, — C. C. A. —.

Acceptance; retention.

6. The mere receipt by the consignee of articles to be of a certain quality under the contract of sale, sent to him through a carrier, at point of destination, and his offer to sell and dispose of them, do not amount to an acceptance as matter of law if a reasonable time in which to inspect and reject has not elapsed; nor does the unauthorized sale by his agent of a small part of the property, which is promptly repudiated by him. Eaton v. Blackburn, 20: 53, 96 Pac. 870, — Or. —.

Warranty.

7. An express warranty of a car load of potatoes may be found from the fact that at the time of the sale a few bags were opened and examined, and the owner's agent represented that the rest of the potatoes in the car were as good as those examined, on which representation the buyer relied. King v. Graef, 20: 86, 117 N. W. 1058, 136 Wis. 548.

Rights and remedies of parties.

Damages for breach of warranty, see Damages, 4.

Sufficiency of declaration for breach of warranty, see Pleading, 4.

Necessity of alleging scienter in action in tort for breach of warranty, see Pleading, 13.

Right of seller of property to municipal authority under invalid contract to retake or remove property upon refusal of payment, see Municipal Corporations, 8.

8. The buyer of an engine cannot avoid payment of the contract price because of the existence of defective parts therein, so long as the seller is ready and willing to perform his contract to replace defective parts without charge. Bardwell v. Southern Engine & B. Works, 20: 110, 113 S. W. 97, — Ky. —.

SALES IN BULK.

See Fraudulent Conveyances, 1, 2.

SAMPLES.

Warranty on sale by, see Sale, 7.

SCHOOLS.

Prematurity of action for damages for unlawful suspension of child, see Action or Suit.

Damages for wrongful suspension of pupil, see Damages, 8.

Mandamus to secure restoration of pupil wrongfully suspended, see Mandamus, 6.

Mechanics' liens on school building, see Mechanics' Liens, 2.

Use of common-school moneys for support of model training schools, see Public Money.

1. A pupil may be suspended from a public school for being drunk and disorderly in violation of the ordinances of the municipality, although his misconduct was not on the school grounds, where the statute authorizes suspension for gross immorality. Douglas v. Campbell, 20: 205, 116 S. W. 211. — Ark. —.

2. An order of a county superintendent, changing the boundaries of a school district, which is affirmed, upon appeal, by the board of county commissioners, even though irregular, is final, and not subject to collateral attack in an action for injunction. School Dist. No. 116 v. Wolf, 20: 358, 98 Pac. 237, — Kan. —.

3. Upon the detachment of the territory within which a school district officer resides from the school district of which he is an officer, his office immediately becomes vacant ipso facto, and may be filled by appointment. School Dist. No. 116 v. Wolf, 20: 358, 98 Pac. 237, — Kan. —.

(Annotated)

4. Although the statute contemplates the filing of a petition with a county superintendent for the change of boundaries of a school district as a basis for the issuance by him of a notice setting a time for a hearing upon the requested change, yet, where a verbal request is made for the change and proper notice is given, the interested parties appear, the order is made, appeal is taken to the board of county commissioners, and the order is affirmed, the proceeding is only irregular, but is not void. School Dist. No. 116 v. Wolf, 20: 358, 98 Pac. 237, — Kan. —.

SCIENTER.

Necessity of alleging scienter in action in tort for breach of warranty, see Pleading 13.

SEAL.

A release under seal may be attacked at law for fraud in the consideration, where the seal is, by statute, made only prima facie evidence of consideration. Olston v. Oregon Water Power & R. Co. 20: 915, 96 Pac. 1095. — Or. —.

(Annotated)

SECRETS.

Injunction to protect, see Injunction, 1.

SELF-CRIMINATION.

See Criminal Law, 2; Perjury; Witnesses, 2, 3.

SEPARATE ESTATE.

See Husband and Wife, 2.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

By bank against depositor's account of note against him as preference, see Bankruptcy, 3.

In action to enforce mechanics' lien, see Mechanics' Liens, 6, 7.

Necessity of pleading, see Pleading 16.

SEVERABILITY.

(Of contract, see Contracts, 8, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.))

SHIPPING.

Damages for injuries by casting off vessel moored to wharfs, see Pleading 14, 15.

Right to moor to another's wharf to escape fury of tempest, see Wharves.

SITUS.

Of debt for purpose of garnishment, see Garnishment, 6-8.

SLANDER.

See Libel and Slander.

SLOT MACHINE.

As gaming device, see Gaming, 1, 2.

SMOKE.

As nuisance, see Nuisances, 2, 4.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

See Statutes, 2.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Contract to devise one's property, see Judgment, 2.

Equity will not specifically enforce a contract to sell real estate which is sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds so far as the vendor is concerned, but which the purchaser does not promise to perform until after the vendor has withdrawn his offer. Levin v. Dietz, 20: 251, 87 N. E. 454, 194 N. Y. 376.

SPEED.

Of street car, see Street Railways, 1.

STATE INSTITUTIONS.

Liability for acts of employees of state lunatic asylum, see Charities.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

See Contracts, 5-7.

STATUTES.

Title.

1. A constitutional provision that "each law enacted in the legislature shall embrace but one subject, and matter properly connected therewith, which subject shall be briefly expressed in the title," is not violated by an act the title of which extends to the comprehensive class of "any common carrier," while the body of the act covers only "any person, firm, or corporation operating any railroad," since the class affected by the subject embraced in the body of the act is not as broad as, but is included within, that expressed in the title, which is not misleading. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. v. Simon. 20: 126, 47 So. 1001, — Fla. —.

Special legislation.

2. Permitting only cities, not operating under special charters, to require railroad companies to light the street crossings with in their limits does not render the statute invalid. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hartford City, 20: 461, 82 N. E. 787, 170 Ind. 674.

Construction.

Construction of statute as to keeping open of theater on Sunday, see Constitutional Law, 5.

Construction of statute providing for building of partition fences, see Fences.

3. A statute imposing a penalty upon anyone publishing a newspaper in which appear advertisements of the keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors, applies to those kept without as well as within the state, State v. J. P. Bass Publishing Co. 20: 495, 71 Atl. 894, — Me. —.

STIPULATED DAMAGES.

See Damages, 6.

STOCK.

See Corporations.

STOCKHOLDERS.

See Corporations.

STOVE POLISH.

Injury to purchaser or user by explosion of, see Negligence, 5-7.

STREET RAILWAYS.

Error in admission of evidence in action for death of person killed on track, see Appeal and Error, 16.

Admissibility in evidence of statements by bystander or employee at time of accident, see Evidence, 22-24.

See also Master and Servant.

1. Running a street car from 12 to 20 miles an hour at night, in a sparsely settled community, upon a track elevated on an embankment 3 feet high, is not per se negligence. Trigg v. Water, L. & T. Co. 20: 987, 114 S. W. 972, 215 Mo. 521.

2. Those in charge of a street car are not bound to look out for persons lying on the embankment of the right of way, although it is within the limits of a public street, if there is nothing to show that anyone ever used that portion of the embankment for any purpose whatever. Trigg v. Water, L. & T. Co. 20: 987, 114 S. W. 972, 215 Mo. 521.

3. A motorman in charge of a street car must keep a lookout for persons on the track, and for those so near thereto as to be in danger of being injured by the car. Louisville R. Co. v. Johnson, 20: 133, 115 S. W. 207, — Ky. —.

4. The one in charge of an electric car is not bound to stop the car or slacken its speed upon discovering an object beside the track, which he takes to be a clump of dirt, although it proves in fact to be a man, whom he strikes before he can stop the car, after he discovers that it is a man. Trigg v. Water, L. & T. Co. 20: 987, 114 S. W. 972, 215 Mo. 521. (Annotated) was negligent in being where he was when struck. Trigg v. Water, L. & T. Co. 20: 987, 114 S. W. 972, 215 Mo. 521.

5. The mere fact that a street car was running at a negligent rate of speed when it struck a person beside the track will not entitle him to recover for the injury if he 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

STRIKE.

Injunction against acts of strikers, see Injunction, 2-6.

Validity of strike, see Labor Organizations.

SUBROGATION.

Of junior mortgagee to benefits of superior lien upon payment thereof, see Mortgage, 6.

SUCCESSION TAX.

See Taxes, 3, 4.

SUICIDE.

Burden of proof in prosecution for counseling, see Evidence, 2.

1. One who, after agreeing with another that they should commit suicide together, and procuring a pistol for that purpose, afterward changes his mind and endeavors to escape from the consequences of his agreement, but is unable to do so because of physical weakness, is not liable for assisting the suicide, in case deceased refuses to permit him to escape, and proceeds to shoot him and then kill himself. State v. Webb, 20: 1142, 115 S. W. 998, 216 Mo. 378.

2. To relieve one from liability to punishment for counseling suicide who repents and endeavors to persuade the person so counseled not to do so, before he has committed the act, it is not necessary that deceased should have abandoned his purpose, and led accused in good faith to believe that he had done so. State v. Webb, 20: 1142, 115 S. W. 998, 216 Mo. 378.

SUNDAY.

Punishing keeping open of theater on Sunday; construction of statute as to, see Constitutional Law, 5.

Several performances in theater on Sunday as one offense only, see Criminal Law, 1.

Delivery of a car load of potatoes on Monday, and the payment and receipt of the purchase money, constitute a complete sale and delivery, although the transaction was in pursuance of a parol contract made on Sunday. King v. Graef, 20: 86, 17 N. W. 1058, 136 Wis. 548. (Annotated)

SUPERINTENDING CONTROL.

See Courts, 2, 3.

SURFACE WATER.

See Waters.

SURGEONS.

See Physicians and Surgeons.

SURPLUS.

In foreclosure sale; rights of junior mortgagee in, see Mortgage, 4.

TAKING.

What constitutes a taking, see Eminent Domain, 1.

TAXES.

Levy of per capita tax on dogs, see Constitutional Law, 9.

Right of one holding land under tax deed to allowance for improvements when dispossessed by holder of legal title, see Ejectment, 1, 2.

What taxable.

1. The rights of the holder of an oil lease may be taxed separately from those of the owner of the fee, under a statute providing that the term "real estate" shall include all mines and minerals in and under land, and all rights and privileges appertaining thereto. Graciosa Oil Co. v. Santa Barbara County, 20: 211, 90 Pac. 483, — Cal. —.

Exemptions.

2. Money and interest-bearing securities in a sinking fund accumulated by a municipal corporation under legislative authority to retire bonds issued to secure a water-works system, the income from which has never exceeded the expense of maintenance, are held for a public purpose, and are not subject to taxation. Commonwealth ex rel. Albritton v. Rubel, 20: 224, 112 S. W. 1128, — Ky. —.

Succession tax.

3. The wife, upon the death of the husband, takes his half of the community property as heir, within the meaning of a statute taxing all property which shall pass by the intestate laws from one who shall die seized or possessed of the same. Re Moffitt, 20: 207, 95 Pac. 653, 153 Cal. 359. (Annotated)

4. A constitutional provision directing the legislature to define the rights of the wife in relation to property held in common with her husband does not give her a vested right in the property which cannot be subjected to an inheritance tax when the husband's share passes to her upon his death, where the property referred to is community property in which she has only an expectancy during the husband's life. Re Moffitt, 20: 207, 95 Pac. 653, 153 Cal. 359.

TENDER.

That a draft for rent which may be paid by check or draft is made payable through a particular clearing house does not render it ineffectual as a tender, and justify a forfeiture of the lease for non-payment of rent. Philadelphia Co. v. Renner, 20: 932, 71 Atl. 1056, 222 Pa. 512.

TERMINATION.

Of contract of lease, see Contracts, 13.

TIMBER.

Exception in deed of growing timber, see Deeds.

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

TIME.

For completing record on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 1.

For setting aside interlocutory decree, see Judgment, 3.

TITLE.

Sufficiency of title statutes, see Statutes.

TITLE DEED.

Replevin to recover possession of title deed, see Replevin, 1.

TRADE SECRETS.

Injunction to protect, see Injunction, 1.

TRANSFER.

Of stock, see Corporations, 2, 3.

TREES.

In highway, see Highways, 2.

1. A tree warden is subject to punishment under a statute prohibiting wanton injury to trees, where he proceeds irreparably to injure trees standing upon private property, which he has no authority to do, without trying to ascertain what his rights and duties are in regard to them. Com. v. Byard, 20: 814, 86 N. E. 285, 200 Mass. 175.

2. One is within the operation of a statute providing punishment for wantonly injuring a tree if he does a manifestly injurious act thereto wilfully in reckless disregard to the right of the owner. Com. v. Byard, 20: 814, 86 N. E. 285, 200 Mass. 175.

3. A tree warden has no authority to cut from a tree standing on private property branches extending over the street to aid the moving of a house along the street, under a statute permitting the surveyors and road commissioners to cause parts of trees standing on private property to be removed if they obstruct the way, or endanger, hinder, or incommode persons traveling therein, and providing for the cutting of trees standing in ways. Com. v. Byard, 20: 814, 86 N. E. 285, 200 Mass. 175. (Annotated)

TRESPASS.

Negligence toward trespassing children, see Negligence, 8, 9.

Injuries to trespasser on railroad tracks, see Railroads, 5.

Right to moor to another's wharf to escape fury of tempest, see Wharves.

TRIAL.

Time for objecting to statements of counsel, see Appeal and Error, 9.

Communication by judge with jury not in open court, see Appeal and Error, 24.

Taking of object in evidence into jury room as prejudicial error, see Appeal and Error, 26.

Error in rendering judgment for smaller sum in case of excessive verdict, see Appeal and Error, 27.

Reception of evidence.

Reversible error in decision as to competency of evidence, see Appeal and Error, 7.

1. It is not error to refuse to exclude from evidence a release of liability for negligently killing a person, signed by his administrator, as such, in an action by him to recover damages for the killing on behalf of the estate, on the theory that it was signed by him in his individual capacity, because it binds only him, his heirs, executors, and administrators, since the question of the intent is for the jury. Olston v. Oregon Water Power & R. Co. 20: 915, 96 Pac. 1095, — Or. —.

Questions of law and fact.

Question for jury as to negligence of railroad interfering with fire department, see Fires, 1.

2. The court, and not the jury, must determine the question of the reasonableness of a municipal ordinance requiring the removal of stationary awnings from over the sidewalk where the question of the good faith of the municipal authorities is not involved. Small v. Edenton, 20: 145, 60 S. E. 413, 146 N. C. 527.

3. The jury must determine, as a question of fact, whether or not a passenger injured after arriving at his station, while awaiting the arrival of the friends who were to meet him, had, prior to the injury, been offered a reasonable opportunity to make arrangements to depart, so as to terminate his relation of passenger to the carrier. Powell v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 20: 1019, 70 Atl. 268, 220 Pa. 638.

4. The question of the negligence of a delivery boy who is struck and injured by an automobile is for the jury, where the evidence tends to show that, before leaving his wagon, he looked but did not see the automobile, and that, after he reached the ground and secured the packages he was to deliver, he walked a few steps beside the wagon, waiting for it to pass so that he could go behind it to reach the house where the packages belonged, when he was struck by the automobile coming rapidly up behind him. Gerhard v. Ford Motor Co. 20: 232, 119 N. W. 904, — Mich. —.

5. Whether or not a pedestrian injured by a fall on a sidewalk was exercising proper care in passing along the walk, and whether he fell from any want of care on his part, are questions for the jury. Holbert v. Philadelphia, 20: 201, 70 Atl. 746, 221 Pa. 266.

6. The question is for the jury to determine, whether or not the failure of a railroad company to give signals for a street crossing contributed to the death of the driver of a team struck while attempting to stop the train after his team had been caught on the tracks at the crossing, where the circumstances would warrant an inference that the team was caught only a very few moments before the train approached, although at the time of his injury he had gone along the track 100 feet 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

or so from the crossing. Thompson v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. 20: 426, 62 S. E. 396, 81 S. C. 333.

7. The maxim, Res ipsa loquitur, raises only a rebuttable case of negligence, and no presumption of negligence necessarily follows its invocation, so as to compel a submission of fact to the jury. Jenkins v. St. Paul City R. Co. 20: 401, 117 N. W. 928, 105 Minn. 504.

8. The question whether or not a railroad company made sufficient investigation as to the qualification of one placed in charge of a scheduled train as conductor, who is shown not to have had the requisite knowledge of the meaning of orders to make him competent, to relieve itself from the charge of negligence in that regard, is for the jury, where the only evidence of investigation is that the train master made some inquiry as to his competency, and had some discussion with him relative to the duties to be performed, about the time he was promoted to that service from inferior service which required no such knowledge, the information received not necessarily indicating that he possessed the requisite knowledge. Still v. San Francisco & N. W. R. Co. 20: 322, 98 Pac. 672, — Cal. —.

(Annotated)

9. Whether or not a specialist in the treatment of eye diseases exercises due care is for the jury, where, upon examination of a wound beneath an eye, he fails to discover therein a foreign substance of the presence of which he has been notified by other physicians, and which the evidence tends to show a probe would readily have disclosed. Rann v. Twitchell, 20: 1030, 71 Atl. 1045, — Vt. —.

Instructions.

Reversible error in failing to instruct, see Appeal and Error, 23.

Error in instruction, see Appeal and Error, 21, 22.

10. Refusal of an instruction which emphasizes a particular portion of the evidence is not error in the absence of anything to show why it should be so singled out and emphasized. Still v. San Francisco & N. W. R. Co. 20: 322, 98 Pac. 672, — Cal. —.

11. It is not essential that the court, in charging the jury in an action on a mortgage given by a father to secure the payment of a defalcation by his son, in order to prevent his prosecution for embezzlement, in which the defense of duress is set up, to give a complete definition of the offense of embezzlement, since the guilt or innocence of the son is not a material question in determining whether or not there was duress. Williamson-Halsell Frazier Co. v. Ackerman, 20: 484, 94 Pac. 807, 77 Kan. 502.

12. That physicians describe plaintiff's disease as neurasthenia, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries, does not require an instruction that, under the pleadings, no damage can be recovered for it if found to exist, where the pleadings state that she suffers severe bodily and mental pain, is unable to eat solid food, and is confined to bed and unable to move about. Colorado Springs & I. R. Co. v. Nichols, 20: 215, 92 Pac. 691, 41 Colo. 272.

13. It is not error to refuse to instruct the jury, in an action by a married woman to recover for negligent injuries to her person, that she cannot recover for inability to perform her household duties, where no claim for such damages is made in the complaint. Colorado Springs & I. R. Co. v. Nichols, 20: 215, 92 Pac. 691, 41 Colo. 272.

14. All instructions bearing upon a common proposition should be construed together as a whole. Morris v. Miller, 20: 907, 119 N. W. 458, — Neb. —.

15. In an action for damages for an assault and battery, wherein it was claimed by each of the parties that the other was the aggressor, and by the defendant that what he did was in self-defense, it was not error for the court to instruct the jury, among other things, that the right of self-defense did not imply the right to attack, or voluntarily to enter into an affray, nor to use more force than was necessary for his defense, and that the question as to who provoked the difficulty or made the first assault was for the jury to decide, under the evidence. Morris v. Miller, 20: 907, 119 N. W. 458, — Neb. —.

16. In an action for damages, based upon the defendant's negligence, where the evidence leaves the matter uncertain as to which one of the several things immediately brought about the injury, for some of which the defendant is answerable and for others is not, it is error for the court to single out an act for which defendant was responsible and suggest to the jury that they may infer that it was the cause of the injury without directing their attention to other inferences more or equally reasonable, exculpatory of the defendant. Minnesota General Elec. Co. v. Cronon, 20: 816, 166 Fed. 651, — C. C. A. —.

Findings by court.

17. A general finding that all material allegations of an answer are supported by the evidence, and true, and that all the material allegations of the complaint in conflict with the findings are unsupported by the evidence, and untrue, is sufficient to support a judgment. Sterrett v. Sweeney, 20: 963, 98 Pac. 418, 15 Idaho, 416.

TROVER.

1. Trover will not lie by a state manager of an insurance company, who has appointed an agent to secure applications and collect premiums, to recover a premium which the agent has collected, and which he refuses to pay over, where the contract does not require him to keep the money collected intact, and he is entitled to commissions on 20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

premiums collected and paid over. Hazleton v. Locke, 20: 35, 71 Atl. 661, — Me. —. (Annotated)

2. Trover will lie to recover money so long as it is capable of being identified. Hazleton v. Locke, 20: 35, 71 Atl. 661, — Me. —.

TRUSTS.

Agreement to take title to real property and sell as agent of real owner, see also Contracts, 5; Pleading, 20.

One who takes title to real property under a parol agreement to sell the same as an agent, and sells it and receives the money therefor, is liable to the grantor for the proceeds. Logan v. Brown, 20: 298, 95 Pac. 441, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

ULTRA VIRES.

Ultra vires acts of building associations, see Building and Loan Associations.

VARIANCE.

Raising question of, for first time on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 11. In general, see Evidence, 43.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Vendee of land under executory contract of purchase as sole and unconditional owner, see Insurance, 6.

Specific performance of unilateral contract to sell real estate, see Specific Performance.

1. After rescission for fraud of an executory contract for purchase of land the vendee has no lien upon the land for the amount of his advance payment. Davis v. William Rosenzweig Realty O. Co. 20: 175, 84 N. E. 943, 192 N. Y. 128. (Annotated)

2. One defrauded into a contract for the purchase of land may maintain a bill in equity for rescission of the contract, and secure full relief, including a decree for return of money paid on the contract. Davis v. William Rosenzweig Realty O. Co. 20: 175, 84 N. E. 943, 192 N. Y. 128.

3. That the title of one who has contracted to convey real estate at a future time is not perfect is no ground for the rescission of the contract until the time for performance arrives. Hanson v. Fox, 20: 338, 99 Pac. 489, — Cal. —.

4. One entitled to a deed of land upon payment of instalments covering several months cannot put the vendor in default so as to effect a rescission of the contract by making a present tender of the full amount due. Hanson v. Fox, 20: 338, 99 Pac. 489, — Cal. —. (Annotated)

VICE PRINCIPAL.

See Master and Servant, 21, 22.

VIEW.

Compensation for interference with, see Eminent Domain, 1.

WAGES.

Garnishment of unearned salary, see Garnishment, 4, 5.

WAIVER.

Of irregularity not objected to, see Appeal and Error, 5.

Of error in admission of incompetent evidence, see Appeal and Error, 12.

Of privilege against self-crimination, see Criminal Law, 2; Witnesses, 2.

Of privilege of excluding confidential communications to physician, see Evidence, 21.

Of claim against officer for false arrest, see False Imprisonment, 3.

By insurance company, see Insurance.

Of irregularities in proceedings for mandamus, see Mandamus, 7.

By owner of building of defects therein, see Mechanics' Liens, 7.

Of junior mortgagee's right to redeem, see Mortgage, 5.

WARRANTY.

Damages for breach of, see Damages, 4.

In insurance policy, see Insurance.

Of article sold, see Sale, 7.

WATERS.

As to floating of logs in stream, see Logs and Logging.

Limitation period for injury to land or deflection of current of river, see Limitation of Actions, 4.

Limitation of time for action for accelerating flow of stream, see Limitation of Actions, 3.

Surface water.

The owner of city property has the right to improve it in such manner as to protect it from surface water flowing from adjacent land, even to the closing of a drain which he had constructed across it and which he discovers to be injurious to his land, without liability to the owners of adjoining lands for injury caused by the backing of the water upon them. Levy v. Nash, 20: 155, 112 S. W. 173, 87 Ark. 41.

(Annotated)

WEAPONS.

As to right to carry, see Carrying Weapons.

WHARVES.

Damages for injuries caused by casting off vessel moored to, see pleading, 14, 15.

A shipowner may be justified by necessity in mooring to another's wharf to escape the fury of a tempest. Ploof v. Putnam, 20: 152, 71 Atl. 188, — Vt. —.

(Annotated)

20 L.R.A. (N.S.)

WILLS.

Burden of proving fraud in assignment of legacy, see Evidence, 5.

Judgment enforcing specific performance of contract to devise property, see Judgment, 2.

Revocation.

1. The common-law rule of implied revocation of wills by "changed conditions and circumstances" of the testator, arising subsequent to their execution, is affirmatively adopted as the law of Minnesota by Rev. Laws 1905, § 3665. Re Hall, 20: 1073, 119 N. W. 219, 106 Minn. 502.

2. A settlement of property rights between husband and wife in anticipation of a divorce, by which the husband made over to the wife one third of all his property, coupled with the fact of divorce, revokes, by implication of law, a will theretofore executed by the husband, in and by which he devised and bequeathed to her the amount of property she so received on the settlement, he having died within thirty days of the settlement, without having expressly revoked the will. Re Hall, 20: 1073, 119 N. W. 219, 106 Minn. 502. (Annotated)

Nature of estate or interest created.

3. A debased fee, and not a life estate, is created by a devise to one to have and to hold to her and to the heirs of her body (which fee tail is by statute raised to a fee), and, should she die without issue surviving, the property to go to her heirs at law; and, upon the happening of the contingency, the fee vests in the heirs at law. Carter v. Couch, 20: 858, 47 So. 1006, — Ala. —.

Equitable conversion.

4. The doctrine of equitable conversion does not apply in case of a devise of real estate to testator's wife for life, and directing that at her death the property be sold and the proceeds divided between testator's daughters, where they die without issue after testator but before their mother's death, so that testator's scheme has failed; but the property will descend as real estate to testator's heirs at law. Painter v. Painter, 20: 117, 69 Atl. 323, 220 Pa. 82.

(Annotated)

5. A devise of land to testator's wife for life with directions to sell it at her death, and out of the proceeds pay a certain amount to a certain person, and divide the remainder among testator's children, effects a conversion of the property as of the time of the testator's death; and judgments against the child before sale is actually effected will not create a lien on his interest in the property as testator's heir. Beaver v. Ross, 20: 65, 118 N. W. 287, — Iowa. —.

(Annotated)

WITNESSES.

Error in examination of, see Appeal and Error, 18.

1. A question on cross-examination of plaintiff, in an action to recover damages for injuries caused by being struck by an automobile, "And this accident happened simply because you were in a real hurry, . . . and you jumped down off the wagon, didn't you?"—is incompetent as calling for a mere conclusion. Gerhard v. Ford Motor Co. 20: 232, 119 N. W. 904. — Mich. —

2. The privilege against self-crimination in testifying as to illegal registration of voters must be claimed; and, if it is not, a prosecution for perjury because of the testimony given cannot be defeated on the ground that the constitutional rights of the accused were violated. People v. Cahill, 20: 1084, 86 N. E. 39, 193 N. Y. 232.

3. One implicated in the illegal registration of another as a voter cannot avoid testifying as to the facts of such registration, on the theory that he would incriminate himself, where the statute provides that the testimony so given shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the person testifying, and that a person so testifying shall not thereafter be liable to indictment, prosecution, or punishment for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given. People v. Cahill, 20: 1084, 86 N. E. 39, 193 N. Y. 232.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

A court has no jurisdiction to enter a personal judgment against a nonresident constructively served, who has made no appearance in the action, nor can any finding made in the case touching his personal liability operate as an estoppel so as to prevent him from showing to the contrary in a personal action subsequently brought against him. Gates v. Tebbetts, 20: 1000, 119 N. W. 1120, — Neb. —

WRIT OF ERROR.

See Appeal and Error.

